

Trevor Rigger is the Senior Director for Direct Operations of the American Red Cross. In this role Trevor is responsible for planning, implementing and maintaining scalable programs, procedures, and volunteer opportunities to meet the direct needs of disaster clients for all domestic events. Trevor oversees the principal functions of emergency sheltering and feeding, the distribution of critical supplies, family reunification, disaster casework, physical health, disaster mental health services, and spiritual care.

Prior to his position with the Red Cross, Trevor served in leadership positions with community based and national organizations focused on affordable housing, poverty reduction, and emergency planning for public school districts. He earned his B.S. in Political Science from the University of Illinois and a Masters in Public Policy and Nonprofit Management from Georgetown University.
