ARKANSAS HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION 63rd ANNUAL MEETING and TRADE SHOW

"Healthcare: From Chaos to Vision"

October 3-6, 1993 Arkansas' Excelsior Hotel and Statehouse Convention Center Little Rock, Arkansas

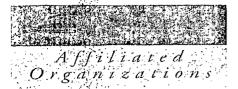

The Arkansas Hospital Association's 63rd Annual Meeting and Trade Show will offer an exciting chance for hospital CEOs, trustees, department head personnel, and other healthcare providers to meet with each other, to hear noted speakers in the healthcare field, and to learn about the latest in medical technology and services.

Several allied and affiliated organizations (including the newly-formed Arkansas Association of Hospital Trustees) will meet during the AHA annual meeting, affording an excellent educational opportunity for hospital personnel to hear nationally known speakers right here in Arkansas.

Please review the general program and information in this packet. A registration form is enclosed for your convenience. Remember to make room reservations early in order to assure a room at the headquarters hotel. Program information for affiliated organizations will be mailed under separate cover.

By the way, if you are new to Arkansas, the annual meeting provides a valuable opportunity to meet and visit with your colleagues. We hope you will join us in October!

Allied and affiliated organizations meeting in conjunction with the AHA Annual Meeting are:

- Arkansas Association for Healthcare Quality (AAHQ)
- Arkansas Association of Hospital Trustees (AAHT)
- Arkansas Association for Medical Staff Services (AAMSS)
- Arkansas Healthcare Risk Management Association (AHRMA)
- Arkansas Hospital Auxiliary Association (AHAA)
- Arkansas Hospital Personnel Association (AHPA)
- Arkansas Organization for Nurse Executives (AONE)
- Arkansas Society for Directors of Volunteer Services (ASDVS)
- Arkansas Society for Healthcare Educators (ASHE)
- Arkansas Society for Healthcare Marketing and Public Relations (ASHMPR)
- Arkansas Society for Social Work Administrators in Health Care (ASSWAHC)

The AHAA and ASDVS will hold their meetings at the Camelot Hotel, while the remainder of the organizations will meet at the Excelsior Hotel and Statehouse Convention Center.

Program information for each organization will be distributed to organization members. If additional materials or information is needed, please call 501-224-7878.

From: Veronica Nyhan -for C. Heeran

Subject: Materials for tomorrow's presentation

Enclosed are two transcripts from the First Lady's testimonies yesterday. They have been highlighted to emphasize questions asked by members about how the plan affects hospitals. Also included are almost-final drafts of policy summaries on the following topics: academic health centers, administrative simplification, doctors, hospitals, Medicaid, Medicare and older Americans, and nurses.

Hopefully, these materials are sufficient for your preparations for hospital speech. If there is anything else we could put together for you, or if you feel you are lacking in any information, please do not hesitate to call us #2857 or #2566. I am very familiar with Christine's files and could get you whatever you need.

STATEMENT FROM THE AMERICAN HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION ON PRESIDENT CLINTON'S HEALTH CARE REFORM PROPOSAL September 17, 1993

Richard J. Davidson, President

President Clinton promised the American people that he would exercise strong leadership in health care reform. In offering a comprehensive set of proposals to frame the debate, he has done just that. America's hospitals commend the President and the First Lady for their historic effort to analyze the strengths and weaknesses of our health care delivery system, and offer concrete ideas on how it can be improved.

The President has, in effect, fired the starting gun. The challenge facing him now is to engender and sustain a cooperative spirit with the Congress to achieve much-needed change in one of the most fundamental aspects of our lives: care of our loved ones and ourselves when we are sick or injured. While the President has provided a strong voice and credible proposals for change, his are not the only ideas that will be debated. Republicans in the House and Senate and others in the President's own party have put forth thoughtful proposals that will become part of the discussion.

It's clear we're at the start of a long legislative process -- we're beginning a marathon, not a sprint. America's hospitals have made a long-term commitment to health care reform. We support a reform vision that will mean dramatic change for us, and for all others who make up and use our health care delivery system -- in other words, for everyone.

We seek the kind of change that will put patients and communities at the center of the health care system. We want hospitals, physicians, and other health care providers to have sound reasons to work together, rather than at cross purposes. We want to eliminate expensive duplication of services and technology, and to contain costs.

To a significant degree, the President's plan reflects these principles. We share his belief that health coverage for all Americans must be the bedrock of any reform proposal. We see in his plan a bold yet realistic way to change the way we provide care and pay for It -- a way that will help consumers take more responsibility for their health, and will lead to wiser use of health care resources.

And we share the President's view that the least disruptive way to achieve these goals is to preserve and strengthen our present system of providing health coverage through employers, and make coverage available through the government for those not employed.

We do, however, have serious concerns about aspects of the President's proposal. Most significantly, our concerns center on the structure of health alliances; on the proposed level of Medicare and Medicaid reductions; and on the lack of a timetable for folding Medicare recipients into the overall plan. We have a serious question about how reform would be financed. We believe that any global budget for health care spending should be based on people's actual health needs, not an abstract, mechanical formula.

Where do we end up when hospitals balance our support vs. our reservations? In the final analysis, there is far more common ground than battleground here. We pledge, to all those who have a sincere interest in making the health care system work better, that hospitals are willing to work hard to achieve reform. We will strongly support the President where we can, and engage in honest and open dialogue to reach consensus on those areas of the President's reform plan with which we disagree. And we will work in exactly the same manner with Members of Congress, Republicans and Democrats, because that is the only way to reach our goal of comprehensive health care reform.

And comprehensive reform is what the American people are asking us to do. Even those with adequate care today understand tomorrow's health care uncertainties.

To do nothing, or worse, to fall back on simplistic solutions that may look like reform but in reality do nothing to address the underlying problems facing our health care system, only postpones and complicates our task.

The road before us is a long one. There will be changes in positions, and months of give and take. But it's all part of the process of building consensus toward a health care system that better serves all Americans. To get there, all parties must put aside self-interest and keep the real target in view: the best interests of communities across America.

September 14, 1993

The Honorable Bill Clinton President of the United States The White House Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

As you complete work on your health care reform proposal and prepare to present it to Congress and the nation later this month, we want to share with you some of our thoughts and concerns about the forthcoming proposal.

Reforming this nation's fragmented health care system was one of your principal pledges during last year's Presidential campaign. We applaud you and your Administration for the leadership you have shown in developing a health care reform proposal, and we look forward to working with you and the Congress to ensure that all Americans have access to high quality, affordable health care. There are many difficult decisions that lie ahead, but working together we can make them. Our nation demands—and deserves—no less.

As we understand through recent reports about your proposal, it appears that there are a number of areas where we scare common ground with you, particularly providing universal access to health insurance coverage for all Americans through a restructured delivery system. Despite these areas of apparent agreement, we are greatly concerned about reports that indicate you intend to use massive reductions in the Medicare and Medicaid programs to finance your health care reform proposal. In fact, The New York Times reported September 9 that you will propose $238 billion in reductions from these two programs alone between fiscal year 1996 through fiscal year 2000. As we have said before, we are prepared to share in the responsibility of providing universal access to all Americans as part of a comprehensive health care reform package, but reductions of the magnitude currently under consideration are unacceptable and raise a serious question about the commitment to adequately fund these important health care programs for the poor and elderly.

Just last month, you signed into law the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (OBRA) of 1993, which reduces Medicare and Medicaid outlays by $55.8 billion and $7.2 billion, respectively, over the next five years! This comes on top of $43 billion in Medicare savings enacted as part of the 1990 budget agreement. As a result of these reductions, resources for delivering services to the poor and elderly are already stretched thin. Additional reductions of the magnitude reported by the Times could push many providers toward the brink of financial disaster and further erode access to care for millions of poor, elderly and disabled citizens.

Furthermore, we are very concerned about the use of formula-driven global budgets to establish limits on the growth of private health spending. Global budgets such as these fail to establish a link between the benefits promised to beneficiaries and the costs of providing those benefits. Global budgets that are based on arbitrary benchmarks, such as the growth in the consumer price index, have no relationship to current health care needs and will be unable to respond to unanticipated changes in health spending needs.

We stand ready to work with you and the Congress to reform our nation's health care system to ensure that all Americans have access to high quality health care services, and urge you to reject the level of reductions in the Medicare and Medicaid programs that have been reported and the use of arbitrarily calculated global budgets.

Sincerely,

The Aforementioned Organizations

STATEMENT FROM THE AMERICAN HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION
ON PROPOSED $238 BILLION REDUCTIONS
IN MEDICARE AND MEDICAID

Attribute to: Dick Davidson, President

Getting across the health reform tightrope is going to be an incredibly difficult balancing act for the Administration. We're deeply concerned that with Medicare and Medicaid reductions of the size we're starting to hear about in the Clinton plan, the President may be getting out on that highwire with his balancing pole already heavily weighted against success.

Hospitals want health reform to succeed, and we salute the President's leadership on this tough issue. His plan contains many elements we agree with.

But there's good reason hospitals question whether $238 billion savings out of Medicare and Medicaid can be achieved. Hospital resources for delivering services to the poor and the elderly are already stretched thin. Folks in Washington have to understand that these reductions aren't made in a vacuum. They translate into real hardship out there in communities; into tough choices hospitals are going to have to make about what services they can offer and how many people they can offer them to.

At the same time, hospitals recognize that a reformed health care system is going to have to live within limits. But the way to make the tough choices between how much this country can afford for health care, and what benefits that amount of money will pay for, is first through broad public debate and ultimately, we believe, through an independent national commission that reflects that debate.

Re: Annual Meeting Speech

Dear Carol:

We had planned to withhold any printed announcement of your October 4 appearance during our 63rd Annual Meeting in Little Rock until the Administration's health reform plan was announced.

However, we must take the program to the printer during the next two weeks, and since the unveiling of the reform plan may not take place until July or later, I hope it is okay with you that we go ahead and put your name in the program as a speaker.

We promise to issue no press release or any other written notice of your visit with us until the plan is released. This way, only our member hospitals will be aware of your attendance plans in the near term.

Enclosed is a form that will assist your staff in providing a biographical sketch, travel plans, and information about your presentation. Please return this form, along with any questions or comments to Beth Ingram, our convention producer.

Carol, we are truly honored that you will be with us in October. All of us are looking forward to seeing you then.

Sincerely,

James B. Teeter

Dear Carol:

We are so pleased and excited that you have accepted the invitation to speak at our 63rd Annual Meeting to be held on October 4, 1993.

We will certainly honor your request to withhold any printed announcement until after the Administration's healthcare plan is announced next month. At your convenience, we can visit as to how you may want to title your presentation in an effort to follow the meeting's theme which is "Healthcare: From Chaos to Vision."

Beth Ingram, our convention manager, will be in touch with your staff in the next few days requesting a photograph and a bio-sketch for introductory purposes.

Again, Carol, thank you so much for agreeing to come to Little Rock to participate in our program. Your appearance will assure us of a successful annual meeting.

Sincerely

James R. Teeter

P.S. Thought you'd like to see the ad on healthcare reform we've been running in Arkansas Business.

Healthcare Reform

n all the talk about healthcare reform and national health insurance, we often forget that 85% of all Americans have health insurance and ready access to their choice of hospitals and physicians. We Americans have grown so accustomed to the world's most sophisticated, highest quality healthcare, that we regard it as an inalienable right.

For all its strengths, though. Americas healthcare delivery system has become a costly, fragmented "non-system" of uncoordinated services and programs. The sheer volume of private insurance plans and government programs like Medicare, CHAMPUS. Medicaid, each with its own eligibility and funding requirements, coupled with the fact that 3⁻⁷ million people have no insurance at all suggests the magnitude of the problem.

An outgrowth of this bureaucratic maze and inconsistency in health coverage is that 80% of Americans, including a majority of those in the hospital field, feel that our healthcare system is in need of radical change. And change is on the way. But it will not come without difficult choices and sacrifices for us all.

These sacrifices will include paying higher taxes to insure the uninsured; containing costs by waiting longer for non-emergency surgery; and traveling farther and waiting longer—perhaps weeks—for diagnostic procedures like MRI or CT scanning. Among the tough choices may be the idea of "save a life at any cost"; for example, is a $90.000 heart transplant a waste when done on a 75 year old?

To quell costly "defensive medicine," limits will have to be placed on excessive malpractice court judgements, which are averaging $1.821,055. Anti-trust and other legislative reforms will be needed to eliminate conflicting interests and to discourage duplication of services.

Hospitals throughout Arkansas and America have taken a leadership role in calling for the restructuring of both the healthcare payment and delivery systems. In fact, healthcare reform, as proposed by hospitals, calls for more radical change than does any of the 100 proposals that have been studied.

The main challenge in reforming our healthcare system is to find an acceptable balance between providing more access to healthcare services for 37 million people and maintaining high-quality care while also containing costs. Here, briefly, is how we would reinvent America's healthcare system to ensure access, high-quality care, and cost containment:

1. ACCESS: Grant everyone access to care by offering at least a basic healthcare benefits package covering all the vital services from preventive, to acute, to long-term care. All employers, large and small, would offer affordable coverage for their workers and dependents. Those not covered in the workplace could participate in a new, publicly financed program.

2. QUALITY THROUGH COMMUNITY CARE NET-WORKS: Provide patients with integrated healthcare at the local level through community care networks. Each local network (comprised of hospitals, physicians, home health agencies, nursing homes, etc.) would be responsible for assessing patient health risks and needs, as well as planning and organizing care so that problems are averted or treated early and that all needed services are efficiently provided.

3. COST CONTAINMENT: Provide annual, risk-adjusted capitated payments to the local healthcare networks. Capitation-a set fee per enrollee-would provide the network's budget for delivering care. With this system, private and government pavers could better predict and manage their healthcare spending while allowing the local network to decide how best to allocate its resources. This would give financial incentives for network participants to provide low-cost preventive care, to collaborate among themselves to avoid expensive and unneeded duplication of services and facilities, and to provide only appropriate and necessary healthcare.

Arkansas hospitals and their leaders have a professional responsibility to their patients and their communities to provide leadership in solving the problems of the American healthcare system. They are prepared to work with physicians and other healthcare professionals, business, labor, insurers, government, the educational system, and the public to solve these problems and to make this nation the healthiest in the world.
