I would like to think that the future of intellectual property rights in our country would be the results of intellectual study. I would, of course, be wrong. There is no money to be made from that, and it's easier to serve those who can pay. I would like to think that the voters spoke quite loudly about what they thought of our government being offered up to the highest bidder, but who listened? I would like it if my voice would be heard, but I don't have the cash or the television pulpit to bully from. I would ask you to just leave things alone until a real Democrat comes to office, but I fear there are none left, having beaten them into submission. No, just keep doing what the administration does best. Keep tearing down our freedoms to placate those who would never vote for you. It's working so well so far.
