Notes from a Traveling Childhood: Readings for Internationally Mobile Parents and Children, is a collection of writings by parents and children, educators, researchers and mental health professionals about the affects of international mobility on families. The 123-page anthology deals with parenting in new cultures, international education, a sense of roots, the impact of organizational affiliation, the difficulties of returning home after an extended period overseas, and moving from the child’s perspective.

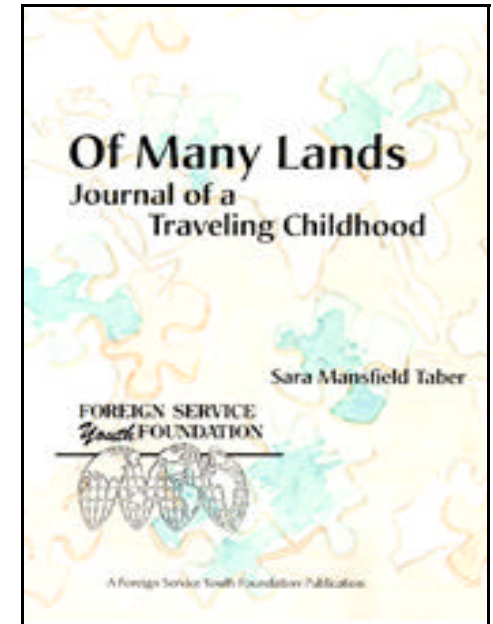

“For me, the book is very real because it goes beyond suggestions from experts and listens to the children who lived the experience.”

...an International consultant and parent

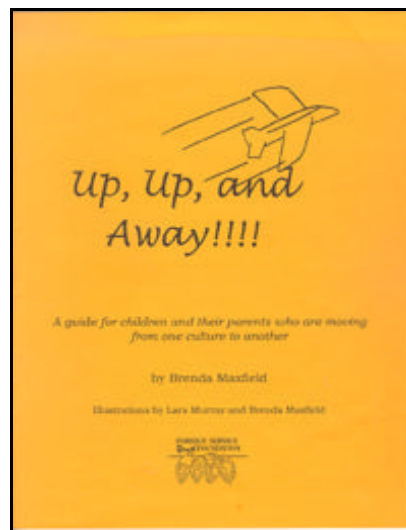

Of Many Lands is a learning and exploring tool to help those who have grown up in many countries put together the stories of their lives. It describes the author’s experiences at different ages in several countries, followed by statements and questions designed to evoke the reader’s own life experiences.

“I highly recommend using Ms. Taber’s workbook to thoroughly reflect on the painful and pleasurable experiences of growing up in many lands.”

...Dr. Ruth Hill Useem, professor emeritus, Michigan State University; creator of the term Third Culture Kid.

Required reading for globally-mobile families.

Up, Up, and Away !!!! A guide for children and their parents who are moving from one culture to another. It helps children prepare for an international move. Readers learn why children may fear a move, the positive aspects of an inter-cultural lifestyle, and steps families can take to make an international move less painful. This interactive book guides children through the transitions and adjustments of their international adventure by inviting them to answer questions and draw pictures.
