The

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's National Library Network, established in 1971, is composed of libraries in the agency's headquarters, regional and field offices, research centers and specialized laboratories located throughout the country. The network provides access to information about the environment and related scientific, technical, management and policy information.

The EPA Headquarters and Chemical Libraries provide support to EPA Headquarters staff and make information resources accessible to the public.

On-site services include access to physical collections, including a repository of unique EPA documents and interlibrary loan, document delivery research and reference assistance.

About the Tour:

Visitors will be offered a tour of the Libraries, including the browsing collection, the repository of unique EPA documents, the Reading Room and demonstrations of internal and public Web-based electronic library resources.
