FEDERAL RESERVE BANK of KANSAS CITY

Supplier DIVERSITY

The Federal RESERVE System

The Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City is one of the 12 regional Reserve Banks, which form the Federal Reserve System along with the Board of Governors in Washington, D.C. The Federal Reserve has a broad range of responsibilities. As the central bank of the United States, it conducts the nation's monetary policy, supervises and regulates financial institutions, maintains the stability of the financial system, and provides financial services to banks and other depository institutions.

The Kansas City Fed serves the Tenth Federal Reserve District, which covers all or part of seven states: Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Wyoming, western Missouri and northern New Mexico.

Doing BUSINESS With the Bank

The Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City believes diversity strengthens our organization and enriches our community. Accordingly, the Bank encourages participation of small, minority- and women-owned businesses in our procurement process. We utilize a variety of means to identify and maintain a diverse group of potential suppliers, with the goal of including these businesses in appropriate solicitation opportunities.

Interested suppliers may use the self-registration tool found on the Bank's web site, listed below, to provide information about their organization.
