ABOUT THIS STUDY

The National Institute of Corrections (NIC) Jails Division and Information Center initiated this study in the summer of 2005 with three purposes:

- To explore the extent to which local jails are charging fees to jail inmates,
- To learn the actual amounts of the fees that are being charged and the revenues that are being generated, and
- To learn jail managers' views on the effectiveness of charging fees.

The study follows a 1997 survey by NIC of the nation's largest jails on state statutes granting authority to assess fees and actual fees being collected at that time.

PROJECT METHOD

Information for this report was obtained through a written survey instrument that was made available to small, medium, large, and mega-jails nationwide. The project was announced to members of NIC-hosted e-mail discussion groups focused on jail issues (the Large Jail Network and the State Chief Jail Inspectors groups) and on general corrections concerns (the NIC Corrections Exchange group, also known as "correx"). An invitation to participate was also featured on the NIC Web site home page at <http://www.nicic.org>, and a web page was created as a home page for the survey. On it, agency staff who wished to respond were asked to download the written survey questionnaire, complete it, and fax or mail it to the NIC Information Center. The survey materials are included in Appendix A.

Project staff also sent e-mail messages to state-level points of contact in agencies and organizations with a jail focus, where available, such as state jail associations and sheriffs' associations, and asked that the survey be brought to the attention of county and local sheriffs' offices and detention agencies. These invitational messages included attached copies of the survey questionnaire and instructions for replying. Staff also faxed the written survey response package to randomly selected sheriffs' offices and local justice agencies in some states where a single, state-level point of contact could not be identified.

Survey respondents were asked whether their agencies collect, or are considering collecting, fees for participation in a variety of programs (such as work release or electronic monitoring) and for non-program services (such as medical care or room and board). They were also asked the amount of the inmate fee in each category and the total 1-year revenues for 2004. Additional questions explored the results of any cost-benefit evaluations that have been conducted by responding agencies and managers' perspectives on which types of jail inmate fees are considered to be the most and least effective for agencies to implement.

Responses were received from 224 respondents representing jails of all sizes¹:

- Small jails (inmate population less than 50): 72 responses
- Medium jails (inmate population 50 – 249): 91 responses
- Large jails (inmate population 250 – 999): 33 responses
- Mega jails (inmate population 1,000 or more): 22 responses
- Statewide systems, or a single response for all jails in a state: 3 responses
- Other (agency or facility size not confirmed) 6 responses

SUMMARY OF KEY FINDINGS

Survey responses indicate that 90% of the jails that responded are currently charging jail inmate fees. Of the 224 survey responses, 202 jurisdictions charge fees to inmates for at least some programs, functions, or services.

- Most agencies charging fees impose them for more than one function or service, but seven (7) agencies charge inmate fees only for medical services, and three (3) charge only for participation in work release.
- Many of the agencies that currently charge fees in at least one category are also considering assessing fees in other categories.
- Inmates are most commonly charged for prescriptions (121 responses, or 59% of the responding jails that charge any fees), physician visits (119 responses, or 59% of those charging fees), and participation in work release programs (117 responses, or 58% of those charging fees).
- The largest amount of revenue reported was from inmates participating in work release programs ($10,149,061). The second largest revenue-generating category was per diem charges ($7,213,000), followed by telephone calls ($4,464,689).

¹ Sizes of responding jails were identified through the American Correctional Association's 2005 Jail Directory. Size designations are those used by the Association, and individual jails may have moved from one category to another since the survey was conducted, depending on precise inmate population numbers.

- Of the 202 responses that indicated fees are charged, 17 agencies (8.4%) have conducted a formal evaluation of the costs/benefits and net outcome of assessing inmate fees. Five of these agencies identified no net benefit from collecting fees. The other 12 agencies indicated that the findings of their evaluation showed a net monetary benefit.
- Respondents indicated that the most effective fee was the fee for participation in work release.
- Regarding the effectiveness of both per diem charges and fees for medical services, opinions were split; that is, these fees were listed as least effective nearly as often as they were called most effective.
- Recommendations for making inmate fees count focused especially on the role of medical fees in reducing frivolous medical visits, the importance of understanding the costs/benefits of fee collection prior to establishing a fee collection policy, and the importance of making inmate fees “reasonable.”

Notes on Statutory Authority to Charge Fees

Unlike the 1997 NIC survey on the topic of fees paid by jail inmates, this survey did not specifically request information about the statutory authority to collect fees. However, several respondents to the current survey provided related state-level information:

- New York jails are not allowed to charge fees, except for a percent of earnings from work release. However, work release fees are not currently being collected by any New York jail.
- The North Dakota respondent noted that jails in that state can collect up to $15 a day for work release and up to $10 for each medical office visit; no information was provided on actual practice by jails in the state.
- Indiana has a statute allowing a county to charge up to a $15 medical co-payment if this policy is adopted and implemented by a local ordinance. Amounts debited to the inmate trust account must be written off after 60 days. There is also a statute that permits the county to charge an inmate for the cost of his incarceration.
- A Wisconsin statute provides that the sheriff is to collect paychecks from jail inmates participating in work release programs and then disburse the funds as specifically directed by statute.

- Oklahoma has a statute providing that an inmate can be charged for incarceration but must be determined capable of paying the court before fees can be assessed. When such fees are assessed, they are collected by the court.
- An Illinois statute specifically allows for the collection of some fees.

Summary tables for program fees and non-program fees appear on pages 7 and 17, respectively.

LIMITATIONS OF THE REPORT

The data presented in this report do not reflect a representative national sample. Responses were received from jurisdictions in 28 states and the District of Columbia, with some responding states represented far more than others. For example, 38 responses were received from counties in Oklahoma but only 6 from California, 1 from Texas, and 4 from Florida, all much larger states in which there are both more jails and more large and “mega” jails. Project findings suggest that larger jurisdictions are more likely than smaller jurisdictions to assess jail inmate fees, so different results would have been obtained if more large jails had responded to the survey.

In cases where more than one response was sent from a single jurisdiction, the more complete response was used here. In some instances, surveys were incomplete or illegible; in such instances, as much information as possible was included.

It should also be noted that, though a high proportion of the jails that responded to this survey are actively collecting fees, this does not suggest any conclusions about the prevalence of inmate fees among jails nationally.

Despite these limitations, the report provides substantial information on jails’ current practices related to charging inmates for programs and services.

ORGANIZATION OF THIS REPORT

This report summarizes data on fees collected for program participation and for non-program functions. Presenting information on each category of inmate fees, the report provides a summary of the data on the extent to which responding agencies are collecting fees in the category, the number of agencies considering collecting fees in the category, and the total revenues reported by all respondents to this survey.

The report first presents all data on all fees imposed for program participation, followed by data on non-program fees. A table provided for each category lists the basis of the fee (e.g., a one-time fee, a co-pay, a daily fee, etc.), the range of fees imposed, and the most common fee for that category.

The report concludes with a discussion of cost-benefit evaluations that have been conducted by responding agencies and a summary of respondents' perspectives on which types of jail inmate fees are considered to be the most and least effective for agencies to implement.

Appendix A presents the survey materials. Appendix B gives response data from all responding jurisdictions that collect fees, presented by fee category. Notations include information on jurisdiction size (based on the American Correctional Association's 2005 Jail Directory), gross annual revenues (where reported) for each fee, and additional details on collection methods if provided. Data on types of fees that are charged to inmates in fewer than 20 agencies are not included in the Appendix.

DATA ON PROGRAM FEES

In this project, a “program fee” is a fee charged to jail inmates who are participating in a program that is not a basic element of jail operations, or who are receiving a program-related service.

- Programs that allow eligible inmates to leave the jail to work, for example, are attractive to many jail inmates and also benefit the jail by bringing in revenue to offset the jail’s budget. Inmates who participate in programs of this type also may be better able to support themselves and their families and can continue to contribute to tax rolls, both of which have benefits for the community.
- By successfully participating in substance abuse treatment, for example, other jail inmates may be viewed as being better prepared for re-entry into the community, in jurisdictions where the sheriff or detention agency has authority for the discretionary release of jail inmates in response to crowding or other factors.

Table 1, page 7, summarizes survey responses related to program fees in rank order by their prevalence among the responding agencies. Following the table, program fee details are reported in the same sequence. This section begins with the program category for which fees for participation are most often imposed (work release) to programs for which fees are seldom imposed (such as jail industries and substance abuse treatment).

Data summarized for each program category include:

- The number of responding agencies that charge this fee, and this number expressed as a percentage of responding agencies that charge any fee;
- The number of jurisdictions that are considering charging this fee; and
- An indication of how frequently the fee is collected by an entity besides the jail, such as probation/parole or a private agency.
- Tabulated findings on how the fee is assessed (e.g., daily, weekly, percent of revenue, etc.), the range of fee amounts being charged by responding jurisdictions, and the most commonly charged fee, plus any additional interpretive notes, where applicable.

OTHER PROGRAM FEES

Survey results indicate that fewer than 5 agencies charge fees to inmates in the following program areas identified on the survey questionnaire:

- Jail Industries/Jobs Programs. Four (4) responding agencies charge fees to participate in these programs, and one (1) agency is considering such a fee; total revenues reported: $266,505.
- Substance Abuse Treatment. Two (2) agencies charge fees for substance abuse treatment programs, and one (1) is considering doing so; total revenues reported: $54,744.
- Vocational Aptitude Testing, Certifications, etc. Two (2) agencies are charging fees for tests and certifications related to employment, and one (1) agency is considering doing so. No data on revenues were reported.

Agencies also noted that they charge inmates fees in the following write-in categories:

- Work/educational furlough.
- Art program participation.
- Day reporting.
- Work crew.

DATA ON NON-PROGRAM FEES

Non-program fees are those that are assessed in relation to everyday facility operations and services. Agencies typically assess these fees against all inmates who receive the specific services, but they receive payment only from those inmates who have the resources to pay. Jails do not deny services to inmates who cannot pay. Agencies have different approaches to collecting fees from inmates who are indigent or who may move in and out of the jail over time.

Inmate fees discussed in this section of the report have four main purposes.

- To offset administrative costs. Examples include fees for the intake booking process and for release of inmates on bond. These fees are generally easy to collect, either from funds the inmate has when entering the facility, or by creating a negative balance in the inmate's commissary account that is then repaid as funds become available. In Michigan, a state statute makes it a civil infraction not to pay the booking fee. In Washington State, however, there is a current challenge of a jail's right to take fees at booking without a hearing on the grounds that this is a Constitutional violation of the right to due process. If charges are dismissed, dropped, or not filed, the jail must refund the fee. A few agencies charge booking fees only to sentenced inmates. Some agencies receive booking fees from other justice agencies, such as local law enforcement, for accepting their detainees.
- To offset the costs of housing inmates. "Pay-to-stay" or "per diem" fees for daily subsistence are often taken from the inmate's account on a daily basis. They can cover food or housing separately, or both. Because many inmates are indigent, however, this type of fee can sometimes be hard to collect. A few survey respondents noted that their per diem charges are actually a result of political pressure from the public.
- To offset the expense of high-cost services and deter frivolous use. Charging inmates a fee or co-pay for medical services is becoming increasingly common, as reflected in survey results. The revenues anticipated from collecting inmate co-pays or fees for medical services are not the principal reason most jails charge such fees, however. In most instances, they hope the fees will reduce unnecessary sick call visits as well as cover a small portion of the costs of care. Although the practice of collecting fees for medical services is growing, it has been somewhat controversial. In general, however, courts have not found it unconstitutional to charge inmates a co-pay fee for medical services as long as medical services are not denied if an inmate is unable to pay.²

- To offset costs of providing other routine services. Because fees for services such as telephone calls, haircuts, and photocopying are collected before the inmate can access the service or at the time of service, agencies find them easy to collect. All such fees do not usually go to the agency itself; for example, jails most often receive a commission on phone calls from an external contractor, and fees for haircuts sometimes go directly to the barber.

Table 8, page 17, summarizes survey responses related to non-program fees in rank order by their prevalence among the responding agencies. Following the table, program fee details are reported in the same sequence. This section begins with the areas in which fees are most often imposed among the survey sample (medical care and telephone use) and continues through those in which fees are less often imposed (such as laundry and check processing).

Data summarized for each program category include:

- The number of responding agencies that charge this fee, and this number expressed as a percentage of responding agencies that charge any fee;
- The number of jurisdictions that are considering charging this fee;
- An indication of how frequently the fee is collected by an entity besides the jail, such as probation/parole, a private agency, or a service provider;
- The total 2004 revenues reported in that category by survey respondents; and
- Tabulated findings on how the fee is assessed (e.g., daily, weekly, etc.), the range of fee amounts being charged by responding jurisdictions, and the most commonly charged fee, plus any additional interpretive notes, where applicable.

FEES FOR MEDICAL SERVICES

A variety of medical care fees were reported by agencies in the survey sample. The survey requested information on any of the following medical services categories in which jails assessed a fee or co-pay:

- Medical office visits (i.e., general medical care: from sick call to any other type of medical visit, if tracked in one category by respondents' agencies);
- Physician visits (if tracked as a separate fee);
- Nurse/LPN visits (if tracked as a separate fee);
- Pharmacy prescriptions;
- Eye care exams and optical prescriptions;
- Dental exams and dental care.

Jurisdictions vary widely in how they charge and account for inmates fees in these categories. For example, some jails charge different fees for visits with a nurse or physician, while others simply charge for "medical office visits," which includes both categories of care. In some cases, jails assess a single "medical fee" that includes a broad range of services, including pharmacy, dental care, and eye care.

Moreover, it is clear from survey responses that the accounting system in most jurisdictions combines many or all categories of medical services. Some agencies that indicated they charge separate fees for different medical services also reported only one overall revenue figure. Thus, the following section on medical services simply reports the information as received and the total revenues reported for all medical categories combined are reported. For specific jurisdictions' details, see Appendix B.

Timing and the specific circumstances of fee payment also vary. In some jurisdictions, a small co-pay is charged at each visit to a medical service provider. Some jurisdictions noted that outstanding medical fees from a prior time in jail are collected up-front at a later booking. Some of these variations are in the fee profiles that follow.

Though medical fees are one of the largest categories of fees in this study in terms of the number of agencies that collect them, they are not ranked very high in terms of the revenues that were reported. Reasons for this include:

- About one-third of the survey responses from agencies that collect medical fees did not include a figure for annual revenues from these fees, and separate data on pharmacy revenues were reported by just over half of the agencies that collect them. If these revenues were included in the report, the total could be somewhat higher. It is unknown from the survey data whether revenue figures are not tracked by agencies or simply are not readily reportable in the breakdown requested in the survey questionnaire.

- Some of the inmate medical care fees/co-pays being reported had been in place for less than a year.
- Fee/co-pay amounts for inmate medical care tend to be small, reflecting their partial intent as a low-threshold deterrent to inmates' making frivolous sick calls.
- Collections of medical fees/co-pays can be low, reflecting high numbers of indigent inmates in the jail.

Respondents' descriptions of their agency's method of charging telephone usage fees to inmates did not always make clear exactly how fees are charged. In most cases, however, the agency contracts with a jail telephone service provider. Under a variety of contract types, these contractors provide and maintain equipment and charge inmates a surcharge on their calls. A portion of the phone surcharge is a source of revenue to the agency. Inmates access telephone use in a variety of ways, and they sometimes have a choice of whether to use a prepaid phone card or to place collect calls, which are also subject to a surcharge.

*Other approaches:

- The regular inmate fee is $89.12; the Federal inmate fee is $69.33.
- A $15 fee is charged when inmates enter the jail and another $15 when they leave the jail.

Though the survey was specifically focused on fees paid by inmates, some of the larger fees reported in this section appear to be fees paid by another justice-related agency, such as a local law enforcement agency that delivers detainees to the jail to be booked.

* Actual costs are determined in different ways. Factors assessed by individual agencies typically include travel mileage/vehicle use fees and coverage of escorting officer salaries or both their salaries and fringe benefits. One agency imposes additional fees based on the security level of the inmate.

One respondent described a flat fee that covers two security officers for a 4-hour period. Another agency charges an hourly fee of $33 for an officer escort, with a 4-hour minimum. Fees are sometimes paid directly to off-duty officers or must be paid by the inmate's family prior to the event.

Release escort enables inmates to leave the jail for short periods of time for purposes such as specialized medical appointments and family events (e.g., funerals).

OTHER NON-PROGRAM FEES

Responding agencies also charge fees in a variety of other categories. Twenty (20) or fewer agencies cited fees in each of the following categories:

- Notary. Twenty (20) responding agencies collect a fee for providing this service, generating revenues of $303. One additional agency is considering charging this fee.
- Laundry. Twelve (12) responding agencies charge laundry fees, reporting total revenues of $136,336. Two (2) additional agencies are considering charging a fee for this service.
- Check Processing. Five (5) responding agencies are charging a fee for check processing, and another two (2) agencies are considering charging this fee. Total revenues reported were $6,510.
- Detox Related to Intake. Two (2) responding agencies charge a fee for this service, generating total revenues of $25,000.

Fewer than five (5) of the responding agencies charge inmates fees for the following non-program categories:

- Bounced checks;
- Lost keys;
- Mental health visits;
- Bus transportation;
- Laboratory work, specifically 1) DNA testing, and 2) court-ordered laboratory tests;
- Handbook fees;
- Lock fee for personal clothing; and
- Postage.

ADMINISTRATIVE AND MANAGEMENT ISSUES

In addition to learning about the specific jail inmate fees being assessed, this study also sought to gather jail managers' perspectives on the effectiveness of charging fees.

MOST EFFECTIVE FEES

Survey participants were asked to identify the fees that their agency is best able to collect or that staff administrators consider effective and worthwhile. The following fees were most frequently cited as the "most effective":

- Work Release Fees — Identified as most effective by 72 agency respondents. Representative comments:
 - "Work release fees are the easiest to collect because we use a form that explains to inmates that they will have to pay $5 for each day they work. If they refuse to pay, we do not release them to work."
 - "Work release fees are effective because they are paid in advance."
 - "Payments are taken directly from checks before inmates receive them."
 - "Because it is a court-ordered fee, it is easy to collect."
- Booking Fees — Identified as most effective by 44 agency respondents. Representative comments:
 - "Fees are collected at the time of booking or there is a commissary balance to the negative until paid."
 - "Booking fees bring in revenue with little staff effort."
 - "The booking fee is small, so most inmates are able to pay."
- Telephone Fees — Identified as most effective by 27 agency respondents. Despite the large revenues raised through telephone fees, few respondents commented about these fees. Representative comments:
 - "Inmates make collect calls or debit calls from block phones. We get a percentage of all calls."
 - "We get a commission from the phone vendor."

- “The fee is collected automatically by the outside vendor or inmates make collect calls.”
- Medical Fees — Opinions on the effectiveness of medical fees were split. Although 43 respondents identified these fees as “most effective,” another 29 identified them as “least effective.” Representative comments:
 - “Inmates sign an agreement to pay for medical services out of the inmate trust fund.”
 - “Fees have dramatically reduced frivolous medical visits.” (A number of respondents noted this.)
 - “Medical treatment is not denied if the inmate does not have money, although a ‘debt’ is created.”
- Per Diem Fees — Opinions were also split on the effectiveness of per diem charges, with 21 respondents identifying these fees as “most effective” and 18 calling them “least effective.” Representative comments:
 - “Unpaid per diem accounts are turned over to a collection agency.”
 - “The daily subsistence fee is successful because it is taken from the inmate’s account on a daily basis. Even though approximately three-quarters of our inmates are indigent, this fee raises significant funds.”

LEAST EFFECTIVE FEES

Survey participants were asked to identify the fees that their agency is LEAST able to successfully collect or that jail administrators do not consider effective or worthwhile. The following fees were most frequently cited as ineffective:

- Medical Fees — As noted previously, these fees were among those identified as both most effective and least effective, depending on the experience of the agency and the perspective of the respondent. Representative comments about medical fees by those who consider it the least effective:
 - “Medical fees are collected only if inmates have money in their commissary account and the amount is only 25%.”
 - “It is difficult to collect a medical co-pay, as many inmates are indigent.”

- “Because medical fees are charged manually, it takes more man-hours to process these transactions. The collection of past due accounts is an automatic process.”
- Per Diem Fees — As with medical fees, per diem fees were among those identified as both the most effective and least effective, depending on the experience of the agency and the perspective of the respondent. Representative comments about per diem fees by those who consider it the least effective fee:
 - “It is very difficult to collect the per diem fees because many inmates are indigent.”
 - “Per diems are collected because of political pressure.”
- Pharmacy Fees — Six (6) respondents considered pharmacy fees the “least effective” fees.

AGENCY EVALUATIONS OF COSTS/BENEFITS

Of the 226 agencies that participated in the survey, 17 (7.5%) have conducted a formal evaluation of the costs/benefits and net outcome of assessing inmate fees.

- Five of these agencies identified no financial benefit of collecting fees.
- The other 12 found either a net financial benefit from inmate fees or a benefit in other terms, such as a reduction in inmate sick calls.

METHODS OF TRACKING FEE COLLECTIONS

Among responding agencies, the largest number (82) use a combination of automated and manual systems for tracking fee collections, although nearly as many (71) use only an automated system.

CONCLUSION: MAKING INMATE FEES COUNT

Based on their experience with inmate fees, agencies identified a number of factors as most important in making the assessment of inmate fees an effective strategy. They also made numerous comments about the positive and negative aspects of charging fees.

Following is a summary of the points made most frequently, along with a brief discussion of some comments made by survey respondents:

- Medical fees cut down on frivolous medical visits. A number of respondents made this comment. One noted that medical fees have reduced the number of doctor visits and prescriptions, as money is deducted from inmates' accounts at the rate of 20% for each visit, with any balance remaining available for commissary. A number of agencies commented, however, that it is difficult to collect medical fees because of the large number of indigent inmates and the fact that medical service is never denied for lack of payment. In several jurisdictions, any balance owed for medical services remains on the inmate's account to be collected if they return to the jail.
- It is important to do a cost/benefit analysis of the staff time expended on collection vs. the amount of money collected. Again, this was a very frequent comment, with a number of respondents noting the difficulty of having adequate staff to monitor and collect fees effectively. Others commented on the likelihood that fees, especially high ones, can negatively impact commissary spending, which, in turn, affects the inmate welfare fund. One agency handled this problem by taking no more than half the money in inmate funds for any fees, allowing the inmate to purchase from the commissary with the other half. A number of respondents pointed to the importance of having an automated system for tracking fees as a way of cutting down on staff time.
- External pressures can affect agencies' policies on collecting fees. Several respondents pointed to fees as a way of responding to pressures from the public both to decrease tax burdens and to require inmates to "pay their own way." One respondent noted that all fee collections were the result of political pressure from the public. On the other side of this argument, one jurisdiction pointed to its county council's opposition to the idea of "pay to stay," and another noted current challenges to the collection of booking fees without a hearing.
- Fees to inmates must be "reasonable." Fee collection must be pursued in a balanced system that provides adequate services but also covers some costs, according to one respondent. One commented that "we shouldn't nickel and dime inmates to death." Others noted that fee policies must take into account the fact that many inmates do not have the resources to pay fees and, in fact, are often indigent. In this context, several respondents noted, “Some revenues from fees are better than none.”

- Efforts to collect fees after inmates’ release can be important in maximizing revenues. There was disagreement on this point, with some respondents commenting on the importance of making substantial efforts to collect fees after an inmate’s release, including the use of collections agencies, while others believe that such efforts are not worthwhile because they are not often successful.

ABOUT THIS RESEARCH

Jail staff who contact the NIC Information Center often want to learn more about fees paid by jail inmates and how to manage and administer fee collection efforts. There is relatively little organized information available about jail inmate fees, beyond a 1997 overview prepared by NIC. (That study is available online at <http://www.nicic.org/Library/013599>.)

By responding to this survey, you will help create an updated resource for jail administrators and others who are interested in this issue. Thank you for participating.

PART 1. FEES ASSESSED BY YOUR AGENCY

1. Does your agency collect any type of fee from jail detainees/inmates?

Yes _____ No ^{} _____ We are considering _____

* If you answered "no" and your agency has never assessed any inmate fees, your survey is complete. THANK YOU! Please return only this page to NIC.

 If you answered "no" and your agency has assessed inmate fees in the past, but no longer does so, please skip to Question 5, page 4.

2. Fees paid by program participants. Please indicate whether your agency collects, or is considering implementing, fees from inmates who participate in the following types of programs. Write in any other program fees collected.

For each type of fee, indicate the amount of the fee charged (e.g, $25 per week, $500 one-time fee to enroll) and the total revenues collected for this item in calendar or fiscal year 2004. If the fee was collected for less than 1 year, pro-rate to an approximate total for the year.

 Place check in box if agency does not assess any fees for program participation:
