photons
DEF According to the quantum theory of radiation, the elementary quantities of radiant energy. They are regarded as discrete quantities having a momentum equal to  $h\nu/c$ , where  $h$  is the Planck constant,  $\nu$  is the frequency of the radiation, and  $c$  is the speed of light in a vacuum. Photons are never at rest, have no electric charges and no magnetic moments, but they have spin moments. The energy of a photon (the unit quantum of energy) is equal to  $h\nu$ .

DEF This multiprobe spacecraft, launched on its Venus mission in August 1978, comprises a Transporter Bus, a sounder probe, and three identical probes (North, night, and day) which separately investigated and photographed the atmosphere, clouds and related phenomena. The multiprobe spacecraft traveled about 354 million kilometers. It entered Venus atmosphere on December 9, 1978 and all probes transmitted data. Used for Pioneer Venus 2 Multiprobe spacecraft.

DEF Celestial bodies of the solar system, revolving around the sun in nearly circular orbits, or similar bodies revolving around stars. The larger of such bodies are sometimes called principal planets to distinguish them from asteroids, planetoids, or minor planets, which are comparatively small. The larger planets are accompanied by satellites such as the moon. Inferior planets have orbits smaller than that of the Earth; superior planets have orbits larger than that of the Earth. The four planets nearest the sun are called inner planets; the others, outer planets. The four largest planets are called major planets. The four planets commonly used for celestial observations are called navigational planets. The word planet is of Greek origin, meaning, literally, wanderer, applied because the planets appear to move relative to the stars.

SN (LIMITED TO COMPLETELY IONIZED MATTER; FOR PARTIALLY IONIZED GASES SEE IONIZED GASES)
 DEF Electrically conductive gases comprised of neutral particles, ionized particles, and free electrons but which, taken as a whole, are electrically neutral. Plasmas are further characterized by relatively large intermolecular distances, large amounts of energy stored in the internal energy levels of the particles, and the presence of plasma sheaths at all boundaries of the plasma. Plasmas are sometimes referred to as a fourth state of matter. Used for electrostatic plasma, ionized plasma, magnetoionic plasma, magnetoplasmas, and plasmoids.

DEF Broadly, and comparatively flat areas of great extent and elevation; specifically, extensive land regions considerably elevated (more than 150-300 meters in altitude) above the adjacent country or above sea level. They are commonly limited on at least one side by an abrupt descent, have a flat or nearly smooth surface but are often dissected by deep valleys and surmounted by high hills or high mountains, and have a large part of their total surface at or near the summit level. Plateaus are usually higher and have more noticeable relief than plains (they often represent elevated plains), and are usually higher and more extensive than mesas. pressure sensitive paints

(added March 2001)

DEF Luminescent paints used for the non-intrusive optical measurement of static and transient pressure fields. These paints are typically organic luminophores or dyes dispersed in an oxygen permeable polymeric binder. The luminescence is induced by the excitation of the dye with an appropriate wavelength light. The emitted intensity or brightness of the paint is inversely proportional to the partial pressure of oxygen because the luminescence is quenched by oxygen.

SN (DIRECTIONAL EMISSION RATE PER UNIT AREA OF RADIATION)

DEF In radiometry, a measure of the intrinsic radiant intensity emitted by a radiator in a given direction. It is the irradiance (radiant flux density) produced by radiation from the source upon a unit surface area oriented normal to the line between source and receiver, divided by the solid angle subtended by the source at the receiving surface. It is assumed that the medium between the radiator and receiver is perfectly transparent; therefore radiance is independent of attenuation between source and receiver.

refraction

DEF The process in which the direction of energy propagation is changed as the result of a change within the propagating medium, or as the energy passes through the interface representing a density discontinuity between the two media. In the first instance, the rays undergo a smooth bending over a finite distance. In the second case, the index of refraction changes through an interfacial layer that is thin compared to the wavelength of the radiation; thus, the refraction is abrupt, essentially discontinuous.

remote sensing

DEF The collection of information about an object or phenomena by a recording device that is not in physical contact with it. The term is usually restricted to mean the methods for, and activity of, recording features and phenomena of the Earth surface from a remote platform or vehicle. Typically the methods used record reflected or radiated electromagnetic energy, such as radiometry, photometry, spectrometry, and photographic and radar techniques.

resolution

DEF The ability of a film, a lens, a combination of both, or a vidicon system to render barely distinguishable a standard pattern of black and white lines. In radar, the minimum angular separation at the antenna at which two targets can be distinguished (a function of beamwidth); or the minimum range at which two targets at the same azimuth can be separated (equal to one half the pulse height). Of a gyro, a measure of response to small changes in input; the maximum value of the minimum input change that will cause a detectable change in the output for inputs greater than the threshold, expressed as a percent of one half the input range. Used for resolving power.

resonance

DEF The phenomena of amplification of a free wave or oscillation of a system by a forced wave or oscillation of exactly equal period. The forced wave may arise from an impressed force upon the system or from a boundary condition. The growth of the resonant amplitude is characteristically linear in time. Of a system in forced oscillation, the condition which exists when any change, however small, in the frequency of excitation causes a decrease in the response of the system.

rocket-based combined-cycle engines

(added August 1999)

DEF Launch vehicle engines that integrate a high specific impulse, low thrust-to-weight, airbreathing engine with a low-impulse, high thrust-to-weight rocket. The engines are often defined by four modes of operation in a single-stage-to-orbit configuration. In the first mode, the engine functions as a rocket-driven ejector. When the rocket engine is switched off, subsonic combustion (mode 2) is present in the ramjet mode. As the vehicle continues to accelerate, supersonic combustion (mode 3) occurs in the ramjet mode. Finally, as the edge of the atmosphere is approached and the engine inlet is closed off, the rocket is reignited and the final ascent to orbit is undertaken in an all-rocket mode (mode 4).

soft gamma repeaters

(added January 2000)
DEF A class of x-ray source which emits repeating bright bursts of "soft" or low-energy gamma rays, along with steady x-ray pulsations. By the end of 1999 only a handful of these sources had been identified in our galaxy and in the Large Magellanic Cloud. Since they are associated with supernova remnants, these sources are probably some kind of young neutron star. One theory holds that these stars are young magnetars (magnetically-powered neutron stars). Bright bursts occur when the evolving, ultra-strong magnetic field stresses the neutron star's solid crust to breaking, in a sudden starquake. X-ray pulsations are due to the rotation of the star, with it's hot surface bright in x-rays.

(added June 1999)
 SN (FOR METEOROLOGICAL CONDITIONS RELATED TO THE MIDDLE AND LOWER ATMOSPHERES OF NON-EARTH PLANETS USE "PLANETARY METEOROLOGY")
 DEF The dynamic, highly variable conditions of the geospace environment that encompasses the sun, the interplanetary medium, and the Earth magnetosphere-ionosphere-thermosphere system. Major contributing factors include variations in the solar wind, solar flares, and solar mass ejections. Effects of space weather phenomena include performance degradation of communication, navigation, and power systems on both spacecraft and ground-based systems; and potential health hazards during extravehicular activity.

Surface Radiation Budget project

(added October 2007)

DEF A 12-year project to produce and archive a global data set of shortwave and long-wave Earth surface and top of the atmosphere parameters using International Satellite Cloud Climatology Project (ISCCP) and Earth Radiation Budget Experiment (ERBE) data. The SRB data sets contain three hourly, daily, and monthly averages of surface longwave and shortwave radiative properties, cloud amount, and meteorological properties computed using models.

- tropopause
 SN (ALTITUDE APPROXIMATELY 15 TO 20 KM)
 DEF The boundary between the troposphere and the stratosphere, usually characterized by an abrupt change of lapse rate. The change is in the direction of increased atmospheric stability from regions below to regions above the tropopause. Its height varies from 15 to 20 kilometers in the tropics to about 10 kilometers in polar regions. In polar regions in winter it is often difficult or impossible to determine just where the tropopause lies, since under some conditions there is no abrupt change in lapse rate at any height.

V/STOL aircraft

DEF A hybrid form of heavier-than-air aircraft that is capable, by virtue of one or more horizontal rotors or units acting as rotors, of taking off, hovering, and landing as, or in a fashion similar to, a helicopter, and once aloft, and moving forward, capable, by means of a mechanical conversion of one sort or another, of flying as a fixed-wing aircraft, especially in its higher speed ranges. Used for convertiplanes and steep gradient aircraft.

vapor phase lubrication
(added August 1996)
 DEF The use of an organic liquid that is vaporized into a flowing air stream directed to sliding surfaces where lubrication is needed. The organic vapor reacts at the concentrated contact sliding area generating a lubricous deposit. This deposit has been characterized as a thin polymeric film that can provide effective lubrication temperatures greater than 400 degrees Celsius.

VASIMR (propulsion system)

(added November 2000)
DEF A high-power, RF-driven magneto-plasma rocket system capable of I(sp) thrust modulation at constant power. The VASIMR utilizes radiofrequency (RF) power both to generate a high-density plasma in a helicon source and to accelerate the plasma ions to high velocity by ion cyclotron resonance heating (ICRH). The system features a magnetic nozzle, which accelerates the plasma particles by converting their azimuthal energy into directed momentum.

wave rotors

(added March 1998)

DEF Rotor devices that use gasdynamic

waves to transfer energy rather than the motion of solid surfaces. Typically, they consist of a series of passages arranged on a drum which rotates about an axis. Through rotation, the ends of the passages are periodically exposed to various circumferentially arranged ports which initiate the traveling expansion or compression waves within the passages. The particular circumferential location of the ports determines the thermodynamic cycle of the working fluid.

16. Abstract  The NASA Thesaurus contains the authorized subject terms by which the documents in the NASA Aeronautics and Space Database are indexed and retrieved. The scope of this controlled vocabulary includes not only aerospace engineering, but all supporting areas of engineering and physics, the natural space sciences (astronomy, astrophysics, planetary science), Earth sciences, and to some extent, the biological sciences. Volume 1 – Hierarchical Listing With Definitions contains over 18,300 subject terms, 4,300 definitions, and approximately 4,500 USE cross references. The hierarchical listing presents full hierarchical structure for each term along with related term lists, and can serve as an orthographic authority. Volume 2 – Rotated Term Display is a ready-reference tool which provides approximately 52,000 additional 'access points' to the thesaurus terminology. It contains postable and nonpostable terms found in the hierarchical listing arranged in a KWIC (key-word-in-context) index.
