Gain preservation knowledge from the experts! In this three-part cooperative program, you will go from basic theory to practice and then on to target the results to your agency or program.

The centerpiece of this three-tier program is a week long Preservation Institute at the Library of Congress taught by the library's renowned Preservation Directorate staff. From August 17 through 21, 2009, learn how theories are put into practice in the oldest and largest U.S. library preservation operation. Attendees will also tour the Library's preservation facilities and network with colleagues on today's preservation issues.

Be sure to register for both the online NEDCC course and the FLICC Preservation Institute to qualify for online discussion groups and special discounts!

Graduates of both the NEDCC course and the August Institute can then register for three follow-up online preservation courses at a 50% discount off the a la carte price. Taught by experienced preservation professionals from Lyasis (formerly SOLINET and PALINET), you will learn to apply preservation principles and processes in your institution and explore special topics like audiovisual oversize and digital materials plus preservation responses to facility construction, disaster planning and product evaluation. Watch your email for a future announcement about these special discounted courses. For more information, please email Anne Harrison at anha@loc.gov.

The perfect introduction to this outstanding hands-on opportunity is Preservation 101, a FREE online course on the basics. The Library of Congress Preservation Directorate and the Northeast Document Conservation Center (NEDCC) have partnered with FLICC to present a FREE self-paced online that covers the preservation of paper collections and related formats. Complete this course between June 1 and July 31, 2009 to prepare for the August Institute and to learn at your desk how to identify deteriorated materials, properly care for collections and set priorities for preservation. FLICC and LC Preservation Directorate staff will also be on call for consultation while you are taking the course and will facilitate a live online forum midway through the course.
