Having difficulty thinking about the future when it is all you can do to get through today?

Accelerate the pace of change in your organization by integrating your future-oriented efforts into a broad program of information management, budget planning and marketing.

- ~ Adopt, adapt and customize
- ~ Use site visits and discussions with colleagues to benchmark and identify best practices
- ~ Identify unmet needs in your organization and align the library to meet those needs
- ~ Create a user-needs-focused future that significantly improves the customers' experience with the library
- ~ Plan physical space to reflect a new focus
- ~ Discover the information architecture to meet research needs
- ~ Continue to develop the library's ability to employ new technology effectively
- ~ Innovate, take justifiable risks and do not be afraid to move on
- ~ Work with staff to integrate incremental changes into a broader library program of information management, budget planning and marketing

Bring your stories, comments and questions to a discussion of planning the library of the future. Kris Vajs, Chief Librarian at the Research Library, Federal Reserve Board of Governors, will relate her experiences and lead the discussion.
