

Lockheed Martin is proud to support the National Gallery of Art as the sponsor of Let the World In: Prints by Robert Rauschenberg from the National Gallery of Art and Related Collections—an exhibition that celebrates the highly imaginative body of work from one of the nation’s leading contemporary artists. By bringing together approximately sixty examples from all periods of Rauschenberg’s work in lithography, intaglio, and screenprint, the exhibition will review the artist’s chronological development in printmaking as he manipulated and combined traditional techniques while adapting new processes.

Lockheed Martin Corporation, a leading systems integrator and information technology company, has always believed that contributing to the educational and cultural quality of our communities is an important responsibility of good corporate citizenship. By investing in our communities, we invest in the creativity, curiosity, diversity, and intellectual vigor of our country.

In much the same way that Rauschenberg used groundbreaking techniques to create his prints, Lockheed Martin prides itself on providing innovative solutions through research, design, development, manufacture, and integration of advanced technology systems, products, and services. Our global headquarters are located in the Washington, DC, area, and we are especially proud of the opportunity to sponsor such an important artist in our nation’s capital.