

Identity Theft: Protect Yourself Video

As part of an ongoing commitment to consumer education, the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston released a video in 2001 on identity theft, entitled "Identity Theft: Protect Yourself."

This 13-minute video details how easily personal financial information can get into the wrong hands, allowing criminals to unlawfully obtain credit in your name. Through interviews with victims, law enforcement, and industry representatives, this video aims to provide consumers with ample information on how to protect their vital financial information. The video also outlines what a consumer should do if they suspect that their identity has been stolen.
