III. Other product information, including uses/applications and source(s) of imports

Volleyballs are spherical sports balls that are typically 25-27 inches (56-64 centimeters) in circumference and 9 to 10 ounces (250-280 grams) in weight. Volleyballs are produced to a variety of specifications, including competition, indoor, outdoor, practice, training, and youth. The highest quality competition balls have nylon-wound butyl rubber bladders and 18-paenl, hand stitched, leather covers. Composite leather (polyurethane and polyvinyl chloride (PVC)) and other materials are also used as cover materials. While leather-covered volleyballs are most often designed for indoor use, they are also often approved for outdoor use. China was the dominant source of U.S. imports of volleyballs in 2011, followed by Thailand, Japan, and the Dominican Republic.
