SPECIAL
1999 ALMANAC
EDITION

Director of Weather
Deputy Chief of Staff, Air and Space Operations
Headquarters United States Air Force
Washington DC 20330-1490

At this point in your Air Force career, we want to thank you for the outstanding job you are doing and to let you know how important you are to the success of our Air Force and our weather mission. We sincerely appreciate the sacrifices and contributions you have made toward our Nation's defense and we hope the personal rewards you have experienced have been gratifying. As you know, Air Force Weather is in the midst of a comprehensive and aggressive strategy to improve the way we do our jobs and grow our people. We are confident that the results of our reengineering efforts will be meaningful and positive. We're making great progress and we're already realizing some significant benefits.

The most important part of our strategy for success, however, involves you. We absolutely need you and your talents to continue our bold move toward the future. Hopefully, the selective reenlistment bonuses and special duty assignment pay available to you will serve not only as an incentive, but, most importantly, as much deserved compensation for a job well done. Our best payback to you, however, will come in the way we train, work, and live in the future. This is now well within sight as the Air Force becomes an Expeditionary Aerospace Force and as we reengineer Air Force Weather.

We need you in order to reach these goals and we hope you will seriously consider staying with us. You have served our Nation well and your continued service makes a tremendous difference. Be proud of what you have done – we are! AIRPOWER!

Best regards

TOWARD AN EXPEDITIONARY AEROSPACE FORCE

Director Envisions EAF's Impact on Troop Morale

By Brig. Gen. Fred P. Lewis

Air Force Director of Weather

In the open letter on the opposite page to every person in Air Force Weather, CMSgt Ramirez and I again ask you to stay with us as we move forward into an even brighter future. Your leadership, experience, expertise, drive, and teamwork are needed as we shape AF Weather for the future. While we're facing a few tough challenges along the road to change, you are meeting those challenges head on and doing an absolutely great job. THANKS!

With our on-target reengineering plan that is already working very well in Europe and Alaska, and our fully engaged, enthusiastic people, our efforts to dramatically improve weather support for the operators, trainers, and warfighters will succeed. But there is even better news for our Air Force. By now, no doubt most of you have heard about changes that are forthcoming in the Air Force—namely the implementation of the Chief of Staff's concept, the Expeditionary Aerospace Force or EAF. It turns out that the EAF concept will make our reengineering plans work even better. It gives us the framework that will help us look out for our people, our Air Force's most precious asset, by providing a lifestyle that all of us can count on as we continue to serve our great Nation. Let me describe how EAF relates to AFW reengineering and how it will provide our people a better Air Force in which to serve.

In General Ryan's press conference last August, he provided the background on the EAF concept that I'd like to outline for you:

The goal of the EAF is to:

— Provide U.S. military CINCs the right force at the right place at the right time, whether the mission involves humanitarian relief or combat operations.

— Reduce deployment tempo by building more stability and predictability into the way we schedule our people to respond to contingencies. (Note this point carefully—it is directly aimed at improving your quality of life.)

— Take full advantage of the vital contributions of the Total Force — Active Duty, Reserve, Air National Guard, and Civilians.

“The product our planners came up with — the EAF concept and the Aerospace Expeditionary Forces that will allow us to provide aerospace power rapidly and decisively, anywhere and anytime — achieves each of these goals.”

So how do we plan to implement the EAF concept? Our staff here at the Pentagon, along with our functional managers at the MAJCOMs and in the AFWA, have been working alongside the EAF implementation team from the beginning making sure we could rapidly implement the concept as part of our reengineering efforts. Our representatives just attended the AEF “sourcing” conference and have worked out many of the details to make this concept a reality. These actual details will most likely be reaching you soon after this article is published.

Let me now discuss how I see the EAF concept improving things for all of us in the Air Force. I won't explain all the basics of EAF and how it was conceived and constructed. If you are interested in tracking this new concept, the best consolidated source for this subject is located on the web at the official HQ USAF EAF web page: <http://eaf.dtic.mil>. I'll summarize by explaining that, at this time, EAF plans call for 10 Aerospace Expeditionary Forces (AEFs) and two Aerospace Expeditionary Wings (AEWs). With two AEFs on call for 3-month periods, it creates a 15-month cycle for these 10 AEFs. One important point is that every possible manpower authorization (and people in those authorizations) will be linked to support an AEF or AEW. All available deployable weather people will be linked to one of the 2 AEWs or the 10 AEFs, creating a 3-month period, known far in advance, during which those persons will be vulnerable for a contingency or operational deployment. We will also aggressively strive to limit deployments over the 15-month period to 90 days. We plan to closely track this by maintaining specific metrics to help ensure this occurs.

While right now this is strictly a new way for the Air Force to do business, we are simultaneously working on the Army support side of our weather career field to create a very similar, structured deployment concept that gives the same 15-month, 90-day predictability for our people. As we write this article, we are including Army support taskings as part of the 10 AEFs, thus giving those who support the Army the predictability needed for a more stable lifestyle. Certainly there are details to work, but suffice it to say we will implement this in a fashion that allows us to deploy with our customers to the maximum extent, unless this breaks the “EAF predictability contract” with our people.

...This will result in a more stable lifestyle for those who deploy and for those who stay behind...

What does all this mean to you? By making these linkages, the vast majority of rotational taskings, such as Palace Tenure, will be handled with predictability and stability for our people. Across the Air Force about 5,000 positions to support deployed forces and home bases will be created by moving authorizations from Panama and from higher headquarters draw-downs. The new positions will be spread across Air Force installations, providing small manpower boosts to ease the tempo for highly stressed support forces. AFW will get its share of these increases at the weather flights that support AEF units. This also means much reduced 12-hour shifts for the people left behind when part of the unit deploys to support an AEF. This will result in a more stable lifestyle for those who deploy and for those who stay behind. (Certainly, we must get our unit staffing levels up in order to entirely eliminate 12-hours shifts, but we will have the "right" structure to make this happen once our staffing levels do improve and that's another reason for you to stay with us in the Air Force!)

It is also encouraging to see that our AFW reengineering plans directly support the EAF in several ways. First, we are already poised to align our weather teams with their supported customer. When that customer gets ready to do its AEF rotation, our weather people are linked to the AEF as well. Second, our Operational Weather Squadrons, with their fine-scale, regional focus and theater expertise, are well suited to provide support to the deployed AEF weather teams and the people who remain at home station. The deployed team can reach back to the OWS, and the OWS can reach back to the strategic centers—ensuring on-target weather support for the deployed forces, anytime, anywhere! Finally, our in-depth look at the way we support the warfighter through reengineering goes hand-in-hand with Gen Ryan's desire to make our Air Force more responsive to the Nation's needs for the 21st century. Bottom line: We are right on track and the EAF concept will ensure we take care of our people as we improve weather support for the warfighters.

Through reengineering, staffing and retention programs, initiatives to improve pay, and now a more predictable deployment schedule, the Air Force is working hard to improve our quality of life. This means a bright and challenging future. We need everyone's help in continuing to implement the reengineering changes, and, we need your full support of the EAF concept. It's an exciting time to be in the Air Force so please stay with us—we need you!

Correction

In the AFW NOTAMS section of the last issue, the Observer inaccurately identified the Selective Reenlistment Bonus authorizations for the weather career field. Actual entitlements are: ZONE A - 2.5, ZONE B - 1.5.

Air Force members at Tinker AFB sift through the rubble during cleanup efforts after the devastating tornado left death and destruction in its wake after ripping through Oklahoma City and surrounding communities. Tinker and local assistance agencies are providing temporary facilities for families displaced by the disaster.
