To All Air Force Weather Personnel

As the Air Force Weather Observer magazine enters its third year, I would like to commend the Air Weather Service Public Affairs staff for creating and publishing a “world class” command information document for Air Force Weather. The new Observer continues the Observer’s tradition of award winning service.

Master Sergeant Don Schmidt and Staff Sergeant Steve Elliott have done an absolutely tremendous job implementing the vision inspired by a former Air Weather Service public affairs NCO, Technical Sergeant Bill Rhodes. As the Air Force celebrates its 50th anniversary, these outstanding NCOs represent the variety of skills it takes to keep Air Force Weather supporting the warfighter. They deserve our commendations for a job very well done. THANKS!

Best regards

Serving Air Force Weather A Great Source Of Pride

by Col. Joseph D. Dushan
Commander, Air Weather Service

Happy New Year and welcome to 1997! The tempo of operations across the Air Force Weather (AFW) family seemed to increase each day in 1996 ... this year has all the indicators for continued acceleration.

As 1997 dawns, let me recap some significant accomplishments last year in the Air Weather Service Field Operating Agency (FOA). For the record, AWS includes the Headquarters, Air Force Global Weather Center (AFGWC), Air Force Combat Climatology Center (AFCCC), Air Force Combat Weather Center (AFCWC), and operating locations at the Space Warfare Center and at the WSR-88D Operations Support Facility, Norman, Okla.

I'm eager to highlight these successes for several reasons. First, I'm enormously proud of the great men and women of AWS. They responded to a series of tough challenges with pride, determination, dedication, and superb professionalism.

Second, an increasing number of AFW people have entered the Air Force since the 1991 restructuring of AWS. Most of these people know very little about our role and mission.

Third, by publicizing key accomplishments, AWS' dedicated quality customer focus may prompt some ideas from the field on ways to improve support we provide.

Gen. George Patton once said: "Never tell people how to do things. Tell them what to do, then get out of their way. They will surprise you with their ingenuity." AWS validated this sound leadership advice in 1996.

The AFCWC went from a standing start in February 1995 to a creative, proactive, hard-charging capability in 1996. They formed strong partnerships with the Army Research Lab, Army Space Command, and the 3rd Weather Squadron to play an important and active role in Task Force XXI, the Army's premier program to leverage cutting edge technology for the future battlefield. They initiated a superb "Tactical MPR" concept that will pay huge dividends in AFW's go-to-war posture. They were also major participants in Air Force and Army demonstrations for Joint Chiefs of Staff-directed Joint Warrior Interoperability Demonstrations (JWID 96).

"I'm enormously proud of the great men and women of AWS. They responded to a series of tough challenges with pride, determination, dedication, and superb professionalism."

Col. Joseph D. Dushan
Commander, Air Weather Service

The AFCCC led the FOA in producing more extraordinary work for the broadest customer base. Their accomplishments range from major advances in data handling and dissemination, to critically important support for the Chief of Staff and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and to rapid and responsive support for a myriad of deployments, exercises, and contingency operations in every corner of the world. They also completed a brilliant concept of operations, organizational vision, and manpower structure for a re-engineered AFCCC at Asheville, N.C.

Our super AFGWC team performed near-miracles in 1996, completing a transition to a regional production capability, created four new theater forecast cells. Major advances in Air Force Dial-In System (AFDIS) capability and vastly improved customer support in AFWIN. The Automated Weather Distribution System (AWDS) Support Cell answered more than 14,000 requests for technical support from field users, saving nearly $2 million in contractor fees.

Accomplishments by the Headquarters AWS staff were perhaps less dramatic, but equally important to AFW. The Directorate of Communication and Information (SC) stood up Oct. 1, 1996. They've saved $11,000 per month by terminating low-use circuits and harvested over $1 million in re-negotiated ADWS and CFEP maintenance contracts.

The Resource Management (RM) Directorate orchestrated superb preparations throughout the FOA for a Quality Air Force Assessment. The results put AWS at the top 20 percent of all Air Force field operating agencies. The Public Affairs team put together an outstanding display for the Air Force Association convention in Washington, D.C., the very first time weather participated in an event gaining attention from the Secretary of Defense and other national defense leaders.

The Systems Directorate (SY) worked numerous AFW modernization projects. Examples include the Cray supercomputer replacement at AFGWC, AWDS hardware and software improvements, and the hugely successful Small Tactical Terminal (STT) project.

The Directorate of Plans and Operations (XO) completed numerous MPRs, created an Instructor Meteorologist hotline and handbook, and developed a superb AFW Executive Guidance document to guide weather support initiatives for years to come.

These accomplishments are only a sample. It's important to remember, though, they were not created in a vacuum and not accomplished for the sole benefit of AWS.

One of our greatest sources of pride is serving the needs of the AFW team. Now, stand back — AWS is charging full speed into 1997!

'1997 ... A Watershed Year'

Secretary Reviews Air Force Objectives For Year Ahead

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — 1997 will be a watershed year for the Air Force. Over the next 12 months we will see a remarkable series of events that will define how the Air Force grows and what our capabilities will be for many years to come.

Every member of the Air Force will play in these events, and every member will be affected by them. So, as we set out on this journey into the future, it is useful for us all to have the trip scoped out and understand its major turning points -- and our major objectives.

Where do we want to be when 1997 rolls into 1998? These are the achievements I expect us to have registered by then:

Build on the momentum of the long-range planning effort

Over the past year the Air Force created a compelling vision of the future. It is a shared vision, drawn from the competence and experience of every element of our force. But vision statements are not hard to define; historically, it has proven much harder to execute them than to write them.

Over the next year we must put flesh on the bones of the vision and transform it from a vision to a plan. We must move ahead with the specific initiatives outlined in the Air Force's vision statement: with the creation of battlelabs, and the construction of an air and space basic course that will help build a sense of institutional identity, and build a common understanding of the core values that are basic to all we do.

Participate effectively in the Quadrennial Defense Review

Over the next few months we will be deeply engaged in a comprehensive review of the entire U.S. military—a review that will include every element of our activities, from our military strategy to how we fight and how we support our forces. We view this review as an opportunity to educate our national decision makers on the capabilities of their air and space force, and to use the expertise we gained in the intensive analysis that underlay the long-range planning effort.

by Sheila E. Widnall
Secretary of the Air Force

Sustain our modernization and quality-of-life initiatives

Over the past few years, the Air Force has shaped and executed the programs we need to bring on the systems necessary to operate effectively in the next 20 years. We have also pressed ahead with the quality-of-life initiatives we need to attract and retain the people who have made us the finest air force on earth. With the new Congress, and with continued pressure on the budget, the challenges to these programs continue to grow.

I see three steps as essential to our success here.

■ First, we must continue to educate our national policy makers on the Air Force's contributions to the joint team. Second, we must prioritize and manage our programs carefully. And third, we must press ahead with the movement toward better business practices that will shake loose the resources we need to sustain our combat capabilities into the future.

■ Sustain the effectiveness of our current operations and upgrade quality of life for our deployed forces. Ultimately, everything we do comes down to the capabilities that our people provide our national decision makers—the options we provide our nation and the professionalism with which we execute them. We have stepped up to a wide range of missions and a high operation tempo over the years since the end of the Cold War, and we continue to learn about these new missions as we go. We have taken a series of steps to relieve the personnel tempo load on our people, and those steps will continue.

Recently, I traveled to the Middle East and reviewed the progress of our forces there. We have performed magnificently in very austere circumstances in that theater. Our Air Force people performed miracles in the wake of the Khobar Towers bombing—relocating whole wings, upgrading force protection, all while continuing the mission without a pause.

Now we must focus on upgrading quality of life. This will take time—but the time to work at it is now. Our commanders are focused on that need. We must help them give our people the living and working conditions they deserve.

■ Celebrate a successful 50th anniversary. We are members of the greatest air and space force in the history of the world. Every day we ensure the national security of the greatest nation on earth.

This year we will celebrate that legacy. We should all take the opportunity to enjoy the celebration. We have all earned it — we have all sacrificed to help build our unique capabilities.

As we celebrate, we must take time to educate the American people on the contributions of air power to this nation. And we should take time to reflect on the unbelievable progress of air and space power in our remarkably intense five-decade history.

So, there will be nothing ordinary about 1997. I view the coming 12 months as a huge opportunity for the Air Force. In all of these efforts, we can build on the superb achievements of Air Force people around the world. Over the past five decades that record of achievement has built a solid foundation for our next steps. We will build on our golden legacy as together we construct a boundless future.

Themes For 1997

Focus Is On People And Vision

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman has said he will focus on people and vision in 1997.

In his first year as chief of staff, the general emphasized people and stability. During his second year, he stressed people and modernization. In 1997, he has added the recently released strategic vision for the Air Force — “Global Engagement.”

“The people who make up our Air Force team are the most important thing to focus on,” Fogleman said. “They are the foundation of our strength. We must recruit, train and retain the highest quality force possible. If we are to be successful, then we must take care of our people and their families.”

The chief of staff said Air Force leaders will aggressively support the service’s broad strategy for enhancing quality of life for its people. That strategy is designed to secure fair and equitable compensation, safe and affordable housing, quality health care, balanced personnel tempo, effective community programs, sustained retirement benefits and expanded educational opportunities.

“Additionally, we will seek increased funding for recruiting and advertising to sustain our aggressive efforts to attract high-caliber people into our Air Force.”

Fogleman said, “Our second major theme for 1997 is the Air Force’s new strategic vision—‘Global Engagement.’ This is not my vision, nor Secretary [of the Air Force Sheila E.] Widnall’s vision. It is the Air Force’s vision for the first quarter of the 21st century.”

“It’s the product of an 18-month planning effort by senior military and civilian leaders to define the role of air and space power for the nation in the next century. Therefore, it is essential that all Air Force members become familiar with this new vision and what it means for our service as we prepare to enter the 21st century.”

A key element of this vision is a revised list of core competencies that the Air Force will provide the nation to underwrite future warfighting concepts laid out by the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in his “Joint Vision 2010” document.

The core competencies are air and space superiority, global attack, rapid global mobility, precision engagement, information superiority and agile combat support.

“We will provide these core competencies for the nation by fielding the air and space capabilities that come through our balanced, time-phased modernization program,” said the general.

That program includes the following:
— 120 C-17s for rapid global mobility in the near-term;

— Conventional bomber upgrades and precision munitions for global attack and precision engagement in the early mid-term;

— Evolved expendable launch vehicle, space-based infrared system and airborne laser for air and space superiority in the later mid-term;

— F-22 for air and space superiority in the far-term;

— And Joint Strike Fighter for global attack and precision engagement in the far-term.

The chief of staff emphasized that “Our new vision commits the Air Force to a vigorous program of experimenting, testing and exercising new systems and operations concepts for their employment.

“So,” he said, “we are establishing new, focused battle labs to promote innovation in the key areas of space operations, air expeditionary forces, battle management, force protection, information warfare and unmanned aerial vehicles.”

The new vision recognizes the crucial role played by talented and motivated people in preparing the Air Force for the challenges of the future. It reaffirms the core values of “integrity first,” “service before self” and “excellence in all we do.” It also underwrites the commitment of the senior leadership to provide all Air Force people a quality environment in which they can realize their full potential.

“A big part of our vision process,” Fogleman said, “is that this new vision will not result in abrupt or unnecessary changes to the way we are going about our business of providing combat capability for the nation. In the end, that’s what counts ... being able to defend America ... to fight and win the nation’s wars when called upon to do so.”
