

Transcripts. To make a protein, a gene's DNA sequence is transcribed into a molecule called messenger mRNA (mRNA). This molecule, referred to as an mRNA transcript, leaves the nucleus and enters the cell's outer region, called the cytoplasm. Molecular machines called ribosomes then read the transcript and use the information to assemble building blocks called amino acids into proteins.