

ANNOUNCING

New Executive for Research Services

[Excerpts from NARA Notice 2012-157 to staff dated May 7, 2012]

On May 7, 2012, the Archivist of the United States announced the appointment of William A. "Bill" Mayer as our new Executive for Research.

As the Executive for Research Services, Mayer leads a nationwide team in delivering world-class services to customers wanting access to the National Archives vast holdings of accessioned Federal records. He directs a program that acquires, preserves, and makes historical records accessible at fifteen facility locations across the country and on the archives.gov website. One of Mayer's top priorities is to build a systematic, ongoing program to identify and meet researcher customer needs through on-site and online services.

Mayer brings over 20 years of experience working in dynamic research environments, most recently having served as the University Librarian at American University in Washington, DC. In this role, Mayer connected the University Library fully to the work of the university through strong leadership, innovative visions for today's technology-driven research environments, and a passionate focus on the customer.

Prior to his work at American University, Mayer served from 2001 to 2007 as the Associate University Librarian for Information Technology and Technical Services at George Washington University. He was directly responsible for the development, implementation, and integration of information technology services across the entire library system operation. He also served as an adjunct faculty member for the School of Library and Information Science at Catholic University.

Mayer's library career began in 1990 at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Libraries, and later moved to the Harvard Business School Library as access services manager. He came to DC in 1999 to serve as the systems librarian for public services for the Washington Research Library Consortium. Mayer is an international speaker and leader on the changing face of services in research organizations, management of organizational change, and innovative applications of technology in information systems. He was George Washington University's first Frye Leadership Institute Scholar in 2005. He earned a BA in English Literature from the University of Washington and a MLS from Simmons College in Boston.

Prior to working in academic libraries, Mayer worked in a variety of occupations, including vineyard management, cattle ranching, and residential construction. His interests include ocean ecology, music, and next-generation learning systems. A native Californian who grew up on the campus of Cal-Tech, he currently lives on Capitol Hill in Washington, DC, with his family and an assortment of pets.

Coming Next Issue: Interview with our new Research Executive Bill Mayer!

DELAYED OPENING ON SEPTEMBER 6!

Research Rooms in the Washington, DC, area (Archives I and II) will open at 1 p.m. to allow staff to attend a much anticipated meeting.

New Microfilm Research Room Open

By Rick Blondo

A new Microfilm Research Room opened on Monday, May 21, in the Robert M. Warner Research Center in the National Archives Building, Washington, DC. It includes 27 researcher carrels, five public use computers (and a printer), bookcases, and a staff control desk at the entrance to the room. Items that moved from the old room include microfilm and microfiche cabinets, map cases, DVD spinners, and more than 150,000 microfilm reels. The new room has dimmable ceiling lights, and wall washer lights are situated where microfilm cabinets line the walls.

Entrance desk in the new Microfilm Research Room

The look of the room continues the enhanced appearance becoming visible throughout the Research Center, with its oak millwork and cork floor. That design is in keeping with the original design of the historic National Archives Building as seen in the Central Research Room elsewhere in the building.

Researcher Orientation Now Online

By Robert Coren

The Help Us Protect the Records – Orientation for Researchers at the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) presentation is now available on the Archives.gov website.

This online presentation is identical to the presentation that new and renewing Research Card applicants view as part of the Research Card application process at NARA facilities.

We have provided this presentation online to give researchers information in advance of these requirements for using original Federal records and Presidential materials:

- NARA security procedures
- Research Room rules and procedures
- Safe ways to handle records

You can view the slideshow online in the Research Room Getting Started section [www.archives.gov/research/start/researcher-card.html]

URL Change on Public Access Computers

By Robert Coren

As of April, the content on the computers in the National Archives Research Rooms throughout the National Archives changed to match Archives.gov.

- This means the URL changed from http://www.nara.gov/research_rooms to <http://www.archives.gov/research>
- Names of NARA’s offices are being standardized, and similar changes are being made site-wide to reflect the concept of One NARA
[\[www.archives.gov/press/press-releases/2011/nr11-87.html\]](http://www.archives.gov/press/press-releases/2011/nr11-87.html)

THE BENEFITS OF THIS CHANGE ARE:

- ✓ Gives researchers access to the same content at any computer
- ✓ Ensures consistent layout, content, and global messages
- ✓ Provides single access to the Researcher Orientation slideshow
- ✓ Meets the OMB.gov reform initiative to limit domains [www.usa.gov/WebReform.shtml]

The Genealogy Tool Kit

New Published Resource for Family History

By John Deeben

A new research publication for both the novice and experienced genealogist is now available from the Foundation for the National Archives.

The Genealogy Tool Kit: Getting Started on Your Family History at the National Archives is a comprehensive, step-by-step guide to genealogy research, using records from the National Archives. The Tool Kit also highlights non-Federal sources available in state and local archives; resources from the Library of Congress and the DAR Library; and online resources and indexes. The Tool Kit includes a series of related worksheets that guide users through the major topics of genealogy research, beginning with the basics of starting your family history (i.e., how to get organized, what questions to ask, and who to contact).

A general worksheet on Using Federal Records introduces users to other major research topics, including Census, Immigration/Naturalization, Military Service, and Land records. Each topic is then further explored in separate worksheets, with each worksheet posing questions that help identify and understand specific records to search and additional sources for research, including published, microfilmed, or online indexes. The Military Service worksheet, for example, asks whether or not your ancestor served in a particular war. A "yes" answer guides the user to additional worksheets that explain how to locate military service information for every major war or conflict in American history from the Revolutionary War to Vietnam. Other worksheets cover general or "peacetime" service in the Regular Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. Each worksheet concludes by explaining how to locate or obtain copies of original records, offering suggestions for further reading, and then routing the user back to the next research topic.

With checklists to track your progress, family trees to fill in, and room for taking notes, the Genealogy Tool Kit also serves as a personal record of your own family history project. Genealogy certainly has become a national pastime, and with thousands of family researchers coming to the National Archives each year, and to NARA research facilities around the country, to locate information about their ancestors, the need for an easy methodology to navigate the minutiae of Federal records has become paramount. The Genealogy Tool Kit attempts to address that need in a simple way.

The Genealogy Tool Kit is available through the Archives Shop at Constitution Avenue between 7th and 9th Streets NW, Washington, DC, or by calling 202-357-5271. The book retails for $19.95.

National Historical Publications and Records Commission

Presidential Records and the NHPRC

By Keith Donohue

The National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) is the grantmaking affiliate of the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA).

During his second term in office, President Franklin D. Roosevelt surveyed the vast quantities of papers and other materials he and his staff had accumulated. In the past, many Presidential papers and records had been lost, destroyed, sold for profit, or ruined by poor storage conditions.

On the advice of historians and scholars, he established a public repository to preserve the evidence of the Presidency for future generations. Beginning a tradition that continues to this day, he raised private funds for the new facility and then turned it over to the United States Government for operation through the National Archives. Now, Presidential libraries exist for every administration since Herbert Hoover.

But what about the papers of Presidents before Hoover? Their papers are located in archives all across the United States and around the world. Fortunately, the National Historical Publications and Records Commission has assisted 16 projects to gather originals and copies of historical documents so that researchers and the general public can access the records of the Presidents.

Grant Papers

Histories such as Charles Bracelen Flood's Grant's Final Victory (DaCapo Press, 2012) rely upon the work done by documentary editors to make available the collections of Presidential papers.

In addition to these collections, the NHPRC has also supported the Papers of Dwight David Eisenhower at Johns Hopkins University (now online at www.eisenhowermemorial.org/presidential-papers/index.htm) and the Presidential Recordings program, which is transcribing the White House tapes of six 20th-century Presidents at the Miller Center at the University of Virginia [<http://millercenter.org/academic/presidentialrecordings>]. Two First Ladies are represented in NHPRC-sponsored documentary editions: the Dolley Madison Digital Edition [<http://rotunda.upress.virginia.edu/dmde/>] at the University of Virginia and the Eleanor Roosevelt Papers [www.gwu.edu/~erpapers/] at George Washington University.

National Historical Publications and Records Commission promotes the preservation and use of America's documentary heritage essential to understanding our democracy, history, and culture.

Roof Work at the National Archives Building (Archives I) This Summer

By James Garvin

The replacement of the tier 20 upper roof at the National Archives Building (Archives I) began in mid-July. This project is scheduled for completion in mid-October 2012.

Each day, part of the old roof will be removed and the exposed area prepared for the installation of the new roof. Some noise will be generated when removing the old roof so work is scheduled to minimize disruption. Construction activities will be scheduled in the early morning hours and will end by 9 a.m. each day.

The installation of the new roof may generate odors typical of roofing applications—the smell of hot tar. The contractor will make every effort to mitigate these smells from entering the building.

Throughout the project, a large crane will be required for material lifts. We will work to minimize impact on building operation and use while the crane is in place.

We apologize in advance for any inconvenience, and thank you for your patience during this critical building repair. We do not anticipate any impact to public or employee entrances during the project.

National Archives Sells Thumb Drives

By Peter Judson Staub

The National Archives Trust Fund (NATF) is selling USB drives at cashier operations in Washington, DC, and College Park, MD. The USB drives are also for sale at the National Archives eStore [<http://estore.archives.gov/ProductInfo/N-09-USB.aspx>]. The drives hold 4 GB of information and bear the National Archives and Records Administration's (NARA) logo on one side and the NATF seal on the other.

The USB drives are being introduced in conjunction with the new, self-service scanners/copiers for use by the public in its Washington, DC, and College Park, MD, research rooms. These new machines allow customers to make high-quality photocopies and to scan NARA holdings. The scanning option offers the ability to save scanned images to USB drives. Further, customers can preview their images and then save their scans as multiple file types (PDF, TIFF, and more).

The drives retail for $16.

About The Text Message

As employees of the National Archives, we are stewards for billions of pages of records that contain historical and evidentiary information about the Federal Government. A dedicated staff of archivists, specialists, technicians, and volunteers in the Textual Archives Services Division work hard every day to ensure that these records are preserved and made accessible to the public. And every day, we are making discoveries while we work, from the mundane to the extraordinary. The Text Message is an opportunity for staff members, interns, student employees, and volunteers to share their discoveries with the public. We hope you enjoy reading about our finds as much as we enjoy sharing them with you.

PRICES

FOR MICROFILM: Microfilm copies of rolls of microfilm publications may be purchased at $125 per roll (including shipping) for U.S. orders ($135 for international orders).

EXCEPTION: The color microfilm publication M1930, Enumeration District Maps for the Fifteenth Census of the United States (1930) (including shipping) is $135 for U.S. orders ($145 for international orders).

New Publications by Staff

Periodically, staff publishes articles in order to expand research community awareness of the National Archives' holdings. By targeting state and local historical and genealogical societies with articles about the agency's holdings, we hope to reach people who otherwise would not think of the National Archives as a resource for their research. During the past few months, the staff has published the following:

John Deeben:

- "Treating the Southern Sick and Wounded: Confederate Hospital Records at the National Archives," NGS Magazine 38:1 (January–March 2012): 38–44.
- "Pension and Bounty-Land Records Relating to Military Service in the War of 1812," American Ancestors 13:1 (Winter 2012): 38–42.

Help Index the 1940 Census

By Meredith Stewart

On April 2, 2012, the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) released more than 3.8 million pages of digital images from the 1940 Census online. On the same day, volunteers began to index (or transcribe) the individual names contained within the 3.8 million pages as part of a community indexing project available at the1940census.com.

More than 70 million names have already been indexed!

To get started:

- Visit the1940census.com
- Download and install the indexing software,
- Register as an indexing volunteer, and
- Download "batches" of images from the 1940 Census to transcribe

The 1940 Community Indexing Project is a new feature on NARA's Citizen Archivist Dashboard. To learn about other projects you can get involved in, please visit www.archives.gov/citizen-archivist.

Welcome Back: Wikipedian in Residence!

Dominic McDevitt-Parks, NARA's first Wikipedian in Residence, will continue his work this summer to further NARA's collaboration with the Wikipedian Community. Dominic will continue the work he began last summer—fostering collaboration around NARA records, including scan-a-thons, workshops, and trainings.

This summer, the International Wikimedia Conference, Wikimania 2012, was held at The George Washington University on July 12–15. To learn about this event, visit wikimania2012.wikimedia.org.

Immigration Reference Reports

Reference Reports for genealogical research are brief (one- to four-page) descriptions of research strategies for frequently used records of genealogical interest held at the National Archives Building in Washington, DC. The Reference Reports currently available online include African Americans, Military, Native American, and now Immigration, recently added.

Immigration records document the arrival of aliens and return of U.S. citizens to the United States from foreign ports from 1820 to the early 1980s. Before then, individual ports compiled their own records, which are not available at the National Archives.

The U.S. Customs Service maintained inbound passenger and crew lists from 1820 to 1890. In 1891, the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) controlled entry into the United States. Starting in 1895, immigration officials tracked border crossings from Canada as well, and from Mexico around 1903. Immigration Reference Reports describe research strategies for some of the more frequent topics and records relating to immigration, including the arrival of specific ethnic groups such as the Irish and Chinese, New York passenger arrivals, and accessioned records for later 20th-century immigration.

AVAILABLE REPORTS INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING:

- Immigrants Arriving at the Port of New York: Records of the U.S. Customs Service, 1820–1897
- Immigrants Arriving at the Port of New York: Records of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), 1897–1957

Launch of New Web Pages on Foreign Affairs Records

By David Langbart

To assist researchers interested in records of the Department of State and other foreign affairs agencies, the most heavily used records in the National Archives, the Textual Archives Services Division has launched a newly revamped set of pages on the Archives' website for providing an introduction to foreign affairs records [www.archives.gov/research/foreign-policy/index.html].

The conduct of foreign affairs is a key issue in United States history. The Department of State is designated to lead in the overall direction, coordination, and supervision of American foreign policy and foreign relations. During both World War I and World War II, temporary agencies came into existence to deal with special foreign affairs problems relating to those conflicts. During the Cold War, a community of agencies evolved to deal specifically with foreign policy issues. In addition, many other agencies have important roles in American national security affairs.

The new pages focus on the records of the Department of State but also include information on the temporary special foreign affairs agencies that came into existence during World War I and World War II, as well as the more permanent agencies that fought the Cold War. Also included is information about records that is valuable for genealogical purposes and about Department of State publications, including online resources.

In addition to the information on the site itself, there are links to more information and finding aids.

We invite you to take a look!

Monthly Genealogy Programs

Free

Free programs held on the first Wednesday, third Wednesday, and third Saturday every month.

Room G-24, Research Center (Enter on Pennsylvania Avenue)

Genealogy programs

include monthly workshops and lectures from our staff with extensive experience in genealogy. We provide lectures on basic genealogical research and techniques and one-on-one assistance.

● Introduction to Genealogy

Staff archivists and genealogy specialists present basic genealogical research strategies and techniques on the first Wednesday of the month. Topics include military service, immigration, and census records available at the National Archives.

● Beyond the Basics Genealogy

Archives staff teach "beyond the basic" archival research skills on the third Wednesday and third Saturday of the month. Topics provide research tools for digging deeper into the records in the National Archives' custody. All skill levels are welcome!

● "Help! I'm Stuck" Genealogy Clinic

Not sure where to begin your research? Is there a genealogical or historical problem that has stumped you? Would you like to explore new directions in your research? One Saturday a month, an archivist with extensive experience in genealogy and the records of the National Archives will be available from noon to 4 p.m. to answer questions. Look for the sign at the Microfilm Reading Room desk reading, "Help! I'm Stuck" and sign up for a 20-minute appointment that Saturday for one-on-one assistance.
