Maine Commission Initiatives:

VolunteerMaine

The Maine Commission for Community Service initiated the VolunteerMaine Partnership in 2002 as part of its responsibility to be a catalyst in solving challenges faced by Maine's volunteer sector. Between 2002 and 2007, the number of partners grew from 3 to 14. The members of the VolunteerMaine Partnership are state, non-profit, public and private agencies. VolunteerMaine's goal is to build the capacity of volunteer programs and their leadership by addressing the four priority needs identified by Maine's volunteer sector:

- 1) professional development/training volunteer administrators,
- 2) increased sustainability and capacity to meet local needs,
- 3) increased engagement of citizens as volunteers and
- 4) technical assistance for and coordination among volunteer programs.

AmeriCorps Alumni Ambassador Program

The goal of the Alumni Ambassador program is to increase awareness about AmeriCorps programs to high school and college students and people in career transition. Ambassadors span the state and conduct outreach in a number of ways. Ambassadors have the opportunity to meet new people, share their AmeriCorps experience, network with other Alumni, and serve their communities again!

Competencies for Managers of Volunteers

Like other occupations, a fundamental assumption in volunteer programs is that well prepared and competent managers of volunteers (both paid and unpaid) are essential to the success of a program.

In other careers, competency is assessed using a continuum of ability, knowledge and skill sets that range from novice to expert. And the measurement is done in the context of a person's capacity to use them adaptively in a variety of work settings and organizations.

The Maine Commission for Community Service worked with leaders in the volunteer sector to articulate the continuum of novice through expert competencies for managers of volunteers. After full vetting, the competencies were published and have been used in a number of national venues. The Maine Commission bases all its training and technical assistance on this framework.

INVEST

In response to the absence of educational opportunities for managers of volunteers, the Maine Commission for Community Service obtained funding from the Corporation for National and Community Service that underwrote development of 3 on-line courses – one noncredit and two forcredit. A fourth course is in development but not available.

Each course is grounded in one set of the Competencies for Managers of Volunteers (novice, intermediate, advanced, expert). By leveraging distance-education options, the initiative overcomes geographic barriers and accessibility limitations posed by management challenges in very small community agencies.

STEM Service-learning Grants funded by Time Warner Cable

In partnership with Time Warner Cable, the Commission makes grants to school districts that want to initiate service-learning practices or expand adoption of service learning among science, math, and technology classes. During 2009, funds from Time Warner supported teacher adoption of service learning in five school districts.

Martin Luther King Day Service Project Grants

For nearly 10 years, the Commission has awarded small grants to community organizations to support development and implementation of service projects that honor the legacy of Martin Luther King Jr. In 2010, the grant program supported 16 projects from Portland (pop. 63,000) to Georgetown (pop 1,020).

Keeping Mainers Safe and Warm

About three-quarters of Maine's households – the highest share in the Nation – use fuel oil for home heating. Just over 45,000 households are LIHEAP eligible but, with the changes in energy costs, the program only covers the cost of one tank of heating fuel. So each year since 2005, the Maine Commission for Community Service has been called upon to organize a volunteer response to the reality that some Maine citizens don't have the resources to make it through winter. The Commission is one collaborator in an effort headed by Maine State Housing, Maine Office of Energy Independence, Maine Public Utility Commission's Efficiency Maine, and ME Dept of Health and Human Services.

In 2009, the Commission developed Maine HEARTH which created networks of local faith-based organizations, service providers, municipal government, funders, and businesses. The networks covered 10 counties and each crafted a local response to the urgent needs of neighbors – from winterization of houses to warming centers to fuel assistance.

Volunteer and Donations Management

The Commission co-leads the state emergency response functions related to volunteer and donations management. Our partner is Maine Emergency Management and the Commission provides added support to MEMA around operation of its online donations management system, Aidmatrix. In addition, the Commission has a partnership with Maine AmeriCorps Alums to stand up volunteer centers as needed. With another partner, 211Maine, the Commission supports local COADs and handles flow of information to spontaneous volunteers who cannot access the internet communications.
