

Gwen Darien is the Executive Director of Samuel Waxman Cancer Research Foundation. As a cancer survivor herself, she has brought a wealth of personal and professional experience to her positions as editor-in-chief of CR magazine and as prior Director of the Survivor and Patient Advocacy Program with the American Association for Cancer Research (AACR), where she oversaw initiatives to promote partnerships between advocates and researchers, including the organization's renowned Scientist-Survivor programs. She was previously the editor-in-chief of MAMM, the country's only consumer magazine dedicated to women with breast and reproductive cancer. Under her leadership, MAMM won international acclaim for its coverage of survivorship, health disparities, controversies in women's cancers, and health care policy. She has addressed cancer survivors and scientists across the country and in Europe at many panels, workshops and conferences. She has served on the faculties of the AACR/ American Society of Clinical Oncology (ASCO) Methods in Clinical Cancer Research Workshop, American Society of Breast Disease Annual Symposium, Accelerating Anti-Cancer Agent Development and Validation Workshop, and the Milan Breast Cancer Symposium. She is an external advisor to the Breast Cancer Specialized Program of Research Excellence (SPORE) at the Duke Comprehensive Cancer Center and serves on the advisory board of the Health Advocacy Program at Sarah Lawrence College. She has received several awards for her work, including: the Avon Foundation Media Leadership Award, the LYMPHADvocate Award from the Cure for Lymphoma Foundation, and the Sisters' Network Media Leadership Award.
