[232] Zambia, Defence Act as amended (1964), Section 35(a).
[233] Zimbabwe, Defence Act as amended (1972), First Schedule, Section 11(a).
[234] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Pohl case, Judgement, 3 November 1947.
[235] UK, Ministry of Defence, Training Video: The Geneva Conventions, 1986, Report on UK Practice, 1997, Chapter 2.3.

(1992) stated that "the Geneva Conventions require parties to a conflict . . . to prevent [the] bodies and remains [of the dead] from being despoiled".[236]

Other International Organisations
238. No practice was found.

International Conferences
239. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

240. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

241. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the dead may not be . . . despoiled".[237]

VI. Other Practice

242. According to German investigations following allegations of crimes committed against members of armed forces in Crete in May 1941, it appeared that:

> Dead . . . soldiers were robbed and deprived of parts of their clothing, primarily by the civilian population . . .
> From these investigations it appears that . . . the maltreatment of soldiers [was] committed almost exclusively by Cretan civilians. In some cases survivors observed that civilians fell upon dead soldiers [and] robbed them.[238]

243. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay . . . to prevent [the dead] being despoiled".[239]

[236] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).
[237] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 230.
[238] Alfred M. de Zayas, The Wehrmacht War Crimes Bureau, 1939–1945, University of Nebraska Press, 1989, pp. 156–157.
[239] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 13, IRRC, No. 282, p. 335.

C. Return of the Remains and Personal Effects of the Dead

Return of the remains of the dead

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

244. Article 17, third paragraph, GC I provides that an "Official Graves Registration Service [shall be established] to allow . . . the possible transportation of the remains to the home country. These provisions shall likewise apply to the ashes."

245. Article 120, sixth paragraph, GC III provides, with regard to the possibility of return of the remains to the home country, that:

> Responsibility . . . for records of any subsequent moves of the bodies shall rest on the Power controlling the territory . . . These provisions shall also apply to the ashes, which shall be kept by the Graves Registration Service until proper disposal thereof in accordance with the wishes of the home country.

246. Article 130, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "the ashes [of deceased internees] shall be retained for safe-keeping by the detaining authorities and shall be transferred as soon as possible to the next of kin on their request".

247. Article II(13)(f) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that:

> the Commanders of the opposing sides shall:
> . . .
> f. In those cases where places of burial are a matter of record and graves are actually found to exist, permit graves registration personnel of the other side to enter, within a definite time limit after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, the territory of Korea under their military control, for the purpose of proceeding to such graves to recover and evacuate the bodies of the deceased military personnel of that side, including deceased prisoners of war.

248. Article 8(b) of the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam contains provisions designed "to facilitate . . . repatriation of remains".

249. Article 34 AP I provides that:

> 2. As soon as circumstances and the relations between the adverse Parties permit, the High Contracting Parties in whose territories graves and, as the case may be, other locations of the remains of persons who have died as a result of hostilities or during occupation or in detention are situated, shall conclude agreements in order:
> . . .
> (b) to protect and maintain such gravesites permanently;
> (c) to facilitate the return of the remains of the deceased . . . to the home country upon its request or, unless that country objects, upon the request of the next of kin.

3. In the absence of the agreements provided for in paragraph 2 (b) or (c) and if the home country of such deceased is not willing to arrange at its expense for the maintenance of such gravesites, the High Contracting Party in whose territory the gravesites are situated may offer to facilitate the return of the remains of the deceased to the home country. Where such an offer has not been accepted the High Contracting Party may, after the expiry of five years from the date of the offer and upon due notice to the home country, adopt the arrangements laid down in its own laws relating to cemeteries and graves.

Article 34 AP I was adopted by consensus.[240]

250. The 1992 Finnish–Russian Agreement on War Dead provides for cooperation in relation to the identification and return of the remains of soldiers dating from the Second World War.

251. The 1997 Estonian–Finnish Agreement on War Dead provides for cooperation in relation to the identification and return of the remains of soldiers dating from the Second World War.

Other Instruments

252. Proposal 1.2 of the 1991 Plan of Operation for the Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains in the context of the former Yugoslavia provided that, "at the request of the party on which the deceased depended, the parties to the conflict shall organize the handover of the mortal remains".

253. Article 3(4) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "breach of [the] duty to tender immediately [the remains of those who have died in the course of the armed conflict or while under detention] to their families" shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

254. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that ashes "shall be kept by the Graves Registration Service until the home country makes known what arrangements it wants made".[241]

255. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the ashes of the deceased shall be forwarded to the Graves Registration and the ashes exchanged as soon as practical following the conclusion of hostilities".[242]

256. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that one of the measures required after a conflict is to return ashes and remains.[243]

[240] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[241] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005.
[242] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 9-100.
[243] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 21.

257. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "at the end of an engagement, the dead of both sides ... should be buried in order to facilitate the possible repatriation of mortal remains".[244]
258. Hungary's Military Manual provides that one of the measures required after a conflict is to return ashes and remains of the dead.[245]
259. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that the parties "shall conclude agreements in order to facilitate the return of the remains of the deceased".[246]
260. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that when bodies have been cremated, the ashes of the deceased shall be forwarded to the Graves Registration Authority and handed over to relatives as soon as practicable.[247]
261. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "if possible, the remains of the deceased shall be repatriated to the country of origin, according to special agreements".[248]
262. The UK Military Manual provides that "the ashes must be respectfully treated, and kept by the Graves Registration Service until properly disposed of according to the wishes of the home country".[249]
263. The US Field Manual provides that an Official Graves Registration Service "shall allow ... the possible transportation to the home country" of the bodies exhumed. The manual adds that the ashes "shall be kept by the Graves Registration Service until proper disposal thereof in accordance with the wishes of the home country".[250]
264. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook provides that "as soon as circumstances permit, arrangement be made to ... facilitate the return of the remains when requested".[251]

National Legislation
265. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall ensure that the necessary measures be taken that: ... the places where dead bodies ... were buried should be marked ... and recorded ... with the aim to return back these dead bodies ... following a request from the parties and close relatives of the dead persons.[252]

[244] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[245] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 38.
[246] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-3.
[247] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, Article 5.2.d.(6).
[248] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 71(2).
[249] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 384.
[250] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[251] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.4, footnote 19.
[252] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 29(5).

266. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[253]
267. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 34 AP I, are punishable offences.[254]
268. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[255]

National Case-law
269. In a case before Colombia's Administrative Court in Cundinamarca in 1985, it was stated that families must not be denied their legitimate right to claim the bodies of their relatives, transfer them to wherever they see fit, and bury them.[256]
270. According the Report on the Practice of Israel, in the Abu-Rijwa case in 2000, the IDF carried out DNA identification tests when asked by family members to repatriate remains, implying that when these remains are identified correctly, they will be returned.[257]

Other National Practice
271. According to the Report on the Practice of Egypt, it is the well-established practice of Egypt to exchange and repatriate mortal remains, in order to enable burial in accordance with the wishes of the deceased and their families.[258] In 1975 and 1976, the exchange and repatriation of mortal remains of both civilians and combatants were carried out between Egypt and Israel in the presence of ICRC delegates.[259]
272. In 1996, the Greek observer to the UN Commission on Human Rights stressed that if the deaths of persons missing in Cyprus were confirmed, their remains would be returned to their families.[260]

[253] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[254] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[255] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[256] Colombia, Administrative Tribunal of Cundinamarca, Case No. 4010, Informe del Tribunal Especial de Instrucción, 6–7 November 1985, cuaderno de pruebas.
[257] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.1, referring to High Court, Abu-Rijwa case, Judgement, 15 November 2000.
[258] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[259] ICRC, Annual Report 1975, Geneva, 1976, p. 21; Annual Report 1976, Geneva, 1977, p. 13.
[260] Greece, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.46, 22 May 1996, § 24.

273. In 1975 and 1976, the exchange and repatriation of mortal remains of both civilians and combatants were carried out between Egypt and Israel in the presence of ICRC delegates.[261]
274. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, it is the opinio juris of Iran, based on practice in the Iran–Iraq War, that attempts should be made to return the bodies of dead combatants to the relevant party.[262]
275. In 1991, the Asian Yearbook of International Law reported that the "ashes of 3,500 Japanese soldiers killed during World War II in Irian Jaya were handed over by Indonesia to the Japanese Ambassador at Jakarta".[263]
276. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support . . . the principle that each party to a conflict permit teams to . . . facilitate the return of the remains when requested".[264]
277. In 1983, a faction of a State agreed to repatriate the remains of combatants, although the State had not at the time ratified the Geneva Conventions.[265]
278. In 1999, the exchange committees of the parties to a non-international armed conflict signed an agreement concerning the treatment of prisoners, which provided that "bodies of the prisoners died in jails must be handed over to the concerned sides without any conditions".[266]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

279. In a resolution adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly called upon parties to armed conflicts, "regardless of their character and location, during and after the end of hostilities and in accordance with the Geneva Conventions, to take such action as may be within their power . . . to facilitate the disinterment and the return of remains, if requested by their families".[267]
280. In 1996, in a report concerning Liberia, the UN Secretary-General reported that UNOMIL had facilitated discussions on the release of the bodies of soldiers killed in the fighting, which ULIMO-J had accepted on the understanding that concerns about its own combatants would be considered.[268]

[261] ICRC, Annual Report 1975, Geneva, 1976, p. 21; Annual Report 1976, Geneva, 1977, p. 13.
[262] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 5.1, referring to Statement by the Iranian Minister of Foreign Affairs, 15 November 1980 and Military Communiqué No. 2176, 27 July 1985.
[263] Asian Yearbook of International Law, Vol. 1, 1991, p. 354.
[264] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.
[265] ICRC archive document.
[266] ICRC archive document.
[267] UN General Assembly, Res. 3220 (XXIX), 6 November 1974, §§ 2 and 4.
[268] UN Secretary-General, Fifteenth progress report on the UNOMIL, UN Doc. S/1996/47, 23 January 1996, § 26.

Other International Organisations
281. No practice was found.

International Conferences
282. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the missing and dead in armed conflicts in which it called on parties to armed conflicts "during hostilities and after cessation of hostilities . . . to facilitate the disinterment and return of remains".[269]
283. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "every effort is made to identify dead persons, inform their families and return their bodies to them".[270]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

284. In a case concerning Suriname before the IACiHR in 1989, it was reported that, in 1987, the military did not allow family members to collect the remains of a large number of dead following an attack by the National Army.[271]
285. In a case concerning Colombia before the IACiHR in 1995, testimony was given to the effect that, in 1990, the witness was permitted by a Colombian brigade commander to collect the body of her husband for burial, following his death in an indiscriminate attack on a house suspected of harbouring guerrillas.[272]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

286. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the return of remains and ashes of the deceased . . . to the home State shall be facilitated".[273]
287. The ICRC often acts as a neutral intermediary between the parties to the conflict regarding servicemen missing in action so that the mortal remains of combatants may be returned to the respective parties. For instance, in 1998, in the context of the conflict in Sri Lanka, the ICRC transported the mortal remains of 1,014 soldiers and LTTE combatants.[274] The same year, it "repatriated

[269] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. V.
[270] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(e).
[271] IACiHR, Case 10.124 (Suriname), Resolution, 27 September 1989, § 6(iv).
[272] IACiHR, Case 11.010 (Colombia), Report, 13 September 1995, Section 11A(a).
[273] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 262.
[274] ICRC, Annual Report 1998, Geneva, 1999, p. 175.

the mortal remains of an Israeli soldier and of 40 Lebanese fighters to their respective countries".[275]

288. In 1995, the ICRC asked the parties to an international conflict to return the remains of dead combatants to their families.[276]

VI. Other Practice

289. No practice was found.

Return of the personal effects of the dead

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

290. Article 4, third paragraph, of the 1929 GC provides that belligerents shall "collect and transmit to each other all articles of a personal nature found on the field of battle or on the dead".

291. Article 16, fourth paragraph, GC I provides that parties to the conflict shall "collect and forward through the [Information Bureau] ... money and in general all articles of an intrinsic or sentimental value, which are found on the dead". Article 19, third paragraph, GC II contains the same provision.

292. Article 122, ninth paragraph, GC III provides that:

> The Information Bureau shall furthermore be charged with collecting all personal valuables, including sums in currencies other than that of the Detaining Power and documents of importance to the next of kin, left by prisoners of war who have ... died, and shall forward the said valuables to the Powers concerned.

Article 139 GC IV contains a similar provision with respect to civilian internees.

293. Article 34(2)(c) AP I provides that as soon "as the circumstances and the relations between the adverse Parties permit, ... [they] shall conclude agreements in order ... to facilitate the return of the personal effects of the deceased". Article 34 AP I was adopted by consensus.[277]

294. The 1999 NATO STANAG 2070 provides that:

> 18. With the exception of deceased United States personnel, all personal effects (including all personal and official papers) are removed from the remains and placed in a suitable receptacle. One identification tag/disc must be buried with the corpse. The second identification tag/disc, or the removable part, is placed in the receptacle with the personal effects. In the case of United States personnel, all personal effects and one identification tag are buried with the remains ...

[275] ICRC, Annual Report 1998, Geneva, 1999, p. 279.
[276] ICRC archive document.
[277] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.

19. An inventory is to be made of the personal effects, checked and signed by an officer, and dispatched with the receptacle containing the personal effects.

Other Instruments

295. Article 20 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "the articles... collected from the dead of the enemy are transmitted to its army or government".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

296. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "last wills or other documents of importance to the family of the dead, money and in general all objects of an intrinsic or sentimental value which are found on the dead" shall be transmitted to the other party through its national Information Bureau.[278]

297. Benin's Military Manual provides that "personal effects [of the dead] shall be collected and evacuated".[279] It further specifies that "identity cards and personal effects of the deceased shall be sent to superiors".[280]

298. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that "personal effects of the dead shall be evacuated".[281]

299. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that one of the measures required after a conflict is to return personal effects of the dead.[282]

300. Croatia's Commanders' Manual states that "personal effects of the dead shall be collected and evacuated to the rear".[283]

301. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "the belongings of the dead must be collected and evacuated to the rear".[284]

302. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that the personal effects of the dead "shall be collected and transferred to the rear. They shall be returned to the family if it claims them."[285]

303. Hungary's Military Manual provides that one of the requirements after a conflict is the return of the personal effects of the dead.[286]

304. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, "it is incumbent on each party to... hand over to the other side half of the dog-tag worn by the fallen soldier as well as his personal effects".[287]

[278] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 6.03.
[279] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 13.
[280] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 6.
[281] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 44, § 163(2).
[282] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 21.
[283] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 76; see also LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 21.
[284] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[285] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[286] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 38.
[287] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.

305. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "personal effects [of the dead] shall be collected and evacuated".[288]
306. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "the personal effects of the deceased shall be collected and evacuated to the rear".[289]
307. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that the parties to the conflict shall conclude agreements in order to "facilitate the return of the personal effects of the deceased to the home country".[290]
308. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "the property of the dead may not be confiscated or destroyed".[291]
309. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "money and articles of personal or sentimental value found on the dead must be forwarded to the enemy".[292]
310. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that, in situations of internal troubles, the personal effects of the dead shall be collected and evacuated with the dead body.[293]
311. Spain's LOAC Manual stipulates that personal belongings, identity tags and any last will left by the deceased must be sent to the national Information Bureau.[294]
312. Togo's Military Manual provides that "personal effects [of the dead] shall be collected and evacuated".[295] It further specifies that "identity cards shall be evacuated. One half of the identity card shall remain on the corpse, the other half shall be evacuated."[296]
313. The UK Military Manual provides that "the belligerents must also forward to each other through . . . [the information] bureau . . . last wills or other documents of importance to the next of kin; money and all articles of an intrinsic or sentimental value which are found on the dead".[297]
314. The US Field Manual provides that parties to the conflict shall "collect and forward through the . . . [information] bureau one half of the double identity disc, last wills or other documents of importance to the next of kin, money and in general all articles of an intrinsic or sentimental value, which are found on the dead".[298]

National Legislation
315. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "the appropriate authorities and

[288] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 12.
[289] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-O, § 23.
[290] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-3.
[291] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-37.
[292] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[293] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 18, § 6.
[294] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[295] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 13.
[296] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[297] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 382. [298] US, Field Manual (1956), § 217.

governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall ensure that the necessary measures be taken . . . to return back . . . personal property [of the dead] following a request from the parties and close relatives of the dead persons".[299]

316. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[300]

317. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 16 GC I, 19 GC II, 122 GC III and 139 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 34(2)(c) AP I, are punishable offences.[301]

318. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "the objects of personal use belonging to enemy dead on the battlefield shall be collected and kept safely".[302]

319. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[303]

National Case-law

320. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

321. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

322. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted that "for every deceased person who falls into the hands of the adverse party, the adverse party must . . . forward . . . personal effects to the appropriate parties".[304]

Other International Organisations

323. No practice was found.

[299] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 29(5).
[300] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[301] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[302] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 94.
[303] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[304] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).

International Conferences
324. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

325. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

326. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that the "return of . . . [the] personal effects [of the deceased] to the home State shall be facilitated".[305]

VI. Other Practice

327. No practice was found.

D. Disposal of the Dead

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
328. Article 4, fifth paragraph, of the 1929 GC provides that belligerents shall ensure that "the dead are honourably interred".
329. Article 76, third paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that "the belligerents shall ensure that prisoners of war who have died in captivity are honourably buried".
330. Articles 17 GC I, 20 GC II, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV contain provisions pertaining to the disposal of the dead in order to ensure that it takes place in a respectful manner.
331. Article 8 AP II provides that, whenever circumstances permit, and particularly after an engagement, all possible measures shall be taken, without delay, to dispose decently of the dead. Article 8 AP II was adopted by consensus.[306]

Other International Instruments
332. Article 3(4) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "breach of the duty . . . to give [those who have died in the course of the armed conflict or while under detention] decent burial" shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat. Article 4(9) provides that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay . . . to dispose of [the dead] with respect".

[305] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 262 and 739.
[306] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 110.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

333. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that the remains of deceased persons shall be honourably buried.[307]

334. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the minimum respect for the remains of the dead is a decent burial or cremation".[308] The manual further states that "the deceased should be honourably interred".[309]

335. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that "the necessary measures shall be taken to bury the dead".[310]

336. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "parties to the conflict shall ensure that the dead are honourably interred".[311] It also states that "regulations with regard to burial at sea are adjusted to meet the requirements of the situation".[312] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual provides that "steps must also be taken to . . . provide for decent disposition [of the dead]".[313]

337. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "the dead shall be honourably interred".[314]

338. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that "as a rule, the dead shall be identified and buried, cremated or buried at sea individually".[315]

339. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that the dead must be and buried, cremated or buried at sea.[316]

340. France's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 17 GC I.[317]

341. Hungary's Military Manual states that "the dead may be buried, buried at sea, cremated".[318]

342. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, a "[legal] combatant is entitled to the status of a prisoner of war, according him . . . the right to a proper burial".[319]

[307] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.06.
[308] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 998.
[309] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.
[310] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 49.
[311] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 58.
[312] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-2, § 11.
[313] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 32.
[314] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 5.
[315] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 76, see also § 89 and LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 47.
[316] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1; see also LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[317] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 121.
[318] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 77.
[319] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 46.

343. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that "as a general rule, the dead shall be . . . buried, cremated or buried at sea individually".[320]
344. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "the dead shall be buried, cremated or buried at sea individually, when the tactical situation and other circumstances (e.g. hygiene) permit".[321]
345. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "generally, the dead shall be . . . buried, incinerated or buried at sea individually".[322]
346. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the remains [of the dead] . . . shall be respected".[323] It also states that "the regulations with regard to burial at sea are adjusted to meet the requirements of the situation".[324] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that the parties to a conflict must take steps to "provide for [the] decent disposal [of the dead]".[325]
347. The Military Instructions of the Philippines provides that "evacuation of all dead bodies must be done . . . and arrangements for a decent burial made".[326]
348. Russia's Military Manual states that the emergency disposal of the dead is one of the activities of civil defence that helps eliminate the immediate effects of hostilities or disaster.[327]
349. Spain's LOAC Manual stipulates that "the dead shall be buried, cremated or buried at sea as soon as the tactical situation and other circumstances permit".[328]
350. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "burial shall be honourable".[329]
351. Togo's Military Manual provides that the dead "shall be buried, incinerated or disposed of at sea individually when the tactical situation or other circumstances (hygiene) so permit".[330]
352. The UK Military Manual provides that "the belligerents must make provision for honourable interment" of the dead.[331]
353. The US Field Manual states that parties to the conflict "shall further ensure that the dead are honourably interred".[332]

[320] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 76.
[321] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[322] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-O, § 23, see also Fiche No. 8-O, § 25 and Fiche No. 6-SO, § B.
[323] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1012(1).
[324] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(3).
[325] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1817.
[326] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), p. 27, § 4; see also Military Directive to Commanders (1988), p. 30, Guideline 4(h)(6).
[327] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 9(l).
[328] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[329] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 76(2).
[330] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 12, see also p. 9 and Fascicule III, p. 5.
[331] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383.
[332] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.

354. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the Parties must ensure proper burial".[333]

National Legislation

355. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall ensure that the necessary measures be taken that: . . . the dead bodies of persons who are not citizens of the State concerned and died of wounds or in prison, and whose death is connected with the military operations or occupation, should be buried with the necessary respect.[334]

356. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[335]

357. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I, 20 GC II, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 8 AP II, are punishable offences.[336]

358. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that commanders shall take all the necessary measures "to give [the dead] an honourable burial".[337]

359. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[338]

360. Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended punishes "those who do not take care of the burial, cremation or burial at sea of the dead".[339]

National Case-law

361. In its ruling in the Jenin (Mortal Remains) case in 2002, dealing with the question of when, how and by whom the mortal remains of Palestinians who died in a battle in Jenin refugee camp should be identified and buried, Israel's High Court of Justice stated that "needless to say, the burial will be made in an appropriate and respectful manner, maintaining the respect for the

[333] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[334] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 29(3).
[335] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[336] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[337] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 94.
[338] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[339] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(12).

dead . . . [T]he burial will be conducted in a respectful manner, conforming to religious laws, and as soon as possible."[340]

Other National Practice

362. The Report on the Practice of Algeria notes that during the Algerian war of independence, "Algerian soldiers on occasion buried enemy personnel who died in combat".[341]

363. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, it is the opinio juris of Iran, based on practice during the Iran–Iraq War, that, where dead combatants cannot be returned to the relevant party, they should be buried.[342]

364. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF is sensitive to the correct and proper treatment of remains, and has established detailed internal regulations and procedures concerning their burial.[343]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

365. In 1996, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions identified as a particular concern a report that the bodies of six civilians who had been beaten and summarily executed by the Papua New Guinea Defence Forces were dumped at sea from helicopters.[344]

366. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted that "interment should be carried out in an honourable fashion".[345]

Other International Organisations

367. In February 1995, in a statement before the Permanent Council of the OSCE on the situation in Chechnya, the EU stated that the proposal to establish a "humanitarian truce" appeared essential in order to provide the victims with a decent burial.[346]

[340] Israel, High Court of Justice, Jenin (Mortal Remains) case, Ruling, 14 April 2002, §§ 8 and 9.
[341] Report on the Practice of Algeria (1997), Chapter 5.1, referring to El Moudjahid, Vol. 2, p. 641.
[342] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 5.1, referring to Statement by the Iranian Minister of Foreign Affairs, 15 November 1980 and Military Communiqué No. 2176, 27 July 1985.
[343] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[344] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/4/Add.2, 27 February 1996, § 73.
[345] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).
[346] EU, Statement by France on behalf of the EU before the Permanent Council of the OSCE, Vienna, 2 February 1995, Politique étrangère de la France, February 1995, p. 155.

International Conferences
368. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

369. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

370. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the dead shall be buried, cremated or buried at sea individually, when the tactical situation and other circumstances (e.g. hygiene) permit".[347]

VI. Other Practice

371. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, . . . to dispose of [the dead] with respect".[348]

Respect for the religious beliefs of the dead

Note: For practice concerning convictions and religious practices in general, see Chapter 32, section P.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
372. Article 17, third paragraph, GC I, Article 120, fourth paragraph, GC III and Article 130, first paragraph, GC IV provide that the dead shall be "buried, if possible according to the rites of the religion to which they belonged".
373. The 1999 NATO STANAG 2070 provides that:

10. Whenever practicable, a brief burial service of the appropriate religion is to be held . . .
11. An appropriate (religious) marker high enough to be seen readily is to be erected.

[347] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 512.
[348] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 13, IRRC, No. 282, p. 335.

Other Instruments

374. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

375. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that the dead "shall be buried . . . if possible according to their religious rites".[349]

376. According to Australia's Defence Force Manual, the dead should be given a decent burial in accordance with their religious rights and practices.[350]

377. Benin's Military Manual provides that "the dead shall be . . . buried . . . according to their religious rites".[351]

378. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that the burial shall take place according to the religion of the deceased.[352]

379. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "parties to the conflict shall ensure that the dead are . . . interred and if possible according to the rites of the religion to which they belong".[353]

380. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "the dead shall be . . . interred, and if possible accorded the rites of the religion to which the deceased belonged".[354]

381. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, "generally speaking, the enemy fallen are to be interred (in accordance with their religion's customs insofar as possible)".[355]

382. The Military Instructions of the Philippines stipulates that "religious services must be provided if required".[356]

383. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "inhumation shall . . . [take place] if possible according to the religious rites of the deceased".[357]

384. Togo's Military Manual provides that "the dead shall be . . . buried . . . according to their religious rites".[358]

385. The UK Military Manual provides that "the belligerents must make provision for . . . interment . . . if possible according to the rites of the religion to which the dead belong".[359]

[349] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005.
[350] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 998 and 999.
[351] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 5, see also Fascicule II, p. 12.
[352] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 118, § 431(2).
[353] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 58.
[354] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 5.
[355] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.
[356] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), p. 27, § 4.
[357] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 76(2).
[358] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 5, see also Fascicule II, p. 12.
[359] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383.

386. The US Field Manual states that parties to the conflict "shall further ensure that the dead are . . . interred, if possible according to the rites of the religion to which they belonged".[360]

National Legislation

387. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[361]

388. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[362]

389. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[363]

National Case-law

390. In its ruling in the Jenin (Mortal Remains) case in 2002, dealing with the question of when, how and by whom the mortal remains of Palestinians who died in a battle in Jenin refugee camp should be identified and buried, Israel's High Court of Justice stated that "the burial will be conducted . . . conforming to religious laws".[364]

Other National Practice

391. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, the bodies of members of enemy forces and civilians that remain unclaimed, but whose religious persuasions are identified, are buried according to their religious rites.[365]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

392. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council 780 (1992) stated that "interment should be carried out . . . according to the religious rites of the deceased".[366]

[360] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218; see also Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[361] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[362] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[363] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[364] Israel, High Court of Justice, Jenin (Mortal Remains) case, Ruling, 14 April 2002, § 8.
[365] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[366] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).

Other International Organisations
393. No practice was found.

International Conferences
394. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

395. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

396. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "burial or cremation shall, as far as circumstances permit, be carried out . . . according to the rites of the religion to which the dead belonged".[367]

VI. Other Practice

397. No practice was found.

Cremation of bodies

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
398. Article 17, second paragraph, GC I provides that "bodies shall not be cremated except for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the religion of the deceased. In case of cremation, the circumstances and reasons for cremation shall be stated in detail in the death certificate or on the authenticated list of the dead."
399. Article 120, fifth paragraph, GC III provides that "bodies may be cremated only for imperative reasons of hygiene, on account of the religion of the deceased or in accordance with his express wish to this effect. In case of cremation, the fact shall be stated and the reasons given in the death certificate of the deceased."
400. Article 130, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "bodies may be cremated only for imperative reasons of hygiene, on account of the religion of the deceased or in accordance with his expressed wish to this effect. In case of cremation, the fact shall be stated and the reasons given in the death certificate of the deceased."

[367] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 735.

Other Instruments

401. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

402. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "bodies shall not be cremated except for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the religion of the deceased. In case of cremation, the reasons must be stated in detail on the death certificate or on the authenticated list of the dead."[368]

403. Australia's Defence Force Manual stipulates that "the cremation of the dead shall be carried out individually in accordance with the religious rights and practices of the deceased".[369] It then specifies that "bodies shall only be cremated for imperative reasons of hygiene and health, or for the requirements of the deceased".[370]

404. Benin's Military Manual provides that "cremation shall only take place for imperative hygiene reasons and according to the deceased's religion".[371]

405. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "bodies shall not be cremated except for imperative reasons of hygiene or for religious motives".[372]

406. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "bodies must not be cremated except for imperative reasons of hygiene or because of the religion of the deceased. Reasons for cremation must be recorded."[373]

407. France's LOAC Manual states that "bodies shall not be cremated except for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the religion of the deceased".[374]

408. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, "generally speaking, the enemy fallen are to be interred (in accordance with their religion's customs insofar as possible), with cremation allowed only in cases where this is necessary hygienically or for religious reasons".[375]

409. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "cremation shall take place only for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the religion of the deceased".[376]

410. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "the cremation of a body shall be granted for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the religion" of the deceased.[377]

368 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005.
369 Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.
370 Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 9-100.
371 Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 12.
372 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 59.
373 Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 5.
374 France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 121.
375 Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.
376 Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
377 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.

411. Spain's LOAC Manual stipulates that cremation is permitted only if required on religious grounds or for reasons of hygiene in cases where there is a risk of disease.[378]
412. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "cremation is only permitted for imperative hygiene reasons or for religious motives".[379]
413. Togo's Military Manual provides that "cremation shall only take place for imperative hygiene reasons and according to the deceased's religion".[380]
414. The UK Military Manual stipulates that "bodies must not be cremated except for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the religion of the deceased. When cremation is carried out the circumstances and reasons for it must be stated in detail on the death certificate."[381]
415. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "cremation is allowed only on religious grounds or for imperative reasons of hygiene".[382]
416. The US Field Manual provides that "bodies shall not be cremated except for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the religion of the deceased. In case of cremation, the circumstances and reasons for cremation shall be stated in detail in the death certificate or on the authenticated list of the dead."[383]
417. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "cremation is permitted only for imperative reasons of hygiene or for motives based on the deceased's religion".[384]
418. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "Parties may cremate the dead only for hygienic or religious reasons".[385]

National Legislation
419. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[386]
420. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[387]
421. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[388]

[378] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, Article 5.2.d.(6).
[379] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 76, commentary.
[380] Togo, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[381] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 384.
[382] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 5.
[383] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[384] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).
[385] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[386] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[387] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[388] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).

National Case-law
422. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
423. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
424. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that:

> A mass gravesite is a potential repository of evidence of mass killing of civilians and POWs . . .
>
> The manner and method by which a mass grave is created may itself be a breach of the Geneva Conventions, as well as a violation of the customary regulations of armed conflict . . . Bodies should not be cremated except for hygiene reasons or for the religious reasons of the deceased.[389]

Other International Organisations
425. No practice was found.

International Conferences
426. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

427. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

428. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "burial or cremation shall, as far as circumstances permit, be carried out individually".[390]

VI. Other Practice

429. No practice was found.

[389] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(a) and (b).
[390] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 735.

Burial in individual or collective graves

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

430. Article 17, first paragraph, GC I provides that parties to the conflict shall ensure that burial or cremation of the dead is "carried out individually as far as circumstances permit".

431. Article 20, first paragraph, GC II provides that parties to the conflict shall ensure that burial at sea of the dead be "carried out individually as far as circumstances permit".

432. Article 120, fifth paragraph, GC III provides that "deceased prisoners of war shall be buried in individual graves unless unavoidable circumstances require the use of collective graves".

433. Article 130, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "deceased internees shall be buried in individual graves unless unavoidable circumstances require the use of collective graves".

434. The 1999 NATO STANAG 2070 provides that:

> 3. Whenever practicable, separate burial should be given to the remains, or even part remains, of each deceased person.
> . . .
> 6. The following definitions are taken from the NATO Glossary of Terms and Definitions for military use in English and French . . .:
> a. Emergency Burial. A burial, usually on the battlefield, when conditions do not permit evacuation for burial in a cemetery.
> b. Group Burial. A burial in a common grave of two or more individually unidentified remains.
> c. Trench Burial. A method of burial resorted to when casualties are heavy whereby a trench is prepared and the individual remains are laid in it side by side, thus obviating the necessity of digging and filling individual graves.
> . . .
> 12. In the case of trench and group burials a marker and list in a suitable container endorsed accordingly is to be placed at each end of the grave and the distance of the remains from the marker is to be shown against the relevant entry in the list. In group burials, the number of bodies buried must be recorded, with the names of the known but unidentifiable dead listed.

Other Instruments

435. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

436. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that the deceased must "be buried individually, so far as the circumstances so permit".[391]

[391] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 6.04.

437. According to Australia's Defence Force Manual, "the burial or cremation of the dead shall be carried out individually".[392]
438. Benin's Military Manual provides that the dead "shall be buried, cremated or buried at sea individually".[393]
439. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "parties to the conflict shall ensure that burial or cremation of the dead is carried out individually as far as circumstances permit".[394]
440. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "the burial or cremation of the dead should be carried out individually as far as circumstances permit".[395]
441. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that "as a rule, the dead shall be . . . buried, cremated or buried at sea individually".[396]
442. France's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 17 GC I.[397]
443. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that "as a general rule, the dead shall be . . . buried, cremated or buried at sea individually".[398]
444. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "after identification, the dead shall be buried, cremated or buried at sea individually, when the tactical situation and other circumstances (e.g. hygiene) permit".[399]
445. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "generally, the dead shall be . . . buried, cremated or buried at sea individually".[400]
446. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "parties to the conflict are obliged to ensure that burial or cremation of the dead shall be carried out individually".[401]
447. Spain's LOAC Manual stipulates that "the dead shall be buried, cremated or buried at sea individually".[402]
448. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "if possible, corpses shall be buried separately".[403]
449. Togo's Military Manual provides that the dead "shall be buried, incinerated or buried at sea individually".[404]
450. The UK Military Manual provides that "the belligerents must make provision for . . . interment, in individual graves so far as possible".[405]
451. The US Field Manual provides that "Parties to the conflict shall ensure burial or cremation of the dead, carried out individually as far as circumstances permit".[406]

[392] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.
[393] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 12, see also Fascicule III, p. 5.
[394] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 55.
[395] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 5.
[396] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 76.
[397] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 121.
[398] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 76.
[399] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[400] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-O, § 23, see also Fiche No. 6-SO, § B.
[401] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.
[402] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[403] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 76, commentary.
[404] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 12, see also Fascicule III, p. 5.
[405] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383.
[406] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218; see also Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).

452. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) stipulates that bodies should be buried individually.[407]

National Legislation

453. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[408]

454. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I, 20 GC II, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[409]

455. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... is liable to imprisonment".[410]

National Case-law

456. In 1995, Colombia's Council of State held that the deceased must be buried individually, subject to all the requirements of the law, and not in mass graves.[411]

Other National Practice

457. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

458. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that:

> A mass gravesite is a potential repository of evidence of mass killings of civilians and POWs ...
>
> The manner and method by which a mass grave is created may itself be a breach of the Geneva Conventions, as well as a violation of the customary regulations of armed conflict ... Parties to a conflict must also ensure that deceased persons are ... buried in individual graves, as far apart as circumstances permit.[412]

[407] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Article 167.
[408] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[409] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[410] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[411] Colombia, Council of State, Administrative Case No. 10941, Judgement, 6 September 1995.
[412] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(a) and (b).

Other International Organisations
459. No practice was found.

International Conferences
460. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

461. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

462. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces the rule that "burial or cremation shall, as far as circumstances permit, be carried out individually".[413]

VI. Other Practice

463. No practice was found.

Grouping of graves according to nationality

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
464. Article 17, third paragraph, GC I provides that graves shall be "grouped if possible according to the nationality of the deceased".
465. Article 120, fourth paragraph, GC III provides that "whenever possible, deceased prisoners of war who depended on the same Power shall be interred in the same place".
466. Paragraph 9 of the 1999 NATO STANAG 2070 states that "burials are to be grouped by nationalities. Different areas for separate graves, trench or group burials are to be allotted to each nationality."

Other Instruments
467. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
468. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that graves "shall be grouped if possible according to the nationality of the dead".[414]

[413] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 735.
[414] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005.

469. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that the graves of the deceased shall "be grouped by nationality".[415]
470. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that the deceased shall be buried by nationality.[416]
471. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "graves shall be grouped if possible according to the nationality of the deceased".[417]
472. The US Field Manual provides that the "graves [of the dead] are . . . grouped if possible according to the nationality of the deceased".[418]
473. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that military graves should, if possible, be grouped by nationality.[419]

National Legislation
474. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[420]
475. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I and 120 GC III, is a punishable offence.[421]
476. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[422]

National Case-law
477. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
478. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
479. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780

[415] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.
[416] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 119, § 431(2).
[417] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.
[418] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[419] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Article 168.
[420] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[421] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[422] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).

(1992) stated, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that "victims should be grouped by nationality".[423]

Other International Organisations
480. No practice was found.

International Conferences
481. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

482. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

483. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "wherever possible, the dead of the same nationality shall be buried at the same place".[424]

VI. Other Practice

484. No practice was found.

Respect for and maintenance of graves

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
485. Article 4, fifth paragraph, of the 1929 GC provides that belligerents shall ensure that graves are respected.
486. Article 76, third paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that belligerents shall ensure that the graves of POWs are "treated with respect and suitably maintained".
487. Article 17, third paragraph, GC I, Article 120, fourth paragraph, GC III and Article 130, first paragraph, GC IV provide that graves shall be respected and properly maintained.

[423] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).
[424] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 735.

488. Article 34 AP I provides that:

> 1. The remains of persons who have died for reasons related to occupation or in detention resulting from occupation or hostilities and those of persons not nationals of the country in which they have died as a result of hostilities shall be respected, and the gravesites of all such persons shall be respected [and] maintained . . . as provided for in Article 130 of the Fourth Convention, where their remains or gravesites would not receive more favourable consideration under the Conventions and this Protocol.
> 2. As soon as circumstances and the relation between the adverse Parties permit, . . . [they] shall conclude agreements in order:
>
> . . .
>
> (b) to protect and maintain such gravesites permanently;
>
> . . .
>
> 3. In the absence of [such] agreements . . . and if the home country of such deceased is not willing to arrange at its expense for the maintenance of such gravesites, the High Contracting Party in whose territory the gravesites are situated may offer to facilitate the return of the remains of the deceased to the home country. Where such an offer has not been accepted the High Contracting Party may, after the expiry of five years from the date of the offer and upon due notice to the home country, adopt the arrangements laid down in its own laws relating to cemeteries and graves.

Article 34 AP I was adopted by consensus.[425]

489. Article 8(b) of the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam contained provisions requiring the parties to take care of the graves of the dead so as to facilitate the exhumation and repatriation of the remains.

Other Instruments

490. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

491. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that graves shall be "respected . . . and properly maintained".[426]

492. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that the graves of the deceased "shall be respected".[427]

493. Canada's LOAC Manual states that the grave sites of all persons who have died as a result of hostilities or while in occupation or detention in relation thereto shall be "properly respected [and] maintained".[428]

494. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that one of the requirements after a conflict is to "respect . . . and maintain gravesites".[429]

[425] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[426] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005.
[427] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.
[428] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 54.
[429] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 21.

495. France's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 17 GC I.[430]
496. Hungary's Military Manual provides that one of the requirements after a conflict is to "respect . . . and maintain gravesites".[431]
497. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "the IDF maintains a cemetery in the north for the interment of the bodies of terrorists killed in clashes with the IDF".[432]
498. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "graves must be properly maintained".[433]
499. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that the grave sites of the dead shall be "properly respected, maintained and marked".[434]
500. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the graves of the dead shall be respected and properly maintained, wherever they are located".[435]
501. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "graves shall be respected" and "properly maintained".[436]
502. The UK Military Manual provides that "graves must be respected and properly maintained".[437]
503. The US Field Manual provides that the graves of the dead "are respected [and] properly maintained".[438]
504. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook requires that "as soon as circumstances permit, arrangement be made to . . . protect and maintain such sites permanently".[439]
505. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that the graves of the deceased shall be respected.[440]

National Legislation
506. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "the places of burial of [the dead] are respected".[441]
507. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[442]
508. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I,

[430] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 121.
[431] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 38.
[432] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.
[433] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-3.
[434] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1012(1).
[435] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[436] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 71(2) and Article 76, commentary.
[437] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383. [438] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[439] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.4, footnote 19.
[440] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Article 168.
[441] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 13(3).
[442] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

120 GC III and 130 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 34 AP I, are punishable offences.[443]

509. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[444]

National Case-law

510. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

511. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support ... the principle ... to maintain [grave] sites permanently".[445]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

512. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that the graves of victims should be maintained.[446]

Other International Organisations

513. No practice was found.

International Conferences

514. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the missing and dead in armed conflicts in which it called on parties to armed conflicts "during hostilities and after cessation of hostilities, to help locate and care for the graves of the dead".[447]

[443] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[444] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[445] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.
[446] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).
[447] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. V.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

515. In the Neira Alegría and Others case in 1995, the government of Peru informed the IACtHR that a certain cemetery under discussion was official and permanent in nature, and that the bodies of persons who died as a result of disproportionate use of force in putting down a prison mutiny would not therefore be moved except in accordance with regulations on the subject and at the request of an interested party.[448]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

516. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "gravesites of deceased persons shall be respected and maintained, wherever located".[449]

VI. Other Practice

517. In 1996, in the context of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Amnesty International called for IFOR to protect mass grave sites.[450]

E. Accounting for the Dead

Note: For practice concerning respect for family rights, see Chapter 32, section Q. For practice concerning the right of the families to know the fate of their relatives, see Chapter 36.

Identification of the dead prior to disposal

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

518. Article 4 of the 1929 GC provides that the belligerents "shall ensure that the burial or cremation of the dead is preceded by a careful, and if possible medical, examination of the bodies, with a view to confirming death, establishing identity and enabling a report to be made".

519. Article 16, first paragraph, GC I and Article 19, first paragraph, GC II provide that:

> Parties to the conflict shall record as soon as possible, in respect of each . . . dead person of the adverse Party falling into their hands, any particulars which may assist in his identification.

[448] IACtHR, Neira Alegría and Others case, Judgement, 19 January 1995, § 36.
[449] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 261, see also § 230.
[450] Amnesty International, Bosnia and Herzegovina: Amnesty International renews calls for IFOR to comply with international law, AI Index: EUR 63/11/96, 18 April 1996, p. 4.

These records should if possible include:

(a) designation of the Power on which he depends;
(b) army, regimental, personal or serial number;
(c) surname;
(d) first name or names;
(e) date of birth;
(f) any other particulars shown on his identity card or disc;
(g) date and place of capture or death;
(h) particulars concerning wounds or illness, or cause of death.

520. Article 17, first paragraph, GC I and Article 20, first paragraph, GC II provide that "Parties to the conflict shall ensure that burial or cremation of the dead . . . is preceded by a careful examination, if possible by a medical examination, of the bodies, with a view to confirming death, establishing identity and enabling a report to be made".

521. Articles 120 and 121 GC III contain detailed provisions relating to identification, death certificates and investigation in the case of death of POWs.

522. Article 129, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "deaths of internees shall be certified in every case by a doctor, and a death certificate shall be made out, showing the causes of death and the conditions under which it occurred".

523. Article 131, first paragraph, GC IV provides that any suspect death shall be followed by an official enquiry.

524. Article III(58)(a) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that:

> The Commander of each side shall furnish to the Commander of the other side as soon as practicable, but not later than ten (10) days after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, the following information concerning prisoners of war:
> . . .
> (2) Insofar as practicable, information regarding name, nationality, rank, and other identification data, date and cause of death, and place of burial, of those prisoners of war who died while in custody.

525. The 1974 NATO STANAG 2132 describes the procedures to be followed with respect to documentation relative to medical evacuation, treatment and cause of death of patients.

526. Article 33 AP I provides that:

2. . . . each Party to the conflict shall . . .
   (a) record the information . . . [on those] who have died during any period of detention;
   (b) . . . facilitate and, if need be, carry out the search for and the recording of information concerning such persons if they have died in other circumstances as a result of hostilities or occupation.
   . . .

4. The Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to agree on arrangements for teams to . . . identify . . . the dead from battlefield areas.

Article 33 AP I was adopted by consensus.[451]

527. The 1999 NATO STANAG 2070 provides that:

11. An appropriate (religious) marker high enough to be seen is to be erected. At its base, a bottle, can, or other suitable container is to be half buried, open end downwards, containing a paper on which is recorded such information listed below as is available:
    a. Name (surname, prefix and forename or initials).
    b. Rank or Grade.
    c. Gender.
    d. Service Number.
    e. National Force, Unit, and Place of Birth, if desired.
    f. Date and cause of death, if known.
    g. Date buried.
    h. By whom buried.
    i. Religious faith.
    j. Nature of contamination.
12. In the case of trench and group burials a marker and list in a suitable container endorsed accordingly is to be placed at each end of the grave and the distance of the remains from the marker is to be shown against the relevant entry in the list. In group burials the number of bodies buried must be recorded, with the names of the known but unidentifiable dead listed.
    . . .
15. Unidentifiable dead should be buried and reported as others except that the word "unknown" is to be used in place of the name. Particular care must be taken to list all information which may assist identification later. The fullest possible physical, especially dental, description is to be recorded and fingerprints taken if possible. Details of numbers and markings on uniforms, equipment, vehicles or aircraft, and particulars of IDENTIFIABLE DEAD in the vicinity should be noted.
16. In all cases an emergency burial report must be completed by the unit responsible. The type of report form to be used is given at Annex A. This is not a prescribed format, but shows generally the information most nations consider essential to have, provided it is available.
    . . .
18. . . . One identification tag/disc must be buried with the corpse. The second identification tag/disc, or the removable part, is placed in the receptacle with the personal effects. In the case of United States personnel, all personal effects and one identification tag are buried with the remains and the second identification tag affixed to the grave marker.

Other Instruments

528. Article 20 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "the dead should never be buried until all articles on them which may serve to fix their identity, such as pocket-books, numbers, etc., shall have been collected".

[451] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

529. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that the dead shall be identified prior to their disposal.[452]

530. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that:

> As soon as is practical following the death of a combatant, a belligerent shall record the following information to aid identification . . .
> a) nationality;
> b) regimental or serial number and rank;
> c) surname and all first names;
> d) date of birth, religion and any other particulars shown on the body's identity card or identity discs; and > e) the date, cause and place of death and if the body is given a field burial, the exact location of the remains to enable future exhumation of the body, or remains if necessary.[453]

531. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "the belligerents must . . . identify the dead".[454]

532. Benin's Military Manual provides that "the dead must be identified".[455]

533. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that, when the tactical situation permits, the dead should be buried after identification and medical examination. It also states that "all the dead must be listed".[456]

534. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to reach agreements to allow teams to . . . identify . . . the dead from battlefield areas".[457] It further states that "burial or cremation must be preceded by a careful examination of the bodies (if possible by a medical examination), with a view to confirming death, establishing identity and enabling a report to be made".[458]

535. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "burial must be preceded by a careful examination, and if possible, by a medical examination of the bodies in order to confirm death, establish identity and make appropriate reports".[459]

536. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that "the dead shall be identified according to the circumstances".[460]

537. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that "as a rule, the dead shall be identified".[461]

[452] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 2.06, 6.01 and 6.04.
[453] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 9-101.
[454] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 49.
[455] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, pp. 9 and 12.
[456] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 44, § 163(2) and p. 118, § 431(2).
[457] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-5, § 53.
[458] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 56.
[459] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 5.
[460] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 47.
[461] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 76, see also § 89.

538. France's LOAC Summary Note and LOAC Teaching Note provide that the dead must be identified.[462]
539. France's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 17 GC I.[463]
540. Germany's Military Manual provides that "burial or cremation of the dead shall be preceded by an examination of the bodies with documentation".[464]
541. Hungary's Military Manual states that "the dead shall be identified according to the circumstances".[465]
542. India's Police Manual provides that, in cases of death resulting from a clash, the police are required to hold an inquest and to send the body for post-mortem examination.[466]
543. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, "it is incumbent on each party to keep a record of a fallen soldier's personal details and particulars of death, and hand over to the other side half of the dog-tag worn by the fallen soldier, as well as a death certificate".[467]
544. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that "as a general rule, the dead shall be identified".[468]
545. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "the dead shall be identified. After identification, the dead shall be buried . . . Identity cards shall be evacuated."[469]
546. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "generally, the dead shall be identified".[470]
547. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that:

> Parties to the conflict are obliged to ensure that burial or cremation of the dead . . . is preceded for each dead by a careful examination, if possible by a medical examination, of the body, with a view to confirming death and establishing identity. One half of the double identity disc or the identity disc itself if it is a single disc, should remain on the body.[471]

548. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "the identification of the dead must be done".[472]
549. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "to facilitate the finding of the missing personnel, Parties to the conflict endeavour to reach agreement to allow teams to . . . identify . . . the dead from battlefield areas".[473]

[462] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1; LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[463] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 121.
[464] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 611.
[465] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 77.
[466] India, Police Manual (1986), Article 13(xviii), p. 39.
[467] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.
[468] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 76.
[469] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[470] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-O, § 23, see also Fiche No. 8-O, § 25, Fiche No. 6-SO, § B and Fiche No. 2-T, § 22.
[471] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.
[472] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-37.
[473] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1011(3).

550. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "the belligerents have to register as soon as possible all the particulars that can help to identify an enemy soldier who is wounded, sick or dead".[474]
551. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that, in situations of internal troubles, "the dead shall be identified".[475]
552. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "the dead must be identified".[476]
553. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "no corpse shall be buried or cremated without an examination, if possible medical, to certify the death and establish the identity of the deceased".[477]
554. Togo's Military Manual provides that "the dead must be identified".[478]
555. The UK Military Manual provides that "belligerents must record as soon as possible any particulars which may assist in the identification of dead persons belonging to the opposing belligerent who fall into their hands".[479] The manual adds that "before being buried or cremated, the bodies must be carefully examined to ensure that life is extinct, and also to establish identity and enable a report to be made".[480]
556. The US Field Manual provides that:

> Parties to the conflict shall record as soon as possible, in respect of each . . . dead person of the adverse Party falling into their hands, any particulars which may assist in his identification.
>
> These records should if possible include:
>
> (a) designation of the Power on which he depends;
> (b) army, regimental, personal or serial number;
> (c) surname;
> (d) first name or names;
> (e) date of birth;
> (f) any other particulars shown on his identity card or disc;
> (g) date and place of capture or death;
> (h) particulars concerning wounds or illness, or cause of death.[481]

The manual also provides that "Parties to the conflict shall ensure that burial or cremation of the dead . . . is preceded by a careful examination, if possible by a medical examination, of the bodies, with a view to confirming death, establishing identity and enabling a report to be made".[482]
557. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 16 GC I.[483]

[474] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[475] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 18, § 6.
[476] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[477] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 76(1).
[478] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, pp. 9 and 12.
[479] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 382.
[480] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383.
[481] US, Field Manual (1956), § 217; see also Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[482] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[483] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).

National Legislation

558. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "each party buries [the dead] after they take all the measures for their identification".[484]

559. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[485]

560. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 16 and 17 GC I, 19 and 20 GC II, 120 and 121 GC III, 129 and 131 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 33 AP I, are punishable offences.[486]

561. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "commanders shall take all necessary measures to . . . ascertain [the] identity [of the dead]".[487]

562. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[488]

National Case-law

563. In its judgement in the Military Juntas case in 1985, Argentina's Court of Appeal referred to the rule that prior to burial or cremation, the dead should be examined, if possible by a doctor.[489]

564. In 1995, Colombia's Council of State held that a report must be made concerning the circumstances of death: in the aftermath of a battle, the bodies of all those killed, whether combatants or non-combatants, must be treated in accordance with forensic requirements in order to "permit complete identification and establishment of the circumstances of death".[490]

565. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, in the Abu-Rijwa case in 2000, the IDF carried out DNA identification tests when asked by family members to repatriate remains.[491]

566. In its ruling in the Jenin (Mortal Remains) case in 2002, dealing with the question of when, how and by whom the mortal remains of Palestinians who died in a battle in Jenin refugee camp should be identified and buried, Israel's High Court of Justice stated that "once the identification process is over, the

[484] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 13(3).
[485] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[486] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[487] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 94.
[488] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[489] Argentina, Court of Appeal, Military Juntas case, Judgement, 9 December 1985.
[490] Colombia, Council of State, Case No. 10941, Judgement, 6 September 1995, pp. 37–42.
[491] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.1, referring to High Court, Abu-Rijwa case, Judgement, 15 November 2000.

burial shall begin" and that "identifying . . . the bodies is a highly important humanitarian need".[492]

Other National Practice

567. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, the "bodies of enemies and civilians are identified, sent to a morgue and subsequently buried".[493]

568. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support . . . the principle that each party to a conflict permit teams to identify . . . the dead".[494]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

569. In Resolution 3320 (XXIX), adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly:

> 2. Calls upon parties to armed conflicts, regardless of their character or location, during and after the end of hostilities and in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, to take such action as may be within their power to help locate and mark the graves of the dead [and] to facilitate the disinternment and the return of the remains, if requested by the families . . .
> . . .
> 4. Calls upon all parties to armed conflicts to cooperate, in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, with Protecting Powers or their substitutes and with the International Committee of the Red Cross in providing information on the . . . dead in armed conflicts, including persons belonging to other countries not parties to the armed conflict.[495]

570. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that the Croatian authorities identify all those killed.[496]

571. In 1991, in a report on El Salvador, the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL recommended that:

> The immediate disposal of bodies should be avoided in cases of violent death or death in questionable circumstances and an adequate autopsy should be conducted in accordance with the conditions recommended in the Principles [on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions].[497]

[492] Israel, High Court of Justice, Jenin (Mortal Remains) case, Ruling, 14 April 2002, §§ 8 and 9.
[493] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[494] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.
[495] UN General Assembly, Res. 3220 (XXIX), 6 November 1974, §§ 2 and 4.
[496] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/6, 5 July 1995, § 59.
[497] ONUSAL, Director of the Human Rights Division, Report, UN Doc. A/46/658-S/23222, 15 November 1991, Annex, § 151.

572. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) stated, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that "for every deceased person who falls into the hands of the adverse party, the adverse party must record, prepare, and forward all identification information, death certificates . . . to the appropriate parties. Parties to a conflict must also ensure that deceased persons are autopsied."[498]

573. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador noted that, following a reported clash between FMLN troops and a military patrol, a member of the Salvadoran Armed Service Press Committee (COPREFA) photographed the bodies of the dead, and members of the National Police performed paraffin tests to see whether the persons had fired weapons.[499]

Other International Organisations

574. In 1999, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe adopted a recommendation on the harmonisation of medico-legal autopsy rules, without making any exception for situations of armed conflict. In particular, it stated that autopsies should be carried out "in all cases of obvious or suspected unnatural death, in particular arising out of violations of human rights such as suspicion of torture or any other form of ill-treatment and deaths in custody or death associated with police or military activities".[500]

575. In a resolution adopted in 1997, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to call for the implementation of the investigations provided for by the international conventions to be applied to the death of Lebanese detainees in Israeli detention camps and prisons".[501]

576. In February 1995, in a statement before the Permanent Council of the OSCE on the situation in Chechnya, the EU stated that the proposal to establish a "humanitarian truce" appeared essential in order to permit the identification of the victims.[502]

International Conferences

577. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on the wearing of identity discs in which it recalled that Articles 16 and 17 GC I "provide for identity discs to be worn by members of the armed forces to facilitate their identification in case they are killed". The Conference further stated that it:

[498] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).
[499] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, p. 90.
[500] Council of Europe, Committee of Ministers, Rec. (99)3, Harmonisation of medico-legal autopsy rules, 2 February 1999, §§ 2(c) and (i).
[501] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5635, 31 March 1997, § 5.
[502] EU, Statement by France on behalf of the EU before the Permanent Council of the OSCE, Vienna, 2 February 1995, Politique étrangère de la France, February 1995, p. 155.

1. urges the Parties to an armed conflict to take all necessary steps to provide the members of their armed forces with identity discs and to ensure that the discs are worn during service,
2. recommends that the Parties to an armed conflict should see that these discs give all the indications required for a precise identification of members of the armed forces such as full name, date and place of birth, religion, serial number and blood group; that every disc be double and composed of two separable parts, each bearing the same indications; and that the inscriptions be engraved on a substance as resistant as possible to the destructive action of chemical and physical agents, especially to fire and heat.[503]

578. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 urged the parties to every international armed conflict "to implement the provisions of Articles 16 and 17 of the First Geneva Convention, prescribing the wearing of identity discs by members of the armed forces, in order to facilitate the identification of the . . . dead".[504]

579. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "every effort is made . . . to identify dead persons".[505]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

580. In its judgement in Kaya v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR found that an autopsy on a man shot by Turkish security forces, who reportedly believed him to be a terrorist, was inadequate on the basis that the number of bullets in the body was not recorded, no tests for fingerprints or gunpowder traces were made and no attempt was made to identify the body. While acknowledging the difficult security conditions under which the examination was carried out, the ECtHR expressed surprise that the body had not been evacuated to a safer location for further examination.[506]

581. In its judgement in Ergi v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR recalled the obligation pointed out in its previous judgements that "neither the prevalence of violent armed clashes nor the high incidence of fatalities can displace the obligation . . . to ensure that an effective, independent investigation is conducted into the deaths arising out of clashes involving the security forces, more so in cases . . . where the circumstances are in many respects unclear".[507]

[503] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. I, §§ 1 and 2.
[504] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XIII, § 1.
[505] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(e).
[506] ECtHR, Kaya v. Turkey, Judgement, 19 February 1998, § 89.
[507] ECtHR, Ergi v. Turkey, Judgement, 28 July 1998, § 85.

582. In its judgement in Yasa v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR recalled the obligation pointed out in its judgement in Kaya v. Turkey "to carry out an investigation" into the circumstances surrounding the death of individuals killed as a result of the use of force by the State authorities, even when arising in a climate marked by violent action.[508]

583. In 1997, in a case concerning Argentina, in the context of a clash which the IACiHR qualified as being of sufficient intensity to trigger the application of IHL, the IACiHR found that the autopsies were, according to expert evidence, superficial and did not make any serious attempt to examine the injuries, invoking instead the degree of putrefaction of the corpses as a bar to further examination. The Commission recognised that in certain situations of conflict, the collection of evidence may be difficult, but that this justification may not be used where, immediately following the incident, the State had absolute control over the evidence.[509]

584. In its judgement in the Neira Alegría and Others case in 1995, involving the disappearance of three prisoners following a riot in which control and jurisdiction of the prison was handed over to the army, the IACtHR stated that:

> The Court likewise considers it proven that the identification of the bodies was not undertaken with the required diligence, since only a few of those bodies recovered during the days immediately following the end of the conflict were identified. Of the rest, which were recovered over a span of nine months, certainly a long period, this was not done either although, according to the statement of the experts, identification could have been possible by applying certain techniques. This conduct on the part of the Government constitutes a serious act of negligence.[510]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

585. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the dead shall be identified".[511]

586. In 1995, the ICRC asked the military leaders of a separatist entity to establish death certificates of deceased captured combatants.[512]

VI. Other Practice

587. No practice was found.

[508] ECtHR, Yasa v. Turkey, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 104.
[509] IACiHR, Case 11.137 (Argentina), Report, 18 November 1997, §§ 238–242 and 423.
[510] IACtHR, Neira Alegría and Others case, Judgement, 19 January 1995, § 71.
[511] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 511 and 734.
[512] ICRC archive document.

Recording of the location of graves

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

588. Article 4, sixth and seventh paragraphs, of the 1929 GC provides that:

> At the commencement of hostilities, [the belligerents] shall organize officially a graves registration service, to render eventual exhumations possible, and to ensure the identification of bodies whatever may be the subsequent site of the grave. After the cessation of hostilities they shall exchange the list of graves and of dead interred in their cemeteries and elsewhere.

589. Article 17, fourth paragraph, GC I, Article 120, sixth paragraph, GC III and Article 130, third paragraph, GC IV provide that lists showing the exact location and markings of the graves together with the particulars of the dead interred therein shall be made by the Graves Registration Service in order to allow subsequent exhumations, to ensure the identification of the bodies and the possible transportation to the home country. These lists are also meant to be forwarded to the Power on whom the deceased depended.

590. Article 8(b) of the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam contains provisions requiring the parties to determine the location of the graves of the dead so as to facilitate the exhumation and repatriation of the remains.

Other Instruments

591. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

592. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "when circumstances so permit and at latest at the end of the hostilities [the obituary] services shall communicate to each other, through the Information Office . . . the lists indicating the location and designation of the graves".[513]

593. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "as soon as is practical following the death of a combatant, a belligerent shall record the following information to aid identification . . . [including] the exact location of the remains to enable future exhumation of the body or remains if necessary".[514]

594. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "AP I also imposes obligations . . . to report upon the disposal of the remains of the dead".[515]

[513] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 6.05.
[514] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 9-101.
[515] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-5, § 51.

595. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "as soon as the tactical situation permits, a report on the death and the subsequent measures taken shall be established".[516]
596. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "as soon as circumstances and the relation between the parties to the conflict permit, the parties, in whose territories graves of the persons who have died as a result of hostilities are located, shall conclude agreements in order . . . to facilitate access to the gravesites".[517]
597. Spain's LOAC Manual stipulates that "the Graves Registration Service shall be responsible for recording all particulars concerning the deceased and their graves, as well as for the conservation of ashes".[518]
598. The UK Military Manual provides that "as soon as possible, and at latest at the end of the hostilities, these services must exchange lists showing the location and marking of the graves and giving particulars of the dead interred therein".[519]
599. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 17 GC I.[520]
600. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the Parties must . . . register grave sites, and, as soon as circumstances permit, relay to the affected Party, the exact location of burial and details of death".[521]

National Legislation
601. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall ensure that the necessary measures be taken that: . . . all the information regarding the burial and graves should be registered by the funeral parlour.[522]

602. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[523]
603. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[524]
604. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the

[516] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 12.
[517] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-3.
[518] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[519] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383. [520] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[521] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[522] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 29(3).
[523] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[524] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[525]

National Case-law

605. In 1995, the Colombian Council of State stated that the bodies of enemy dead must be placed at the disposal of the competent authority and may not be concealed. Commanders are bound to report the death of detainees and their place of burial.[526]

Other National Practice

606. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

607. In a resolution adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly called upon parties to armed conflicts, "regardless of their character or location, during and after the end of hostilities and in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, to take such action as may be within their power to help locate . . . the graves of the dead".[527]

Other International Organisations

608. No practice was found.

International Conferences

609. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the tracing of burial places of persons killed during armed conflict in which it recommended "the exchange among National Societies in agreement with their respective Governments and in co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, of all available data concerning these places of burial" and "the tracing, by any appropriate means, of places of burial which have not so far been registered".[528]

610. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the missing and dead in armed conflicts in which it called on parties to armed conflicts "during hostilities and after cessation of hostilities, to help . . . care for the graves of the dead".[529]

[525] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[526] Colombia, Council of State, Case No. 11369, Judgement, 6 February 1997, pp. 20–25.
[527] UN General Assembly, Res. 3220 (XXIX), 6 November 1974, §§ 2 and 4.
[528] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXIII, §§ 1 and 2 .
[529] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. V.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

611. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

612. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

613. No practice was found.

Marking of graves and access to gravesites

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

614. Article 4, fifth paragraph, of the 1929 GC, Article 76, third paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention, Article 17, third paragraph, GC I, Article 120, fourth paragraph, GC III and Article 130, first paragraph, GC IV provide that graves must be marked so that they can easily be found.

615. Article 34 AP I provides that:

> 1. The remains of persons who have died for reasons related to occupation or in detention resulting from occupation or hostilities and those of persons not nationals of the country in which they have died as a result of hostilities shall be respected, and the gravesites of all such persons shall be . . . marked as provided for in Article 130 of the Fourth Convention, where their remains or gravesites would not receive more favourable consideration under the Conventions and this Protocol.
> 2. As soon as circumstances and the relations between the adverse Parties permit, the High Contracting Parties in whose territories graves and, as the case may be, other locations of the remains of persons who have died as a result of hostilities or during occupation or in detention are situated, shall conclude agreements in order:
>   (a) to facilitate access to the gravesites by relatives of the deceased and by representatives of official graves registration services and to regulate the practical arrangements for such access.

Article 34 AP I was adopted by consensus.[530]

616. The 1999 NATO STANAG 2070 provides that:

> 7. Graves are normally located as near as convenient to the scene of death. Sites should be selected as much as possible with reference to ease of subsequent relocation and identification. Graves should not be dispersed. Easy recovery is essential and protection from water is desirable.
> . . .

[530] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.

11. An appropriate (religious) marker high enough to be seen readily is to be erected . . .
12. In the case of trench or group burials a marker and list in a suitable container endorsed accordingly is to be placed at each end of the grave.

Other Instruments

617. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

618. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that graves shall be "marked so that they can always be found".[531]

619. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that the graves of the deceased "are to be correctly marked to allow future exhumation".[532]

620. Benin's Military Manual provides that "the graves shall be marked so that they can be easily found".[533]

621. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "the graves shall be marked so that they can be easily found".[534]

622. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that the grave sites of the dead shall be marked.[535]

623. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that one of the requirements after a conflict is to "mark . . . gravesites".[536]

624. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "the graves shall be marked so that they can be easily found (e.g. improvised wooden cross or similar)".[537]

625. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "graves must be properly . . . marked".[538] It also provides that:

> As soon as circumstances and the relations between the parties to the conflict permit, the parties, in whose territories graves of the persons who have died as a result of hostilities are located, shall conclude agreements in order: to facilitate access to the gravesites by relatives of the deceased and by representatives of official Graves Registration Services.[539]

626. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that grave sites shall be properly marked.[540]

[531] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005.
[532] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.
[533] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[534] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 44, § 163(2).
[535] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 54.
[536] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 21.
[537] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 12.
[538] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VI-2 and VI-3.
[539] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-3.
[540] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1012(1).

627. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "graves shall be marked so that they can always be found".[541]
628. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that graves shall be "respected and marked with a distinctive sign" and "properly maintained and marked".[542]
629. Togo's Military Manual provides that "the graves shall be marked so that they can be easily found".[543]
630. The UK Military Manual provides that graves "must be marked so that they may always be found".[544]
631. The US Field Manual provides that the graves of the dead are "marked so that they may always be found".[545]
632. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook requires that "as soon as circumstances permit, arrangement be made to facilitate access to grave sites by relatives".[546]

National Legislation
633. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "the places of burial of [the dead] . . . are signed with the purpose to find them any time".[547]
634. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[548]
635. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 GC I, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 34 AP I, are punishable offences.[549]
636. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[550]

National Case-law
637. No practice was found.

[541] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[542] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 71(2) and Article 76, commentary.
[543] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[544] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383. [545] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[546] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.4, footnote 19.
[547] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 13(3).
[548] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[549] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[550] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

Other National Practice

638. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support ... the principle that ... the remains of the dead be ... marked ... [and] as soon as circumstances permit, arrangements be made to facilitate access to grave sites by relatives".[551]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

639. In a resolution adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly called upon parties to armed conflicts, "regardless of their character or location, during and after the end of hostilities and in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, to take such action as may be within their power to help ... mark the graves of the dead".[552]

640. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) stated, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that the "graves [of victims should] ... be marked so that they can be easily found".[553]

Other International Organisations

641. No practice was found.

International Conferences

642. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

643. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

644. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "graves shall be ... marked so that they can be easily found".[554]

[551] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.

[552] UN General Assembly, Res. 3220 (XXIX), 6 November 1974, § 2.

[553] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).

[554] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 736.

VI. Other Practice

645. No practice was found.

Identification of the dead after disposal

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
646. Article 4, sixth paragraph, of the 1929 GC provides that "at the commencement of hostilities, [the belligerents] shall organize officially a graves registration service, to render eventual exhumations possible, and to ensure the identification of bodies whatever may be the subsequent site of the grave.
647. Article 17, third paragraph, GC I provides that parties to the conflict "shall organize at the commencement of hostilities an Official Graves Registration Service, to allow subsequent exhumation and to ensure the identification of bodies, whatever the site of the graves".
648. According to Article 34(4) AP I, exhumation is allowed only where it is "a matter of overriding public necessity, including cases of investigative necessity". Article 34 AP I was adopted by consensus.[555]

Other Instruments
649. Proposal 1.2 of the 1991 Plan of Operation for the Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains in the context of the former Yugoslavia provides that, "at the request of the party on which the deceased depend, the parties to the conflict shall . . . allow the identification of the [mortal remains of the] deceased by the adverse party". Proposal 1.3 provides that "by mutual agreement, the parties may decide on the participation of foreign medical experts in identifying the deceased".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
650. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "an official Graves Registration Service must be established from the commencement of hostilities in order to allow possible exhumations, to ensure the identity of the bodies".[556]
651. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that the graves "are to be correctly marked to allow future exhumation".[557]
652. The UK Military Manual provides that "Graves Registration Services must be officially established at the outbreak of hostilities, to allow of

[555] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71, § 36.
[556] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 6.05.
[557] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.

exhumations and to ensure the identification of the bodies and their possible transportation to the home country".[558]

653. The US Field Manual provides that the belligerents "shall organize at the commencement of hostilities an Official Graves Registration Service, to allow subsequent exhumations and to ensure the identification of bodies, whatever the site of the graves, and the possible transportation to the home country".[559]

National Legislation

654. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[560]

655. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 17 GC I, and of AP I, including violations of Article 34(4) AP I, are punishable offences.[561]

656. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[562]

National Case-law

657. According the Report on the Practice of Israel, in the Abu-Rijwa case, the IDF carried out DNA identification tests on the remains of two "terrorists" buried in Israel at the request of a Jordanian family who petitioned the Israeli High Court in 1992 for the purpose of repatriating the remains of their son.[563]

Other National Practice

658. The Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina states that:

During the aggression on Bosnia and Herzegovina, a large number of persons were registered as missing and the tracing process is still ongoing. It is assumed that the majority of the missing persons were killed by the aggressor and thrown into mass graves in different locations ... The State Commission for the Exchange of Prisoners of War has undertaken huge efforts to locate mass graves, to exhume and identify bodies of innocent victims. Allegations of mass graves are received from eyewitnesses of the committed massacres.[564]

[558] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 383.
[559] US, Field Manual (1956), § 218.
[560] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[561] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[562] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[563] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.1, referring to High Court, Abu-Rijwa case, Judgement, 15 November 2000.
[564] Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2000, Chapter 5.2.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

659. In a resolution adopted in 1996 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed the establishment of the Expert Group on Exhumation and Missing Persons chaired by the Office of the High Representative.[565]

660. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that the Croatian authorities identify all those killed, including by exhumation, which, whenever necessary, should be carried out under the supervision of international experts.[566]

661. In 1996, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, in a briefing on the investigation of violations of international law,noted that a project was arranged by the Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the former Yugoslavia, in coordination with the Expert on Missing Persons, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and the governments of Finland and the Netherlands, to recover and identify remains of the dead in a particular area, with the humanitarian aim of identifying persons for the sake of their relatives. The Expert emphasised the problem of mass graves and called upon the parties and the international community to intensify efforts to clarify the fate of missing persons using every possible means, including exhumation of mortal remains where necessary.[567]

662. In 1997, the Expert for the Special Process on Missing Persons in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia drew the attention of the UN Commission on Human Rights to the fact that "governments were apparently growing less hostile to the use of forensic methods to elucidate the fate of disappeared persons".[568] The UN Observer for Croatia further commented that "the exhumation of [certain] mass graves . . . which had resulted in the exhumation and identification of the remains of some 200 disappeared persons [was] a step in the right direction".[569]

663. In 1996, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina reported that national authorities and international mechanisms and organisations dealing with the issue of mass

[565] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, preamble.

[566] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/6, 5 July 1995, § 59.

[567] Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Briefing on Progress Reached in Investigation of Violations of International Law in the Areas of Srebrenica, Žepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1034 (1995), 22 August 1996, §§ 9–12.

[568] Expert for the Special Process on Missing Persons in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, 26 March 1997, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/SR.25, 13 May 1997, § 9.

[569] UN Observer for Croatia, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, 26 March 1997, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/SR.25, 13 May 1997, § 17.

graves had undertaken considerable efforts towards establishing the fate of the dead bodies found in mass grave sites.[570]

Other International Organisations
664. No practice was found.

International Conferences
665. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the tracing of burial places of persons killed during armed conflict in which it recommended "recourse, in the event of exhumation, to all possible identification procedures with the help of specialist services".[571]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

666. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

667. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

668. No practice was found.

Information concerning the dead

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
669. Article 4, second paragraph, of the 1929 GC provides that belligerents "shall establish and transmit to each other the certificates of death".
670. Article 16 GC I provides for the communication, exchange and mutual forwarding of certificates of death, cause of death, identity discs, lists showing the exact location and markings of the graves and other important documents through the Information Bureau described in Article 122 GC III. In this respect, Article 17 GC I provides for the establishment of an Official Graves Registration Service. Articles 19 GC II, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV contain similar provisions.
671. Article 33 AP I provides that:

> 2. In order to facilitate the gathering of information pursuant to the preceding paragraph, each Party to the conflict shall, with respect to persons who would not receive more favourable consideration under the Conventions and this Protocol:

[570] High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/542, 10 July 1996, Annex, § 41.
[571] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXIII, § 3.

(a) record the information specified in Article 138 of the Fourth Convention in respect of . . . persons who have . . . died during any period of detention;
(b) to the fullest extent possible, facilitate and, if need be, carry out the search for and the recording of information concerning such persons if they have died in other circumstances as a result of hostilities or occupation.

Article 33 AP I was adopted by consensus.[572]

672. Paragraph 9 of the 1974 NATO STANAG 2132 describes the "procedure for reporting on allied patients to parent nations". Paragraph 10 states that "in the case of death of a member of NATO forces if examined by a medical officer, the medical officer should determine the cause of death and report . . . to the deceased's parent nation".

Other Instruments

673. In proposal 1.1 of the 1991 Plan of Operation for the Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains, the parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia agreed that they "shall provide to the adverse party/parties, through the intermediary of the ICRC and National Information Bureaux and, as rapidly as possible, all available information regarding: the identification of deceased persons [and] the gravesites of deceased persons belonging to the adverse parties".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

674. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "one half of a double identity disc or the whole disc if it is a single disc, shall remain on the body".[573] It also states that "when circumstances so permit and at latest at the end of the hostilities, [the obituary] services shall communicate to each other, through the Information Office . . . the lists indicating . . . the details relative to the dead".[574]

675. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "each of the protagonists shall record the following information for each person detained, imprisoned or otherwise held in captivity for a period of two weeks, or who has died".[575] The manual further states that "bodies shall be buried with one half of a double identity disc placed in the mouth of the deceased. The other half is to be kept for records by Graves Registration".[576]

[572] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[573] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 6.03 and 6.04.
[574] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 6.05.
[575] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 997.
[576] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 999.

676. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that "the belligerents are obliged to exchange the information collected about the dead of the adverse party under their power".[577]

677. Benin's Military Manual states that "one half of a double identity disc should remain on the body; the other half should be evacuated".[578]

678. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions impose certain obligations on Detaining Powers with regard to burial and reporting of dead personnel belonging to the adverse party".[579] It further states that "one half of a double disc, or the identity disc itself if it is a single disc, should remain on the body".[580]

679. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "one half of the double identity disc, or the identity disc itself if it is a single disc, should remain with the body".[581]

680. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that, with respect to the dead on land with a single identity disc, the disc shall remain on the body or with the urn containing the ashes. The single identity disc of dead at sea shall be evacuated. With respect to the dead bearing a double identity disc (on land and at sea), one half shall remain on the body or with the urn containing the ashes and the other half evacuated.[582]

681. France's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 17 GC I.[583] The manual also provides for the creation of a national information bureau, which would be in liaison with the Central Information Agency.[584]

682. Hungary's Military Manual provides that with respect to the dead on land with a single identity disc, the disc shall remain on the body or with the urn containing the ashes. The single identity disc of dead at sea shall be evacuated. With respect to the dead bearing a double identity disc (on land and at sea), one half shall remain on the body or with the urn containing the ashes and the other half evacuated.[585]

683. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, "it is incumbent on each party to keep a record of a fallen soldier's personal details and particulars of death, and hand over to the other side half of the dog-tag worn by the fallen soldier . . . as well as a death certificate".[586]

684. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that:

Identity cards shall be evacuated. With respect to the dead bearing a double identity disc, one half shall remain on the body (or with the urn containing the ashes) and

[577] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 49.
[578] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[579] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-5, § 51.
[580] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 57.
[581] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 5.
[582] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 47.
[583] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 121.
[584] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 34.
[585] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 77.
[586] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.

the other half evacuated. With respect to the dead with a single identity disc, the whole disc shall remain on the body (or with the urn containing the ashes)... As soon as the tactical situation permits, a report on the death and the subsequent measures taken shall be established.[587]

685. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "information concerning the identification of the... dead must be recorded".[588]

686. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "the belligerents have to register as soon as possible all the particulars that can help to identify an enemy soldier who is... dead. These registration records together with identification tags, documents... must be forwarded to the enemy."[589]

687. The Military Instructions of the Philippines provides that, upon evacuation of the deceased to the nearest morgue, "the next of kin if at all possible" should be informed.[590]

688. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that, in situations of internal troubles, "the dead shall be identified. This information shall be sent to civil authorities. Red Cross or Red Crescent organisations are entitled to collect such information."[591]

689. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "half of the double identity disc, or the whole disc if single, shall remain on the body".[592] It further states that "all elements helping to identify the... dead enemy... shall be recorded and communicated without delay to the Official Information Office".[593] The information to be collected includes, for instance, the date and place of death, indications concerning the death and all other information on the identity card or the half of a double identity disc.[594]

690. Togo's Military Manual states that "one half of a double identity disc should remain on the body; the other half should be evacuated".[595]

691. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> Belligerents must record as soon as possible any particulars which may assist in the identification of dead persons belonging to the opposing belligerent who fall into their hands. This information must be forwarded to the information bureau described in the P.O.W. Convention, Article 122. The belligerents must also forward to each other through that bureau certificates of death or duly authenticated lists of the dead; one half of the identity discs found on the bodies (the other half to be left on the body)...[596]

[587] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, pp. 11 and 12.
[588] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 23.
[589] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[590] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), p. 27, § 4.
[591] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 18, § 6.
[592] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 76, commentary.
[593] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 77.
[594] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 77, commentary.
[595] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[596] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 382; see also LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 4.

692. The US Field Manual provides that:

As soon as possible the . . . information [recorded by the parties to the conflict on the dead person of the adverse party] shall be forwarded to the Information Bureau described in Article 122 GC I, which shall transmit this information to the Power on which these persons depend . . . Parties to the conflict shall prepare and forward to each other through the same bureau, certificates of death or duly authenticated lists of the dead.[597]

National Legislation

693. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall ensure that the necessary measures be taken that:

. . .

3) . . . all the information regarding the burial and graves should be registered by the funeral parlour;
4) the list of the graves and all information concerning the prisoners of war buried in the cemeteries and other places should be given to the party the prisoners of war belong to.[598]

694. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[599]

695. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 16 and 17 GC I, 19 GC II, 120 GC III and 130 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 33(2) AP I, are punishable offences.[600]

696. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "the Government of the King, in the way it considers appropriate, will make available to the enemy State news of the death of people belonging to the latter's armed forces as well as the objects mentioned above".[601]

697. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[602]

[597] US, Field Manual (1956), § 217; see also Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[598] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 29(3)–(4).
[599] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[600] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[601] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 94.
[602] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

National Case-law
698. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
699. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, "unidentified bodies are briefly described (e.g. by age, sex, any distinguishing feature) and buried. Lists are made available to interested parties indicating burial sites of the unidentified dead."[603]
700. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines notes that it is the practice in the Philippines during clashes between government troops and insurgent forces for the military to account for the number of dead insurgents and of those taken prisoner. The information collected is then passed on to the authorities with a view to transmitting the names of the missing to the rebel side. This notification is, however, frequently subject to delay.[604]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
701. In a resolution adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly stated that:

> Recognizing that one of the tragic results of armed conflicts is the lack of information on persons – civilians as well as combatants – who are missing or dead in armed conflicts.
>
> Noting with satisfaction the resolution V, adopted by the twenty-second International Conference of the Red Cross held at Teheran from 28 October to 15 November 1973, calling on parties to armed conflicts to accomplish the humanitarian task of accounting for the dead . . .
>
> Considering that . . . the provision of information on those who are missing . . . should not be delayed . . .
>
> Calls upon all parties to armed conflicts to cooperate, in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, with protecting Powers or their substitutes, and with the ICRC, in providing information on the missing and dead in armed conflicts, including persons belonging to other countries not parties to the armed conflict.[605]

702. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights urged the Indonesian authorities, on humanitarian grounds to cooperate with the families of victims of the fighting in East Timor by providing information about the dead and the whereabouts of their remains.[606]
703. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that the Croatian authorities identify all those killed and

[603] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[604] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 5.4, referring to Human Rights Update, Soldiers detain, torture 5 civilians, Vol. 10(8), November–December 1996.
[605] UN General Assembly, Res. 3220 (XXIX), 6 November 1974, preamble and § 4.
[606] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/20, 27 August 1992, § 7.

provide information to the families about the causes of death and the place of burial.[607]

704. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that "for every deceased person who falls into the hands of the adverse party, the adverse party must record, prepare, and forward all identification information, death certificates . . . to the appropriate parties".[608]

Other International Organisations

705. No practice was found.

International Conferences

706. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the missing and dead in armed conflicts in which it recognised that "one of the tragic consequences of armed conflicts is a lack of information on persons missing, killed or deceased in captivity". The Conference further called on parties to conflicts to:

> co-operate with Protecting Powers, with the ICRC and its Central Tracing Agency, and with such other appropriate bodies as may be established for this purpose, and in particular National Red Cross Societies, to accomplish the humanitarian mission of accounting for the dead and missing, including those belonging to third countries not parties to the armed conflict.[609]

707. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on the wearing of identity discs in which it recalled that Articles 16 and 17 GC I "provide for identity discs to be worn by members of the armed forces to facilitate . . . the communication of their deaths to the Power on which they depend". The Conference further stated that it "reminds the Parties to an armed conflict that one half of each disc must, in case of death, be detached and sent back to the Power on which the member of the armed forces depended, the other half remaining on the body".[610]

708. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 urged the parties to every international armed conflict "to implement the provisions of Articles 16 and 17 of the First Geneva Convention, prescribing the wearing of identity discs by members of the armed forces, in order to facilitate the

[607] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/6, 5 July 1995, § 59.
[608] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).
[609] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. V.
[610] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. I, § 3.

forwarding of information concerning [the dead] to the Power on which they depend".[611]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

709. In its judgement in the Velásquez Rodríguez case in 1988, the IACtHR found that the State was obliged to use the means at its disposal to inform the relatives of the location of the remains of the dead.[612]
710. In its judgement in the Godínez Cruz case in 1989, the IACtHR stated that, where a person has been killed as a result of a disappearance, the State had an obligation to inform the relatives of the location of the remains.[613]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

711. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

712. No practice was found.

[611] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XIII, § 1.
[612] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, § 181.
[613] IACtHR, Godínez Cruz case, Judgement, 20 January 1989, § 191.

CHAPTER 36

MISSING PERSONS

Note: For practice concerning enforced disappearance, see Chapter 32, section K. For practice concerning accounting for the dead, see Chapter 35, section E. For practice concerning the recording and notification of personal details of persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, section F.

Accounting for Missing Persons

Search for missing persons

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Paragraph 5 of the 1956 Joint Declaration on Soviet-Japanese Relations states that "with regard to those Japanese whose fate is unknown, the USSR, at the request of Japan, will continue its effort to discover what has happened to them".

2. Article 33 AP I provides that:

> 1. As soon as circumstances permit, and at the latest from the end of active hostilities, each Party to the conflict shall search for the persons who have been reported missing by the adverse Party. Such adverse Party shall transmit all relevant information concerning such persons in order to facilitate such searches.
> 2. In order to facilitate the gathering of information pursuant to the preceding paragraph, each Party to the conflict shall, with respect to persons who would not receive more favourable consideration under the Conventions and this Protocol:

a) record the information specified in Article 138 of the Fourth Convention in respect of such persons who have been detained, imprisoned or otherwise held in captivity for more than two weeks as a result of hostilities or occupation, or who have died during any period of detention;
b) to the fullest extent possible, facilitate and, if need be, carry out the search for and the recording of information concerning such persons if they have died in other circumstances as a result of hostilities or occupation.

Article 33 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]

Other Instruments

3. In Article XIX of the 1994 Agreement on the Gaza Strip, the government of Israel and the PLO agreed that:

> The Palestinian Authority shall cooperate with Israel by providing all necessary assistance in the conduct of searches by Israel within the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area for missing Israelis ... Israel shall cooperate with the Palestinian Authority in searching for ... missing Palestinians.

4. Article 4(9) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, to search for ... missing persons".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

5. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "at all times, particularly after an engagement, the parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures to search for ... missing persons".[2]

6. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "as soon as possible each party to an armed conflict must search for those reported missing by the enemy". It adds that "in order to facilitate the search for missing combatants ... each protagonist shall record ... information for each person detained, imprisoned or otherwise held in captivity for a period of two weeks, or who has died".[3]

7. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "as soon as possible, and certainly immediately upon the end of hostilities, each party to the conflict must search for those reported missing by the adverse party".[4] The manual further states that "to facilitate the finding of missing personnel, parties to the conflict shall endeavour to reach agreements to allow teams to search for ... the dead from the battlefield areas".[5]

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[2] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.05, see also § 6.01.
[3] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 994, 996 and 997.
[4] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-5, § 52.
[5] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-5, § 53.

8. Croatia's LOAC Compendium instructs local commanders to offer their assistance to the civil authorities in the search for missing persons.[6]
9. Hungary's Military Manual provides that one of the requirements after a conflict is to "search for missing persons".[7]
10. Indonesia's Military Manual provides that "the parties to the conflict should search for missing persons, who are reported by the adverse party, soon after the hostilities cease".[8]
11. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that according to the Additional Protocols, "each party must ... search for missing persons of the enemy and try to reach arrangements for the dispatch of search teams".[9]
12. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "as soon as circumstances permit or, at least, at the end of active hostilities, each Party to the conflict must search for persons who have been reported missing by the adverse Party".[10]
13. Madagascar's Military Manual states that missing persons must be searched for.[11]
14. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "as soon as circumstances permit, and at the latest from the end of active hostilities, each Party to the conflict shall search for the persons who have been reported missing by an adverse Party".[12]
15. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "as soon as possible, and certainly immediately upon the end of hostilities, each party to the conflict must search for those reported missing by the adverse Party".[13]
16. Spain's LOAC Manual states that the relevant provisions relating to the dead apply also to the missing. It also states that "the belligerents shall search for the persons whose disappearance has been notified by the adverse party, who shall communicate all the relevant information concerning them".[14]

National Legislation
17. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall begin the tracing of the persons considered to be missing by the adverse party to the conflict at the first opportunity and at the latest as soon as active military operations are over ...
>
> The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall ensure that the necessary measures be taken that:

[6] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 50, see also p. 21.
[7] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 38.
[8] Indonesia, Military Manual (1982), § 98.
[9] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.
[10] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 14, see also Précis No. 3, p. 13.
[11] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 8-SO, § C, see also Fiche No. 1-T, § 22(3).
[12] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-3.
[13] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1011(2).
[14] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.d.2.(6).

1) information is collected and registered concerning the missing person in all cases irrespective of whether they are detained, in prison or dead.[15]

18. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 33 AP I, are punishable offences.[16]

19. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[17]

20. In Zimbabwe, domestic legislation on missing persons outside armed conflict empowers judicial officers to compel police officers to search for a missing person. The Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe states that this demonstrates that the authorities in Zimbabwe believe that missing persons, even in armed conflict, should be searched for.[18]

National Case-law

21. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

22. The Report on the Practice of Botswana states that there is a duty on all parties to armed conflicts to search for persons reported missing.[19]

23. The main task of the Commission for Tracing Persons Missing in War Activities in the Republic of Croatia, established by the Croatian government in 1991, was to collect and process the information about civil and other persons missing from the territory of Croatia during the war. In 1993, a new Commission, the Commission for Detained and Missing Persons, replaced the one established in 1991, yet with the same task.[20]

24. At the CDDH, the FRG stated that the draft rule that each party to the conflict should try to obtain information on missing persons would meet a "fundamental humanitarian need, which was not yet fully and explicitly covered by existing treaty obligations".[21]

[15] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 28 and 29(1).
[16] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(4).
[17] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[18] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 5.2, referring to Missing Persons Act as amended (1978),Section 4.
[19] Report on the Practice of Botswana, 1998, Chapter 5.2.
[20] Croatia, Directive on the Establishment and Functioning of the Commission for Tracing Persons Missing in War Activities in the Republic of Croatia, 1991; Regulations establishing the Commission for Detained and Missing Persons in Croatia, Official Gazette, No. 46, 17 May 1993.
[21] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XI, CDDH/II/SR.19, 13 February 1975, p. 186, § 79–80.

25. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina, the German representative noted that his delegation had taken the initiative in the Security Council to push for measures to be taken to establish the whereabouts of missing Bosnian men.[22]

26. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, it is the policy of the Israeli authorities to conduct ongoing searches for members of the IDF who are missing in action.[23]

27. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Jordan recognises that it has a special duty to search for persons reported missing.[24]

28. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, it is the opinio juris of Kuwait that missing persons must be searched for in order to establish their fate and enable their return.[25]

29. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, search operations for missing persons are initiated upon receipt of information on the missing person and continue for seven years.[26]

30. In 1988, in a report on Measures of Implementation of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands stated that "the National Information Bureau has a plan for the organization of searches" with regard to missing persons.[27]

31. According to the Report on the Practice of Peru, during the international armed conflict between Peru and Ecuador in 1995, Peru carried out search and rescue operations to recover missing Peruvian aircraft crews.[28]

32. According to the Report on the Practice of Russia, a great effort has been made to determine the fate of Japanese persons who were reported missing in the USSR, but only during the period of perestroika. The Joint Soviet-Japanese Commission and the Japanese Union of ex-Prisoners have made some progress in this field.[29] According to the report, there are no specific rules in Russia or in other CIS countries to regulate the search for missing persons. In practice, private organisations have assumed State functions. Representatives of the Soldiers' Mothers Committee, for example, have gone to Chechnya with the mothers of missing soldiers to find out what happened to their sons.[30]

33. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that . . . each party to a conflict should search

[22] Germany, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, pp. 2–3.
[23] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.2.
[24] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.2.
[25] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 5.2.
[26] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.2.
[27] Netherlands, Measures of Implementation of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols, annexed to Letter dated 20 December 1988 from the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Permanent Mission of the Netherlands in Geneva for submission to the ICRC, Comments on Article 33 AP I.
[28] Report on the Practice of Peru, 1999, Chapter 5.2.
[29] Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, General Notes.
[30] Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, Chapter 5.2.

areas under its control for persons reported missing, when circumstances permit, and at the latest from the end of active hostilities".[31]

34. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina, the US stated, with respect to the civilians missing and unaccounted for, that "we have a responsibility to investigate, to find out what we can".[32]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

35. In 1996, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council expressed concern that endeavours by the relevant international authorities to identify the fate of the missing by, inter alia, carrying out exhumations had met with limited success "largely due to obstruction by Republika Srpska". It also noted with concern that the fate of only a few hundred missing persons had so far been established.[33]

36. In a resolution adopted in 1987 on the question of human rights in Cyprus, the UN Commission on Human Rights called for the tracing of missing persons without further delay.[34]

37. In a resolution on missing persons adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "each party to an armed conflict, as soon as circumstances permit and at the latest from the end of active hostilities, shall search for the persons who have been reported missing by an adverse party". The Commission further called upon "States which are parties to an armed conflict to take immediate steps to determine the identity and fate of persons reported missing in connection with the armed conflict". It also requested that States "pay the utmost attention to cases of children reported missing in connection with armed conflicts and to take appropriate measures to search for and identify those children".[35]

38. In 1995, the chairman of the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the government of Indonesia to continue its investigation into those persons missing as a result of incidents in Dili.[36]

[31] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.

[32] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3564, 10 August 1995, p. 6.

[33] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/41, 10 October 1996, p. 1.

[34] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1987/50, 11 March 1987, p. 113, § 3.

[35] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/60, 25 April 2002, §§ 3–5.

[36] UN Commission on Human Rights, Chairman's statement on the situation of human rights in East Timor, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/SR.49, 1 March 1995, § 27(4).

39. In resolutions adopted in 1984 and 1985, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights urged that the fate of disappeared persons in the context of the conflict in Guatemala be clarified.[37]
40. In a resolution adopted in 1987, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the fate of the missing in Cyprus and urged the immediate tracing of these persons.[38]
41. In 1996, the Expert for the Special Process on Missing Persons in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia called upon the parties and the international community to intensify their efforts to clarify the fate of missing persons using every possible means, including exhumation of mortal remains where necessary.[39]

Other International Organisations
42. In a recommendation adopted in 1983 on the situation in Cyprus, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe asked the Committee of Ministers to instruct the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe to undertake all necessary steps to gather information on the events in Cyprus and to investigate the cases of those persons who had disappeared following the invasion by armed forces in 1974.[40]
43. In a recommendation adopted in 1987 on national refugees and missing persons in Cyprus, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged the Committee of Ministers to support every effort made to investigate the fate of missing persons.[41]
44. In a recommendation adopted in 1998 on the humanitarian situation of the Kurdish refugees and displaced persons in south-eastern Turkey and northern Iraq, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited Turkey to bring to light the fate of missing persons.[42]

International Conferences
45. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "every effort is made to clarify the fate of all persons unaccounted for".[43]

[37] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1984/23, 29 August 1984; Res. 1985/28, 30 August 1985, § 2.
[38] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1987/19, 2 September 1987, § 2.
[39] Expert for the Special Process on Missing Persons in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia, Statement during a briefing on progress reached in investigation of violations of international law in the areas of Srebrenica, epa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most pursuant to UN Security Council resolution 1034 (1995), Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, 22 August 1996, §§ 12–13.
[40] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 974, 5 November 1983, p. 81.
[41] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1056, 5 May 1987, § 7.
[42] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1377, 25 June 1998, § iv.
[43] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(e).

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

46. In the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found that, in relation to Greek-Cypriot missing persons and their relatives:

> There has been a continuing violation of Article 2 [of the 1950 ECHR] on account of the failure of the authorities of the respondent State [Turkey] to conduct an effective investigation aimed at clarifying the whereabouts and fate of Greek-Cypriot missing persons who disappeared in life-threatening circumstances ...
>
> There has been a continuing violation of Article 5 of the Convention [of the 1950 ECHR] by virtue of the failure of the authorities of the respondent State [Turkey] to conduct an effective investigation into the whereabouts and fate of the missing Greek-Cypriot persons in respect of whom there is an arguable claim that they were in custody at the time they disappeared.[44]

47. In the Caballero Delgada and Santana case before the IACtHR in 1995, the government of Colombia submitted evidence that it had made several unsuccessful attempts to recover the remains of two missing persons.[45]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

48. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "each belligerent shall search for the persons who have been reported missing by an enemy Party. Such enemy Party shall transmit all relevant information concerning these persons in order to facilitate the searches."[46]

VI. Other Practice

49. According to a 1984 report of the Fédération Internationale des Droits de l'Homme (FIDH), the Lebanese government has established a commission on missing and kidnapped persons.[47]

50. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, to search for ... missing persons".[48]

[44] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, §§ 136 and 150.
[45] IACtHR, Caballero Delgado and Santana case, Judgement, 8 December 1995, § 51.
[46] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 260.
[47] Fédération Internationale des Droits de l'Homme, Liban: Le problème des disparus, La lettre de la F.I.D.H., No. 42, 27 January 1984.
[48] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 13, IRRC, No. 282, p. 335.

Provision of information on missing persons

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

51. Article 14 of the 1899 HR provides that:

A bureau for information relative to prisoners of war is instituted, on the commencement of hostilities, in each of the belligerent States, and, when necessary, in the neutral countries on whose territory belligerents have been received. This bureau is intended to answer all inquiries about prisoners of war, and is furnished by the various services concerned with all the necessary information to enable it to keep an individual return for each prisoner of war. It is kept informed of internments and changes, as well as of admissions into hospital and deaths.

52. Article 14 of the 1907 HR provides that:

An inquiry office for prisoners of war is instituted on the commencement of hostilities in each of the belligerent States, and, when necessary, in neutral countries which have received belligerents in their territory. It is the function of this office to reply to all inquiries about the prisoners. It receives from the various services concerned full information respecting internments arid transfers, releases on parole, exchanges, escapes, admissions into hospital, deaths, as well as other information necessary to enable it to make out and keep up to date an individual return for each prisoner of war. The office must state in this return the regimental number, name and surname, age, place of origin, rank, unit, wounds, date and place of capture, internment, wounding, and death, as well as any observations of a special character. The individual return shall be sent to the Government of the other belligerent after the conclusion of peace.

53. Article 122, first paragraph, GC III and Article 136, second paragraph, GC IV provide that "each of the Parties to the conflict shall establish an official Information Bureau responsible for transmitting information in respect of [the POWs and protected persons] who are in its power". Article 122, third paragraph, GC III and Article 137, first paragraph, GC IV provide that each Information Bureau shall transmit this information to the Powers of whom the persons are nationals, through the Protecting Powers or the Central Information Agency.

54. Article 33(1) AP I provides that, in order to facilitate the search, each party shall transmit all relevant information concerning the persons it has reported missing. Article 33(3) provides that:

Information concerning persons reported missing pursuant to paragraph 1 and requests for such information shall be transmitted either directly or through the Protecting Power or the Central Tracing Agency of the International Committee of the Red Cross or national Red Cross (Red Crescent, Red Lion and Sun) Societies. Where the information is not transmitted through the International Committee of the Red Cross and its Central Tracing Agency, each Party to the conflict shall ensure that such information is also supplied to the Central Tracing Agency.

Article 33 AP I was adopted by consensus.[49]

55. According to Article 5 of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords, "the Parties shall provide information through the tracing mechanisms of the ICRC on all persons unaccounted for".

56. Under Article 6 of the 1996 Agreement on the Normalization of Relations between Croatia and the FRY, the parties undertook to speed up the process of solving the question of missing persons and agreed to immediately exchange all available information about these persons.

Other Instruments

57. In Article XIX of the 1994 Agreement on the Gaza Strip, the government of Israel and the PLO agreed that "the Palestinian Authority shall cooperate with Israel by providing . . . information about missing Israelis. Israel shall cooperate with the Palestinian Authority in . . . providing necessary information about missing Palestinians."

58. In the 1996 Protocol to the Moscow Agreement on a Cease-fire in Chechnya to Locate Missing Persons and to Free Forcibly Detained Persons, the working groups decided that:

5. The competence of the joint working group shall extend to the location of persons who have been missing since 11 December 1994 . . .
6. By 11 June 1996, the working groups shall exchange lists of forcibly detained persons.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

59. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that "information recorded shall be communicated as soon as possible to the National Office provided for, so that it can be transmitted to the adverse party, in particular through the Central Tracing Agency of the International Committee of the Red Cross".[50]

60. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "any request and all information which may assist in tracing or identifying [missing] persons shall be transmitted through the Protecting Power or the Central Tracing Agency of the ICRC or the national Red Cross societies".[51] The manual further states that "the report of a missing person is to be notified by each belligerents' National Bureau direct, or through a Protecting Power to the Central Agency of the ICRC".[52]

61. Canada's LOAC Manual states that "the requests and all information which may assist in tracing or identifying [missing] persons shall be transmitted

[49] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[50] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 6.02.
[51] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 994.
[52] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 996.

through the Protecting Power or the Central Tracing Agency of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) or the national Red Cross societies".[53]

62. Germany's Military Manual provides that "each of the Parties to the conflict is obliged to forward information regarding the fate of protected civilians ... as well as of prisoners of war ... wounded, sick, shipwrecked, and dead".[54]

63. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that:

> An important task of the Netherlands Red Cross is the establishment of a National Information Bureau. The task of this bureau consists of the collection and transmission, in cooperation with the Central Tracing Agency of the ICRC, of information about prisoners of war and other protected persons.[55]

64. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the requests and all information which may assist in tracing or identifying [missing] persons shall be transmitted through the Protecting Power or the Central Tracing Agency of the International Committee of the Red Cross or the national Red Cross societies".[56] The manual further states that:

> Each national Bureau must forward without delay information concerning protected persons to the Power of which such persons are nationals or in whose territory they formerly resided ... The national Bureau must also reply to all enquiries concerning protected persons unless sending such information would be detrimental to the person concerned or to his relatives. Even then the information must be given to the Central Agency.[57]

65. Russia's Military Manual recalls the rule of IHL, "which set the obligation: a) in peacetime: ... to provide for a set of measures relating to the organisation of tracing, registration of and reporting of missing persons, and also of a service to implement these measures".[58]

66. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 122 GC III and 136 and 137 GC IV.[59]

National Legislation

67. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> In order to further trace such persons [considered to be missing by the adverse party], information concerning them shall be given to the adverse party directly through the Protecting Power or their substitute – the ICRC ...

[53] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-5, § 52.
[54] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 538 and 708.
[55] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. II-10, § 9.
[56] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1011(2).
[57] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1134(2).
[58] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 14.
[59] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 203, 343 and 344.

The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of the Azerbaijan Republic shall ensure that the necessary measures be taken that:

...

2) correct information concerning the missing and requests about them are given to the adverse party directly through the Protecting Power or their substitute – the International Committee of the Red Cross.[60]

68. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[61]

69. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 122 GC III and 136 and 137 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 33(1) and (3) AP I, are punishable offences.[62]

70. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[63]

National Case-law

71. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

72. According to the Report on the Practice of Algeria, in the late 1950s, during the Algerian war of independence, the ALN denied all responsibility for missing persons on the basis that it had systematically released all prisoners.[64]

73. In 1988, in a report on the Measures of Implementation of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands stated that "the National Information Bureau has a plan for the ... registration and communication of information" with regard to missing persons.[65]

74. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that it is the practice of the Philippines during clashes between government troops and insurgent

[60] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 28 and 29(2).

[61] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

[62] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

[63] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

[64] Report on the Practice of Algeria, 1997, Chapter 5.2, referring to Farouk Benatïa, Les actions humanitaires pendant la lutte de libération (1954–1962), Editions Dahlab, Algiers, 1997, pp. 119–126.

[65] Netherlands, Measures of Implementation of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols, annexed to Letter dated 20 December 1988 from the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Permanent Mission of the Netherlands in Geneva for submission to the ICRC, 20 December 1988, Comments on Article 33 AP I.

forces for the military to account for the number of dead insurgents and of those taken prisoner. The information collected is then passed on to the authorities with a view to transmitting the names of the missing to the rebel side. This notification is, however, frequently subject to delay.[66]

75. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that the parties to all armed conflicts should take such action as may be within their power to provide information about missing persons.[67]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

76. In a resolution adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly called upon parties to armed conflicts, "regardless of their character or location, during and after the end of hostilities, and in accordance with the Geneva Conventions of 1949, to take such action as may be within their power . . . to provide information about those who are missing in action".[68]

77. In resolution adopted in 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly called upon the authorities of the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro) "to provide information on the fate and whereabouts of the high number of missing persons from Kosovo".[69]

78. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all the parties in the former Yugoslavia to disclose relevant information and documentation concerning thousands of missing persons.[70]

79. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the special process dealing with the problem of missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights emphasised the obligation contained in the 1995 Dayton Accords to disclose all relevant information concerning missing persons.[71]

80. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon Croatia to disclose all relevant material on missing persons.[72]

81. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the situation in East Timor, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights urged the government of Indonesia to provide information on those persons who were reported missing following incidents in Dili.[73]

[66] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 5.2, referring to "Soldiers Detain and Torture 5 Civilians", Human Rights Update, Vol. 10(8), November–December 1996.
[67] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.2.
[68] UN General Assembly, Res. 3220 (XXIX), 6 November 1974, § 2.
[69] UN General Assembly, Res. 54/183, 17 December 1999, § 18.
[70] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 23.
[71] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/35, 3 March 1995, §§ 2–5.
[72] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/79, 22 April 1998, §§ 37 and 42.
[73] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/20, 27 August 1992, § 6.

82. In 1996, its report to the 50th Session of the UN General Assembly, the UNHCR Executive Committee expressed "its utmost concern for the fate of . . . missing persons within and from the territory of the former Yugoslavia" and reiterated "the urgent appeals by the international community . . . to provide full information on the fate of those unaccounted for.[74]

Other International Organisations

83. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation in some parts of the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe demanded information about the whereabouts of 5,000 Bosnian Muslims from Srebrenica.[75]

84. In a recommendation adopted in 1998, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe recommended that the Committee of Ministers urge the parties to the conflict in Kosovo to provide information about missing persons.[76]

85. In a resolution adopted in 1990, the European Parliament condemned the continuing lack of information on persons missing on both sides following the invasion of Cyprus in 1974 and calling for the immediate provision of information on the fate of these persons.[77]

International Conferences

86. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the missing and dead in armed conflicts in which it recognised that "one of the tragic consequences of armed conflicts is a lack of information on persons missing, killed or deceased in captivity" and called on "parties to armed conflicts, during hostilities and after cessation of hostilities . . . to provide information about those who are missing in action". The Conference further called on parties to conflicts to:

> co-operate with Protecting Powers, with the ICRC and its Central Tracing Agency, and with such other appropriate bodies as may be established for this purpose, and in particular National Red Cross Societies, to accomplish the humanitarian mission of accounting for the dead and missing, including those belonging to third countries not parties to the armed conflict.[78]

87. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 emphasized that "family reunification must begin with the tracing of separated family members at the request of one of them and end with their coming together as a family" and stressed "the particular vulnerability of children separated from their families as a result of armed conflict, and invites [74] UNHCR, Addendum to the Report to the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/50/12/Add.1, 1 January 1996, § 31(a) and (f).

[75] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1066, 27 September 1995, p. 2, § 6.
[76] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1385, 24 September 1998, § 7(iii)(a).
[77] European Parliament, Resolution on the violation of human rights in Cyprus, 12 July 1990, §§ D and 2.
[78] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. V.

the ICRC, the National Societies and the International Federation, within the scope of their respective mandates, to intensify their efforts to locate unaccompanied children, to identify them, to re-establish contact and reunite them with their families, and to give them the necessary assistance and support". It strongly urged States and parties to armed conflict "to provide families with information on the fate of their missing relatives" and urged them "to cooperate with the ICRC in tracing missing persons and providing necessary documentation".[79]

88. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "every effort is made to clarify the fate of all persons unaccounted for and to inform the families accordingly".[80]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

89. In its judgement in Kurt v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR held that where it was established that a disappeared person had been in the custody of the security forces, this gave rise to a presumption of responsibility on the part of the authorities to account for that person's subsequent fate.[81]

90. On different occasions, the IACiHR recommended that the governments of Argentina, Chile and Guatemala provide detailed information to family members concerning the status of disappeared persons.[82]

91. In 1992, in a case concerning Colombia, the IACiHR concluded that:

> The Colombian Government has failed to comply with its obligation to respect and guarantee Articles 4 (the right to life), 5 (the right to humane treatment), 7 (the right to personal liberty) and 25 (on judicial protection) . . . in respect to the abduction and subsequent disappearance of Mr. Alirio de Jesús Pedraza Becerra.
>
> [It recommended that the government of Colombia] continue and enlarge the investigation into the events denounced.[83]

92. In its judgement in the Velásquez Rodríguez case in 1988, the IACtHR found that:

> The duty to investigate facts of this type continues as long as there is uncertainty about the fate of the person who has disappeared. Even in the hypothetical case that those individually responsible for crimes of this type cannot be legally punished

[79] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § D(c), (d), (k) and (l).

[80] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(e).

[81] ECtHR, Kurt v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 May 1998, § 124.

[82] IACiHR, Cases of Disappeared Persons (Argentina), Resolution, 8 April 1983, § 2(a); Cases of Disappeared Persons (Chile), Resolution, 1 July 1983, § 2(a); Cases of Disappeared Persons (Guatemala), Resolution, 9 April 1986, § 4(a).

[83] IACiHR, Case 10.581 (Colombia), Report, 25 September 1992, Conclusions, § 1.

under certain circumstances, the State is obligated to use the means at its disposal to inform the relatives of the fate of the victims and, if they have been killed, the location of their remains.[84]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

93. In 1996, the ICRC asked the authorities of a separatist entity to release information regarding the fate of persons missing as a result of the hostilities.[85]

VI. Other Practice

94. No practice was found.

International cooperation to account for missing persons

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

95. Articles 123 GC III and 140 GC IV provide that a Central Information Agency shall be created in a neutral country for the purpose of collecting all information it may obtain through official or private channels respecting POWs or internees, and transmit it to the countries of origin or residence of the persons concerned. The ICRC shall, if it deems it necessary, propose to the powers concerned the organisation of such an agency. The parties are requested to collaborate with the Agency.

96. Chapter III of the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam provided that the parties were to help each other in obtaining information about military personnel and foreign civilians of the parties missing in action and to take any measures as may be required to get information about those missing. The Four-Party Joint Military Commission was to ensure joint action by the parties in implementing this part of the agreement.

97. According to Article 5 of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords, "the Parties shall also cooperate fully with the ICRC in its efforts to determine the identities, whereabouts and fate of the unaccounted for".

Other Instruments

98. Paragraph 8 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that:

The parties agree to set up a Joint Commission to trace missing persons: the Joint Commission will be made up of representatives of the parties concerned, all Red Cross Organisations concerned and in particular the Yugoslav Red Cross, the Croatian Red Cross and the Serbian Red Cross, with ICRC participation.

[84] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, § 181.
[85] ICRC archive document.

99. The 1991 Rules of Procedure of the Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains set up in the context of the former Yugoslavia provides that:

Rule 1(2)
... All of the Red Cross organizations concerned ... are designated as permanent advisers to the members of the Joint Commission.
Rule 2(1)
The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), acting as a neutral intermediary, shall put at the Joint Commission's disposal a delegation which will chair the meetings of the Joint Commission.
...
Rule 18(1)
The ICRC shall bring to the Joint Commission's attention, on its own initiative, any communication, proposal, plan of work or information which might contribute to the efficiency of the Joint Commission's work.

100. The Plan of Operation for the 1991 Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains set up in the context of the former Yugoslavia states that:

2.1.1 Each party is responsible for compiling a list of its reported missing, as well as a file on each missing [person] ...
2.2.1 Each opened file shall be sent ... to the ICRC which shall arrange for it to be forwarded to the party concerned ...
2.2.2 ... the adverse party/parties shall take all possible measures (administrative steps and public appeals) to obtain information on the person reported missing ...
2.2.3 Once the enquiry has been completed, ... the form "official request for missing person" with the accompanying documents shall be returned in duplicate to the ICRC, which shall forward them to the party on which the missing person depends.

101. Paragraph 3 of the Joint Declaration by the Presidents of the FRY and Croatia (October 1992) states that "the two Presidents further agree that their representatives will provide for an exchange of information on missing persons".
102. According to Section 9.8 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, "the United Nations force ... shall facilitate the work of the ICRC's Central Tracing Agency".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
103. Statements found in military manuals concerning the provision of information through the Protecting Power, the Central Tracing Agency of the International Committee of the Red Cross or national Red Cross societies have been quoted in Section B of this chapter and are not repeated here.

National Legislation

104. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[86]

105. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 123 GC III and 140 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[87]

106. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[88]

National Case-law

107. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

108. According to the Report on the Practice of Australia, diplomatic correspondence and press releases show that, in 1984, a joint Australian-Vietnamese operation was launched "to search for the remains and resolve the cases" of six Australian personnel listed as "missing in action" in Vietnam and "to follow up any other case which might subsequently be drawn to its attention". The report states that the motive for the operation appears to be based primarily on political considerations (i.e. improvement of bilateral relations with Vietnam).[89]

109. In 1995, in reply to a question in parliament, the German government declared that it fully supported all efforts undertaken by the UNHCR and the ICRC to find missing persons in the region of Srebrenica and to take care of them.[90]

110. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Germany expressed its government's full support for "the ongoing efforts of the ICRC and United Nations representatives to gain access to . . . information about the fate of all missing persons".[91]

111. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Honduras stated that it considered it "deplorable that the parties have not fulfilled their commitments to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross and other humanitarian organizations to have access to persons . . . reported missing".[92]

[86] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[87] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[88] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[89] Report on the Practice of Australia, 1998, Chapter 5.2.
[90] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Reply by the government to a question, Verbleib der Verschwundenen aus Srebrenica, BT-Drucksache 13/2877, 7 November 1995, p. 1.
[91] Germany, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, pp. 2–3.
[92] Honduras, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, pp. 6–7.

112. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Indonesia associated itself "with the demands that ... representatives of UNHCR, the ICRC and other international agencies [be granted] unconditional access to persons ... reported missing".[93]
113. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Italy supported a resolution aimed at granting representatives of UNHCR, the ICRC and other international agencies unconditional access to persons reported missing.[94]
114. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council, the UK stated that it was essential that the ICRC be given full access to those missing from Srebrenica and elsewhere and urged the Bosnian Serb party to comply with its obligations in this respect.[95]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

115. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on violations of IHL in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council expressed "its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in seeking access to ... persons ... reported missing" and condemned "in the strongest possible terms the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with their commitments in respect of such access". The Council reaffirmed its demand that "the Bosnian Serb party give immediate and unimpeded access to representatives of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the ICRC and other international agencies to persons ... reported missing".[96]
116. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on violations of IHL and of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reiterated "its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in seeking access to ... persons ... reported missing" and called on all parties "to comply with their commitments in respect of such access".[97]
117. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN General Assembly urged all parties to the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, and in particular in the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro):

> to cooperate with the Working Group on Enforced and Involuntary Disappearances in determining the fate of thousands of missing persons by disclosing information and documentation on inmates in prisons, camps and other places of detention in order to finally locate such persons and alleviate the suffering of their relatives.[98]

[93] Indonesia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3612, 21 December 1995, p. 12.
[94] Italy, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3612, 21 December 1995, p. 14.
[95] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3612, 21 December 1995, pp. 8–9.
[96] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble and § 2.
[97] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, § 4.
[98] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 25.

118. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN General Assembly expressed its dismay at "the huge number of missing persons still unaccounted for, particularly in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia" and urged all parties, and in particular the government of the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), "to cooperate with the 'special process' dealing with the problem of missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia . . . by disclosing information and documentation on inmates in prisons, camps and other places of detention". It further urged "the de facto Bosnian Serb authorities to provide prompt access for monitors to territories controlled by them, in particular to the Banja Luka region and to Srebrenica, emphasizing that the fate of thousands of missing persons from Srebrenica requires immediate clarification".[99]

119. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly encouraged the ICRC "to pursue its clarification efforts in regard [to the high number of missing persons from Kosovo], in cooperation with other organizations such as the OSCE".[100]

120. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all the parties "to cooperate in determining the fate of thousands of missing persons".[101]

121. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the special process dealing with the problem of missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all the parties "to cooperate by disclosing all relevant available information and documentation in order to determine the fate of the thousands of missing persons".[102]

122. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights asked for the cooperation of the parties to the conflict in Afghanistan in the tracing of the many persons reported missing as a result of the war.[103]

123. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed "the report of the expert member of the Working Group on Enforced and Involuntary Disappearances on the special process on missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia".[104]

124. In a resolution on missing persons adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that it:

> invites States which are parties to an armed conflict to cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross in establishing the fate of missing persons and to adopt a comprehensive approach to this issue, including all practical

[99] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, preamble and §§ 22 and 28 (a).
[100] UN General Assembly, Res. 54/183, 17 December 1999, § 18.
[101] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 23.
[102] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/35, 3 March 1995, § 3.
[103] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/74, 8 March 1995, §§ 7–8.
[104] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, preamble.

and coordination mechanisms as may be necessary, based on humanitarian considerations only.

urges States and encourages intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to take all necessary measures at the national, regional and international levels to address the problem of persons reported missing in connection with armed conflicts and to provide appropriate assistance as requested by the concerned States.[105]

125. In a resolution on Guatemala adopted in 1985, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights requested that the government allow international humanitarian organisations, in particular the ICRC, to investigate the fate of the disappeared.[106]

126. In 1996, in a briefing on progress made in investigating violations of international law in certain areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights noted that a Working Group chaired by the ICRC had been set up to implement a process for the tracing of missing persons, in which the three parties to the conflict also participated. As agreed in the 1995 Dayton Accords, the ICRC was to be fully involved in the question of missing persons and to collect information from families. The ICRC relied on its own extensive network of offices and local branches throughout the former Yugoslavia. In June 1996, it also implemented a new step in its tracing procedure by launching a public campaign calling for people to come forward with any information they might have. The Expert Group on Missing Persons and Exhumations was said to seek to coordinate procedures on exhumations among the concerned international authorities. The briefing also stated that international agencies and authorities indicated that they generally had no problems with immediate and unimpeded access to areas throughout the country in pursuit of their mandated activities.[107]

127. In March 1996, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina reported that, following consultation with the parties, a Working Group on Missing Persons chaired by the ICRC had been established. He also reported that a Working Group on Missing Persons and Exhumation had been created in conjunction with several UN agencies.[108] In July 1996, the High Representative reported that considerable efforts had been made by relevant national authorities and international mechanisms, notably by the Expert Group on Missing Persons and Exhumation, the UN Special Rapporteurs on the former Yugoslavia and on missing persons and

[105] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/60, 25 April 2002, §§ 6–7.
[106] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1985/28, 30 August 1985, § 4.
[107] Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Briefing on Progress Reached in Investigation of Violations of International Law in the areas of Srebrenica, Żepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1034 (1995), 22 August 1996, §§ 12–13, p. 20.
[108] High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/190, 14 March 1996, Annex, §§ 75–76.

the Working Group on Persons Unaccounted For, towards establishing the fate of missing persons and the location of mass grave sites.[109]

Other International Organisations

128. In 1981, in its consideration of a report on refugees from El Salvador presented by the Committee on Migration, Refugees and Demography, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe noted that one of the main activities of the ICRC in El Salvador was tracing missing persons, with its Central Tracing Agency bureau acting as an intermediary between persons arrested or missing and their families.[110]

129. In a resolution on the situation in Cyprus adopted in 1984, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe welcomed the continued consideration of the issue of missing persons on both sides in the context of the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus and urged the parties to continue their deliberations.[111]

130. In a recommendation adopted in 1996 on refugees, displaced persons and reconstruction in certain countries of the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited member States to give support to the ICRC in the implementation of the tasks conferred upon it under the 1995 Dayton Accords, namely to clarify the fate of missing persons.[112]

131. In an opinion adopted in 1996 on Croatia's request for membership of the Council of Europe, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe expressed its expectation that Croatia would cooperate with international humanitarian organisations and take all necessary steps to solve several ongoing humanitarian problems, notably in connection with missing persons.[113]

132. In a resolution adopted in 1983 on the problem of missing persons in Cyprus, the European Parliament urged the ICRC to provide all assistance necessary for the speedy and effective completion of the investigations.[114]

133. In a resolution adopted in 1988 on the situation in Cyprus, the European Parliament suggested that the Foreign Ministers meeting in Council should endeavour to obtain an agreement from all of the parties involved to call on the ICRC to carry out independent searches whenever it was felt that relevant facts could be uncovered.[115]

[109] High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/542, 10 July 1996, Annex, § 41.
[110] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Working Document, Report on Refugees in El Salvador, Doc. 4698, 7 April 1981, p. 10.
[111] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 816, 21 March 1984, p. 117, § 12.
[112] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1287, 24 January 1996, p. 5, § viii(d).
[113] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Opinion No. 195 (1996) on Croatia's request for membership of the Council of Europe, Human rights information sheet No. 38, April 1996, p. 110, § 10(ii).
[114] European Parliament, Resolution on the problem of missing persons in Cyprus, 11 January 1983, § 2.
[115] European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in Cyprus, 27 June 1988, §§ 7–8.

International Conferences

134. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the missing and dead in armed conflicts in which it called on parties to armed conflicts:

> to co-operate with Protecting Powers, with the ICRC and its Central Tracing Agency, and with such other appropriate bodies as may be established for this purpose, and in particular National Red Cross Societies, to accomplish the humanitarian mission of accounting for the dead and missing, including those belonging to third countries not parties to the armed conflict.[116]

135. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on cooperation between National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and governments in reuniting dispersed families. The resolution reaffirmed the constant willingness of National Societies to "co-operate in humanitarian action, in reuniting members of dispersed families, in exchanging information regarding families and in facilitating the search for missing persons" and called upon governments to support the efforts of National Societies "dealing with the problems of conducting searches and reuniting families".[117]

136. The Conclusions of the London Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1995 state that fulfilment of the 1995 Dayton Accords will require "full cooperation of the parties over . . . the provision of information about the fate of persons unaccounted for".[118]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

137. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

138. In 1980, in the context of the conflict in Lebanon, the ICRC undertook to search for missing persons.[119]

139. Following the Gulf War in 1991, a Tripartite Commission was established under ICRC auspices to trace people reported missing. The Commission is made up of representatives of Iraq, on the one hand, and of France, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, UK and US, on the other.

140. In a joint declaration with UNICEF and UNHCR in 1994, the ICRC and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies reaffirmed the need to do everything possible to ensure the survival and

[116] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. V.
[117] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XV, §§ 1 and 2.
[118] Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, London, 8–9 December 1995, Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 11 December 1995 from the UK to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/1995/1029, 12 December 1995, § 25.
[119] ICRC, Annual Report 1980, Geneva, 1981, p. 60.

protection of unaccompanied children, trace their families and facilitate family reunification.[120]

141. In the context of the conflict in Kosovo, although the Military Technical Agreement signed on 9 June 1999 between NATO and the Yugoslav army is different from the 1995 Dayton Accords in that it contains no provisions for the tracing of missing persons, UNMIK entrusted the ICRC, following the cessation of hostilities, with the responsibility of dealing with these matters and with the lead role regarding the issue of missing people.

VI. Other Practice

142. In 1988, the Hezb-i-Islami faction in Afghanistan advised its fighters to give all possible assistance to the ICRC in its efforts to trace missing persons.[121]

Right of the families to know the fate of their relatives

Note: For practice concerning respect for family rights, see Chapter 32, section Q.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

143. Article 26 GC IV stipulates that:

> Each Party to the conflict shall facilitate enquiries made by members of families dispersed owing to the war, with the object of renewing contact with one another and of meeting, if possible. It shall encourage, in particular, the work of organizations engaged on this task provided they are acceptable to it and conform to its security regulations.

144. Article 32 AP I states that, in the implementation of the section concerning the missing and the dead, the parties "shall be prompted mainly by the right of families to know the fate of their relatives". Article 32 AP I was adopted by consensus.[122]

145. Article 19(3) of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that:

> Where separation results from the action of a State Party, the State Party shall provide the child, or if appropriate, another member of the family with essential information concerning the whereabouts of the absent member or members of the family. States Parties shall also ensure that the submission of such a request shall not entail any adverse consequences for the person or persons in whose respect it is made.

[120] ICRC, International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, UNHCR and UNICEF, Joint declaration on family reunification, 27 June 1994.
[121] Hezb-i-Islami, Monthly Bulletin, Communiqué on International Humanitarian Law, October 1988.
[122] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.

146. Article 25(2)(b) of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that "States Parties . . . shall take all necessary measures to trace parents or relatives [of children] where separation is caused by internal and external displacement arising from armed conflicts".

Other Instruments

147. Principles 16(1) and 17(4) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement specify that families of "all internally displaced persons have the right to know the fate and whereabouts of missing relatives".

148. According to Section 9.8 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, "the United Nations force shall respect the right of the families to know about the fate of their sick, wounded and deceased relatives".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

149. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that a general principle is "for families to have the right to know the fate of their relatives".[123] It also provides that the High Contracting Parties and the parties to the conflict shall in particular:

> facilitate enquiries made by members of families dispersed owing to the war, with the object of renewing contact with one another and of meeting, if possible. All persons in the territory of a Party to the conflict, or in a territory occupied by it, shall be enabled to give news of a strictly personal nature to members of their families, wherever they may be, and to receive news from them.[124]

150. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that:

> The request for information relating to either the missing or the dead must be humanitarian in nature and stem from the need for relatives to be notified of their whereabouts and subsequent repatriation, or re-interment. Should there be any controversy resulting from the request for information, the humanitarian needs and interests of the families concerned must prevail.[125]

151. Cameroon's Instructor's Manual provides that the families of the dead and victims of war have the right to know the fate of their relatives.[126]

152. Canada's LOAC Manual contains provisions stipulating that "belligerents must facilitate enquiries by members of families dispersed as the result of war with the object of renewing contact between them".[127]

[123] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.05.
[124] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.14.
[125] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 995.
[126] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 21.
[127] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11–3, § 28.

153. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "the basis principles relating to 'missing and dead' persons, military or civilians, are based on the right of the families to know the fate of their relatives".[128]
154. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War recalls the Additional Protocols which "specify the families' right to know the fate of their relatives".[129]
155. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "the provisions of the law of war concerning the dead are based on the right of the families to know the fate of their members".[130]
156. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "belligerents must facilitate enquiries by members of families dispersed as a result of the war, with the object of renewing contact between them".[131]
157. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the provisions of the law of armed conflicts concerning the dead are based on the right of the families to know the fate of their relatives".[132]
158. The UK Military Manual states that "belligerents must facilitate enquiries by members of families dispersed as a result of war, with the object of renewing contact between them".[133]
159. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 26 GC IV.[134]
160. The US Air Force Pamphlet stipulates that GC IV contains "measures for facilitating the establishment of contact between members of a family who have been separated because of the war".[135]
161. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook states that "the United States also supports the new principles in GP [AP] I, art. 32 & 34, that families have the right to know the fate of their relatives".[136]

National Legislation
162. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 26 GC IV, and of AP I, including Article 32 AP I, is a punishable offence.[137]
163. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[138]

[128] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 14, see also Précis No. 4, p. 5.
[129] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.
[130] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-SO, § C, see also Fiche No. 1-T, § 22(3).
[131] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1113(2).
[132] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[133] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 38.
[134] US, Field Manual (1956), § 265.
[135] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-3.
[136] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.4, footnote 19.
[137] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[138] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).

National Case-law

164. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

165. At the CDDH in 1975, Cyprus, France, Greece and the Holy See submitted an amendment to what became Article 32 AP I which aimed at adding the following sentence: "The activity of the Parties to the conflict and the international agencies shall be mainly prompted by the fundamental right of families to know what has happened to their relatives".[139]

166. At the CDDH in 1976, Austria, Cyprus, France, Greece, the Holy See, Nicaragua and Spain submitted an amendment which aimed at introducing the following text in AP I:

> In the implementation of the provisions of this Chapter [i.e. what became Section III of AP I], the activity of the High Contracting Parties and of the international agencies shall be mainly prompted by the right of families to know what has happened to their relatives, and by the desire to spare them moral suffering.[140]

167. At the CDDH in 1975, when it introduced an amendment to what became Article 32 AP I, Germany, on behalf of the sponsors (Germany, UK and US), stated that:

> To mitigate the suffering of the families of those who disappeared in war by removing the uncertainty about their fate and to give them an opportunity to remember their dead in the place where their remains lay was a fundamental humanitarian principle. Such principle was already included in the . . . Oxford Manual of 1880 and in the Hague Regulations of 1899 and 1907 and in the Geneva Conventions of 1906, 1929 and 1949.[141]

168. At the CDDH in 1975, the Holy See stated that:

> Its [i.e. an amendment's] purpose was to remedy an omission, namely the absence of any reference to families, and to call the attention of all representatives – legal experts, politicians, doctors and soldiers – and their States to the suffering caused to families as a result of armed conflicts. It was not only separation, but anxiety, uncertainty and lack of news for months, or even years, in the case of both families and prisoners. It was not merely a question of feelings but one of respect for a fundamental right which had never been officially recognized and which was often overlooked. Indeed, in some countries the fate of certain civilians was deliberately kept secret. Unless specific mention was made of families, the bureaucrats dealing with the present provision would recognize only the technical, not the humanitarian, aspect of the problem.[142]

[139] Cyprus, France, Greece and Holy See, Amendment submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/II/259 and Add.1, 11 March 1975, p. 102.

[140] Austria, Cyprus, France, Greece, Holy See, Nicaragua and Spain, Amendment submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/II/354 and Add. 1, 28 April 1976, p. 105.

[141] Germany, Statement at the CDDH on behalf of the sponsors (Germany, UK and US), Official Records, Vol. XI, CDDH/II/SR.19, 13 February 1975, p. 185, § 70.

[142] Holy See, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XI, CDDH/II/SR.35, 13 March 1975, p. 363, § 2.

169. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to parliament in 1990 in the context of the ratification procedure of the Additional Protocols, the German government stated, with reference to Articles 32–34 AP I, that all parties to the conflict were under a duty to search for missing persons, but that this principle did not include an individual and subjective right of the relatives of the person missing to gain information.[143]

170. In a resolution adopted in December 1998, the National Assembly of South Korea urged cooperation between the authorities in North and South Korea in reuniting separated family members and proposed that the National Red Cross Societies in each region proceed with their work on family reunification. In cases where family reunification was not possible, the Assembly asked the authorities and Red Cross Societies "to start working on the confirmation of their fate".[144]

171. At the CDDH in 1975, the representative of UK stated that:

He did not consider, for instance, that it could be said that it was a fundamental right of families to know what had happened to their relatives, although it was a basic need. To go further than that would not be wise.[145]

172. At the CDDH in 1974, the US referred to "the anguish of the families of persons of whom there was no word during conflicts" and stressed:

the need to inform those families of the fate of their missing relatives as soon as possible, and pointed out that the draft followed logically from resolution V adopted on that subject by the XXIInd International Conference of the Red Cross at Teheran in 1973.[146]

173. At the CDDH in 1976, the US stated that:

The statement of the right of the families to know the fate of their relatives was of primary importance for the understanding of the Section under discussion. Paragraph 1 of article 20 bis did not refer to other sections of the draft Protocol or the Geneva Conventions. If the right of the families was not specifically mentioned, the section might be interpreted as referring to the right of Governments, for instance, to know what had happened to certain missing persons . . . As regards [a] query of the Yugoslav representative whether paragraph 1 of article 20 bis was necessary, he agreed that it was unusual to state the premises on which an article was based. The paragraph had been included in response to a strong feeling of many delegations and institutions that it was important to express in the Protocol the idea that families had a right to know what had happened to their relatives. United Nations

[143] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum on the Additional Protocols to the Geneva Conventions, BT-Drucksache 11/6770, 22 March 1990, p. 109.

[144] South Korea, National Assembly, Resolution Calling for the Confirmation of Life or Death and the Reunion of Members of Separated Families in South and North Korea, 198th Regular Session, 1 December 1998.

[145] UK, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XI, CDDH/II/SR.35, 13 March 1975, p. 371, § 49.

[146] US, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XI, CDDH/II/SR.6, 14 March 1974, p. 41, § 4.

General Assembly resolution 3220 (XXIX), which the Working Group had studied when drawing up the present text, stated in the last preambular that "the desire to know . . . is a basic human need", but the next under consideration went even further by referring to the "right".[147]

174. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that families have a right to know the fate of their relatives".[148]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

175. In a resolution adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly recognised that "one of the tragic results of armed conflicts is the lack of information on persons, civilians as well as combatants, who are missing or dead in armed conflict". It also considered that:

> The desire to know the fate of loved ones lost in armed conflicts is a basic human need which should be satisfied to the greatest extent possible, and that provision of information on those who are missing or who have died in armed conflicts should not be delayed merely because other issues remained pending.[149]

176. In a resolution adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed "the right of families to know the fate of their relatives reported missing in connection with armed conflict".[150]

177. In a resolution adopted in 1981 on the question of the human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights reiterated the right of families to know the fate of their relatives.[151]

Other International Organisations

178. In a recommendation adopted in 1979 on the missing political prisoners in Chile, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stressed the right of families to know the fate of members who had disappeared.[152] It also adopted an order instructing the President of the Assembly to inform the Chilean government of its deep concern about the fate of missing political 147 US, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XII, CDDH/II/SR.76, 1 June 1976, p. 232, §§ 28–29.

148 US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.
149 UN General Assembly, Res. 3220 (XXIX), 6 November 1974, preamble.
150 UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/60, 25 April 2002, § 2.
151 UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 15 (XXXIV), 10 September 1981, § 3.
152 Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 868, 5 June 1979, §§ 7–12.

prisoners, emphasising the right of families to be informed of the fate of their missing members after arrest or detention by the security forces.[153]

179. In a resolution adopted in 1980, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe expressed its profound alarm at the disappearances of large numbers of people in Latin America.[154]

180. In a recommendation adopted in 1987 on national refugees and missing persons in Cyprus, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe emphasised that the families of missing persons have a right to know the truth, and called upon European Foreign Ministers to step up their efforts to find a positive solution, in agreement with both parties, to this humanitarian problem.[155] In the report upon which the recommendation was based, the Committee on Migration, Refugees and Demography took the view that the Council of Europe should support the efforts of the Committee on Missing Persons to clarify the fate of the missing persons, noting that after so many years, the uncertainty was both shameful and unnecessarily cruel.[156]

181. In a resolution adopted in 1983 on the problem of missing persons in Cyprus, the European Parliament confirmed the inalienable right of all families to know the fate of members of their family who have involuntarily disappeared due to the action of governments or their agents.[157]

International Conferences

182. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 recalled "the principle by which families have the right to know the fate of their members".[158]

183. In the Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants declared that they refused "to accept that . . . families of missing persons [are] denied information about the fate of their relatives".[159]

184. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 stressed "the need and the right of families to obtain information on missing persons, including missing prisoners of war and those missing in action" and urged States and parties to armed conflict to "provide families with information on the fate of their missing relatives".[160]

[153] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, 31st Ordinary Session, Order No. 381, 28 June 1979.
[154] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 722, 28 January 1980, §§ 1–3.
[155] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1056, 5 May 1987, §§ 7–8.
[156] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Working document: Report on national refugees and missing persons in Cyprus, Doc. 5716, 39th Ordinary Session, 6 April 1987, p. 21.
[157] European Parliament, Resolution on the problem of missing persons in Cyprus, 11 January 1983, §§ E and H(2).
[158] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XIII, preamble.
[159] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § I(1).
[160] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § D(k).

185. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "every effort is made to clarify the fate of all persons unaccounted for and to inform the families accordingly".[161]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

186. In Quinteros v. Uruguay in 1983, the HRC dealt with the case of Elena Quinteros who disappeared after having been arrested, held in a military detention and subjected to torture. The Commission stated that it > understands the anguish and stress caused to the mother by the disappearance of her daughter and by the continuing uncertainty concerning her fate and whereabouts. The author has the right to know what has happened to her daughter. In these respects, she too is a victim of the violations of the [1966 ICCPR] suffered by her daughter in particular, of article 7.[162]

187. In its decision in Amnesty International and Others v. Sudan in 1999, the ACiHPR held that "holding an individual without permitting him or her to have any contact with his or her family, and refusing to inform the family whether the individual is being held and his or her whereabouts is an inhuman treatment of both the detainee and the family concerned".[163]

188. In its judgement in Kurt v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR found that the anguish suffered by a mother at knowing that her son had been detained by the security forces, yet finding a complete absence of official information as to his subsequent fate, constituted ill-treatment of sufficient severity to fall within the scope of Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR (prohibition of inhuman or degrading treatment).[164] In its judgement in Timurtas v. Turkey in 2000, the Court confirmed this view.[165]

189. In its judgement in the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found that, in relation to Greek-Cypriot missing persons and their relatives, there had been a continuing violation of Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR in that the silence of the Turkish authorities in the face of the real concerns of the relatives attained a level of severity which could only be categorised as inhuman treatment.[166]

[161] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(e).
[162] HRC, Quinteros v. Uruguay, Views, 21 July 1983, § 14.
[163] ACiHPR, Amnesty International and Others v. Sudan, Decision, 1–15 November 1999, § 54.
[164] ECtHR, Kurt v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 May 1998, §§ 130–134.
[165] ECtHR, Timurtas v. Turkey, Judgement, 13 June 2000, § 98.
[166] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, §§ 157–158.

190. On different occasions, the IACiHR recommended that the governments of Argentina, Chile and Guatemala provide detailed information to family members concerning the status of disappeared persons.[167]

191. In its judgement in the Velásquez Rodríguez case in 1988, the IACtHR found that:

> The duty to investigate facts of this type continues as long as there is uncertainty about the fate of the person who has disappeared. Even in the hypothetical case that those individually responsible for crimes of this type cannot be legally punished under certain circumstances, the State is obligated to use the means at its disposal to inform the relatives of the fate of the victims and, if they have been killed, the location of their remains.[168]

192. In 2000, in the Bámaca Velásquez case dealing with the disappearance and death of a member of the URNG, the IACtHR stated that Guatemala had violated the right to humane treatment embodied in Article 5(1) and (2) of the ACHR to the detriment of, inter alia, the wife, father and sisters of the victim. It found that, while the victim had been held in detention without the family being informed, several judicial proceedings had been initiated, none of which had been effective, and that exhumation procedures had been ordered but obstructed by State agents. It stated that, at the time when the facts relating to the case took place, "Guatemala was convulsed by an internal conflict", and that:

> The Court has evaluated the circumstances of this case, particularly the continued obstruction of [the victims wife's] efforts to learn the truth of the facts and, above all, the concealment of the corpse of [the victim] and the obstacles to the attempted exhumation procedures that various public authorities created, and also the official refusal to provide relevant information. Based on these circumstances, the Court considers that the suffering to which [the wife of the victim] was subjected clearly constitutes cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, violating Article 5(1) and 5(2) of the [ACHR]. The Court also considers that ignorance of the whereabouts of [the victim] caused his next of kin . . . profound anguish . . . and, therefore, considers that they, too, are victims of the violation of the said Article.[169]

193. In its judgement in the Bámaca Velásquez case (Reparations) in 2002, the IACtHR stated that:

> The right of every person to know the truth has been developed in international human rights law . . . and the possibility for the next of kin of the victim to know what happened, and, in this case, where the remains are located, constitutes a means of reparation and, as such, an expectation of the next of kin of the victim and the society as a whole the State has to meet.[170]

[167] IACiHR, Cases of Disappeared Persons (Argentina), Resolution, 8 April 1983, § 2(a); Cases of Disappeared Persons (Chile), Resolution, 1 July 1983, § 2(a); Cases of Disappeared Persons (Guatemala), Resolution, 9 April 1986, § 4(a).

[168] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, § 181.

[169] IACtHR, Bámaca Velásquez case, Judgement, 25 November 2000, §§ 121 (b) and (m), 165–166 and 230(2).

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

194. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the law of war provisions relating to the dead are based on the right of families to know the fate of their relatives".[171]

VI. Other Practice

195. Section 24(1) of the SPLM/A Penal and Disciplinary Laws requires that "every Battalion Commander shall maintain a register" of military personnel and the keeping of records pertaining to such personnel in the SPLM/A headquarters, on the premise that this will facilitate the search for any persons who later go missing.[172] The Report on SPLM/A Practice notes that:

The SPLM/A also used to announce names of Government of Sudan Officers and men and any personnel that they captured from the government when Radio SPLA was operational. The SPLM/A today still publishes in their bulletins names and other particulars of officers and men and personnel that fall into the hands of the SPLA during military operations. The SPLM/A claims to do this for the benefit of the families of those who go missing from the side of the government.[173]

[170] IACtHR, Bámaca Velásquez case (Reparations), Judgement, 22 February 2002, § 76.
[171] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 127.
[172] SPLM/A, Penal and Disciplinary Laws, 4 July 1984, Section 24, § 1.
[173] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.2.

CHAPTER 37

PERSONS DEPRIVED OF THEIR LIBERTY

Note: For practice concerning non-discrimination of persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 32, section B. For practice concerning humane treatment of persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 32, section A.

A. Provision of Basic Necessities to Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 7 of the 1899 HR provides that:

> The Government into whose hands prisoners of war have fallen is bound to maintain them.
>
> Failing a special agreement between the belligerents, prisoners of war shall be treated as regards food, quarters, and clothing, on the same footing as the troops of the Government which has captured them.

2. Article 7 of the 1907 HR provides that:

> The Government into whose hands prisoners of war have fallen is charged with their maintenance. In the absence of a special agreement between the belligerents, prisoners of war shall be treated as regards board, lodging, and clothing on the same footing as the troops of the Government who captured them.

3. Articles 25–32 GC III deal with the provision of appropriate shelter, food, clothing, canteens, hygiene and medical care to POWs. Articles 76, 85, 87 and 89–92 GC IV contain similar provisions for internees.

4. Articles 72 and 73 GC III and Articles 76, 108 and 109 GC IV provide that POWs and detainees shall be allowed to receive individual parcels or collective shipments containing in particular foodstuffs, clothing and medical supplies. Collective shipments shall in no way free the detaining power from its obligations. The conditions for the sending of parcels and relief may be subject to special agreement between the powers concerned. In the absence of such agreement, rules and regulations concerning collective shipments are annexed to the Conventions.

5. Article 125, first paragraph, GC III provides that:

> Subject to the measures which the Detaining Powers may consider essential to ensure their security or to meet any other reasonable need, the representatives of religious organizations, relief societies, or any other organization assisting prisoners of war, shall receive from the said Powers, for themselves and their duly accredited agents, all necessary facilities for visiting the prisoners, for distributing relief supplies and material, from any source, intended for religious, educational or recreative purposes, and for assisting them in organizing their leisure time within the camps.

Article 142 GC IV contains similar provisions for protected persons.

6. Article III(57)(a) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that joint Red Cross teams "shall visit the prisoner of war camps of both sides to comfort the prisoners of war and to bring in and distribute gift articles for the comfort and welfare of the prisoners of war". Paragraphs 14 and 17 of the Annex to the Armistice Agreement (establishing a Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission) further add that:

Each side shall provide logistical support for the prisoners of war in the area under its military control, delivering required support to the Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission at an agreed delivery point in the vicinity of each prisoner of war installation.

...

The Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission shall provide medical support for the prisoners of war as may be practicable. The detaining side shall provide medical support as practicable upon the request of the Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission and specifically for those cases requiring extensive treatment or hospitalization.

7. Article 8 of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam states that all captured military personnel and captured civilians "shall be given adequate food, clothing, shelter and medical attention required for their state of health. They shall be allowed ... to receive parcels" from their families.

8. Article 5(1)(b) AP II provides that persons whose liberty has been restricted shall "be provided with food and drinking water, and be afforded safeguards as regards health and hygiene and protection against the rigours of the climate and the dangers of the armed conflict". Article 5(1)(c) provides that "they shall be allowed to receive individual or collective relief". Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1]

Other Instruments

9. Article 76 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "prisoners of war shall be fed upon plain and wholesome food, whenever practicable". Article 79 stipulates that "every captured wounded enemy shall be medically treated, according to the ability of the medical staff".

10. Article 27 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration states that, in the absence of an agreement settling the conditions of maintenance of prisoners of war, they shall be treated as regards food and clothing, on the same footing as the troops of the government which captured them.

11. Article 69 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that:

The government into whose hands prisoners have fallen is charged with their maintenance. In the absence of an agreement on this point between the belligerent parties, prisoners are treated, as regards food and clothing, on the same peace footing as the troops of the government which captured them.

12. Rules 9–20 of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provide detailed directions concerning accommodation, personal hygiene, clothing, bedding and food.

13. Rules 14–25 of the 1987 European Prison Rules provide detailed directions concerning accommodation, personal hygiene, clothing, bedding and food.

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.

14. Article 6 of the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials provides that "law enforcement officials shall ensure the full protection of the health of persons in their custody and, in particular, shall take immediate action to secure medical attention whenever required".
15. Article 3(a) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict . . . prisoners of war shall have the right to be fed, sheltered and clothed".
16. Paragraph 9 of the 1990 Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "prisoners shall have access to the health services available in the country without discrimination on the grounds of their legal situation".
17. Article 4(6) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "all persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict shall . . . be provided with adequate food and drinking water, and be afforded safeguards as regards to health and hygiene".
18. Section 8(c) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that detained persons "shall be entitled to receive food and clothing, hygiene and medical attention".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

19. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) states that "the power detaining prisoners of war shall be bound to provide free of charge for their maintenance and for the medical attention required by their state of health".[2] It further lists in detail the basic needs of POWs that must be provided for and under which specific conditions.[3]
20. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that prisoners of war shall receive adequate accommodation, food and clothing.[4]
21. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "PW must at all times receive adequate medical attention, food, clothing and accommodation".[5] Under the manual, the same rule applies to captured enemy combatants, who should be treated as being entitled to PW status.[6]
22. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "food must be sufficient to keep prisoners in good health, and the customs and normal diet of PW must be taken into account, i.e. PW dietary practices and customs must be accommodated if possible".[7] It adds that "clothing, underwear and footwear must be sufficient and take into account the climate of the region where the PW is

[2] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.014.
[3] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 2.022–2.028.
[4] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.13.
[5] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 716.
[6] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 719.
[7] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1026.

detained".[8] The manual specifies that "medical personnel of the PW are to be made available to attend to PW".[9]

23. Benin's Military Manual provides that captured enemy combatants shall have the right to receive relief from their families and shall be cared for.[10]

24. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that captured enemy combatants shall be cared for, fed and protected when necessary.[11]

25. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that prisoners shall be authorised to receive parcels by the intermediary of the ICRC.[12]

26. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that POWs are to receive medical attention, if possible from doctors attached to their own forces or of their own nationality.[13] In respect of internees, the manual states that "the interning power is obligated to maintain interned persons and to provide them with medical care, all free of charge".[14] It also emphasises that "effective measures must be provided with adequate food, water and clothing".[15] The manual further specifies that persons undergoing punishment in occupied territories "must enjoy conditions of food and hygiene sufficient to keep them in good health and at least equal to those obtaining in prisons in the occupied country".[16] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that the persons whose liberty has been restricted must "receive such medical care as their condition requires" and "be supplied with food and water".[17]

27. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "for the provision of food, water and shelter, the idea is not to treat PWs or detainees better than CF members but to treat them at least as well".[18] It further provides that "all detained persons shall be afforded the necessary medical care".[19]

28. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, the basic needs of all detained persons, such as medical assistance, food and water, shall be provided for.[20]

29. Colombia's Instructors' Manual requires that prisoners be provided with food and medical attention.[21]

30. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL states that captured civilians and combatants are entitled to receive relief shipments.[22]

[8] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1027.
[9] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1029.
[10] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, pp. 5 and 11.
[11] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 40, § 152, p. 96, § 2 and p. 154, § 541.
[12] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 33.
[13] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-4, § 36.
[14] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 50.
[15] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 55.
[16] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-7, § 62(a).
[17] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 25.
[18] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 7.
[19] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 9.
[20] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 21.
[21] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 22.
[22] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), Instruction No. 4.

31. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic requires that all prisoners and detainees, whatever their status, receive the same medical attention as friendly forces would receive.[23]
32. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that captured enemy combatants shall receive medical care without any adverse distinction.[24]
33. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "captured combatants have the right to . . . receive assistance".[25]
34. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that wounded POWs shall be cared for and that every prisoner of war is entitled to receive assistance.[26]
35. France's LOAC Manual provides that prisoners of war shall be cared for and provided with necessary medical care.[27] It also states that regulation of the treatment of civilian internees is very similar to that of POWs.[28]
36. Germany's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war shall receive sufficient food and clothing as well as the necessary medical attention".[29] It also specifies that in case of the evacuation of prisoners, they "shall be supplied with sufficient food, clothing and medical care".[30]
37. Hungary's Military Manual provides that captured combatants and internees shall be protected and cared for.[31]
38. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "prisoners must be administered proper medical care, at the expense of the detaining State, and a monthly follow-up examination must be made of each detainee's state of health. It is incumbent on the detaining State to provide the prisoners with sufficient food, drink and clothing." The manual also provides that "one of the most important provisions in the Geneva Convention are the rules concerning the right of prisoners . . . to receive packages from [their families] containing food, clothes, medications, ritual articles, literature and means of study".[32]
39. Italy's IHL Manual provides that POWs shall be provided with food, clothing and medical assistance.[33]
40. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "captured combatants shall be cared for".[34]
41. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war shall be provided free of charge with food, sufficient clothes, adequate housing and the medical care that their state of health requires".[35]

[23] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 8.
[24] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.8.
[25] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[26] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[27] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 102.
[28] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 73.
[29] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 717.
[30] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 711.
[31] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), pp. 75 and 99.
[32] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 53.
[33] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. II, Chapter III, p. 18, §§ 51–53.
[34] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 7.
[35] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 26.

42. Mali's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "sick and wounded prisoners of war are to be put in the care of the health service".[36]

43. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that prisoners shall be provided with adequate food, clothing and accommodation.[37] It further states that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to receive parcels, in particular foodstuffs, clothing, medical supplies and articles of a recreational character (books, sports outfits, musical instruments)".[38]

44. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that it is forbidden to take the clothes and food of prisoners of war. It adds that "food shall be sufficient to keep prisoners of war in good health and to prevent loss of weight".[39]

45. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war are to receive medical . . . attention, if possible from doctors . . . of their own forces or of their own nationality".[40] It also provides that prisoners "shall be allowed to receive parcels containing clothing, food, medical supplies, religious and educational material, books, examination papers, musical instruments and the like . . ." and that "they may receive collective relief parcels in accordance with specific agreements between the parties".[41] Concerning internees, the manual states that they "must be provided free of charge with adequate food, water and the facilities to provide themselves with clothing or, if necessary, the clothing itself. Internees shall be medically inspected once a month and shall be provided with adequate medical care free of charge."[42] In addition, the manual states that "under certain circumstances, internees are allowed to receive individual parcels or collective shipments".[43] With respect to non-international conflicts, the manual specifies that "all detainees are to be supplied with food and water and the same safeguards as regards health and hygiene".[44]

46. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that POWs have the right to receive medical care and shall be treated in terms of food and clothing on the same footing as the detaining power's own troops.[45]

47. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that POWs must be cared for and provided with adequate accommodation, food and clothing.[46] It also provides that POWs shall "be permitted to receive parcels containing food, clothing, medicines, etc."[47]

[36] Mali, Disciplinary Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[37] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VII-6/VII-7, § 4.
[38] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-10.
[39] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-41.
[40] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 924.
[41] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 929.
[42] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1123(5).
[43] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1127.
[44] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1814(2).
[45] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(20) and (22–24).
[46] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 41.
[47] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 43.

48. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines provides that wounded and sick prisoners must receive medical treatment.[48]

49. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians in the hands of a party to the conflict shall be provided with sufficient food and decent accommodation and shall be cared for.[49]

50. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to the IHL conventions and the UDHR is that "persons deprived of their liberty shall receive, to the same extent as the civilian population, food and drinking water, shall benefit from healthy and hygienic living conditions and shall be protected against the climate and the dangers of military operations". It also provides that "they shall be allowed to receive individual and collective relief".[50]

51. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "food shall be sufficient in quantity, quality and variety to keep prisoners in good health". It adds that "respect shall be provided for the habitual diet of the prisoners. Thus, prisoners of war shall be involved in the preparation of their meals". It further states that "collective disciplinary measures affecting food are prohibited".[51] The manual restates the right of prisoners to receive a sufficient daily food ration and drinking water.[52] It also provides that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to receive by post parcels containing foodstuffs, clothing, medical supplies, etc.".[53] In addition, the manual provides that appropriate clothes and medical attention shall be provided to prisoners of war.[54]

52. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that prisoners of war "shall be quartered under conditions as favourable as those for the forces of the Detaining Power".[55] It states that "their daily food shall be sufficient in quantity, quality and variety to keep prisoners of war in good health. Account shall be taken of the habitual diet of the prisoners."[56] The manual also states that "prisoners of war shall be provided with appropriate clothes and shoes, which shall take into account the climate and the nature of work demands".[57] In addition, "prisoners of war shall be allowed to receive individual or collective parcels".[58]

53. Togo's Military Manual provides that captured enemy combatants shall be cared for and that they have the right to receive relief.[59]

[48] Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), § 4.
[49] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), Part III, § 4.
[50] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 23 and 24.
[51] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.4.(i).20.
[52] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.5.(b).1.
[53] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.4.(a).6.
[54] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 6.4.(i).14 and 6.4.(i).15.
[55] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 119.
[56] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 120.
[57] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 121.
[58] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 134.
[59] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, pp. 5 and 11.

54. The UK Military Manual provides that "belligerents who intern protected persons must provide, free of charge, for [their] maintenance (including that of their dependants if the latter are without adequate means of support or are unable to earn a living)".[60] The manual also stipulates that "the state detaining prisoners of war is bound to provide free of charge for their maintenance and medical care".[61] It further specifies that prisoners of war and internees "are allowed to receive . . . relief shipments containing, in particular, foodstuffs, clothing, medical supplies, books and objects of a devotional, educational or recreational nature".[62]

55. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "PW must be provided with free maintenance and medical attention".[63]

56. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 25–32, 72, 73 GC III and 76, 85, 87, 89–92 GC IV.[64]

57. The US Air Force Pamphlet stresses "the obligations of the Detaining Power in furnishing quarters, food and clothing to POWs". It points out that "food rations, for example, must be sufficient in quality, quantity and variety to keep POWs in good health and avoid loss of weight or nutritional deficiencies".[65]

58. The US Instructor's Guide states that:

> Even though you are a prisoner, you must receive sufficient daily rations to ensure your good health. In addition, you must have sanitary living quarters which provide protection from the weather. You are also entitled to medical care . . . You may also receive parcels containing foodstuffs, clothing and educational, religious or recreational materials.[66]

59. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "there is a legal obligation to provide adequate food, facilities and medical aid to POWs".[67]

National Legislation

60. Under Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice, depriving prisoners of war of indispensable food or necessary medical assistance is a punishable offence.[68]

61. Australia's War Crimes Act states that "the expression 'war crime' includes the following: . . . failure to provide prisoners of war or internees with proper medical care, food or quarters".[69]

62. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "prisoners of war are entitled to the [60] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 56. [61] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 136.

[62] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 67 and 190.
[63] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 29, § 7.
[64] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 101–109, 148–149, 292, 294, 296–299 and 446.
[65] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-4. [66] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 11
[67] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-184.
[68] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 274, introducing a new Article 746 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[69] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3(xxx)(b).

following in all cases: . . . to have the opportunity to receive necessary medical care, food, clothes . . . and also to receive material assistance from outside".[70]

63. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[71]

64. Under Chile's Code of Military Justice, depriving prisoners of war of indispensable food or necessary medical assistance is an "offence against international law".[72]

65. The Code of Military Justice of the Dominican Republic provides that any member of the armed forces who deprives POWs of necessary food shall be punished by imprisonment.[73]

66. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 25–32, 72, 73 and 125 GC III and 76, 85, 87, 89–92, 108, 109 and 142 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 5(1)(b) and (c) AP II, are punishable offences.[74]

67. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended states that persons who deprive detainees of necessary food or medical care may be imprisoned for up to two years.[75]

68. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides that it is an offence not to provide indispensable food and necessary medical care to prisoners of war.[76]

69. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[77]

70. Peru's Code of Military Justice provides that depriving prisoners of war of medical care and indispensable food is a punishable offence.[78]

71. Rwanda's Prison Order provides that prisoners should receive food corresponding as far as possible to their usual diet and to their state of health.[79]

72. Spain's Military Criminal Code provides that "military personnel who . . . do not provide indispensable food or necessary medical assistance" to prisoners of war commit a punishable offence against the laws and customs of war.[80]

[70] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 22(5).
[71] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[72] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 261.
[73] Dominican Republic, Code of Military Justice (1953), Article 201(1).
[74] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[75] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Article 324(III).
[76] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 55(4).
[77] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[78] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Article 95(1).
[79] Rwanda, Prison Order (1961), Article 35.
[80] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(5).

73. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of "the violation of the rights of prisoners of war . . . [such as] not providing necessary food".[81]

National Case-law

74. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

75. It is reported that, during the Algerian war of independence, "French prisoners never had any reason to complain about their stay in captivity. In case they were wounded, they received adequate care."[82]

76. In 1993, Azerbaijan's Ministry of the Interior ordered that troops "in zones of combat, during military operations . . . must provide care to wounded prisoners".[83]

77. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, during the communist insurgency in Malaysia, all detainees were given medical examinations and provided with necessary medical treatment.[84]

78. In a memorandum on the strict observance of human rights issued to the Philippine armed forces in 1982, the Philippine Ministry of National Defence provided that medical check-ups were mandatory for persons detained in connection with crimes against national security.[85]

79. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that "Iraqi prisoners of war . . . will not be denied food, water or medical treatment".[86] In a subsequent diplomatic note, the US reminded the government of Iraq that "prisoners of war . . . must be afforded food, water, clothing and every guarantee of hygiene and healthfulness".[87]

80. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000, the US Congress expressed its sense concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during the Second World War, in particular the starvation of many US military and civilian prisoners.[88]

81. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in [81] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58(8).

[82] La révolution algérienne tient au respect de l'homme, El Moudjahid, Vol. 3, p. 57.
[83] Azerbaijan, Ministry of the Interior, Command of the Troops of the Interior, Order No. 42, Baku, 9 January 1993, § 3.
[84] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[85] Philippines, Ministry of National Defence, Memorandum to the Chief of Staff on Strict Observance of Human Rights, Doc. AGA1 B2-29, 20 March 1982, § 2.
[86] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, Annex I, p. 2.
[87] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 20 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, Annex III, p. 4.
[88] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON.RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.

armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[89]

82. In 1991, in a document entitled "Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia", the Ministry of Defence of the SFRY (FRY) included the following example: "Accommodation in prisons is absolutely unacceptable: people sleep on concrete floors, are being kept hungry and without minimum conditions for personal hygiene."[90]

83. In 1989, the government of a State involved in a non-international armed conflict assured the ICRC that all captured combatants had received the necessary medical care.[91]

84. A memorandum on the responsibilities and obligations applicable to contacts with the local population issued in 1992 by the Ministry of Defence of a State engaged in an international military operation stated that detainees (persons detained because they posed a threat to the armed forces or obstructed their operation and which were not POWs) should be supplied with "sufficient food, water and other necessities of life, including clothing, shelter and medical care".[92]

85. In 1999, the exchange committees of the parties to a non-international armed conflict signed an agreement concerning the treatment of prisoners, which provided that:

> 2. Chains and handcuffs should be removed from the prisoners of both sides.
> 3. Prisoners should be provided with fresh and warm food two times on a daily basis.
> 4. Prisoners should be put in the detention rooms according to the capacity and spaces of each room, so that they can rest.
> ...
> 8. Sick prisoners must be taken to hospitals whenever necessary.[93]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

86. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council demanded that all detainees in camps, prisons and detention centres in Bosnia and Herzegovina "receive humane treatment, including adequate food, shelter and medical care".[94]

[89] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[90] SFRY (FRY), Ministry of Defence, Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia, July 1991, § 3(iii).
[91] ICRC archive document.
[92] ICRC archive document.
[93] ICRC archive document.
[94] UN Security Council, Res. 770, 13 August 1992, § 3.

Other International Organisations

87. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on health and prison, the OAU Conference of African Ministers of Health stated that:

Recalling that there are established international standards for the treatment of detainees, recognised and accepted by States and constituting a useful reference framework for ensuring that detained persons are accorded humane treatment:

1. Urges Member States to be responsive to the health needs of detained persons;
2. Exhorts Member States to pursue their efforts towards a lasting solution to the serious problems posed by overcrowding at places of detention;
3. Calls on Member States to take appropriate measures to ensure that persons deprived of their liberty are given a balanced and adequate diet suited to their needs, as well as an adequate supply of drinking water;
4. Further calls on Member States to provide adequate premises for the accommodation of detained persons in conformity with the requirements of hygiene and housing standards, and to strengthen the health services destined for detained persons by ensuring that the penitentiary system is endowed with adequate food, nutritional conditions, sanitary facilities and medicine;
5. Requests the Secretary-General of OAU with technical support of ICRC to submit to the Conference of African Ministers of Health, a report on the progress made in the area of prison health care in Africa;
6. Urges Member States to ensure that persons deprived of liberty enjoy access to curative health care equal to that accorded to the rest of the population.[95]

International Conferences

88. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it recognised that, irrespective of GC III, "the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war, including . . . provision of an adequate diet and medical care".[96]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

89. In the Krnojelac case before the ICTY in 1997, the accused was charged with inhuman acts, wilfully causing great suffering and cruel treatment on the basis of inhumane conditions of detention consisting of locking detainees in their cells except when taken to eat or work duties, overcrowded cells with insufficient facilities for bedding and personal hygiene, starvation rations, lack of changes of clothing, absence of heating and lack of proper medical treatment.[97]

90. In its judgement in the Aleksovski case in 1999, the ICTY Trial Chamber held, in relation to detention conditions, that:

[95] OAU, Conference of African Ministers of Health, Res. 7(V), 24–29 April 1995, preamble and §§ 1–6.
[96] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. XI.
[97] ICTY, Krnojelac case, Initial indictment, 17 June 1997, § 5.32.

158. The evidence clearly demonstrated that the premises were not appropriate for the number of detainees. The Trial Chamber finds that the inadequate space and heating which made the detention particularly difficult has been established . . .
164. The sanitary conditions could have been considered reasonable for a number of detainees proportional to its prison capacity. However, they were highly unsatisfactory in view of the number of individuals detained throughout the period covered by the indictment . . .
173. The testimony does not show serious food shortage in Kaonik prison. The detainees were fed and the relative lack of food was the result of shortages caused by the war and affected everyone, detainees and non-detainees alike. The testimony moreover in no way demonstrates a desire to starve the detainees or to differentiate the detainees from prison staff . . .
182. The testimony demonstrates that, in general, the detainees did receive [medical] treatment. Although it would probably be considered insufficient in ordinary times, the detainees' general conditions do not appear to have been so bad that they demonstrate a deliberate resolve to cause the persons concerned great suffering or serious injury to body or health. The testimony also demonstrates that the accused usually did whatever was in his power to ensure that the detainees received the necessary medical care or, at the very least, treatment available at the closest medical centre. In the result, the Trial Chamber finds the accused not culpable on this ground.[98]

91. On numerous occasions, the HRC found violations of Article 7 of the 1966 ICCPR (prohibition of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment) in respect of prison conditions. For example, the overall approach seems to have been set in Mukong v. Cameroon in 1992:

As to the conditions of detention in general, the Committee observes that certain minimum standards regarding the conditions of detention must be observed regardless of a State party's level of development. These include, in accordance with rules 10, 12, 17, 19 and 20 of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, minimum floor space and cubic content of air for each prisoner, adequate sanitary facilities, clothing which shall be in no manner degrading or humiliating, provision of a separate bed and provision of food of nutritional value adequate for health and strength. It should be noted that these are minimum requirements which the Committee considers should always be observed, even if economic or budgetary considerations may make compliance with these obligations difficult.[99]

92. In the section of its Annual Report 1990–1991 concerning El Salvador, the IACiHR expressed profound concern over the poor prison conditions in which political prisoners were held (overcrowded facilities in bad condition, poor food and medical attention).[100]

93. In 1993, in a report on the situation of human rights in Peru, the IACiHR recommended, with reference to a prison to which members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement were transferred, that Peru allow into the prison clothing, medicine, coats and toiletries required by the inmates to meet their vital needs.[101]

[98] ICTY, Aleksovski case, Judgement, 25 June 1999, §§ 158, 164, 173 and 182.
[99] HRC, Mukong v. Cameroon, Views, 8 July 1992, § 9.3.
[100] IACiHR, Annual Report 1990-1991, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.79.rev.1 Doc. 12,22 February 1991, p. 440.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

94. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the detaining power is bound to provide, free of charge, for the maintenance of prisoners of war and for the medical attention required by their state of health". They further teach that "the daily food and the clothing shall be sufficient to keep prisoners of war in good health (e.g. quantity and quality adapted to climate)" and that "the medical service shall be adapted to the prisoners' needs (e.g. cleanliness of camp, conditions of health and hygiene, adequate infirmary, monthly medical inspection of prisoners)". Delegates also teach that POWs shall be allowed to "receive individual parcels or collective shipments".[102]

95. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that particular care should be taken to ensure that detained persons were provided "satisfactory material conditions with respect to hygiene, food and accommodation".[103]

96. Since 1995, the ICRC has supplemented the Rwandan government's provision for the basic needs of detainees. For instance, in 1999, the ICRC provided 11,399 tonnes of food to detainees in civilian prisons and detainees in a military prison to supplement their government-supplied rations; supplied Nutriset-enriched milk to severely malnourished detainees and carried out Body Mass Index tests to assess inmates' nutritional condition; distributed 321 tonnes of material assistance (mainly hygiene products) and basic medical supplies to detainees; and carried out repairs and renovation work to kitchens, firewood shelters, prison cells, sewers and waste-water and rainwater drainage systems to counter unhealthy conditions of detention.[104]

VI. Other Practice

97. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle

[101] IACiHR, Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Peru, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83 Doc. 31, 12 March 1993, pp. 27–29.

[102] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 668, 705, 706 and 716, see also § 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).

[103] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, Geneva, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

[104] ICRC, Annual Report 1999, Geneva, 2000, p. 93.

that "captured combatants and civilians under the authority of an adverse party . . . have the right . . . to receive relief".[105]

98. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "all persons deprived of their liberty shall be . . . provided with adequate food and drinking water, decent accommodation and clothing, and be afforded safeguards as regards health, hygiene, and working and social conditions".[106]

B. Accommodation for Women Deprived of Their Liberty

Note: For practice concerning the specific needs of women in general, see Chapter 39, section A.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

99. Article 25, fourth paragraph, and Article 29, second paragraph, GC III provide that in any camps in which men and women prisoners are accommodated together, separate dormitories and conveniences shall be provided for women.

100. Article 97, fourth paragraph, and Article 108, second paragraph, GC III provide that women POWs undergoing disciplinary punishment or convicted of an offence shall be confined in separate quarters from men and shall be under the immediate supervision of women.

101. Article 76, fourth paragraph, GC IV provides that women accused of an offence "shall be confined in separate quarters and shall be under the direct supervision of women".

102. Article 82, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "wherever possible, interned members of the same family shall be housed in the same premises and given separate accommodation from other internees, together with facilities for leading a proper family life".

103. Article 85, fourth paragraph, GC IV provides that:

> Whenever it is necessary, as an exceptional and temporary measure, to accommodate women internees who are not members of a family unit in the same place of internment as men, the provision of separate sleeping quarters and sanitary conveniences for the use of such women internees shall be obligatory.

104. Article 124, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "women internees undergoing disciplinary punishment shall be confined in separate quarters from male internees and shall be under the immediate supervision of women".

[105] ICRC archive document.

[106] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 4 (2), IRRC, No. 282, p. 332.

105. Article 75(5) AP I provides that:

> Women whose liberty has been restricted for reasons related to the armed conflict shall be held in quarters separated from men's quarters. They shall be under the immediate supervision of women. Nevertheless, in cases where families are detained or interned, they shall, whenever possible, be held in the same place and accommodated as family units.

Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[107]
106. Article 5(2)(a) AP II provides, with regard to persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict, that whether they are interned or detained, "except when men and women of a family are accommodated together, women shall be held in quarters separated from those of men and shall be under the immediate supervision of women". Article 5 AP I was adopted by consensus.[108]

Other Instruments
107. Rule 8(a) of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "men and women shall so far as possible be kept in separate institutions. In institutions which receive both men and women the whole of the premises allocated to women shall be entirely separate."
108. Rule 11(2) of the 1987 European Prison Rules provides that "males and females shall in principle be detained separately, although they may participate together in organised activities as part of an established treatment programme".
109. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75(5) AP I.
110. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75(5) AP I.
111. Section 8(e) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "women whose liberty has been restricted shall be held in quarters separated from men's quarters, and shall be under the immediate supervision of women".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
112. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "women [deprived of their liberty] shall be separated from men, unless they are from the same family".[109]

[107] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[108] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.
[109] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.07.

113. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that the sex of female prisoners "must be taken into account in the allocation of labour and in the provision of sleeping and sanitary facilities".[110]

114. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that separate accommodation shall be provided to women prisoners.[111]

115. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that in the treatment of female POWs, "their gender must also be taken into account in the allocation of labour and in the provision of sleeping and sanitary facilities".[112] Concerning internees, the manual states that "the treatment of internees [is] comparable to [the] provisions of GC III [including Articles 25 and 29] concerned with PWs".[113] It further refers to AP I and specifies that "women whose liberty has been restricted for reasons related to the armed conflict shall be held in quarters separated from men's quarters. They shall be under the immediate supervision of women."[114] The manual also provides that women undergoing sentences of imprisonment in occupied territories "must be confined in separate quarters and placed under the direct supervision of women".[115] In addition, the manual states that "the authority responsible for the detention or internment of persons during a non-international armed conflict shall, unless family members are detained together, detain men and women separately, with women under the direct supervision of women".[116]

116. Italy's IHL Manual provides that POWs shall be separated, if possible, according to sex.[117]

117. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "women must, if possible, be based in separate camps and barracks. In any case, separate dormitories shall be provided for them."[118] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "men and women [whose liberty has been restricted] must be separated".[119]

118. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that the sex of female detainees "must be taken into account in the allocation of labour and in the provision of sleeping and sanitary facilities".[120] It further states that "AP II provides that the authority responsible for detention or internment of persons during a non-international conflict shall, unless family members are detained together, detain men and women separately, with women under the direct supervision of women".[121]

[110] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1010.
[111] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 117, § 431.
[112] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 21.
[113] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 49.
[114] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-8, § 66.
[115] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12, § 62(b).
[116] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 26.
[117] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. II, Chapter III, § 6.
[118] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-7.
[119] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[120] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992) § 916.
[121] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1814(3).

119. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to IHL conventions and the UDHR is that, in the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty, "except when men and women of the same family are accommodated together, women shall be held in separate quarters and under the immediate supervision of women".[122]

120. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that detained women shall be housed separately.[123] According to the manual, the same rule applies to interned women.[124]

121. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that "the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict", as contained in Article 75 AP I, is part of customary international law.[125]

122. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "women shall be provided separate dormitories".[126]

123. The UK Military manual provides that "when men and women prisoners of war are accommodated in the same camp, separate sleeping quarters must be provided".[127]

124. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 25 GC III and 76 and 124 GC IV.[128]

125. The US Soldier's Manual provides that "it is particularly important to treat every captured or detained female with appropriate respect".[129]

National Legislation

126. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides a penalty for members of the armed forces who, in the event of an armed conflict, "breach the provisions governing the accommodation of women or families".[130]

127. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[131]

128. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 25, 29, 97 and 108 GC III and 76, 82, 85 and 124 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(5) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 5(2)(a) AP II, are punishable offences.[132]

[122] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 24.
[123] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 6.4.(b).1 and 6.4.(f).1.
[124] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.8.(f).2.
[125] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[126] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 119.
[127] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 148.
[128] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 101, 331 and 446.
[129] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 14.
[130] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[131] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[132] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

129. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[133]
130. Pakistan's Prisons Act stipulates that separate cells shall be provided for female prisoners.[134]
131. Rwanda's Prison Order states that women are to be housed separately from men.[135]

National Case-law
132. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
133. Indian regulations provide that detained women may not be housed with men, and that, where possible, women should be looked after by female police officers.[136]
134. An Indian police order dating from 1984 states that detained women shall be looked after by female police officers.[137]
135. The Report on the Practice of Jordan asserts that "Article 75 AP I embodies customary law".[138]
136. Based on a memo on accommodation in detention camps dating from 1950, the Report on the Practice of Malaysia states that during the communist insurgency, women and children were detained in separate facilities. Women were guarded exclusively by female guards.[139]
137. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[140]

[133] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[134] Pakistan, Prisons Act (1894), Article 27.
[135] Rwanda, Prison Order (1961), Articles 28–29.
[136] India, Ministry of Home Affairs, Circular on the treatment of women demonstrators by the police, Doc. No. VI-25013/4/81-GPA.II, 4 April 1981, Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[137] India, Commissioner of Police, Standing Order No. 93, Arrest of Women, Doc. No. 9609-9909/C&T-AC-II, 5 May 1984, Article 9, Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[138] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.6.
[139] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.3, referring to Memo on Accommodation in Detention Camps, December 1950, Archives ref: (56) in DCHQ/187/50.
[140] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

138. In a resolution adopted in 1980 on measures to prevent the exploitation of prostitution, ECOSOC appealed to governments to pay particular attention to the conditions of detention of women, especially in relation to their physical security.[141]

139. In a resolution adopted in 1984 on physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex, ECOSOC called on member States to take measures to eradicate physical violence against detained women and to submit their views on the matter to the UN Secretary-General.[142] It repeated this request in resolutions adopted in 1986 and 1990.[143]

Other International Organisations

140. No practice was found.

International Conferences

141. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

142. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

143. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "women's quarters shall be separated from men's quarters. They shall be under the immediate supervision of women."[144]

VI. Other Practice

144. No practice was found.

C. Accommodation for Children Deprived of Their Liberty

Note: For practice concerning the specific needs of children in general, see Chapter 39, section B.

[141] ECOSOC, Res. 1980/4, 16 April 1980, §§ 3–4.
[142] ECOSOC, Res. 1984/19, 24 May 1984, §§ 1–3.
[143] ECOSOC, Res. 1986/29, 23 May 1986, §§ 2–5; Res. 1990/5, 24 May 1990, §§ 1–4.
[144] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 689, see also § 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

145. Article 76, fifth paragraph, GC IV provides that, in the treatment of protected persons accused of an offence, "proper regard shall be paid to the special treatment due to minors" who are detained.

146. Article 82, second and third paragraphs, GC IV provides that:

> Throughout the duration of their internment, members of the same family, and in particular parents and children, shall be lodged together in the same place of internment, except when separation of a temporary nature is necessitated for reasons of employment or health or for the purposes of enforcement of the provisions of Chapter IX of the present Section. Internees may request that their children who are left at liberty without parental care shall be interned with them.
>
> Wherever possible, interned members of the same family shall be housed in the same premises and given separate accommodation from other internees, together with facilities for leading a proper family life.

147. Article 10(2)(b) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "accused juveniles shall be separated from adults". Article 10(3) provides that "juvenile offenders shall be segregated from adults and be accorded treatment appropriate to their age and legal status".

148. Article 77(4) AP I provides that, "if arrested, detained or interned for reasons related to the armed conflict, children shall be held in quarters separate from the quarters of adults, except where families are accommodated as family units as provided in Article 75, paragraph 5". Article 77 AP I was adopted by consensus.[145]

149. Article 37(c) of the 1989 UN Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child deprived of liberty shall be separated from adults unless it is considered in the child's best interest not to do so".

150. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Australia stated that "the obligation to separate children from adults in prison is accepted only to the extent that such imprisonment is considered by the responsible authorities to be feasible and consistent with the obligation that children be able to maintain contact with their families".[146]

151. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Canada reserved the right "not to detain children separately from adults where this is not appropriate or feasible".[147]

152. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Iceland stated that:

[145] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[146] Australia, Reservation made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 17 December 1990, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 12.
[147] Canada, Reservation made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 13 December 1991, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 14.

The separation of juvenile prisoners from adult prisoners is not obligatory under Icelandic law. However, the law relating to prisons and imprisonment provides that when deciding in which penal institution imprisonment is to take place account should be taken of, inter alia, the age of the prisoner. In light of the circumstances prevailing in Iceland it is expected that decisions on the imprisonment of juveniles will always take account of the juvenile's best interests.[148]

153. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Japan reserved the right not to apply Article 37(c) "considering the fact that in Japan as regards persons deprived of liberty, those who are below 20 years of age are to be generally separated from those who are of 20 years of age and over under its national law".[149]

154. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, New Zealand reserved the right not to apply Article 37(c) "in circumstances where the shortage of suitable facilities makes the mixing of juveniles and adults unavoidable" and "where mixing is considered to be of benefit to the persons concerned".[150]

155. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, the UK reserved the right not to apply Article 37(c) "where at any time there is a lack of suitable accommodation or adequate facilities for a particular individual in any institution in which young offenders are detained, or where the mixing of adults and children is deemed to be mutually beneficial".[151]

Other Instruments

156. Rule 8(d) of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "young prisoners shall be kept separate from adults".

157. Rule 11(4) of the 1987 European Prison Rules provides that "young prisoners shall be detained under conditions which as far as possible protect them from harmful influences and which take account of the needs peculiar to their age".

158. Rule 13.4 of the 1985 Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice provides that "juveniles under detention pending trial shall be kept separate from adults and shall be detained in a separate institution or in a separate part of an institution also holding adults".

159. Rule 29 of the 1990 Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty provides that "in all detention facilities juveniles should be separated from adults, unless they are members of the same family".

[148] Iceland, Declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 28 October 1992, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 20.

[149] Japan, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 22 April 1994, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 22.

[150] New Zealand, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 April 1993, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 27.

[151] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 16 December 1991, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 31.

160. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(4) AP I.
161. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(4) AP I.
162. According to Principles 17(4) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, "members of internally displaced families whose personal liberty has been restricted by internment or confinement in camps shall have the right to remain together".
163. Section 8(f) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that:

> In cases where children who have not attained the age of sixteen years take a direct part in hostilities and are arrested, detained or interned by the United Nations force, they shall continue to benefit from special protection. In particular, they shall be held in quarters separate from the quarters of adults, except when accommodated with their families.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
164. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that:

> During internment, members of the same family, and in particular parents and children, shall be held in the same place of internment . . .
>
> Internees can request that their children, left at liberty without the supervision of their parents, shall be interned with them.
>
> As much as possible, interned members of the same family shall be accommodated in the same place, and shall be housed separately from the other internees. They shall be afforded the necessary facilities for leading a normal family life.[152]

165. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that arrested children shall be lodged together with their families in the same place of internment.[153] It further provides that, in non–international armed conflict, "children shall receive assistance . . . in order to reunite them with their families when they are temporarily separated from them".[154]
166. Australia's Defence Force Manual specifies that "in case of arrest, children should be kept in separate quarters from those of adults".[155]
167. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that separate accommodation shall be provided to children.[156]

[152] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.022.
[153] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.
[154] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[155] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 947.
[156] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 117, § 431.

168. Canada's LOAC Manual states that, wherever possible, interned "family members must be housed in the same place and premises".[157] With respect to non–international armed conflicts, the manual provides that "family members are detained together".[158]

169. Germany's Military Manual provides that "the detaining power shall ensure that members of the same family are lodged together in the same place of internment".[159]

170. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that children under six years shall be housed with their mothers.[160] It also states, regarding the placing of prisoners in camps, that "family sections" are provided "in order to house family groups".[161]

171. The UK Military Manual states that "the general provisions of [GC IV] lay down, inter alia, . . . that as far as possible families must not be separated but must be given separate accommodation as family units".[162]

172. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 76 GC IV.[163]

National Legislation

173. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[164]

174. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 76 and 82 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 77(4) AP I, are punishable offences.[165]

175. Nicaragua's Constitution provides that minor offenders shall not be detained in "centres of criminal readaptation" but shall be accommodated in "centres under the responsibility of a special organism".[166]

176. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[167]

177. Pakistan's Prisons Act provides that separate cells shall be provided for prisoners under 21 years of age.[168]

[157] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 51.
[158] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 26.
[159] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 593.
[160] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.4.(f).1.
[161] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.8.f.(1).
[162] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 56.
[163] US, Field Manual (1956), § 446.
[164] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[165] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[166] Nicaragua, Constitution (1987), Article 35.
[167] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[168] Pakistan, Prisons Act (1894), Article 27.

178. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines states that any child involved in an armed conflict, whether as a spy, courier, guide or combatant, shall be entitled to separate detention facilities, free legal assistance, notice of arrest to parents and release of the child to the social services department for protective custody.[169]
179. Rwanda's Prison Order states that prisoners under the age of 18 are to be held separately.[170]

National Case-law
180. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
181. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 77 AP I to be part of customary international law.[171]
182. On the basis of a memo on accommodation in detention camps dating from 1950, the Report on the Practice of Malaysia states that during the period of the communist insurgency, women and children were detained in separate facilities.[172]
183. In 1993, Peru informed the CRC that under Peruvian law, "children tried for terrorist activities must be detained separately from adults".[173]
184. In 1993, in its initial report to the CRC, the Philippines stated that "in any case where a child is arrested for reasons related to armed conflict, he or she shall be entitled to separate detention from adults".[174]
185. In presenting his government's report to the HRC in 1985, the UK representative explained that while a derogation from the provision on housing detained minors separately from adults had been necessitated by the large numbers of juveniles convicted of terrorist offences, the situation had been remedied by the construction of two new juvenile detention centres.[175]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

186. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

187. In its General Comment on Article 10 of the 1966 ICCPR (humane treatment of persons deprived of their liberty), the HRC held that:

[169] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Article X.
[170] Rwanda, Prison Order (1961), Articles 28–29.
[171] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[172] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.3, referring to Memo on Accommodation in Detention Camps, December 1950, Archives ref: (56) in DCHQ/187/50.
[173] Peru, Statement before the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/SR.84, 30 September 1993, § 25.
[174] Philippines, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.23, 3 November 1993, § 203.
[175] UK, Statement before the HRC, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.594, 9 April 1985, § 23.

Moreover, the Committee notes that in the reports of some States parties no information has been provided concerning the treatment accorded to accused juvenile persons and juvenile offenders. Article 10, paragraph 2 (b), provides that accused juvenile persons shall be separated from adults. The information given in reports shows that some States parties are not paying the necessary attention to the fact that this is a mandatory provision of the Covenant . . . Lastly, under article 10, paragraph 3, juvenile offenders shall be segregated from adults and be accorded treatment appropriate to their age and legal status in so far as conditions of detention are concerned, such as shorter working hours and contact with relatives, with the aim of furthering their reformation and rehabilitation.[176]

188. In 1979, in a report on the situation of human rights in Nicaragua, the IACiHR censured the Nicaraguan government for its failure to adhere to the requirements of the Nicaraguan Constitution which provides that minors should not be incarcerated with adults.[177]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

189. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "children's quarters shall be separated from adults' quarters, except where families are accommodated as family units".[178]

VI. Other Practice

190. No practice was found.

D. Location of Internment and Detention Centres

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

191. Article 22, first paragraph, GC III provides that "prisoners of war may be interned only in premises located on land and affording every guarantee of hygiene and healthfulness".

192. Article 23, first paragraph, GC III provides that "no prisoner of war may at any time be sent to, or detained in areas where he may be exposed to the fire of the combat zone".

[176] HRC, General Comment No. 21 (Article 10 ICCPR), 10 April 1992, § 13.

[177] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Nicaragua, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.45 Doc. 16 rev. 1, 17 November 1979, p. 64.

[178] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 690, see also § 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).

193. Article 83, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Detaining Power shall not set up places of internment in areas particularly exposed to the dangers of war".
194. Article 85, first paragraph, GC IV provides that:

> The Detaining Power is bound to take all necessary and possible measures to ensure that protected persons shall, from the outset of their internment, be accommodated in buildings or quarters which afford every possible safeguard as regards hygiene and health, and provide efficient protection against the rigours of the climate and the effects of the war. In no case shall permanent places of internment be situated in unhealthy areas or in districts, the climate of which is injurious to the internees.

195. Article 5(1)(b) AP II provides that persons whose liberty has been restricted shall be "afforded safeguards as regards health and hygiene". Article 5(2)(c) provides that "places of internment or detention shall not be located close to the combat zone". Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[179]

Other Instruments
196. Article 4(6) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "all persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict shall . . . be confined in a secure place".
197. Section 8(b) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that detained persons "shall be held in secure and safe premises which provide all possible safeguards of hygiene and health, and shall not be detained in areas exposed to the dangers of the combat zone".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
198. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "prisoners of war may be interned only in premises located on land and affording every guarantee of hygiene and healthfulness".[180]
199. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "prisoners of war may be interned only in premises located on land and affording every guarantee of hygiene and healthfulness". It adds that "no prisoners may be detained in areas where they may be exposed to the fire of the combat zone".[181]
200. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "PW camps must not be located near military objectives with the intention of securing exemption from attack for those objectives".[182] It further states that "PWs may only be interned

[179] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.
[180] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.019.
[181] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.12.
[182] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1014.

on land and centres of internment must be established in healthy areas, with prisoners having facilities guaranteeing hygiene and health".[183]

201. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that POWs shall be evacuated as soon as possible to camps located away from the combat zone so as to be out of danger.[184]

202. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers provides that "to the extent possible, POWs must be kept away from combat zones and from possible violence by the hostile population".[185]

203. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that internment centres "shall be located at a sufficient distance between military objectives and civilian or sanitary objects". It also states that "prisoners of war camps shall not be improvised . . . and guarantee sufficient conditions of hygiene and healthfulness".[186]

204. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "POWs may only be interned on land. Centres of internment must be established in healthy areas, with POWs having facilities guaranteeing hygiene and healthfulness."[187] Concerning the treatment of internees, the manual stresses that "internment camps must not be located in areas particularly exposed to the dangers of war".[188] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual provides that "places of internment or detention shall not be located close to the combat zone. When the place of detention becomes particularly exposed to danger from the conflict, persons held shall be evacuated."[189]

205. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, internment and detention centres shall be located in secure areas, away from the combat zones.[190]

206. Croatia's Commanders' Manual states that POW and internment camps must not be situated in combat zones.[191]

207. France's LOAC Manual provides that "prisoners of war shall not be needlessly exposed to the dangers of combat".[192] It also states that "the regulation of treatment of civilian internees is very similar to that of prisoners of war".[193]

208. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that POW camps and civilian internment camps must not be exposed to the combat zone.[194]

[183] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1016.
[184] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 45.
[185] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 20.
[186] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 117, § 431.
[187] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 32.
[188] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 52.
[189] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 26.
[190] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 21.
[191] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), §§ 99 and 100.
[192] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 102.
[193] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 73.
[194] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.

209. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that internment camps for POWs "must not be exposed to the combat zone".[195]
210. Germany's Military Manual provides that "POW camps shall not be situated in danger zones".[196]
211. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "the detaining state must evacuate the prisoners from the front as soon as possible, to get them out of harm's way".[197]
212. Italy's IHL Manual provides that POWs shall be located far enough from the combat line and in healthy areas.[198]
213. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "PW camps shall not be situated in combat zones".[199]
214. Mali's Army Regulations provides that "prisoners shall be evacuated as soon as possible to a gathering point located far enough from the combat zone. While waiting for their evacuation, they should not be unnecessarily exposed to danger."[200]
215. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "camps must not be located in areas where they may be exposed to the fire of the combat zone".[201] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "detention and internment camps must not be located too close to the combat zone".[202]
216. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "camps must not be located near military objectives with the intention of securing exemption from attack for these objectives, and must be provided with the same protective measures against aerial attack as is the civilian population". It adds that "the practice, common during World War I, of placing camps near military objectives as prophylactic reprisals on the ground that the enemy's own forces had indulged in illegal activities is clearly forbidden".[203] The manual further points out that "internment camps must not be located in areas particularly exposed to the dangers of war".[204] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that according to AP II, "places of internment or detention shall not be located close to the combat zone".[205]
217. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to IHL conventions and the UDHR is that detention centres shall

[195] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[196] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 714.
[197] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 52.
[198] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. II, Chapter III, § 6 and Chapter XVI, § 118.
[199] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), No. 8-0, § 01.
[200] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[201] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-6, § 4.
[202] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[203] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 922(1), note 65.
[204] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1123(3).
[205] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1814(3).

not be located close to trouble zones. Persons deprived of their liberty shall be evacuated when the place becomes particularly dangerous.[206]

218. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that detention centres must be located in an area far enough from the combat zones.[207]

219. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "internment shall always take place in premises located on land, where the climate is favourable and where security conditions are sufficient".[208]

220. The UK Military Manual states that "internment camps must be outside the combat zone".[209] It also provides that "prisoners of war may be interned only in premises which are on land and which are in every way healthy and hygienic".[210]

221. The UK LOAC Manual states that "PW camps must be located on land, not in prison ships, and afford every guarantee of hygiene and health".[211]

222. The US Field Manual states that "the Detaining Power shall not set up places of internment in areas particularly exposed to the dangers of war".[212] It also states that "prisoners of war may be interned only in premises located on land and affording every guarantee of hygiene and healthfulness".[213]

223. The US Air Force Pamphlet requires "internment only on land and not in unhealthy areas".[214]

National Legislation

224. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "the Armed Forces of Azerbaijan, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies are not allowed to keep prisoners of war in the territory of Azerbaijan in the zone of hostilities".[215] It further provides that prisoners of war are entitled "to be kept in buildings situated in a zone ensuring protection of security, hygiene and health".[216]

225. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[217]

226. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 22 and 23

[206] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 24.
[207] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.4.a.
[208] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 118.
[209] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 147.
[210] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 146.
[211] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 30, § 16(a).
[212] US, Field Manual (1956), § 290.
[213] US, Field Manual (1956), § 98.
[214] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-4.
[215] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 19.
[216] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 22(4).
[217] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

GC III and 83 and 85 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 5(1)(b) and (2)(c) AP II, are punishable offences.[218]

227. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[219]

National Case-law

228. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

229. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US advised the government of Iraq that "Iraqi prisoners of war ... will not be exposed to danger ... [and] will be safeguarded against harm during combat operations".[220]

230. In 1991, in a report submitted to the UN Security Council on operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that "Iraqi authorities have continued to ignore the standards of the Geneva conventions in blatant disregard for international law. They have ... deliberately exposed [coalition prisoners of war] to combat danger."[221]

231. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[222]

232. In 1977, in a meeting with the ICRC, a government official of a State involved in an internal armed conflict initially denied that the armed forces took prisoners, stating that combatants of the adverse party were simply disarmed and sent home. He subsequently admitted that a limited number of prisoners were detained in various areas throughout the combat zone. The ICRC pointed out that, according to the Geneva Conventions, prisoners must be located far enough from the dangers of war and interned in one or more safe areas.[223]

[218] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[219] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[220] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, Annex I, p. 2.
[221] US, Letter dated 8 February 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22216, 13 February 1991, p. 2; see also Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22130, 22 January 1991.
[222] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[223] ICRC archive document.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

233. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

234. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

235. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

> No prisoner of war may at any time be sent to or detained in areas where he may be exposed to combat actions. Prisoners of war interned in unhealthy areas, or where the climate is injurious for them, shall be removed as soon as possible to a more favourable climate . . . Prisoner of war camps shall not be located in areas exposed to combat action.[224]

236. In a press release in 1985, the ICRC stated that the closure of the Insar camp in southern Lebanon and the subsequent transfer by the Israeli occupation authorities of more than 1,000 of the inmates to Israel was a violation of Articles 49 and 76 GC IV.[225]

237. In 1992, in a letter to the authorities of a State involved in a non-international armed conflict, the ICRC recalled the obligation to detain prisoners in places protected from the hostilities.[226]

238. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "persons deprived of their freedom, both civilians and military personnel, . . . must not be detained in the vicinity of combat zones".[227]

239. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that particular care should be taken to ensure that persons are "detained at locations where their safety is guaranteed".[228]

[224] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 671, 672 and 675, see also § 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).
[225] ICRC, Press Release No. 1504, South Lebanon: Closure of Insar Camp, 4 April 1985.
[226] ICRC archive document.
[227] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.
[228] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, Geneva, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

VI. Other Practice

240. Between 1985 and 1986, the leaders of several armed opposition groups involved in the same non-international armed conflict suggested at different times the creation of safe areas, either on national or third State territory, where captured combatants could be detained and their safety ensured.[229]

E. Pillage of the Personal Belongings of Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

Note: For practice concerning pillage in general, see Chapter 16, section D.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

241. Article 18 GC III provides that:

All effects and articles of personal use, except arms, horses, military equipment and military documents, shall remain in the possession of prisoners of war, likewise their metal helmets and gas masks and like articles issued for personal protection. Effects and articles used for their clothing or feeding shall likewise remain in their possession, even if such effects and articles belong to their regulation military equipment.

At no time should prisoners of war be without identity documents. The Detaining Power shall supply such documents to prisoners of war who possess none.

Badges of rank and nationality, decorations and articles having above all a personal or sentimental value may not be taken from prisoners of war.

Sums of money carried by prisoners of war may not be taken away from them except by order of an officer, and after the amount and particulars of the owner have been recorded in a special register and an itemized receipt has been given, legibly inscribed with the name, rank and unit of the person issuing the said receipt. Sums in the currency of the Detaining Power, or which are changed into such currency at the prisoner's request, shall be placed to the credit of the prisoner's account as provided in Article 64.

The Detaining Power may withdraw articles of value from prisoners of war only for reasons of security: when such articles are withdrawn, the procedure laid down for sums of money impounded shall apply.

Such objects, likewise sums taken away in any currency other than that of the Detaining Power and the conversion of which has not been asked for by the owners, shall be kept in the custody of the Dataining Power and shall be returned in their initial shape to prisoners of war at the end of their captivity.

242. Article 97 GC IV provides that:

Internees shall be permitted to retain articles of personal use. Monies, cheques, bonds, etc., and valuables in their possession may not be taken from them except in accordance with established procedure. Detailed receipts shall be given therefor.

[229] ICRC archive documents.

The amounts shall be paid into the account of every internee as provided for in Article 98. Such amounts may not be converted into any other currency unless legislation in force in the territory in which the owner is interned so requires or the internee gives his consent.

Articles which have above all a personal or sentimental value may not be taken away.

A woman internee shall not be searched except by a woman.

On release or repatriation, internees shall be given all articles, monies or other valuables taken from them during internment and shall receive in currency the balance of any credit to their accounts kept in accordance with Article 98, with the exception of any articles or amounts withheld by the Detaining Power by virtue of its legislation in force. If the property of an internee is so withheld, the owner shall receive a detailed receipt.

Family or identity documents in the possession of internees may not be taken away without a receipt begin given. At no time shall internees be left without identity documents. If they have none, they shall be issued with special documents drawn up by the detaining authorities, which will serve as their identity papers until the end of their internment.

Internees may keep on their persons a certain amount of money, in cash or in the shape of purchase coupons, to enable them to make purchases.

243. Article 4(2)(g) AP II provides for the prohibition of acts of pillage against "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[230]

Other Instruments

244. Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that pillage of persons hors de combat is prohibited.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

245. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "the personal property of . . . detained persons . . . shall not be taken".[231]

246. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that the appropriation of personal property of POWs is an ordinary breach of IHL.[232]

247. The US Instructor's Guide states that "in addition to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the following acts are further examples of war crimes: . . . taking and keeping a captured enemy soldier's personal property".[233]

[230] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[231] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 8, § 2.
[232] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-6.
[233] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 13 and 14.

National Legislation

248. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who "plunders the . . . prisoner of war or civilian internee".[234]

249. Australia's Defence Force Discipline Act, in an article on looting, provides that:

> A person, being a defence member or a defence civilian, who, in the course of operations against the enemy, or in the course of operations undertaken by the Defence Force for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities –
>
> . . .
>
> takes any property from the body of a person . . . captured in those operations . . . is guilty of [a punishable] offence.[235]

250. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that any "person who, on the battlefield, takes away objects from . . . a captive . . . person, with the intention to unlawfully appropriate them" commits a punishable crime.[236]

251. Under Chad's Code of Military Justice, taking property from prisoners of war is a criminal offence.[237]

252. Chile's Code of Military Justice provides for a prison sentence for "anyone who plunders the clothing or other objects belonging to . . . a prisoner of war in order to appropriate them".[238]

253. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a sanction on "anyone who, during an armed conflict, despoils . . . a protected person".[239]

254. Cuba's Military Criminal Code punishes "anyone who, in areas of military operations, for personal gain, plunders the money or other belongings of . . . prisoners".[240]

255. El Salvador's Code of Military Justice provides that "a soldier who plunders the clothes or other personal effects of . . . a prisoner of war in order to appropriate them" commits a punishable offence.[241]

256. Under Greece's Military Penal Code, "the soldier who takes money or other belongings away from a prisoners of war" is to be punished.[242]

257. Iraq's Military Penal Code states that "every person who, with the intent to appropriate for himself or unjustifiably, . . . takes the property of the prisoner whom he is ordered to guard, shall be punished".[243]

[234] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(8) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[235] Australia, Defence Force Discipline Act (1982), Section 48(1).
[236] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Article 405.
[237] Chad, Code of Military Justice (1962), Article 62.
[238] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 263.
[239] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 151.
[240] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Article 43(1).
[241] El Salvador, Code of Military Justice (1934), Article 70.
[242] Greece, Military Penal Code (1995), Article 164.
[243] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Article 115(a).

258. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2)(g) AP II, is a punishable offence.[244]

259. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides that the soldier who steals money or other objects from a prisoner of war, with the intent to appropriate them for himself or for others, is guilty of a punishable offence.[245]

260. New Zealand's Armed Forces Discipline Act provides that:

> Every person subject to this Act commits the offence of looting, and is liable to imprisonment for life, who –
>
> (a) Steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . captured in the course of any war or warlike operations in which New Zealand is engaged, or . . . detained in the course of operations undertaken by any service of the Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil power.[246]

261. Nicaragua's Military Penal Law punishes "anyone who, in military operations, steals, for personal gain, the money or other belongings of . . . prisoners".[247]

262. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of the soldier who, in the zone of operations, "despoils . . . a prisoner of war of his or her clothes or other personal effects".[248]

263. Under Nigeria's Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended, looting is a punishable offence. A person is guilty of looting who "steals from, or with intent to steal, searches the body of a person . . . captured in the course of war-like operations, or . . . detained in the course of operations undertaken by any service of the Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities".[249]

264. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[250]

265. Paraguay's Military Penal Code punishes "any soldier who has plundered . . . a prisoner of war".[251]

266. Peru's Code of Military Justice provides that despoiling prisoners of war is punishable.[252]

[244] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[245] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 214.
[246] New Zealand, Armed Forces Discipline Act (1971), Section 31(a).
[247] Nicaragua, Military Penal Law (1980), Article 81.
[248] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 56(1).
[249] Nigeria, Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended (1993), Section 51(a).
[250] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[251] Paraguay, Military Penal Code (1980), Article 293.
[252] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Article 95(5).

267. Singapore's Armed Forces Act as amended provides that:

Every person subject to military law who –

(a) steals from or, with intent to steal, searches the person of anyone . . . captured in the course of warlike operations, or . . . detained in the course operations undertaken by the Singapore Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities . . . shall be guilty of looting and shall be liable on conviction by a subordinate military court to imprisonment.[253]

268. Under Spain's Military Criminal Code, "the soldier who . . . strips . . . a prisoner of war of his personal effects in the area of operations, with the intent to appropriate them," commits a punishable offence against the laws and customs of war.[254]

269. Under Spain's Penal Code, "anyone who, on the occasion of an armed conflict . . . strips . . . a prisoner of war or an interned civilian of his personal effects" commits a punishable "offence against protected persons and objects in the event of armed conflict".[255]

270. The UK Army Act as amended provides that:

Any person subject to military law who –

(a) steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . captured in the course of warlike operations, or . . . detained in the course of operations undertaken by Her Majesty's forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities, . . . shall be guilty of looting and liable, on conviction by court-martial, to imprisonment or any less punishment provided by this Act.[256]

271. The UK Air Force Act as amended provides that:

Any person subject to air-force law who –

(a) steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . captured in the course of warlike operations, or . . . detained in the course of operations undertaken by Her Majesty's forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities, . . . shall be guilty of looting and liable, on conviction by court-martial, to imprisonment or any less punishment provided by this Act.[257]

272. Under Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, it is a crime against international law to "plunder . . . prisoners of war".[258]

273. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, any person who despoils a prisoner is guilty, upon conviction, of a war crime.[259]

[253] Singapore, Armed Forces Act as amended (1972), Section 18(a).
[254] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(2).
[255] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 612(7).
[256] UK, Army Act as amended (1955), Section 30(a).
[257] UK, Air Force Act as amended (1955), Section 30(a).
[258] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(11).
[259] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 20.

National Case-law
274. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
275. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
276. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that "violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II thereto committed in an armed conflict not of an international character have long been considered customary international law . . . Under the Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC), . . . they are recognized as war enimes".[260]

Other International Organisations
277. No practice was found.

International Conferences
278. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

279. In the Tadić case before the ICTY in 1995, the accused was charged with participation in the plunder and destruction of personal and real property of non-Serbs and looting of valuables of non-Serbs both when they were captured and upon their arrival in camps and detention centres.[261] In its judgement in 1997, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that, in the absence of evidence, the accused could not be convicted of having taken part in the plunder and looting of valuables or personal property.[262]
280. In the Jelisić case before the ICTY in 1995, the accused was charged with violation of the laws and customs of war (plunder of private property).[263] In its judgement in 1999, the ICTY Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of the plunder of private property under Article 3(e) of the 1993 ICTY Statute. It held that plunder was the "fraudulent appropriation of public or private funds belonging to the enemy or the opposing party perpetrated during an armed conflict and related thereto". It further held that "the individual acts of plunder

[260] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.
[261] ICTY, Tadić case, Second Amended Indictment, 14 December 1995, §§ 4 and 4.2.
[262] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement, 7 May 1997, §§ 448 and 464.
[263] ICTY, Jelisić case, Initial Indictment, 21 July 1995, § 42.

perpetrated by people motivated by greed might entail individual criminal responsibility on the part of its perpetrators". The defendant pleaded guilty to the offence of having stolen money, watches, jewellery and other valuables from detainees on their arrival at Luka camp in Bosnia and Herzegovina.[264]

281. In the Delalić case before the ICTY in 1996, the accused were charged, inter alia, with violations of the laws and customs of war (plunder of private property) for having "participated in the plunder of money, watches and other valuable property belonging to persons detained at Čelebići camp".[265] However, in its judgement in 1998, the ICTY eventually dismissed this count.[266] It stated that:

> . . . even when considered in the light most favourable to the Prosecution, the evidence before the Trial Chamber fails to demonstrate that any property taken from the detainees in the čelebići prison-camp was of sufficient monetary value for its unlawful appropriation to involve grave consequences for the victims. Accordingly, it is the Trial Chamber's opinion that the offences, as alleged, cannot be considered to constitute such serious violations of international humanitarian law that they fall within the subject matter jurisdiction of the International Tribunal pursuant to Article 1 of the Statute. Count 49 of the Indictment is thus dismissed.[267]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

282. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

283. No practice was found.

F. Recording and Notification of Personal Details of Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

284. Article 14, first paragraph, of the 1899 HR provides that:

> A bureau for information relative to prisoners of war is instituted, on the commencement of hostilities, in each of the belligerent States, and, when necessary, in the neutral countries on whose territory belligerents have been received. This bureau is intended to answer all inquiries about prisoners of war, and is furnished by the various services concerned with all the necessary information to enable it to [264] ICTY, Jelisić case, Judgement, 14 December 1999, §§ 46–49.

[265] ICTY, Delalić case, Initial Indictment, 21 March 1996, § 37.
[266] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 584–592 and 1154, and Part VI (Judgement).
[267] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 1154

keep an individual return for each prisoner of war. It is kept informed of internments and changes, as well as of admissions into hospital and death.

285. Article 14, first paragraph, of the 1907 HR provides that:

> An inquiry office for prisoners of war is instituted on the commencement of hostilities in each of the belligerent States, and, when necessary, in the neutral countries which have received belligerents in their territory. It is the function of this office to reply to all inquiries about the prisoners. It receives from the various services concerned full information respecting internments and transfers, releases on parole, exchanges, escapes, admissions into hospital, deaths, as well as other information necessary to enable it to make out and keep up to date an individual return for each prisoner of war.

286. Article 122 GC III provides that each party shall institute an official Information Bureau for POWs whose function it is to collect detainees' details and location and forward them to the powers concerned.

287. Article 123 GC III provides that "a Central Information Agency shall be created in a neutral country. The International Committee of the Red Cross shall, if it deems necessary, propose to the Powers concerned the organization of such an Agency." Its function is to collect all information respecting detainees – notably the capture cards – and transmit it to the powers concerned.

288. With respect to civilian internees, Articles 136, 137 and 140 GC IV contain regulations that are analogous to those applicable to prisoners of war found in Articles 122 and 123 GC III.

289. Article XI of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons provides that "States Parties shall establish and maintain official up-to-date registries of their detainees and shall make them available to relatives, judges, attorneys, any other person having a legitimate interest, and other authorities".

290. Article IX of the 1995 Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Peace Settlement annexed to the Dayton Accords stated that, in order to speed up the release process, the parties were to draw up comprehensive lists of prisoners, including details of their nationality, name, rank, and any internment or military serial number, and provide these to the ICRC, the other parties, the Joint Military Commission and the High Representative within 21 days.

Other Instruments

291. Rule 7 of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that:

> In every place where persons are imprisoned there shall be kept a bound registration book with numbered pages in which shall be entered in respect of each prisoner received:
> (a) information concerning his identity;
> (b) the reasons for his commitment and authority therefor;
> (c) the day and hour of his admission and release.

292. Rule 8 of the 1987 European Prison Rules provides that:

> In every place where persons are imprisoned a complete and secure record of the following information shall be kept concerning each prisoner received:
> a. information concerning the identity of the prisoner;
> b. the reasons for commitment and the authority therefor;
> c. the day and hour of admission and release.

293. Principle 16 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that:

> Promptly after arrest and after each transfer from one place of detention or imprisonment to another, a detained or imprisoned person shall be entitled to notify or to require the competent authority to notify members of his family or other appropriate persons of his choice of his arrest, detention or imprisonment or of the transfer and of the place where he is kept in custody.

294. Paragraph 3 of the 1991 Agreement between Croatia and the SFRY on the Exchange of Prisoners provides that "both Parties shall exchange the lists of all prisoners, with precise indication of the place where these prisoners are detained, and copies of these lists shall be handed over to the representative of the ICRC".

295. Paragraph 2 of Agreement No. 2 on the Implementation of the Agreement of 22 May 1992 between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that a Commission, consisting of four liaison officers appointed by the parties, would be created under the auspices of the ICRC and assume the exchange of lists of prisoners.

296. Section IV of the 1992 Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that "the parties will notify the ICRC of the identity of all persons captured or detained".

297. Article 6(2) of the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners provides that "each party will notify the ICRC . . . of the name and location of any other places where prisoners are being held on the territory under its control and of all prisoners held in those places".

298. Article 3 of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that:

> Shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons [hors de combat] . . . failure to report the identity, personal condition and circumstances of a person deprived of his/her liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict to the Parties to enable them to perform their duties and responsibilities under this Agreement and under international humanitarian law.

299. Article 4(6) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "sufficient information shall be made available concerning persons who have been deprived of their liberty".

300. Section 8(a) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, regarding the treatment of detained persons, provides that "their capture and detention shall be notified without delay to the party on which they depend and to the Central Tracing Agency of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), in particular in order to inform their families".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

301. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "upon the outbreak of a conflict and in all cases of occupation, each of the Parties to the conflict shall institute an official Information Bureau for prisoners of war who are in its power". It further notes that each of the Parties to the conflict shall give its Bureau the information regarding any enemy person who has fallen into its Power. The manual adds that:

> The information shall include, in so far as available to the Information Bureau, in respect of each prisoner of war, his surname, first names, rank, army, regimental, personal or serial number, place and full date of birth, indication of the Power on which he depends, first name of the father and maiden name of the mother, name and address of the person to be informed and the address to which correspondence for the prisoner may be sent . . .
>
> A Central Prisoners of War Information Agency shall be created in a neutral country . . . The function of the Agency shall be to collect all the information it may obtain through official or private channels respecting prisoners of war, and to transmit it as rapidly as possible to the country of origin of the prisoners of war or to the Power on which they depend.[268]

302. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "basic identifying information is required by the enemy to enable notification of capture to the Central PW Information Bureau".[269]

303. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "a list of evacuated prisoners shall be established as soon as possible".[270]

304. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that all prisoners arriving in camps shall be identified, registered and recorded.[271] It further states that a list of prisoners shall be established and sent to the National Information Bureau.[272]

305. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "a list of prisoners must be established as soon as possible. When operations permit, the list must be communicated to the official organs of the Red Cross."[273]

[268] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 2.101 and 2.102.
[269] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 710.
[270] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 36(4).
[271] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 118, § 431.
[272] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 46, § 163.
[273] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 33.

306. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that an official information bureau shall be established at the outbreak of hostilities to gather and pass on all information concerning POWs.[274] It further states that:

> Each party is bound, as soon as possible, to give its bureau full particulars relating to the placing in custody for more than 2 weeks, the placing in assigned residence, or internment, of any protected person . . . It is the duty of each party to see that its various departments give the bureau prompt information concerning the protected persons, e.g., transfers, releases, repatriations, escape, admissions to hospital, births and deaths.[275]

307. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations states that "a list of evacuated prisoners must be established as soon as possible".[276]

308. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that "suspected civilian persons who have been detained must be listed in the register of accused persons, which has to be notified to the ICRC delegate on the day of his or her visit to the place of detention".[277] It also states that "enemies who surrender must be captured [and] . . . their names must be listed in the register of accused persons".[278]

309. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "the identity of POWs shall be established as soon as possible".[279]

310. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that the identity of every prisoner of war "shall be established as soon as possible and be mentioned on an identity card which shall be given to him at this occasion".[280]

311. Germany's Military Manual provides that:

> The Detaining Power is obliged to forward information regarding the fate of prisoners of war . . . For this purpose each of the Parties to the conflict shall institute a National Information Bureau upon the outbreak of a conflict and in all cases of occupation. The Bureau shall cooperate with the Central Tracing Agency of the ICRC.[281]

312. India's Manual of Military Law provides that after arrest under the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act, a list of persons arrested shall be prepared.[282]

313. Indonesia's Military Manual states that "the parties to the conflict should maintain a register of captured persons, imprisoned persons, detainees and those who have died after capture".[283]

314. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, during the Yom Kippur War, "the Arab States deprived Israeli prisoners of war of their rights according

[274] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-6, § 50.
[275] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-7, § 59.
[276] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 33.
[277] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 6.
[278] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 9.
[279] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[280] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[281] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 708.
[282] India, Manual of Military Law (1983), §§ 5/3 and 5/6.
[283] Indonesia, Military Manual (1982), § 98.

to the Geneva Convention, and even refused to hand over lists of the prisoners held by them".[284]

315. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that to protect victims of armed conflict, the ICRC shall "record the prisoners of war to prevent their disappearance".[285]

316. Mali's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "the list of evacuated prisoners must be established as soon as possible".[286]

317. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that a list of evacuated prisoners must be established as soon as possible.[287]

318. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that:

> Upon the outbreak of an armed conflict, each of the Parties to the conflict shall institute an Information Bureau. The Bureau shall be charged with the collecting and the forwarding of information concerning prisoners of war and other protected persons. The Bureau shall also make any enquiries to obtain the desired information about prisoners of war.[288]

319. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that an official information bureau shall be set up at the outbreak of hostilities in order to collect and transfer all information concerning POWs.[289] According to the manual, the same rule applies to protected persons falling under GC IV.[290]

320. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that, in a situation of internal disturbances, a list of arrested persons shall be made and sent to the ICRC.[291]

321. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that:

> Each Party to a conflict is required to furnish the persons under its jurisdiction who are liable to become prisoners of war, with an identity card showing the owner's surname, first names, rank, serial number or equivalent, and date of birth. The identity card may, furthermore, bear any other information the party to the conflict may wish to add concerning persons belonging to its armed forces.[292]

Concerning interned persons, the manual states that "family or identity documents in the possession of internees may not be taken away without a receipt being given".[293]

322. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "upon the outbreak of a conflict and in all cases of occupation, official bureaux of information shall be created on the territory of the Parties to the conflict and on those of the Neutral Powers having received members of foreign armed forces". It adds that "a Central Prisoners of War Information Agency shall be created in a neutral country by the ICRC. The Agency shall collect all the important information

[284] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 43.
[285] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. I-T, § 22.
[286] Mali, Disciplinary Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[287] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(3).
[288] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VII-12/VII-13.
[289] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 936.
[290] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1134(1).
[291] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 15.
[292] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.(d).2.
[293] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.8.(d).

on prisoners and transmit it as rapidly as possible to the country of origin of the prisoners of war."[294]

323. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> At the beginning of hostilities, each belligerent is to set up an official information bureau for prisoners of war whom it holds . . .
>
> A belligerent must inform its information bureau as soon as possible about all persons who have fallen into its power. The information bureau must be supplied with information as to transfers, releases, repatriations, escapes, admissions to hospital, and death. The bureau will then transmit all such information immediately to the Powers concerned through the intermediary of the Protecting Powers, and likewise through the Central Agency.[295]

324. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 122 and 123 GC III.[296]

325. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "each party to the conflict must issue an identity card to every person under its jurisdiction liable to become a PW showing name, rank, serial number, and date of birth".[297]

National Legislation

326. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "the Armed Forces of Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental organs shall ensure the registration of all prisoners of war of the adverse party by recording their name, surname, military rank, date of birth and place of permanent residence".[298]

327. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[299]

328. China's Martial Law Enforcement Act provides that, during periods of martial law, the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to procedures and time limits for arrest and detention no longer apply. Nevertheless, it specifies that the personnel on duty shall register all those detained under the Act and shall immediately release those who no longer need to be detained.[300]

329. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 122 and 123 GC III and 136, 137 and 140 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[301]

330. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[302]

[294] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), §§ 115–116.
[295] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 269.
[296] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 203 and 204.
[297] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-3.
[298] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 20.
[299] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[300] China, Martial Law Enforcement Act (1996), Article 27.
[301] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[302] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).

National Case-law

331. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

332. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council regarding persons unaccounted for in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana stressed that the Bosnian Serbs had an obligation under international law to facilitate the registration of all persons they held prisoner.[303]

333. The Report on the Practice of Israel states that "the IDF takes great care to ensure that all individuals detained or captured by it are meticulously documented, so as to enable their speedy identification and repatriation where feasible.[304]

334. In 1991, in a report submitted the UN Security Council on operations in the Gulf War, the UK stated that:

> The Iraqi Ambassador was asked whether the Iraqi Government was holding any British prisoners of war and reminded of Iraq's obligations under the Third Geneva Convention to notify the names of any prisoners held . . . The Iraqi Ambassador gave an assurance that any British prisoners of war would be treated in accordance with the Geneva Conventions and their names would be given to the ICRC.[305]

335. In 1990, in a meeting with the ICRC, a senior police official of a State engaged in a non-international armed conflict, commenting on the possibility that the police force might be engaged in hiding detainees, stated that all detainees were registered as required.[306]

336. In 1990, ICRC efforts in a State engaged in a non-international armed conflict resulted in the adoption of guidelines issued by the government to be followed when persons were in custody, including a requirement that detainees be registered immediately and their names transmitted to the central authorities within 24 hours.[307]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

337. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly demanded that the representatives of the FRY "provide an updated list of all persons detained and transferred from Kosovo to other parts of the FRY, specifying the charge, if any, under which each individual is detained".[308]

[303] Botswana, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3612, 21 December 1995, p. 5.
[304] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.2.
[305] UK, Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22117, 21 January 1991, p. 1.
[306] ICRC archive document.
[307] ICRC archive document.
[308] UN General Assembly, Res. 54/183, 17 December 1999, § 9.

338. In a resolution adopted in 1985 on the question of human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended the adoption of a Declaration against Unacknowledged Detention providing that governments shall:

> disclose the identity, location and condition of all persons detained by members of their police, military or security authorities or others acting with their knowledge, together with the cause of such detention . . . In countries where legislation does not exist to this effect, steps shall be taken to enact such legislation as soon as possible.[309]

Other International Organisations

339. No practice was found.

International Conferences

340. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it recognised that irrespective of GC III, "the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war, including identification and accounting for all prisoners".[310]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

341. In its report in Kurt v. Turkey in 1996, the ECiHR found that "the absence of holding data recording such matters as the date, time and location of detention, the name of the detainee as well as the reasons for the detention . . . [had to] be seen as incompatible with the very purpose of Article 5 of the Convention" on the right to liberty and security.[311] In its judgement in this case in 1998, the ECtHR confirmed this view.[312]

342. In the section of its Annual Report 1980–1981 concerning disappearance after detention, the IACiHR recommended that "central records be established to account for all persons that have been detained, so that their relatives and other interested persons may promptly learn of any arrests".[313] Similar recommendations were made specifically in the contexts of Argentina in 1980,[314] Chile in 1985[315] and Peru in 1993.[316]

[309] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1985/26, 29 August 1985, Article 2, p. 107.
[310] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. XI.
[311] ECiHR, Kurt v. Turkey, Report, 5 December 1996, § 125.
[312] ECtHR, Kurt v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 May 1998, § 125.
[313] IACiHR, Annual Report 1980-1981, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.54 Doc. 9 rev. 1, 16 October 1981, pp. 113 and 129.
[314] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Argentina, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.49 Doc. 19, 11 April 1980, p. 264.
[315] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Chile, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.66 Doc. 17, 9 September 1985, p. 72.
[316] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Peru, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83 Doc. 31, 12 March 1993, p. 60.

343. In the section of its Annual Report 1987–1988 concerning Guatemala, the IACiHR made the following recommendation to the government of Guatemala:

> To cause the Central Register of Detainees to function as originally proposed, that is, that every judicial, police, security and military authority competent to make arrests be required to inform this Central Register of the detention of any person within 24 hours of having done so, and that the record made thereof shall include the detainee's name, the date and hour of his detention, the identity of the detaining authority, the date on which the detainee was brought before a competent court, an itemized account of every transfer of the detainee from place to place and, if he is released, the date and place thereof and the reason thereof.[317]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

344. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that POWs shall be identified, listed and the location of camps given to the parties concerned.[318]

345. According to the ICRC, all parties to an international armed conflict have the obligation to collect and forward information on protected persons. The detaining party must notify the adverse party, via the Protecting Power and the Central Tracing Agency, of all the details specified under IHL. In practice, the Tracing Agency does not always confine itself to playing the role of intermediary, but actively seeks to ensure that the parties collect and pass on such information; in some cases, it even does so itself. In non-international armed conflicts, international humanitarian treaty law does not provide for the collection of information on persons deprived of their liberty to the same extent as it does in international armed conflicts. However, it is essential that such information be gathered if detainees are to be followed individually, in some cases after their release. The ICRC therefore asks the authorities for lists of persons deprived of their liberty with whom it is concerned. If no lists are forthcoming, it draws them up itself when conducting its visits. By recording names and keeping track of the persons it visits, the ICRC can prevent extra-judicial executions and enforced disappearances and follow each person throughout his/her period of deprivation of liberty (arrest, transfer, release, etc.). Moreover, in cases where the authorities do not draw up lists or keep a register of names, the ICRC recommends that such a register be kept along with reliable information on the arrest, transfer, whereabouts and release of persons deprived of their liberty. In non-international armed conflicts, as opposed to international ones, the Tracing Agency does not notify the names of detainees to the adverse party. Whether an armed conflict is international or not, the

[317] IACiHR, Annual Report 1987–1988, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.74 Doc. 10 rev. 1, 16 September 1988, p. 302.

[318] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 676, 682 and 683, see also § 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).

ICRC never forwards information on persons deprived of their liberty if this could have adverse consequences for them or their families.

346. In 1992, the ICRC solemnly appealed to all parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina to "notify [it] immediately of all places of detention in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and [to] supply accurate lists of all persons held in such places".[319]

347. In 1996, the ICRC requested that a separatist entity engaged in armed conflict provide it with details of all new detainees.[320]

VI. Other Practice

348. Section 24(1) of the SPLM/A Penal and Disciplinary Laws requires that "every Battalion Commander shall maintain a register" of military personnel and the keeping of records pertaining to such personnel in the SPLM/A headquarters, on the premise that this will facilitate the search for any persons who later go missing.[321] The Report on SPLM/A Practice notes that:

> The SPLM/A also used to announce names of Government of Sudan Officers and men and any personnel that they captured from the government when Radio SPLA was operational. The SPLM/A today still publishes in their bulletins names and other particulars of officers and men and personnel that fall into the hands of the SPLA during military operations.[322]

349. In 1994, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group agreed to notify the ICRC of all detained soldiers and officers.[323]

350. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "accurate information on . . . detention and whereabouts [of persons deprived of their liberty], including transfers, shall be made promptly available to their family members and counsel or other persons having a legitimate interest in the information".[324]

G. ICRC Access to Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

351. Article 126 GC III and Articles 76, sixth paragraph, and 143 GC IV provide that the representatives or delegates of the protecting powers and the delegates

[319] ICRC, Solemn Appeal to All Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, 13 August 1992, IRRC, No. 290, 1992, pp. 492–493.
[320] ICRC archive document.
[321] SPLM/A, Penal and Disciplinary Laws, 4 July 1984, Section 24, § 1.
[322] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.2.
[323] ICRC archive document.
[324] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 4(1), IRRC, No. 282, p. 332.

of the ICRC (whose appointment shall be submitted to the approval of the detaining power) shall have permission to go to all places where POWs and protected persons may be, particularly to places of internment, imprisonment and labour, and shall have access to all premises occupied by them. They shall be able to interview the detainees, and in particular the detainees' representatives, without witnesses, either personally or through an interpreter. They shall have full liberty to select the places they wish to visit. The duration and frequency of these visits shall not be restricted. Visits may not be prohibited except for reasons of imperative military necessity, and then only as an exceptional and temporary measure. The detaining power and the power on which the detainees depend may agree, if necessary, that compatriots of these detainees be permitted to participate in the visits.

352. Articles 56, third paragraph, GC III and Article 96 GC IV provide that delegates of the protecting power, the ICRC or other agencies giving relief to POWs may visit labour detachments.

353. Article 125 GC III provides that any organisation assisting prisoners of war shall receive "all necessary facilities for visiting the prisoners . . . The special position of the International Committee of the Red Cross in this field shall be recognized and respected at all times." Article 142 GC IV contains the same provision as in Article 125 GC III for protected persons.

354. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that, in the case of armed conflict not of an international character, "an impartial humanitarian body, such as the International Committee of the Red Cross, may offer its services to the Parties to the conflict".

355. Article 9 of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Civilian Personnel designated Red Cross Societies with the task of visiting all places of detention.

356. Article IX of the 1995 Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Peace Settlement annexed to the Dayton Accords provided that the ICRC was to enjoy "full and unimpeded access to all places where prisoners are kept and to all prisoners".

Other Instruments

357. In the 1969 Agreement between the Government of Greece and the ICRC, it was agreed that ICRC delegates shall have access:

> to all places where administrative deportees are permanently or temporarily held, namely: camps for deportees, places of temporary detention pending transfer, infirmaries and hospitals . . .
>
> . . . to all prisons and other premises within the country where persons accused of or condemned for political offences are detained . . .

... to all police stations where people are temporarily detained pending preliminary enquiries into political offences, so that they may form a personal opinion on the state of the premises and the conditions of detention.

358. Article 5(2) of the 1986 Statutes of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement provides that it is the role of the ICRC "to undertake the tasks incumbent upon it under the Geneva Conventions" and "to endeavour at all times – as a neutral institution whose humanitarian work is carried out particularly in time of international and other armed conflicts or internal strife – to ensure the protection of and assistance to military and civilian victims of such events and of their direct results". Article 5(3) provides that the ICRC "may take any humanitarian initiative which comes within its role as a specifically neutral and independent institution and intermediary, and may consider any question requiring examination by such an institution".

359. Principle 29 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that:

1. In order to supervise the strict observance of relevant laws and regulations, places of detention shall be visited regularly by qualified and experienced persons appointed by, and responsible to, a competent authority distinct from the authority directly in charge of the administration of the place of detention or imprisonment.
2. A detained or imprisoned person shall have the right to communicate freely and in full confidentiality with the persons who visit the places of detention or imprisonment in accordance with paragraph 1 of the present principle, subject to reasonable conditions to ensure security and good order in such places.

360. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Agreement between Croatia and the SFRY on the Exchange of Prisoners provides that "the signatories of the agreement agree to proceed to the exchange immediately after the ICRC has recorded and visited the prisoners in conformity with its specific criteria".

361. Section IV of the 1992 Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that:

- ICRC delegates will have free access to all persons captured or detained;
- ICRC delegates will be authorized to interview these persons without witnesses, to register them, to inform their families about their welfare and whereabouts, and to repeat such visits whenever necessary.

362. Article 8 of the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners provides that "the ICRC shall have free access to all prisoners and may make a census of the population of any place of detention with a view to drawing up a specific plan of operation as provided in Article 3".

363. Paragraph 2.4 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "the ICRC shall have free access to all captured combatants in order to fulfil its humanitarian mandate according to the third Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949".

364. In paragraph 5 of the 1996 Ashgabat Protocol on Prisoner Exchange in Tajikistan, the government of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition agreed "to confirm their earlier commitment to ensure the unimpeded access by delegates of ICRC and members of the Joint Commission to places where the detainees and prisoners of war are being held, both during the present operation [of prisoner exchange] and in future".
365. Section 8(g) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that the "ICRC's right to visit prisoners and detained persons shall be respected and guaranteed".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
366. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that:

Representatives or delegates of the Protecting Powers shall have permission to go to all places where prisoners of war may be, particularly to places of internment, imprisonment and labour, and shall have access to all premises occupied by prisoners of war; they shall be allowed to go to the places of departure, passage and arrival of prisoners who are being transferred. They shall be able to interview the prisoners, and in particular the prisoners' representatives, without witnesses, either personally or through an interpreter . . .

Representatives and delegates of the Protecting Powers shall have full liberty to select the places they wish to visit. The duration and the frequency of these visits shall not be restricted. Visits may not be prohibited except for reasons of imperative military necessity, and then only as an exceptional and temporary measure . . .

The delegates of the ICRC shall enjoy the same prerogatives. The appointment of such delegates shall be submitted to the approval of the Power detaining the prisoners of war to be visited.[325]

367. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that "Prisoners of War have the right to apply to the representative of the Protecting Power". It further states that "the Protecting Power and the ICRC shall have access to all premises occupied by prisoners of war".[326]
368. Benin's Military Manual provides that one of the functions of the ICRC is to protect and assist the victims by visiting prisoners of war, security detainees and interned persons.[327]
369. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

In accordance with GC III, delegates or representatives of Protecting Powers and of the ICRC shall be permitted to visit all places where PWs may be, including places of detention and labour, and may interview PWs and PWs' representatives without witnesses, either personally or through interpreters.[328]

[325] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.105.
[326] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 47.
[327] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 8.

Concerning persons undergoing sentence of imprisonment, the manual provides that "protected persons who are detained have the right to be visited by delegates of the Protecting Power and of the ICRC".[329]

370. Ecuador's Naval Handbook recognises the special status of the ICRC and recalls its specific tasks: visiting and interviewing prisoners of war.[330]

371. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that the prisoners' "control book", which contains the names of all civilian and combatant detainees, shall be notified to the ICRC the day of its visit to the detention centre.[331] It states that one of the principal functions of the ICRC is to visit prisoners and to talk with them without witnesses.[332]

372. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that, during their captivity, prisoners are to be concentrated in internment camps and must be under Red Cross supervision.[333]

373. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that to protect the victims of war, the ICRC shall repeat its visits to prisoners of war.[334]

374. New Zealand's Military Manual stipulates that:

> Delegates or representatives of Protecting Powers and of the ICRC shall be permitted to visit all places where prisoners of war may be, including places of detention and labour, and may interview prisoners and prisoners' representatives without witnesses, either personally or through interpreters.[335]

375. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that the ICRC shall be allowed to visit POWs and internees under the usual conditions.[336]

376. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "inspection of prisoner of war camps under the III Geneva Convention has become one of the most important duties of a Protecting Power and of the ICRC".[337]

377. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that:

> The Protecting Powers and the ICRC shall ensure respect for the international rules established in favour of prisoners of war to protect their interests. To this effect, they shall cooperate with the Detaining Power, which shall facilitate their tasks. The prisoners of war shall always have the ability to lodge complaints to the Protecting Power.[338]

[328] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-6, § 51.
[329] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-7, § 62(c).
[330] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.2.
[331] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 6.
[332] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 11.
[333] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 52.
[334] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. I-T, § 22.
[335] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 937.
[336] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 6.4.j and 6.8.j.
[337] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.1, p. 92.
[338] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 108.

378. Togo's Military Manual provides that one of the functions of the ICRC is to protect and assist the victims by visiting prisoners of war, security detainees and interned persons.[339] The manual, referring to the Geneva Conventions, further reaffirms the right of the ICRC to visit these persons.[340]

379. The UK Military Manual states that "if no protection can be arranged, the Detaining Power must request, or shall accept, the offer of the services of a humanitarian organisation, such as the International Committee of the Red Cross, to assume the humanitarian functions performed by the Protecting Power".[341] It further provides that representatives or delegates of the protecting powers or the ICRC shall be allowed to visit all POW camps. It points out that "delegates of the International Committee of the Red Cross enjoy the same privileges as those of Protecting Powers. Their appointment must be submitted to the Detaining Power for approval."[342] The manual specifies that "refusing prisoners of war access to the Protecting Power" is a war crime.[343]

380. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 126 GC III and 142 and 143 GC IV.[344]

381. The UK LOAC Manual states that:

> The Protecting Power has various functions, notably to inspect PW camps and to deal with prisoners' appeals for help in correcting any violations of the [Third Geneva] Convention by the Detaining Power. If no neutral Protecting Power has been appointed, its functions can be exercised by the ICRC or some other humanitarian organisation, subject to the consent of the parties to the conflict concerned.[345]

382. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that, subject to essential security needs and other reasonable requirements, the ICRC must be permitted to visit POWs and provide them with certain types of relief.[346]

383. The US Naval Handbook recognises the special status of the ICRC and recalls its specific tasks: visiting and interviewing prisoners of war.[347]

National Legislation

384. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[348]

385. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 56, 125 and 126 GC III and 76, 96, 142 and 143 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[349]

[339] Togo, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 8.
[340] Togo, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 11.
[341] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 277.
[342] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 278.
[343] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626.
[344] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 207 and 349–350.
[345] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 33, § 20.
[346] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-187.
[347] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.2.
[348] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[349] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

386. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... is liable to imprisonment".[350]

National Case-law

387. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

388. In 1982 and 1987, the government in Afghanistan allowed the ICRC to conduct visits to prisoners according to its criteria, but occasionally revoked that permission.[351]

389. In 1989, in a statement before the HRC, Chile reported that Red Cross delegates had been able to visit all detainees including those held incommunicado.[352]

390. In 1983, in a statement before the HRC, El Salvador reported that an agreement had been signed by the Salvadoran government to enable the ICRC to be notified of the detention of prisoners and to visit and interview them with a doctor and without government witnesses.[353] In 1987, it emphasised that the ICRC was informed of arrests and could visit detainees in any detention centre whatsoever.[354]

391. According to the Report on the Practice of France, access to prisoner camps, wherever they are, must be granted, in particular to the ICRC, to allow it to monitor the conditions of detention and bring humanitarian aid.[355]

392. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Germany expressed its full support for the ongoing efforts of the ICRC to gain access to detainees.[356]

393. The Lebanese authorities have permitted the ICRC to visit detained persons on several occasions, in accordance with ICRC procedures.[357]

394. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Oman stated that it was unacceptable to the international community that neither the UN nor the ICRC had been granted access in order to establish the whereabouts of detainees.[358]

[350] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[351] ICRC, Press Release No. 1449, Afghanistan: the ICRC is authorized to visit prisoners, 27 August 1982; Press Release No. 1531, Resumption of ICRC Activities in Afghanistan, 3 February 1987.
[352] Chile, Statement before the HRC, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.943, 6 November 1989, § 42.
[353] El Salvador, Statement before the HRC, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.468, 31 October 1983, § 37.
[354] El Salvador, Statement before the HRC, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.719, 2 April 1987, § 3.
[355] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.3.
[356] Germany, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3564, 10 August 1995, p. 4.
[357] ICRC, Annual Report 1990, Geneva, 1991, p. 84.
[358] Oman, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3564, 10 August 1995, p. 5.

395. In May 2000, visits to detainees in Northern Caucasus began after the ICRC received formal authorisation from the President of the Russian Federation granting access to "all persons held in connection with security operations" in Chechnya. The ICRC carried out visits to detainees held under the responsibility of the Ministries of Justice and the Interior and the Federal Security Service.[359]

396. In 1990, in a speech following the arrest of 2,500–3,000 persons on suspicion of collaboration with the RPF, the President of Rwanda declared that "the ICRC . . . had already visited all our prisons, according to its methods, . . . without any impediment whatsoever, . . . and in accordance with international agreements".[360]

397. In 1991, in a report submitted to the UN Security Council on operations in the Gulf War, the UK stated that:

> On 19 January [1991] the Iraqi Ambassador was asked whether the Iraqi Government was holding any British prisoners of war and reminded of Iraq's obligations under the Third Geneva Convention to . . . arrange access by the ICRC. The Iraqi Ambassador gave an assurance that any British prisoners of war would be treated in accordance with the Geneva Conventions . . . The British Government has made clear to the Iraqi Ambassador . . . [that] the British Government will be allowing full access by the ICRC both to Iraqi prisoners of war and to Iraqi citizens detained in the United Kingdom.[361]

398. In 1991, in another report submitted to the UN Security Council on operations in the Gulf War, the UK reported that:

> We have made the strongest representations again to the International Committee of the Red Cross, the representatives of which have been here seeking access to Iraqis who have been detained to ensure that they are receiving proper treatment. They were naturally granted access we gave them every opportunity, to which they are entitled, to visit Iraqis to see whether they are receiving proper treatment. We have insisted that similar facilities must be available to representatives of the International Red Cross in Baghdad.[362]

399. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle . . . that the ICRC and the relevant Red Cross or Red Crescent organizations be granted all necessary facilities and access to enable them to carry out their humanitarian functions".[363]

[359] ICRC, Annual Report 2000, Geneva, 2001, p. 168.
[360] Rwanda, Speech by the President, 15 October 1990, p. 6.
[361] UK, Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22117, 21 January 1991, p. 1.
[362] UK, Letter dated 28 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22156, 28 January 1991, p. 2; see also Letter dated 13 February 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/2221, 13 February 1991, p. 2.
[363] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

400. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that it expected "the Government of Iraq . . . to provide the International Committee of the Red Cross with access to prisoners of war as will be done by the United States".[364]

401. In 1991, in a report submitted to the UN Security Council on operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that:

> The coalition forces are granting ICRC timely access to all Iraqi prisoners of war. Iraqi authorities have continued to ignore the standards of the Geneva conventions in blatant disregard for international law. They have denied access to coalition prisoners of war by ICRC.[365]

402. In 1982, in a statement before the HRC, Uruguay stated that even at the height of the crisis, the government had invited the ICRC to visit the prisons in which all subversives had been incarcerated and they had been able to interview the prisoners in private.[366]

403. In a press release issued in 1994, the ICRC noted that the parties to the internal conflict in Yemen had agreed to allow it to visit interned combatants.[367]

404. In 1979, the Interior Minister of a State emphasised that the ICRC was not covered by the introduction of restrictions on visits to prisoners and that the government wanted to continue its collaboration with the organisation.[368]

405. In 1985, a third State on whose territory an armed opposition group held its prisoners agreed to allow the ICRC to visit all captured combatants.[369]

406. In 1987, in the context of a non-international armed conflict, the authorities stated that the ICRC did not have the right to visit persons deprived of their liberty, but later granted it access to detainees.[370]

407. In 1991, in the context of a non-international armed conflict, the authorities stated that the ICRC did not have the right to visit persons deprived of their liberty, but later granted it access to detainees.[371]

408. In 1992, a State involved in a non-international armed conflict agreed to allow the ICRC to visit all detention facilities in accordance with the ICRC's standard procedures.[372]

409. In 1994, a State denied charges by a separatist entity of impeding visits by ICRC delegates and issued in 1995 specific orders to allow the ICRC to conduct visits according to its criteria.[373]

[364] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, Annex I, p. 2, see also Annex III, p. 4.
[365] US, Letter dated 8 February 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22216, 13 February 1991, p. 2; see also Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22130, 22 January 1991.
[366] Uruguay, Statement before the HRC, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.355, 8 April 1982, § 10.
[367] ICRC, Press Release No. 1775, Yemen: ICRC active on both sides appeals to belligerents, 12 May 1994.
[368] ICRC archive document.
[369] ICRC archive document.
[370] ICRC archive document.
[371] ICRC archive document.
[372] ICRC archive document.
[373] ICRC archive documents.

410. In 1995 and 1996, in the context of a non-international armed conflict, the governmental authorities permitted the ICRC to visit detained persons on several occasions, in accordance with ICRC procedures.[374]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

411. In two resolutions adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council demanded that the relevant international humanitarian organisations, and in particular the ICRC, be granted immediate, unimpeded and continued access to camps, prisons and detention centres within the territory of the former Yugoslavia and appealed to the parties to the conflict to do all in their power to facilitate such access.[375]

412. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council called for unhindered access by the ICRC to all persons detained by all parties to the conflict in Tajikistan.[376]

413. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council reminded the government of Croatia of its responsibility to allow access by representatives of the ICRC to members of the local Serb forces detained by Croatian government forces.[377]

414. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council demanded that the Bosnian Serb party permit representatives of the ICRC to visit and register any persons detained against their will, including any members of the forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina.[378]

415. In two resolutions adopted in 1995 in the context of the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reiterated "its strong support for the efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in seeking access to . . . persons detained" and condemned "in the strongest possible terms the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with their commitments in respect of such access". It also reaffirmed its demand that:

> the Bosnian Serb party give immediate and unimpeded access to representatives of . . . the ICRC and other international agencies . . . to persons detained . . . and permit representatives of the ICRC (i) to visit and register any persons detained against their will, whether civilians or members of the forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina.[379]

416. In 1995, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council reiterated its demand that the Bosnian Serb party permit representatives of the

[374] ICRC archive documents.
[375] UN Security Council, Res. 770, 13 August 1992, preamble; Res. 771, 13 August 1992, § 4.
[376] UN Security Council, Res. 968, 16 December 1994, § 10.
[377] UN Security Council, Res. 1009, 10 August 1995, § 3.
[378] UN Security Council, Res. 1010, 10 August 1995, § 1.
[379] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble and § 2; Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, preamble and §§ 2-5.

ICRC to visit and register any persons detained against their will, including any members of the forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina.[380]

417. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties involved in armed conflicts to allow the ICRC to have access to POWs and to all places of detention.[381]

418. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN General Assembly requested that the ICRC:

> be granted immediate, unimpeded and continued access to all camps, prisons and to other places of detention within the territory of the former Yugoslavia and that all parties ensure complete safety and freedom of movement for the International Committee and otherwise facilitate such access.[382]

419. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the question of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged the parties to the Afghan conflict to provide the ICRC with access to all prisoners.[383]

420. In 1996, in a statement by its Chairman on the situation of human rights in Chechnya, the UN Commission on Human Rights called for "the International Committee of the Red Cross to be permitted to have regular access to all detainees, in conformity with its standard criteria, in order to verify the conditions of their detention and treatment".[384]

421. In 1999, in the context of the conflict in East Timor, the ICRC reported that the multinational force in East Timor, INTERFET:

> arrests and detains, generally for short periods, persons suspected of engaging in militia activities. The ICRC was consulted by INTERFET in the development of detention procedures to ensure that they were in accordance with international standards. [The ICRC] has access to persons arrested and detained by INTERFET, and regularly visits them in accordance with standard ICRC working procedures.[385]

Other International Organisations

422. In a resolution adopted in 1985 on the deteriorating situation in Afghanistan, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged "the governments of member states of the Council of Europe . . . to intervene with all

[380] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/43, 7 September 1995.
[381] UN General Assembly, Res. 2676 (XXV), 9 December 1970, § 1.
[382] UN General Assembly, Res. 46/242, 25 August 1992, § 9; see also Res. 48/153, 20 December 1993, §§ 14–16, Res. 49/10, 3 November 1994, § 25 and Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, §§ 23–24.
[383] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, § 5(f).
[384] UN Commission on Human Rights, Chairman's statement on the situation of human rights in the Republic of Chechnya of the Russian Federation, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/L.10/Add.10, 24 April 1996, § 87.
[385] ICRC, Update No. 99/05 on ICRC Activities in Indonesia/East Timor, 29 November 1999, § 4.

United Nations member states to grant free access facilities for the Red Cross and Red Crescent to all the places they wish to visit".[386]

423. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe asked the government of Rwanda to encourage the ICRC to continue to visit places of detention of POWs, as well as police stations, and to allow international observers to visit other places of detention.[387]

424. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation in some parts of the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe demanded that UNHCR, the ICRC and other humanitarian organisations be given access to Bosnian Serb prisoner camps.[388]

425. In a resolution on Kosovo adopted in 1996, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called upon the governments of the FRY and the Republic of Serbia "to allow the ICRC immediate access to detainees".[389]

426. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the activities of the ICRC, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited member States to "give representatives of the ICRC access to persons detained in international or internal armed conflicts".[390]

427. In a recommendation on Kosovo in 1998, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged the parties to the conflict to provide access to humanitarian organisations to detained persons.[391]

428. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Chechnya, the European Parliament urged that "full access and appropriate conditions be ensured to enable international humanitarian assistance to be delivered and that access to detainees and internally displaced persons be granted".[392]

429. In 1995, in a statement before the OSCE Permanent Council, the EU requested that the ICRC be given unrestricted access to detainees in the context of the conflict in Chechnya.[393]

430. In a resolution adopted in 1997, the Council of the League of Arab States decided:

> To urge the Member States of the League [of Arab States] to use their good offices in international organisations so that all necessary representations are made to government of Israel, the occupying power, to enable the International Committee of the Red Cross and other humanitarian organisations to visit the detainees in Khiam and Marj Uyun periodically and on a regular basis, and to ensure that the [386] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 854, 20 November 1985, § 6.

[387] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1050, 10 November 1994, § 6(i)(c).
[388] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1066, 27 September 1995, § 6(iv).
[389] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1077, 24 January 1996, § 5(i)(b).
[390] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1085, 24 April 1996, § 8(f)
[391] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1385, 24 September 1998, § 7(iii)(a).
[392] European Parliament, Resolution on violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Chechnya, 16 March 2000, § 5.
[393] EU, Statement by the Presidency before the OSCE Permanent Council concerning the situation in Chechnya, 2 February 1995, pp. 3–4.

conditions in which they are being kept are inspected, that they are provided with health and humanitarian care and that their relatives are allowed to visit them regularly.[394]

431. In 1995, the OSCE Permanent Council requested that the ICRC be given unrestricted access to detainees in the context of the conflict in Chechnya.[395]
432. In a decision on the OSCE Minsk Process adopted in 1995, the OSCE Ministerial Council urged the parties to the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh "to provide the ICRC unimpeded access to all places of detention and all detainees".[396]

International Conferences
433. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the treatment of prisoners of war in which it called upon all authorities involved in an armed conflict "to ensure ... that the International Committee of the Red Cross is enabled to carry out its traditional humanitarian functions to ameliorate the condition of prisoners of war".[397]
434. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it called upon all parties "to allow the Protecting Power or the International Committee of the Red Cross free access to prisoners of war and to all places of their detention".[398]
435. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on humanitarian activities of the ICRC for the benefit of victims of armed conflicts in which it deplored the fact that "the ICRC is refused access to the captured combatants and detained civilians in the armed conflicts of Western Sahara, Ogaden and later on Afghanistan". It urged all parties concerned to enable the ICRC "to protect and assist persons captured, detained, wounded or sick and civilians affected by these conflicts".[399]
436. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on respect for international humanitarian law in armed conflicts and action by the ICRC for persons protected by the Geneva Conventions in which it appealed to parties involved in armed conflicts to "grant regular access to the ICRC to all prisoners in armed conflicts covered by international humanitarian law".[400]
437. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1992, the 88th Inter-Parliamentary Conference insisted that "appropriate international humanitarian organizations and, in particular, the International Committee of the Red

394 League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5635, 31 March 1997, § 4.
395 OSCE, Permanent Council, Resolution on Chechnya, 3 February 1995, §§ 6 and 11.
396 OSCE, Ministerial Council, Decision on the Minsk Process, Doc. MC(5).DEC/3, 8 December 1995, § 3.
397 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2-9 October 1965, Res. XXIV.
398 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6-13 September 1969, Res. XI.
399 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7-14 November 1981, Res. IV.
400 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23-31 October 1986, Res. I, § 3.

Cross, be granted immediate, unimpeded and continued access to all camps, prisons and other places of detention".[401]

438. The Conclusions of the London Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1995 state that fulfilment of the 1995 Dayton Accords will require "full and immediate access by the ICRC to all places where prisoners and detainees are kept, to interview and register all of them prior to their release".[402]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

439. In the Peruvian Prisons case (Provisional Measures) in 1993, the IACiHR requested the IACtHR to indicate provisional measures with respect to the situation in four Peruvian prisons and noted in the description of the "grave and urgent nature" of the case that "the International Committee of the Red Cross is not currently authorized to inspect those prisons".[403]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

440. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

Representatives of the Protecting Powers and of the International Committee of the Red Cross:

a) have access to all places and premises where prisoners of war are located;
b) are allowed to visit prisoners of war in transfer;
c) are allowed to interview prisoners of war without witnesses;
d) have full liberty so select the places they wish to visit.[404]

441. In international armed conflict, the Geneva Conventions give express competence to the ICRC as a protection mechanism (Article 126 GC III and Article 143 GC IV). According to these provisions, ICRC delegates shall have permission to go to all places where persons protected by the Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions may be held, have access to all premises occupied by them, and be able to interview them without witnesses, either personally or through an interpreter. In non-international armed conflict, according to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1986 Statutes of [401] 88th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Stockholm, 7–12 September 1992, Resolution on support to the recent international initiatives to halt the violence and put an end to the violations of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, § 4.

[402] Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, London, 8–9 December 1995, Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 11 December 1995 from the UK to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/1995/1029, 12 December 1995, § 25.

[403] IACtHR, Peruvian Prisons case (Provisional Measures), Order, 27 January 1993, § 3.

[404] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 719, see also § 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).

the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement (Article 5(2)), the ICRC may offer its services to ensure protection and assistance of military and civilian victims of such situations and of their direct results. Protection of the lives, physical and mental integrity and the dignity of persons deprived of their liberty are at the heart of the ICRC's action. The objective of ICRC visits to persons deprived of their liberty is basically to prevent and put a stop to such occurrences as enforced disappearances, extra-judicial executions, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, as well as to improve detention conditions and restore family links. Preliminary conditions are required for the development of an action aimed at protecting persons deprived of their liberty, namely:

- Access to all persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to armed conflict or internal violence, at all stages of their detention and in all places where they are held.
- Possibility to talk freely and in private with the persons deprived of their liberty of its choice.
- Possibility to register the identity of the persons deprived of their liberty.
- Possibility to repeat its visits to persons deprived of their liberty on a regular basis.
- ICRC must be authorized to inform families of the detention of their relatives and to ensure family news between persons deprived of their liberty and their families, whenever necessary.

In practice, the authorities often restrict access by the ICRC to persons deprived of their liberty during the first stage of detention. Such restrictions are not acceptable to the ICRC, unless it is for a short period, and have been the subject of many representations by the ICRC to the authorities concerned.

442. In a press release in 1973, the ICRC responded to press reports which had erroneously stated that it was visiting detainees in Con Son prison in South Vietnam. The ICRC stated that it had ceased visiting the prison as it was only allowed to see "several dozen prisoners of war" and not the "civilian detainees who constituted the immense majority of the inmates" and that it was "precisely because of the restrictions imposed by the South Vietnam government – particularly the prohibition of private talks with detainees – that in March 1972 it discontinued visits to interned civilians".[405]

443. In an appeal launched in 1979 with respect to the conflict in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe, the ICRC specifically requested that the Patriotic Front "allow the ICRC to visit captured enemy combatants and civilians regularly, and without witness, wherever they are detained".[406]

[405] ICRC, Press Release No. 1152b, ICRC puts the Record Straight on Con Son, 21 March 1973.
[406] ICRC, Conflict in Southern Africa: ICRC appeal, 19 March 1979, § 7, IRRC, No. 209, 1979. p. 89.

444. On several occasions between 1992 and 1996, the ICRC reminded a State engaged in an internal armed conflict of its obligation to detain prisoners in places where ICRC delegates could visit them.[407]

445. In a press release issued in 1993 on the situation in eastern Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC called on all parties "to facilitate ICRC access to all the victims".[408]

446. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "the visiting rights of the ICRC shall be respected and safeguarded".[409]

447. In a press release issued in 1995 concerning Turkey's military operations in northern Iraq, the ICRC requested "immediate access to Kurdish combatants and civilians detained by the Turkish armed forces".[410]

448. In 1995, an article in the Bangkok Post stated that the ICRC had closed its delegation in Rangoon because it had "failed to get proper access to political prisoners in Burma". An ICRC statement quoted in the article said that the ICRC had first requested access to political prisoners in Burma in May 1994 but it did not receive a response from the ruling State Law and Order Restoration Council (SLORC) until March 1995. The ICRC stated in relation to the response received that "this reply was not satisfactory as it took no account of the customary procedures for visits to places of detention followed by the ICRC in all countries where it conducts such activities".[411]

449. In 1995, the ICTY President wrote to the President of the ICRC proposing that the ICRC:

> undertake, in accordance with the modalities set out below, the inspection of conditions of detention and the treatment of persons awaiting trial or appeal before the Tribunal or otherwise detained on the authority of the Tribunal in the Penitentiary Complex or in the holding cells located at the premises of the Tribunal.

The "modalities" proposed included that the ICRC would be able to inspect and report on all aspects of conditions of detention; that it would have unlimited access to the detention facilities; and that it would be free to communicate with the detainees without witnesses being present.[412] In response, the ICRC President stated that it was within the mandate of the ICRC to visit

[407] ICRC archive documents.

[408] ICRC, Press Release No. 1744, Eastern Bosnia: ICRC unable to assist conflict victims, 17 April 1993.

[409] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, Geneva, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

[410] ICRC, Press Release No. 1797, ICRC calls for compliance with international law in Turkey and Northern Iraq, 22 March 1995.

[411] Bangkok Post, Red Cross shuts office in Burma out of frustration, 20 June 1995.

[412] ICTY, Letter from the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia to the President of the International Committee of the Red Cross, 28 April 1995, IRRC, No. 311, 1996, pp. 238–242.

persons detained in connection with armed conflicts and that the organisation was, therefore, ready to carry out visits to detainees held by the ICTY. The conditions outlined in the letter from the ICTY were described as corresponding to "the traditional modalities under which the ICRC assesses the conditions of detention and the treatment of detainees, in particular by interviewing them in private, and makes the appropriate recommendations to the authorities concerned".[413]

450. In 1995, the ICRC reminded the parties to an internal armed conflict that "in order to be able to carry out its humanitarian mission, it has to have access to all persons captured or arrested and detained in connection with the conflict situation". The ICRC outlined the conditions for its visits and stated that "these customary working procedures are accepted by all States where the ICRC is conducting visits to prisoners/detainees. They help to provide the protection which the parties to a conflict expect for people from their side who are held by the adversary."[414]

451. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC stated that "the detaining authority must authorize the ICRC to have access to . . . persons [arrested], wherever they may be, so that its delegates may ascertain their well-being and forward news to their families".[415]

VI. Other Practice

452. In 1977, an armed opposition group agreed to allow the ICRC to visit all detained combatants where the places of detention were not subject to security concerns. It also stated that it would not make visits conditional on the provision of information about its own missing combatants.[416]

453. In 1979, an armed opposition group agreed to allow the ICRC to visit captured combatants.[417]

454. In 1981, an armed opposition group permitted the ICRC to visit captured combatants of a third State in its power.[418]

455. In 1982, a separatist entity agreed to allow the ICRC to visit its prisoners.[419]

456. In 1987, an armed opposition group stated that it would in principle allow the ICRC to visit its prisoners, but that visits would be possible only if prisoners could be moved to a safe area.[420]

[413] ICRC, Letter from the President of the International Committee of the Red Cross to the President of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 5 May 1995, IRRC, No. 311, 1996, pp. 238–242.
[414] ICRC archive document.
[415] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.
[416] ICRC archive documents. [417] ICRC archive document. [418] ICRC archive document.
[419] ICRC archive document. [420] ICRC archive documents.

457. In 1988, an armed opposition group allowed the ICRC to visit its prisoners.[421]
458. In 1988, an armed opposition group accepted ICRC visits in principle, but in the end these visits were not carried out owing to geographical isolation.[422]
459. In 1988, after an initial refusal, an armed opposition group undertook to grant permission to the ICRC to visit all prisoners.[423]
460. In 1988, an armed opposition group accepted ICRC visits in principle.[424]
461. In 1988 and 1989, an armed opposition group accepted ICRC visits in principle.[425]
462. In 1992, an armed opposition group undertook to allow the ICRC to visit all captured combatants.[426]
463. In 1993 and 1996, a separatist entity allowed the ICRC to visit detainees, but refrained from allowing unlimited access owing to security concerns.[427]
464. In 1994, a separatist entity stated that it believed that granting permission to ICRC delegates to visit places of detention to be an obligation under international law and denounced a State's refusal to do so.[428]
465. In 1990, an armed opposition group expressed the intention to allow ICRC visits and undertook to inform the ICRC of all detained prisoners so as to enable visits to take place.[429]

H. Correspondence of Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
466. Article 70 GC III provides that:

> Immediately upon capture, or not more than one week after arrival at a camp, . . . every prisoner of war shall be enabled to write direct to his family, on the one hand, and to the Central Prisoners of War Agency . . . on the other hand, a card . . . informing his relatives of his capture, address and state of health.

Article 106 GC IV contains a similar provision for internees upon arrival in their place of internment.
467. Article 71, first paragraph, GC III provides that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards. If the Detaining Power deems it necessary to limit the number of letters and cards sent by each prisoner of war, the said number shall not be less than two letters and four cards monthly". The second paragraph, provides that "prisoners of war who have been without news for a long period, or who are unable to receive news from their next of kin, or to give them news by the ordinary postal route, as well as those who are at a great distance from their home, shall be permitted to send telegrams". Article 107, first and second paragraphs, GC IV contains similar provisions for internees.

[421] ICRC archive document. [422] ICRC archive document. [423] ICRC archive document.
[424] ICRC archive document. [425] ICRC archive document. [426] ICRC archive document.
[427] ICRC archive document. [428] ICRC archive document. [429] ICRC archive document.

468. Article 25, first paragraph, GC IV provides for the right of all persons in the territory of a party to the conflict "to give news of a strictly personal nature to members of their families, wherever they may be, and to receive news from them". According to the second paragraph, the Central Agency may play a role as a neutral intermediary in this respect. The third paragraph provides that:

> If the Parties to the conflict deem it necessary to restrict family correspondence, such restrictions shall be confined to the compulsory use of standard forms containing twenty-five freely chosen words, and to the limitation of the number of these forms despatched to one each month.

469. Article 8 of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Civilian Personnel states that all captured military personnel and captured civilians "shall be allowed to exchange post cards and letters with their families".

470. Article 5(2)(b) AP II provides that persons whose liberty has been restricted "shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards, the number of which may be limited by competent authority if it deems necessary. Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[430]

471. Article 37 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that every child deprived of liberty "shall have the right to maintain contact with his or her family through correspondence . . . save in exceptional circumstances".

Other Instruments

472. Rule 37 of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "prisoners shall be allowed under necessary supervision to communicate with their family and reputable friends at regular intervals . . . by correspondence".

473. Rule 43(1) of the 1987 European Prison Rules provides that "prisoners shall be allowed to communicate with their families and, subject to the needs of treatment, security and good order, persons or representatives of outside organisations".

474. Principle 15 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "notwithstanding the exceptions contained in Principle 16, paragraph 4, and Principle 18, paragraph 3, communication of the detained or imprisoned person with the outside world, and in particular his family or counsel, shall not be denied for more than a matter of days".

[430] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

475. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) reproduces Articles 71 GC III and 25 GC IV.[431]

476. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989), referring to Articles 71, 72, 74, 75 and 76 GC III, provides that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards".[432] It also provides that internees shall be enabled "to give news of a strictly personal nature to members of their families, wherever they may be, and to receive news from them".[433]

477. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that POWs "have the right to send and receive letters".[434] It further states that captured enemy combatants should be treated as being entitled to POW status.[435]

478. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that "not more than one week after his arrival at a camp, even if it is a transit camp, every prisoner of war should be enabled to write, directly to his family and to the Central Prisoners of War Agency, a card of a special model". It adds that POWs should be allowed to send and receive cards.[436]

479. Benin's Military Manual provides that captured enemy combatants and civilians shall have the right to exchange news with their families.[437]

480. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that the correspondence of POWs shall reach them regularly and shall not be interfered with.[438]

481. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that prisoners shall be authorised to send and receive correspondence by the intermediary of the ICRC.[439]

482. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "POWs shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards and, in exceptional circumstances, telegrams as well".[440] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "detained persons shall be allowed to send and received letters and cards".[441]

483. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "captured combatants and civilian persons who are under the power of the adverse Party . . . have the right to exchange news with their families".[442]

[431] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 2.066 and 4.008.
[432] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.16.
[433] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.14.
[434] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 716.
[435] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 719.
[436] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 47.
[437] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 5.
[438] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 154, § 541.
[439] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 33.
[440] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-5, § 45.
[441] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 25.
[442] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 4.

484. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, detained persons shall have the right to communicate with their families and receive letters.[443]
485. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL provides that detainees have the right to correspond with their families.[444]
486. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "captured combatants have the right to exchange news".[445]
487. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that every prisoner of war "is entitled to exchange news, to send letters and to receive mail".[446]
488. Germany's Military Manual states that "not more than one week after the arrival at a camp, every prisoner of war shall be enabled to inform his family and the Central Prisoners of War Agency by letter of his captivity and to regularly correspond with his relatives henceforth".[447]
489. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that:

> One of the most important provisions in the Geneva Convention are the rules concerning the right of prisoners to maintain correspondence with their relatives . . . The detaining State may censor the mail of detainees, so long as censorship is not used as a pretext for withholding mail from prisoners.[448]

490. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians in the power of the adverse party "shall have the right to exchange news with their families".[449] It also provides that POWs "shall be allowed to inform their families and the Central Tracing Agency of the ICRC so that they can correspond regularly with their families".[450]
491. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards".[451]
492. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "correspondence from and for prisoners of war can be limited and censored".[452]
493. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that:

> Immediately upon capture and upon transfer from one place of detention to another, prisoners shall be allowed to send a card to their families and to the Central Prisoners of War Agency giving information of their capture, address and state of health. They shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards and, in exceptional circumstances, telegrams as well.[453]

[443] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 21.
[444] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), § 4.
[445] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[446] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[447] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 721.
[448] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 53.
[449] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 4.
[450] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche 2-T, § 26.
[451] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-10.
[452] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-42.
[453] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 929.

The manual further states that "all persons in the territory of the belligerent or in territory occupied by him must be enabled to transmit to, and receive from, members of their families, wherever they may be, news of a strictly personal nature".[454] It also states that:

> As soon as he is interned, transferred, or becomes sick, the internee is entitled to send a card to his family and to the Central Information Agency indicating his present location and his state of health. An internee is allowed to correspond frequently but letters may be limited in number, if the Detaining Power finds it necessary, and are subject to its censorship.[455]

Lastly, the manual specifies that in non-international armed conflicts, detained and interned persons "shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards".[456]

494. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that POWs have the right to send and receive letters.[457]

495. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "POWs should be allowed to send and receive cards and letters, free of charge".[458]

496. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians in the hands of a party to the conflict shall have the right to communicate with their families.[459]

497. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to IHL conventions and the UDHR is the right of detained persons to send and receive letters and cards whose number may be limited by the competent authority if it deems necessary.[460]

498. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to send and receive letters and cards. Such authorisation may be limited by the Detaining Power and correspondence may be censored."[461] Referring to Article 71 GC III, the manual notes that if the detaining power decides to limit the correspondence sent by the prisoners, the number shall not be less than two letters and four cards monthly.[462] It also points out that further limitations on the correspondence may only be decided by the protecting power.[463]

499. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that:

> Each prisoner of war shall be enabled to inform immediately or as rapidly as possible his family and the Central Prisoners of War Agency in case of illness or transfer to another camp. The prisoner shall be allowed to receive and send correspondence, and in urgent cases it shall be permitted to send telegrams . . .

[454] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1113.
[455] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1127.
[456] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1814(3).
[457] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(27) and (41).
[458] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 43.
[459] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), Part III, § 4.
[460] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 24.
[461] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996) Vol. I, § 8.4.(a).6, see also §§ 6.4.(g).1, 6.4.(g).3 and 6.4.(g).4.
[462] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.4.(g).1.
[463] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.4.(a).6.

Any prohibition of correspondence ordered for military or political reasons shall be only temporary and its duration shall be as short as possible.[464]

The same rules are also applicable to internees.[465]

500. Togo's Military Manual provides that captured enemy combatants and civilians shall have the right to exchange news with their families.[466]

501. The UK Military Manual states that:

Internees must be permitted to send and receive letters and postcards. If the Detaining Power deems it necessary to impose limitations, the number permitted must not be less than two letters and four cards monthly. Letters and cards must be conveyed with reasonable dispatch and must not be held up as a disciplinary measure. Internees who have been a long time without news or cannot obtain news from their relatives and those who are a long distance from their homes must be allowed to send telegrams at their own expense.[467]

The manual further specifies that:

Prisoners of war must be allowed to send and receive letters and cards. In addition to the capture card, they must be allowed to send at least two letters and four cards every month. Limitations on correspondence addressed to prisoners of war may be imposed only by the state on which they depend. The Detaining Power may request such a limitation. All correspondence must be conveyed as rapidly as possible, and must not be delayed or retained for disciplinary reasons. Prisoners of war who have not been in touch with their families for a long time or who are at a great distance from their homes must be allowed to send telegrams at their own expense. The same applies in case of emergency. As a general rule they must be permitted to correspond in their native language. Bags containing prisoner of war mail must be labelled as such, sealed and addressed to offices of destination.[468]

In addition, the manual provides that "prisoners undergoing disciplinary punishment must be allowed to read and write and to send and receive letters".[469]

502. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "PW must be allowed to send a capture card to the Protecting Power and to their next of kin no later than the time of their arrival in a PW camp".[470]

503. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 70 and 71 GC III and 25, 106 and 107 GC IV.[471]

504. The US Instructor's Guide provides that "even though you are a prisoner (or internee), you are entitled to send and receive mail. Each prisoner must be allowed to write a minimum of two letters and four postal cards per month."[472]

[464] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 133 and 137.
[465] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 182.
[466] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 5.
[467] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 67.
[468] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 189.
[469] UK, Military Manual (1981), § 219.
[470] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 31, § 16(f).
[471] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 146, 147, 264, 313 and 314.
[472] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 11.

505. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "the prisoner of war shall be permitted to send out a capture card addressed to the Central Prisoners of War Agency for its card index system". The Pamphlet further specifies that Article 71 GC III entitles them "to mail a minimum of 2 letters and 4 cards each month". It adds that "this minimum may be reduced if the protecting power finds that to be required by necessary censorship. POWs are also allowed to send telegrams under certain circumstances."[473]

National Legislation

506. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "prisoners of war are entitled to the following in all cases: . . . to write messages to their relatives (directly through the adverse party and points of exchange, or through the Protecting Powers or their substitute – ICRC)".[474]

507. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[475]

508. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 70 and 71 GC III and 25 and 107 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 5(2)(b) AP II, are punishable offences.[476]

509. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[477]

510. Rwanda's Prison Order provides that prisoners are entitled to correspond with their families.[478]

National Case-law

511. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

512. It is reported that, during the Algerian war of independence, "French prisoners never had any reason to complain about their stay in captivity . . . They had the right to write to their families via the Algerian Red Crescent."[479]

[473] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-7.
[474] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 22(5).
[475] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[476] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[477] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[478] Rwanda, Prison Order (1961), Article 51.
[479] La révolution algérienne tient au respect de l'homme, El Moudjahid, Vol. 3, p. 57.

513. The instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, state that detainees "have the right to correspond with their families".[480]
514. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, during the communist insurgency, correspondence was allowed in detention camps.[481]
515. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that no POW in the hands of Iraq "was permitted the rights otherwise afforded them by [GC III], such as the right of correspondence authorised by Article 70".[482]
516. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[483]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
517. No practice was found.

Other International Organisations
518. No practice was found.

International Conferences
519. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the treatment of prisoners of war in which it recognised that "the international community has consistently demanded . . . the facilitation of communication between prisoners of war and the exterior".[484]
520. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it recognised that, irrespective of GC III, "the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war, including . . . authorisation for prisoners to communicate with each other and with the exterior".[485]

[480] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1995, Section 6, § 62.
[481] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[482] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 630.
[483] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[484] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXIV.
[485] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. XI.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

521. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

522. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "prisoner of war are allowed to send and receive letters and cards" and that "the censoring of correspondence . . . shall be done as quickly as possible."[486]
523. In the context of the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC had registered some 6,800 Iranian prisoners of war by 1 March 1983. The organisation stated that these prisoners had been able "to correspond with their families in a satisfactory manner".[487]

VI. Other Practice

524. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "captured combatants and civilians under the authority of an adverse party . . . have the right to correspond with their families".[488]

I. Visits to Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

Note: For practice concerning visits by the ICRC, see section G of this chapter. For practice concerning visits by religious personnel, see section J of this chapter. For practice concerning visits of counsel, see Chapter 32, section M.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
525. Article 116, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "every internee shall be allowed to receive visitors, especially near relatives, at regular intervals and as frequently as possible".
526. Article 37 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that every child deprived of liberty "shall have the right to maintain contact with his or her family through . . . visits, save in exceptional circumstances".

[486] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 716–717, see also 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).
[487] ICRC, Conflict between Iraq and Iran: ICRC Appeal, IRRC, No. 235, 1983, p. 221.
[488] ICRC archive document.

Other Instruments

527. Rule 37 of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "prisoners shall be allowed to receive visits from their family and reputable friends".

528. Rule 43(1) of the 1987 European Prison Rules provides that "prisoners shall be allowed to communicate with their families and, subject to the needs of treatment, security and good order, persons or representatives of outside organisations and to receive visits from these persons as often as possible".

529. Principle 19 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "a detained or imprisoned person shall have the right to be visited by . . . members of his family . . . subject to reasonable conditions and restrictions as specified by law or lawful regulations".

530. Article 3(a) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict . . . it is a duty to arrange visits or reunions of the families separated by the circumstances of war".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

531. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) reproduces Article 116 GC IV.[489]

532. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) reproduces Article 116 GC IV.[490]

533. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines states that "family members, relatives . . . of detainees or arrested persons must be granted free access to the detention center/jail where the detainees are held, in accordance with the law and [Armed Forces of the Philippines/Philippines National Police] policy".[491]

534. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> Every internee must be allowed to receive visitors, especially near relatives, at regular intervals and as frequently as possible. When possible, internees must also be allowed to visit their homes in urgent cases, particularly in cases of death or serious illness of relatives.[492]

535. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 116 GC IV.[493]

National Legislation

536. Numerous pieces of domestic legislation and administrative regulations provide for the right of detainees to be visited by their relatives. For instance,

[489] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.047.
[490] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.35(5).
[491] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § b(2).
[492] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 70.
[493] US, Field Manual (1956), § 323.

under Rwanda's Prison Order, detainees are entitled to have contacts with the outside world, including visits.[494]

537. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[495]

538. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 116 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[496]

539. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[497]

National Case-law

540. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

541. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

542. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly demanded that the FRY government guarantee the families of persons detained and transferred from Kosovo to other parts of the FRY and NGOs and international observers unimpeded and regular access to those who remained in detention.[498]

Other International Organisations

543. No practice was found.

International Conferences

544. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

545. In the Greek case in 1969, the ECiHR concluded that "the extreme manner of separation of detainees from their families and in particular, the severe

494 Rwanda, Prison Order (1961), Article 50.
495 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
496 Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
497 Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
498 UN General Assembly, Res. 54/183, 17 December 1999, § 9.

limitations, both practical and administrative, on the family visits" constituted a breach of Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR.[499]

546. In it admissibility decision in X. v. UK in 1982, the ECiHR held that a general limitation of visiting facilities to relatives and close relatives of prisoners was reasonable and constituted no interference with the prisoners' right to respect for private life according to Article 8 ECHR. The test was whether the interference with the right to family life to which the detainee was also entitled went "beyond what would be normally accepted in the case of an ordinary detainee". If the restrictions could not stand this test, the Commission had allowed the national authorities a very wide margin of appreciation in the limitation of family contacts on the basis of one of the grounds of the second paragraph of Article 8 ECHR. The Commission accepted an Austrian practice according to which those who were serving a sentence of imprisonment of more than a year were on that ground alone denied visits from their children under age, for the protection of the morals of these minors. In addition to an examination by the Strasbourg authorities of whether the restrictions were reasonable in the particular case, they should see to it that the restriction was not imposed on the prisoner as a disguised sanction on his/her behaviour, which would constitute a breach of Article 18 ECHR.[500]

547. In 1993, with reference to a prison to which members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement were transferred, the IACiHR recommended that Peru allow relatives to visit prisoners.[501]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

548. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

549. According to the Report on SPLM/A practice, the Penal and Disciplinary Laws of the SPLM/A "gives power to every officer in charge of any unit to arrest and detain accused persons". The report asserts that:

> This has led to a practice in the SPLA where many people are detained for long periods. Between 1985 and 1991, many people remained detained without charges in the Ethiopian bushes of the SPLM/A. Detainees remained incommunicado, without visits from friends or relatives, no treatment and in most cases no trials.[502]

[499] ECiHR, Greek case, Report, 5 November 1969, Part B, Chapter IV(B)(VI), Section D, § 21.
[500] ECiHR, X. v. UK, Admissibility Decision, 8 October 1982, p. 115.
[501] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Peru, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83 Doc. 31, 12 March 1993, p. 29.
[502] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.3, referring to SPLM/A, Penal and Disciplinary Laws, 4 July 1984, Section 73.

J. Respect for Convictions and Religious Practices of Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

Note: For practice concerning respect for convictions and religious practices in general, see Chapter 32, section P.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

550. Article 18 of the 1899 HR provides that "prisoners of war shall enjoy every latitude in the exercise of their religion, including attendance at their own church services, provided only they comply with the regulations for order and police issued by the military authorities".

551. Article 18 of the 1907 HR provides that "prisoners of war shall enjoy complete liberty in the exercise of their religion, including attendance at the services of whatever church they may belong to, on the sole condition that they comply with the measures of order and police issued by the military authorities".

552. Articles 34 GC III and 93 GC IV provide that detainees "shall enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religious duties, including attendance at the service of their faith, on condition that they comply with the disciplinary routine prescribed by the military authorities".

553. Articles 34 GC III and 86 GC IV provide that adequate premises shall be provided where religious services may be held.

554. Articles 35 GC III and 93 GC IV provide that retained chaplains shall be allowed to exercise freely their ministry.

555. Article 76, third paragraph, GC IV provides that protected persons accused or convicted of offences shall have the right to receive any spiritual assistance they may require.

556. Article 4(1) AP II states that "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities, whether or not their liberty has been restricted, are entitled to respect for their . . . convictions and religious practices". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[503]

557. Article 5(1)(d) AP II provides that persons whose liberty has been restricted "shall be allowed to practise their religion and, if requested and appropriate, to receive spiritual assistance from persons, such as chaplains, performing religious functions". Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[504]

Other Instruments

558. Rule 6(2) of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "it is necessary to respect the religious beliefs and moral precepts of the group to which a prisoner belongs". Rules 41 and 42 further develop this rule by providing for the appointment of a qualified representative and the provision of services and readings in the institutions.

[503] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[504] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.

559. Rule 2 of the 1987 European Prison Rules provides that "the religious beliefs and moral precepts of the group to which a prisoner belongs shall be respected". Rules 46 and 47 further develop this rule by providing for the appointment of a qualified representative and the provision of services and readings in the institutions.

560. Paragraph 3 of the 1990 Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that it is "desirable to respect the religious beliefs and cultural precepts of the group to which prisoners belong, whenever local conditions so require".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

561. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that prisoners of war and internees "shall enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religious duties, including attendance at the service of their faith, on condition that they comply with the disciplinary routine prescribed by the military authorities".[505]

562. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "prisoners of war shall enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religious duties, including attendance at the service of their faith". It adds that "adequate premises shall be provided where religious services may be held".[506]

563. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "PWs are completely free to exercise their religious duties and must be provided with adequate premises where religious services can be held".[507] The manual considers the infringement of the religious rights of prisoners of war as a war crime.[508]

564. Benin's Military Manual provides that captured enemy combatants shall be entitled to respect for their religious beliefs.[509]

565. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that POWs are to receive spiritual attention, if possible from chaplains attached to their own forces or of their own nationality. It adds that the detaining power must provide religious personnel with all the facilities necessary for the religious ministration of the POWs.[510] Concerning the treatment of internees, the manual provides that "premises for the holding of religious services must be made available".[511] It also specifies that "internees shall enjoy complete freedom to practice their own religion".[512] The manual further states that persons undergoing sentences

[505] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 2.030 and 4.031.
[506] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.14.
[507] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1030.
[508] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1315.
[509] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 5.
[510] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-4, §§ 36–37.
[511] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 53.
[512] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 54.

of imprisonment "have the right to receive any spiritual assistance which they may require".[513] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that the persons whose liberty has been restricted "must be allowed to practise their religion and to receive spiritual assistance from those performing religious functions".[514]

566. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, all detained persons shall receive spiritual assistance.[515]

567. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "the following acts are representative war crimes: offences against prisoners of war, including . . . infringement of religious rights; . . . offences against civilian inhabitants of occupied territory including . . . infringement of religious rights".[516]

568. Germany's Military Manual provides that "latitude in the exercise of religious duties of prisoners shall be ensured".[517]

569. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that during their captivity, "the detaining State must allow the prisoners freedom of religion, enable them to take part in religious ceremonies and set aside a place for conducting these ceremonies".[518]

570. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "POWs shall have complete freedom in the exercise of their religion, including receiving spiritual assistance, and the commander of the camp shall facilitate such exercise so far as military discipline permits".[519]

571. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to receive spiritual assistance".[520]

572. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "prisoners of war shall enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religious duties, including attendance at the service of their faith, on condition that they comply with the disciplinary routine prescribed by the military authorities".[521] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that persons whose liberty has been restricted shall be allowed to practise their religion and to receive spiritual assistance".[522]

573. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war are to receive spiritual attention, if possible from chaplains attached to their own forces or of their own nationality".[523] It further points out that "internees shall

[513] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-7, § 62(b).
[514] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 25.
[515] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 21.
[516] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5.
[517] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 718.
[518] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 53.
[519] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. II, Chapter XIV, § 105.
[520] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 26.
[521] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-7.
[522] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[523] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 924(1).

enjoy complete freedom to practice their own religion".[524] It specifies that "premises for the holding of religious services must be made available".[525] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual stresses that detainees "must be allowed to practise their religion and to receive spiritual assistance from those performing religions functions".[526]

574. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that POWs shall have complete liberty in the exercise of their religion.[527]

575. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "POWs should enjoy religious freedom provided that it does not disrupt routine discipline".[528]

576. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians in the hands of a party to the conflict shall have the right to practice their religion freely.[529]

577. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to IHL conventions and the UDHR is the right of persons deprived of their liberty to receive spiritual assistance.[530]

578. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "prisoners of war shall enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religion, including attendance at the service of their faith organised by the religious service of the camp".[531] The manual points out, however, the obligation of prisoners to "comply with the disciplinary routine prescribed by the Detaining Power".[532]

579. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "prisoners shall enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religion, including assistance at the service of their faith, on the condition that they comply with the disciplinary routine prescribed by the military authorities".[533] The manual further emphasises that "religious convictions must be respected".[534]

580. Togo's Military Manual provides that captured enemy combatants shall be entitled to respect for their religious beliefs.[535]

581. The UK Military Manual states that:

> Internees are to enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religious duties, provided that they comply with the disciplinary routine prescribed by the Detaining Powers. Ministers of religion when interned must be allowed to minister freely to the members of their community.[536]

[524] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1123(3).
[525] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1123(4).
[526] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1814(2).
[527] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(26).
[528] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 42.
[529] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), Part III, § 4.
[530] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 24.
[531] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.4.(i).9.
[532] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.5.(c).1.
[533] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 124.
[534] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 167.
[535] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 5.
[536] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 63.

The manual further states that prisoners of war must be allowed complete freedom for the performance of their religious duties, and that adequate accommodation must be provided for religious services.[537]

582. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "prisoners must be allowed freedom in the exercise of their religious beliefs. Accommodation must be provided for religious services."[538]

583. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 34 and 35 GC III and 76, 86 and 93 GC IV.[539]

584. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Articles 34–38 GC III, guarantees POWs enjoyment of religious activities.[540]

585. The US Instructor's Guide provides that "even though you are a prisoner, you are entitled to practice your religious faith. All prisoners shall enjoy complete freedom in the exercise and observance of their religious faith."[541]

586. The US Naval Handbook provides that "the following acts are representative war crimes: offences against prisoners of war, including . . . infringement of religious rights; . . . offences against civilian inhabitants of occupied territory, including . . . infringement of religious rights".[542]

National Legislation

587. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "prisoners of war are entitled to the following in all cases: . . . respect for their habits, national customs and religious ceremonies".[543]

588. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[544]

589. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 34 and 35 GC III and 76, 86 and 93 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 4(1) and 5(1)(d) AP II, are punishable offences.[545]

590. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who arbtrarily violates or restricts the freedom of religion or belief of prisoners of war[546]

591. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to

[537] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 156.
[538] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 31, § 17(d).
[539] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 110, 111, 293, 300 and 446.
[540] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-4.
[541] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 11.
[542] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[543] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 22(5).
[544] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[545] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[546] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 213.

the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[547]

National Case-law

592. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

593. According to the Report on the Practice of France, in December 1981, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs was asked in the National Assembly about two Soviet prisoners held by the Afghan faction, Hezb-i-Islami, who were being threatened with execution if they did not convert to Islam. In his reply, the Minister stated that, whatever the nature of the conflict, prisoners must be respected.[548]

594. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[549]

595. In 1993, the army of a State issued instructions in the context of a UN operation, stating that detainees should be shown respect by making reasonable provisions for their religious practices.[550]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

596. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary General stated that "violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II thereto committed in an armed conflict not of an international character have long been considered customary international law".[551]

Other International Organisations

597. No practice was found.

[547] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[548] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.3, Reply by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to a question in parliament, 28 December 1981, Politique étrangère de la France, February 1982, p. 390.
[549] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[550] ICRC archive document.
[551] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

International Conferences

598. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

599. In its judgment in the Aleksovski case in 1999, the ICTY Trial Chamber held, in relation to detention conditions, that:

> In sum, it was not established that the difficulties encountered by the detainees in respect of the observance of religious rites resulted from any deliberate policy of the accused or of the men placed under his authority. In this respect, the Trial Chamber notes that the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, though not directly applicable, stipulates in Article 93 that "[i]nternees shall enjoy complete latitude in the exercise of their religious duties, including attendance at the services of their faith, on condition that they comply with the disciplinary routine prescribed by the detaining authorities". In the present case, the practice of religion was not prohibited and most of the victims stated that they were able to practise their religion despite the difficult conditions. The Trial Chamber would thus reject the Prosecutor's allegation on this point.[552]

600. In its General Comment on Article 18 of the 1966 ICCPR, the HRC held that "persons already subject to certain legitimate constraints, such as prisoners, continue to enjoy their rights to manifest their religion or belief to the fullest extent compatible with the specific nature of the constraint".[553]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

601. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "prisoners of war shall be allowed to exercise religious observance" and that "adequate premises shall be provided where religious services may be held".[554]

602. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC stated that "religious customs must be respected, which implies access to places of worship to the fullest extent possible".[555]

VI. Other Practice

603. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi

[552] ICTY, Aleksovski case, Judgement, 25 June 1999, § 168.
[553] HRC, General Comment No. 22 (Article 18 ICCPR), 30 July 1993, § 8.
[554] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 709-710, see also 839 (application mutatis mutandis of the regulations for the treatment of POWs to civilian internees).
[555] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC Appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.

University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "all persons, even if their liberty has been restricted, are entitled to respect for their person, honour and convictions, freedom of thought, conscience and religious practices".[556]

K. Release and Return of Persons Deprived of Their Liberty

Release and return without delay

Note: For practice concerning amnesty for participation in armed conflict in general, see Chapter 44, section D.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

604. Article 20 of the 1899 HR provides that "after the conclusion of peace, the repatriation of prisoners of war shall take place as speedily as possible".

605. Article 20 of the 1907 HR provides that "after the conclusion of peace, the repatriation of prisoners of war shall be carried out as quickly as possible".

606. Article 109, first paragraph, GC III provides that "Parties to the conflict are bound to send back to their own country, regardless of number or rank, seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war". The second paragraph provides that "throughout the duration of hostilities, Parties to the conflict shall endeavour, with the co-operation of the neutral Powers concerned, to make arrangements for the accommodation in neutral countries of the sick and wounded prisoners of war".

607. Article 118, first paragraph, GC III provides that "prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities". Article 119 contains the details of procedure.

608. Article 132 GC IV provides that:

> Each interned person shall be released by the Detaining Power as soon as the reasons which necessitated his internment no longer exist.
>
> The Parties to the conflict shall, moreover, endeavour during the course of hostilities, to conclude agreements for the release, the repatriation, the return to places of residence or the accommodation in a neutral country of certain classes of internees, in particular children, pregnant women and mothers with infants and young children, wounded and sick, and internees who have been detained for a long time.

609. Article 133 GC IV provides that:

> Internment shall cease as soon as possible after the close of hostilities.
>
> Internees in the territory of a Party to the conflict, against whom penal proceedings are pending for offences not exclusively subject to disciplinary penalties, may be detained until the close of such proceedings and, if circumstances require, until the completion of the penalty. The same shall apply to internees who have been previously sentenced to a punishment depriving them of liberty.

[556] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(1), IRRC, No. 282, p. 331.

610. Article 134 GC IV provides that "the High Contracting Parties shall endeavour, upon the close of hostilities or occupation, to ensure the return of all internees to their last place of residence, or to facilitate their repatriation". Article 135 deals with the costs of the return.

611. Article III(51)(a) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that "within sixty (60) days after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, each side shall, without offering any hindrance, directly repatriate and hand over in groups all those prisoners of war in its custody who insist on repatriation to the side to which they belonged at the time of capture". Article III(53) adds that "all the sick and injured prisoners of war who insist upon repatriation shall be repatriated with priority". Paragraph I(1) of the Annex to the Armistice Agreement further sets the terms of reference of a Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission established "in order to ensure that all prisoners of war have the opportunity to exercise their right to be repatriated following an armistice".

612. Paragraph 5 of the 1956 Joint Declaration on Soviet-Japanese Relations states that:

> On the entry into force of this Joint Declaration, all Japanese citizens convicted in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics shall be released and repatriated to Japan. With regard to those Japanese whose fate is unknown, the USSR, at the request of Japan, will continue its effort to discover what has happened to them.

613. Article 4 of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Civilian Personnel provided that the return of all captured military personnel and civilians from the various parties concerned "shall be completed within 60 days of the signing of the Agreement . . . Persons who are seriously ill, wounded or maimed, old persons and women shall be returned first." Article 6 provides that "each party shall return all captured persons . . . without delay".

614. In the 1974 Agreement on Repatriation of Detainees between Bangladesh, India and Pakistan, the three governments agreed to facilitate the return of detainees in order to make further progress in the process of "reconciliation and normalisation among the countries of the sub-continent".

615. Under Article 85(4)(b) AP I, an "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians" is a grave breach of the Protocol. Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[557]

616. Upon ratification of AP I, South Korea made a declaration in relation to paragraph 4 (b) of Article 85 in which it stated that "a party detaining prisoners of war may not repatriate its prisoners [against] their openly and freely expressed will, which shall not be regarded as unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war constituting a grave breach of this Protocol".[558]

[557] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

617. The 1987 Esquipulas II Accords stated that "simultaneously with the issuance of the decrees of amnesty, the irregular forces of the country concerned shall release all persons in their power".

618. Article 4 of the 1993 CIS Agreement on the Protection of Victims of Armed Conflicts provides that "the Parties will take immediate coordinated measures to protect people unlawfully detained for reasons related to the armed conflict, regardless of whether they are interned or detained, and also in order to ensure return of POWs and the unconditional release of hostages".

619. In Article IX of the 1995 Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Peace Settlement annexed to the Dayton Accords, the parties agreed to "release and transfer all combatants and civilians held in relation to the conflict . . . in conformity with international humanitarian law". All prisoners were to be released and transferred no later than 30 days after the passing of authority from UNPROFOR to IFOR.

620. Article 2(1) and (2) of the 2000 Peace Agreement between Ethiopia and Eritrea provides that:

> In fulfilling their obligations under international humanitarian law, including the 1949 Geneva Conventions, and in cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, the parties shall without delay, release and repatriate all prisoners of war, . . . release and repatriate or return to their last place of residence all other persons detained as a result of the armed conflict.

Other Instruments

621. Article 119 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "prisoners of war may be released from captivity by exchange, and, under certain circumstances, also by parole". Article 123 specifies, however, that "release of prisoners of war by exchange is the general rule; release by parole is the exception".

622. Article 75 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "prisoners of war may be released in accordance with a cartel of exchange, agreed upon by the belligerent parties".

623. Article 76 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "prisoners may be set at liberty on parole, if the laws of their country do not forbid it".

624. In paragraph 3 of the 1990 Government of El Salvador-FMLN Agreement on Human Rights, the parties agreed that, in the course of negotiations, appropriate legal procedures and timetables would be determined for the release of individuals who had been imprisoned for political reasons.

625. Pursuant to Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, an "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war after the cessation of hostilities" is an "exceptionally serious war crime".

[558] South Korea, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 15 January 1982, § 2.

626. Article 21 of the 1991 Final Act of the Paris Conference on Cambodia requested that the ICRC facilitate, in accordance with its principles, the release of POWs and civilian internees. The release of all prisoners and civilian internees was to be accomplished at the earliest possible date. Article 22 defined the expression "civilian internee" as "all persons who are not POWs and who, having contributed in any way whatsoever to the armed or political struggle, have been arrested or detained by any of the parties by virtue of their contribution thereto".

627. Under Paragraph II.3 of the 1991 Peace Accords between the Government of Angola and UNITA, all civilian and military prisoners held by either party were to be released.

628. Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Release and Repatriation of Prisoners provides that "all prisoners visited by the ICRC and mentioned on the ICRC list appearing in Annex A shall be released in an operation which will take place under ICRC supervision in Nemetin on August 14, 1992".

629. Agreement No. 2 on the Implementation of the Agreement of 22 May 1992 between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that a Commission, consisting of four liaison officers appointed by the parties, would be created under the auspices of the ICRC and "assume the following tasks: (a) exchange lists and take the necessary steps with a view to release prisoners".

630. Paragraph 2 of the Agreement on the Exchange of Prisoners between the FRY and Croatia (July 1992) provided that "the release and repatriation of all prisoners shall take place without delay".

631. Article 3(1) of the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners provides that "all prisoners not accused of, or sentenced for, grave breaches of International Humanitarian Law . . . will be unilaterally and unconditionally released". Article 10 provides that "any prisoner released in or transferred to an area other than that of his or her former residence retains the right to return home at a later stage if he or she wishes to do so".

632. Part III of the 1992 General Peace Agreement for Mozambique specified that all prisoners being held, except those convicted for ordinary crimes, should be released by the parties.

633. Article 4 of the 1992 N'sele Cease-fire Agreement provided that the cease-fire shall imply "the release of all prisoners-of-war; the effective release of all persons arrested because and as a result of this war within five days following the entry into force of the Cease-fire Agreement".

634. Article 10 of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia provided that all POWs and detainees should immediately be released. Common-law criminals were not covered by this provision.

635. Article 5 of the 1993 Afghan Peace Accord provided that there should be immediate release of all detainees held by the government and different parties during the armed hostilities.
636. Under Article 20(c)(ii) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" is a war crime.
637. Under Article 2 of the 1996 Moscow Agreement on a Cease-fire in Chechnya, the parties to the conflict in Chechnya agreed on certain modalities of liberating all persons being retained by force. The term "persons being retained by force" was to be understood as participants in the armed conflict who had been arrested, hostages and other civilian persons who had been detained, including those arrested at roadblocks, without the presentation of charges of accusation, or those to whom up to 27 May 1996 (the date of the cease-fire agreement) no charges or accusation had been presented within the time periods established by law. The working groups were to exchange lists of forcibly detained persons within a day of the agreement and the release of unlawfully detained persons was to commence immediately.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
638. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969), referring to Article 118 GC III, provides that "prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities".[559] Referring to Article 109 GC III, the manual also states that "Parties to the conflict are bound to send back to their own country, regardless of number or rank, seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war, after having cared for them until they are fit to travel". According to the manual, the following should be repatriated directly:

(1) Incurably wounded and sick whose mental or physical fitness seems to have been gravely diminished;
(2) Wounded and sick who, according to medical opinion, are not likely to recover within one year, whose condition requires treatment and whose mental or physical fitness seems to have been gravely diminished;
(3) Wounded and sick who have recovered, but whose mental or physical fitness seems to have been gravely and permanently diminished.[560]

639. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that "prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without any delay after the cessation of the hostilities".[561] Referring to Articles 109 and 110 GC III, the manual also states that "the Parties to the conflict have the obligation, regardless of number or rank,

[559] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.098.
[560] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.091.
[561] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.32.

to repatriate seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war".[562] The manual identifies grave breaches of Article 85 AP I as war crimes.[563]

640. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "PWs are to be repatriated immediately to their own country at the conclusion of the hostilities".[564]

641. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "while all PWs are to be released and repatriated immediately upon cessation of active hostilities, parties to the conflict are to repatriate, regardless of rank or number, all seriously wounded and sick when fit to travel".[565] It further states that "interned persons must be released by the detaining power as soon as the reasons which necessitated internment cease to exist. Internment must also cease as soon as possible after the close of hostilities."[566] The manual also identifies "unjustifiable delay in repatriating prisoners of war or civilians" as a war crime.[567]

642. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that release and repatriation of POWs must be obtained at the end of hostilities.[568]

643. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that all POWs must be repatriated at the end of hostilities.[569]

644. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that "unjustified delay in repatriation of POWs" falls under "grave breaches (war crimes)".[570]

645. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "retention of prisoners of war and civilians" constitutes a grave breach, which is a war crime.[571]

646. Germany's Military Manual states that "all prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities. This requires neither a formal armistice agreement nor the conclusion of a peace treaty."[572] It further stresses that "seriously wounded and sick prisoners of war who are fit to travel and whose mental or physical fitness has been incurably or permanently diminished or whose recovery may not be expected within one year shall already be repatriated during the armed conflict".[573] The manual specifies that "grave breaches of international humanitarian law are in particular: . . . unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war and civilians".[574]

647. Hungary's Military Manual provides that one of the measures required after a conflict is the repatriation of POWs and internees.[575] It also states that

[562] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.31.
[563] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[564] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1045.
[565] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-5, § 49.
[566] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-7, § 58.
[567] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), Section 16.3, §§ 8 and 17.
[568] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 154, § 541.
[569] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 31.
[570] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 56.
[571] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[572] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 731.
[573] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 732.
[574] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[575] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), pp. 38 and 99.

"unjustified delay in repatriation of POWs" falls under "grave breaches (war crimes)".[576]

648. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "in any event, at the end of hostilities, the prisoners must be returned to their State of nationality".[577]

649. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "unjustified delay in repatriation of prisoners of war" is considered a war crime.[578]

650. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "at the end of the hostilities, the prisoners of war must be released without delay". It adds that "gravely wounded and sick prisoners shall be immediately repatriated".[579]

651. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities". It also provides that "Parties to the conflict are bound to send back to their own country seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war".[580]

652. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war must be repatriated by the Detaining Power".[581]

653. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war must be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities".[582] It further states that "unjustifiable delay in repatriating prisoners of war or civilians [is a grave breach when committed wilfully and in violation of the Conventions and Protocol].[583] The manual also states that:

> Parties to the conflict are to repatriate, regardless of rank or number, all seriously wounded and sick when fit to travel and, when possible, agreements should be made between the parties, with the cooperation of neutral states, for the detention of such persons in neutral territory pending such repatriation . . .
>
> Interned persons must be released by the Detaining Power as soon as the reasons which necessitated internment cease to exist. Internment must also cease as soon as possible after the end of hostilities but internees, who are in the territory of a belligerent and who are undergoing a sentence of confinement or against whom judicial proceedings . . . are pending, may be detained until the end of the proceedings or, as the case requires, of the sentence. Each State which is a party to the IV GC must endeavour, at the end of hostilities or of the occupation, to ensure the return of all internees to their last place of residence, or at least to facilitate their repatriation.[584]

654. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "prisoners of war must be released and repatriated upon the cessation of the hostilities".[585]

[576] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 90.
[577] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 54.
[578] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 85.
[579] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 26.
[580] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-12, § 6.
[581] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-42.
[582] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 910.
[583] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1703(4).
[584] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 935 and 1133.
[585] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 44.

655. South Africa's Medical Services Military Manual makes specific reference to the obligations in Articles 118 and 119 GC III and provides that, after an armistice, POWs against whom no criminal proceedings are pending have a right to be released and repatriated without delay.[586] The manual identifies as war crimes grave breaches of AP I.[587]

656. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that internees and POWs must be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of hostilities. It specifies that certain categories of internees must be released as soon as the reasons for their internment no longer exist, regardless of whether their return to their place of residence can be authorised during the hostilities. These provisions apply to persons with incurable wounds or illnesses, who are not expected to recover within one year or those people who, although recovered, remain debilitated; children; expectant mothers or those with young children; and wounded, sick or interned persons who have been interned for long periods. It also specifies that when releasing and repatriating internees and POWs, priority should be given to the wounded and sick, the elderly and those who have been detained the longest.[588] The manual further provides that "it is a grave breach which shall be qualified war crime . . . to delay without justification the repatriation of prisoners of war and civilian internees".[589]

657. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "prisoners shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities. The Detaining Power shall establish a plan of repatriation and ensure its execution."[590] It further provides that grave breaches of AP I include "the unjustified delay in repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians".[591] The manual also states that "seriously wounded and sick prisoners of war shall be repatriated as soon as their state of health permits it; the other wounded and sick may be hospitalised in neutral countries".[592] The manual stipulates that "Mixed Medical Commissions shall be appointed to examine sick and wounded prisoners to make all appropriate decisions regarding their repatriation or hospitalisation in a neutral country".[593]

658. The UK Military Manual states that "Prisoners of war must be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities".[594]

659. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "PW must be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities".[595]

[586] South Africa, Medical Services Military Manual (undated), Article 36.
[587] South Africa, Medical Services Military Manual (undated), § 41.
[588] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.5 and 6.9.
[589] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1)
[590] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 141.
[591] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 193(2).
[592] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 142(1).
[593] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 142(2).
[594] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 261.
[595] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 33, § 22.

660. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 109, 118 and 119 GC III and 132 and 134 GC IV.[596]
661. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities". It further stresses the obligation of the parties to the conflict to repatriate seriously wounded and sick POWs.[597]

National Legislation
662. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes members of the armed forces who, in the event of an armed conflict, "unreasonably hinder or delay the liberation or repatriation of prisoners of war or civilian persons".[598]
663. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians" during an armed conflict constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[599]
664. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach . . . of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[600]
665. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates grave breaches of AP I in the list of war crimes in the Criminal Code, including "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians".[601]
666. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that "unfounded delay of repatriation of POW and civilian individuals to their native country" constitutes a war crime.[602]
667. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[603]
668. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians" is a war crime.[604]
669. Under Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended, "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians" is a grave breach and, as such, a criminal offence.[605]
670. The Amnesty Law as amended of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provided for the release and repatriation of POWs without delay

[596] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 188, 198, 200 and 339–431.
[597] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-10.
[598] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(7) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[599] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.4(2).
[600] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[601] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.99.
[602] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 116.0.15.
[603] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[604] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 136(15).
[605] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(18).

upon cessation of active hostilities.[606] The Law on Amnesty as amended of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[607]

671. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of AP I] . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[608]

672. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach . . . of [AP I]".[609]

673. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that "whoever in violation of the rules of international law, after the termination of a war or armed conflict, orders or imposes an unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians shall be punished".[610]

674. Cyprus's AP I Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach of the provisions of the Protocol, or takes part or assists or incites another person in the commission of such a breach".[611]

675. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended punishes "whoever in wartime . . . delays, without grounds, the return of civilians or prisoners of war".[612]

676. According to the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, "anyone who, in a situation of international armed conflict, delays without justification the repatriation of protected persons, shall be punished".[613]

677. Estonia's Penal Code provides that "unjustified delay in the release or repatriation, if committed against a prisoner o war or an interned civilian" is a war crime.[614]

678. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians" in an international or a non-international armed conflict is a crime.[615]

679. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code punishes anyone, who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "unjustifiably delays the return home of a protected person".[616]

606 Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Amnesty Law as amended (1996), Article 5.
607 Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Law on Amnesty as amended (1996), Article 5.
608 Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
609 Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
610 Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 166.
611 Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1).
612 Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(2)(b).
613 El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article on "Demora injustificada de repatriación".
614 Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 99.
615 Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(1)(h).
616 Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(3)(1).

680. Hungary's Criminal Code as amended provides that "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians persons" is a punishable offence.[617]

681. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of AP I are punishable offences.[618] It adds that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 109 and 118 GC III and 132–134 GC IV, are also punishable offences.[619]

682. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code states that, when committed in a situation of armed conflict, unreasonably delaying the repatriation of POWs or civilians to their country of origin, is considered a war crime.[620]

683. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians" is a war crime.[621]

684. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, unjustified delay in the release or repatriation of prisoners of war and interned alien civilians after the termination of hostilities is a war crime.[622]

685. Moldova's Penal Code punishes "grave breaches of international humanitarian law committed during international and non-international armed conflicts".[623]

686. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit, in an international armed conflict, "the following acts if committed intentionally and in violation of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol (I): . . . unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians".[624]

687. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach . . . of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[625]

688. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides that "whoever, in the circumstances of an international armed conflict, delays without justification the repatriation of a protected person" commits a punishable offence.[626]

689. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians", protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977, constitutes a war crime.[627]

617 Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 158(3)(c).
618 Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
619 Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
620 Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(16).
621 Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(15).
622 Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 342 and 343.
623 Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 391.
624 Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(2)(d)(ii).
625 New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
626 Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 454.
627 Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(18).

690. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[628]
691. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended punishes "whoever in wartime ... delays, without grounds, the return of civilians or prisoners of war".[629]
692. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that "whoever, at the end of war or armed conflict and in violation of the rules of international law, orders the postponement of the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians, or postpones it himself" shall be punished".[630]
693. Spain's Penal Code punishes anyone who unjustifiably prevents or delays the release or repatriation of POWs or civilians.[631]
694. Tajikistan's Criminal Code punishes "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in an international or non-international armed conflict ... [such as] unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians".[632]
695. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of ... [AP I]".[633]
696. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "whoever, in violation of the rules of international law, once the war or an armed conflict is over, orders an unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians or conducts it himself shall be punished".[634]
697. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of ... [AP I]".[635]

National Case-law
698. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
699. The Report on the Practice of Algeria states that "according to the documentation published by the FLN, one can conclude that a large number of prisoners were eventually released and repatriated, often through the ICRC".[636]

628 Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
629 Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(2)(b).
630 Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 383.
631 Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611(7).
632 Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(1).
633 UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
634 SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 150-a.
635 Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).
636 Report on the Practice of Algeria, 1997, Chapter 5.4.

700. In 1992, during a debate in the UN Security Council concerning the situation in the former Yugoslavia, Bangladesh stated that a "strong signal should be conveyed to the Serbs that they must release all prisoners and detainees from the concentration camps and abolish all such camps immediately".[637]

701. According to the Report on the Practice of Botswana, it is the opinio juris of Botswana that persons in the power of an adversary should be released as soon as the reasons for arrest or detention have ceased to exist.[638]

702. The Report on the Practice of Colombia states that "the Colombian Government has ordered the demilitarization of certain regions of the country in order to advance dialogue conducive to the demobilisation and reintegration of guerrilla groups and also to carry out humanitarian operations, such as those designed to secure the release of persons deprived of liberty, both military and civilian".[639]

703. According to the Report on the Practice of Egypt, "Egypt always stresses on the search, repatriation and release of POWs, be they Egyptians or appertaining to the adverse party. This occurred on several occasions."[640]

704. The Report on the Practice of France points out that France has insisted on the moral necessity of releasing prisoners in connection with the conflicts in Afghanistan, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Rwanda. It even mentioned the possibility of freeing prisoners from camps by force.[641]

705. In 1989, in a reply to a question in parliament concerning the repatriation of Ethiopian prisoners of war, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs stated that:

> The Federal Government will also in future urge the Ethiopian government to agree to a return of prisoners on humanitarian grounds. However, neither the Third Geneva Convention of 1949, to which Ethiopia is a party, nor customary international humanitarian law places any obligation on Ethiopia to repatriate or take back prisoners of war during a continuing armed conflict.[642]

706. In 1995, all political parties in the German parliament requested the release of injured and handicapped prisoners, as well as women, in the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh.[643]

[637] Bangladesh, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3137, 16 November 1992, p. 111.
[638] Report on the Practice of Botswana, 1998, Chapter 5.4.
[639] Report on the Practice of Colombia, 1998, Chapter 1.8, referring to President's Office, Second Report on the Peace Process, 18 May 1995, pp. 3, 11 and 12; Circular of the Major General Miguel Vega Uribe, Commander of the Colombian Armed Forces, reprinted in Arturo Alape, La paz, la violencia: testigos de excepción, Bogotá, Editorial Planeta, 1985, pp. 503–508.
[640] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 5.4.
[641] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.4.
[642] Germany, Reply by the Federal Government to a written question submitted by a Bundestag member and the Parliamentary Green Party, Document 11/3841, Safety of 127 repatriated Ethiopian prisoners of war, Bundestag Document 11/4037, 11th legislative period, 20 February 1989.
[643] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Proposal by the CDU/CSU, SPD, alliance 90/the Greens and FDP, Initiative zum Karabach-Konflikt, BT-Drucksache 13/1029, 30 March 1995, p. 1.

707. According to the Report on the Practice of India, "it is very clear from the applicable law and judicial decisions that . . . when detention is no more justifiable by applicable laws, the executive authorities are bound to release the person detained".[644]

708. The Report on the Practice of Iraq refers to a military communiqué issued in 1980 during the Iran–Iraq War which pointed out that citizens of other countries who found themselves in Iraq were repatriated following evacuation.[645]

709. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, "Kuwait, like the majority of States, considers he may detain POWs until the end of military operations, simply in order to neutralise them". The report states that the opinio juris of Kuwait is that "immediately following the conclusion of hostilities, the parties must engage in negociations, possibly via a neutral intermediary, with a view to obtaining the release and return of all POWs and internees". The report specifies, however, that spies "may only be released when they have completed their prison sentences".[646]

710. According to the Report on the Practice of Nigeria, at the end of the Nigerian civil war in 1970, the inhabitants of the former Biafran enclave were released so that they could return to their respective towns.[647]

711. In 1995, the House of Representatives of the Philippines passed a resolution appealing to the President to release political prisoners detained throughout the country.[648]

712. Following the 1992 N'sele Cease-fire Agreement, the Rwandan government adopted two amnesty laws, which led to the release of most of the persons detained in connection with the conflict. The rebels also released prisoners. In October, both parties declared that they no longer detained any POWs.[649]

713. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained for their participation in an internal armed conflict and who are not serving a sentence of imprisonment lawfully imposed should be released or repatriated without delay at the end of active hostilities. Priority in release should be given to prisoners with special needs, such as the elderly and the wounded and sick. The report further states that "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. It also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that

644 Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 5.4.
645 Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 5.4 and 5.6, referring to Military Communiqué No. 65, 8 October 1980.
646 Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 5.4.
647 Report on the Practice of Nigeria, 1997, Chapter 5.4, referring to New Nigerian, 200 Ibos released, Lagos, 24 January 1970, p. 1.
648 Philippines, House of Representatives, Res. No. 27, 28 November 1995.
649 Association Rwandaise pour la défense des droits de la personne et des libertés publiques, Rapport sur les droits de l'homme au Rwanda, Kigali, 1993, pp. 45 and 51.

persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[650]

714. According to the Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, it is the opinio juris of Zimbabwe that persons detained by reason of their participation in an internal armed conflict should be released or repatriated without delay at the end of active hostilities.[651]

715. In 1980, the President of the Military Commission of a State accepted to release elderly women and men, schoolgirls, women not involved with the State Research Bureau and all other non-combatants.[652]

716. In 1992, in a letter to the President of the ICRC, the President of a separatist entity agreed to release detained persons over the age of 60.[653]

717. In 1992, in a memorandum on the responsibilities and obligations applicable to contacts with the local population, the Ministry of Defence of a State engaged in an international military operation stated that detainees (persons detained because they posed a threat to the armed forces or obstructed their operation and which were not POWs) "will normally be released once they are no longer regarded as a threat to the mission or the general population".[654]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

718. In two separate resolutions adopted in 1980, the UN Security Council called on the governments of South Africa and Zimbabwe to release all political prisoners.[655]

719. In a resolution on Tajikistan adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council welcomed the release of detainees and POWs which had taken place on 12 November 1994 and called for further similar measures.[656]

720. In 1996, in a statement by its President concerning the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council demanded that the parties "comply fully . . . and without any further delay with their commitments regarding the release of prisoners" and expressed particular concern at the failure to comply with the relevant provisions of the 1995 Dayton Accords.[657]

721. In 1998, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council demanded that "the Taliban release other Iranians detained in Afghanistan and ensure their . . . passage out of Afghanistan without further delay".[658]

[650] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapters 5.3 and 5.4.
[651] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 5.4.
[652] ICRC archive document.
[653] ICRC archive document.
[654] ICRC archive document.
[655] UN Security Council, Res. 463, 2 February 1980, §§ 5(ii) and 7; Res. 473, 13 June 1980, § 8.
[656] UN Security Council, Res. 968, 16 December 1994, § 10.
[657] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/15, 4 April 1996, pp. 1–2.
[658] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/27, 15 September 1998, p. 1.

722. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly strongly encouraged all parties:

> to fulfil the commitments made at Dayton, Ohio, to release without delay all civilians and combatants held in prison or detention in relation to the conflict, in conformity with international humanitarian law and the provisions of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina.[659]

723. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN General Assembly welcomed the reported release of female detainees with children in Sudan.[660]

724. In resolutions adopted in 1994 and 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded the immediate, internationally supervised, release of all persons arbitrarily or otherwise illegally detained in connection with the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.[661]

725. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights acknowledged the release of prisoners in the former Yugoslavia and insisted that all parties continue to fulfil their commitments in conformity with the peace agreement to release without delay all civilians and combatants detained in connection with the conflict.[662]

726. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights strongly urged the government of Myanmar "to release immediately . . . all detained political prisoners".[663]

727. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia "to release immediately any individuals held as a result of, or in relation to, any armed conflict between or among the parties".[664]

728. In 1996, in a statement by its Chairman on the situation of human rights in Chechnya, the UN Commission on Human Rights called for "the immediate release of all those who have been detained in connection with the conflict" in Chechnya.[665]

729. The Mission dispatched by the UN Secretary-General to investigate the situation of POWs in Iran and Iraq in 1988 reported that prisoners detained in Iran who were not Iraqi nationals were considered by Iran to be mercenaries and could therefore be executed according to custom. Iran promised, however, that they would also be released after the cessation of hostilities.[666]

[659] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 19.
[660] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/112, 12 December 1996, § 11.
[661] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 21; Res. 1995/89, 8 March 1995, § 25.
[662] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 12.
[663] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/80, 23 April 1996, § 3.
[664] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/79, 22 April 1998, § 41(a).
[665] UN Commission on Human Rights, Chairman's statement on the situation of human rights in the Republic of Chechnya of the Russian Federation, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/L.10/Add.10, 24 April 1996, § 87.
[666] Mission dispatched by the UN Secretary-General on the situation of prisoners of war in the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, Report, UN Doc. S/20147, 24 August 1988, § 65.

730. In 1991, in a report on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Secretary-General reported that between October and December 1991, the "ICRC has participated in a multilateral negotiating commission, meeting almost daily at Zagreb to discuss, among other issues, the release of prisoners" between Croatia and the YPA.[667]

731. In 1993, in a progress report on the situation in Somalia, the UN Secretary-General reported that, on 15 January 1993, as part of an informal preparatory meeting for a conference on national reconciliation in Somalia attended by 14 Somali political movements, it was agreed that "all POWs shall be freed and handed over to the International Committee of the Red Cross and/or UNITAF. This process shall commence immediately and be completed by 1 March 1993."[668]

732. In 1996, in relation to the 1994 Lusaka Protocol concluded between the government of Angola and UNITA, the UN Secretary-General highlighted as a positive development the release of additional prisoners registered with the ICRC.[669] In 2001, in a report on the situation concerning Western Sahara, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

> During the past two months, there has regrettably been no progress towards the repatriation of the remaining 1,481 Moroccan prisoners of war held in camps in the Tindouf area of Algeria. The plight of these men, most of whom have been held for more than 20 years, is a humanitarian and human rights issue that should be addressed on an urgent basis. I once again call on the parties to arrange for the early repatriation of all prisoners, under the auspices of the ICRC.[670]

733. In 1996, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina commented that the release of all POWs was an important part of the Agreement and expressed his serious concern at the unwillingness of the parties to fully comply with their obligations.[671] In another report later the same year, he reported that:

> Intensive pressure has resulted in the release of most prisoners registered by the ICRC who were detained in connection with the conflict. For the remaining prisoners, a process was devised whereby case files on persons alleged to have committed war crimes were passed to the ICTY for review. The parties complied fully with this process, including release of all persons for whom ICTY determined that there was insufficient evidence to warrant further detention.[672]

[667] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council resolution 721 (1991), UN Doc. S/23280, 11 December 1991, p. 7, § 18.
[668] UN Secretary-General, Progress report on the situation in Somalia, UN Doc. S/25168, 26 January 1993, § 9 and Annex III, Agreement on implementing the cease-fire and on modalities of disarmament, § IV.
[669] UN Secretary-General, Report on UNAVEM III, UN Doc. S/1996/171, 6 March 1996, § 3.
[670] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation concerning Western Sahara, UN Doc. S/2001/398, 24 April 2001, § 9.
[671] High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/190, 14 March 1996, Annex, § 74.
[672] High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/542, 10 July 1996, Annex, § 42.

Other International Organisations

734. In recommendation adopted in 1979 on the missing political prisoners in Chile, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called on member States to urge the Chilean authorities to release all detained political prisoners.[673]

735. In a resolution adopted in 1980 on the situation of human rights in Latin America, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited member States "to make vigorous representations to the governments of all countries holding political prisoners, designed to secure their release, and, when release is conditional upon their leaving the country, to grant entry visas to such prisoners".[674]

736. In a recommendation adopted in 1996 on refugees, displaced persons and reconstruction in certain countries of the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited member States to support the ICRC in the implementation of its tasks under the 1995 Dayton Accords, namely to organise the release of prisoners as quickly as possible.[675]

737. In 1996, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe reported that, in a joint communiqué in April 1996, the Presidents of Armenia and Azerbaijan had stated that the immediate release by the parties of all hostages and POWs was essential.[676]

738. In a resolution adopted in 1988 on the situation in Cyprus, the European Parliament drew the Ministers' attention to the need to find a lasting solution to the problem of missing persons, particularly through the release of those missing who might be detained in prison.[677]

739. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation in Chechnya, the European Parliament urged the parties to implement the agreement signed by the two parties that same month, providing in particular for the release of soldiers taken prisoner.[678]

740. In 1991, in the Final Communiqué of its 12th Session, the GCC Supreme Council stressed, in particular, "the need for the full and speedy implementation of the terms of the cease-fire and all the provisions of Security Council resolution 687 (1991), particularly those relating to the immediate release of all prisoners and detainees, both Kuwaitis and third-country nationals".[679]

673 Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 868, 5 June 1979, § 12(ii).
674 Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 722, 28 January 1980, § 11(g).
675 Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1287, 24 January 1996, § 19(viii)(d).
676 Council of Europe, Committee of Ministers, Doc. 7690, Supplementary reply to recommendation 1263 (1995) on the humanitarian situation of the refugee and displaced persons in Armenia and Azerbaijan, 29 October 1996, pp. 2–3.
677 European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in Cyprus, 27 June 1988, §§ 7–8.
678 European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in Chechnya, 15 December 1994, § 5.
679 GCC, Supreme Council, 12th Session, Kuwait, 23-25 December 1991, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 30 December 1992 from Kuwait to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/46/833-S/23336, 30 December 1991, p. 3.

741. In 1992, in the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session, the GCC Supreme Council took note of Iraq's "infringement of the conditions of the cease-fire through its refusal to release prisoners from Kuwait and from other countries" and called on the international community "to continue exercising pressure on the Iraqi Regime until it fully complies by implementing all the Security Council resolutions, especially those regarding the release of Kuwaiti and other nationals held prisoners".[680]

742. In 1993, in the Final Communiqué of its 14th Session, the GCC Supreme Council called for "the release of all prisoners and detainees, both Kuwaitis and third-country nationals" held by Iraq in the wake of the Gulf War.[681]

743. In 1994, in the Final Communiqué of its 15th Session, the GCC Supreme Council appealed to the members of the UN Security Council to "continue their earnest efforts to compel Iraq to take . . . steps towards genuine implementation of all Security Council resolutions, especially those relating to the release of all Kuwaiti and other prisoners and detainees".[682]

744. In 1995, in the Final Communiqué of its 16th Session, the GCC Supreme Council called on the international community to maintain pressure on Iraq until it completed implementation of the pertinent UN resolutions, "in particular those relating to the release of prisoners and detainees, both Kuwaitis and nationals of other States, whose extended suffering was in blatant violation of resolution 687 (1991) and the third and fourth Geneva Conventions".[683]

745. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on the Iran–Iraq situation, the Council of the League of Arab States decided:

> to intensify efforts on all fronts for both sides to release the prisoners of war and to repatriate them in conformity with the Security Council's Resolution no. 598/87 and the Third Geneva Convention, in order to end their sufferings and the social and humanitarian problems resulting from their sustained detention.[684]

746. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1992, the Council of the League of Arab States called upon the Serb forces "to release all the prisoners in accordance with International Charters and customs".[685]

[680] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, pp. 3–4.

[681] GCC, Supreme Council, 14th Session, Riyadh, 20-22 December 1993, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 29 December 1993 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/49/56-S/26926, 30 December 1993, p. 4.

[682] GCC, Supreme Council, 15th Session, Manama, 19–21 December 1994, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 22 December 1994 from Bahrain to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/49/815-S/1994/1446, 22 December 1994, p. 3.

[683] GCC, Supreme Council, 16th Session, Muscat, 4–6 December 1995, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 29 December 1995 from Oman to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/51/56-S/1995/1070, 29 December 1995, p. 4.

[684] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 4938, 13 September 1989, § 4.

[685] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5231, 13 September 1992, § 5.

747. In two resolutions adopted in 1992 and 1993, the Council of the League of Arab States decided to call for the "release of the Lebanese nationals detained by the Israeli authorities".[686]
748. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the follow-up of the Intifada's developments, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to ask the International Organisations concerned with Human Rights to exercise pressure on the Israeli authorities to release the Palestinian detainees immediately".[687]
749. In a resolution adopted in 1997, the Council of the League of Arab States decided:

> To request the International Community to adopt all measures for Israel to immediately release all the Lebanese prisoners and hostages from the prisons and places of detention controlled by its forces, as this constitutes a breach of the provisions of international law, the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, and the Hague Convention of 1907.[688]

750. In 1997, in a report on the situation in Angola, the OAU Secretary-General reported that, in accordance with the terms of the peace accords concluded between the two belligerents, the Angolan government and UNITA had both released, under ICRC auspices, all prisoners detained as a result of the conflict.[689]
751. In a resolution adopted in 1992 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the OIC Foreign Ministers requested the immediate release of prisoners in accordance with the agreement signed in Geneva under the auspices of the ICRC.[690]
752. In a resolution on Nagorno-Karabakh adopted in 1995, the OSCE Ministerial Council urged the parties to the conflict "to release immediately all POWs and persons detained in connection with the conflict".[691]

International Conferences
753. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it recognised that, irrespective of GC III, "the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war, including . . . the prompt repatriation of seriously sick or wounded prisoners".[692]
754. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on respect for international humanitarian law in armed conflicts

[686] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5169, 29 April 1992, § 2; Res. 5324, 21 September 1993, § 2.
[687] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5414, 15 September 1994, § 4.
[688] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5635, 31 March 1997, § 3.
[689] OAU Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Angola, Doc. CM/2004 (LXVI)(e), 26 May 1997, § 13.
[690] OIC, Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, Res. 1/6-EX, 2 December 1992, § 22.
[691] OSCE, Ministerial Council, Decision on the Minsk Process, Doc. MC(5).DEC/3, 8 December 1995, § 3.
[692] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. XI.

and action by the ICRC for persons protected by the Geneva Conventions in which it appealed to all parties involved in armed conflicts "to carry out the early repatriation by phases of prisoners of war in accordance with the Third Geneva Convention and further beyond its provisions as might be acceptable in the interest of humanitarian considerations".[693]

755. The Conclusions of the London Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1995 state that fulfilment of the 1995 Dayton Accords will require "full cooperation of the parties over the release of prisoners".[694]

756. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that:

> prisoners of war are released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities, unless subject to due judicial process; the prohibition of taking hostages is strictly respected; the detention of prisoners and internees is not prolonged for bargaining purposes which practice is prohibited by the Geneva Conventions.[695]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

757. In a report on Panama in 1989, the IACiHR recommended that the government take immediate steps to release individuals who had been detained for political reasons.[696]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

758. According to the ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols, the grave breach specified in Article 85(4)(b) AP I consists in the failure to repatriate seriously sick or wounded prisoners during hostilities in accordance with Article 109 GC III and all prisoners at the end of hostilities as required by Article 118 GC III without valid and lawful reasons justifying the delay. The Commentary adds that, with regard to civilians, the breach consists in delaying the departure of foreign nationals who want to leave the territory in accordance with Articles 35 and 134 GC IV without valid and lawful reasons justifying such delay.[697]

693 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. I, § 3.
694 Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, London, 8-9 December 1995, Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 11 December 1995 from the UK to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/1995/1029, 12 December 1995, § 25.
695 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(d).
696 IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Panama, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.76 Doc. 16 rev. 2, 9 November 1989, p. 61.
697 Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 3508–3509.

759. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities" and that "the internment of civilian persons shall cease as soon as possible after the end of active hostilities". Delegates also teach that "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" constitutes a grave breach of the law of war.[698]

760. In a working paper on war crimes submitted in 1997 to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC, emphasising the customary law nature of most of the grave breaches of AP I, listed the "unjustifiable delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war or civilians", when committed wilfully and in violation of international humanitarian law, as a war crime to be subject to the jurisdiction of the ICC.[699]

VI. Other Practice

761. In the context of the conflict in Cuba, one commentator described witnessing "the surrender of hundreds of Batistianos from a small-town garrison":

> They were gathered within a hollow square of rebel Tommy-gunners and harangued by Raul Castro: "We hope that you will stay with us and fight against the master who so ill-used you. If you decide to refuse this invitation – and I am not going to repeat it – you will be delivered to the Cuban Red Cross tomorrow. Once you are under Batista's orders again, we hope that you will not take arms against us. But, if you do, remember this: we took you this time. We can take you again. And when we do, we will not frighten or torture or kill you . . . If you are captured a second time or even a third . . . we will again return you exactly as we are doing now.[700]

762. In 1981, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group said that it preferred to release a number of detained combatants when it could no longer ensure their safety.[701]

763. In 1982, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group agreed to unilaterally release detained combatants using the ICRC as an intermediary.[702]

764. In 1987, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group stated that 95 per cent of its prisoners were soldiers drafted by force and were therefore released after being advised never to fight against the resistance.[703]

---

698 Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 256, 257, 258, 723, 724 and 776(i).

699 ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, 14 February 1997, p. 2.

700 D. Chapelle, How Castro Won, in T. N. Greene (ed.), The Guerrilla - And How to Fight Him: Selections from the Marine Corps Gazette, Frederick A. Praeger, New York, 1962, p. 233; also cited in Michael Walzer, Just and Unjust Wars: A Moral Argument with Historical Illustrations, Basic Books, New York, 1977.

701 ICRC archive document.

702 ICRC archive document.

703 ICRC archive document.

765. In Colombia in 1996, a guerrilla group (FARC-EP) made public the list of 60 soldiers captured during an attack on a military base. It stated that it considered the soldiers to be prisoners of war and intended to return them safe and sound.[704]

766. The Report on SPLM/A Practice states that, with regard to sections of the population who have fallen under its administration or who have been captured as POWs, "the SPLM/A has followed the practice of allowing people to voluntarily return to the government side if they wish and to other areas held by rival factions". According to the report, "this practice of the SPLM/A with respect to release and return of POWs and other categories loyal to the enemy side is in accordance with SPLM/A legislation on the war".[705]

Unconditional release

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

767. No practice was found.

Other Instruments

768. Paragraph 1 of the Agreement on the Exchange of Prisoners between the FRY and Croatia (July 1992) provided that prisoners "shall be released simultaneously by both parties, according to the principle 'all for all' and without conditions".

769. Pursuant to Article 3(v) of the 1992 London Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues, the parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina undertook "to abide by the following provision: . . . there should be unconditional and unilateral release under international supervision of all civilians currently detained".

770. Article 3 of the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners provided that "all prisoners not accused of, or sentenced for, grave breaches of International Humanitarian Law . . . will be unilaterally and unconditionally released".

771. Paragraph 5 of the 1993 Afghan Peace Accord provided that there should be "immediate and unconditional release of all Afghan detainees held by the Government and different parties during the armed hostilities".

772. In paragraph 4 of the 1996 Ashgabat Protocol on Prisoner Exchange in Tajikistan, the government of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition agreed "to deliver with the assistance of ICRC and in the presence of 5 family

[704] International Commission of the FARC-EP, Communiqué, 14 October 1996.
[705] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.4, referring to SPLM/A, Penal and Disciplinary Laws, 4 July 1984, Section 32.

representatives, to return 26 prisoners of war, freed earlier by the opposition without preconditions, to their homes".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
773. No practice was found.

National Legislation
774. No practice was found.

National Case-law
775. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
776. During the Algerian war of independence, it was reported that:

> Since the proclamation of the Provisional Government of the Algerian Republic in September 1958, 40 French soldiers who had been taken prisoner were released by the ALN without any condition. 20 were released in Algeria and 20 others were released in Tunisia and Morocco, through the Algerian Red Crescent.[706]

777. In 1992, in a letter to the ICRC, a State involved in an international armed conflict insisted that prisoners with medical problems should be released unconditionally and not be the object of exchange.[707]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
778. In 1996, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council stressed that "the obligation to release prisoners is unconditional. Failure to do so constitutes a serious case of non-compliance" and noted "the readiness of the High Representative to propose measures to be taken against any party that fails to comply".[708]
779. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights called for "the unconditional . . . release of all prisoners of war" in Afghanistan.[709] This call was repeated in a resolution adopted in 1996.[710]

[706] "La révolution algérienne tient au respect de l'homme", El Moudjahid, Vol. 3, p. 57.
[707] ICRC archive document.
[708] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/15, 4 April 1996, p. 2.
[709] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/74, 8 March 1995, § 7.
[710] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/75, 23 April 1996, § 7.

780. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights strongly urged the government of Myanmar "to release . . . unconditionally all detained political prisoners".[711]
781. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed the release of POWs in Afghanistan and called for "the unconditional . . . release of all remaining prisoners of war".[712]

Other International Organisations
782. No practice was found.

International Conferences
783. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

784. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

785. In 1993, in a paper presented to the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, the ICRC reported that the agreed process for the release of detainees had come to a standstill when the Bosnian Serbs freed all prisoners and the other two parties did not release all their prisoners as promised during talks with the President of the ICRC. The Bosnian government indicated that it was "ready to release all prisoners, except war criminals, after an amnesty had been proclaimed". The Bosnian Serbs claimed that they had made "enough unilateral gestures". In response, the ICRC stated that the closure of places of detention could "no longer be contingent on considerations of reciprocity . . . [and that all prisoners should] be released under ICRC auspices in unilateral and unconditional operations".[713]

VI. Other Practice

786. In 1986, in a meeting with the ICRC, the commander of an armed opposition group stated that "the fate of prisoners would depend on their willingness to convert to [a specific religion] and on their behaviour during the detention". He also mentioned that some could be released after six months, one year or

[711] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/80, 23 April 1996, § 3.
[712] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, § 7.
[713] ICRC, Paper presented to the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. S/25050, 6 January 1993, Annex IV, pp. 14–15.

two years maximum. He also stated that, if after two years of detention no result was obtained, they would be executed.[714]

Exchange of prisoners

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

787. Article IX of the 1995 Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Peace Settlement annexed to the Dayton Accords included detailed provisions on prisoner exchange.

Other Instruments

788. Article 109(1) of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "the exchange of prisoners of war is an act of convenience to both belligerents. If no general cartel has been concluded, it cannot be demanded by either of them. No belligerent is obliged to exchange prisoners of war."

789. Article 30 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration states that "the exchange of prisoners of war is regulated by a mutual understanding between the belligerent parties".

790. Article 75 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "prisoners of war may be released in accordance with a cartel of exchange, agreed upon by the belligerent parties".

791. Article 3(a) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict . . . it is a duty to exchange prisoners of war".

792. The 1991 Agreement between Croatia and the SFRY on the Exchange of Prisoners provides that:

1. Both Parties commonly declare that they shall exchange all prisoners and all persons deprived of their liberty, according to the principle of "all for all".
2. The word "prisoner" is understood as including all persons deprived of their liberty who are detained in detention centers or prisoner camps, regardless of whether a criminal or other procedure has been opened against them, an indictment drawn up or a condemnation, whether executory or not, pronounced, and regardless of the territory in which these persons are detained or the place where they were captured, or taken as hostages or deprived of their liberty or freedom of movement.

793. Under Article 2 of the Protocol to the 1996 Moscow Agreement on a Cease-fire in Chechnya, a mutual exchange of lists of persons being detained was to be effected, and the exchange itself was to take place within two weeks.

794. In paragraph 1 of the 1996 Ashgabat Protocol on Prisoner Exchange in Tajikistan, the government of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition agreed to conduct "a step-by-step exchange of an equal number of prisoners of war and detainees in accordance with the lists to be transmitted by the parties to the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) before the end of the current round of inter-Tajik talks in Ashgabat".

[714] ICRC archive document.

795. In the 1997 Bishkek Memorandum, concluded between the President of Tajikistan and the leader of the United Tajik Opposition, an agreement was reached "to resolve . . . the problem of the exchange of POW's and prisoners in all its aspects and to work out the corresponding mechanism".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

796. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "the parties to the conflict can reach an arrangement for the exchange of prisoners from both sides even before the war has ended. Exchanged prisoners of war may not return to active military service."[715]

797. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "exchange of prisoners may take place during the hostilities in accordance with agreements concluded between the Parties".[716]

798. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> The exchange of prisoners of war is nowadays rare. The rule generally observed is to exchange man for man and rank for rank, with due allowance if titles of ranks or grades differ or if there is no exact equivalent. A condition is often made that the men exchanged shall not participate as soldiers in the war – in fact they are paroled.[717]

The manual further specifies that:

> The exchange of prisoners may be carried out by means of so-called "cartels". Nothing more is required than a simple statement agreed by the commanders, such agreement being arrived at by parlementaires, that is, negotiations conducted during truce, or by the exchange of letters. But for exchanges on a large scale commissioners are usually appointed, and commanders ought not as a rule in such cases to act without having previously reported to their government and taken instructions. In modern war between civilised States, an exchange of prisoners will rarely be carried out except by agreement between the governments concerned.[718]

799. The US Field Manual provides that:

> Exchange of prisoners of war, other than those whose repatriation is required by . . . [GC III], may be effected by agreement between the belligerents. No belligerent is obliged to exchange prisoners of war, except if a general cartel requiring such exchange has been concluded. The conditions for exchange are as

[715] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 54.
[716] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-42.
[717] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 249.
[718] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 250.

prescribed by the parties thereto, and exchanges need not necessarily be on the basis of number for number or rank for rank.[719]

National Legislation

800. No practice was found.

National Case-law

801. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

802. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Tajikistan and along the Tajik-Afghan border, Argentina noted that the exchange of prisoners showed the will of the parties to cooperate in finding a solution to the crisis in Tajikistan.[720]

803. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Tajikistan and along the Tajik-Afghan border, China welcomed the agreements on the exchange of detainees and POWs.[721]

804. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Tajikistan and along the Tajik-Afghan border, Honduras welcomed the agreements on the exchange of detainees and POWs.[722]

805. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Tajikistan and along the Tajik-Afghan border, Indonesia drew particular attention to the provision asking parties to implement the agreed confidence-building measures, including the exchange of detainees and POWs.[723]

806. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Tajikistan and along the Tajik-Afghan border, the US encouraged the parties to resume discussions with the intention of participating in additional exchanges of prisoners.[724]

807. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the US stated that an exchange of prisoners between the Bosnian Serb side and the Bosnian government gave reason for hope.[725]

808. In 1985, the government of a State declared that foreign combatants captured in international armed conflicts could only be exchanged after they were tried.[726]

[719] US, Field Manual (1956), § 197.
[720] Argentina, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3482, 1 January 1994, p. 11.
[721] China, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3544, 16 June 1995, p. 5.
[722] Honduras, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3544, 16 June 1995, p. 4.
[723] Indonesia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3544, 16 June 1995, p. 4.
[724] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3482, 1 January 1994, p. 9.
[725] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, p. 12.
[726] ICRC archive document.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

809. In a resolution on Tajikistan adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council urged the parties to cooperate fully with the ICRC in facilitating "the exchange of detainees and prisoners of war".[727]

810. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council called upon the government of Angola and UNITA "to accelerate the exchange of prisoners".[728]

811. In a resolution on Afghanistan adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council noted that proposals had been made for the "exchange of prisoners of war".[729]

812. In 1998, in a statement by its President on the situation in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council called upon the parties to agree on an exchange of prisoners.[730]

813. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights called for the "simultaneous release of all prisoners of war" in Afghanistan.[731] This call was repeated in a resolution adopted in 1996.[732]

814. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed the release of POWs in Afghanistan and called for the "simultaneous release of all remaining prisoners of war".[733]

815. In 1991, in a report concerning the former Yugoslavia, the UN Secretary-General reported that, on 9 November 1991, in the context of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, more than 700 prisoners were released simultaneously by the parties under ICRC supervision.[734]

816. In 1992, in a report concerning the former Yugoslavia, the UN Secretary-General reported that UNPROFOR had been involved in arranging and witnessing exchanges of POWs.[735]

817. In 1995, in a report on the situation in Tajikistan, the UN Secretary-General reported that it had been agreed during the fourth round of talks in May/June 1995 that both sides would exchange an equal number of detainees and POWs by 20 July 1995.[736]

818. In 1995, in a report on violations of IHL in the areas of Srebrenica, Žepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN

[727] UN Security Council, Res. 999, 16 June 1995, § 8.
[728] UN Security Council, Res. 1008, 7 August 1995, § 7.
[729] UN Security Council, Res. 1076, 22 October 1996, preamble.
[730] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/22, 14 July 1998.
[731] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/74, 8 March 1995, § 7.
[732] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/75, 23 April 1996, § 7.
[733] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, § 7.
[734] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council resolution 721 (1991), UN Doc. S/23280, 11 December 1991, p. 7, § 18.
[735] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council resolution 752 (1992), UN Doc. S/24000, 26 May 1992, p. 3, §§ 9–10.
[736] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Tajikistan, UN Doc. S/1995/472, 10 June 1995, pp. 2-3, § 8(b).

Secretary-General reported that a prisoner exchange between the Bosnian government and Bosnian Serb armies had occurred on 30 October 1995.[737]

819. In 1996, in a report on UNAVEM III in Angola, the UN Secretary-General, with reference to the Peace Accords concluded between the government of Angola and UNITA providing for the release of POWs based on lists presented to the ICRC, the UN Secretary-General highlighted as a positive development the release of additional prisoners registered with the ICRC.[738]

820. In 1996, in a report concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, the UN Secretary-General reported that, following a series of hostage-taking incidents, the two sides had agreed to exchange all hostages. In the space of one month, UNOMIG assisted in the exchange of 13 hostages, 11 held by the Abkhaz side, 2 by the Georgian side.[739]

821. In 1997, in a report on the situation of human rights in the Republic of Chechnya of the Russian Federation, the UN Secretary-General reported that the OSCE had provided the following information:

> There are still wartime detainees on both sides. The cease-fire and initial peace process agreements called for the exchange of prisoners all against all, a principle rhetorically accepted by both side. In fact, many prisoners held by the Chechens had been released in the past months, but there have not been commensurate releases on the federal side.[740]

822. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) found, with respect to its investigation into prison camps, that civilians were often arrested and detained by both Bosnian government and Bosnian Croat forces, as well as Croat forces in Croatia, for the purpose of collecting prisoners for exchange. It was reported that the Bosnian Croats divided their prisoners at the Central Mostar Prison into five categories, one of which was prisoners held for the purposes of exchange.[741]

823. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador noted that, following the abduction of the President's daughter and a second woman by an FMLN commando in September 1985, several weeks of secret negotiations took place in which the Salvadoran Church and diplomats from the region acted as mediators. As a result, the two women were released in [737] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council resolution 1019 (1995) on violations of IHL in the areas of Srebrenica, Žepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most, UN Doc. S/1995/988, 27 November 1995, p. 15, § 70.

[738] UN Secretary-General, Report on UNAVEM III, UN Doc. S/1996/171, 6 March 1996, § 3.

[739] UN Secretary-General, Report concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, UN Doc. S/1996/284, 15 April 1996, § 33.

[740] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation of human rights in the Republic of Chechnya of the Russian Federation, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/10, 20 March 1997, p. 6.

[741] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, §§ 235, 281, 289, 290, 387 and 456.

exchange for 22 political prisoners. Simultaneously, 25 mayors and local officials abducted by the FMLN were released in exchange for 101 war-wounded guerrillas, whom the government allowed to leave the country.[742]

Other International Organisations

824. In 1994, in a report on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina submitted to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, it was stated that 500 Muslim prisoners held by Bosnian Croat forces and 364 Croat prisoners held by the Bosnian governmental forces had been released simultaneously on 20 March 1994.[743]

825. In 1996, in an information report on the situation in Chechnya submitted to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, it was noted that the cease-fire signed by both parties included measures for the exchange of detainees and concluded that this was the first phase to be implemented.[744]

826. In a resolution adopted in 1987, the Council of the League of Arab States decided:

> To invite Iran to respond to the call for peace and to agree to a peaceful solution of the conflict, in accordance with the UN Charter and International Law reflected in the Security Council Resolution No. 58 (1986), on the following bases: . . . A comprehensive and total exchange of prisoners.[745]

International Conferences

827. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution in which it stated that it "received with great satisfaction the welcome news concerning the exchange of prisoners of war in the Middle East".[746]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

828. In the section of its Annual Report 1986–1987 concerning the situation of human rights in El Salvador, the IACiHR noted that agreement was reached between the Salvadoran government and the rebel forces to release a colonel who had been kidnapped by the rebels as a POW in exchange for a number of trade unionists, members of an NGO and disabled FMLN militants.[747]

[742] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, pp. 169–170.
[743] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Report on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Doc. 7065, 12 April 1994, p. 8.
[744] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Information report on the situation in Chechnya, Doc. 7560, 24 June 1996, Conclusions, § 6.
[745] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 4646, 6 April 1987, § 1(3).
[746] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. XIX.
[747] IACiHR, Annual Report 1986–1987, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.71 Doc. 9 rev. 1, 22 September 1987, p. 225.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

829. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

830. In 1984, in a letter to the ICRC, an armed opposition group denounced the refusal of other parties to conduct exchanges of prisoners and reiterated its readiness to do so.[748]
831. On two occasions in 1985 and 1988, the leader of an armed opposition group claimed that it was willing at any time to conduct prisoner exchanges with a State party to the conflict, and negotiated an exchange rate of one national of the State for 25 rebels.[749]
832. In 1986, in a letter to the ICRC, an armed opposition group asked the ICRC to encourage exchanges of captured combatants and stated that the failure of exchange negotiations had resulted in the execution of the prisoners owing to the group's inability to detain them.[750]

Voluntary nature of return

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
833. Article 109, third paragraph, GC III provides that "no sick or injured prisoner of war who is eligible for repatriation may be repatriated against his will during hostilities".
834. Article 118, third paragraph, GC III requires that POWs be informed of the measures adopted for their release and repatriation.
835. Article 45, fourth paragraph, GC IV provides that "in no circumstances shall a protected person be transferred to a country where he or she may have reason to fear persecution for his or her political opinions or religious beliefs".
836. Article 135, second paragraph, GC IV provides that an internee can elect to return to his/her country on his/her own responsibility.
837. Upon accession to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, South Korea stated that "the Republic of Korea interprets the provisions of Article 118 [GC III], paragraph 1, as not binding upon a Power detaining prisoners of war to forcibly repatriate its prisoners against their openly and freely expressed will".[751]
838. Article III(51)(a) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that "within sixty (60) days after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, each side shall, without offering any hindrance, directly repatriate and hand over in groups all those prisoners of war in its custody who insist on repatriation to the side to which they belonged at the time of capture". Article III(53) adds that "all the sick and injured prisoners of war who insist upon repatriation shall be repatriated with priority". Paragraph I(3) of the Annex to the Armistice Agreement, establishing the terms of reference of a Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission, further provides that "no force or threat of force shall be used against the prisoners of war . . . to prevent or effect their repatriation".

[748] ICRC archive document. [749] ICRC archive documents.
[750] ICRC archive document.
[751] South Korea, Interpretative declarations made upon accession to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, 16 August 1966.

839. Article IX of the 1995 Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Peace Settlement annexed to the Dayton Accords provided that:

> The Parties shall take no reprisals against any prisoner or his/her family in the event that the prisoner refuses to be transferred . . . The Parties shall permit the ICRC to privately interview each prisoner at least forty-eight (48) hours prior to his or her release for the purpose of implementing and monitoring the plan, including determination of the onward destination of each prisoner.

Other Instruments

840. The 1991 Agreement between Croatia and the SFRY on the Exchange of Prisoners provides that:

> 6. The signatories of the present agreement agree that no prisoner shall be returned against his will and that each prisoner shall have the opportunity to express freely his will to the representative of the ICRC.
> 7. The signatories of the present agreement undertake not to exercise any pressure on the prisoners in order to persuade them to refuse or accept the return.
> 8. The signatories of the present agreement solemnly undertake not to take any reprisals against prisoners who refuse to return or their families.

841. Paragraph 3 of the Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Exchange of Prisoners (July 1992) provided that "each prisoner is interviewed in private by ICRC delegates and is entitled to refuse repatriation".

842. Article 1(4) of the 1992 Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Release and Repatriation of Prisoners provides that:

> The prisoners present at this operation shall be interviewed in private by ICRC delegates on their will to be repatriated. Those who wish to be repatriated are immediately handed over by ICRC delegates to the other side. Those who refuse to be repatriated are released on the spot – except, until the amnesty provided for in Article 2(2) becomes available to them, if they are accused of or sentenced for a crime – and may reach, with the assistance of the ICRC, the place of their choice.

843. Article 3(6) of the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners provides that "each prisoner to be released has the right to express to the ICRC in a private interview his free will on whether he wishes to be released and transferred according to the specific ICRC plan of operation, or wishes to be released on the spot, or wishes to remain in detention".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

844. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) and Law of War Manual (1989) provide that "no sick or injured prisoner who is eligible for repatriation may be repatriated against his will during hostilities".[752]

845. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "seriously wounded and sick PWs must be repatriated as soon as they are fit to travel except that PWs cannot be involuntarily repatriated during the hostilities".[753]

846. Canada's LOAC Manual states that "PWs should not be repatriated against their wishes during hostilities".[754]

847. Germany's Military Manual states that "no prisoner of war may be repatriated against his will during the hostilities".[755]

848. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "as a general rule, prisoners of war should not be required to return to their country if they do not wish to, and an attempt should be made to find a solution to their problem via third-party States".[756]

849. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "no sick or injured prisoner of war who is eligible for repatriation may be repatriated against his will during hostilities".[757]

850. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "during the hostilities, repatriation of the wounded and sick may not take place against their will".[758]

851. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "no prisoner of war may be repatriated against his will during the hostilities".[759]

852. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "no prisoner may be repatriated against his will during hostilities".[760]

853. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> Prisoners of war who are seriously sick are entitled to be sent back to their own country, regardless of number or rank, after having been cared for until they are fit to travel. No sick or injured prisoner of war who is eligible for repatriation under this provision may, however, be repatriated against his will during hostilities.[761]

854. The US Field Manual provides that "no sick or injured prisoner of war who is eligible for repatriation may be repatriated against his will during hostilities".[762]

[752] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.091; Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.31.
[753] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1046.
[754] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-6, § 49.
[755] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 732.
[756] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 54.
[757] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-12, § 6.
[758] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-42.
[759] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.8.(a).1.
[760] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 142(3).
[761] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 251.
[762] US, Field Manual (1956), § 188.

855. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "no wounded and sick PW eligible for repatriation may be repatriated against his will during hostilities".[763]

National Legislation

856. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[764]

857. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 109 and 118 GC III and 45 and 135 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[765]

858. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... is liable to imprisonment".[766]

National Case-law

859. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

860. A communiqué issued by the Croatian Ministry of Defence after the operation in Western Slavonia in 1995, stated that During the armed conflict in Croatia, the captured combatants of the adverse party entitled to amnesty were released and, depending on their choice, were "allowed to choose either to stay in Croatia as peaceful citizens or to leave the country".[767]

861. In 1991, in the context of a non-international conflict, the ICRC noted that detained persons were sometimes exchanged against their will to remain on the territory controlled by the party which had detained them.[768]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

862. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

863. No practice was found.

[763] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-10.
[764] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[765] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[766] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[767] Croatia, Ministry of Defence Communiqué after the operation in Western Slavonia, 5 May 1995.
[768] ICRC archive document.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

864. The ICRC Commentary on the Third Geneva Convention states that "where the repatriation of a prisoner of war would be manifestly contrary to the general principles of international law for the protection of the human being, the Detaining Power may, so to speak, grant him asylum". To this effect, "supervisory bodies must be able to satisfy themselves without any hindrance that the requests have been made absolutely freely and in all sincerity, and to give prisoners of war any information which may set at rest groundless fears".[769]

865. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that seriously wounded and seriously sick POWs may not be repatriated against their will during hostilities.[770]

866. According to the ICRC, in every repatriation operation in which the ICRC has played the role of neutral intermediary, the parties to the conflict have accepted the ICRC's conditions for participation. One of these conditions is that the ICRC be able to verify, during private interviews, that protected persons are not repatriated against their will.

867. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in the context of the conflict in Western Sahara, the ICRC stated that on 14 December 2000 it had repatriated 201 Moroccan prisoners released by the Polisario Front. Before the repatriation, ICRC delegates interviewed the prisoners individually to make sure that they were being repatriated of their own free will.[771]

868. In a communication to the press issued in 2002 in the context of the conflict in Western Sahara, the ICRC stated that on 7 July 2002 it had repatriated 101 Moroccan prisoners released by the Polisario Front. Before the operation, ICRC delegates had interviewed the prisoners individually to make sure that they were being repatriated of their own free will.[772]

VI. Other Practice

869. In a resolution adopted at its conference in Seoul in November 1997, the World Veterans Federation demanded that prisoners of war and persons who went missing during the Korean War be returned according to their freely expressed will.[773]

870. The Report on SPLM/A Practice states that, with regard to sections of the population who have fallen under its administration or who have been [769] Jean S. Pictet (ed.), Commentary on the Third Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1960, pp. 547–548.

[770] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 723.
[771] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/46, Morocco/Western Sahara: 201 Moroccan prisoners released and repatriated, 14 December 2000.
[772] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 02/38, Morocco/Western Sahara: 101 Moroccan prisoners released and repatriated, 7 July 2002.
[773] World Veterans Federation, Chosun Daily News, Seoul, 15 November 1997, § 2.

captured as POWs, "the SPLM/A has followed the practice of allowing people to voluntarily return to the government side if they wish and to other areas held by rival factions".[774]

Destination of returning persons

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

871. Article 109 GC III provides that "Parties to the conflict are bound to send back to their own country . . . seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war". (emphasis added)

872. Article 118 GC III provides that "prisoners of war shall be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of active hostilities". (emphasis added)

873. Article 134 GC IV leaves the choice between return to the last place of residence and repatriation, while Article 135 provides that the internee can elect to return to his/her country on his/her own responsibility.

874. Article 45 GC IV provides that "in no circumstances shall a protected person be transferred to a country where he or she may have reason to fear persecution for his or her political opinions or religious beliefs".

Other Instruments

875. Pursuant to Article 2(d) of the 1992 London Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues, the parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina agreed that when the secure release and return of civilians to their homes was not immediately feasible, the following options should be adopted:

- repatriation to areas under the control of their respective ethnic authorities;
- choosing to stay temporarily in the area of detention;
- relocation in areas away from the conflict under international supervision;
- temporary refuge in third countries.

876. Article 10 of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia provided that all POWs and detainees be immediately released to the Red Cross authority in an area where such prisoners or detainees were detained, for onward transmission to encampment sites or the authority of the POW or detainee.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

877. No practice was found.

[774] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.4.

National Legislation

878. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[775]

879. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 109 and 118 GC III and 45, 134 and 135 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[776]

880. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[777]

National Case-law

881. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

882. In 1992, the German Foreign Minister declared that Germany was willing to receive 6,000 detainees from Serb detention camps in order to make their release possible. A statement in favour of this measure was supported by all political parties in parliament.[778]

883. According to the Report on the Practice of Nigeria, at the end of the Nigerian civil war in 1970, the inhabitants of the former Biafran enclave were released so that they could return to their respective towns.[779]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

884. In a resolution adopted in 1980 in the context of the independence struggle in Southern Rhodesia (Zimbabwe), the UN Security Council called upon the UK government to take all necessary steps to release any South African political prisoners, including captured freedom fighters in southern Rhodesia and to ensure their safe passage to any country of their choice.[780]

Other International Organisations

885. No practice was found.

[775] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[776] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[777] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[778] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Dr Kinkel, Minister of Defence, 10 December 1992, Plenarprotokoll 12/128, pp. 11102–11112; Speech by Representative Scharrenbroich, 10 December 1992, Plenarprotokoll 12/128, p. 11099.
[779] Report on the Practice of Nigeria, 1997, Chapter 5.4.
[780] UN Security Council, Res. 463, 2 February 1980, § 7.

International Conferences
886. No practice was found.

IV. International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

887. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

888. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

889. No practice was found.

Responsibility for safe return

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
890. Articles 46–48 GC III, which contain extensive provisions relating to the conditions in which transfer of POWs shall take place, are also applicable to the return of POWs.
891. Article 5(4) AP II provides that "if it is decided to release persons deprived of their liberty, necessary measures to ensure their safety shall be taken by those so deciding". Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[781]
892. Under Article VII of the Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Exchange of Prisoners (March 1992) the parties pledged "to undertake the necessary measures to ensure safety in the places of exchange, for all phases of the exchange, as well as during the arrival and departure of all persons included in the exchange".

Other Instruments
893. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
894. Argentina's Law of War Manual reproduces Articles 46–48 GC III.[782]
895. Canada's LOAC Manual provides, with regard to non-international armed conflicts, that "when persons who have been detained or interned are released, the detaining authority is obliged to take such steps as are necessary to ensure their safety".[783]

[781] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.
[782] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 2.042–2.044.

896. France's LOAC Manual provides that when POWs are released, their security must be ensured.[784]

897. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, the detaining authority is obliged to take such steps as are necessary to ensure the safety of released detainees.[785] The manual also provides that prisoners of war are to be fed and provided with sufficient provisions if released.[786]

898. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 46–48 GC III.[787]

National Legislation

899. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[788]

900. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 46–48 GC III, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 5(4) AP II, are punishable offences.[789]

901. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[790]

National Case-law

902. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

903. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[791]

783 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 27.
784 France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 102.
785 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1814.
786 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 919.
787 US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 122–125.
788 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
789 Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
790 Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
791 Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
904. In a resolution adopted in 1992 in the context of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council authorised UNPROFOR to engage in the protection of convoys of released detainees if requested by the ICRC.[792]
905. In 1998, in a statement by its President concerning Afghanistan, the UN Security Council demanded that "the Taliban release other Iranians detained in Afghanistan and ensure their safe and dignified passage out of Afghanistan without further delay".[793]

Other International Organisations
906. No practice was found.

International Conferences
907. No practice was found.

IV. International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

908. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

909. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

910. No practice was found.

Role of neutral intermediaries in the return process

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
911. Articles III(51)(b) and III(57)(a) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provide that:

Each side shall release all those remaining prisoners of war, who are not directly repatriated, from its military control and from its custody and hand them over to the Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission for disposition in accordance with the provisions in the Annex hereto: "Terms of Reference for Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission".
. . .

[792] UN Security Council, Res. 776, 14 September 1992, § 2.
[793] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/27, 15 September 1998, p. 1.

The joint Red Cross teams shall assist in the execution by both sides of those provisions of this Armistice Agreement relating to the repatriation of all the prisoners of war specified in Sub-paragraph 51a hereof, . . . by the performance of such humanitarian services as are necessary and desirable for the welfare of the prisoners of war.

912. In Article 2(1) of the 2000 Peace Agreement between Ethiopia and Eritrea, both States agreed, in accordance with IHL, including the 1949 Geneva Conventions, and in cooperation with the ICRC, to release and repatriate without delay all POWs and other persons detained as a result of the armed conflict.

Other Instruments

913. The 1991 Peace Accords between the Government of Angola and UNITA provided that the "cease-fire entails the release of all civilian and military prisoners who were detained as a consequence of the conflict . . . Verification of such release will be performed by the International Committee of the Red Cross".

914. Paragraph 13 of the 1991 Final Act of the Paris Conference on Cambodia stated that "the States participating in the Conference requested the International Committee of the Red Cross to facilitate, in accordance with its principles, the release of prisoners of war and civilian internees. They express their readiness to assist the ICRC in this task."

915. Paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 6 and 11 of the 1991 Agreement between Croatia and the SFRY on the Exchange of Prisoners provided that the ICRC were to be given the lists of prisoners before repatriation and to visit and record them. The parties also undertook to place all prisoners to be exchanged under the protection of the ICRC. Paragraph 9 also provided that EC observers were to be present during the exchange of prisoners.

916. Section IV of the 1992 Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that "ICRC delegates will lend their good offices in order to help conclude agreements to release [all persons captured or detained]".

917. Article 1(1) of the 1992 Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Release and Repatriation of Prisoners provided that "all prisoners visited by the ICRC and mentioned on the ICRC list appearing in Annex A shall be released in an operation which will take place under ICRC supervision in Nemetin on August 14, 1992".

918. Pursuant to Article 2(f) of the 1992 London Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues, the parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina accepted that:

The international community will monitor the [release] . . . closely to ensure that the security and well being of those held in detention is assured. To this end, they undertake to give free access to representatives of the international community including the UN, ICRC, EC and the CSCE.

919. Article 3 of the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners provided that "the ICRC will draw up specific plans of operation" for the release and transfer of the prisoners and be granted "all the facilities necessary for the implementation of the specific plans". It also provided that "the ICRC shall be given the lists of prisoners before repatriation, shall visit and record them, and verify whether the return is voluntary".
920. The 1992 General Peace Agreement for Mozambique specified that arrangements for and verification of the release process were to be agreed on by the ICRC together with the parties.
921. Article II of the 1993 Agreement among the Parties to Halt the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that all detainees should be released on an all-for-all basis under the supervision of the Joint Commission which included the ICRC. On 9 November 1993, more than 700 prisoners were released simultaneously by the two parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina under ICRC supervision.
922. Article 10 of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia provided that all POWs and detainees were to be immediately released to the Red Cross authority in an area where such prisoners or detainees were held, for onward transmission to encampment sites or the authority of the POW or detainee.
923. In paragraph 2 of the 1996 Ashgabat Protocol on Prisoner Exchange in Tajikistan, the government of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition agreed "to request ICRC to provide assistance in the implementation of this humanitarian operation [of prisoner exchange], on the understanding that it will be conducted in accordance with the rules and procedures of that organization".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

924. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that:

> The Detaining Power, the Power on which the prisoners of war depend, and a neutral Power agreed upon by these two Powers, shall endeavour to conclude agreements which will enable prisoners of war to be interned in the territory of the said neutral Power agreed until the close of the hostilities.[794]

National Legislation

925. No practice was found.

National Case-law

926. No practice was found.

[794] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.097.

Other National Practice

927. The Report on the Practice of Algeria states that, according to publications of the ALN, a large number of prisoners were eventually released during the Algerian war of independence, often through the intermediary of the ICRC.[795]

928. According to the Report on the Practice of Colombia, "the release and return of persons deprived of their liberty in the Colombian armed conflict are customarily guaranteed by the ICRC and sometimes other civilian social organizations such as the Church, State-controlled bodies, and journalists, subject to an accord between the parties or the exercise of the ICRC's right of initiative".[796] In 1997, according to the Report, "to obtain the release of 70 soldiers, the Government and the guerrillas agreed to the demilitarization of an area measuring 13,161 square kilometres in the department of Caquetá. To guarantee the suspension of military operations so that the soldiers could be handed over, the two sides agreed to the presence in the demilitarized zone of representatives of the ICRC, the National Conciliation Commission, the national Government and other competent bodies".[797]

929. In implementing the 1992 N'sele Cease-fire Agreement, the Rwandan government released 23 prisoners which were returned to the RPF camp in July 1992 in cooperation with the ICRC, the Neutral Military Observer Group and the OAU. Similarly, the RPF released 11 prisoners using the ICRC as an intermediary.[798]

930. In 1964, the parties to an internal armed conflict requested ICRC intervention in exchanging prisoners and gave it entire competence to fix the date and procedure of the exchange.[799]

931. In a letter to the President of the ICRC in 1995, a State involved in an international armed conflict enlisted the services of the ICRC to mediate in the release and simultaneous repatriation of prisoners of both sides.[800]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

932. In a resolution on Tajikistan adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council urged the parties "to cooperate fully with the International Committee of the Red Cross to facilitate the exchange of prisoners and detainees between the two sides".[801]

[795] Report on the Practice of Algeria, 1997, Chapter 5.4.
[796] Report on the Practice of Colombia, 1998, Chapter 5.4.
[797] Report on the Practice of Colombia, 1998, Chapter 1.8, referring to the Agreement of Remolinos de Caguán, 3 June 1997, reprinted in El Colombiano, 4 June 1997, p. 5B.
[798] Association Rwandaise pour la défense des droits de la personne et des libertés publiques, Rapport sur les droits de l'homme au Rwanda – Année 1992, Kigali, 1993, pp. 45 and 51.
[799] ICRC archive document.
[800] ICRC archive document.
[801] UN Security Council, Res. 1089, 13 December 1996, § 10.

933. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN Security Council reiterated "the obligation of Iraq, in furtherance of its commitment, to facilitate the repatriation of all Kuwaiti and third country nationals . . . and to extend all necessary cooperation to the International Committee of the Red Cross".[802]

934. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN Commission on Human Rights acknowledged the release of prisoners and demanded that the parties cooperate fully with the ICRC in the matter of release.[803]

935. In 1991, the UN Secretary-General reported that, according to the Head of the EC/CSCE Monitoring Mission in the Former Yugoslavia, "the Mission sought to serve as a channel of communication between opposing forces, to assist in organizing cease-fire arrangements and certain humanitarian steps, such as exchanges of prisoners".[804]

936. In 1992, the UN Secretary-General reported that one of the main activities of ICRC delegates in Bosnia and Herzegovina was participation in the release of prisoners, while UNPROFOR was involved in "arranging and witnessing exchanges of prisoners of war".[805]

937. In 1992, in a report on UNAVEM II in Angola, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

> Under the Peace Accords, all civilians and military prisoners held by the government of Angola and UNITA have to be released. ICRC confirmed that the first phase of this process, consisting of releases based on lists of prisoners presented to the ICRC by both sides, was concluded on 2 April 1992. By that time, in the presence of the ICRC, the government had released 940 prisoners and UNITA had released 3,099 prisoners.[806]

938. In 1993, in a progress report on the situation in Somalia, the UN Secretary-General reported that, as part of an informal preparatory meeting for a conference on national reconciliation in Somalia, it was agreed on 15 January 1993 that all POWs would be freed and handed over to the ICRC and/or UNITAF.[807]

939. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador noted that the ICRC had frequently negotiated for and carried out the release and exchange of detainees by the different parties.[808]

802 UN Security Council, Res. 1284, 17 December 1999, § 13.
803 UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 12.
804 UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to § 3 of Security Council resolution 713 (1991), UN Doc. S/23169, 25 October 1991, § 14.
805 UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council resolution 752 (1992), UN Doc. S/24000, 26 May 1992, § 9.
806 UN Secretary-General, Further report on the UN Angola Verification Mission (UNAVEM II), UN Doc. S/24145, 24 June 1992, § 25.
807 UN Secretary-General, Progress report on the situation in Somalia, UN Doc. S/25168, 26 January 1993, Annex III, § IV.
808 UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, p. 170.

Other International Organisations

940. In a recommendation adopted in 1996 on refugees, displaced persons and reconstruction in certain countries of the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited member States "to support the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) for the implementation of the tasks conferred on it by the Dayton Agreement, namely to organise the liberation of prisoners as early as possible".[809]

941. In 1997, in a report on the situation in Angola, the OAU Secretary-General reported that the Angolan government and UNITA had both released, under ICRC auspices, all the prisoners detained as a result of the conflict.[810]

International Conferences

942. The Conclusions of the London Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1995 state that fulfilment of the 1995 Dayton Accords will require "full and immediate access by the ICRC to all places where prisoners and detainees are kept, to interview and register all of them prior to their release".[811]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

943. In a case before the IACiHR in 1992, the Commission heard that in July 1989, the government of El Salvador had released a man who had been arrested on suspicion of membership of a terrorist group and remanded him to envoys from the ICRC.[812]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

944. In 1984, on the occasion of the release of the first three Soviet soldiers captured in Afghanistan by opposition movements and transferred to Switzerland by the ICRC on 28 May 1982 in order to serve out their internment period as agreed by the parties concerned, the ICRC issued a press release in which it made public its position regarding the victims of the Afghan conflict. The press release noted that eleven Soviet soldiers had accepted the proposal to serve their period of internment in Switzerland, stating that "the first three were transferred to Switzerland on 28 May 1982. Eight others arrived in August and October 1982, January and October 1983, and February and April 1984. One of them escaped to the Federal Republic of Germany in July 1983." The

[809] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1287, 24 January 1996, § 19(viii)(d).
[810] OAU, Council of Ministers, Report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Angola, Doc. CM/2004 (LXVI)(e), 26 May 1997, § 13.
[811] Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, London, 8–9 December 1995, Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 11 December 1995 from the UK to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/1995/1029, 12 December 1995, § 25.
[812] IACiHR, Case No. 10447 (El Salvador), Report, 14 February 1992, p. 1.

press release added that upon reaching the end of their periods of internment, "in conformity with the spirit of the provisions of international humanitarian law in this respect, the Swiss authorities, under whose responsibility the soldiers are, have taken the measures necessary to repatriate those internees still wishing to return to their country of origin".[813]

945. The ICRC's 1986 Annual Report detailed the release and repatriation of 14 Sudanese prisoners who had been detained in Chad for over two and a half years in connection with the conflict in Sudan. The report further noted that two Italian monks "who had been captured in March by the Sudanese People's Liberation Army (SPLA) were handed over to the ICRC delegation in Addis Ababa on 18 August. The ICRC subsequently entrusted them to representatives of the Holy See in Ethiopia."[814]

946. The ICRC's 1988 Annual Report documented the release and repatriation of almost 4,000 people, most of whom had been detained in Ethiopia and Somalia for nearly 11 years. The ICRC had been trying since 1984 to persuade the two governments to repatriate all prisoners of war, with priority being given to the seriously wounded and sick in accordance with Articles 109, 110 and 118 GC III. After hearing that an agreement had been signed between the two parties on 3 April 1988, the ICRC offered its services to organise the repatriation operation and this offer was accepted, with the repatriation of prisoners who wished to return being carried out in August 1988.[815]

947. The UN Secretary-General reported that between October and December 1991, the ICRC participated in a multilateral negotiating commission, meeting almost daily in Zagreb to discuss, among other issues, the release of prisoners between Croatia and the YPA.[816]

948. In a communication to the press issued in 1992 in the context of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC confirmed that it had "evacuated on 1 October [1992] 1,560 people from Trnopolje camp ... to a reception centre ... where they were handed over to staff of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR)".[817]

949. Following the 2000 Agreement between Eritrea and Ethiopia, the ICRC repatriated 360 Ethiopian and 359 Eritrean prisoners of war on 23 and 24 December 2000. In addition, the ICRC repatriated to Ethiopia 1,414 civilian internees of Ethiopian origin.[818]

950. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in the context of the conflict in Western Sahara, the ICRC stated that it had repatriated 201 Moroccan

[813] ICRC, Conflict in Afghanistan, IRRC, No. 241, 1984, pp. 239–240.
[814] ICRC, Annual Report 1986, Geneva, 1987, pp. 24–27.
[815] ICRC, Annual Report 1988, Geneva, 1989, pp. 25–26.
[816] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council resolution 721 (1991), UN Doc. S/23280, 11 December 1991, p. 7, § 18.
[817] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 92/27, Bosnia Herzegovina: ICRC evacuates 1,560 people from Trnopolje camp, 2 October 1992.
[818] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/50, Ethiopia/Eritrea: the ICRC has repatriated prisoners of war and civilian internees, 24 December 2000.

prisoners released by the Polisario Front on 14 December 2000. It added, however, that it remained concerned by the plight of the 1,481 Moroccans still held captive and that it viewed the repatriation as a step towards the release of all prisoners.[819]

951. In a communication to the press issued in 2002 in the context of the conflict in Western Sahara, the ICRC stated that on 7 July 2002, it had repatriated 101 Moroccan prisoners released by the Polisario Front. It added, however, that it remained concerned by "the plight of the 1,260 Moroccans still held captive and views the repatriation as a step towards the release of all prisoners".[820]

VI. Other Practice

952. In 1994, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group stated that it would be prepared to release detained soldiers and officers through the ICRC.[821]

953. According to the Report on SPLM/A Practice, "because the Sudan Government does not recognize the SPLM/A and can't negotiate with it directly, the SPLM/A has on many occasions and through third parties including the ICRC released prisoners of war and allowed them to go to Government areas".[822]

[819] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/46, Morocco/Western Sahara: 201 Moroccan prisoners released and repatriated, 14 December 2000.
[820] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 02/38, Morocco/Western Sahara: 101 Moroccan prisoners released and repatriated, 7 July 2002.
[821] ICRC archive document.
[822] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.4.

CHAPTER 38

DISPLACEMENT AND DISPLACED PERSONS

A. Act of Displacement

Forced displacement

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 6 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that:

The following acts, or any of them, are crimes coming within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility:

. . .

(b) "War crimes:" namely, violations of the laws or customs of war. Such violations shall include, but not be limited to, . . . deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose of civilian population of or in occupied territory . . .

(c) "Crimes against humanity:" namely . . . deportation, and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war.

2. Article 45, fourth paragraph, GC IV provides that "in no circumstances shall a protected person be transferred to a country where he or she may have reason to fear persecution for his or her political opinions or religious beliefs".

3. Article 49, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive".

4. Under Article 147 GC IV, "unlawful deportation or transfer . . . of a protected person" constitutes a grave breach of the Convention.

5. Article 3(1) of the 1963 Protocol 4 to the ECHR provides that "no one shall be expelled, by means either of an individual or of a collective measure, from the territory of the State of which he is a national".

6. Article 4 of the 1963 Protocol 4 to the ECHR provides that "collective expulsion of aliens is prohibited".

7. Article 13 of the 1966 ICCPR provides that:

> An alien lawfully in the territory of a State Party to the present Covenant may be expelled therefrom only in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law and shall, except where compelling reasons of national security otherwise require, be allowed to submit the reasons against his expulsion and to have his case reviewed by, and be represented for the purpose before, the competent authority or a person or persons especially designated by the competent authority.

8. Article 22(5) of the 1969 ACHR states that "no one can be expelled from the territory of the state of which he is a national or be deprived of the right to enter it." Article 22(9) states that "the collective expulsion of aliens is prohibited.

9. Under Article 85(4)(a) AP I, "the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory, in violation of Article 49 of the Fourth Convention" is a grave breach of the Protocol. Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]

10. Article 17 AP II provides that:

> 1. The displacement of the civilian population shall not be ordered for reasons related to the conflict unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand. Should such displacements have to be carried out, all possible measures shall be taken in order that the civilian population may be received under satisfactory conditions of shelter, hygiene, health, safety and nutrition.
> 2. Civilians shall not be compelled to leave their own territory for reasons connected with the conflict.

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

Article 17 AP II was adopted by consensus.[2]

11. Article 12(5) of the 1981 ACHPR states that "the mass expulsion of non-nationals shall be prohibited. Mass expulsion shall be that which is aimed at national, racial, ethnic or religious groups".

12. Article 3 of the 1984 Convention against Torture provides that "no State party shall expel or return a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be in danger of being subjected to torture".

13. Article 16 of the 1989 Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention states that:

1. Subject to the following paragraphs of this Article, the peoples concerned shall not be removed from the lands which they occupy.
2. Where the relocation of these peoples is considered necessary as an exceptional measure, such relocation shall take place only with their free and informed consent. Where their consent cannot be obtained, such relocation shall take place only following appropriate procedures established by national laws and regulations, including public inquiries where appropriate, which provide the opportunity for effective representation of the peoples concerned.

14. Paragraph 6 of the 1992 Declaration on Humanitarian Assistance and Gradual Repatriation of Temporary Refugees and Displaced Persons from the War in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia urged States to set up safe zones and humanitarian corridors to prevent displacement.

15. Pursuant to Article 6(e) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "forcibly transferring children of the group to another group" constitutes genocide when "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".

16. Pursuant to Article 7(1)(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute, deportation or forcible transfer of the population, when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, constitutes a crime against humanity.

17. Under Article 8(2)(a)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "unlawful deportation or transfer" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

18. Under Article 8(2)(b)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "the deportation or transfer [by the Occupying Power] of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory", constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

19. Under Article 8(2)(e)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "ordering the displacement of the civilian population for reasons related to the conflict, unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand", constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

Other Instruments

20. Article 23 of the 1863 Lieber Code states that "private citizens are no longer . . . carried off to distant parts".

[2] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 144.

21. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility identified the deportation of civilians under inhuman conditions as a violation of the laws and customs of war.

22. Article II of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that:

> 1. Each of the following acts is recognized as a crime:
>
> . . .
>
> (b) War crimes. Atrocities or offenses against persons or property constituting violations of the laws or customs of war, including but not limited to, . . . deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose, of civilian population from occupied territory . . .
>
> (c) Crimes against humanity. Atrocities and offenses, including but not limited to . . . deportation . . . or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population.

23. Article 5(c) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) established individual responsibility for crimes against humanity, including "deportation, and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war".

24. Principle VI of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles adopted by the ILC provides that "deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose of civilian population of or in occupied territory" is a war crime and that "deportation and other inhuman acts done against any civilian population" is a crime against humanity.

25. Paragraph 5 of the 1974 UN Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict provides that "all forms of repression . . . of women and children, including . . . forcible eviction, committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories shall be considered criminal".

26. Pursuant to Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the "deportation or transfer of the civilian population" is regarded as an "exceptionally serious war crime".

27. In the 1992 Sarajevo Declaration on Humanitarian Treatment of Displaced Persons, the parties agreed "to promote initiatives at the regional, municipal and local levels aimed at preventing . . . displacement".

28. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "the displacement of the civilian population shall not be ordered unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative reasons so demand".

29. In Article 18(1) of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia, the parties committed themselves "to bring to an end any further external or internal displacements".

30. Under Article 2(g) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute unlawful deportation or transfer of civilians as a grave breach of GC IV.

31. Article 5(d) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that deportation, when committed against any civilian population, constitutes a crime against humanity.

32. Under Article 3(d) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, deportation, when committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds, constitutes a crime against humanity.

33. Article 20(a)(vii) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind considers "the unlawful deportation or transfer . . . of protected persons" to be a war crime.

34. The 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provide that:

> Principle 5
> All authorities and international actors shall respect and ensure respect for their obligations under international law, including human rights and humanitarian law, in all circumstances, so as to prevent and avoid conditions that might lead to displacement of persons.
> Principle 6
> 1. Every human being shall have the right to be protected against being arbitrarily displaced from his or her home or place of habitual residence.
> 2. The prohibition of arbitrary displacement includes displacement:
> . . .
> (b) in situations of armed conflict, unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand;
> . . .
>
> Principle 9
> States are under a particular obligation to protect against the displacement of indigenous peoples, minorities, peasants, pastoralists, and other groups with a special dependency on and attachment to their land.

35. Article 3(7) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "practices that cause or allow the forcible evacuations or forcible reconcentration of civilians, unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand; the emergence and increase of internally displaced families and communities" are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever.

36. Paragraph 5 of the 1999 Agreement on the Protection and Provision of Humanitarian Assistance in Sudan provides that

> The parties to the conflict agree and guarantee that no beneficiary [of humanitarian assistance] will be forcibly relocated from his or her legal or recognized place of residence . . . When communities may be relocated they will be consulted on an individual and community basis on alternatives to relocation. Where communities are to be relocated, they are guaranteed individual and community participation in the relocation process, particularly prior to relocation, and will be given a reasonable period of notice prior to relocation.

37. In paragraph 61 of the 2000 Cairo Declaration, African and EU heads of State and government condemned "the systematic tactic by parties to armed conflict of displacing the civilian population".

38. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(a)(vii), "unlawful deportation or transfer" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts. According to Section 6(1)(b)(viii), "the deportation or transfer [by the Occupying Power] of all or parts of the occupied territory within or outside this territory" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts. According to Section 6(1)(e)(vii), "ordering the displacement of the civilian population for reasons related to the conflict, unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand", constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

39. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "protected persons may not be transferred to a power which is not party to GC IV . . . In no case may a protected person be transferred to a State where he or she has reason to fear persecution on account of his or her political opinions or religious beliefs."[3] It also provides that "individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of another country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive".[4]

40. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that "illegal deportations and transfers" constitute grave breaches.[5]

41. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "civilians should not be relocated".[6] It further provides that "unlawfully deporting, transferring . . . a protected person" constitute "grave breaches or serious war crimes likely to warrant institution of criminal proceedings".[7]

42. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "unlawfully deporting, transferring . . . a protected person" constitute "grave breaches or serious war crimes likely to warrant institution of criminal proceedings".[8]

43. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "in no circumstances may a protected person be transferred to a state where he or she has reason to fear persecution on account of his political opinions or religious beliefs".[9] It further states that "these core provisions which continue in effect preserve the right to a . . . protection against forced transfers, evacuations and deportations".[10] The manual specifies that "the following measures of population control are

[3] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.019; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.30(8).
[4] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008.
[5] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[6] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 609.
[7] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1305.
[8] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1315(d).
[9] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 46.
[10] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-2, § 14.

forbidden at all times: . . . deportations".[11] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "it is forbidden to displace the civilian population for reasons connected with the conflict".[12] It also states that "in the case of civilians in the hands of the adverse party, it is also a grave breach: a. to unlawfully deport or transfer a protected person".[13] Moreover, the manual considers that the "deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of that territory within or out of the territory" is a grave breach of AP I and that deportation is a crime against humanity.[14]

44. Under Colombia's Basic Military Manual, it is prohibited for the parties to conflict to force the displacement of the civilian population.[15] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that it is prohibited to "oblige civilian persons to move because of the conflict, except if security or imperative military reasons so demand".[16]

45. Croatia's LOAC Compendium prohibits "deportation or transfer out of or within an occupied territory".[17] It also states that "unlawful deportation" falls under "grave breaches (war crimes)".[18]

46. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "the following acts are representative of war crimes: . . . Offenses against civilian inhabitants of occupied territory, including . . . deportation".[19]

47. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "deportation or illegal transfer of population" constitutes a grave breach, which is a war crime.[20]

48. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "illegal transfer of the population" constitutes a grave breach, which is a war crime.[21]

49. France's LOAC Manual provides that "the law of armed conflict prohibits forced displacement of populations".[22]

50. Germany's Military Manual provides that "grave breaches of international humanitarian law are in particular: . . . deportation, illegal transfer or confinement of protected civilians".[23]

51. Hungary's Military Manual prohibits "deportation or transfer out of or within an occupied territory".[24] It also states that "unlawful deportation" falls under "grave breaches (war crimes)".[25]

52. Italy's IHL Manual provides that the occupying State has the duty "not to undertake forced transfers or to deport civilian persons outside the occupied

[11] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-5, § 41.
[12] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-5, § 41.
[13] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-2, § 14.
[14] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-3, § 17 and p. 16-1, § 4.
[15] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 30, see also p. 46.
[16] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 77.
[17] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 62.
[18] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 56.
[19] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), p. 6-4, § 6.2.5.
[20] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[21] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7; see also LOAC Manual (2001), p. 43.
[22] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 65.
[23] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[24] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 98.
[25] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 90.

territory".[26] The manual further states that "forced deportation of the civilian population of the occupied territory to accomplish forced labour" is one of the principal war crimes incorporated in national legislation.[27]It adds that grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols are considered war crimes, including "transfer and deportation of the civilian population".[28]

53. According to the Military Manual of the Netherlands, "individual or mass forcible transfers and deportations are forbidden".[29] It considers that "the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory" by the occupying power is a grave breach of AP I.[30] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "forced displacement of civilians is forbidden . . . Civilians shall not be compelled to leave their own territory for reasons connected with the conflict."[31]

54. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "in no circumstances may a protected person be transferred to a State where he has reasons to fear persecution on account of his political opinions or religious beliefs".[32] It states that some provisions continue in effect until the occupation is in fact terminated, such as articles preserving "protection against forced transfers, evacuations and deportations".[33] The manual specifies that "impermissible measures of population control include: . . . e. deportations".[34] It also states that "in the case of civilians in the hands of the adverse Party . . . it is also a grave breach: a. unlawfully to deport or transfer a protected civilian".[35] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "it is forbidden to displace the civilian population for reasons connected with the conflict".[36]

55. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War states that "grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are considered as serious war crimes when committed against: . . . (c) persons and property protected under the Civilian Convention [GC IV]: unlawful deportation or transfer".[37]

56. The Military Instructions of the Philippines provides that emphasis should be placed on allowing the civilian population to remain in their homes, on the basis that the large-scale movement of civilians creates logistical and strategic difficulties for the military.[38]

[26] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 48(8).
[27] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 84.
[28] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 85.
[29] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-5, § 5.
[30] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-6.
[31] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-7.
[32] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1121(2).
[33] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1303(3).
[34] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1322(3).
[35] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1702(3).
[36] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1823(1).
[37] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6.
[38] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), § 3(c).

57. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that "unlawful deportation or transfer . . . of a protected person" is a grave breach.[39]
58. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "mass or individual forced transfers, as well as deportations out of the occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or of another country (occupied or not), are prohibited, regardless of the motive".[40] It further states that it "is a grave breach which shall be qualified as a war crime . . . deportation or forced transfer of population".[41]
59. Sweden's Military Manual provides that "any form of deportation of civilians to the home country of the occupying power is forbidden".[42]
60. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of civilian persons out of the occupied territory, are prohibited, regardless of the motive".[43] According to the manual, "deportation and illegal transfers . . . constitute a grave breach".[44]
61. The UK Military Manual provides that "in no circumstances may a protected person be transferred to a State where he has reason to fear persecution on account of his political opinions or religious beliefs".[45] It further states that "the Occupant is forbidden, regardless of motive, to carry out individual or mass forcible transfers or deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to his own territory or to that of any other country".[46] According to the manual, "unlawful deportation is a grave breach of the Convention".[47]
62. The US Field Manual provides that "in no circumstances shall a protected person be transferred to a country where he or she may have reason to fear persecution for his or her political opinions or religious beliefs".[48] It further states that "individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motives".[49] According to the manual, "unlawful deportation or transfer . . . of a protected person" constitutes a grave breach.[50]
63. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 49 GC IV.[51]

[39] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 40.
[40] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5).
[41] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1).
[42] Sweden, Military Manual (1976), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[43] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 176, see also Article 153 and Military Manual (1984), p. 38 and Teaching Manual (1986), p. 107.
[44] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 192 and 193(2).
[45] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 53.
[46] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560.
[47] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560, see also § 625.
[48] US, Field Manual (1956), § 284.
[49] US, Field Manual (1956), § 382.
[50] US, Field Manual (1956), § 502(c).
[51] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6(b).

64. The US Naval Handbook provides that "the following acts are representative of war crimes: . . . offenses against civilian inhabitants of occupied territory, including . . . deportation".[52]

National Legislation

65. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides that members of the armed forces who deport, forcibly transfer, take as hostage or unlawfully detain any protected person shall be liable to punishment.[53]

66. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "unlawful deportation or transfer" during an armed conflict and the transfer within or outside an occupied territory of its population constitute crimes against the peace and security of mankind.[54]

67. Under Australia's War Crimes Act as amended, "the deportation of a person to, or the internment of a person in, a death camp, a slave labour camp, or a place where persons are subjected to treatment similar to that undergone in a death camp or slave labour camp, is a serious [war] crime".[55]

68. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[56]

69. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "genocide by forcibly transferring children"; crimes against humanity, including "deportation or forcible transfer of population"; and war crimes, including "unlawful deportation or transfer" and "transfer of population" in international armed conflicts and "displacing civilians" in non-international armed conflicts.[57]

70. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code punishes the "driving away [of] the civilian population with other aims from the area where they legally live".[58]

71. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime. It also specifies that "war crimes: namely violation of law or custom of war include . . . deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose of civilian population in the territory of Bangladesh".[59]

[52] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[53] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[54] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.2(4) and Article 390.4(1), see also Article 392 (deportation as a crime against humanity) and Article 393 (forced displacement and enforced hand-over of children as parts of a genocide campaign).
[55] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Section 6(4).
[56] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[57] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.7, 268.11, 268.32, 268.45 and 268.89.
[58] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 115.2, see also Article 107 (deportation or forcible transfer of population as a crime against humanity) and Article 103 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[59] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Article 3(2)(d–e).

72. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[60]

73. Under the Criminal Code of Belarus, "the transfer" of protected persons or "the deportation of the civilian population to slave labour" is identified as a "violation of the laws and customs of war".[61]

74. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended criminalises as a grave breach the "unlawful deportation [or] transfer" of protected persons.[62]

75. Under the Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, "whoever in violation of rules of international law applicable in time of war, armed conflict or occupation . . . orders displacement" of the civilian population commits a war crime.[63] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[64]

76. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[65]

77. Under Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended, "unlawful deportations" are offences.[66]

78. Under Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, deportation or illegal transfer of population constitutes a war crime.[67]

79. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 . . . which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[68]

[60] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[61] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(1), see also Article 127 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[62] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(6), see also Article 1(2)(1) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[63] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(1), see also Article 153 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[64] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 433(1), see also Article 432 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[65] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[66] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Article 412, see also Article 416(c) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[67] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(g) and (D)(h), see also Article 2(e) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[68] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.

80. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions or of AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[69]
81. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes defined in Articles 6, 7 and 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[70]
82. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that "mass deportation of non-combatants" constitutes a war crime.[71]
83. According to Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, Colombians have the right not to be forcibly displaced.[72]
84. Colombia's Penal Code punishes "anyone who, during an armed conflict, without military justification, deports, expels or carries out a forced transfer or displacement of the civilian population from its own territory".[73]
85. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended provides that "the deportation, for whatever reason, of a detained or interned individual, without a prior sentence in accordance with the laws and customs of war having been pronounced, shall be punished".[74]
86. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, "forcible transfer of children" of the members of an ethnical, racial or religious group, as such, with intent to destroy the group, in whole or in part, constitutes a crime of genocide.[75] Moreover, "deportation or forcible transfer of population", when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, is a crime against humanity.[76] The Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[77]
87. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I]".[78]
88. Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended punishes "any person who, in time of war or occupation, and in violation of . . . international conventions, makes an attack on the physical integrity of civilian populations or on their intellectual or

[69] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[70] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[71] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3(18).
[72] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Articles 2(7) and 10(5).
[73] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 159.
[74] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 526.
[75] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 1.
[76] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
[77] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[78] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).

moral rights . . . [by carrying out] their displacement or their forced dispersion, their deportation".[79]

89. Croatia's Criminal Code provides, under the heading "War crimes against civilian population", that "whoever in violation of the rules of international law, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, . . . orders deportation or transfers [of the civilian population] . . . shall be punished".[80]

90. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[81]

91. Cyprus's AP I Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic any grave breach of the provisions of the Protocol, or takes part or assists or incites another person in the commission of such a breach".[82]

92. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended punishes "whoever in wartime . . . groundlessly displaces the civil population of the occupied territory".[83]

93. Under El Salvador's Penal Code, "anyone who, during an international or a civil war, . . . deports to slave labour the civilian population in occupied territory" commits a crime.[84]

94. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, "anyone who, in situations of international or internal armed conflict, orders the repatriation or forced displacement of the civilian population from its territory, for reasons related to the armed conflict" is punishable.[85]

95. Under Estonia's Penal Code, persons responsible for the deportation or forced displacement of civilians commit a war crime.[86]

96. Ethiopia's Penal Code punishes:

whosoever, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, organises, orders or engages in, against the civilian population and in violation of the rules of public international law and of international humanitarian conventions: . . . the [79] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(3), see also Article 137 (3) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).

[80] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 158(1), see also Article 156 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).

[81] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).

[82] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1).

[83] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(2)(c), see also Article 259(1)(d) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).

[84] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 362, see also Article 361 (forced displacement as part of a genocide campaign).

[85] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Repatriación o desplazamiento forzado", see also Article entitled "Genocidio" (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).

[86] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 97, see also § 89 (deportation as a crime against humanity) and § 90 (forcible transfer of children to another group as part of a genocide campaign).

compulsory movement or dispersion of the population, its systematic deportation, transfer.[87]

97. Finland's Revised Penal Code provides that when committed as a part of a genocide campaign, "forcibly moving children from one group to another" is a crime.[88]

98. France's Penal Code punishes deportation as a crime against humanity.[89]

99. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, "deportation or other unlawful transfer . . . of protected persons" in an international or non-international armed conflict is a crime.[90]

100. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code punishes anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "deports or forcibly transfers, by expulsion or other coercive acts, a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law and lawfully present in an area to another State or another area in contravention of a general rule of international law".[91]

101. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, the "settlement of the civilian population of the occupying power in the occupied territories, or resettlement of the population of the occupied territory" is a war crime.[92]

102. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[93]

103. Under India's Constitution, "all citizens shall have the right . . . (d) to move freely throughout the territory of India; (e) to reside and settle in any part of the territory of India".[94] According to the Report on the Practice of India, this provision is reinforced during internal armed conflicts by constitutional provisions to the effect that freedom of movement may only be suspended where an emergency is proclaimed on account of an external aggression and not where an emergency is declared as the result of an internal armed rebellion.[95]

[87] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(c), see also Article 281 (forcible transfer as a part of a genocide campaign).
[88] Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Section 6.
[89] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 212-1, see also Article 211-1 (forcible transfer of children as a part of a genocide campaign).
[90] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(2)(f), see also Article 407 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign) and Article 408 (deportation of the population as a crime against humanity).
[91] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(6), see also Article 1, § 6(1)(5) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign) and Article 1, § 7(1)(4) (deportation or forcible transfer of the civilian population as a crime against humanity).
[92] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 158(3)(a), see also Article 155(1)(e) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[93] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[94] India, Constitution (1950), Article 19.
[95] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 5.5.

104. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of AP I are punishable offences.[96] It adds that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 45 and 49 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 17 AP II, are also punishable offences.[97]

105. Under Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law, deportation to forced labour or for any other purpose of the civilian population of or in occupied territories is regarded as a war crime.[98]

106. Italy's Law on Genocide prohibits the displacement of national, ethnic, racial or religious groups.[99]

107. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code considers "the displacement or transfer of the whole or part of the inhabitants of occupied territories, within as well as outside the occupied territories", as a war crime.[100]

108. Kazakhstan's Penal Code provides that the deportation of the civilian population is a crime.[101]

109. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[102]

110. Under Latvia's Criminal Code, deportation is a violation of the provisions and customs regarding the conduct of war forbidden by international agreements and constitutes a war crime.[103]

111. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, "the displacement or transfer of the whole or part of the inhabitants of occupied territories, within as well as outside the occupied territories", is a war crime.[104]

112. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, "deportation, in time of war, during an international armed conflict or under the conditions of occupation or annexation, of civilians from the occupied or annexed territory to the territory of the country which effects the occupation or annexation or to a third country" is a war crime.[105]

[96] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[97] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[98] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b); deportation is also considered as a crime against humanity and the forcible transfer of children to another group as a crime against the Jewish people (same Section).
[99] Italy, Law on Genocide (1967), Article 2.
[100] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(15).
[101] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Article 159, see also Article 160 (forcible transfer of children as a part of a genocide campaign).
[102] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[103] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Section 74, see also Section 71 (deliver children on a compulsory basis from one group of people into another as a part of a genocide campaign).
[104] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(15).
[105] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 334.

113. Under Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes, every measure which leads to the deportation or expatriation, whatever the grounds, of persons who were not lawfully detained or interned is punishable.[106]

114. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches states that the following grave breaches constitute crimes under international law: "deportation of all persons protected by the Convention relative to the protection of civilian persons in time of war" and "the transfer of persons protected by the same Convention".[107]

115. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[108]

116. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[109]

117. Mali's Penal Code provides that "deportation or unlawful transfer" of a population constitutes a war crime.[110]

118. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[111]

119. Mexico's Penal Code as amended punishes the forcible transfer of children under the age of 16 years to another group, when committed as a part of a genocide campaign.[112]

120. Under Moldova's Penal Code, deportation of protected persons is an offence.[113]

121. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands includes "deportation of civilians" in its list of war crimes.[114]

122. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "unlawful deportation or transfer" and "the deportation or transfer of all or part of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory" are crimes, when committed in an international armed conflict.[115] "Giving instructions for the [106] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 2(5).

[107] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave breaches (1985), Article 1(6)and (7).
[108] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[109] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[110] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(g) and (i)(8), see also Article 29(d) (deportation or illegal transfer of a population as a crime against humanity) and Article 30(e) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[111] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[112] Mexico, Penal Code as amended (1931), Article 149 bis.
[113] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 137(2)(c), see also Article 135(d) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[114] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.
[115] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(1)(g), 5(2)(d)(i) and 5(5)(d), see also Article 3(1)(e) (forcible transfer of children of a group to another group as part of a genocide transfer of the civilian population for reasons connected with the conflict, other than on account of the safety of the citizens or where imperatively demanded by the circumstances of the conflict" constitutes a crime in non-international armed conflict.[116]

123. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[117]

124. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, genocide includes the crimes defined in Article 6(e) of the 1998 ICC Statute, crimes against humanity include the crimes defined in Article 7(1)(d) of the Statute, and war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vii), (b)(viii) and (e)(viii) of the Statute.[118]

125. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides that deportation and illegal transfer is a punishable offence.[119]

126. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides that displacement of children from one group to another group as a part of a genocide campaign is punishable.[120]

127. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, "deportation, transfer or unlawful displacement" of persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977 constitutes a war crime.[121]

128. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation, ... whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[122]

129. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[123]

130. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[124] campaign) and Article 4(d) (deportation or forcible transfer of population as a crime against humanity).

116 Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 6(3)(i).

117 New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).

118 New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Sections 9(2), 10(2) and 11(2).

119 Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 58.

120 Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 444(1).

121 Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(6), see also Article 208.2 (deportation as a crime against humanity) and Article 208.1 (forcible transfer of children as part of a genocide campaign).

122 Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).

123 Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

124 Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).

131. Paraguay's Penal Code punishes "anyone who, in violation of the international laws of war, armed conflict or military occupation, commits against the civilian population . . . acts of . . .. deportation".[125]

132. Under the War Crimes Trial Executive Order of the Philippines, applicable to acts committed during the Second World War, "violations of the laws or customs of war . . . [such as] deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose of civilian population of or in occupied territory" are war crimes.[126] It adds that "deportation [of] . . . civilian populations before or during the [Second World War] . . . whether or not in violation of the local laws" constitutes a war crime.[127]

133. Poland's Penal Code punishes any person who, in violation of international law, carries out transfers of persons hors de combat.[128]

134. Portugal's Penal Code punishes "anyone who, in violation of international law (humanitarian or common), in times of war, armed conflict or occupation, carries out . . . deportation".[129]

135. Romania's Penal Code punishes the deportation of all persons in the hands of the adverse party.[130]

136. Under Russia's Criminal Code, "deportation of the civilian population" is a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[131]

137. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[132]

138. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[133]

139. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended punishes "whoever in wartime . . . groundlessly displaces the civil population of the occupied territory".[134]

140. Slovenia's Penal Code provides, under the heading "War Crimes against Civil Population", that "whoever, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation

[125] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 320, see also Article 319 (forcible transfer of children and adults to another group or places other than their habitual residence as a part of a genocide campaign).
[126] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), Part II(b)(2).
[127] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), Part II(b)(3).
[128] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 124, see also Article 118(2) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[129] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Article 241.
[130] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358(c); see also Law on the Punishment of War Criminals (1945), Article 1(c) (deportation of political or racial adversaries).
[131] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 356(1), see also Article 357 (forcible transfer of children as a part of a genocide campaign).
[132] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[133] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[134] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(2)(c), see also Article 259(1)(c) (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).

and in violation of international law, orders or commits against the civil population, the following criminal offences . . . deportation or displacement" shall be punished.[135]

141. Spain's Military Criminal Code and Penal Code punish anyone who deports or forcibly transfers protected persons.[136]

142. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, . . . a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[137]

143. Tajikistan's Criminal Code punishes:

> 1) Wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in an international or non-international armed conflict . . . [such as] the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory . . .
> 2) Wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in an international or non-international armed conflict against persons hors de combat or having no means of defence . . . consisting of:
> . . .
> f) deportation or unlawful transfer.[138]

144. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(e) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(d) of the Statute, and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vii), (b)(viii) and (e)(viii) of the Statute.[139]

145. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[140]

146. Under Ukraine's Criminal Code, deportation of the civilian population to forced labour is an offence.[141]

147. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions or of [AP I]".[142]

[135] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(1), see also Article 373 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[136] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(6); Penal Code (1995), Article 611(4), see also Article 607(4) (forcible transfer to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[137] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1)(a).
[138] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(1) and (2), see also Article 398 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[139] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[140] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[141] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 438(1), see also Article 442 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[142] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).

148. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(e) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(d) of the Statute, and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vii), (b)(viii) and (e)(viii) of the Statute.[143]
149. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as "deportation to slave labour or for any other illegal purpose, of civilians of or in occupied territory".[144]
150. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as "deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose of civilians of or in occupied territory".[145]
151. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[146]
152. Uzbekistan's Criminal Code punishes the deportation of the civilian population to forced labour or for any other purpose.[147]
153. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[148]
154. The Penal Code of SFRY (FRY) provides, under the heading "War crimes against civilian population", that "any person who orders, in violation of the rules of international law during a war, an armed conflict or occupation, . . . unlawful transfer of people to concentration camps [of the civilian population] . . . shall be punished".[149]
155. Under the Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY), "forced deportation or removal to concentration camps, or interning, or of forced labour of the population of Yugoslavia" is a war crime.[150]
156. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions or [AP I]".[151]

[143] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[144] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.
[145] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945), Regulation 2(b).
[146] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c)(1).
[147] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Article 152, see also Article 153 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[148] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[149] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142(3), see also Article 141 (forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[150] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).
[151] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).

National Case-law

157. After the Second World War, a number of German industrialists were convicted of participation in the deportation to slave labour of the civilian inhabitants of occupied territories in conditions in which they were ill-treated, tortured and killed.[152] Numerous high-ranking army and administrative officials were also convicted of war crimes for their participation in such deportations.[153]

158. In the Rudolph and Minister of Employment and Immigration case in 1992, Canada's Federal Court of Appeal upheld an order for the removal from Canada of the accused, a German national who, during the Second World War, had requested and supervised the deportation and use of foreign civilians as slave labourers in the production of V-2 rockets, on the ground that he had committed outside Canada an act that constituted a war crime.[154]

159. In the Takashi Sakai case in 1946, the War Crimes Military Tribunal of the Ministry of National Defence of China found the accused guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity inasmuch as he had incited or permitted his subordinates to commit, inter alia, acts of deportation of civilians.[155]

160. In analysing the constitutionality of AP II in 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court found in relation to the rules on the protection of civilians and persons hors de combat that:

> According to the statistics compiled by the Colombian Episcopacy, more than half a million Colombians have been displaced from their homes as a result of the violence . . . The principal cause of displacement involves violations of international humanitarian law associated with the armed conflict.[156]

161. In its judgement in the Eichmann case in 1961, Israel's District Court of Jerusalem held that the following behaviour caused serious bodily or mental harm and, therefore, amounted to a violation of Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law:

> the enslavement, starvation, deportation and persecution . . . and . . . [the] detention [of Jewish people] in ghettos, transit camps and concentration camps in conditions which were designed to cause their degradation, deprivation of their rights as human beings and to suppress them and cause them inhumane suffering and torture.[157]

[152] France, General Tribunal at Rastadt of the Military Government for the French Zone of Occupation in Germany, Roechling case, 30 June 1948; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case, 29 July 1948; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krupp case, 30 June 1948.

[153] Poland, Supreme National Tribunal at Poznan, Greiser case, Judgement, 7 July 1946; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Milch case, Judgement, 17 April 1947; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 19 February 1948; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial), Judgement, 28 October 1948.

[154] Canada, Federal Court of Appeal, Rudolph and Minister of Employment and Immigration case, Judgement, 1 May 1992.

[155] China, War Crimes Military Tribunal of the Ministry of National Defence, Takashi Sakai case, Judgement, 29 August 1946.

[156] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Constitutional revision of Additional Protocol II and the Law 171 of 16 December 1994 implementing this protocol, Judgement, 18 May 1995.

[157] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961.

162. In its judgement in the Abu Awad case in 1979, Israel's High Court held that Article 49 GC IV was not meant to apply to the deportation of selected individuals for reasons of public order and security. It only prohibits Nazi-style mass deportations.[158]

163. In its judgement in the Kawasme and Others case in 1980, Israel's High Court held that "all of Article 49 [GC IV] . . . does not form part of customary international law, and therefore the deportation orders [against the mayors of Hebron and Halhul] did not contravene the domestic law of the State of Israel . . . , according to which an Israeli court reaches its decision". The Court also stated that Article 49 was not meant to apply to the deportation of selected individuals, but only to Nazi-style mass deportation. In a dissenting opinion in the same case, Justice Cohn underlined that "the beginning of Article 49 . . . contains a nucleus of the customary law of nations, which has applied all over the world from time immemorial". According to his opinion, the prohibition contained in Article 49 applies to all inhabitants of an area and is an absolute one, so that the cause for deportation – whether military or security – is irrelevant.[159]

164. In its judgement in the Nazal and Others case in 1985, Israel's High Court held that Article 49 GC IV did not form part of customary international law and that therefore deportation orders against individual citizens did not contravene the domestic law of Israel. President Shamgar ruled that Article 49 was not applicable to the deportation of Jordanian subjects to Jordan and that a deportation order under Regulation 112 of the Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945 can be issued only if the Military Commander is of the opinion that such an order is necessary or expedient for securing public peace, the protection of the region, the maintenance of public order, or the suppression of mutiny, rebellion or riot.[160]

165. In its judgement in the Affo and Others case in 1988, a majority of four judges of Israel's High Court stated that deportations of individuals were not incompatible with Article 49 GC IV, the provision only barring Nazi-style mass deportations. However, in a dissenting opinion in the same case, Justice Bach held that deportations of individuals from occupied territories to a location outside the boundaries of those territories violate Article 49. Nevertheless, Article 49 being only conventional and not customary international law, it does not form part of Israeli law that can be directly invoked before Israeli courts. Justice Bach stated that:

> The language of Article 49 is unequivocal and explicit. The combination of the words "Individual or mass forcible transfers as well as deportations" in conjunction with the phrase "regardless of their motive" . . . admits no room to doubt that the Article applies not only to mass deportations but to the deportation of individuals as well and that the prohibition was intended to be total, sweeping and unconditional – "regardless of their motive".[161]

[158] Israel, High Court, Abu Awad case, Judgement, 12 November 1979.
[159] Israel, High Court, Kawasme and Others case, Judgement, 4 December 1980.
[160] Israel, High Court, Nazal and Others case, Judgement, 29 September 1985.
[161] Israel, High Court, Affo and Others case, Judgement, 10 April 1988.

166. In its judgement in the Zimmerman case in 1949, the Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands held that the deportation of civilians of occupied territories was a war crime and rejected the accused's defence of superior orders as "the condemnation of these practices by public opinion must be deemed of general knowledge, and the accused must be deemed to have known they were illegal".[162]

167. In its judgement in the Situation in Chechnya case in 1995, the Russian Constitutional Court held that several orders and decrees issued by the Russian government in 1994 which provided for the eviction of "persons posing threats to public security and to the personal safety of citizens out of the territory of the Chechen Republic" were unconstitutional.[163]

Other National Practice

168. In 1997, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General and President of the UN Security Council, Afghanistan stated that "the heinous policy of coercive eviction and mass deportation of the civilian population . . . is a crime against humanity".[164]

169. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Botswana condemned the forced displacement in Georgia.[165]

170. The Report on the Practice of Egypt states that Egypt has taken the position that forced displacement and expulsion "en masse" should be prohibited in internal as well as in international armed conflicts.[166]

171. The Report on the Practice of France states that France especially censures the forcible displacement or deportation of the civilian population, when carried out in both international and non-international armed conflicts. It has even stated that it is its moral duty to react to protect displaced persons. France also clearly opposes the expulsion measures taken against the inhabitants of the territories occupied by Israel and considers them as contrary to GC IV. Representatives of France have described such measures as being of "exceptional gravity".[167]

172. In 1987, all political parties in the German parliament agreed that the deportations carried out during the conflict in Afghanistan constituted serious violations of human rights.[168]

173. In 1993, the German Chancellor stated that displacement was deeply inhumane.[169]

[162] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Zimmerman case, Judgement, 21 November 1949.
[163] Russia, Constitutional Court, Situation in Chechnya case, Judgement, 31 July 1995.
[164] Afghanistan, Identical letters dated 19 January 1997 to the UN Secretary-General and the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1997/54, 21 January 1997, Annex, p. 2.
[165] Botswana, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3535, 12 May 1995, p. 9.
[166] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 5.5.
[167] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.5 and 5.7.
[168] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Proposal by the CDU/CSU, SPD, FDP and the Greens, Acht Jahre Krieg in Afghanistan, BT-Drucksache 11/1500, 9 December 1987, p. 1.
[169] Germany, Statement by the Chancellor, Helmut Kohl, Berlin, 24 May 1993, Bulletin, No. 45, Presse- und Informationsamt der Bundesregierung, Bonn, 29 May 1993, p. 488.

174. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, Iran regarded the forcible transfer of civilians of occupied areas to Iraq during the Iran–Iraq War as a war crime.[170]

175. In 1992, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Japan condemned forced displacement in Bosnia and Herzegovina.[171]

176. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Jordan has never ordered the forced movement of civilians nor compelled civilians to leave their own territory owing to internal armed conflict.[172]

177. In 1992, in a statement before the Commission of Foreign Affairs of the Lower House of Parliament concerning the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands stated that "Serbia refuses to recognise the independence and territorial integrity of the Bosnian State and carries out a pure policy of conquest, combined with the deportation of populations. The international community should strongly condemn this policy."[173]

178. In 1995, in a letter to the Lower House of Parliament, the Minister of Defence of the Netherlands stated that "the forced evacuation of the local population of Srebrenica, and now also Žepa, must be strongly condemned".[174]

179. In 1996, in a note to the Lower House of Parliament concerning the refugee problem in Africa, the Minister for Development Cooperation of the Netherlands stated that "with respect to refugees and displaced persons, the Netherlands pays as much attention as possible, to prevent, in a comprehensive fashion, that people are displaced and have to flee".[175]

180. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council, New Zealand condemned the forced displacement in the former Yugoslavia.[176]

181. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Nigeria condemned the forced displacement in Bosnia and Herzegovina.[177]

182. In practice, the forced displacement of civilians during military operations in the Philippines has been widely reported.[178]

[170] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 6.5.
[171] Japan, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3106, 13 August 1992, p. 21.
[172] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.5.
[173] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Statement by the Minister of Foreign Affairs before the Commission on Foreign Affairs, 1991–1992 Session, Doc. 22 181, No. 22, p. 12.
[174] Netherlands, Letter from the Minister of Defence to the Lower House of Parliament, 1994–1995 Session, Doc. 22 181, No. 109, p. 6.
[175] Netherlands, Note by the Minister of Development Cooperation to the Lower House of Parliament concerning the refugee problem in Africa, 1995–1996 Session, Doc. 24 713, No. 1, p. 28.
[176] New Zealand, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217, 25 May 1993, p. 22.
[177] Nigeria, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3344, 4 March 1994, p. 6.
[178] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Resolution 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, 26 March 1991, preamble; Ecumenical Movement for Justice and Peace, Fact-Finding Missions: Reflecting the Human Rights Situation in 1988, Justice and Peace Review, 1990, p. 9; Philippine Human Rights Information Center, The Internal Refugees in Negros: the case of "Operation Thunderbolt", published by Human Rights Alliance in Negros (HRAN), Bacolod City, Philippines, October 1989, pp. 12–14, 29–31 and 76–85; Philippine

183. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Russia condemned the forced displacement in the former Yugoslavia.[179]

184. According to the Report on the Practice of Russia, Russia considers forced displacement of the civilian population to be an "international crime".[180]

185. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Spain condemned the forced displacement in Georgia.[181]

186. In 1988, the Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs issued a note concerning the lawfulness of the Israeli authorities' deportation to Lebanon of four Palestinian activists from the West Bank of Jordan. After deciding that GC IV applied to the situation in the region, the note concluded that Article 49 of the Convention:

> expressly prohibits individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, regardless of their motive . . .
>
> It would appear that by evacuating four Palestinian civilians – irrespective of whether or not they were agitators – Israel contravened the Fourth Convention. This represents a "grave breach" in the meaning of article 147 [GC IV].[182]

187. In 1992 and 1993, during debates in the UN Security Council, the UK condemned the forced displacements in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the former Yugoslavia.[183]

188. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that it considered the individual and mass forcible deportation of Kuwaiti and third country nationals to Iraq, in violation of Articles 49 and 147 GC IV, to be a war crime.[184]

189. In 1992, in a report submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV in the former Yugoslavia, the US stated that mass forcible expulsion and deportation of civilians were listed as grave breaches of GC IV. The report collated information on 12 such instances of expulsion and deportation.[185]

Alliance of Human Rights Advocates (PAHRA), Report on the Implementation by the Philippine Government of Articles 10, 11 and 12 ICESCR, 20 April 1995, pp. 1–4.

179 Russia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, p. 8.

180 Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, Chapter 5.5.

181 Spain, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3325, 22 December 1993, p. 18.

182 Switzerland, Federal Department of Foreign Affairs, Directorate for Public International Law, Note on the prohibition to expel and deport the population of an occupied territory – Applicability of GC IV to the territories occupied by Israel, 20 January 1988, reprinted in Annuaire suisse de droit international, Vol. 46, 1989, pp. 248–249.

183 UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3106, 13 August 1992, p. 36; Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3175, 22 February 1993, p. 14; Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217, 5 May 1993, p. 17.

184 US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, pp. 618–619 and 634–635.

185 US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention, annexed to Letter dated 22 September 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24583, 23 September 1992, p. 9.

190. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council, the US condemned the forced displacement in the former Yugoslavia.[186]
191. The Report on US Practice states that "Article 17 of Protocol II reflects general U.S. policy on displacement in internal armed conflicts".[187]
192. In 1989, in a meeting with the ICRC, the Minister of Defence of a State involved in an internal armed conflict expressed strong opposition to the forced displacement of the population within the country.[188]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
193. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on political conditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council called upon "all parties and others concerned to ensure that forcible expulsions of persons from the areas where they live and any attempts to change the ethnic composition of the population, anywhere in the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, cease immediately".[189]
194. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council condemned the forced "large-scale displacement of civilians" in Bosnia and Herzegovina.[190]
195. In several resolutions adopted in 1993 concerning the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan over Nagorno-Karabakh, the UN Security Council expressed grave concern at "the displacement of a large number of civilians".[191]
196. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council expressed deep concern that the situation had resulted in "the internal displacement of a significant percentage of the Rwandan population".[192]
197. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council demanded that Croatia "respect fully the rights of the local Serb population, including their rights to remain, leave or return in safety".[193]
198. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council referred to the unlawful deportation of civilians as a "grave violation of international humanitarian law".[194]
199. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the [186] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3175, 22 February 1993, p. 12.

[187] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.5, referring to Message from the US President Transmitting AP II to the US Senate for Advice and Consent to Ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987, Comment on Article 17.
[188] ICRC archive document.
[189] UN Security Council, Res. 752, 15 May 1992, § 6.
[190] UN Security Council, Res. 819, 16 April 1993, preamble.
[191] UN Security Council, Res. 822, 30 April 1993, preamble; Res. 874, 14 October 1993, preamble; Res. 884, 12 November 1993, preamble.
[192] UN Security Council, Res. 918, 17 May 1994, preamble.
[193] UN Security Council, Res. 1009, 10 August 1995, § 2.
[194] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble.

UN Security Council, after reiterating the principle of individual responsibility, condemned in particular the "consistent pattern of massive expulsions".[195]

200. In 1994, in a statement by its President on the situation in Liberia, the UN Security Council expressed its deep concern "at the increased number of people that have ... been displaced".[196] The same year, in another statement by its President on the subject, the Security Council expressed its concern at the "large-scale displacement of persons".[197]

201. In 1995, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council expressed its concerns about the forced displacement in Bosnia and Herzegovina.[198]

202. In 1997, in a statement by its President on the situation in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council expressed its deep concern "at the worsening of the humanitarian situation, including the displacement of the civilian population".[199]

203. In 1997, in a statement by its President on the situation in Burundi, the UN Security Council expressed its deep concern "at the involuntary resettlement of rural populations".[200]

204. In Resolution 2675 (XXV), adopted in 1970, the UN General Assembly affirmed that "civilian populations, or individual members thereof, should not be the object of ... forcible transfers".[201]

205. In Resolution 3318 (XXIX), adopted in 1974, the UN General Assembly solemnly proclaimed that "forcible eviction, committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories shall be considered criminal".[202]

206. In a resolution adopted in 1981, the UN General Assembly demanded, on the basis of Articles 1 and 49 GC IV, that:

> the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling and imprisoning the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul and in expelling the Sharia Judge of Hebron and that it facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinian leaders so that they can resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed.[203]

This demand was reiterated in subsequent resolutions adopted in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.[204]

[195] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, §§ 1 and 2.
[196] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/9, 25 February 1994, p. 1.
[197] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/33, 13 July 1994, p. 2.
[198] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/32, 14 July 1995, p. 1.
[199] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/20, 16 April 1997, p. 2.
[200] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/32, 30 May 1997, p. 1.
[201] UN General Assembly, Res. 2675 (XXV), 9 December 1970, § 7.
[202] UN General Assembly, Res. 3318 (XXIX), 14 December 1974, § 5.
[203] UN General Assembly, Res. 36/147 D, 16 December 1981, § 1.
[204] UN General Assembly, Res. 37/88 D, 9 December 1982, § 1; Res. 38/79 E, 15 December 1983, § 1; Res. 39/95 E, 14 December 1984, § 1; Res. 40/161 E, 16 December 1985, § 2.

207. In a resolution adopted in 1981, the UN General Assembly strongly condemned "evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants of the occupied territories and denial of their right to return".[205] This condemnation was reiterated in subsequent resolutions adopted in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.[206]

208. In a resolution adopted in 1991 on the situation of human rights in Iraq, the UN General Assembly expressed deep concern at "the forced displacement of hundreds of thousands of Kurds".[207] In another resolution adopted in 1992 on the same subject, the General Assembly expressed deep concern at "the forced displacement of hundreds of thousands of Iraqi civilians".[208]

209. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly expressed "its outrage at ... the acts of violence aimed at forcing individuals from their homes".[209]

210. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the UN General Assembly expressed its deep concern at "continuing serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by all parties, in particular ... forced displacement of populations".[210]

211. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned the practice of forced displacement in Zaire and stated that the government authorities bore primary responsibility for the situation.[211]

212. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned the practice of forced displacement in Sudan.[212]

213. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all parties to the hostilities to protect all civilians from violations of human rights and IHL, including forcible displacement.[213]

214. In 1996, in a statement by its Chairman, the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that it strongly deplored the suffering inflicted on displaced persons resulting from severe destruction of Chechen towns.[214]

215. In resolutions adopted in 1988 and 1989 on the situation in the Palestinian and Arab territories occupied by Israel, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, after reaffirming that GC IV was applicable, considered that the [205] UN General Assembly, Res. 36/147 C, 16 December 1981, § 7(c).

[206] UN General Assembly, Res. 37/88 C, 9 December 1982, § 7(d); Res. 38/79 D, 15 December 1983, § 7(d); Res. 39/95 D, 14 December 1984, § 7(e); Res. 40/161 D, 16 December 1985, § 8(e).
[207] UN General Assembly, Res. 46/134, 17 December 1991, preamble.
[208] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/145, 18 December 1992, preamble.
[209] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 2.
[210] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 2(ii).
[211] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/87, 9 March 1994, § 4.
[212] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/77, 8 March 1995, preamble.
[213] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, § 15.
[214] UN Commission on Human Rights, Chairman's statement, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.61, 29 April 1996, p. 3.

expulsion and deportation of civilians from their homeland by force was a war crime under international law.[215]

216. In 1998, in a report on MONUA in Angola, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

> Over the past few months, indiscriminate as well as summary killings . . . have been reported in the course of attacks targeting entire villages . . . At such times, principles of humanitarian law are especially important as they seek to protect the most vulnerable groups – those who are not involved in military operations – from direct or indiscriminate attack or being forced to flee.[216]

217. In a progress report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights in 1994, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements concluded that "forcible population transfer, save in areas when derogation or military necessity permits, are prima facie internationally wrongful acts".[217]

218. In his final report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights in 1997, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements stated that:

> 15. Specific rights which population transfers violate include the right to self-determination; the right to privacy, family life and home; the prohibition on forced labour; the right to work; the prohibition of arbitrary detention, including internment prior to expulsion; the right to nationality as well as the right of a child to a nationality; the right to property or peaceful enjoyment of possessions; the right to social security; and protection from incitement to racial hatred or religious intolerance (see the table at annex I).
> 16. The range of human rights violated by population transfers and the implantation of settlers place this phenomenon in the category of systematic or mass violations of human rights . . .
> . . .
> 64. As affirmed in the Special Rapporteur's progress report, international law prohibits the transfer of persons, including the implantation of settlers, as a general principle, and the governing principle is that any displacement of populations must have the consent of the population involved. Accordingly, the criteria governing forcible transfer rest on the absence of consent and also include the use of force, coercive measures, and inducement to flee.
> . . .
> 70. Consideration must be given by the Sub-Commission to the possibility of preparing an international instrument to set or codify international standards which are applicable to the situation of population transfer and the implantation of settlers. Such an instrument should: provide for an express

[215] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1988/10, 31 August 1988, § 3; Res. 1989/4, 31 August 1989, § 3.
[216] UN Secretary-General, Report on MONUA, UN Doc. S/1998/931, 8 October 1998, § 17.
[217] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Progress report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/18, 30 June 1994, § 132.

> reaffirmation of the unlawfulness of population transfer and the implantation of settlers; define State responsibility in the matter of unlawful population transfer, including the implantation of settlers; provide for the criminal responsibility of individuals involved in population transfer, whether such individuals be private or officials of the State.[218]

The Special Rapporteur proposed a draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers for adoption by the UN Commission on Human Rights which provided that:

Article 4

1. Every person has the right to remain in peace, security and dignity in one's home, or on one's land and in one's country.
2. No person shall be compelled to leave his place of residence.
3. The displacement of the population or parts thereof shall not be ordered, induced or carried out . . .

. . .

Article 9

The above practices of population transfer constitute internationally wrongful acts giving rise to State responsibility and to individual criminal liability.[219]

Other International Organisations

219. In a recommendation adopted in 1992 on the crisis in the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe considered that the expulsion of civilians was a crime against humanity and that persons responsible for such crimes should be held personally accountable.[220]

220. In 1991, in several reports concerning violations of IHL in areas of the former Yugoslavia, EU observers denounced various attacks on the civilian population aimed at forcing its displacement.[221]

221. In the Final Communiqué of its 10th Session in 1989, the GCC Supreme Council demanded an end to Israel's "oppressive measures, including the

[218] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, §§ 15, 16, 64 and 70.

[219] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, Annex II, Draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers, Articles 4 and 9.

[220] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1198, 5 November 1992, § 6.

[221] Report by EU observers on statements about violations of the second protocol to the Geneva Conventions concerning Ilok and the surrounding villages of Bapska, Lova_ and _arengrad, 1 November 1991, pp. 3–4; Report by EU observers on statements about violations of the second protocol to the Geneva Conventions concerning Slunj, the surrounding villages situated in the region south of Slunj and villages in the Municipality of Korenica, 10 November 1991; Report by EU observers on statements about violations of the second protocol to the Geneva Conventions concerning Drnić and the villages in the Municipality of Drnić, 19 November 1991, pp. 4–5; Report by EU observers on statements about violations of the second protocol to the Geneva Conventions concerning Slavonska Po_ega and villages in the Municipality of Slavonska Po_ega, 26 November 1991, p. 4.

deportation of Palestinians and the demolishing of houses, which run counter to the principles of human rights and international norms and conventions".[222]

222. In the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council reaffirmed its conviction that "the policy of mass expulsions . . . represent a total contravention of all the Charters, Laws and Conventions of the International Community of Nations" and strongly condemned "the arbitrary and unjust Israeli measures of expulsion as a contravention of Human Rights [and] a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention". The Council stated that it followed with grave concern and deep regret the degradation of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the "carrying out of the worst crimes of . . . mass expulsion".[223]

223. In a resolution adopted in 1985 on the Israeli occupation of parts of southern Lebanon and western Bekaa, the Council of the League of Arab States decided:

> to call upon the International Community to exercise pressure on the Zionist entity to stop [arbitrary and inhuman] practices immediately, in accordance with the provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, especially as regards displacing nationals, destroying their houses and damaging their properties and belongings in these areas.[224]

224. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the Israeli occupation of parts of southern Lebanon and western Bekaa, the Council of the League of Arab States decided:

> to strongly condemn Israel for its deportation of Palestinian citizens from the occupied Palestinian territories to Lebanon, as this arbitrary and inhuman act is a blatant violation of Lebanon's sovereignty and a sustained aggression against the inviolability of its territories, as well as a clear violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, so that these arbitrary and aggressive practices must be stopped immediately.[225]

225. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the Israeli occupation of parts of southern Lebanon and western Bekaa, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to strongly condemn Israel for . . . its inhuman practices against the peaceful people and for the deportation of a certain number of them, which are all breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, and to call for a stop of such arbitrary practices".[226]

[222] GCC, Supreme Council, 10th Session, Muscat, 18–21 December 1989, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 29 December 1989 from Oman to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/45/73-S/21065, 2 January 1990, p. 4.

[223] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, pp. 6 and 8.

[224] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 4430, 28 March 1985, § 2.

[225] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5169, 29 April 1992, § 3.

[226] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5324, 21 September 1993, § 2.

International Conferences

226. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on respect for international humanitarian law in armed conflicts and action by the ICRC for persons protected by the Geneva Conventions in which it deplored "the forceful displacement of civilian populations by occupation troops . . . in violation of the laws and customs of war".[227]

227. In the Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants declared, inter alia, that they "refuse to accept that . . . populations [are] illegally displaced".[228]

228. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on the protection of the civilian population in period of armed conflict in which it stressed "the general prohibition on forced displacement of the civilian population, which often causes widespread famine".[229]

229. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on principles and action in international humanitarian assistance and protection in which it called upon States to "respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law, in particular the general prohibition of forced displacement of civilians".[230]

230. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "actions provoking unwarranted population displacements are avoided".[231]

231. The Final Declaration adopted in 2002 by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict stated that it was "deeply concerned about the number and expansion of conflicts in Africa and alarmed by the spread of violence, in particular in the form of . . . forced displacement of persons and use of force to prevent their return . . . which seriously violate the rules of International Humanitarian Law".[232]

[227] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. I, preamble.
[228] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § I (1).
[229] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § E(b).
[230] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. 4, § A(1)(a).
[231] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(c).
[232] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, preamble.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

232. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber, in defining the constituent offences of crimes against humanity (other inhumane acts), held that:

Less broad parameters for the interpretation of "other inhumane acts" can instead be identified in international standards on human rights such as those laid down in the Universal Declaration on Human Rights of 1948 and the two United Nations Covenants on Human Rights of 1966. Drawing upon the various provisions of these texts, it is possible to identify a set of basic rights appertaining to human beings, the infringement of which may amount, depending on the accompanying circumstances, to a crime against humanity . . . Similarly, the expression at issue undoubtedly embraces the forcible transfer of groups of civilians (which is to some extent covered by Article 49 of the IVth Convention of 1949 and Article 17(1) of the Additional Protocol II of 1977) . . . In other words, they must be as serious as the other classes of crimes provided for in the other provisions of Article 5.[233]

233. In the Krstić case in 1999, the accused was charged with crimes against humanity for carrying out persecutions (deportation or forcible transfer of Bosnian Muslims from the Srebrenica enclave). The accused was also charged with "deportation" as constituting a crime against humanity or, alternatively, with "inhumane acts (forcible transfer)" also constituting a crime against humanity.[234] In its judgement in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

521. Both deportation and forcible transfer relate to the involuntary and unlawful evacuation of individuals from the territory in which they reside. Yet, the two are not synonymous in customary international law. Deportation presumes transfer beyond State borders, whereas forcible transfer relates to displacements within a State.
522. However, this distinction has no bearing on the condemnation of such practices in international humanitarian law . . .
523. In this regard, the Trial Chamber notes that any forced displacement is by definition a traumatic experience which involves abandoning one's home, losing property and being displaced under duress to another location. As previously stated by the Trial Chamber in the Kupreškić case, forcible displacement within or between national borders is included as an inhumane act under Article 5(i) defining crimes against humanity. Whether, in this instance, the facts constitute forcible transfer or deportation is discussed below.[235]

The Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of "forcible transfer".[236]

234. In the case of Akdivar and Others v. Turkey in 1996, the ECtHR held that:

It thus finds it established that security forces were responsible for the burning of the applicants' houses on 10 November 1992 and that the loss of their homes

[233] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 566.
[234] ICTY, Krstić case, Amended Indictment, 27 October 1999, Counts 6, 7 and 8.
[235] ICTY, Krstić case, Judgement, 2 August 2001, §§ 521–523.
[236] ICTY, Krstić case, Judgement, 2 August 2001, § 727.

caused them to abandon the village and move elsewhere. However, it has not been established that the applicants were forcibly expelled from Kelekçi by the security forces.[237]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

235. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "individual or mass transfers and deportation from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive".[238] Delegates also teach that "unlawful deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory" constitutes a grave breach of the law of war.[239]

236. In an appeal launched in 1983 in the context of the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC noted that "tens of thousands of Iranian civilians have been deported to Iraq by the Iraqi armed forces, in breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention".[240]

237. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "under the [four Geneva] Conventions, . . . deportations . . . are specifically prohibited".[241]

238. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the protection of the civilian population against famine in situations of armed conflict in which it reminded "the authorities concerned and the armed forces under their command of their obligation to apply international humanitarian law, in particular . . . the prohibition on displacing civilians".[242]

239. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the Movement, refugees and displaced persons in which it invited "the components of the Movement, in accordance with their respective mandates: a) to call upon the parties to conflict to respect international humanitarian law and to ensure that it is respected in order to avert population movements".[243]

[237] ECtHR, Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, Judgement, 16 September 1996, §§ 81 and 88.
[238] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 833.
[239] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 776 (f).
[240] ICRC, Conflict between Iraq and Iran: ICRC Appeal, IRRC, No. 235, 1983, p. 221.
[241] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.
[242] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 13, § 1.
[243] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham Session, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 7, § 1(a).

240. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated, in relation to civilians, that "forced displacements not justified by imperative reasons of security" are prohibited.[244]
241. In a working paper on war crimes submitted in 1997 to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC, emphasising the customary law nature of the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of most of the grave breaches of AP I, listed "the unlawful deportation or transfer . . . of protected persons" as war crimes to be subject to the jurisdiction of the ICC. It also considered that "ordering the displacement of the civilian population for reasons related to the conflict" is a serious violation of international law applicable in non-international armed conflicts and a war crime.[245]

VI. Other Practice

242. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "no persons shall be compelled to leave their own territory".[246]
243. In 1992, in the context of the conflict in Rwanda, the RPF stated that "on several occasions, we condemned the use of the massive displacement of the population" carried out by governmental forces.[247]

Evacuation of the civilian population

Note: For practice concerning the removal of civilians from the vicinity of military objectives, see Chapter 6, section C. For practice concerning the establishment of hospital and safety zones, see Chapter 11, section A. For practice concerning the evacuation of children, see Chapter 39, section B.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
244. Article 17 GC IV provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of wounded, sick, infirm, and aged persons . . . and maternity cases".

[244] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.
[245] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, 14 February 1997, §§ 1(a)(vi) and 3(xiii).
[246] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 7(2), IRRC, No. 282, p. 333.
[247] RPF, Press Release, Brussels, 28 February 1992, § 4.

245. Article 49, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Occupying Power may undertake total or partial evacuation of a given area if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand".
246. Article 17(1) AP II provides that "the displacement of the civilian population shall not be ordered for reasons related to the conflict unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand". Article 17 AP II was adopted by consensus.[248]
247. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(e)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "ordering the displacement of the civilian population for reasons related to the conflict, unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand" constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

Other Instruments
248. The 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provide that:

> Principle 6
> ...
> 2. The prohibition of arbitrary displacement includes displacement:
> ...
> (b) in situations of armed conflict, unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand;
> ...
>
> Principle 7
> 1. Prior to any decision requiring the displacement of persons, the authorities concerned shall ensure that all feasible alternatives are explored in order to avoid displacement altogether. Where no alternatives exist, all measures shall be taken to minimize displacement and its adverse effects.

249. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(e)(viii), "ordering the displacement of the civilian population for reasons related to the conflict, unless the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand", constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
250. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "the belligerents shall endeavour to conclude agreements for the removal from besieged areas of wounded, sick, elderly [and] maternity cases".[249] It further states that:

[248] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 144.
[249] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 1.014.

Nevertheless, the occupying Power may undertake total or partial evacuation of a given area if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand. Evacuations may involve the displacement of protected persons outside the bounds of the occupied territory only in case of material impossibility.[250]

251. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, "displacement of the population shall not be ordered unless their security or imperative military reasons so demand".[251]
252. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "belligerents shall endeavour to conclude local arrangements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of wounded, sick, infirm and aged persons . . . and maternity cases".[252]
253. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that "civilian populations must be evacuated to the non combat zones".[253]
254. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "if circumstances permit, the parties to a conflict must endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged areas of wounded, sick, infirm, and aged persons . . . and maternity cases".[254] It also states that in occupied territory, "permissible measures of population control include . . . evacuation".[255] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "it is forbidden to displace the civilian population for reasons connected with the conflict unless their security or imperative military reasons so demand".[256]
255. Croatia's LOAC Compendium allows "evacuation for security reasons", but "not outside the boundaries of the occupied territory".[257]
256. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic provides that "it is lawful to displace or resettle civilians if it is urgently required for military reasons, such as clearing a combat zone".[258]
257. France's LOAC Manual provides that "some evacuations can be imposed for reasons of security of the population or imperative military necessity. These evacuations must always be temporary and undertaken respecting the population's interests."[259]
258. Germany's Military Manual provides that "a temporary evacuation of certain areas shall be permissible if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand. An evacuation of persons to areas outside the bounds of the occupied territory shall be permitted only in case of emergency."[260]

[250] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008.
[251] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.08.
[252] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 926; see also Defence Force Manual (1994), § 735.
[253] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 67, § 242(3).
[254] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 6-4, § 35.
[255] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-5, § 40.
[256] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-5, § 41.
[257] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 62.
[258] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.
[259] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 65.
[260] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 544.

259. Hungary's Military Manual allows "evacuation for security reasons", but "not outside the boundaries of the occupied territory".[261]

260. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "it is obligatory to make an effort to evacuate citizens from military objectives to get them out of harm's way".[262]

261. Italy's IHL Manual provides that it is possible to undertake "total or partial evacuation of a given area of the occupied territory if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand".[263]

262. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "a local cease-fire may be arranged for the removal from the besieged or encircled areas of the wounded and sick, ... old persons and maternity cases. Evacuation can also be ordered for military reasons or for the security of the population."[264]

263. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "local agreements may be concluded for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[265]

264. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "the occupying power may undertake the evacuation of a given area if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand".[266] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "forced displacement ... is only authorized if the security of the civilians involved or imperative military reasons so demand".[267]

265. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that in occupied territory, "permissible measures of population control include ... evacuation".[268] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "it is forbidden to displace the civilian population for reasons connected with the conflict, unless their security or imperative military reasons so demand".[269] The manual refers to Article 17 GC IV, which requires that "belligerents endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of wounded, sick, infirm and aged persons ... and maternity cases".[270]

266. The Military Directive to Commanders of the Philippines provides that "emphasis should be placed on shelter or stay-put policy rather than on evacuation ... Official orders to move large groups of civilians normally will be given where serious combat action is expected to occur between troops and hostile forces."[271]

261 Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 98.
262 Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 57.
263 Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 48(8).
264 Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 5.
265 Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-SO, § B.
266 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-5, § 5.
267 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-7.
268 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1322(2).
269 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1823.
270 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 508(3).
271 Philippines, Military Directive to Commanders (1988), Article 3(c).

267. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the occupying Power can undertake a total or partial evacuation of a given occupied area if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand".[272] It adds that "evacuations may not involve the displacement of protected persons outside the bounds of the occupied territory except when for material reasons it is impossible to avoid such displacement".[273]

268. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "the only circumstances under which the occupying power has the right to order removal of the civilian population is when evacuation is required to protect civilians from military attack, or when civilian safety otherwise requires this".[274]

269. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "belligerents shall conclude special agreements in order to evacuate the wounded, sick, infirm, elderly . . . and maternity cases . . . from besieged areas".[275] It states, however, that "a total or partial evacuation of a given occupied area may be undertaken if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so demand . . . In principle, such transfers must only take place within the occupied territory."[276]

270. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> The Occupant . . . is permitted to undertake total or partial evacuation of a given area, but only if the security of the population or imperative military reasons so require. Except when any other course is materially impossible, such evacuation must not involve the transfer of protected persons outside the limits of occupied territory".[277]

271. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "a local cease-fire may be arranged for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of the wounded and sick, . . . old persons and maternity cases. Evacuations can also be ordered for military reasons or for the security of the population."[278]

272. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 17 and 49 GC IV.[279]

273. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Articles 17 and 49 GC IV.[280]

274. The US Soldier's Manual provides that "it is lawful to move or resettle civilians if it is urgently required for military reasons, such as clearing a combat zone".[281]

National Legislation

275. Argentina's Constitution, as well as a number of decrees issued between 1974 and 1977, authorise the President, in cases where a state of emergency

[272] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5), see also 2.4.a.(5).
[273] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5).
[274] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[275] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 33.
[276] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 176.
[277] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560.
[278] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, § 3.
[279] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 256 and 382.
[280] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 14-3 and 14-6(b).
[281] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 22.

has been declared, to arrest and transfer persons from one part of the territory to another, unless such persons choose instead to leave the country. In some cases, however, the option to leave the country may be suspended by invoking the need to safeguard essential State interests.[282]

276. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including ordering the "displacement of a civilian population" in non-international armed conflicts, if "the order is not justified by the security of the civilians involved or by imperative military necessity".[283]

277. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in international and non-international armed conflicts, "urgent measures to remove all the civilian persons from the besieged zone" must be taken.[284]

278. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[285]

279. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[286]

280. Cuba's National Defence Act, which governs civil defence activities for the protection of the civilian population, provides for the evacuation of the population to zones of safety.[287]

281. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 78(1) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 17(1) AP II, are punishable offences.[288]

282. The Population Evacuation Act of the Netherlands provides that in the event of war or threat of war, a Royal Decree may be issued entitling government ministers to order the evacuation of the population in order to ensure its safety, ensure the continued functioning of society or to enable the armed forces to perform their tasks.[289]

283. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(e)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[290]

[282] Argentina, Constitution (1994), Article 23; Decree on the State of Emergency (1974), Article 1; Decree on the State of Emergency (1975), Article 1-4; Decree on the State of Emergency (1976), Article 3; Law on the State of Emergency (1977), Article 10.
[283] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.89.
[284] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 15.
[285] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[286] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[287] Cuba, National Defence Act (1994), Article 116.
[288] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[289] Netherlands, Population Evacuation Act (1988), Article 2(1).
[290] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).

284. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[291]
285. Peru's Constitution authorises the restriction or suspension of, inter alia, freedom of movement during "states of emergency" (cases of disturbance of the peace or internal order, of disasters, or serious circumstances affecting the life of the nation), but banishment remains prohibited at all times. During "states of siege" (cases of invasion, external war, civil war or imminent danger), on the other hand, fundamental rights cannot be suspended.[292]
286. The Report on the Practice of Rwanda states that Rwanda's State of Emergency Decree provides that the authorities may order the evacuation of the civilian population for security reasons and fix the modalities of their evacuation.[293]
287. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(e)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[294]
288. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(e)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[295]
289. Uruguay's Constitution as amended provides that the President of the Republic may take prompt security measures in serious and unforeseen cases of foreign attack or internal disturbance, including the transfer of persons from one point of the territory to another, unless they choose to leave the country.[296]

National Case-law
290. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
291. In June 1992, the Presidency of the Republika Srpska of Bosnia and Herzegovina appealed that the civilian population be displaced only if imperative military or security reasons so demanded.[297]
292. It has been reported that during the communist insurgency in Malaysia, squatters of Chinese origin who farmed the land on the edge of the jungle were resettled to areas called "New Villages".[298] According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, this was done both for security objectives and for the

[291] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[292] Peru, Constitution (1993), Article 137.
[293] Report on the Practice of Rwanda, 1997, Chapter 1.7, referring to State of Emergency Decree (1959), Article 4.
[294] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[295] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[296] Uruguay, Constitution as amended (1996), Article 168(17).
[297] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Appeal by the Presidency, 7 June 1992, § 4.
[298] See, e.g., Dato' J. J. Raj, Jr., The War Years and After: A Personal Account of Historical Relevance, Pelanduk Publications, Kuala Lumpur, 1995, pp. 93–99.

protection of the squatters and has been recognised by officials as a form of displacement.[299]

293. Under Turkish emergency decrees dating from 1990, the Emergency Governor can order the temporary or permanent evacuation, change of place, regrouping of villages, grazing fields and residential areas for reasons of public security.[300]

294. In 1988, in the context of a non-international armed conflict, a governmental military commander stated that the displacement of the civilian population, which was one of the tasks of its forces, was carried out with a view to gathering a maximum of civilians under governmental control and reducing the number of persons outside government-controlled areas. In the same context in 1990, a government minister countered ICRC concerns about this policy by stating that it might be necessary to temporarily displace civilians during military operations, but that they must not under any circumstance be obliged to remain displaced subsequently.[301]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

295. In 1997, in his final report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements proposed a draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers for adoption by the UN Commission on Human Rights. Article 4(3) of the draft declaration provided that "the displacement of the population or parts thereof shall not be ordered, induced or carried out unless their safety or imperative military reasons so demand".[302]

Other International Organisations

296. In a resolution adopted in 1985 in response to mass transfers of the population in Ethiopia, the European Parliament invited the Commission, the Council and member States to ask Ethiopia to put a stop to the transfers for a minimum of six months in order to assess under international supervision the degree of necessity for such actions and to establish minimum humanitarian conditions for their conduct should they prove necessary.[303]

[299] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Interview with the Ministry of Home Affairs, Chapter 5.5.
[300] Turkey, Decrees No. 424 and 425, 10 May 1990.
[301] ICRC archive documents.
[302] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, Annex II, Draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers, Article 4(3).
[303] European Parliament, Resolution on mass transfers of population in Ethiopia and the expulsion of Médecins sans frontières, 13 December 1985, § 1.

International Conferences

297. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

298. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

299. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the occupying power may undertake total or partial evacuation of a given area if the security of the population or other imperative reasons so demand".[304]

300. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the protection of the civilian population against famine in situations of armed conflict in which it reminded "the authorities concerned and the armed forces under their command of their obligation to apply international humanitarian law, in particular . . . the prohibition on displacing civilians unless their security or imperative military reasons so demand".[305]

301. In 1993, in a letter to a representative of a separatist entity, the ICRC stated that "persons forcibly evacuated from a conflict zone where fighting is going on must be immediately released, once brought to safer areas."[306]

302. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC, emphasising the customary law nature of the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of most of the grave breaches of AP I, considered that ordering the displacement of the civilian population for reasons related to the conflict, unless the security of the civilians involved or military reasons so demanded, was a serious violation of international law applicable in non-international armed conflicts and a war crime.[307]

VI. Other Practice

303. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "the displacement of the

[304] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 834.
[305] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 13, § 1.
[306] ICRC archive document.
[307] ICRC, Working paper submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, 14 February 1997, § 1(a)(vi) and 3(xiii).

population or parts thereof shall not be ordered unless their safety or imperative security reasons so demand".[308]

304. In 1993, in a meeting with the ICRC, a representative of a separatist entity stated that the forced displacement of civilians from a specific town was only carried out after timely warning of the possibility to flee and was only justified by the concern to keep the civilians away from the combat zone.[309]

Ethnic cleansing

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

305. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

306. No practice was found.

National Legislation

307. No practice was found.

National Case-law

308. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

309. According to the Report on the Practice of France, the free return of refugees is a frequent preoccupation of French diplomacy. France often asks for this right be guaranteed and considers a contrary attitude to be "unacceptable" and implies a deliberate policy of "ethnic cleansing".[310]

310. In 1993, the German Chancellor stated that ethnic cleansing was deeply inhumane and fell within the notion of genocide.[311]

311. In 1992, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, Tunisia stated that it was essential to "put an end to the reprehensible practice of 'ethnic cleansing'".[312]

312. In 1992, during a debate in the UN General Assembly, the UK declared that "ethnic cleansing" in the former Yugoslavia was "inhuman and illegal"

[308] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 7(1), IRRC, No. 282, p. 333.
[309] ICRC archive document.
[310] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.5.
[311] Germany, Statement by the Chancellor, Helmut Kohl, Berlin, 24 May 1993, Bulletin, No. 45, Presse- und Informationsamt der Bundesregierung, Bonn, 29 May 1993, p. 488.
[312] Tunisia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3137, 16 November 1992, p. 66.

and added that "we reject as inhuman and illegal any expulsion of civilian communities from their homes in order to alter the ethnic character of the area".[313]

313. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UK stated that it was undeniable that "the abhorrent practice of 'ethnic cleansing' ... is a crime, and a most grievous one".[314]

314. In 1992, in a report submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV committed in the former Yugoslavia, the US stated that:

> The discrete incidents reported herein contain indications that they are part of a systematic campaign towards a single objective – the creation of an ethnically "pure" State. We have not identified "ethnic cleansing" ... as a separate category of violations. Nevertheless, the rubric of ethnic cleansing may unite events that appear unconnected and may therefore prove useful in identifying persons and institutions that may be responsible for violations of established international humanitarian law.[315]

315. In 1998, in reaction to the situation in Kosovo, but also referring to the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, the US Congress adopted a resolution by unanimous consent stating that:

> Whereas "ethnic cleansing" has been carried out in the former Yugoslavia in such a consistent and systematic way that it had to be directed by the senior political leadership in Serbia, and Slobodan Milošević has held such power within Serbia that he is responsible for the conception and direction of this policy;
>
> it is the sense of Congress that ...
>
> the United States should publicly declare that it considers that there is reason to believe that Slobodan Milošević, President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), has committed war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide.[316]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

316. In various resolutions adopted between 1992 and 1994 in connection with the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council condemned the practice of "ethnic cleansing" as a violation of IHL and reaffirmed that "those [313] UK, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/46/PV.89, 24 August 1992, p. 36.

[314] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3428, 23 September 1994, pp. 32–33.
[315] US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Second Submission), annexed to Letter dated 22 September 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24583, 23 September 1992, Annex, § 4.
[316] US, Congress, Resolution 105 on the Sense of Congress Regarding the Culpability of Slobodan Milošević, 17 July 1998, Congressional Record (Senate), pp. S8456–S8458.

that commit or order the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[317]

317. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council expressed its grave alarm at "continuing reports of widespread violations of international humanitarian law . . . including reports of mass killings and the continuance of the practice of ethnic cleansing".[318]

318. In 1994, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council stated that it deplored "recent acts of violence and terror including ethnic cleansing particularly in Prijedor and Banja Luka" and reaffirmed that "the International Tribunal was established . . . for the purpose of investigating crimes of this sort, and trying persons accused of committing such crimes".[319]

319. In two resolutions adopted in 1992 in the context of the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly stated that it considered that the practice of "ethnic cleansing" constituted a grave and serious violation of IHL and reiterated "its conviction that those who commit or order the commission of acts of 'ethnic cleansing' are individually responsible and should be brought to justice".[320]

320. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN General Assembly stated that it considered that "ethnic cleansing" was a form of genocide.[321]

321. In two resolutions adopted in 1993 and 1994, the UN General Assembly addressed the issue of "ethnic cleansing" in the former Yugoslavia. It condemned violations of IHL:

> most of which are committed in connection with "ethnic cleansing" and which include killings, torture, beatings, arbitrary searches, . . . disappearances, destruction of houses and other acts or threats of violence aimed at forcing individuals to leave their homes, as well as violations of human rights in connection with detention.[322]

322. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly expressed its outrage at "ethnic cleansing".[323]

323. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights referred to the perpetrators of ethnic cleansing as "war criminals".[324]

[317] UN Security Council, Res. 771, 13 August 1992, § 2; Res. 787, 16 November 1992, § 7; Res. 819, 16 April 1993, § 7; Res. 820, 17 April 1993, § 6; Res. 941, 23 September 1994, § 2.
[318] UN Security Council, Res. 808, 22 February 1993, preamble.
[319] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/14, 6 April 1994.
[320] UN General Assembly, Res. 46/242, 25 August 1992, § 8; Res. 47/80, 16 December 1992, § 4.
[321] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/121, 18 December 1992, preamble.
[322] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/153, 20 December 1993, § 5; Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 6.
[323] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, §§ 2 and 15.
[324] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 1.

324. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned in the strongest terms:

> all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law during the conflict . . . in particular, massive and systematic violations, including, inter alia, systematic ethnic cleansing . . . [and] illegal and forcible evictions and other acts of violence aimed at forcing individuals from their homes.

It reaffirmed that "all persons who plan, commit or authorize such acts will be held personally responsible and accountable".[325]

325. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights condemned "ethnic cleansing" and stated that this practice had generated displacement on a massive scale.[326]

326. In 1993, in his comment on Article 5 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, which defines the crimes against humanity over which the Tribunal has jurisdiction, the UN Secretary-General noted that "in the conflict in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, such inhumane acts have taken the form of so-called 'ethnic cleansing' and widespread and systematic rape and other forms of sexual assault, including enforced prostitution".[327]

327. In his final report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights in 1997, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements stated that:

> 65. Acts such as ethnic cleansing, dispersal of minorities or ethnic populations from their homeland within or outside the State, and the implantation of settlers are unlawful, and engage State responsibility and the criminal responsibility of individuals.[328]

The Special Rapporteur proposed a draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers for adoption by the UN Commission on Human Rights which provided that:

> Article 6
> Practices and policies having the purpose or effect of changing the demographic composition of the region in which a national, ethnic, linguistic, or other minority or an indigenous population is residing, whether by deportation, displacement, and/or the implantation of settlers, or a combination thereof, are unlawful.[329]

[325] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 1.
[326] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/17, 20 August 1993, §§ 7–8.
[327] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to paragraph 2 of Security Council resolution 808 (1993), UN Doc. S/25704, 3 May 1993, § 48.
[328] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, § 65.
[329] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN

Other International Organisations

328. In 1993, in a report on the situation of refugees and displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia, the Rapporteur of the Council of Europe stated that "ethnic cleansing" was a crime against humanity and that those committing those crimes should be searched for and brought to justice.[330]

329. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe declared "its profound consternation at the massive and flagrant violation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and at the perpetration of crimes against humanity such as . . . 'ethnic cleansing' and the deportation of entire populations".[331]

330. In the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council stated that it followed with grave concern and deep regret the degradation of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the "carrying out of the worst crimes of racial extermination".[332]

331. In the Final Communiqué of its 14th Session in 1993, the GCC Supreme Council noted that "the international economic sanctions imposed on the Serbs have had no noticeable effect in . . . halting their systematic practices of ethnic cleansing".[333]

332. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1992, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to call upon the Serbian forces to put an immediate end to all activities aimed at changing the demographic structure of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina".[334]

333. In 1992, the OIC Ministers of Foreign Affairs stigmatised "with force" massive violations of IHL in Bosnia and Herzegovina and considered that the policy of "ethnic cleansing" and forced deportation of Muslims and Croats constituted a genocide and a crime against humanity.[335]

International Conferences

334. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed "its dismay at massive violations of human rights especially . . . 'ethnic cleansing' . . . creating mass exodus

Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, Annex II, Draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers, Article 6.

330 Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Report on the situation of refugees and displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia, Doc. 6740, 19 January 1993, § 19.

331 Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 994, 3 February 1993, § 1.

332 GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, p. 8.

333 GCC, Supreme Council, 14th Session, Riyadh, 20–22 December 1993, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 29 December 1993 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/49/56-S/26926, 30 December 1993, p. 6.

334 League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5231, 13 September 1992, § 5.

335 OIC, Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Sixth Extraordinary Session, Res. 1/6-EX, § 5, 1–2 December 1992.

of refugees and displaced persons". It reiterated "the call that perpetrators of such crimes be punished and such practices immediately stopped".[336]

335. In the Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants declared, inter alia, that they "refuse to accept that the civilian populations . . . are victims of the odious practise of 'ethnic cleansing'".[337]

336. The Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries in 1995 reiterated that those who committed or ordered to be committed practices of "ethnic cleansing" in the former Yugoslavia were personally responsible and that "the international community should make every effort to bring them to justice".[338]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

337. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

338. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

339. No practice was found.

B. Transfer of Own Civilian Population into Occupied Territory

Note: For practice concerning ethnic cleansing, see section A of this chapter.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

340. Article 49, sixth paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Occupying Power shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies".

341. Article 85(4)(a) AP I provides that "the transfer by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies" is a grave breach of the Protocol. Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[339]

[336] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(28).
[337] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § I (3).
[338] Eleventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of the Non-Aligned Countries, Cartagena, 1995, Basic Documents, p. 46.
[339] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

342. Under Article 8(2)(b)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "unlawful deportation or transfer, in particular the transfer, directly or indirectly, by the occupying power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

Other Instruments

343. Article 22(2)(b) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind considers "the establishment of settlers in an occupied territory and changes to the demographic composition of an occupied territory" as an "exceptionally serious war crime".

344. Under Article 20(c)(i) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the "transfer by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies" is a war crime.

345. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(viii), "the transfer, directly or indirectly, by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

346. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "the occupying power shall not evacuate or transfer a part of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies".[340]

347. Under Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989), "the transfer by the occupying power of a part of its own civilian population to the territory it occupies" is a grave breach.[341]

348. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the occupying power is forbidden to move parts of its own population into the occupied territory with the intention of changing the nature of the population or annexing or colonising the area".[342]

349. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the occupying power is forbidden to move parts of its own population into the occupied territory, with the intention of changing the nature of the population or annexing or colonizing the area".[343] It further states that "transfer by an occupying power of parts of its own civilian population into occupied territory" is a war crime.[344]

350. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that it is prohibited "to transfer one's own civilians into the occupied territory".[345]

[340] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008.
[341] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[342] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1217.
[343] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-4, § 33.
[344] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-3, § 17.
[345] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 62.

351. Hungary's Military Manual states that it is prohibited "to transfer one's own civilians into the occupied territory".[346]
352. Italy's IHL Manual provides that the occupying State is prohibited "to deport or transfer a part of its own population into the occupied territory".[347]
353. The Military Manual of the Netherlands considers that "the transfer by the occupying power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies" is a grave breach of AP I.[348]
354. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the Occupying Power is forbidden to move parts of its own population into the occupied territory with the intention of changing the nature of the population or annexing or colonizing the area".[349] The manual considers such practice to be a grave breach.[350]
355. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the occupying Power can neither evacuate nor transfer a part of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies".[351]
356. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that:

> The occupying power may find it in its own interests to move sections of its own civilian population into the occupied area. Such movements of population can have very far-reaching negative consequences for the occupied population. It is important to stress that, according to the GC IV (Article 49), any movement of the occupying power's own civilian population is prohibited.[352]

357. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that grave breaches of AP I include "the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into occupied territory".[353]
358. The UK Military Manual provides that "the Occupant is not permitted to deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population to occupied territory".[354]
359. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[355]

National Legislation
360. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice considers the transfer by an occupying power or authority of parts of its own civilian population into occupied territory to be an offence.[356]

[346] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 98.
[347] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 48(8).
[348] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-6.
[349] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1319(1).
[350] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1703(4).
[351] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5).
[352] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, pp. 122–123.
[353] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 193(2).
[354] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560.
[355] US, Field Manual (1956), § 382.
[356] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(5) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).

361. Under Armenia's Penal Code, the "transfer by the occupying power of part of its own population in the occupied territories", during an armed conflict, constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind. [357]

362. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach . . . of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[358]

363. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "the transfer, directly or indirectly, of parts of the civilian population of the perpetrator's own country into territory that the country occupies" in international armed conflicts.[359]

364. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "the following actions are prohibited to be carried out against civilian persons . . . 6) to evacuate its population to the occupied territory".[360]

365. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that the "transfer of any part of one's own civilian population to the occupied territory" is a war crime.[361]

366. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[362]

367. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that "the transfer of any part of one's own civilian population into the occupied territory" is a war crime.[363]

368. Under Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended, "the transfer by the occupying power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies, in the case of an international armed conflict, or of the occupying authority, in the case of a non-international armed conflict," is criminalised as a grave breach.[364]

369. Under the Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, "whoever in violation of rules of international law applicable in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, orders or carries out as an occupier the resettlement of parts of his/her civilian population into the occupied territory" commits a war crime.[365] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[366]

357 Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.4(1).
358 Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
359 Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.45(a)(1).
360 Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 17.
361 Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 116.0.14.
362 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
363 Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 136(14).
364 Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(17).
365 Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(3).
366 Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 433(3).

370. Under Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, "transfer, direct or indirect, by the occupying power of parts of its own civilian population, into the territory it occupies" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflict.[367]

371. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of AP I] . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[368]

372. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[369]

373. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[370]

374. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach" of AP I.[371]

375. Croatia's Criminal Code provides, under the heading "War crimes against civilian population", that "whoever, as part of an occupying power, in violation of the rules of international law, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, orders or performs the transfer of parts of the civilian population of the occupying force to the occupied territory shall be punished".[372]

376. Cyprus's AP I Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach of the provisions of the Protocol, or takes part or assists or incites another person in the commission of such a breach".[373]

377. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended punishes "a person who in war time . . . settles the occupied territory with the population of his own country".[374]

378. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, "repatriation or forced displacement of the civilian population of one's own territory", in both internal and international armed conflicts, is punishable.[375]

[367] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(B)(h).
[368] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[369] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[370] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[371] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[372] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 158(3).
[373] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1).
[374] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(2)(d).
[375] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Repatriación o desplazamiento forzado".

379. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code punishes anyone, who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "transfers, as a member of an Occupying Power, parts of its own civilian population into the occupied territory".[376]
380. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, "the transfer by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies, or deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory" in an international or non-international armed conflict is a crime.[377]
381. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of AP I are punishable offences.[378] In addition, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 49 GC IV, is also a punishable offence.[379]
382. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code considers "the transfer, by the occupying Power, of a part of the civilian population to the territories occupied by this Power" as a war crime.[380]
383. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, "the transfer, by the occupying Power, of a part of the civilian population to the territories occupied by this Power" is a war crime.[381]
384. Mali's Penal Code provides that "the transfer, direct or indirect, by the occupying Power, of a part of its own civilian population, into the territories it occupies" constitutes a crime in international armed conflicts.[382]
385. Moldova's Penal Code punishes "grave breaches of international humanitarian law committed during international and non-international armed conflicts".[383]
386. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit, in an international armed conflict, "the following acts if committed intentionally and in violation of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol (I): . . . the transfer by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies".[384] Furthermore, "the transfer, directly or indirectly, by the occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies" is also a crime, when committed in an international armed conflict.[385]
387. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures

[376] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(3)(2).
[377] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(1)(g).
[378] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[379] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[380] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(15).
[381] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(15).
[382] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(i)(8).
[383] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 391.
[384] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(2)(d)(i).
[385] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(5)(d).

the commission by another person of, a grave breach . . . of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[386]

388. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(b)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[387]

389. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides that "whoever, during an international or internal armed conflict, orders repatriation or forced displacement of the civilian population of its own territory, for reasons related to the armed conflict," commits a punishable offence.[388]

390. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, "the transfer into occupied territories of a part of the civilian population of the occupying power, in the case of an international armed conflict, or of the occupying authority, in the case of a non-international armed conflict," constitutes a war crime.[389]

391. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[390]

392. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended punishes "a person who in war time . . . settles the occupied territory with the population of his own country".[391]

393. Slovenia's Penal Code provides, under the heading "War Crimes against the Civil Population", that "whoever, in violation of the principles of international law, orders or implements, as occupier in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, deportation of groups of civilians to the occupied territory" shall be punished.[392]

394. Spain's Penal Code punishes anyone who transfers and settles in occupied territory any part of the population of the occupying power, in order to remain there permanently.[393]

395. Tajikistan's Criminal Code punishes "the transfer by the occupying power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies".[394]

396. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[395]

397. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom,

[386] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[387] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[388] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 455.
[389] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(17).
[390] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[391] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263 (a)(2)(d).
[392] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(3).
[393] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611(5).
[394] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(1).
[395] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).

commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of . . . [AP I]".[396]

398. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(viii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[397]

399. The Criminal Code of the SFRY (FRY) provides, under the heading "War crimes against civilian population", that "whoever in violation of the rules of international law, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, . . . orders the transfer of a part of the civilian population into the occupied territory . . . shall be punished".[398]

400. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of . . . [AP I]".[399]

National Case-law

401. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

402. The Report on the Practice of Egypt states that:

Egypt has a firm position according to which displacement and all measures designed to change the demographic composition of the occupied territories are null and void. Such measures, if occurred, must be rescinded as soon as possible, particularly after the signature of the Treaty of peace . . . It is worth remembering that the aforementioned position adopted by Egypt had also been put forward with regard to Additional Protocol II. Additionally, Egypt condemned forcible transfers practised by Israel in 1967 vis-à-vis civilians.[400]

403. The Report on the Practice of France states that:

France is clearly opposed to the policy of fait accompli of the settlement colonies which modify the demographic structure of the territory. It is also opposed to expulsion measures directed at the inhabitants of the occupied territories which are equally contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention. In relation to these Israeli measures, the French representatives even talk of "banishment" and "exceptional gravity".[401]

404. Following the adoption by the UN Diplomatic Conference of the 1998 ICC Statute, Israel gave the following explanation of its vote:

Israel has reluctantly cast a negative vote. It fails to comprehend why it has been considered necessary to insert into the list of the most heinous and grievous war crimes the action of transferring population into occupied territory. The exigencies

[396] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[397] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[398] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142(3).
[399] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).
[400] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 5.5.
[401] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.7.

of lack of time and intense political and public pressure have obliged the Conference to by-pass very basic sovereign prerogatives to which we are entitled in drafting international conventions, in favour of finishing the work and achieving a Statute on a come-what-may basis. We continue to hope that the Court will indeed serve the lofty objectives for the attainment of which it is being established.[402]

405. In a series of letters to the UN Secretary-General between August and October 1990, Kuwait complained about the following actions carried out by Iraqi authorities in occupied Kuwait:

- Iraqi forces arrested Kuwaiti nationals and others, and transferred them to Bagdad.[403]
- Transportation to Kuwait of large numbers or Iraqi families for the purposes of settlement and alteration of the country's demographic structure.[404]
- In its efforts to change the demographic structure of Kuwait and erase the very identity of the country, Iraqi occupation forces have embarked on the application and execution of a novel practice of: depopulating Kuwait from its own inhabitants, confiscating identification documents, and settling Iraqi families in Kuwaiti homes.[405]
- The invading Iraqi authorities have stepped up their campaign to change the demographic character of Kuwait by expanding their operation to expel Kuwaiti nationals from their homes in various areas of Kuwait and to replace them by Iraqi families brought to Kuwait from Iraq.[406]

Kuwait qualified these acts as crimes.[407]

406. In 1980, the US Secretary of State stated that "US policy toward the establishment of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories is unequivocal and has long been a matter of public record. We consider it to be contrary to international law and an impediment to the successful conclusion of the Middle East peace process."[408] In 1991, the Secretary of State stated that Israeli settlement activity "does violate the United States policy".[409]

407. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense declared that it regarded the transfer of the Iraqi population into occupied Kuwait in violation of Article 49 GC IV as a war crime.[410]

[402] Israel, Explanation of vote, UN Press Release L/2889, 20 July 1998, § 4.
[403] Kuwait, Letter dated 7 August 1990 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21452, 7 August 1990.
[404] Kuwait, Letter dated 2 September 1990 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21694, 2 September 1990.
[405] Kuwait, Letter dated 15 September 1990 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21772, 15 September 1990.
[406] Kuwait, Letter dated 4 October 1990 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21843, 4 October 1990.
[407] Kuwait, Letter dated 4 October 1990 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21843, 4 October 1990.
[408] US, Statement of the Secretary of State on behalf of the Carter Administration, 21 March 1980.
[409] US, Testimony of the Secretary of State before the United States House of Representatives Committee on Appropriations, 102nd Congress, 22 May 1991.
[410] US, Department of Defense, Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 635.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

408. In several resolutions adopted in 1979 and 1980, the UN Security Council stated that the measures taken by Israel to alter the demographic composition of the occupied territories, and in particular the establishment of settlers, were contrary to GC IV and constituted an obstacle to peace.[411]

409. In a resolution adopted in 1980 on Israeli settlement policies in the occupied territories, the UN Security Council determined that "all measures taken by Israel to change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, or any part thereof have no legal validity" and that:

> Israel's policy and practices of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constitute a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and also constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.[412]

410. In a resolution on Iraq and Kuwait adopted in 1990, the UN Security Council condemned "the destruction of Kuwaiti demographic records, the forced departure of Kuwaitis, the relocation of population in Kuwait".[413] In another resolution a month later, the Security Council condemned "the attempts by Iraq to alter the demographic composition of the population of Kuwait".[414]

411. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council called upon all parties to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia "to ensure that forcible expulsions of persons from the areas where they live and any attempt to change the ethnic composition of the population, anywhere in the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, cease immediately".[415]

412. In 1968, the UN General Assembly established a Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Palestinian People and Other Arabs of the Occupied Territories.[416] Following reports submitted by this Committee, the General Assembly adopted numerous resolutions expressing concern at the Israeli settlement activities in the occupied territories. For example, in a resolution adopted in 1981, the General Assembly strongly condemned the "establishment of new Israeli settlements and expansion of the existing settlements on private and public Arab lands, and transfer of an 411 UN Security Council, Res. 446, 22 March 1979, § 4; Res. 452, 20 July 1979, §§ 8–9; Res. 476, 30 June 1980, § 13.

412 UN Security Council, Res. 465, 1 March 1980, § 5.
413 UN Security Council, Res. 674, 29 October 1990, preamble.
414 UN Security Council, Res. 677, 28 November 1990, § 1.
415 UN Security Council, Res. 752, 15 May 1992, § 6.
416 UN General Assembly, Res. 2443 (XXIII), 19 December 1968, § 1.

alien population thereto".[417] This condemnation was reiterated in subsequent resolutions adopted in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.[418]

413. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan, the UN General Assembly stated that it:

1. reaffirms that the Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and the Occupied Syrian Golan are illegal and an obstacle to peace and economic and social development;
2. Calls upon Israel . . . to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the fourth Geneva Convention, in particular article 49;
3. Demands complete cessation of the construction of the new settlement at Jebel Abu-Ghneim and all Israeli settlement activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and the Occupied Syrian Golan.[419]

414. The UN Commission on Human Rights has adopted numerous resolutions expressing concern at the Israeli settlement activities in the occupied territories. For instance, in 2001, the Commission expressed:

its grave concern at the Israeli settlement activities in the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, such as the construction of new settlements and the expansion of existing ones, the expropriation of land, the biased administration of water resources, the construction of roads and house demolitions, all of which violate human rights and international humanitarian law, besides being major obstacles to peace.

It urged "the Government of Israel to implement the relevant United Nations resolutions as well as the recommendation of the Commission regarding the Israeli settlements".[420]

415. In his final report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights in 1997, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements stated that "the range of human rights violated by population transfer and the implantation of settlers place this phenomenon in the category of systematic or mass violations of human rights". He further stated that:

64. As affirmed in the Special Rapporteur's progress report, international law prohibits the transfer of persons, including the implantation of settlers, as a general principle, and the governing principle is that any displacement of populations must have the consent of the population involved. Accordingly, the criteria governing forcible transfer rest on the absence of consent and also include the use of force, coercive measures, and inducement to flee.

[417] UN General Assembly, Res. 36/147 C, 16 December 1981, § 7(b).
[418] UN General Assembly, Res. 37/88 C, 9 December 1982, § 7(c); Res. 38/79 D, 15 December 1983, § 7(c); Res. 39/95 D, 14 December 1984, § 7(d); Res. 40/161 D, 16 December 1985, § 8(d).
[419] UN General Assembly, Res. 54/78, 22 February 2000, §§ 1–3.
[420] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/7, 18 April 2001, § 6.

65. Acts such as ethnic cleansing, dispersal of minorities or ethnic populations from their homeland within or outside the State, and the implantation of settlers are unlawful, and engage State responsibility and the criminal responsibility of individuals.[421]

The Special Rapporteur recommended that:

70. Consideration must be given by the Sub-Commission to the possibility of preparing an international instrument to set or codify international standards which are applicable to the situation of population transfer and the implantation of settlers. Such an instrument should: provide for an express reaffirmation of the unlawfulness of population transfer and the implantation of settlers; define State responsibility in the matter of unlawful population transfer, including the implantation of settlers; [and] provide for the criminal responsibility of individuals involved in population transfer, whether such individuals be private or officials of the State.[422]

The Special Rapporteur proposed a draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers for adoption by the UN Commission on Human Rights which provided that:

Article 5
The settlement, by transfer or inducement, by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies or by the Power exercising de facto control over a disputed territory is unlawful.
Article 6
Practices and policies having the purpose or effect of changing the demographic composition of the region in which a national, ethnic, linguistic, or other minority or an indigenous population is residing, whether by deportation, displacement, and/or the implantation of settlers, or a combination thereof, are unlawful.
...
Article 9
The above practices of population transfer constitute internationally wrongful acts giving rise to State responsibility and to individual criminal liability.[423]

Other International Organisations

416. In the Final Communiqué of its 12th Session in 1991, the GCC Supreme Council expressed "its deep concern and indignation at the fact that the Israeli

[421] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, §§ 16, 64–65.
[422] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, § 70.
[423] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, Annex II, Draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers, Articles 5, 6 and 9.

occupation authorities are persisting in their policies aimed at establishing illegal settlements in the occupied Arab territories".[424]

417. In the Final Communiqué its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council reaffirmed its conviction that "the construction of settlements . . . represent a total contravention of all the Charters, Laws and Conventions of the International Community of Nations".[425]

418. In a resolution adopted in 1997 on the occupied Arab Syrian Golan Heights, the Council of the League of Arab States decided:

> to adhere to resolutions of international legitimacy which prohibit the recognition or acceptance of any situation induced by any activities related to the establishment of Israeli settlements in the occupied Arab territories as an illegal measure that does not give any right or create any obligation, and to consider the establishment of settlements and the arrival of their settlers a violation of the Geneva Conventions and the Madrid framework, and an obstacle to the Peace Process which requires the end of all Israeli colonizing activities in the occupied Syrian Golan and Arab territories.[426]

International Conferences

419. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution in which it reaffirmed that "the settlements in the occupied territories are incompatible with articles 27 and 49 of the Fourth Geneva Convention".[427]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

420. Count 3(J) (War Crimes) of the indictment in the case of the Major War Criminals before the IMT Nuremberg in 1945 provided, under the heading "Germanization of Occupied Territories", that:

> In certain territories purportedly annexed to Germany the defendants methodically and pursuant to plan endeavored to assimilate those territories politically, culturally, socially and economically into the German Reich. The defendants endeavored to obliterate the former national character of these territories. In pursuance of these plans and endeavors, the defendants forcibly deported inhabitants who were predominantly non-German and introduced thousands of German colonists.
>
> This plan included economic domination, physical conquest, installation of puppet Governments, purported de jure annexation and enforced conscription into the German Armed Forces.
>
> This was carried out in most of the occupied countries including: Norway, France . . . Luxembourg, the Soviet Union, Denmark, Belgium, and Holland.

[424] GCC, Supreme Council, 12th Session, Kuwait, 23–25 December 1991, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 30 December 1992 from Kuwait to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/46/833-S/23336, 30 December 1991, p. 5.

[425] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, p. 6.

[426] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5633, 31 March 1997, § 6.

[427] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. III, § 5.

...
These acts violated Articles 43, 46, 55, and 56 of the Hague Regulations, 1907, the laws and customs of war, the general principles of criminal law as derived from criminal laws of all civilized nations, the internal penal laws of the countries in which such crimes were committed and Article 6(b) of the Charter [jurisdiction over war crimes].[428]

421. In its judgement in the case of the Major War Criminals in 1946, the IMT Nuremberg stated that:

Hitler discussed with Rosenberg, Göring, Keitel, and others his plan for the exploitation of the Soviet population and territory, which included among other things the evacuation of the inhabitants of the Crimea and its settlement by Germans.
A somewhat similar fate was planned for Czechoslovakia by the Defendant Von Neurath, in August 1940; the intellegentsia were to be "expelled", but the rest of the population was to be Germanized rather than expelled or exterminated, since there was a shortage of Germans to replace them.

The Tribunal concluded that "the Leadership Corps [of the Nazi Party] was used for purposes which were criminal under the Charter and involved the Germanization of incorporated territory". The Tribunal held the accused Rosenberg and Von Neurath responsible for their role in the policies of "Germanization".[429]

422. In its report in 2001, the Sharm el-Sheikh Fact-Finding Committee stated, with respect to the Israeli settlements in occupied territories, that:

During the half-century of its existence, Israel has had the strong support of the United States. In international forums, the US has at times cast the only vote on Israel's behalf. Yet, even in such a close relationship there are some differences. Prominent among those differences is the US Government's long-standing opposition to the [Government of Israel's] policies and practices regarding settlements ... [This] policy ... has been, in essence, the policy of every American administration over the past quarter century.
Most other countries, including Turkey, Norway, and those of the European Union, have also been critical of Israeli settlement activity, in accordance with their views that such settlements are illegal under international law and not in compliance with previous agreements.[430]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

423. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the occupying power may not deport or transfer part of its own civilian population into the territories it

[428] IMT Nuremberg, Case of the Major War Criminals, Indictment, 20 November 1945, Count 3(J), pp. 63–65.
[429] IMT Nuremberg, Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 1 October 1946, pp. 238, 261, 295 and 335.
[430] Sharm el-Sheikh Fact-Finding Committee created pursuant to the Sharm el-Sheikh summit of 16–17 October 2000, Report, 30 April 2001, pp. 15–16.

occupies" and that such a transfer would constitute a grave breach of the law of war.[431]

424. In 1996, in a meeting with representatives of a State, the ICRC mentioned the prohibition contained in Article 49 GC IV. The representatives denied sending nationals to "these territories" and said they would "read the fourth Geneva Convention".[432]

425. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC, emphasising the customary law nature of most grave breaches of AP I, listed "the transfer by an occupying power of part of its own population into the territory it occupies" as a war crime to be subject to the jurisdiction of the ICC.[433]

VI. Other Practice

426. In 2000, the Official Gazette of the Permanent Representation of the Republic of Nagorno-Karabakh in Armenia reported that following the memorandum between the governments of Armenia and the Republic of Nagorno-Karabakh, it was decided to increase the number of inhabitants in the Republic of Nagorno-Karabakh to 300,000.[434]

C. Treatment of Displaced Persons

Provision of basic necessities

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

427. Article 49, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Occupying Power undertaking . . . transfers or evacuations shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, that proper accommodation is provided to receive the protected persons, that the removals are effected in satisfactory conditions of hygiene, health . . . and nutrition".

428. Article 17(1) AP II provides that "should . . . displacements have to be carried out, all possible measures shall be taken in order that the civilian population may be received under satisfactory conditions of shelter, hygiene, health . . . and nutrition". Article 17 AP II was adopted by consensus.[435]

[431] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 831 and 776(g).
[432] ICRC archive document.
[433] ICRC, Working paper submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, 14 February 1997, § 1(I).
[434] Nagorno-Karabakh, Permanent Representation in Armenia, Official Gazette, No. 16, 27 September 2000.
[435] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 144.

Other Instruments

429. Paragraph III of Protocol III of the 1992 General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, the government of Mozambique and RENAMO were required to cooperate in order to organise the necessary assistance to displaced persons.

430. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "should . . . displacement [of the civilian population] have to be carried out, all possible measures shall be taken in order that the civilian population may be received under satisfactory conditions of shelter, hygiene, health . . . and nutrition".

431. Section A of the 1995 Agreement on Ground Rules for Operation Lifeline Sudan states that the fundamental objective of the cooperation is the provision of humanitarian assistance to populations in need throughout the territory of Sudan.

432. Principle 7(2) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that "the authorities undertaking . . . displacements shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, that proper accommodation is provided to the displaced persons [and] that . . . displacements are effected in satisfactory conditions of . . . nutrition, health and hygiene". Principle 18 further stipulates that:

1. All internally displaced persons have the right to an adequate standard of living.
2. At the minimum, regardless of the circumstances, and without discrimination, competent authorities shall provide internally displaced persons with and ensure safe access to:
   (a) essential food and potable water;
   (b) basic shelter and housing;
   (c) appropriate clothing; and
   (d) essential medical services and sanitation.

433. Principle 25 of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement specifies that national authorities have the primary duty and responsibility to provide protection and humanitarian assistance to IDPs within their jurisdiction. IDPs, therefore, have a corresponding right to request and receive protection and humanitarian assistance from State authorities.

434. Paragraph 5 of the 1999 Agreement on the Protection and Provision of Humanitarian Assistance in Sudan provides that "where communities are to be relocated . . . [they] will be relocated to suitable sites with basic services and proper accommodation in place prior to relocation. Communities will only be relocated in a manner that preserves the right to life, dignity, liberty and security."

435. In paragraph 70 of the 2000 Cairo Plan of Action, African and EU heads of State and government agreed "to continue to provide assistance to refugees and displaced persons".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

436. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[436]

437. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, where civilians have been displaced for reasons of security or military necessity, "all possible measures are to be taken in order that [the displacement] is effected in satisfactory conditions".[437]

438. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, "if [civilians] do have to be displaced, arrangements must be made, if possible, for their shelter, hygiene, health . . . and nutrition".[438]

439. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that civilian persons evacuated for security reasons shall receive "proper accommodation and proper conditions of health, hygiene . . . and nutrition".[439]

440. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic provides that:

> Whenever the military situation necessitates moving or evacuating civilians, remember to use common sense. Treat civilian refugees as you would want your family to be treated under similar circumstances. Unless emergency conditions exist, as an unexpected attack, give them enough time to collect and move their goods and property.[440]

441. Germany's Military Manual provides that "if an evacuation is necessary, the occupying power shall provide for sufficient accommodation and supply".[441]

442. Hungary's Military Manual provides that civilian persons evacuated for security reasons shall receive "proper accommodation and proper conditions of health, hygiene . . . and nutrition".[442]

443. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, "if [civilians] do have to be displaced, arrangements must be made, if possible, for their shelter, hygiene, health . . . and nutrition".[443]

444. Spain's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[444]

445. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that the parties "shall ensure that proper accommodation is provided to receive the transferred persons and that displacements are effected in satisfactory conditions of hygiene, health . . . and nutrition".[445]

[436] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008.
[437] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.08.
[438] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-5, § 41.
[439] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 62.
[440] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.
[441] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 545.
[442] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 98.
[443] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1823.
[444] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5).
[445] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 176(2).

446. The UK Military Manual provides that "to the greatest practicable extent, removals of civil inhabitants must take place under satisfactory conditions of hygiene, health . . . and nutrition . . . and the transferred or evacuated protected persons must be provided with proper accommodation".[446]
447. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[447]

National Legislation
448. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[448]
449. Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons provides that once the displacement has occurred, the government shall take immediate action to guarantee emergency humanitarian aid with the aim of rescuing, assisting and protecting the displaced population and providing for its nutritional needs, personal hygiene, kitchen tools, medical and psychological care, emergency transport and temporary accommodation in humane conditions.[449]
450. Croatia's Law on Displaced Persons and Directive on Displaced Persons provide that Croatia should ensure that displaced persons have the necessary accommodation, food, medical and financial assistance and assistance in social integration, as well as any other assistance necessary to satisfy their basic needs.[450]
451. Georgia's Law on Displaced Persons provides a certain number of legal, economic and social guarantees for persons forced to leave their homes and displaced following threats to their lives, health or freedom on account of an aggression by another country, an internal conflict or massive violations of human rights. These guarantees include the right to free medical assistance and free provision of medicines.[451]
452. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 49 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 17(1) AP II, are punishable offences.[452]
453. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[453]

[446] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560. [447] US, Field Manual (1956), § 382.
[448] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[449] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Article 15.
[450] Croatia, Law on Displaced Persons (1993), Article 2; Directive on Displaced Persons (1991), Articles 2 and 13.
[451] Georgia, Law on Displaced Persons (1996), Article 5.
[452] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[453] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

National Case-law

454. In 1996, in a case concerning the constitutionality of a decree which had ordered measures for the protection of the civilian population in military operations (Decree 2027 of 21 November 1995), Colombia's Constitutional Court held that displaced persons had the right to receive humanitarian assistance and to be accorded protection by the State.[454]

455. In the Krupp case in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg adopted the statement by Judge Phillips in his concurring opinion of 1947 in the Milch case according to which:

> The third . . . condition under which deportation becomes illegal occurs whenever generally recognized standards of decency and humanity are disregarded. This flows from the established principle of law that an otherwise permissible act becomes a crime when carried out in a criminal manner. A close study of the pertinent parts of Control Council Law No. 10 strengthens the conclusions of the foregoing statements that deportation is criminal whenever there is no title in the deporting authority or whenever the purpose of the deportation is illegal or whenever the deportation is characterized by inhumane or illegal methods.[455]

Other National Practice

456. In 1992, the Presidency of the Republika Srpska of Bosnia and Herzegovina made an urgent appeal "to give . . . all possible aid to displaced persons".[456]

457. According to the Report on the Practice of Colombia, displaced persons have the right to receive humanitarian assistance, and the State's duty to protect the displaced population is permanent and cannot be renounced in normal times or in states of exception, in accordance with Article 17 AP II.[457]

458. In a set of guidelines for soldiers issued in 1996, the Chief of Staff of the Lebanese Army stated that it was the role of the army to protect displaced persons and to ensure that they were fed, housed and provided with medical care.[458]

459. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights, Mexico stated that internally displaced persons "must always be provided with the basic necessities". It also stated that "the primary responsibility for dealing with the problem [of displaced persons] rested . . . with the State concerned, and that the international community should simply assist and intervene only in cases of massive and systematic violations of human rights".[459]

[454] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-092, Judgement, 7 March 1996.
[455] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krupp case, Judgement, 30 June 1948, adopting the concurring opinion by Judge Phillips in the Milch case, Judgement, 17 April 1947.
[456] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Appeal of the Presidency concerning the International Committee of the Red Cross Operations, Pale, 7 June 1992.
[457] Report on the Practice of Colombia, 1998, Chapter 5.5.
[458] Lebanon, Chief of Staff of the Lebanese Army, Note d'orientation pour les militaires, Al Anwar, 26 February 1996.
[459] Mexico, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.39, 15 April 1996, § 21.

460. In May 1994, during a debate on Rwanda in the UN Security Council, Oman stated that the most urgent measure in response to mass displacement was to immediately extend humanitarian assistance to IDPs.[460]

461. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provide that "the government shall provide free transportation facilities to the evacuees during evacuation" and that "medicine and relief goods, whether coming from the government or non-government organisations, shall be given to the evacuees without delay".[461]

462. According to the Report on the Practice of Russia, "unfortunately, the party to a conflict that causes the displacement of persons [through its methods of warfare] does not bear any responsibility [for their care]. The material burden of providing assistance to these persons thus rests on the other party."[462]

463. In 1991, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the repression of the Iraqi civilian population, including Kurds in Iraq, the US stated that its air force would drop food, blankets, clothing, tents and other relief-related items into northern Iraq. The US military would continue to help IDPs in southern Iraq and were willing to send a military medical unit to the border area to assist. The US expressed profound concern about the plight of displaced persons and noted that it had contributed generously to the care and maintenance of the displaced.[463]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

464. In a resolution adopted in 1974 on emergency UN humanitarian assistance to Cyprus, the UN Security Council expressed grave concern at the plight of IDPs and urged parties to take appropriate measures to provide for their relief and welfare.[464]

465. In a resolution adopted in 1991 on repression of the Iraqi civilian population, including Kurds in Iraq, the UN Security Council requested that the UN Secretary-General "use all the resources at his disposal . . . to address urgently the critical needs of refugees and displaced Iraqi population".[465]

466. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on political conditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council emphasised "the urgent need for humanitarian assistance, material and financial . . . [for] displaced persons".[466]

[460] Oman, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3377, 16 May 1994, p. 7.
[461] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Resolution No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, §§ 3 and 6.
[462] Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, Chapter 5.5.
[463] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.2982, 5 April 1991, pp. 58–60.
[464] UN Security Council, Res. 361, 30 August 1974, § 4.
[465] UN Security Council, Res. 688, 5 April 1991, § 5.
[466] UN Security Council, Res. 752, 15 May 1992, § 7.

467. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council expressed grave concern "at the very serious situation which confronts . . . a great number of displaced persons within the safe area at Potocari, especially the lack of essential food supplies and medical care".[467]

468. In three separate resolutions adopted in 1995 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council condemned the failure of the Bosnian Serb party to comply with its commitments in respect of giving humanitarian agencies access to displaced persons.[468]

469. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council underlined the responsibility of the authorities in Burundi for the security of refugees and displaced persons in Burundi.[469]

470. In a resolution adopted in 1996 concerning the Great Lakes region, the UN Security Council requested:

> the Secretary-General, in consultation with his Special Envoy and the coordinator of humanitarian affairs, with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, with the OAU, with the Special Envoy of the European Union and with the States concerned:
>
> (a) to draw up a concept of operations . . . with the objectives of:
>
> – Delivering short-term humanitarian assistance . . . to refugees and displaced persons in eastern Zaire;
> – Assisting United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with the protection . . .
> – Establishing humanitarian corridors for the delivery of humanitarian assistance.[470]

471. In a resolution adopted in 1997 concerning eastern Zaire, the UN Security Council endorsed a plan for the "facilitation of access for humanitarian assistance" to refugees and displaced persons.[471]

472. In 1997, in a statement by its President concerning the DRC, the UN Security Council called for the facilitation of access to humanitarian assistance and for the rights of refugees and displaced persons to be fully respected.[472]

473. In 1994, the UNHCR Executive Committee emphasised that since IDPs remained within the territorial jurisdiction of their own countries, the primary responsibility for their welfare and protection lay with the State concerned.[473]

[467] UN Security Council, Res. 1004, 12 July 1995, preamble.
[468] UN Security Council, Res. 1010, 10 August 1995, preamble and § 1; Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble and § 2; Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, preamble and §§ 4–5.
[469] UN Security Council, Res. 1040, 29 January 1996, preamble.
[470] UN Security Council, Res. 1078, 9 November 1996, § 10.
[471] UN Security Council, Res. 1097, 18 February 1997, § 1.
[472] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/31, 29 May 1997, p. 2.
[473] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 75 (XLV): Internally Displaced Persons, 20 October 1994, § d.

474. In 1994, in a report on Rwanda, the UN Secretary-General stated that the immediate priorities with regard to the displaced population were to relieve suffering through the provision of adequate humanitarian assistance.[474]

475. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in Croatia, the UN Secretary-General noted that the Croatian government was caring for a large number of IDPs and that the government had stated that it was spending 17 million dollars per month on displaced persons.[475]

476. In 1997, in a report on Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General noted that the government of Sierra Leone and the RUF had made efforts to defuse tensions in certain areas by seeking ways to provide food to displaced persons.[476]

477. In 1997, in a report on his mission to Mozambique, the Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons noted that "in the absence of health centres, an extended health-care network was set up in the form of 'flying brigades', which would provide medicines and carry out vaccination campaigns". He also reported that "in collaboration with programme partners, IOM provided the internally displaced persons with food, seeds, tools, medical assistance and transport of household belongings".[477]

478. In 1996, in a special report on minorities in the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights reported that "the Montenegrin authorities have . . . recognized the villagers in Plejvlja as displaced persons and distributed assistance covering their basic needs".[478]

Other International Organisations

479. In a resolution adopted in 1985 in response to mass transfers of the population in Ethiopia, the European Parliament invited the European Commission, the Council and member States to ask Ethiopia to put a stop to forced displacement for a minimum of six months. The resolution stated that the suspension of the displacement of the civilian population during this period was necessary in order for the Ethiopian government to assess, under international supervision, the necessity of the transfers, and to establish minimum humanitarian conditions for their conduct should they have proved necessary.[479]

[474] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Rwanda, UN Doc. S/1994/640, 31 May 1994, § 40.

[475] UN Secretary-General, Further report on the situation of human rights in Croatia, UN Doc. S/1996/456, 21 June 1996, p. 9.

[476] UN Secretary-General, Report on Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/1997/80, 26 January 1997, § 20.

[477] Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons, Report on the Representative's visit to Mozambique from 24 November to 3 December 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/43/Add.1, 24 February 1997, §§ 48–49 and 67.

[478] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Special report on minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/8, 25 October 1996, §§ 81–83.

[479] European Parliament, Resolution on mass transfers of populations in Ethiopia and the expulsion of Médecins sans frontières, 13 December 1985, § 1.

International Conferences

480. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a Statement of Policy on International Red Cross Aid to Refugees, which provided that:

> 1. The Red Cross should at all times be ready to assist and protect refugees, displaced persons and returnees, when such victims are considered as protected persons under the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, or when they are considered as refugees under Article 73 of the 1977 Protocol I additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, or in conformity with the Statutes of the International Red Cross, especially when they cannot, in fact, benefit from any other protection or assistance, as in some cases of internally displaced persons.
> ...
> 8. As a neutral and independent humanitarian institution, the ICRC offers its services whenever refugees and displaced persons are in need of the specific protection which the ICRC may afford them.[480]

481. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on the Movement and refugees in which it urged National Societies to "spare no effort to ensure that refugees and asylum-seekers receive humane treatment and decent material conditions in host countries".[481]

482. The Comprehensive Plan of Action adopted by consensus at the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees in 1989 provided that persons determined not to be refugees should be provided with care and assistance pending their repatriation.[482]

483. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on principles and action in international humanitarian assistance and protection in which it called upon States "to provide humanitarian assistance to internally displaced persons and to assist States having accepted refugees".[483]

484. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "if displacement occurs, ... appropriate assistance is provided" to displaced persons.[484]

[480] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. XXI, Annex, Statement of Policy on International Red Cross Aid to Refugees, §§ 1 and 8.

[481] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XVII, § 4.

[482] International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees, Geneva, 13–14 June 1989, Comprehensive Plan of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.148/2, 26 April 1989, §§ 12, 14 and 15.

[483] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. IV, § A(1)(c).

[484] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(c).

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

485. In Akdivar and Others v. Turkey before the ECtHR in 1996, the Turkish government stated that under Turkish emergency legislation, persons who have had to leave their place of residence may be rehoused inside or outside the region covered by the state of emergency. It also stated that special funds were provided to assist those who needed to leave their homes.[485]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

486. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the Occupying Power undertaking evacuation shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, that proper accommodation is provided to receive the evacuated persons, that the removals are effected in satisfactory conditions of hygiene, health . . . and nutrition".[486]

487. In 1985, the ICRC refused to provide the government of a State with assistance in relation to meeting the needs of persons who had been forcibly displaced to areas where no infrastructure existed to support them.[487]

488. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and refugees in which it requested the components of the Movement:

> b) to pursue their efforts in disseminating international humanitarian law, human rights law, of which refugee law is part, and the Fundamental Principles of the Movement in order to enhance protection and humane treatment of refugees, asylum-seekers, displaced persons and returnees.
>
> . . .
>
> h) to actively seek the support of governments with a view:
>
> . . .
>
> iii) to ensure that, in all circumstances, refugees, asylum-seekers and displaced persons receive . . . decent material conditions.[488]

489. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the protection of the civilian population against famine in situations of armed conflict in which it reminded the authorities concerned and the armed forces under their command of their obligation to apply IHL, in particular the rule that "should such displacements have to be carried out, the stipulation that all possible measures be taken to ensure that the civilians are [485] ECtHR, Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, Government Memorial, 11 April 1996, §§ 43 and 58.

[486] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 836.
[487] ICRC archive document.
[488] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 9, §§ b and h(iii).

received under satisfactory conditions of shelter, hygiene, health, safety and nutrition".[489]

VI. Other Practice

490. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "should . . . displacements have to be carried out, all possible measures shall be taken in order that the population may be transferred and received under satisfactory conditions of shelter, hygiene, health . . . and nutrition".[490]

491. In a resolution adopted in 1991, the Politico-Military High Command of the SPLM/A stated that "the SPLM/SPLA considers relief assistance to innocent civilians caught up in the war situation and natural disasters as a human right, and the Movement shall facilitate passage of relief assistance to the areas of need in both SPLM/SPLA and Government administered areas".[491]

Security of displaced persons

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

492. Article 49, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Occupying Power undertaking . . . transfers or evacuations shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, that proper accommodation is provided to receive the protected persons, that the removals are effected in satisfactory conditions of . . . safety".

493. Article 17(1) AP II provides that "should . . . displacements have to be carried out, all possible measures shall be taken in order that the civilian population may be received under satisfactory conditions of . . . safety". Article 17 AP II was adopted by consensus.[492]

Other Instruments

494. Paragraph 3 of the 1992 Recommendation on the Tragic Situation of Civilians in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that the security of the civilians who leave temporarily a territory shall be guaranteed by each party on the territory it controls.

[489] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 13, § 1.

[490] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 7(1), IRRC, No. 282, p. 333.

[491] SPLM/A, PMHC Resolution No. 10: Relief Assistance, 9 September 1991, § 10.1, Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.5.

[492] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 144.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

495. Argentina's Law of War Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[493]

496. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, "if [civilians] do have to be displaced, arrangements must be made, if possible, for their . . . safety".[494]

497. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that civilian persons evacuated for security reasons shall receive "proper conditions of . . . safety".[495]

498. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic states that when civilians are moved or resettled, soldiers "should take action to ensure their safety".[496]

499. Hungary's Military Manual provides that civilian persons evacuated for security reasons shall receive "proper conditions of . . . safety".[497]

500. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, "if [civilians] do have to be displaced, arrangements must be made, if possible, for their . . . safety".[498]

501. Spain's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[499]

502. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "displacements are effected in satisfactory conditions of . . . safety".[500]

503. The UK Military Manual provides that "to the greatest practicable extent, removals of civil inhabitants must take place under satisfactory conditions of . . . safety".[501]

504. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[502]

505. The US Soldier's Manual provides that, when civilians are moved or resettled, soldiers "should take action to ensure their safety".[503]

National Legislation

506. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[504]

507. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 49 GC IV,

[493] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008.
[494] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-5, § 41.
[495] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 62.
[496] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.
[497] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 98.
[498] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1823.
[499] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5).
[500] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 176(2).
[501] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560.
[502] US, Field Manual (1956), § 382.
[503] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 22.
[504] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 17 AP II, are punishable offences.[505]

508. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[506]

National Case-law

509. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

510. In 1992, the Presidency of the Republika Srpska of Bosnia Herzegovina made an urgent appeal "to give protection ... to displaced persons".[507]

511. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on Rwanda, Brazil emphasised that part of the UNAMIR mandate was "to contribute to provid[e] security and protection for displaced persons, refugees and civilians at risk".[508]

512. The Report on the Practice of France notes that France has stated that it would arrest and punish those responsible for attempts on the security of displaced persons in both international and non-international conflicts.[509]

513. The Report on the Practice of India notes that, in the context of the conflict in Jammu and Kashmir, the government of India has taken a number of steps to protect persons displaced by the conflict. Policy directives have reiterated that where persons are displaced, appropriate care should be taken to protect them.[510]

514. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provides that "acts or threats of violence and various forms of inhuman treatment committed by the government forces, including para-military groups and other agents of authority, for the purpose of spreading terror among the evacuees are prohibited (Protocol II, Art. 13)".[511]

515. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Russia stated that a central element of the peacekeeping operation in Rwanda had to be the establishment of secure humanitarian areas for the protection of IDPs.[512]

[505] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[506] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[507] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Appeal of the Presidency concerning the International Committee of the Red Cross Operations, Pale, 7 June 1992.
[508] Brazil, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3388, 1 January 1994, pp. 4–8.
[509] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.5.
[510] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 5.4 and 5.5.
[511] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Resolution No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, § 4.
[512] Russia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3377, 16 May 1994, p. 10.

516. A declaration by the government of Rwanda in February 1993 on the restoration of the cease-fire specified that "those displaced by the war will be installed in the demilitarized neutral zone and will receive the protection of the international force for maintaining the cease-fire".[513]

517. In 1991, the UK put forward the idea of creating safe areas for displaced persons in Iraq, especially Kurds, in the aftermath of the Gulf War. The UK assisted in the establishment of these safe areas and supplied troops in order to ensure the security of the sites.[514]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

518. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council decided to expand UNAMIR's mandate "to contribute to the security and protection of displaced persons, refugees and civilians at risk in Rwanda, including through the establishment and maintenance . . . of secure humanitarian areas".[515]

519. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that UNAMIR would "contribute to the security and protection of displaced persons, refugees and civilians at risk in Rwanda, including through the establishment and maintenance . . . of secure humanitarian areas".[516]

520. In a resolution on Burundi adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council underlined "the responsibility of the authorities in Burundi for the security . . . of displaced persons".[517]

521. In a resolution adopted in 1997 concerning eastern Zaire, the UN Security Council endorsed a protection plan to ensure the security of all refugees and displaced persons.[518]

522. In 1993, in a statement by its President concerning the conflict in Liberia, the UN Security Council strongly condemned the "massacre of innocent displaced persons" and urged all parties to the conflict "to respect the rights of the civilian population and take all necessary measures to secure their safety".[519]

523. In 1995, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council stressed that the Rwandan government bore the primary responsibility for the security and safety of IDPs.[520]

[513] Rwanda, Declaration by the government on the restoration of the cease-fire, annexed to Letter dated 4 March 1993 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/25363, 4 March 1993, Annex III, p. 8, § 5.

[514] UK, Statement by the Prime Minister: A Safe Haven for the Kurds, FCO Press Office, 8 April 1991, p. 714.

[515] UN Security Council, Res. 918, 17 May 1994, § 3.

[516] UN Security Council, Res. 925, 8 June 1994, § 4.

[517] UN Security Council, Res. 1040, 29 January 1996, preamble.

[518] UN Security Council, Res. 1097, 18 February 1997, § 1.

[519] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25918, 9 June 1993, §§ 2–3.

[520] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/22, 27 April 1995, pp. 1–2.

524. In January 1996, in a statement by its President on Burundi, the UN Security Council expressed grave concern at "attacks on personnel of international humanitarian organizations, which have led to the suspension of essential assistance to refugees and displaced persons" and stressed that "the authorities in Burundi are responsible for the security" of both.[521]

525. In 1996 and 1997, in several statements by its President on the Great Lakes region/Zaire, the UN Security Council called on all parties to guarantee the safety of refugees and displaced persons.[522]

526. In 1997, in a statement by its President on the DRC, the UN Security Council called for attention to be paid to the protection and security needs of all refugees and displaced persons.[523]

527. In a resolution adopted in 1993 concerning refugees and displaced persons, the UN General Assembly expressed deep concern regarding serious threats to the security or well-being of refugees, including incidents of refoulement, unlawful expulsion, physical attacks and detention under unacceptable conditions. It called upon States to take all measures necessary to ensure respect for the principles of refugee protection.[524]

528. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the UN General Assembly expressed alarm at the repeated instances of violence against displaced persons and other civilians.[525]

529. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed alarm at the repeated instances of violence against displaced persons and other civilians.[526]

530. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned "all attacks against persons in the refugee camps near the borders of Rwanda" and called upon States "to take appropriate steps to prevent such attacks".[527]

531. In 1993, in its Conclusion on Personal Security of Refugees, the Executive Committee of UNHCR deplored "all violations of the right to personal security of refugees", urged States "to take all measures necessary to prevent or remove threats to personal security of refugees" and called upon States "to provide effective physical protection to . . . refugees".[528]

[521] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/1, 5 January 1996, pp. 1–2.
[522] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/44, 1 November 1996; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/5, 7 February 1997, p. 1; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/11, 7 March 1997, p. 1.
[523] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/31, 29 May 1997, p. 2.
[524] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/116, 20 December 1993, § 5.
[525] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/198, 23 December 1994, preamble and § 10.
[526] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/77, 8 March 1995, preamble.
[527] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/91, 8 March 1995, § 12.
[528] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 72 (XLIV): Personal Security of Refugees, 8 October 1993, § 20(a)–(d).

532. In May 1994, in a report on the situation in Rwanda, the UN Secretary-General stated that "it is very urgent that . . . 'secure humanitarian areas' be established where the estimated 2 million . . . unfortunate displaced persons can be provided both security and assistance".[529]

533. In 1996, in a report on extra-judicial, arbitrary or summary executions, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that the authorities in Burundi establish a national police force, stating that "one of the priority tasks of the national police force would be to ensure the security and the protection of people in . . . refugee camps".[530]

534. In 1996, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Extra-judicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions intervened on behalf of displaced persons on several occasions, including one case in which a group of internally displaced persons was "to be transported . . . [to] an area of active armed conflict in Tajikistan, where their lives could have been at risk, especially because of the presence of landmines".[531]

Other International Organisations

535. No practice was found.

International Conferences

536. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on the Movement and refugees in which it called on governments "to continue their efforts to find in the near future a solution to the problem of military or armed attacks on refugee camps and settlements".[532]

537. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "in the conduct of hostilities, every effort is made to spare the life, protect and respect the civilian population, with particular protective measures for . . . groups with special vulnerabilities such as . . . displaced persons".[533]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

538. No practice was found.

[529] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Rwanda, UN Doc. S/1994/640, 31 May 1994, § 16.

[530] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report on the Special Rapporteur's mission to Burundi, 19–29 April 1995, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/4/Add.1, 24 July 1995, § 93.

[531] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/60, 24 December 1996, § 61.

[532] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XVII, § 7.

[533] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(a).

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

539. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the occupying power undertaking evacuation shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, ... that the removal is effected in satisfactory conditions of ... safety".[534]

VI. Other Practice

540. No practice was found.

Respect for family unity

Note: For practice concerning family rights, see Chapter 32, section Q.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

541. Article 49, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Occupying Power undertaking such transfers or evacuations shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, ... that members of the same family are not separated".

542. Article 9 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

1. States Parties shall ensure that a child shall not be separated from his or her parents aginst their will, except when competent authorities subject to judicial review determine, in accordance with applicable law and procedures, that such separation is necessary for the best interests of the child. Such determination may be necessary in a particular case such as one involving abuse or neglect of the child by the parents, or one where the parents are living separately and a decision must be made as to the child's place of residence.
2. In any proceedings pursuant to paragraph 1 of the present article, all interested parties shall be given an opportunity to participate in the proceedings and make their views known.
3. States Parties shall respect the right of the child who is separated from one or both parents to maintain personal relations and direct contact with both parents on a regular basis, except if it is contrary to the child's best interests.
4. Where such separation results from any action initiated by a State Party, such as the detention, imprisonment, exile, deportation or death (including death arising from any cause while the person is in the custody of the State) of one or both parents or of the child, that State Party shall, upon request, provide the parents, the child or, if appropriate, another member of the family with the essential information concerning the whereabouts of the absent member(s) of the family unless the provision of the information would be detrimental to the well-being of the child. States Parties shall further ensure that the submission of such a request shall of itself entail no adverse consequences for the person(s) concerned.

[534] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 836.

543. Article 22 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child requires States parties "to protect and assist . . . [refugee children] and to trace the parents or other members of the family of any refugee children in order to obtain information necessary for reunification with his or her family".

544. In the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties agreed that:

> In accordance with the fundamental principle of preserving family unity, where it is not possible for families to repatriate as units, a mechanism shall be established for their reunification in Abkhazia. Measures shall also be taken for the identification and extra care/assistance for unaccompanied minors and other vulnerable persons during the repatriation process.

545. According to Article 1 of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords, "the principle of the unity of the family shall be preserved".

Other Instruments

546. Principle 17(3) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that:

> Families which are separated by displacement should be reunited as quickly as possible. All appropriate steps shall be taken to expedite the reunion of such families, particularly when children are involved. The responsible authorities shall facilitate inquiries made by family members and encourage and cooperate with the work of humanitarian organizations engaged in the task of family reunification.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

547. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[535]

548. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "when there is an evacuation, measures shall be taken to facilitate the return of children to their families".[536]

549. Canada's LOAC Manual provides, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, that "children are to receive such aid and protection as required including: . . . b. steps to reunite them with their families".[537]

550. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that in order to guarantee the rights of the civilian population, soldiers shall "facilitate the reuniting of families that have been dispersed by the conflict and permit the exchange of information".[538] It further states that it is a duty of the parties to "permit the

[535] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008.
[536] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.
[537] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 22.
[538] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 22.

exchange of information within families".[539] The manual specifies, regarding respect for the civilian population, that it is a duty "to facilitate the contact and reuniting of families".[540] In addition, the manual provides that, when the conflict is over, parties shall "strengthen mechanisms dedicated to reuniting dispersed families".[541]

551. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that in case of an evacuation of civilian persons, there shall be "no forced separation of families".[542]

552. Germany's Military Manual provides that in case of an evacuation, "members of the same family shall not be separated".[543]

553. Hungary's Military Manual provides that in case of an evacuation of civilian persons, there shall be "no forced separation of families".[544]

554. Spain's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[545]

555. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "displacements are effected in satisfactory conditions . . . and the members of the same family are not separated".[546]

556. The UK Military Manual provides that in case of transfer or evacuation, "members of the same family must not be separated".[547]

557. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[548]

National Legislation

558. Angola's Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations provides that:

> It is the responsibility of the Provincial Governments, through the Sub-Groups on Displaced Persons and Refugees of the Provincial Humanitarian Coordination Groups, to carry out the following:
>
> . . .
>
> h) To take appropriate measures to ensure family reunification.[549]

559. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[550]

560. According to Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, the family of forcibly displaced persons must benefit from the right to family reunification.[551]

[539] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 28.
[540] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 29.
[541] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 31.
[542] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 62.
[543] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 545.
[544] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 98.
[545] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5).
[546] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 176(2).
[547] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560.
[548] US, Field Manual (1956), § 382.
[549] Angola, Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations (2001), Article 2(h).
[550] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[551] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Article 2(4).

561. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 49 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(3)(b) AP II, are punishable offences.[552]

562. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[553]

563. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines provides that:

> All appropriate steps shall be taken to facilitate the reunion of families temporarily separated due to armed conflict ...
>
> Whenever possible, members of the same family shall be housed in the same premises and given separate accommodation from other evacuees and be provided with facilities to lead a normal family life.[554]

National Case-law

564. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

565. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provides that "in case of evacuations members of the same family must not be separated from each other".[555]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

566. In several resolutions on the rights of the child, the UN General Assembly has called upon all States and UN bodies and agencies "to ensure the early identification and registration of unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children [and] to give priority to programmes for family tracing and reunification".[556]

567. In two resolutions adopted in 1997 and 1998 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all States "to give priority to programmes for family tracing and reunification, and to continue monitoring the care arrangements for unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children".[557]

[552] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[553] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[554] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Sections 22(f) and 23.
[555] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Resolution No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, § 1.
[556] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/77, 12 December 1996, Section III, § 42; Res. 52/107, 12 December 1997, Section V, § 3; Res. 53/128, 9 December 1998, Section V, § 3.
[557] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1997/78, 18 April 1997, § 16; Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, § 17(b).

568. In 1981, in its Conclusion on Family Reunification, the UNHCR Executive Committee stressed that every effort should be made to ensure the reunification of separated families.[558]

569. In 1997, in its Conclusion on Refugee Children and Adolescents, the UNHCR Executive Committee urged "States and concerned parties to take all possible measures to protect child and adolescent refugees, inter alia, by: (i) preventing separation of children and adolescent refugees from their families and promoting . . . family reunification".[559]

570. In 1998, in his report on unaccompanied refugee minors, which included a discussion on internally displaced children, the UN Secretary-General concluded that:

> On a daily basis, in crisis settings such as those currently in Sierra Leone, Guinea-Bissau and Kosovo, children trapped in and fleeing from war zones were involuntarily separated from their families . . . Member States are urged to adhere to and promote the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to support measures that will avoid involuntary family separation.[560]

571. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that the Croatian Office for Displaced Persons and Refugees had advised the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights "that emphasis in the immediate future will be placed on applications for return from relatives of elderly Serbs remaining in the former sectors, who required the assistance of younger family members to lead a normal life". The Special Rapporteur also noted that "some 12,000 Croatian Serb refugees have received the permission to return . . . mostly on the basis of family reunification or proof of citizenship".[561]

572. In 1992, in two joint statements on the evacuation of children from the former Yugoslavia, UNHCR and UNICEF highlighted the needs of families during emergency evacuations, in particular the need to respect family unity as a guiding principle in all evacuation operations. They also stated that where families were separated during the process, "evacuations, reception and care should be planned with a view to the earliest possible reunification between parents and children".[562]

[558] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 24 (XXXII): Family Reunification, UN Doc. A/AC.96/60, 22 October 1981, § 1.

[559] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 84 (XLVIII): Refugee Children and Adolescents, UN Doc. A/AC.96/895, 20 October 1997, § b(i).

[560] UN Secretary-General, Report on unaccompanied refugee minors, UN Doc. A/53/325, 26 August 1998, § 27.

[561] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/9, 22 October 1996, §§ 50–51; see also Special periodic report on minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/8, 25 October 1996, § 128.

[562] UNHCR and UNICEF, Joint statement on the evacuation of children from former Yugoslavia, 13 August 1992, § 5; Joint statement No. 2 supported by the ICRC and the Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, 16 December 1992, § 2.

Other International Organisations

573. In a recommendation adopted in 1992 concerning displaced populations in the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called upon member States to take urgent measures "to assist unaccompanied children, victims of the crisis, to withstand the distress and reunite with their families".[563]

574. In 1994, in a report on Rwanda, the Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe emphasised that particular attention should be paid to the problems experienced by unaccompanied children during internal displacement. He recommended that schemes to register such children and to help them reunite with their families, such as the "Radio-Link BBC-Rwanda" established by the ICRC, be encouraged.[564]

International Conferences

575. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a Statement of Policy on International Red Cross Aid to Refugees, which provided that:

> The Central Tracing Agency of the ICRC is also always ready in co-operation with National Societies to act in aid of refugees and displaced persons, for instance by facilitating the reuniting of dispersed families, by organizing the exchange of family news and by tracing missing persons. Where necessary, it offers its cooperation to the UNHCR, as well as its technical assistance to National Societies to enable them to set up and develop their own tracing and mailing services.[565]

576. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on the protection of children in armed conflicts in which it referred to the Geneva Conventions and the two Additional Protocols and recommended that "all necessary measures be taken to preserve the unity of the family and to facilitate the reuniting of families".[566]

577. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on protection of the civilian population in period of armed conflict in which it demanded that all parties to armed conflict avoid any action aimed at, or having the effect of, causing the separation of families in a manner contrary to international humanitarian law. In the same resolution, it also appealed to States to "do their utmost to solve the serious humanitarian issue of dispersed families without delay" and emphasised that "family reunification must begin with the tracing of separated family members at the request of one of them and end with their coming together as a family".[567]

[563] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1176, 5 February 1992, § iii.
[564] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Report on Rwanda, Doc. 7191, 4 November 1994, § 11.
[565] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. XXI, Annex, Statement of Policy on International Red Cross Aid to Refugees, § 9.
[566] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. IX, § 5.
[567] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § D(a), (b) and (c).

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

578. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, the CRC recommended that Myanmar "reinforce its central tracing agency to favour family reunification.[568]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

579. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the occupying power undertaking evacuation shall ensure, to the greatest practicable extent, . . . that members of the same family are not separated".[569]

VI. Other Practice

580. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "every effort shall be made to enable those so displaced who wish to remain together to do so. Families whose members wish to remain together must be allowed to do so."[570]

Specific needs of displaced women, children and elderly persons

Note: For practice concerning the specific needs of women in general, see Chapter 39, section A. For practice concerning the specific needs of children in general, including education for displaced children, see Chapter 39, section B. For practice concerning the specific needs of the elderly in general, see Chapter 39, section E.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

581. Article 78 AP I provides that:

No party to the conflict shall arrange for the evacuation of children, other than its own nationals, to a foreign country except for a temporary evacuation where compelling reasons of health or medical treatment of the children or, except in occupied territory, their safety so require. Where the parents or the legal guardians can be found, their written consent to such evacuation is required . . . In each case,

[568] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add. 69, 24 January 1997, § 40.

[569] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 836.

[570] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 7(1), IRRC, No. 282, p. 333.

all Parties to the conflict shall take all feasible precautions to avoid endangering the evacuation. Whenever an evacuation occurs . . . each child's education, including his religious and moral education as his parents desire, shall be provided while he is away with the greatest continuity . . . [An identification card providing full details] shall be established for each child.

Article 78 AP I was adopted by consensus.[571]

582. Article 22 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

States Parties shall take appropriate measures to ensure that a child who is seeking refugee status or who is considered a refugee in accordance with applicable international or domestic law and procedures shall, whether unaccompanied or accompanied by his or her parents or by any other person, receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance in the enjoyment of applicable rights set forth in the present Convention and in other international human rights or humanitarian instruments to which the said States are Parties.

583. Article 23 of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that:

1. States Parties to the present Charter shall take all appropriate measures to ensure that a child who is seeking refugee status or who is considered a refugee in accordance with applicable international or domestic law shall, whether unaccompanied or accompanied by parents, legal guardians or close relatives, receive appropriate protection and humanitarian assistance in the enjoyment of the rights set out in this Charter and other international human rights and humanitarian instruments to which the States are Parties.
2. States Parties shall undertake to cooperate with existing international organizations which protect and assist refugees in their efforts to protect and assist such a child and to trace the parents or other close relatives of an unaccompanied refugee child in order to obtain information necessary for reunification with the family . . .
3. The provisions of this Article apply mutatis mutandis to internally displaced children whether through natural disaster, internal armed conflicts, civil strife, breakdown of economic and social order or howsoever caused.

584. Article 9 of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on Violence against Women provides that "States parties shall take special account of the vulnerability of women to violence by reason of . . . their status as . . . refugees or displaced persons . . . [and by reason of being] affected by armed conflict".

Other Instruments

585. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 78 AP I.

[571] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 254.

586. The 1992 Sarajevo Declaration on Humanitarian Treatment of Displaced Persons made specific reference to women, children and the elderly as forming particularly vulnerable segments of the displaced population.
587. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 78 AP I.
588. The preamble to the 1993 UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women expressed the UN General Assembly's concern that "some groups of women, such as . . . refugee women, elderly women and women in situations of armed conflict are especially vulnerable to violence".
589. Principle 4(2) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that:

> Certain internally displaced persons, such as children, especially unaccompanied minors, expectant mothers, mothers with young children, female heads of households, persons with disabilities and elderly persons, shall be entitled to protection and assistance required by their condition, and to treatment which takes into account their special needs.

590. Principle 19(2) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that "special attention should be paid to the health needs of women, including access to female health care providers and services, such as reproductive health care, as well as appropriate counselling for victims of sexual abuse and other abuses".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

591. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "no party to the conflict shall undertake the evacuation of children to a foreign country. If an evacuation has been undertaken, all the necessary measures shall be taken to facilitate the return of the children to their families and their country."[572]
592. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "children who are not nationals of the state may not be evacuated by that state to a foreign country unless the evacuation is temporary and accords to certain conditions set out in AP I".[573]
593. Indonesia's Military Manual states that parties to the conflict should ensure the protection of unaccompanied children under 15 years old. Such children should be educated and provided with adequate food. In hostile situations, children should be evacuated to neutral States, and children under 12 years old should wear an identity disc.[574]

[572] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.
[573] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 947(e).
[574] Indonesia, Military Manual (1982), § 68.

National Legislation

594. Angola's Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations provides that:

> It is the responsibility of the Provincial Governments, through the Sub-Groups on Displaced Persons and Refugees of the Provincial Humanitarian Coordination Groups, to carry out the following:
>
> . . .
>
> c) To identify the displaced persons who wish to be resettled or return to their areas of origin, giving particular attention to the most vulnerable (widows, children, elderly, disabled) who may require special assistance.[575]

595. The Law on the Rights of the Child of Belarus states that children of refugees must be protected and provided with material and medical assistance by the public authorities.[576]

596. Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons has established a National Plan in order to, inter alia, pay special attention to women and children.[577]

597. Croatia's Law on Displaced Persons and Directive on Displaced Persons provide that Croatia shall ensure that displaced children are educated and that their basic needs in terms of accommodation, food, health care and social integration are met.[578]

598. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 78 AP I, is a punishable offence.[579]

599. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[580]

600. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines provides that:

> Children should be given priority during evacuation as a result of armed conflict. Existing community organizations shall be tapped to look after the safety and well-being of children during evacuation operations. Measures shall be taken to ensure that children evacuated are accompanied by persons responsible for their safety and well-being . . .
>
> In places of temporary shelter, expectant and nursing mothers and children shall be given additional food in proportion to their physiological needs. Whenever possible, children shall be given opportunities for physical exercise, sports and outdoor games.[581]

[575] Angola, Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations (2001), Article 2(c), see also Article 8 (social assistance).
[576] Belarus, Law on the Rights of the Child (1993), Article 30.
[577] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Article 10(7); see also Criminal Code (1999), Article 127 (for forcible transfer of children to another group as a part of a genocide campaign).
[578] Croatia, Law on Displaced Persons (1993), Article 13; Directive on Displaced Persons (1991), Articles 2 and 13.
[579] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[580] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[581] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Sections 23–24.

National Case-law

601. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

602. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights concerning the conflict in Burundi, El Salvador identified the necessity of taking into account the needs of the "most vulnerable groups of displaced persons and, in particular, disabled persons, including those disabled by mine blasts as a result of the conflict".[582]

603. In 1995, in its initial report to the CRC, Ghana stated that "the sole government agency responsible for abandoned and orphaned children, worked with the Save the Children Fund to provide care for the children affected by the conflict [in the northern part of the country]". Family tracing and reunification assistance services were also established and unaccompanied displaced children were either placed in camps, in orphanages or with relatives.[583]

604. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that special care is provided to children who have been orphaned or separated from their families, the elderly and the disabled.[584]

605. In May 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Rwanda, Oman made specific reference to the special needs of internally displaced women, children and elderly people.[585]

606. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights, Peru reported that in response to the CRC's concern about the displacement of almost 400,000 children, "the Government had established food aid programmes for displaced children, in particular orphans".[586]

607. In 1993, in its report to the CRC, the Philippines stated that:

> 202. [The Special Protection Act of the Philippines provides that] during any evacuation resulting from armed conflict, children are to be given priority . . . Measures shall be taken to ensure that children who are evacuated are accompanied by persons responsible for their safety and well-being. Whenever possible, members of the same family are to be housed in the same premises.
>
> . . .
>
> 206. Children who are lost, abandoned or orphaned as a result of an armed conflict are referred to the local Council for the Protection of Children or to the Department of Social Welfare and Development. All efforts are undertaken to locate the child's parents and relatives. Arrangements are made for the temporary care of the child by a licensed foster family or a child-caring agency.[587]

[582] El Salvador, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.15, 30 May 1996, § 37.
[583] Ghana, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.39, 19 December 1995, § 126.
[584] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[585] Oman, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3377, 16 May 1994, p. 7.
[586] Peru, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.55, 21 May 1996, p. 12, §§ 45–46.
[587] Philippines, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.23, 3 November 1993, §§ 202 and 206.

608. In 1994, in its initial report to the CRC, Sri Lanka noted that:

A special effort is being made to meet the needs of children in varying situations . . . These include health and nutritional needs of infants and pre-school children, education for children of school age, care and rehabilitation for children traumatized by violence and deprivation of parents, and restoration to homes and families in the case of children who have been separated from parents or who have lost them . . . The government has been working closely with NGOs to provide the basic needs of households including the special needs of children. Several programmes have been initiated to deal with problems of traumatized children and children separated from parents.[588]

609. In 1994, in its initial report to the CRC, the FRY stated that:

A refugee child is entitled to full health care, which covers prevention, emergency medical care, specialist check-ups, dental care, as well as medicaments, hospitalization, and check-ups in health care institutions, etc. . . .

Disabled children and youth – refugees up to the age of 18 and university students up to 26 – are entitled to specialized and rehabilitation care in institutions for rehabilitation and to orthopaedic and prosthetic appliances and aids.[589]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

610. In a resolution adopted in 1993 concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council noted the particular vulnerability of women, children and the elderly in the large-scale forced displacement of civilians.[590]

611. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN Security Council strongly condemned the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict, including forced displacement.[591]

612. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the protection of children in situations of armed conflict, the UN Security Council urged member States and parties to armed conflict "to provide protection and assistance to refugees and internally displaced persons, as appropriate, the vast majority of whom are women and children".[592]

613. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on women and peace and security, the UN Security Council called upon all parties to armed conflict "to respect the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements, and to take into account the particular needs of women and girls".[593]

[588] Sri Lanka, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/8/Add.13, 5 May 1994, § 146.
[589] FRY, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/8/Add.16, 17 November 1994, §§ 354–355.
[590] UN Security Council, Res. 819, 16 April 1993, preamble.
[591] UN Security Council, Res. 1261, 25 August 1999, § 2.
[592] UN Security Council, Res. 1314, 11 August 2000, § 6.
[593] UN Security Council, Res. 1325, 31 October 2000, § 12.

614. In June 1998, in a statement by its President on children and armed conflict, the UN Security Council strongly condemned the forced displacement of children.[594]

615. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the UN General Assembly welcomed:

> the High Commissioner's policy on refugee children and the activities undertaken to ensure its implementation, aimed at ensuring that the specific needs of refugee children, including in particular unaccompanied minors, are fully met within the overall protection and assistance activities of the Office, in cooperation with governments and other relevant organizations.[595]

616. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN General Assembly expressed alarm at the large number of displaced persons in Sudan and made specific reference to the vulnerable situation of displaced women, children and members of minorities.[596]

617. In a resolution adopted in 1982 on women and children refugees, ECOSOC "considered the special problems of refugees [and IDPs], particularly with regard to their physical safety" and expressed "grave concern at the plight of Kampuchean children and women".[597]

618. In a resolution adopted in 1991 on refugee and displaced women and children, ECOSOC stated that it:

> Recalling that the majority of refugees and displaced persons are women and children and that a significant number of families are headed by women,
>
> Expressing its deep concern about the widespread violations of the rights of refugee and displaced women and children and their specific needs regarding protection and assistance,
>
> . . .
>
> Recognizing that ensuring equal treatment of refugee and displaced women and men may require specific action in favour of the former,
>
> . . .
>
> 2. Calls upon the international community to give priority to extending international protection to refugee women and children by implementing measures to ensure greater protection from physical violence, sexual abuse, abduction and circumstances that could force them into illegal activities;
>
> . . .
>
> 5. Encourages Member States and relevant organizations to provide access to individual identification and registration documents, on a non-discriminatory basis, to all refugee women and, wherever possible, children, irrespective of whether the women and children were accompanied by male family members.[598] [emphasis in original]

[594] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/18, 29 June 1998, § 2.
[595] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/116, 20 December 1993, § 7.
[596] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/198, 23 December 1994, preamble and § 10.
[597] ECOSOC, Res. 1982/25, 4 May 1982, preamble and § l.
[598] ECOSOC, Res. 1991/23, 30 May 1991, preamble and §§ 2 and 5.

619. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed alarm at the large number of displaced persons in Sudan and made specific reference to the vulnerable situation of displaced women, children and members of minorities.[599]

620. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all States "to ensure the early identification and registration of unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children". It also stressed "the importance of special attention for children in situations of armed conflict, in particular in the areas of health and nutrition, education and social reintegration".[600]

621. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on international protection for refugees and displaced persons, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights noted with alarm that "the situation of women and girl refugees has been grossly exacerbated, to the extent that it requires the urgent attention of the international community".[601]

622. In 1985, in its Conclusion on Refugee Women and International Protection, the UNHCR Executive Committee noted that "refugee women and girls constitute the majority of the world refugee population and that many of them are exposed to special problems in the international protection field" and recommended that States take the specificity of refugee women into account and pay special attention to their needs.[602]

623. In 1990, in its Conclusion on Refugee Women and International Protection, UNHCR Executive Committee urged States to adopt a series of practical measures in order to take into account the specificity of refugee women.[603]

624. In 1997, in its Conclusion on Refugee Children and Adolescents, the UNHCR Executive Committee called upon States and relevant parties:

> to respect and observe rights and principles that are in accordance with international human rights and humanitarian law . . . including:
>
> i) the principle of the best interests of the child;
> . . .
> iii) the right of children and adolescents to education, adequate food, and the highest attainable standard of health.[604]

[599] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/77, 8 March 1995, preamble.
[600] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, §§ 13(d) and 17(b).
[601] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/16, 16 August 2001, § 3.
[602] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 39 (XXXVI): Refugee Women and International Protection, 18 October 1985, §§ c and h.
[603] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 64 (XLI): Refugee Women and International Protection, 5 October 1990, § a.
[604] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 84 (XLVIII): Refugee Children and Adolescents, 17 October 1997, § (a)(i) and (iii); see also Conclusion No. 47 (XXXVIII): Refugee Children, 12 October 1987, § (c) and Conclusion No. 59 (XL): Refugee Children, 13 October 1989, § d.

625. In 1996, in a report on human rights and mass exoduses, the UN Secretary-General stated that "particular attention should be paid to vulnerable groups, including women, children and the elderly, in the areas of prevention, protection and assistance".[605]

626. In 1997, in a report on his mission to Mozambique, the Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons identified "female-headed households, unaccompanied children and the disabled [as] particularly vulnerable groups" requiring special attention during return.[606]

627. In a report in 1996, the UN Expert on the Impact of Armed Conflict on Children emphasised that "practical protection measures to prevent sexual violence [and] discrimination in delivery of relief materials . . . must be a priority in all assistance programmes in refugee and displaced camps".[607]

628. In 1997, in a report on human rights and mass exoduses, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights stated that "UNICEF noted that its activities focused on the protection and care of refugee and displaced women and children who were likely to become victims of gender-based discrimination, violence and exploitation".[608]

629. In 1996, in a report on a mission to Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN High Commission for Human Rights on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions highlighted several of the special problems faced by internally displaced children, including separation from family members and the fact that "like their mothers, children are a vulnerable group subject to malnutrition, diseases and various forms of physical violence, including sexual abuse and rape".[609]

630. In 1996, in a report on a mission to Rwanda, the Special Rapporteur of the UN High Commission on Human Rights for Zaire recommended that "the government must establish resettlement programmes for [IDPs] . . . covering housing, education, health and, above all, security for all, especially women and children".[610]

631. In 2001, in a report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur of [605] UN Secretary-General, Report on human rights and mass exoduses, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/42, 8 February 1996, § 119.

[606] Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons, Report on the Representative's visit to Mozambique from 23 November to 3 December 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/43/Add.1, 24 February 1997, § 87.

[607] UN Expert on the Impact of Armed Conflict on Children, Report, UN Doc. A/51/306, 26 August 1996, Annex, §§ 90, 110, 165 and 203.

[608] UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Report on human rights and mass exoduses, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/42, 14 January 1997, p. 17, § 55.

[609] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report on the Special Rapporteur's mission to Burundi from 19 to 29 April 1995, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/4/Add.1, 24 July 1996, § 82.

[610] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Zaire, Report on the Special Rapporteur's visit to Rwanda from 6 to 14 July 1996, concerning ethnic conflict in the Northern Kivu region, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/6/Add.l, 16 September 1996, § 126(j).

UN Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences stated that:

> Women and children face rape and other gender-based violence and abduction, not only during armed conflict but in flight, as well as once they have fled the conflict area. In her 1998 report, the Special Rapporteur discussed in detail the particular concerns of refugee women and the factors that impact their security differently from that of men. However, since 1997, the Special Rapporteur has become increasingly concerned with the problem of women who are internally displaced. With the epidemic of internal conflicts around the world, it has become abundantly clear that internally displaced persons (IDPs) – the majority of whom are women and children – are particularly vulnerable to violence and abuse. Unlike refugees, IDPs do not have access to legally binding international standards that are specifically designed for their protection and assistance, nor is there an international monitoring agency specifically mandated to provide protection and assistance to IDPs in the same way that UNHCR does for refugees.[611]

632. In 1998, in a report on regional development in the FRY, the UNHCR Executive Committee identified vulnerable groups such as internally displaced women, children and the elderly as policy priorities in determining the distribution of humanitarian assistance.[612]

Other International Organisations

633. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of refugees, returnees, and internally displaced persons in the Americas, the OAS General Assembly emphasised the urgency of specifically addressing the needs of women, elderly persons and children.[613]

634. In resolutions adopted in 1993 and 1995, the OAU Council of Ministers identified women, children, the elderly and the disabled as particularly vulnerable groups of displaced persons.[614]

International Conferences

635. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on the Movement and refugees in which it asked governments, UNHCR, National Societies and NGOs "to give special attention to the problems of refugees, returnees and displaced persons, particularly the most vulnerable groups".[615]

[611] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences, Report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict (1997–2000), UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/73, 23 January 2001, § 54.

[612] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Standing Committee update on regional development in the former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. EC/48/SC/CRP.10, 2 April 1998, §§ 68–69.

[613] OAS, General Assembly, Res. 1602 (XXVIII-O/98), 3 June 1998, § 4.

[614] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1448 (LVIII), 21–26 June 1993, preamble; Res. 1588 (LXII), 21–23 June 1995, preamble.

[615] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XVII, § 8.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

636. In 1998, in its consideration of the report of Peru, CEDAW expressed concern at the situation of displaced women in Peru and recommended that these women benefit from "programmes to promote their participation in the labour force together with access for them and their families to education, health care, housing, drinking water and other essential services".[616]

637. In 1999, CEDAW stated that "States parties should ensure that adequate protection and health services, including trauma treatment and counselling, are provided for women in especially difficult circumstances, such as . . . women refugees". The Committee noted with concern "the persistence of widespread violence as a result of the armed conflict" in Colombia and that "women are the principal victims and that they . . . lack the resources needed for their survival in a situation in which they are called upon to assume greater responsibilities".[617]

638. In 1993, in its preliminary observations on the report of Sudan, the CRC expressed concern at the situation of internally displaced children.[618] In its concluding observations, the CRC expressed alarm at the problems faced by homeless and displaced children.[619]

639. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Uganda, the CRC recommended that Uganda direct special attention "to refugee and internally displaced children to ensure that they have equal access to basic facilities". The Committee also recommended that, in accordance with IHL, "the State party take measures to stop the killing and abduction of children".[620]

640. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, the CRC suggested that the government be proactive in preventing any type of involuntary population movement affecting the rights of children.[621]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

641. No practice was found.

VI. Other practice

642. The Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights adopted in 1993 states that:

[616] CEDAW, Consideration of the report of Peru, UN Doc. CEDAW/C/1998/II/L.1/Add.7, 8 July 1998, §§ 23.

[617] CEDAW, Report of the Committee, 20th Session, 19 January–5 February 1999, UN Doc. A/54/38(Part I), 20 August 1999, §§ 16 and 358.

[618] CRC, Preliminary observations on the report of Sudan, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.6, 18 February 1993, §§ 9–10.

[619] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Sudan, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.10, 18 October 1993, § 14.

[620] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Uganda, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.80, 21 October 1997, §§ 34 and 37.

[621] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.69, 24 January 1997, §§ 40–42.

Crimes against women, including rape, sexual slavery and trafficking, and domestic violence, are rampant . . . In crisis situations – ethnic violence, communal riots, armed conflicts, military conflicts, military occupation and displacement – women's rights are specifically violated.[622]

643. In 1995, with regard to the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, the IIHL commented that:

Concerning categories of persons deserving special protection, we draw attention to the practice of forced displacement . . . of children into another territory, without leaving any trace, so that the identity of these children, when separated from their families, is not preserved. We propose:

In the case of the evacuation of children without their parents to a foreign country, such children should be registered with the appropriate impartial organization.[623]

International assistance to displaced persons

Note: For practice concerning access for humanitarian relief to civilians in need, see Chapter 17, section C.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

644. Article 8(b) of the 1950 Statute of the UNHCR provides that the High Commissioner shall promote the execution of any measures calculated to improve the situation of refugees.

645. Article 1(1)(b) of the 1953 Constitution of the IOM states that the purpose and functions of the IOM shall be "to concern itself with the organised transfer of refugees, displaced persons and other individuals in need of international migration services for whom arrangement may be made between the Organization and the States concerned, including those States undertaking to receive them".

Other Instruments

646. The 1992 Sarajevo Declaration on Humanitarian Treatment of Displaced Persons expressed gratitude and firm support for the role of UNHCR in assisting and protecting the displaced and called for cooperation with UNHCR and other international humanitarian organisations.

647. Paragraph 5 of the 1992 Recommendation on the Tragic Situation of Civilians in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that "persons temporarily transferred to areas other than their areas of origin should benefit, as vulnerable groups,

[622] World Conference on Human Rights, Regional Preparatory Meeting for Asia–Pacific, Bangkok, 24–28 March 1993, Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/PC/83, 19 April 1993, § 3.

[623] IIHL, Comments on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards submitted to the UN Secretary-General prepared pursuant to UN Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/29, 28 November 1995, p 10.

from international assistance, inter alia, in conformity with its mandate, by the ICRC".

648. In the 1992 General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, in order to organise necessary assistance for IDPs, the parties agreed "to seek the involvement of competent United Nations agencies . . . [as well as] the International Red Cross and other organisations".

649. Principle 25 of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement states that:

1. The primary duty and responsibility for providing humanitarian assistance to internally displaced persons lies with national authorities.
2. International humanitarian organisations and other appropriate actors have the right to offer their services in support of the internally displaced . . . Consent thereto shall not be arbitrarily withheld, particularly when authorities concerned are unable or unwilling to provide the required humanitarian assistance.
3. All authorities concerned shall grant and facilitate the free passage of humanitarian assistance and grant persons engaged in the provision of such assistance rapid and unimpeded access to the internally displaced.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

650. No practice was found.

National Legislation

651. According to Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, forcibly displaced persons have the right to ask for and receive international aid, the corollary of which is the right of the international community to provide humanitarian assistance.[624]

National Case-law

652. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

653. The Report on the Practice of France states that France considers humanitarian assistance to displaced persons to be a duty that goes beyond political structures and that humanitarian intervention is becoming an international duty, as long as it is non-discriminatory and focuses on the protection of life and health.[625]

654. In 1990, a number of government departments and NGOs in the Philippines signed a Memorandum of Agreement providing that an NGO medical

[624] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Article 2(1).
[625] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.4.

team would be given access in order to ensure the delivery of health services to IDPs located in evacuation centres or in other areas where health resources were inadequate.[626]

655. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provide that "non-Government health workers (e.g. doctors, nurses, dentists, trained community health workers and volunteer relief workers) shall be permitted to go to evacuation centres to render medical/relief assistance to evacuees".[627]

656. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights, the representative of Sudan noted that:

> his country was grappling with the problem of internally displaced persons and said that the authorities were making every effort to solve it, in particular by establishing specialized agencies and coordinating action by international humanitarian organizations.
>
> As part of its search for solutions at the domestic level, the Government had concluded an agreement with two rebel movements in the southern part of the country, which would help to solve part of the problem . . .
>
> Sudan would continue to cooperate with the International Committee of the Red Cross and voluntary organizations, including the regions to which displaced persons were returning.[628]

657. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on Rwanda, the UK welcomed the efforts being made by various UN agencies and NGOs to alleviate the suffering of IDPs. It noted that the UK government had made a "substantial commitment" to the work of these organisations.[629]

658. In 1991, during a debate in the UN Security Council, the US expressed profound concern about the plight of displaced persons and noted that the US had contributed generously to the care and maintenance of the displaced in Iraq.[630]

659. In a Joint Communiqué issued in 1992, the President and the Prime Minister of the FRY expressed strong support for "the efforts of all agencies, local and international, to relieve the plight of displaced persons in all territories of the former Yugoslavia".[631]

[626] Philippines, Memorandum of Agreement, 10 December 1990, § 1, Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 5.5.

[627] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Res. No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, § 5.

[628] Sudan, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.40, 20 May 1996, §§ 43–46.

[629] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3388, 8 June 1994, p. 8.

[630] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.2982, 5 April 1991, pp. 58–60.

[631] FRY, Joint Communiqué by the President and the Prime Minister, Belgrade, 11 September 1992, annexed to Report of the UN Secretary-General on the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. S/24795, 11 November 1992, p. 35, § 3(e).

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

660. In a resolution adopted in 1991 on repression of the Iraqi civilian population, including Kurds in Iraq, the UN Security Council asked the Secretary-General "to use all the resources at his disposal, including those of the relevant United Nations agencies, to address urgently the critical needs of the refugees and displaced Iraqi population".[632]

661. In a resolution on Tajikistan adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council noted the request "addressed to international organizations and States to provide substantial financial and material support to the refugees and internally displaced persons".[633]

662. In three resolutions adopted in 1995 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reiterated its demand that immediate and unimpeded access to displaced people be given to representatives of UNHCR, the ICRC and other international agencies.[634]

663. In a resolution adopted in 1996 concerning the Great Lakes region, the UN Security Council requested:

> the Secretary-General, in consultation with . . . the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, with the OAU, with the Special Envoy of the European Union . . .
>
> (a) to draw up a concept of operations . . . with the objectives of:
>
> – Delivering short-term humanitarian assistance and shelter to refugees and displaced persons in eastern Zaire;
> – Assisting the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees with the protection . . .
> – Establishing humanitarian corridors for the delivery of humanitarian assistance.[635]

664. In a resolution adopted in 1997 concerning eastern Zaire, the UN Security Council endorsed a plan for the "facilitation of access to humanitarian assistance" for all refugees and displaced persons.[636]

665. In a resolution on Croatia adopted in 1997, the UN Security Council welcomed "the renewed mandate of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, in particular [its] focus on . . . return of all refugees and displaced persons [and] protection of their rights".[637]

666. In 1995, in a statement by its President on Croatia, the UN Security Council called on all the parties "to cooperate fully with UNCRO, UNHCR

[632] UN Security Council, Res. 688, 5 April 1991, § 5.
[633] UN Security Council, Res. 999, 16 June 1995, § 14.
[634] UN Security Council, Res. 1010, 10 August 1995, preamble and § 1; Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble and § 2; Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, preamble and §§ 4–5.
[635] UN Security Council, Res. 1078, 9 November 1996, § 10.
[636] UN Security Council, Res. 1097, 18 February 1997, § 1.
[637] UN Security Council, Res. 1120, 14 July 1997, § 17.

and the ICRC in protecting and assisting the local civilians and any displaced persons".[638]

667. In 1997, in a statement by its President on the Great Lakes region/Zaire, the UN Security Council called upon all parties "to allow access by United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and humanitarian agencies to refugees and displaced persons".[639] In further statements by its President the same year, the UN Security Council called upon the ADFL to ensure safe and unrestricted access by humanitarian relief agencies so as to guarantee humanitarian aid and the safety of displaced persons in the areas under its control.[640]

668. In 1997, in a statement by its President on Georgia, the UN Security Council "welcomed the continued efforts by United Nations agencies and humanitarian organizations to address the urgent needs of . . . internally displaced persons" and encouraged "further contributions to that end".[641]

669. In 1997, in a statement by its President on the DRC, the UN Security Council called for access for humanitarian assistance to be facilitated and for the rights of refugees and displaced persons to be fully respected.[642]

670. In 1991, in a report to the UN Security Council concerning the situation in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Secretary-General reported that the ICRC had opened offices in affected areas and had been able "to provide assistance to about 60,000 displaced persons through its family parcels programme".[643]

671. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly requested the Secretary-General:

> to pursue his humanitarian efforts in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), working through the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, other appropriate humanitarian organizations and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, with a view to assist in the voluntary return of the displaced persons to their homes in conditions of safety and dignity.[644]

672. In 1994, in its Conclusion on Internally Displaced Persons, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR:

> Calls upon the international community, in appropriate circumstances, to provide timely and speedy humanitarian assistance and support to countries affected by internal displacement to help them fulfil their responsibility towards the displaced . . .

[638] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/26, 4 May 1995.
[639] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/11, 7 March 1997, p. 1.
[640] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/19, 4 April 1997, p. 1; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/22, 24 April 1997, p. 1.
[641] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/25, 8 May 1997, p. 2.
[642] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/31, 29 May 1997, p. 2.
[643] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to paragraph 3 of Security Council resolution 713 (1991), UN Doc. S/23169, 25 October 1991, Annex IV, § 2.
[644] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 26.

Recognizes that actions by the international community, in consultation and coordination with the concerned State, on behalf of the internally displaced may contribute to the easing of tensions and the resolution of problems resulting in displacement, and constitute important components of a comprehensive approach to the prevention and solution of refugee problems.[645]

673. In 1997, in a report on his visit to Mozambique, the Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons stated that "realizing its limited capacity to deliver the necessary humanitarian assistance, the Government requested support from the international community, and several United Nations organizations became involved in the mid-1980s".[646]

674. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan stated that:

The international community was duty-bound to provide emergency assistance to the victims of the Afghan conflict . . . Minimum food, shelter and sanitation requirements must be provided immediately to those living in refugee camps and villages, and to returnees. The international community should continue to provide, and indeed increase, humanitarian assistance in the form of mine-clearance, support for voluntary repatriation, food, health, sanitation projects and other rehabilitation programmes.[647]

675. In 1996, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement in Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that "the leading role for implementation of [the Agreement] belongs to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR)", with the active support of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights.[648]

Other International Organisations

676. In several resolutions adopted in 1996, the OAU called upon the international community to provide refugees and displaced persons with humanitarian assistance.[649]

International Conferences

677. No practice was found.

[645] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 75 (XLV): Internally Displaced Persons, 11 October 1994, §§ f and h.

[646] Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons, Report on the Representative's visit to Mozambique from 23 November to 3 December 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/43/Add.1, 24 February 1997, § 49.

[647] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, 16 April 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.42, 22 April 1996, § 19 .

[648] High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/190, 14 March 1996, Annex, § 69.

[649] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1649 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, § 12; Res. 1650 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, § 11; Res. 1653 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, § 7.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

678. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

679. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

680. No practice was found.

D. Return of Displaced Persons

Conditions for return

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

681. Article 45 GC IV provides that "protected persons shall not be transferred to a Power which is not party to the Convention. This provision shall in no way constitute an obstacle to the repatriation of protected persons, or to their return to their country of residence after the cessation of hostilities."

682. Article 49, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "persons . . . evacuated shall be transferred back to their homes as soon as hostilities in the area in question have ceased".

683. Article III(59)(a) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that:

> All civilians who, at the time this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, are in territory under the military control of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and who, on 24 June 1950, resided north of the Military Demarcation Line established in this Armistice Agreement shall, if they desire to return home, be permitted and assisted by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, to return to the area north of the Military Demarcation Line; and all civilians who, at the time this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, are in territory under military control of the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, and who, on 24 June 1950, resided south of the Military Demarcation Line established in this Armistice Agreement shall, if they desire to return home, be permitted and assisted by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers to return to the area south of the Military Demarcation Line.

Article III(59)(b) contains similar provisions for civilians of foreign nationality.

684. Article 3 of the 1963 Protocol 4 to the ECHR provides that "no one shall be deprived of the right to enter the territory of the State of which he is a national".

685. Article 12(4) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of the right to enter his own country".

686. Article 5(1) of the 1969 Convention Governing Refugee Problems in Africa (which expressly applies in situations of armed conflict) provides that "the essentially voluntary character of repatriation shall be respected in all cases and no refugee shall be repatriated against his will".
687. Article 22(5) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "no one shall be deprived of the right to enter the territory of the State of which he is a national".
688. Article 12(2) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "every individual shall have the right . . . to return to his country. This right may only be subject to restrictions, provided for by law for the protection of national security, law and order, public health or morality."
689. Article 3 of the 1984 Convention against Torture provides that "no State Party shall expel or return . . . a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be in danger of being subjected to torture".
690. Article 16 of the 1989 Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention states that "whenever possible, [displaced] peoples shall have the right to return to their traditional lands, as soon as the grounds for relocation cease to exist".
691. Article 1 of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that:

> All refugees and displaced persons have the right to freely return to their homes of origin . . . The early return of refugees and displaced persons is an important objective of the settlement of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina . . . Choice of destination shall be up to the individual or family . . . The parties shall not interfere with the returnees' choice of destination nor shall they compel them to remain in or move to situations of serious danger or insecurity, or to areas lacking the basic infrastructure necessary to resume a normal life.

Other Instruments
692. Article 13(2) of the 1948 UDHR states that "everybody has the right . . . to return to his country".
693. The 1992 Sarajevo Declaration on Humanitarian Treatment of Displaced Persons affirms that "voluntary return with full guarantees of security and non-discrimination is the basic right of the displaced and the best means to achieve a lasting solution to their plight".
694. Paragraph 4(b) of the 1992 Recommendation on the Tragic Situation of Civilians in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "each party to the conflict guarantees to those who leave temporarily the territory it controls . . . that they have the right to return home at a later stage if they wish so".
695. In Paragraph 1 of the 1997 Protocol on Tajik Refugees, it was agreed "to step up mutual efforts to ensure the voluntary return, in safety and dignity, of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes". The parties also called upon:

> the United Nations, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to provide assistance in order to ensure the safety of returning refugees and displaced persons and to establish and expand their presence at places where such persons are living.

696. Paragraph 3(a) of Chapter 4 of the 1997 Sudan Peace Agreement created several administrative structures designed, inter alia, "to assist, repatriate, resettle and rehabilitate the displaced and the returnees". Under Paragraph 2 of Chapter 5 of the agreement, one of the functions of the proposed Coordinating Council for the Southern States was the "voluntary repatriation of the returnees and the displaced".
697. Principle 6(3) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement states that "displacement shall last no longer than required by the circumstances".
698. Principle 15(d) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement states that IDPs have "the right to be protected against forcible return to or resettlement in any place where their life, safety, liberty and/or health would be at risk".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

699. Argentina's Law of War Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[650]
700. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that the evacuation of civilian persons should be "limited in time", i.e. the return should be rapid.[651]
701. Hungary's Military Manual provides that the evacuation of civilian persons should be "limited in time", i.e. the return should be rapid.[652]
702. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "temporarily removed persons . . . must be allowed to return or be brought back to their previous location".[653]
703. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "temporarily displaced persons . . . should be allowed to return to their previous location".[654]
704. The Military Directive to Commanders of the Philippines provides that "displaced persons and evacuees shall be allowed and/or persuaded to return to their homes as quickly as tactical considerations permit".[655]
705. Spain's LOAC Manual reproduces Article 49 GC IV.[656]
706. The UK Military Manual provides that if the occupant does transfer protected persons outside the limits of occupied territories, then "as soon as hostilities in the area in question have ceased, they must be transferred back to their homes".[657]
707. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 45 and 49 GC IV.[658]

[650] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008.
[651] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 62. [652] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 98.
[653] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 13.
[654] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 8-SO, § A.
[655] Philippines, Military Directive to Commanders (1988), § 3(e).
[656] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.5.c.(5).
[657] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 560.
[658] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 284 and 382.

National Legislation

708. Angola's Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations provides that:

> It is the responsibility of the Provincial Governments, through the Sub-Groups on Displaced Persons and Refugees of the Provincial Humanitarian Coordination Groups, to carry out the following:
>
> ...
>
> f) To verify the voluntary nature of resettlement and return and the presence of the State Administration;
>
> ...
>
> h) To take appropriate measures to ensure ... the safety and dignity of populations during movements to return and resettlement sites.[659]

709. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[660]

710. According to Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, forcibly displaced persons have the right to return to their places of origin.[661]

711. Ethiopia's Transitional Period Charter provided that priority should be given to the rehabilitation of those sections of the population who had been forcibly uprooted by the previous regime's policy of villagisation and resettlement and that the rehabilitation would be carried out in accordance with their wishes.[662]

712. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 45 and 49 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[663]

713. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended punishes anyone who, in situations of armed conflict, prevents civilians from returning to the territory of the State if they so wish after the termination of hostilities.[664]

714. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[665]

National Case-law

715. No practice was found.

[659] Angola, Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations (2001), Article 2(f) and (h), see also Article 4 (security of site) and Article 5 (voluntary resettlement and return).
[660] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[661] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Articles 2(6) and 10(6).
[662] Ethiopia, Transitional Period Charter (1991), Article 14, p. 4.
[663] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[664] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 343.
[665] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

Other National Practice

716. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights in relation to Cyprus, Angola stated that "all restrictions preventing refugees and displaced persons from returning home should be lifted".[666]

717. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, Brazil stated that "the displaced persons and refugees have a right to return to their homes in conditions of safety".[667]

718. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, Croatia welcomed "the pilot projects for the return of displaced persons to their homes in the occupied areas".[668]

719. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, the Czech Republic stated that "the right of refugees to return to their homes is a crucial right".[669]

720. In 1996, during a debate in to the UN Commission on Human Rights in relation to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Egypt stated that "refugees and displaced persons must be allowed to return to their homes".[670]

721. In 1993 and 1995, during debates in the UN Security Council on the situation in Georgia and in the former Yugoslavia respectively, France supported the right to return of refugees and displaced persons.[671]

722. According to the Report on the Practice of France, the free return of refugees is a frequent preoccupation of French diplomacy. France often asks for this right to be guaranteed and considers a contrary attitude to be "unacceptable".[672]

723. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia supported the right of refugees and displaced persons to return in safety and emphasised that "nothing can change [its] resolve to achieve the unconditional and timely return of the refugees to their homes".[673]

724. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Tajikistan, the representative of Honduras stated that his government was "pleased to see that the Government of Tajikistan has committed itself to [666] Angola, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.46, 22 May 1996, § 6.

[667] Brazil, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3354, 25 March 1994, p. 5.
[668] Croatia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3434, 30 September 1994, p. 3.
[669] Czech Republic, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3354, 25 March 1994, p. 4.
[670] Egypt, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.47, 17 April 1996, § 35.
[671] France, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3295, 19 October 1993, p. 4; Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, p. 10.
[672] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.5.
[673] Georgia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3535, 12 May 1995, p. 3.

assisting the return and reintegration of refugees and displaced persons in dignity and safety".[674]

725. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Tajikistan, Indonesia called upon the parties to intensify their efforts "to ensure the voluntary return, in dignity and safety, of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes".[675]

726. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, Italy stressed "the need to guarantee the safe return of refugees".[676]

727. In 1994, in statements before the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, New Zealand stated that it understood "the concern of the Government of Georgia for the problems associated with the return of . . . refugees to their homes. Displaced persons must be able to resume their ordinary lives without fear of violence or intimidation."[677]

728. In 1994 and 1995, in statements before the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, Nigeria stated that:

> The issue of the return of the refugees and displaced persons is crucial to the settlement of the Georgian-Abkhaz conflict. The current situation, in which both the Government of Georgia and the Abkhaz authorities are unable to guarantee the safety of the displaced persons and protection of the repatriated . . . is unfortunate and should be reversed.[678]

729. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provides that "evacuees shall be returned to their houses at government expense as soon as the reason for evacuation ceases".[679]

730. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Croatia, Russia stated that "the Serbian inhabitants of Krajina must have the right to return in conditions of safety".[680]

731. In 1992, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, Tunisia stated that it was essential to "enable all the displaced and deported persons to return to their homes".[681]

[674] Honduras, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3544, 16 June 1995, pp. 4–5.
[675] Indonesia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3544, 16 June 1995, pp. 4–5.
[676] Italy, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3535, 12 May 1995, p. 5.
[677] New Zealand, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3332, 31 January 1994, p. 13.
[678] Nigeria, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3535, 12 May 1995, p. 8.
[679] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Res. No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, § 8.
[680] Russia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, p. 8.
[681] Tunisia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3137, 16 November 1992, p. 66.

732. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, the UK stated that the "safe return [of displaced persons] will be a vital ingredient in restoring peace and stability in Georgia".[682]
733. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Abkhazia, the US supported the extension of UNOMIG's mandate, which included the contribution "to conditions conducive to the safe and orderly return of refugees and displaced persons".[683]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
734. In a resolution adopted in 1974 on emergency UN humanitarian assistance to Cyprus, the UN Security Council urged the parties concerned to take measures "to permit persons who wish to do so to return to their homes in safety".[684]
735. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council, strongly condemning the deportation of 12 Palestinian civilians from the occupied territories, requested that Israel refrain from deporting any more Palestinian civilians from the occupied territories and that it "ensure the safe and immediate return to the occupied territories of all those deported".[685]
736. In a resolution adopted in 1992 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council endorsed the principles agreed by the Presidents of Croatia and the SFRY on 30 September 1992 that "all displaced persons have the right to return in peace to their former homes".[686] These principles were reaffirmed in a resolution adopted in 1993.[687]
737. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council affirmed the continuing relevance of "the recognition and the right of all displaced persons to return to their homes in safety and honour".[688]
738. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the settlement of the conflict in and around Nagorno-Karabakh, the UN Security Council requested the Secretary-General and the relevant international agencies "to assist refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes in security and dignity".[689]
739. In numerous resolutions adopted between 1994 and 1999 on the situation in Georgia, the UN Security Council affirmed "the right of all refugees and [682] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3332, 31 January 1994, p. 9.

[683] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3535, 12 May 1995, p. 13.
[684] UN Security Council, Res. 361, 30 August 1974, § 4.
[685] UN Security Council, Res. 726, 6 January 1992, §§ 1, 3 and 4.
[686] UN Security Council, Res. 779, 6 October 1992, § 5.
[687] UN Security Council, Res. 820 A, 17 April 1993, § 7.
[688] UN Security Council, Res. 859, 24 August 1993, § 6(d).
[689] UN Security Council, Res. 874, 14 October 1993, § 11.

displaced persons affected by the conflict to return to their homes in secure conditions".[690]

740. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council affirmed "the right of all displaced persons to return voluntarily to their homes of origin in safety and dignity with the assistance of the international community".[691]

741. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council welcomed:

> the obligation assumed by the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan to assist the return and the reintegration of refugees as well as the obligations by the parties to cooperate in ensuring the voluntary return, in dignity and safety, of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes.[692]

742. In a resolution adopted in 1996 concerning the situation in the Great Lakes region, the UN Security Council underlined "the urgent need for the orderly and voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees, and the return of internally displaced persons, which are crucial elements for the stability of the region".[693]

743. In a resolution adopted in 1998 concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, the UN Security Council demanded in particular that the Abkhaz authorities "allow the unconditional and immediate return of all persons displaced since the resumption of hostilities in May 1998".[694]

744. In several resolutions on Kosovo adopted in 1998 and 1999, the UN Security Council reaffirmed the right of all refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes in safety.[695]

745. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN Security Council stressed that it was the responsibility of the Indonesian authorities "to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the safe return of refugees to East Timor".[696]

746. In 1994, in a statement by its President on Rwanda, the UN Security Council stated that "the rapid return of the refugees and displaced persons to their homes is essential for the normalization of the situation in Rwanda" and strongly condemned "attempts to intimidate refugees carried out by those who are seeking to prevent them from returning to Rwanda".[697]

747. In several statements by its President on the situation in Georgia between 1994 and 1996, the UN Security Council expressed its deep concerns "at the [690] UN Security Council, Res. 896, 31 January 1994, § 11; Res. 906, 25 March 1994, § 3; Res. 993, 12 May 1995, preamble; Res. 1036, 12 January 1996, preamble; Res. 1096, 30 January 1997, § 8; Res. 1124, 31 July 1997, § 11; Res. 1225, 28 January 1999, § 7.

[691] UN Security Council, Res. 947, 30 September 1994, § 7.
[692] UN Security Council, Res. 999, 16 June 1995, §§ 8 and 14.
[693] UN Security Council, Res. 1078, 9 November 1996, preamble.
[694] UN Security Council, Res. 1187, 30 July 1998, § 3.
[695] UN Security Council, Res. 1199, 23 September 1998, preamble; Res. 1203, 24 October 1998, § 12; Res. 1239, 14 May 1999, § 4; Res. 1244, 10 June 1999, preamble.
[696] UN Security Council, Res. 1272, 25 October 1999, § 12.
[697] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/42, 10 August 1994, pp. 1–2.

continued obstruction to the return of the refugees and displaced persons by the Abkhaz authorities" and reiterated its call to the Abkhaz authorities "to guarantee the safety of all returnees and to regularize the status of spontaneous returnees".[698]

748. In 1996, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council urged the government of Croatia "to expand its programme to accelerate the return of [the displaced] persons without preconditions or delay".[699]

749. In 1996, in a statement by is President on the Great Lakes region/Zaire, the UN Security Council underlined "the urgent need for the orderly voluntary repatriation and resettlement of refugees, and the return of displaced persons".[700]

750. In 1997, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council called upon "the Government of Burundi to allow the people to return to their homes without any hindrance".[701]

751. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the UN General Assembly urged all States and relevant organizations "to support the High Commissioner's search for durable solutions to refugee problems, including voluntary repatriation, integration in the country of asylum and resettlement in a third country, as appropriate," and welcomed "in particular the ongoing efforts of her Office to pursue wherever possible opportunities to promote conditions conducive to the preferred solution of voluntary repatriation".[702]

752. In resolutions adopted in 1994 and 1995, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed the right of refugees and displaced persons from the areas of conflict in the territory of the former Yugoslavia "to return voluntarily to their homes in safety and dignity".[703]

753. In two resolutions adopted in 1998 and 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly called upon the authorities of the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro) and ethnic Albanian leaders "to allow for and facilitate the free and unhindered return to their homes, in safety and with dignity, of all internally displaced persons and refugees".[704]

754. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on assistance to Georgia in the field of human rights, the UN Commission on Human Rights appealed to those in [698] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/78, 2 December 1994; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/39, 18 August 1995; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/43, 22 October 1996, p. 2.

[699] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/39, 20 September 1996.

[700] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/44, 1 November 1996.

[701] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/32, 30 May 1997.

[702] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/116, 20 December 1993, § 10.

[703] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/10, 3 November 1994, § 9; Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 12.

[704] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 23; Res. 54/183, 17 December 1999, § 11.

control of the territory of Abkhazia "to implement and ensure law and order, to . . . ensure the right of displaced persons to return to Abkhazia".[705]

755. In a resolution adopted in 1997 on human rights in the occupied Syrian Golan, the UN Commission on Human Rights emphasised that "the displaced persons of the population of the occupied Syrian Golan must be allowed to return to their homes".[706]

756. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the government of Croatia to facilitate "the expeditious return, in safety and dignity, of all refugees and displaced persons to their homes". It also insisted that the government of the FRY "allow the return in safety and dignity of ethnic Albanian refugees to Kosovo".[707] In a number of other resolutions adopted in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the Commission stressed the right of IDPs to return to their homes.[708]

757. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the situation of human rights in East Timor, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the government of Indonesia "to guarantee the voluntary return of all refugees and displaced persons, including those who have been forcibly displaced to camps in West Timor".[709]

758. In a decision adopted in 1992 on the situation of human rights in Yugoslavia, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights demanded that "displaced people be given the opportunity to return to their homes".[710]

759. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended that "the United Nations and all Governments take measures to enable all refugees, deportees and displaced persons to return safely to their homes".[711]

760. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed "the right of all refugees, as defined in relevant international legal instruments, and internally displaced persons to return to their homes and places of habitual residence in their country and/or place of origin, should they so wish".[712]

761. In 1980, in its Conclusion on Voluntary Repatriation, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR recognized that "voluntary repatriation constitutes generally . . . the most appropriate solution for refugee problems" and stressed

[705] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/59, 4 March 1994, § 5.
[706] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1997/2, 26 March 1997, § 2.
[707] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/79, 22 April 1998, §§ 10(b), 14(a) and 25(c).
[708] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/S-2/1, 1 December 1992, § 4; Res. 1994/75, 9 March 1994, § 5; Res. 1995/89, 8 March 1995, § 8; Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 21.
[709] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/S-4/1, 27 September 1999, § 5(d).
[710] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Decision 1992/103, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1992/58, 14 October 1992, § (c).
[711] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, § 5.
[712] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/26, 22 August 1998, § 1.

that "the essentially voluntary character of repatriation should always be respected". It also called upon governments of countries of origin "to provide formal guarantees for the safety of returning refugees".[713] The Committee completed these findings in other conclusions on voluntary repatriation in 1985 and further reaffirmed the necessity of removing the causes of refugee movements and to tackle this problem internationally.[714]

762. In 1995, in its Conclusion on Voluntary Repatriation to Afghanistan, the Executive Committee of UNHCR urged the parties to the conflict in Afghanistan to come to a political settlement, "thus allowing for the return of Afghan refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity".[715]

763. In 1994, in a report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, the UN Secretary-General reported that "regarding the refugees and displaced persons, UNHCR seeks to maintain internationally accepted principles and practices for their voluntary repatriation and return, which do not allow screening mechanisms".[716]

764. In January 1995, in a report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, the UN Secretary-General reported that "the Abkhaz side had refused to sign a declaration that would have allowed for a speedier return and in larger numbers [of refugees and IDPs]. It did, however, agree to reduce the review period for the consideration of application [for return] from four to two weeks."[717] In a further report in May, the Secretary-General noted that a proposal by Abkhazia to register spontaneous returnees and to consider UNHCR-sponsored returnees at the rate of 200 per week was rejected by UNHCR as not meeting the requirements of the return timetable agreed to by all parties – except the Abkhaz side – during talks in February 1995.[718]

765. In several reports between 1994 and 1997 on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stressed the right to voluntary return of IDPs.[719]

766. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human [713] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 18 (XXXI): Voluntary Repatriation, 16 October 1980, §§ (a), (b) and (f).

[714] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 40 (XXXVI): Voluntary Repatriation, 18 October 1985, §§ (c), (d) and (k).

[715] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion on Voluntary Repatriation to Afghanistan, UN Doc. A/50/12/Add.1, 1 November 1995, § 29(d).

[716] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, UN Doc. S/1994/312, 18 March 1994, § 8.

[717] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, UN Doc. S/1995/10, 6 January 1995, § 3.

[718] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, UN Doc. S/1995/342, 1 May 1995, pp. 2–3.

[719] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Seventh periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/4, 10 June 1994, § 23; Special report on minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/8, 25 October 1996, § 83; Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/56, 29 January 1997, §§ 14–19.

Rights stated that the authorities should not make the return of refugees and IDPs conditional upon reciprocal returns being allowed in other areas.[720]

767. In 1996, in a special periodic report on minorities in the context of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights reported that in discussions with the authorities in the former Yugoslavia, she had stressed that the different government agencies had the responsibility of assisting displaced persons to return to their homes in safety and dignity.[721]

768. In 1997, in his final report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements proposed a draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers for adoption by the UN Commission on Human Rights. Article 4(3) of the draft declaration provided that "all persons thus displaced shall be allowed to return to their homes, lands, or places of origin immediately upon cessation of the conditions which made their displacement imperative". Article 8 provided that "every person has the right to return voluntarily, and in safety and dignity, to the country of origin and, within it, to the place of origin or choice".[722]

769. In a report in 1996, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina reiterated that "enabling refugees to return is important for a large number of reasons, including the creation of the conditions that will make the holding of free and fair elections possible".[723]

Other International Organisations

770. The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe has adopted several resolutions and recommendations emphasising the right of displaced persons to return voluntarily and in safety to their homes in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Transcaucasian region, Serbia and Montenegro, the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, and Georgia.[724] For example, in a recommendation adopted in 1996 in the context of the former Yugoslavia, the Assembly stated that "all

[720] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Eighth periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/10, 4 August 1994, § 10; Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Tenth periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/57, 16 January 1995, § 22.

[721] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Special periodic report on minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/8, 25 October 1996, §§ 81–83.

[722] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, Annex II, Draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers, Articles 4(3) and 8.

[723] High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/190, 14 March 1996, Annex, §§ 68-73.

[724] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1010, 28 September 1993, § 12(i)(c) and (vii); Res. 1047, 10 November 1994, § 6; Res. 1066, 27 September 1995, § 9; Rec. 1305, 24 September 1996, § 8(iii)(a); Res. 1119, 22 April 1997, §§ 5(iv) and 10.

displaced persons have the right to return to their original homes" and stressed that "such returns are an essential element of reconstruction, but that they must be voluntary".[725]

771. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation in Abkhazia, the European Parliament stressed the importance of the right of all IDPs to return voluntarily to their places of origin or residence, irrespective of their ethnic, social or political affiliation, under conditions of complete safety and dignity.[726]

772. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights, Italy, speaking on behalf of the EU, called for "a peaceful settlement to the conflicts in Abkhazia and South Ossetia in order, inter alia, to allow the return of refugees and displaced persons".[727]

773. In 1995, during a debate in the OSCE Permanent Council on the situation in Chechnya, France stated, on behalf of the EU, that "civilians must have the choice to leave this hell if they wish, being understood that the right to return to their homes of these refugees and displaced persons shall not be later limited".[728]

774. In a declaration on Kosovo adopted in 1998, the European Council called upon the FRY President "to facilitate the full return to their homes of refugees and displaced persons".[729]

775. In the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council registered:

> its appreciation for Resolution 799 adopted by the UN Security Council which strongly condemned the mass expulsion by the Israeli Occupation Forces of hundreds of Palestinian civilians . . . and called on the Israeli Authorities to ensure an immediate and safe return of all those expelled to the occupied territories.

It called on the UN Security Council "to do all that it deems necessary . . . to ensure a speedy return of the expelled civilians to their Homeland".[730]

776. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1992, the Council of the League of Arab States decided to call upon the Serb forces to make "all necessary arrangements to allow for the repatriation of the refugees to their homes".[731]

777. In a decision on Georgia adopted in 1998, the OSCE Ministerial Council stated that, amongst others, "monitoring of the smooth and safe return of [725] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1287, 24 January 1996, §§ 2–3.

[726] European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in Abkhazia, 20 November 1996, § 5.
[727] EU, Statement by Italy on behalf of the EU before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.45, 17 April 1996, § 10.
[728] EU, Statement by France on behalf of the EU before the Permanent Council of the OSCE, Vienna, 2 February 1995, Politique étrangère de la France, February 1995, p. 154.
[729] European Council, Declaration on Kosovo, 15 June 1998.
[730] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, pp. 6–7.
[731] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5231, 13 September 1992, § 5.

refugees" can contribute to a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia.[732]

International Conferences

778. The Comprehensive Plan of Action adopted by consensus by the International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees in 1989 provided that:

> Persons determined not to be refugees should return to their country of origin in accordance with international practices reflecting the responsibilities of States towards their own citizens. In the first instance, every effort will be made to encourage the voluntary return of such persons.[733]

779. The governments represented at the International Conference on Central American Refugees in 1989 reaffirmed "their commitment to encourage the voluntary return of refugees and other persons displaced by the crisis, under conditions of personal security and dignity that would allow them to resume a normal life".[734]

780. The Chairman's Conclusions of the Florence Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1996 stated that "the right of return home of people who have been either displaced or have fled the country is a basic principle of the Peace Agreement which cannot be abridged". The Conclusions further stated that "the creation of conditions for free and safe return, permitting the lifting of temporary protection, is now an urgent matter affecting political and economical viability of the country" and recommended urgent action with regard to "removal of legal and administrative obstacles to the return of refugees and displaced persons".[735]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

781. In a general recommendation adopted in 1996, CERD emphasised that "States parties are obliged to ensure that the return of . . . refugees and displaced persons is voluntary".[736]

782. In a decision on the FRY adopted in 1998, CERD reaffirmed that "all people who have been displaced or have become refugees have the right to return safely to their homes".[737]

[732] OSCE, Ministerial Council, Seventh Meeting, Oslo, December 1998, Decision on Georgia, Doc. MC(7).DEC/1, fifth paragraph.

[733] International Conference on Indo-Chinese Refugees, Geneva, 13–14 June 1989, Comprehensive Plan of Action, § 12, see also §§ 14–15.

[734] International Conference on Central American Refugees (CIREFCA), Guatemala City, 29–31 May 1989, Declaration and Concerted Plan of Action, UN Doc. CIREFCA/89/14, 31 May 1989, § I(3), see also § II(10), (21), (28) and (30).

[735] Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Florence, 13–14 June 1996, Chairman's Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 9 July 1996 from the UN Secretary-General to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1996/542, 10 July 1996, Appendix I, §§ 11 and 13.

[736] CERD, General Recommendation XXII (Article 5 of the Convention and refugees and displaced persons), 1996, § 2.

[737] CERD, Decision 3(53) on the FRY, UN Doc. A/53/18 p. 19, 17 August 1998, § 3.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

783. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "persons . . . evacuated must be transferred back to their homes as soon as hostilities in the concerned area have ceased" and that "temporarily removed persons must be allowed to return".[738]

VI. Other Practice

784. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "persons or groups . . . displaced shall be allowed to return to their homes as soon as the conditions which made their displacement imperative have ceased".[739]

785. In 1995, with respect to the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, the IIHL commented that "in no case shall [refugees and displaced persons] be expelled or return, in any manner whatsoever, to the frontiers where their lives or freedom would be threatened on account of their race, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion".[740]

Measures to facilitate return and reintegration

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

786. Article III(59)(d)(1) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that:

[The Committee for Assisting the Return of Displaced Civilians] shall, under the general supervision and direction of the Military Armistice Commission, be responsible for coordinating the specific plans of both sides for assistance to the return of the above-mentioned civilians, and for supervising the execution by both sides of all of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement relating to all the return of the above-mentioned civilians. It shall be the duty of this Committee to make necessary arrangements, including those of transportation, for expediting and coordinating the movement of the above-mentioned civilians; to select the crossing point(s) through which the above-mentioned civilians will cross the Military Demarcation Line; to arrange for security at the crossing point(s); and to carry out such other functions as are required to accomplish the return of the above-mentioned civilians.

[738] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 835(2) and 546.

[739] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 7(1), IRRC, No. 282, p. 333.

[740] IIHL, Comments on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards submitted to the UN Secretary-General pursuant to UN Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/29, 28 November 1995, p 10.

787. Article V of the 1969 Convention Governing Refugee Problems in Africa provides that:

2. The country of asylum, in collaboration with the country of origin, shall make adequate arrangements for the safe return of refugees who request repatriation.
3. The country of origin, on receiving back refugees, shall facilitate their resettlement and grant them the full rights and privileges of nationals of the country, and subject them to the same obligations.
4. Refugees who voluntarily return to their country shall in no way be penalized for having left it for any of the reasons giving rise to refugee situations. Whenever necessary, an appeal shall be made through national information media and through the Administrative Secretary-General of the OAU, inviting refugees to return home and giving assurance that the new circumstances prevailing in their country of origin will enable them to return without risk and to take up a normal and peaceful life without fear of being disturbed or punished, and that the text of such appeal should be given to refugees and clearly explained to them by their country of asylum.
5. Refugees who freely decide to return to their homeland, as a result of such assurances or on their own initiative, shall be given every possible assistance by the country of asylum, the country of origin, voluntary agencies and international and intergovernmental organizations, to facilitate their return.

788. In paragraph 5 of the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties decided that:

The principal tasks of the [Quadripartite] Commission shall be to formulate, discuss and approve plans to implement programmes for safe, orderly and voluntary repatriation of the refugees and displaced persons . . . and for their successful reintegration. Such plans should include registration, transport, basic material assistance for a period of up to six months and rehabilitation assistance.

789. The 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that:

Article I. Rights of Refugees and Displaced Persons

. . .

2. The Parties shall ensure that refugees and displaced persons are permitted to return in safety, without risk of harassment, intimidation, persecution, or discrimination . . .
3. The Parties shall take all necessary steps to prevent activities within their territories which would hinder or impede the safe and voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons . . .

Article II. Creation of Suitable Conditions for Return

1. The Parties undertake to create in their territories the political, economic and social conditions conducive to the voluntary return and harmonious reintegration of refugees and displaced persons. The Parties shall provide all possible assistance to refugees and displaced persons and work to facilitate their voluntary return in a peaceful, orderly and phased manner.

790. Article 7 of the 1996 Agreement on the Normalisation of Relations between Croatia and the FRY specifies that "the Contracting Parties shall ensure conditions for a free and safe return of . . . displaced persons to their places of residence or other places that they freely choose".

791. The 1997 Agreement of the Joint Working Group on Operational Procedures of Return, concluded between Croatia, UNTAES and UNHCR, provided that until conditions were created for the safe return of Croatian citizens to their places of origin, displaced persons could remain in the houses they were occupying. Under the agreement, all Croatian citizens wishing to return to their homes were first required to register with the Office of Displaced Persons and Refugees (ODPR). The agreement contained a number of detailed conditions that had to be fulfilled by returnees in cooperation with the ODPR, UNTAES and the UNHCR. The agreement made provision for expediting the process of return in principle and stipulated that the confirmation of arrangements for return would be issued within 15 calendar days of registration with the ODPR and that the return should take place as soon as possible thereafter.

Other Instruments

792. Article 9 of the 1950 Statute of the UNHCR provides that "the High Commissioner shall engage in such additional activities, including repatriation and resettlement, as the UN General Assembly may determine".

793. In paragraphs 2 and 3 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding between Iraq and the UN, Iraq welcomed the efforts of the UN to promote the voluntary return home of Iraqi displaced persons and agreed that measures to be taken for the benefit of displaced persons should be based primarily on their personal safety and the provision of humanitarian assistance and relief for their return and normalisation of their lives in their places of origin.

794. Paragraph 2 of the Joint Declaration by the Presidents of the FRY and Croatia (September 1992) states that:

> Authorities of the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, in close collaboration with the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR), will undertake urgent, joint measures to ensure the peaceful return to their homes in the United Nations protected areas of all persons displaced therefrom who so wish. To that end, they propose the prompt establishment of a quadripartite mechanism – consisting of authorities of the Government of Croatia, local Serb representatives, representatives of UNPROFOR and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) – to ensure that this process moves forwards.

795. Paragraph 3 of the Joint Declaration by the Presidents of the FRY and Croatia (October 1992) reaffirmed that the priority task of the quadripartite mechanism established in Paragraph 2 of their Joint Declaration (September 1992) "should be to organize and facilitate the return and the resettlement, under humane conditions, of displaced persons and groups".

796. In Article 18(1) of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia, the parties committed themselves "to create the conditions that will allow all refugees and displaced persons to, respectively, voluntarily repatriate and return to Liberia to their places of origin or habitual residence under conditions of safety and dignity".

797. Article 23(D) of the 1993 Arusha Peace Accords and Articles 36 and 42 of the 1993 Arusha Protocol on Displaced Persons provide that displaced persons have a right to humanitarian assistance in order to facilitate their resettlement.

798. Paragraph 6 of the 1993 Afghan Peace Accord provides that "effective steps shall be taken to facilitate the return of displaced persons to their respective homes and locations".

799. Paragraph 6(iii)(1) of Chapter 4 of the 1997 Sudan Peace Agreement created several administrative structures designed, inter alia, "to assist, repatriate, resettle and rehabilitate the displaced and the returnees".

800. Principle 28 of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement states that:

1. Competent authorities have the primary duty and responsibility to establish conditions, as well as provide the means, which allow internally displaced persons to return voluntarily, in safety and with dignity, to their homes or places of habitual residence, or to resettle voluntarily in another part of the country. Such authorities shall endeavour to facilitate the reintegration of returned or resettled internally displaced persons.
2. Special efforts should be made to ensure the full participation of internally displaced persons in the planning and management of their return or resettlement and reintegration.

801. In paragraph 70 of the 2000 Cairo Plan of Action, African and EU heads of State and government, in order to address the problem of refugees and displaced persons, agreed "to continue to provide assistance to refugees and displaced persons and to participate in their reintegration in conformity with international law and relevant UN Conventions".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

802. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that at the end of the conflict, the parties have a duty to "facilitate the return of the displaced population and to provide them with protection and humanitarian assistance".[741]

National Legislation

803. Angola's Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations provides that:

It is the responsibility of the Provincial Governments, through the Sub-Groups on Displaced Persons and Refugees of the Provincial Humanitarian Coordination Groups, to carry out the following:

[741] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 31.

a) To plan, organize and ensure the implementation of all resettlement and return processes for displaced persons;
b) To receive new internally displaced persons and returnees and direct them to the reception centres;
...
d) To identify resettlement and return sites;
e) To monitor the overall resettlement and return process, ensuring the implementation of the norms on the resettlement of internally displaced populations;
...
g) To guarantee adequate transportation to assist populations returning to their points of origin.[742]

804. Under Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, a National System of Integral Care for the Displaced Population on Account of Violence was created in order to facilitate the integration of displaced persons in Colombian society. A National Plan was also established in order to, inter alia, adopt means to facilitate the voluntary return of displaced persons.[743]

805. Ethiopia's Transitional Period Charter provided that priority should be given to the rehabilitation of those sections of the population that had been forcibly uprooted.[744]

National Case-law

806. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

807. In 1997, in identical letters to the UN Secretary-General and to President of the UN Security Council, Afghanistan called upon the UN "to immediately intervene to prepare the circumstances allowing all civilians who have been deported and forcibly displaced to return to their homes".[745]

808. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights in relation to Cyprus, Angola stated that "all restrictions preventing displaced persons and refugees from returning home should be lifted".[746]

809. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights on the issue of internal displacement, Peru reported that "the government [of Peru] was conducting a major resettlement programme, including specific projects

[742] Angola, Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations (2001), Article 2(a), (b), (d), (e) and (g), see also Article 3 (identification of land), Article 4 (security of site), Article 6 (state administration), Article 7 (rehabilitation of infrastructure), Article 8 (social assistance), Article 9 (water and sanitation), Article 10 (resettlement kits) and Article 11 (food).
[743] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Articles 2(6) and 10(6).
[744] Ethiopia, Transitional Period Charter (1991), Article 14.
[745] Afghanistan, Identical letters dated 19 January 1997 to the UN Secretary-General and the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1997/54, 21 January 1997, Annex, pp. 2–3.
[746] Angola, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.46, 22 May 1996, p. 3.

in the areas of health, education, communications and emergency assistance".[747]

810. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provide that "both the Government and Non-Government Organisations shall help in the rehabilitation of evacuees through socio-economic projects, skills formation and education".[748]

811. In a declaration in 1995, the Rwandan government stated that displaced persons had a right to humanitarian assistance in order to facilitate their resettlement.[749]

812. In its pleadings before the ECtHR in Akdivar and Others v. Turkey in 1996, the Turkish government submitted that it had introduced a programme in south-eastern Turkey to facilitate the return of displaced persons to their villages by providing the necessary infrastructure in rural areas.[750]

813. In 1992, in a meeting with the ICRC, two States recognised the right of displaced persons to return to their homes, insisting that certain minimum conditions had to be established to prompt people to return home, including meeting basic material needs, ensuring that villages had sanitary and water supply facilities, providing basic public services, establishing agreements on pension rights and education and settling employment issues.[751]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

814. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation in Georgia, the UN Security Council affirmed "the right of refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes" and called on the parties "to facilitate this".[752]

815. In two resolutions adopted in 1993 and 1994, the UN Security Council called on all parties "to cooperate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and other humanitarian agencies operating in Mozambique to facilitate the speedy repatriation and resettlement of refugees and displaced persons".[753]

816. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council demanded that the government of Croatia "create conditions conducive to the return of those persons who had left their homes".[754]

[747] Peru, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.39, 15 April 1996, § 19.
[748] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Res. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, § 10.
[749] Rwanda, Declaration of the Government of Rwanda on the decision to close the displaced camps of Gikongoro, 24 April 1995, p. 2.
[750] Turkey, Pleadings before the ECtHR, Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, 16 September 1996, p. 20.
[751] ICRC archive document.
[752] UN Security Council, Res. 876, 19 October 1993, § 5.
[753] UN Security Council, Res. 882, 5 November 1993, § 17; Res. 898, 23 February 1994, § 18.
[754] UN Security Council, Res. 1009, 10 August 1995, § 2.

817. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council urged all the parties "to fully cooperate with . . . efforts [to assist displaced persons], with a view to create conditions conducive to the repatriation and return of refugees and displaced persons in safety and dignity".[755]
818. In a resolution on Angola adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council urged the international community "to fulfil expeditiously its pledges to provide assistance to facilitate . . . the resettlement of displaced persons".[756]
819. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council stressed "the importance of facilitating the return or resettlement of refugees and displaced persons" which it said "should be gradual and orderly and carried out through progressive, coordinated programmes that address the need for local security, housing and jobs".[757]
820. In a resolution on Croatia adopted in 1997, the UN Security Council noted with concern that "the lack of conditions necessary for the return of displaced persons . . . prevents the return in any substantial number of those displaced seeking to return". The Council urged the government of Croatia:

> to create the necessary conditions of security, safety and social and economic opportunity for those returning to their homes in Croatia, including the prompt payment of pensions; and to foster the successful implementation of the Agreement on Operational Procedures of Return.[758]

821. In a resolution on Georgia adopted in 1997, the UN Security Council demanded that the Abkhaz side "guarantee the safety of spontaneous returnees already in the area and regularize their status in cooperation with UNHCR and in accordance with the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement".[759]
822. In a resolution on Kosovo adopted in 1998, the UN Security Council underlined the responsibility of the FRY for creating the conditions which allow "refugees and displaced persons to return to their homes".[760] In another resolution adopted the same year, the Council demanded that the FRY "facilitate, in agreement with UNHCR and the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), the safe return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes".[761]
823. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN Security Council expressed its deep concern about "the large-scale displacement and relocation of East Timorese civilians, including large numbers of women and children" and stressed that it was the responsibility of the Indonesian authorities "to take immediate

[755] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, §§ 17–18.
[756] UN Security Council, Res. 1075, 11 October 1996, § 22.
[757] UN Security Council, Res. 1088, 12 December 1996, § 11.
[758] UN Security Council, Res. 1120, 14 July 1997, preamble.
[759] UN Security Council, Res. 1124, 31 July 1997, preamble, §§ 11–12.
[760] UN Security Council, Res. 1199, 23 September 1998, § 4(c).
[761] UN Security Council, Res. 1203, 24 October 1998, § 12.

and effective measures to ensure the safe return of refugees in West Timor and other parts of Indonesia to East Timor".[762]

824. In 1994 and 1995, in statements by its President on the conflict in Georgia, the UN Security Council called upon the Abkhaz party "to take all necessary measures, in cooperation with UNHCR, to ensure a speedy and organized voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons".[763]

825. In 1995, in a statement by its President on Abkhazia, Georgia, the UN Security Council urged "the Abkhaz authorities to accelerate the return process significantly, to guarantee the safety of all returnees and to regularize the status of spontaneous returnees".[764]

826. In 1995, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council called on the government of Rwanda and the international community to intensify efforts "to bring about a climate of trust and confidence which would assist in the early and safe return of refugees".[765]

827. In 1997, in a statement by its President on Georgia, the UN Security Council encouraged the UN Secretary-General "to take such steps as are necessary, in cooperation with the parties, in order to ensure a prompt and safe return of the refugees and displaced persons to their homes".[766]

828. In a resolution adopted in 1991, the UN General Assembly appealed to all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan "to cooperate fully especially on the subject of mine detection and clearance, in order to facilitate the return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes in safety and dignity, in conformity with the Agreements on the Settlement of the Situation Relating to Afghanistan".[767]

829. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the UN General Assembly urged all States and relevant organizations "to support the High Commissioner's search for durable solutions to refugee problems, including voluntary repatriation, integration in the country of asylum and resettlement in a third country, as appropriate," and welcomed "in particular the ongoing efforts of her Office to pursue wherever possible opportunities to promote conditions conducive to the preferred solution of voluntary repatriation".[768]

830. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the UN General Assembly stressed "the need to create an environment conducive to the realization of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights and to the return by refugees and displaced persons to their homes".[769]

[762] UN Security Council, Res. 1272, 25 October 1999, preamble and § 12.
[763] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/78, 2 December 1994, p. 1; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/12, 17 March 1995, p. 2.
[764] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/39, 18 August 1995.
[765] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/22, 27 April 1995, pp. 1–2.
[766] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/25, 8 May 1997, p. 2.
[767] UN General Assembly, Res. 46/136, 17 December 1991, § 16.
[768] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/116, 20 December 1993, § 10.
[769] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/206, 23 December 1994, § 8.

831. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly called upon the government of Croatia "to remove all legal and administrative hurdles which are preventing the return of refugees and displaced persons".[770]

832. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly called upon the authorities of the FRY and ethnic Albanian leaders "to allow for and facilitate the free and unhindered return to their homes, in safety and dignity, of all internally displaced persons and refugees" and expressed "its concern about reports of continuing harassment or other impediments in this regard".[771]

833. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly stressed "the importance of and the responsibility of all parties to create a secure environment in Kosovo that will allow refugees and displaced persons to return".[772]

834. In a resolution adopted in 2000, the UN General Assembly urged all parties to the continuing conflict in Sudan "to respect and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to respect fully international humanitarian law, thereby facilitating the voluntary return, repatriation and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes".[773]

835. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed its concern over continuing human rights violations in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including "actions that undermine the principle of the right to return, including . . . resettlement of displaced persons in homes which, under the agreement reached in Geneva on 18 March 1996, should remain vacant for six months".[774]

836. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the UN Commission on Human Rights encouraged "continued efforts to dismantle the regroupment camps and the return of displaced persons to their villages as and when security conditions permit".[775]

837. In a resolution adopted in 2001, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all parties to the continuing conflict in the Sudan "to respect and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, to respect fully international humanitarian law, thereby facilitating the voluntary return, repatriation and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons to their homes".[776]

838. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights exhorted the government of Guatemala "to adopt measures to facilitate the return to their places of origin of refugees and displaced persons within the

[770] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 128(b).
[771] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 23.
[772] UN General Assembly, Res. 54/183, 17 December 1999, § 13.
[773] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 3(b).
[774] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 3(b).
[775] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/10, 23 April 1999, § 6.
[776] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/18, 20 April 2001, § 3(a).

country who wish to do so while at the same time extending all guarantees of security and full respect for human rights".[777]

839. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights exhorted the government of Guatemala "to continue its constructive dialogue with refugees and internally displaced persons in order to resolve satisfactorily the question of their resettlement in Guatemala in conditions of dignity and security".[778]

840. In 1980, in its Conclusion on Voluntary Repatriation, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR "recognized the importance of refugees being provided with the necessary information regarding conditions in their country of origin in order to facilitate their decision to repatriate".[779]

841. In 1996, in its Conclusion on Humanitarian Issues in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia, the Executive Committee of UNHCR called upon the governments of the countries of origin "to create conditions for and to ensure the organized return of refugees and displaced persons in safety and dignity in a phased and coordinated manner, in cooperation with and with the assistance of UNHCR, the host countries and the international community as a whole".[780]

842. In 1992, in a report on Cambodia, the UN Secretary-General reported that among the objectives set for repatriation and resettlement were the identification and provision of agricultural and settlement land, installation assistance, and food for an average of one year for up to 360,000 returnees, as well as the provision of limited reintegration assistance and infrastructural improvements. He noted that there was a need to identify and allocate land for resettlement and that this process would require detailed mine verification. Resettlement packages for returnees would include basic housing materials, sawn timber, poles, bamboo, plastic tarpaulin sheeting, construction tools, as well as household items and agricultural tools, and an allowance for local purchases. It was foreseen in the repatriation component of the report that food assistance would be provided for an average period of 12 months at distribution points close to the final destination of returning displaced persons.[781]

843. In 1995, in a report on the situation in Tajikistan, the UN Secretary-General reported that "as a result of the fourth round of inter-Tajik talks . . . the parties agreed to step up their efforts to ensure the voluntary, safe and dignified return of all refugees and internally displaced persons to their places of permanent residence and adopted concrete measures to that end".[782]

[777] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/18, 27 August 1992, preamble and § 7.
[778] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/16, 20 August 1993, § 5.
[779] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 18 (XXXI): Voluntary Repatriation, 16 October 1980, § e.
[780] UNHCR, Conclusion on Humanitarian Issues in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. A/50/12/Add.1, 1 January 1996, § 31(e).
[781] UN Secretary-General, Report on Cambodia, UN Doc. S/23613, 19 February 1992, pp. 33–35, §§ 132–146.
[782] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Tajikistan, UN Doc. S/1995/472, 10 June 1995, § 8(c).

844. In 1996, in a report concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, the UN Secretary-General reported that:

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), in close cooperation with non-governmental organizations, initiated . . . three major projects . . . to support the reintegration of those persons who have returned to their places of residence. The first project consists of the rehabilitation of 23 schools in the security zone, including the supply of school furniture. The second project supports the Gali hospital by providing medical equipment. The third project is intended to increase the corn harvest by distributing seeds, fertilizer and diesel oil.[783]

845. In 1997, in a report on his visit to Mozambique, the Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons reported that:

A major rehabilitation programme was launched in 1993 in order to promote and support the return and reintegration process. It was considered that durable reintegration could only be effected if minimum conditions were put in place to reduce the vulnerability of the rural population to new displacements.[784]

846. In 1997, in a report on UNAVEM in Angola, the UN Secretary-General highlighted the need to coordinate the voluntary return of groups of internally displaced persons and to develop resettlement plans.[785]

847. In 1996, in a report on a mission to Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Extra-judicial, Arbitrary or Summary Executions stated that "the government of Burundi should elaborate and implement, without delay, a policy to improve security, which would enable the displaced . . . population . . . to return to their communes and would facilitate their reintegration and reinstallation".[786]

848. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights suggested that:

Food, shelter and the minimum requirements for basic living should be provided [to returnees]. Priority should be given to ensuring access to food and a safe environment, free from physical dangers. This will require continued implementing of the land-mines-clearance programmes, providing medical treatment, and locating safe sources of water.[787]

[783] UN Secretary-General, Report concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, UN Doc. S/1996/507, 1 July 1996, § 16.

[784] Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons, Report on the Representative's visit to Mozambique from 23 November to 3 December 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/43/Add.1, 24 February 1997, § 64.

[785] UN Secretary-General, Progress report on the UNAVEM, UN Doc. S/1997/438, 5 June 1997, p. 6, § 21.

[786] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report on the Special Rapporteur's mission to Burundi, 19–29 April 1995, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/4/Add.1, 24 July 1995, § 98.

[787] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/64, 27 February 1996, § 110.

849. In 1996, in a report on a visit to Rwanda, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights for Zaire recommended that "the government establish resettlement programmes" to facilitate the return of internally displaced persons and that these programmes should cover "housing, education, health and, above all, security for all, especially women and children".[788]
850. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that, in spite of the provisions contained in the 1995 Dayton Accords, the authorities in the Republika Srpska had actively prevented displaced Bosniacs from returning to their villages.[789]
851. In 1998, in a report on developments in the former Yugoslavia, the UNHCR Standing Committee welcomed the "Open Cities" initiative, whereby municipalities agreed to facilitate the return of minorities in combination with assistance from the international community.[790]
852. In a report in 1996, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina stated that "a significant proportion of displaced persons and refugees will return voluntarily if, in practice, a secure and safe environment exists, and if adequate shelter and essential services are available or likely to become so soon".[791]

Other International Organisations
853. In several recommendations on Kosovo adopted in 1998, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe emphasised that the authorities of the FRY and Serbia must create the material and security conditions necessary to enable IDPs and refugees to return voluntarily in safety and dignity to their own homes.[792]
854. In several resolutions and decisions adopted between 1995 and 1997, the OAU Council of Ministers urged member States to create conditions conducive to the voluntary return of displaced persons to their places of habitual residence and to facilitate this process.[793]

[788] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Zaire, Report on the Special Rapporteur's visit to Rwanda, 6–14 July 1996, concerning ethnic conflict in the Northern Kivu region, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/6/Add.1, 16 September 1996, § 126 (j).
[789] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/9, 22 October 1996, § 13.
[790] UNHCR, Standing Committee Report: Update on Regional Developments in the Former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. EC/48/SC/CRP.10, 2 April 1998, §§ 5, 21 and 22.
[791] High Representative for the implementation of the Bosnian peace agreement, Report, UN Doc. S/1996/190, 14 March 1996, § 70.
[792] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1376, 24 June 1998, § 12(iv); Rec. 1384, 24 September 1998, § 2; Rec. 1385, 24 September 1998, § 2.
[793] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1589 (LXII), 21–23 June 1995, § 9; Res. 1653 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, § 4; Doc. CM/Draft/Dec. (LXV) Rev.1, 24–28 February 1997, p. 14; Decision 362 (LXVI), 28–31 May 1997, § e.

855. In the Final Declaration of the Kosovo International Human Rights Conference in 1999, the OSCE stated that "conditions have to be created to allow for the safe return of refugees and internally displaced persons across Kosovo".[794]

International Conferences

856. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the implementation of GC IV, particularly in the occupied territories in the Middle East, in which it requested the authorities concerned "to fulfil their humanitarian obligations by facilitating the return of the people to their homes and their reintegration into their communities".[795]

857. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the application of GC IV in the Middle East in which it requested the authorities concerned "to fulfil their humanitarian obligations in facilitating the return of people to their homes and their reintegration into their communities".[796]

858. The Concerted Plan of Action adopted at the International Conference on Central American Refugees in 1989 stressed the necessity of according humanitarian treatment to internally and externally displaced persons, which presumed, in principle, facilitating the return to their homes and the reconstruction of their communities.[797]

859. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on support to the recent international initiatives to halt the violence and put an end to the violations of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the 88th Inter-Parliamentary Conference called on parties "to ensure conditions for the safe return to their homes of all refugees and displaced persons".[798]

860. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the need for urgent action in the former Yugoslavia, particularly as regards the protection of minorities and the prevention of further loss of life in order that peaceful co-existence and respect for human rights can be restored for all peoples, the 89th Inter-Parliamentary Conference urged "the creation of the necessary conditions for the safe repatriation of all displaced civilians and refugees to their homes as soon as possible".[799]

[794] OSCE, Kosovo International Human Rights Conference, Pristina, 10–11 December 1999, Final Declaration, § 4.

[795] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. X, § 3.

[796] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. III.

[797] International Conference on Central American Refugees (CIREFCA), Guatemala City, 29–31 May 1989, Declaration and Concerted Plan of Action, UN Doc. CIREFCA/89/14, 31 May 1989, § I(28–30).

[798] 88th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Stockholm, Resolution on support to the recent international initiatives to halt the violence and put an end to the violations of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, 12 September 1992, § 3.

[799] 89th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, New Delhi, Resolution on the need for urgent action in the former Yugoslavia, particularly as regards the protection of minorities and the prevention of further loss of life in order that peaceful co-existence and respect for human rights can be restored for all peoples, 17 April 1993, § 11.

861. The Chairman's Conclusions of the Florence Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1996 reiterated the importance of the "free and safe return" of IDPs and refugees and laid out detailed provisions designed to facilitate such return.[800]

862. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that displaced persons "are able to return voluntarily, in peaceful conditions and in safety to their homes or to resettle voluntarily elsewhere".[801]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

863. In 1995, in its consideration of the report of Russia, the HRC urged that "appropriate and effective measures be adopted to enable all persons displaced as a consequence of the events that occurred in North Ossetia in 1992 to return to their homeland" and that "adequate measures be adopted to alleviate the conditions of all displaced persons following the fighting in Chechnya, including measures aimed at facilitating their return to their towns and villages".[802]

864. In 1994, in its concluding observations on the report of Sudan, CERD recommended that "concrete steps be taken to encourage the voluntary return of all refugees and persons displaced in the conflict".[803]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

865. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

866. The Report on SPLM/A Practice notes that the SPLM/A supported an appeal by the House of Bishops of Sudan in February 1998, which called upon donors, NGOs and other international organisations "to assist in the repatriation of 14,000 displaced citizens of Bor who are desperately waiting to go home".[804]

[800] Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Florence, 13–14 June 1996, Chairman's Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 9 July 1996 from the UN Secretary-General to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1996/542, 10 July 1996, Appendix I, §§ 11–15.

[801] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(c).

[802] HRC, Consideration of the report of the Russian Federation, UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add.54, 26 July 1995, §§ 41 and 45.

[803] CERD, Concluding observations on the report of Sudan, UN Doc. A/49/18, 19 September 1994, p. 72, § 476.

[804] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.5, referring to Appeal for repatriation of Bor displaced people by the House of Bishops meeting in Nairobi, 6 February 1998.

Assessment visits prior to return

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

867. In Paragraph 10 of the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties agreed that "representatives of refugees and displaced persons will be provided with facilities to visit the areas of return and to see for themselves arrangements made for their return".

Other Instruments

868. Principle 28(1) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement stipulates that:

> Competent authorities have the primary duty and responsibility to establish conditions, as well as provide the means, which allow internally displaced persons to return voluntarily, in safety and with dignity, to their homes or places of habitual residence, or to resettle voluntarily in another part of the country. Such authorities shall endeavour to facilitate the reintegration of returned or resettled internally displaced persons.

II. National Practice

869. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

870. In 1980, in a Conclusion on Voluntary Repatriation, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR recognized that "visits by individual refugees or refugee representatives to their country of origin to inform themselves of the situation there . . . could also be of assistance" in facilitating the decision of repatriation.[805]

871. In September 1992, in a report concerning the former Yugoslavia, the UN Secretary-General reported "an encouraging development . . . involving daytime visits by refugees from one side of the Sector to the other to start work on the rehabilitation of their houses".[806] In a further report in November, the Secretary-General noted that a "programme for displaced persons to visit their villages and former homes has been accelerated with the cooperation of the two sets of local authorities".[807]

[805] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 18 (XXXI): Voluntary Repatriation, 16 October 1980, § e.

[806] UN Secretary-General, Further report pursuant to Security Council resolutions 743 (1992) and 762 (1992), UN Doc. S/24600, 28 September 1992, § 21.

[807] UN Secretary-General, Further report pursuant to Security Council resolution 743 (1992), UN Doc. S/24848, 24 November 1992, § 18.

872. In 1996, in a report concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Secretary-General reported that attempts by UNHCR to gain permission to organise visits by displaced persons to their homes in "non-majority areas" had largely been refused by the authorities of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska "on grounds of lack of security guarantees or clear instructions from the leadership concerned. In other instances, visits by one ethnic group are conditioned on the other ethnic group being able to visit their own homes on the other side."[808]

873. In 1996, in a special periodic report on minorities in the context of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that groups of villagers were able to visit their homes in Montenegro with a view to returning there. Requests for a similar programme in Serbia had not been answered.[809]

874. In 1997, in a report on his visit to Mozambique, the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons reported that:

> Return was normally initiated once information on the security situation in the home area had been received and initial preparations had been made for resettlement. Often, one or two family members would travel to the area of origin and assess the situation while the rest of the family remained in the area of flight.[810]

Other International Organisations

875. No practice was found.

International Conferences

876. The Chairman's Conclusions of the Florence Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1996 called for "co-operation by the parties under UNHCR guidelines for visits by refugees and displaced persons to their localities ("assessment visits")".[811]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

877. No practice was found.

[808] UN Secretary-General, Report of pursuant to Security Council resolution 1035 (1995), UN Doc. S/1996/210, 29 March 1996, § 19.

[809] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Special periodic report on minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/8, 25 October 1996, § 83.

[810] Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons, Report on the Representative's visit to Mozambique from 23 November to 3 December 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/43/Add.1, 24 February 1997, § 54.

[811] Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Florence, 13–14 June 1996, Chairman's Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 9 July 1996 from the UN Secretary-General to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1996/542, 10 July 1996, Appendix I, § 13.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

878. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

879. No practice was found.

Amnesty to encourage return

Note: For practice concerning amnesty for participation in armed conflict in general, see Chapter 44, section D.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

880. In paragraph 3(c) of the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties agreed that:

> Displaced persons/refugees shall have the right to return peacefully without risk of arrest, detention, imprisonment or legal criminal proceedings. Such immunity shall not apply to persons where there are serious evidences that they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity as defined in international instruments and international practice as well as serious non-political crimes committed in the context of the conflict. Such immunity shall also not apply to persons who have previously taken part in the hostilities and are currently serving in armed formations . . . Persons falling into these categories should be informed through appropriate channels of the possible consequences they may face upon return.

881. The 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that "any returning refugee or displaced person charged with a crime, other than a serious violation of international humanitarian law . . . or a common-law crime unrelated to the conflict, shall upon return enjoy an amnesty".

Other Instruments

882. Paragraph 2 of the 1997 Protocol on Tajik Refugees provides that:

> The Government of the Republic of Tajikistan assumes the obligation . . . not to institute criminal proceedings against returning refugees or displaced persons for their participation in the political confrontation and the civil war, in accordance with the legislation in force in the Republic.

II. National Practice

883. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

884. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in Croatia, the UN Secretary-General noted that:

> One potential obstacle to the return of young adult males is the requirement that they first undergo interrogations by Croatian authorities concerning their activities on behalf of the so-called "Republic of Serb Krajina". In the absence of broad amnesty legislation, these interrogations have caused widespread apprehension among potential returnees, as well as delays in the processing of applications.[812]

885. In 1996, in a statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees stated that "personal security was evidently of critical importance in the context of peaceful and dignified return. The amnesty adopted by the Bosnian parliament, covering, inter alia, draft evaders and deserters, was thus a very welcome step."[813]

886. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that:

> The new Law on Amnesty passed by the Parliament [of Croatia]... has been hailed by most observers as a significant step towards both the return of Croatian Serb refugees and the peaceful reintegration of the region of Eastern Slavonia into the rest of the country. However, the Special Rapporteur's attention has been draw to the need to scrutinize the Law's application in practice... The potential benefit of the new amnesty legislation in raising the confidence of Croatia's Serb population and encouraging returns would be substantially damaged if persons still found themselves the subject of criminal proceedings.[814]

Other International Organisations

887. In a recommendation on Kosovo adopted in 1998, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged the FRY authorities to create the conditions for displaced persons to return voluntarily in safety and dignity to their own homes, including "providing and respecting an amnesty for those wishing to return".[815]

International Conferences

888. No practice was found.

[812] UN Secretary-General, Further report on the situation of human rights in Croatia pursuant to Security Council resolution 1019 (1995), UN Doc. S/1996/691, 23 August 1996, § 22.
[813] UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, Summary Record, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.4, 25 March 1996, § 54.
[814] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/9, 22 October 1996, §§ 54–57.
[815] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1385, 24 September 1998, § 7(b).

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

889. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

890. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

891. No practice was found.

Non-discrimination

Note: For practice concerning non-discrimination in general, see Chapter 32, section B.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

892. Article 5 of the 1969 Convention Governing Refugee Problems in Africa provides that:

> Refugees who voluntarily return to their country shall in no way be penalized for having left it for any of the reasons giving rise to refugee situations. Whenever necessary, an appeal shall be made . . . inviting refugees to return home and giving assurance that the new circumstances prevailing in their country of origin would enable them to return without risk and to take up a normal and peaceful life without fear of being disturbed or punished.

893. In paragraph 3(a) of the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties agreed that "displaced persons/refugees have the right to return voluntarily to their places of origin or residence irrespective of their ethnic, social or political affiliation under conditions of complete safety, freedom and dignity".

894. Articles I and II of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords stated that:

> The parties shall take immediately the following building measures: the repeal of domestic legislation and administrative practices with discriminatory intent or effect . . .
>
> The parties shall ensure that refugees and displaced persons are permitted to return in safety, without risk of harassment, intimidation, persecution or discrimination, particularly on account of their ethnic origin, religious belief, or political opinion.
>
> The parties shall not discriminate against returning displaced persons.

895. The 1997 Agreement of the Joint Working Group on Operational Procedures of Return stated that "the government of Croatia shall provide equal access and equal treatment for safe return, reconstruction, and other mechanisms specified . . . for all Croatian citizens who in 1991 resided in the Croatian Danube region . . . or who are currently living there".

Other Instruments

896. The 1992 Sarajevo Declaration on Humanitarian Treatment of Displaced Persons affirmed that voluntary return with full guarantees of security and non-discrimination was the basic right of the displaced.

897. The 1992 General Peace Agreement for Mozambique provided that "Mozambican refugees and displaced persons shall not forfeit any of the rights and freedoms of other citizens for having left their original place of residence . . . [and] shall be registered and included in electoral rolls together with other citizens in their places of residence".

898. In Article 18(2) of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia, the parties called upon "Liberian refugees and displaced persons to return to Liberia and to their places of origin or habitual residence" and declared that "they shall not be jeopardized in any ethnic, political, religious, regional or geographical considerations".

899. Principle 29(1) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that:

> Internally displaced persons who have returned to their homes or places of habitual residence or who have resettled in another part of the country shall not be discriminated against as a result of their having been displaced. They shall have the right to participate fully and equally in public affairs at all levels and have equal access to public services.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

900. No practice was found.

National Legislation

901. According to Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, forcibly displaced persons have the right not to be discriminated against on account of their social condition, race, religion, political opinion, place of origin or physical disability.[816]

National Case-law

902. No practice was found.

[816] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Article 2(3).

Other National Practice

903. In 1997, in letters to the UN Secretary-General and the President of the UN Security Council, Afghanistan called upon the UN "to prepare the circumstances allowing all civilians who have been deported and forcibly displaced to return to their homes without being subjected to discrimination on the basis of gender, age or ethnic origin".[817]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

904. In 1994, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council called upon the government of Rwanda "to ensure that there are no reprisals against those wish[ing] to return to their homes and resume their occupation".[818]

905. In 1996, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council called upon the government of Croatia "to stop all forms of discrimination against the Croatian Serb population in the provision of social benefits and reconstruction assistance".[819]

906. In 1980, in a Conclusion on Voluntary Repatriation, the Executive Committee of UNHCR stressed the importance "of returning refugees not being penalized for having left their country of origin for reasons giving rise to refugee situations".[820]

907. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in Croatia, the UN Secretary-General noted that a law adopted by the Croatian parliament on areas of special national interest promised "various benefits, including lower taxes and the possibility of gaining ownership of property after 10 years of occupancy, to persons moving to the region". The Secretary-General added, however, that "although the law by its terms applies equally to Serbs and Croats, the difficulties being encountered by Croatian Serbs wishing to return makes it likely that Croats rather than Serbs will be the main beneficiaries of these measures".[821]

908. In 1996, in a special report on minorities in the context of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that an "area of concern . . . involves difficulties which Croatian Serbs have encountered in acquiring documents necessary to obtain social benefits".[822]

[817] Afghanistan, Identical letters dated 19 January 1997 to the UN Secretary-General and the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1997/54, 21 January 1997, p. 3.

[818] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/42, 10 August 1994, p. 2.

[819] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/48, 20 December 1996, pp. 1–2.

[820] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 18 (XXXI): Voluntary Repatriation, 16 October 1980, § f.

[821] UN Secretary-General, Further report on the situation of human rights in Croatia pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1019 (1995), UN Doc. S/1996/456, 21 June 1996, § 26.

[822] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Special periodic report on minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/8, 25 October 1996, §§ 127–128.

Other International Organisations
909. No practice was found.

International Conferences
910. The Concerted Plan of Action adopted at the International Conference on Central American Refugees in 1989 stated that returning persons should not be subject to discrimination.[823]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

911. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

912. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

913. No practice was found.

E. Property Rights of Displaced Persons

Safeguard of property rights

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
914. Article 1 of the 1952 Protocol to the ECHR provides that "every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law."
915. Article 21(1) of the 1969 ACHR states that "everyone has the right to the use and enjoyment of his property. The law may subordinate such use and enjoyment to the interest of society."
916. Article 14 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "the right to property shall be guaranteed. It may only be encroached upon in the interest of public need or in the general interest of the community and in accordance with the provisions of appropriate laws."

[823] International Conference on Central American Refugees (CIREFCA), Guatemala City, 29–31 May 1989, Declaration and Concerted Plan of Action, UN Doc. CIREFCA/89/14, 31 May 1989, § I(21).

Other Instruments

917. Paragraph 4(a) of the 1992 Recommendation on the Tragic Situation of Civilians in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that each party to the conflict guarantees to those who leave temporarily the territory it controls that "their goods, assets and belongings will be respected and protected".

918. Principle 21 of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement stipulates that:

1. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of property and possessions.
2. The property and possessions of internally displaced persons shall in all circumstances be protected, in particular, against the following acts:
   (a) Pillage;
   (b) Direct or indiscriminate attacks or other acts of violence;
   (c) Being used to shield military operations or objectives;
   (d) Being made the object of reprisal; and
   (e) Being destroyed or appropriated as a form of collective punishment.
3. Property and possessions left behind by internally displaced persons should be protected against destruction and arbitrary and illegal appropriation, occupation or use.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

919. No practice was found.

National Legislation

920. Since 1997, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina has adopted new property laws safeguarding property rights in order to implement the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords. These laws mainly deal with abandoned property and occupancy rights. It has also adopted instructions, claim forms and information sheets.[824]

921. In 1998, the Republika Srpska of Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted a new property law safeguarding property rights in order to implement the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords. This law mainly deals with abandoned property. It also adopted instructions, claim forms and information sheets.[825]

922. According to Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, IDPs have the right to retain ownership and possession of abandoned property.[826]

[824] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Law on Sale of Apartments with Occupancy Rights (1997); Law on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on Temporary Abandoned Real Property Owned by Citizens (1998); Law on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on Abandoned Apartments (1998).

[825] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Law on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on the Use of Abandoned Property (1998).

[826] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Article 18.

National Case-law

923. According to Colombian case-law, IDPs have the right to retain ownership and possession of abandoned property.[827]

Other National Practice

924. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Commission on Human Rights in relation to Bosnia and Herzegovina, Egypt stated that "refugees and displaced persons must be allowed to . . . recover their possessions".[828]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

925. In February 1996, in a statement by its President on Croatia, the UN Security Council referred to the right of the local Serb population "to return to their homes . . . and to reclaim possession of property".[829] In another statement by its President in December on returning refugees and IDPs in Croatia, the UN Security Council deplored "the continued failure by the government of Croatia to effectively safeguard the property rights [of refugees and IDPs], especially the situation where many of the Serbs who had returned to the former sectors had been unable to regain possession of their properties".[830]

926. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed its concern over continuing human rights violations within Bosnia and Herzegovina, including "actions that undermine the principle of the right to return, including enforcement of legislation which restricts rights to claim 'socially owned' property throughout the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina".[831]

927. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights confirmed that:

> The adoption or application of laws by States which are designed to or result in the loss or removal of tenancy, use, ownership or other rights connected with housing or property, the active retraction of the right to reside within a particular place, or laws of abandonment employed against refugees or internally displaced persons pose serious impediments to the return and reintegration of refugees and internally displaced persons and to reconstruction and reconciliation.[832]

[827] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-092, Judgement, 7 March 1996.
[828] Egypt, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.47, 17 April 1996, § 35.
[829] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/8, 23 February 1996, p. 2.
[830] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/48, 20 December 1996, pp. 1–2.
[831] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 3(b).
[832] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/26, 22 August 1998, § 3.

928. In 1996, in a report on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Secretary-General noted that:

An independent Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees has been established . . . Its function is to receive and decide any claims for real property in Bosnia and Herzegovina where the property has not voluntarily been sold or otherwise transferred since 1 April 1992, and where the claimant does not enjoy possession of the property.[833]

929. In 1996, in a special report on minorities in the context of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that "the Croatian authorities must act firmly to safeguard property rights of Serbs in the former sectors".[834] In another report in 1997, the Special Rapporteur recommended that any "laws on the allocation of abandoned property inconsistent with the Dayton agreements and international law must immediately be repealed".[835]

930. Since September 1998, the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina has adopted numerous decisions in the field of property laws and return of displaced persons and refugees. These decisions mainly deal with occupancy rights, abandoned property, socially owned property and return of confiscated property.[836]

Other International Organisations

931. No practice was found.

International Conferences

932. The Chairman's Conclusions of the Florence Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1996 called on:

the Commission on Real Property Claims for Refugees and Displaced Persons now established in Sarajevo with the assistance of the International Organisation for Migration (IOM), to proceed urgently with its task of registration so as to provide property owners with the assurance that their rights will be preserved on local authorities to cooperate with the Commission on the parties to repeal or appropriately amend property laws which are inconsistent with the right, as set out in the Peace Agreement, of return and to their property.[837]

[833] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to resolution 1035 (1995), UN Doc. S/1996/210, 29 March 1996, § 20.

[834] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Special periodic report on minorities, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/8, 25 October 1996, § 127.

[835] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/56,29 January 1997, § 55.

[836] Office of the High Representative for the Implementation of the Peace Agreement on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Decisions in the field of property laws and return of displaced persons and refugees, available on www.ohr.int.

[837] Peace Implementation Conference for Bosnia and Herzegovina, Florence, 13–14 June 1996, Chairman's Conclusions, annexed to Letter dated 9 July 1996 from the UN Secretary-General to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1996/542, 10 July 1996, Appendix I, § 15.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

933. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

934. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

935. No practice was found.

Transfer of property under duress

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
936. Article 11 of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords established a Commission for Displaced Persons and Refugees which would "receive and decide any claim for real property in Bosnia and Herzegovina". Article 12(3) of the Agreement provided that:

> in determining the lawful owner of any property, the Commission would not recognize as valid any illegal property transaction, including any transfer that was made under duress, in exchange for exit permission or documents, or that was otherwise in connection with ethnic cleansing.

Other Instruments
937. Paragraph 4(c) of the 1992 Recommendation on the Tragic Situation of Civilians in Bosnia and Herzegovina provided that each party to the conflict guaranteed to those who left temporarily the territory it controlled that "any document, including a document renouncing or transferring property rights, assets or claims signed by a person who is about to leave temporarily has no legal validity and does not affect in any way that person's rights or obligations".
938. According to Paragraph 6 of the Joint Declaration by the Presidents of the FRY and Croatia (September 1992), "all statements or commitments made under duress, particularly relating to land and property, are wholly null and void".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
939. No practice was found.

National Legislation
940. No practice was found.

National Case-law
941. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
942. In 1992, during a debate in the UN Security Council on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Austria emphasised that where persons were forced to sign statements renouncing their property rights, there could be no doubt that such documents were null and void.[838]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
943. In a resolution adopted in 1992 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council endorsed the principles agreed by the Presidents of Croatia and the SFRY on 30 September 1992 that "all statements or commitments made under duress, particularly those relating to land and property, are wholly null and void".[839] These principles were reaffirmed in a resolution adopted in 1993.[840]
944. In two resolutions adopted in 1994 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reaffirmed its support for the established principle that "all statements or commitments made under duress, particularly those regarding land ownership, are null and void".[841]
945. In two resolutions adopted in 1993 and 1994 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly considered "invalid all acts made under duress affecting ownership of property and other related questions".[842]
946. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1994, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that "the consequence of ethnic cleansing shall not be accepted by the international community and that those who have seized land and other property by ethnic cleansing and by the use of force must relinquish those lands, in conformity with norms of international law".[843]
947. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in the Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly, in relation to the property of refugees and displaced persons, considered "null any commitment made under duress".[844]

[838] Austria, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3106, 13 August 1992, p. 23.
[839] UN Security Council, Res. 779, 6 October 1992, § 5.
[840] UN Security Council, Res. 820 A, 17 April 1993, § 7.
[841] UN Security Council, Res. 941, 23 September 1994, § 3; Res. 947, 30 September 1994, § 8.
[842] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/153, 20 December 1993, § 13; Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 13.
[843] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/10, 3 November 1994, § 8.
[844] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 12.

948. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed "its support for the principle that all statements and commitments made under duress, particularly those regarding land and property, are wholly null and void".[845]
949. In several resolutions adopted between 1992 and 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights emphasised the invalidity of acts made under duress in relation to the forcible transfer of the property rights of displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia.[846]
950. In resolutions adopted in 1993 and 1995, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended that the UN and the governments concerned take measures to enable the properties of returning displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia to be restored to them, any documents signed by them under duress being rejected.[847]

Other International Organisations
951. No practice was found.

International Conferences
952. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

953. In a General Recommendation adopted in 1996, CERD emphasised that "any commitments or statements relating to [the] property [of returning displaced persons] made under duress are null and void".[848]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

954. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

955. No practice was found.

[845] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/24, 14 November 2000, § 19.
[846] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/S-2/1, 1 December 1992, § 4; Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 8; Res. 1994/75, 9 March 1994, § 5; Res. 1995/89, 8 March 1995, § 8.
[847] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/17, 20 August 1993, § 7; Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, § 5.
[848] CERD, General Recommendation XXII (Article 5 of the Convention and refugees and displaced persons), 1996, § 2.

Return of property or compensation

Note: For practice concerning reparation for damage sustained as a result of violations of international humanitarian law in general, see Chapter 42, section B.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

956. Article 16 of the 1989 Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention states that:

> 4. When . . . return [to their traditional lands] is not possible, as determined by agreement or, in the absence of such agreement, through appropriate procedures, these peoples shall be provided in all possible cases with lands of quality and legal status at least equal to that of the lands previously occupied by them, suitable to provide for their present needs and future development. Where the peoples concerned express a preference for compensation in money or in kind, they shall be so compensated under appropriate guarantees.
> 5. Persons thus relocated shall be fully compensated for any resulting loss or injury.

957. In paragraph 3(g) of the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties agreed to the principle that:

> Returnees, upon return, get back movable and immovable properties they left behind and should be helped to do so, or to receive wherever possible an appropriate compensation for their lost properties if return of property does not appear feasible. [A Quadripartite] Commission . . . will establish a mechanism for such property claims. Such compensation should be worked out in the framework of the reconstruction/rehabilitation programmes to be established with financial assistance through the United Nations Voluntary Fund.

958. Article I(1) of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that "all refugees and displaced persons . . . shall have the right to have restored to them property of which they were deprived in the course of hostilities since 1991 and to be compensated for any property that cannot be restored to them".

959. Article VII of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords established an independent Commission for Displaced Persons and Refugees, the mandate of which, according to Article XI, was to:

> receive and decide any claims for real property in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where the property has not voluntarily been sold or otherwise transferred since April 1, 1992, and where the claimant does not now enjoy possession of that property. Claims may be for return of the property or for just compensation in lieu of return.

960. Article XII(2) of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that "any person requesting the return of property who is found by the Commission to be the lawful owner of that property shall be awarded its return".

Other Instruments

961. Article IV(e) of the 1992 General Peace Agreement for Mozambique provided that "refugees and displaced persons shall be guaranteed restitution of property owned by them which is still in existence and the right to take legal action to secure the return of such property from individuals in possession of it".

962. Paragraph 6 of the 1993 Afghan Peace Accord provided that "all public and private buildings, residential areas and properties occupied by different armed groups during the hostilities shall be returned to their original owners".

963. In Article 7 of the 1996 Agreement on the Normalisation of Relations between Croatia and the FRY, the parties agreed to ensure that displaced persons returned into possession of their property or a just compensation. It also specified that within six months from the date of entry into force of the Agreement, the contracting parties would conclude an agreement on compensation for all destroyed, damaged or lost property.

964. Principle 29(2) of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that "when recovery of property and possessions [left behind by IDPs] is not possible, competent authorities shall provide or assist these persons in obtaining appropriate compensation or another form of just reparation".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

965. No practice was found.

National Legislation

966. No practice was found.

National Case-law

967. In the Turundžić case before the Human Rights Chamber of the Commission on Human Rights of Bosnia and Herzegovina in 2001, the applicants were citizens of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina who held pre-war occupancy rights to apartments in Mostar, but left due to wartime hostilities. They thereafter filed repossession claims with the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees, which recognized the applicants' occupancy rights. The applicants' subsequent enforcement requests to the competent municipal organs went unanswered. The applicants consequently filed applications against the Federation with the Human Rights Chamber for Bosnia and Herzegovina, claiming under the 1950 ECHR respect for the home and peaceful enjoyment of property. The Chamber held that the authorities' failure to enforce the Commission's decisions in question constituted an "ongoing interference" with the applicants' rights to respect for the home and peaceful enjoyment of property. The Chamber ordered the Federation to take all necessary steps to enforce the decisions without further delay, and further awarded compensation.[849]

Other National Practice

968. In 1992, during a debate in the UN Security Council on displaced persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Austria stated that compensation should be given for property that had been destroyed.[850]

969. In 1996, in a letter to the Chairman of the UN Commission on Human Rights, Croatia highlighted the fact that legislation relating to the property rights of IDPs and refugees had been amended. The legislation provided that "if the owner of a property returns to the Republic of Croatia he is entitled to use his or her property". The amendment had lifted "the time limit for the return of the persons who had abandoned their property".[851]

970. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provide that:

> The government shall indemnify the people of damages for the injuries they have suffered, in particular: (a) for all houses which were destroyed or which were ordered dismantled and demolished, and (b) for reasonable value of their personal properties as a result of the evacuation.[852]

971. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the former Yugoslavia, Russia stated that "any attempt to introduce a time-limit for [Serbian inhabitants of Krajina] to reclaim their property is unacceptable".[853]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

972. In a resolution adopted in November 1995, the UN Security Council reiterated its call upon the government of Croatia "to lift any time-limits placed on the return of refugees to Croatia to reclaim their property".[854]

973. In 1995, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council asked the government of Croatia "as a matter of urgency . . . [to] lift any time limits

[849] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Commission on Human Rights (Human Rights Chamber), Turundžić case, Decision, 8 February 2001.

[850] Austria, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3106, 13 August 1992, p. 23.

[851] Croatia, Letter dated 15 April 1996 to the Chairman of the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/159, 15 April 1996, p. 10, § 22.

[852] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Res. No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, § 9.

[853] Russia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, p. 8.

[854] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, § 7.

placed on the return of refugees to reclaim their property" and noted that the deadline fixed by the Croatian authorities "constituted a virtually insurmountable obstacle for most Serb refugees".[855]

974. In 1996, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council reiterated its appeal to Croatia to lift the time limits on return to reclaim property and stated that the decision to suspend the deadline constituted a step in the right direction which should be followed.[856]

975. In 1997, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council called upon the government of Croatia "to promptly resolve the property issue by a return of property or just compensation".[857]

976. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN General Assembly recognized "the right of refugees and displaced persons . . . to have restored to them property of which they were deprived in the course of hostilities since 1991 and to be compensated for any such property that can not be restored to them".[858]

977. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN General Assembly called upon all sides "to implement the property laws imposed on 27 October 1999, in particular by evicting illegal occupants from the homes of returning refugees".[859]

978. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights appealed to those in control of the territory of Abkhazia "to ensure the right of displaced persons and to recover their property".[860]

979. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montegnegro), the UN Commission on Human Rights noted the commitment made in the 1995 Dayton Accords that returning displaced persons would either "have their property restored or receive compensation for property that cannot be restored to them". It further expressed its concern over continuing human rights violations within Bosnia and Herzegovina, including actions that undermined the principle of the right to return, such as "unjustified evictions of persons from their homes".[861]

980. In a resolution adopted in 1997 on human rights in the occupied Syrian Golan, the UN Commission on Human Rights emphasised that "the [855] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/63, 22 December 1995, p. 1.

[856] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1996/2, 8 January 1996, p. 2.
[857] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/15, 19 March 1997, p. 1.
[858] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 12.
[859] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/24, 14 November 2000, § 19.
[860] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/59, 4 March 1994, § 5.
[861] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, preamble and § 3(b).

displaced persons of the population of the occupied Syrian Golan must be allowed to . . . recover their properties".[862]

981. In a decision on Yugoslavia adopted in 1992, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights demanded that "full reparation be made for losses suffered as a result of the displacement".[863]

982. In a resolution adopted in 1993 with regard to the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights called for "the effective eradication of the tragic consequences of the aggression and the human rights violations in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, through joint international efforts for the reconstruction of the country". It recommended that:

> To this end, steps be taken through concerted international action and by the relevant international bodies to enable all refugees, deportees and displaced persons to return safely to their homes in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and their properties to be restored to them, any documents signed by them under duress being rejected.[864]

983. In a resolution adopted in 1995 concerning the former Yugoslavia, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended that the UN and the governments concerned take measures to enable the properties of returning displaced persons to be restored to them or, failing this, that compensation be paid.[865]

984. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights urged all States:

> to ensure the free and fair exercise of the right to return to one's home and place of habitual residence by all refugees and internally displaced persons and to develop effective and expeditious legal, administrative and other procedures to ensure the free and fair exercise of this right, including fair and effective mechanisms designed to resolve outstanding housing and property problems.[866]

985. In 1994, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights emphasised that all displaced persons, "irrespective of their ethnic origins, have a fundamental right to return to their properties and that this has to be ensured".[867]

986. In a progress report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights in 1994, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions

[862] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1997/2, 26 March 1997, § 2.
[863] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Decision 1992/103, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1992/58, 14 October 1992, § (d).
[864] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/17, 20 August 1993, §§ 6–7.
[865] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, §§ 5–6.
[866] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/26, 22 August 1998, § 4.
[867] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Seventh periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/4, 10 June 1994, § 23.

of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements stated that:

> 137. In situations where transfer is not unlawful, damage occurs nevertheless to the transferred group, and it ought, as a matter of equity, to receive compensation. An innocent victim should not be left to bear his loss alone . . .
> 138. The practice of international organs with regard to conflicts . . . confirms that restitution in kind is normally demanded in the form of reparation. Compensation is either explicitly mentioned, as in the case of the Palestinian refugees, or implicit in the language of the resolution referring to other conflicts.[868]

987. In 1997, in his final report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements proposed a draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers for adoption by the UN Commission on Human Rights. Article 8 of the draft declaration provided that:

> The exercise of the right to return does not preclude the victims' right to adequate remedies, including restoration of properties of which they were deprived in connection with or as a result of population transfers, compensation for any property that cannot be restored to them, and any other reparations provided for in international law.[869]

Other International Organisations

988. In an opinion adopted in 1996 on Croatia's request for membership of the Council of Europe, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stated that Croatia had undertaken among other things to allow displaced persons "effectively to exercise their rights to recover their property or receive compensation".[870] The Parliamentary Assembly repeated its call for the authorities to ensure that returnees were allowed either to recover their property or to receive proper compensation in two separate recommendations in 1996 on the implementation of the 1995 Dayton Accords.[871]

International Conferences

989. No practice was found.

[868] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Progress report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/18, 30 June 1994, §§ 137–138.

[869] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Dimensions of Population Transfer, including the Implantation of Settlers and Settlements, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1997/23, 27 June 1997, Annex II, Draft declaration on population transfer and the implantation of settlers, Article 8.

[870] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Opinion 195, 24 April 1996, § 9(viii).

[871] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1287, 24 January 1996, § 2; Rec. 1297, 25 April 1996, § 5(iii).

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

990. In a General Recommendation adopted in 1996, CERD emphasised that "refugees and displaced persons have, after their return to their homes of origin, the right to have restored to them property of which they were deprived in the course of the conflict and to be compensated appropriately for any such property that cannot be restored to them".[872]

991. In a decision on the FRY adopted in 1998, CERD reaffirmed that "displaced persons have the right . . . to be compensated appropriately for [their homes and] properties that cannot be restored to them".[873]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

992. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

993. In a report submitted to ECOSOC in 1995, the Philippine Alliance of Human Rights Advocates asked the Committee to urge the Philippine government to provide IDPs with compensation for their losses.[874]

[872] CERD, General Recommendation XXII (Article 5 of the Convention and refugees and displaced persons), 1996, § 2.

[873] CERD, Decision 3(53) on the FRY, UN Doc. A/53/18 (SUPPL), 17 August 1998, § 3.

[874] Philippine Alliance of Human Rights Advocates (PAHRA), Report on the implementation by the Philippines government of Articles 10, 11 and 12 of the CESCR on the occasion of the 12th Session of ECOSOC, Manila, 20 April 1995, pp. 15 and 16.

CHAPTER 39

OTHER PERSONS AFFORDED SPECIFIC PROTECTION

A. Women

Note: For practice concerning non-discrimination, see Chapter 32, section B. For practice concerning rape and other forms of sexual violence, see Chapter 32, section G. For practice concerning accommodation for women deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, section B. For practice concerning the specific needs of displaced women, see Chapter 38, section C.

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Articles 12, fourth paragraph, GC I and 12, fourth paragraph, GC II provide that "women shall be treated with all consideration due to their sex".

2. Article 14, second paragraph, GC III provides that "women shall be treated with all the regard due to their sex".

3. Article 27, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "women shall be especially protected against any attack on their honour".
4. Article 119, second paragraph, GC IV provides in relation to disciplinary punishments that "account shall be taken of the internee's age, sex and state of health".
5. Article 76(1) AP I provides that "women shall be the object of special respect". Article 76 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]
6. Article 2 of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women provides that "States Parties condemn discrimination against women in all its forms, agree to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating discrimination against women".
7. Article 2(1) of the 2003 Protocol to the ACHPR on the Rights of Women in Africa provides that "States Parties shall combat all forms of discrimination against women through appropriate legislative, institutional and other measures".

Other Instruments
8. Article 19 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "commanders, whenever admissible, inform the enemy of their intention to bombard a place, so that the non-combatants, and especially the women . . . may be removed before the bombardment commences".
9. Article 37 of the 1863 Lieber Code states that "the United States acknowledge and protect . . . the persons of the inhabitants, especially those of women".
10. Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the 1974 UN Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict state that:

> 4. All the necessary steps shall be taken to ensure the prohibition of measures such as persecution, torture, punitive measures, degrading treatment and violence, particularly against that part of the civilian population that consists of women . . .
> 5. All forms of repression and cruel and inhuman treatment of women . . . including imprisonment, torture, shooting, mass arrests, collective punishment, destruction of dwellings and forcible eviction, committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories shall be considered criminal.

11. Article 3 of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict, it is not permissible to kill non-belligerents such as . . . women".
12. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 76(1) AP I.

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.

13. Paragraph 2.3(2) of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 76(1) AP I.
14. Section 7.3 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "women shall be especially protected against any attack".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
15. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that, as POWs, "women shall be treated with due consideration to their sex and must in no case receive treatment less favourable than that granted to the men".[2] The manual further states that, as wounded and sick, "women shall be treated with all consideration due to their sex".[3]
16. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that "the Geneva Conventions provide particular protection for women".[4]
17. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "women receive special protection under LOAC".[5] It also states that "priority in medical treatment can only be determined on the basis of medical need, although women are to be treated with all consideration due to their sex".[6] The manual further states that "female prisoners must be treated with due regard to their sex and must in no case be treated less favourably than male prisoners. Their sex must also be taken into account in the allocation of labour and in the provision of sleeping and sanitary facilities."[7]
18. Benin's Military Manual provides that "women . . . shall be treated with due respect to their sex".[8]
19. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that at the approach of the enemy, "all persons shall be evacuated, with priority to women".[9]
20. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "female POWs must be treated with due regard to their gender and must in no case be treated less favourably than male POWs. Their gender must also be taken into account in the allocation of labour and in the provision of sleeping and sanitary facilities".[10]
21. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "women . . . are entitled to special respect and protection".[11]

[2] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.013(2); see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.09.
[3] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.001.
[4] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 603.
[5] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 946.
[6] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 992.
[7] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1010.
[8] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 4.
[9] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 67, § 242(1).
[10] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 21.
[11] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.3.

22. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that it is prohibited to "attack and maltreat women".[12] It also states that "every act of violence against . . . mothers is a criminal, cowardly and dishonourable act, punishable by serious disciplinary sanctions".[13]

23. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces states that "women must be protected" and that "women must be respected".[14]

24. France's LOAC Manual states that "the law of armed conflicts provides for special protection of the following persons: . . . women".[15]

25. India's Army Training Note orders troops not to "ill treat any one, and in particular, women".[16]

26. Indonesia's Field Manual specifies that female POWs should be respected and that they should, in all circumstances, be treated as well as male prisoners.[17]

27. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "women . . . shall be the object of a particular respect". It adds that, as POWs, "women must be treated with due regard to their sex".[18]

28. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that soldiers in combat are required to spare women.[19]

29. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "women shall be the object of special respect".[20] It also provides that "women will be treated with all consideration due to their sex".[21]

30. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that:

> Female prisoners must be treated with due regard to their sex and must in no case be treated less favourably than male prisoners. Their sex must also be taken into account in the allocation of labour and the provision of sleeping and sanitary facilities . . .
>
> Only urgent medical requirements will justify any priority in treatment among those who are sick and wounded, although women are to be treated with all consideration due to their sex.[22]

31. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "women should be respected".[23] It adds that "female prisoners of war must be treated with due consideration to their sex".[24]

[12] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 3.
[13] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 5.
[14] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), pp. 7 and 13.
[15] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 96.
[16] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 4/24, § 10.
[17] Indonesia, Field Manual (1979), pp. 7 and 18.
[18] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 27.
[19] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(4).
[20] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-3.
[21] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.
[22] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 916 and 1004(2).
[23] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[24] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 37.

32. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines provides that "all civilians, particularly women, . . . must be respected".[25]
33. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that, as POWs, "women shall be treated with all consideration due to their sex".[26]
34. According to Sweden's IHL Manual, the "general protection of women" contained in AP I has the status of customary international law.[27] It further states that "women [in occupied territory] shall be especially protected against any form of insulting treatment".[28]
35. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "women . . . shall be the object of particular respect".[29]
36. Togo's Military Manual provides that "women . . . shall be treated with due respect to their sex".[30]
37. The UK LOAC Manual states that "priority in the order of medical treatment is decided only for urgent medical reasons. Women are to be treated with all consideration due to their sex."[31] The manual further provides that "PW are entitled in all circumstances to respect for their persons and their honour. Specific mention is made of women in this respect."[32]
38. The US Field Manual provides that "the commanders of United States ground forces will, when the situation permits, inform the enemy of their intention to bombard a place, so that the noncombatants, especially the women, . . . may be removed before the bombardment commences".[33] It also states that, as POWs, "women shall be treated with all regard due to their sex and shall in all cases benefit by treatment as favourable as that granted to men".[34] The manual further states that, as wounded and sick, "women shall be treated with all consideration due to their sex".[35]
39. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that, as wounded and sick, "women are required to be treated with all consideration due their sex".[36]
40. The US Naval Handbook provides that "women . . . are entitled to special respect and protection".[37]
41. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that only urgent medical reasons will determine priority of treatment among the wounded and sick, though women will be treated with all consideration due to their sex.[38]

[25] Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), Rule 1.
[26] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.4.a.(1).
[27] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[28] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[29] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 146(3).
[30] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 4.
[31] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 2.
[32] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 29, § 6.
[33] US, Field Manual (1956), § 43. [34] US, Field Manual (1956), § 90.
[35] US, Field Manual (1956), § 215. [36] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).
[37] US Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.3
[38] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Article 162.

National Legislation

42. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes "any soldier who, in the event of an armed conflict: . . . [breaches the provisions governing] the special protection accorded to women".[39]

43. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "special attention is given . . . to women . . . and they are taken great care of". It also states that "the following actions are prohibited to be carried out against civilian persons: . . . 2) . . . bad attitude towards women".[40]

44. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[41]

45. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 12 GC I, 12 GC II, 14 GC III and 27 and 119 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 76(1) AP I, are punishable offences.[42]

46. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[43]

47. According to Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, it is a crime against international law to "make a serious attempt on the life of . . . women".[44]

National Case-law

48. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

49. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 76 AP I to be part of customary international law.[45]

50. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support . . . the principle that women . . . be the object of special respect and protection".[46]

[39] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[40] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 15 and 17.
[41] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[42] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[43] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[44] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474.
[45] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[46] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

51. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council denounced "the discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law in Afghanistan".[47]

52. In two resolutions on Afghanistan adopted in 1998, the UN Security Council demanded that "the Afghan factions put an end to discrimination against girls and women and other violations of human rights and international humanitarian law".[48]

53. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on children in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council urged all parties to armed conflicts "to take into account the special needs of the girl child throughout armed conflicts and their aftermath, including in the delivery of humanitarian assistance".[49]

54. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on protection of civilians in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council expressed its grave concern at the "particular impact that armed conflict has on women" and reaffirmed "the importance of fully addressing their special protection and assistance needs in the mandates of peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building operations".[50]

55. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on women and peace and security, the UN Security Council called upon all parties to armed conflicts to respect fully international law applicable to the rights and protection of women and girls, especially as civilians, in particular the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols, the 1951 Refugee Convention, the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child and the 1998 ICC Statute.[51]

56. In a resolution on Afghanistan adopted in 2000, the UN Security Council reiterated "its deep concern over the continuing violation of international humanitarian law and of human rights, particularly IHL and human rights, particularly discrimination against women and girls".[52]

57. In 1998, in several statements by its President, the UN Security Council expressed deep concern at the discrimination against girls and women and other abuses of human rights and IHL in Afghanistan.[53]

Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

47 UN Security Council, Res. 1076, 22 October 1996, preamble and § 11.

48 UN Security Council, Res. 1193, 28 August 1998, § 14; Res. 1214, 8 December 1998, § 12.

49 UN Security Council, Res. 1261, 25 August 1999, § 10.

50 UN Security Council, Res. 1296, 19 April 2000, § 9.

51 UN Security Council, Res. 1325, 31 October 2000, § 9.

52 UN Security Council, Res. 1333, 19 December 2000, preamble.

53 UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/9, 6 April 1998; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/22, 14 July 1998; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/24, 6 August 1998.

58. In a resolution adopted in 1998, ECOSOC condemned the continuing violations of the human rights of women and girls, including all forms of discrimination against them, throughout Afghanistan.[54]

59. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the widespread use of forced labour, including as porters for the army. It particularly condemned this practice in relation to women.[55]

60. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the question of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned "the widespread violations and abuses of human rights and humanitarian law . . . in particular, the human rights of women and girls".[56]

61. In 1998, in a report on violence against women, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission of Human Rights on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences stated that "it has been posited that the military establishment is inherently masculine and misogynist, inimical to the notion of women's rights. The masculinity cults that pervade military institutions are intrinsically anti-female and therefore create a hostile environment for women." The Special Rapporteur recommended at the international level that:

> 95. Existing humanitarian legal standards should be evaluated and practices revised to incorporate developing norms on violence against women during armed conflict. The Torture and Genocide Conventions and the Geneva Conventions, in particular, should be re-examined and utilized in this light.
> 96. Since peacekeeping has become an important part of the activities of the United Nations, peacekeepers should be given necessary training in gender issues before they are sent to troubled areas. Offences committed by peacekeepers should also be considered international crimes and they should be tried accordingly.[57]

The report also listed cases of violence against women in times of armed conflict in Afghanistan, Algeria, Guatemala, Haiti, India, Indonesia (East Timor), Japan (comfort women during the Second World War), Liberia, Mexico, China (Tibet), Peru, Rwanda, Sri Lanka and US.[58]

62. In 2001, in a report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur of the UN

[54] ECOSOC, Res. 1998/9, 28 July 1998, § 1.
[55] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/63, 21 April 1998, § 3.
[56] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, §§ 2(b) and 3(a).
[57] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/54, 26 January 1998, §§ 9, 95 and 96.
[58] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/54, 26 January 1998, §§ 20 and 21 (Afghanistan), §§ 22 and 23 (Algeria), §§ 28 and 29 (Guatemala), §§ 30 and 31(Haiti), §§ 32–36 (India), §§ 26 and 27 (Indonesia, East Timor), §§ 37 and 38 (Japan, comfort women during the Second World War), §§ 39–44 (Liberia), §§ 45 and 46 (Mexico), § 47 (China, Tibet), §§ 48 and 49 (Peru), §§ 50–52 (Rwanda), §§ 53–55 (Sri Lanka) and §§ 56 and 57 (US).

Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences stated that:

> 48. It is now widely recognized that armed conflict has a different and more damaging long-term impact on children, and that female children may face specific risks that are different from those of boys. As is reflected throughout the case studies below, girls face many if not all of the risks that are experienced by women during armed conflict ... And while they may find themselves responsible for the shelter and feeding of younger siblings, they encounter numerous obstacles that make these tasks difficult because of their age and gender ...
> 52. Despite the specific needs and experiences of girls in armed conflict, girls are often the last priority when it comes to the distribution of humanitarian aid and their needs are often neglected in the formulation of demobilization and reintegration programmes. There is growing recognition that the specific needs of girls require special protective measures, both during armed conflicts and in post-conflict situations.[59]

The report also listed cases of violence against women in times of armed conflict committed between 1997 and 2000 in Afghanistan, Burundi, Colombia, DRC, East Timor, FRY (Kosovo), India, Indonesia (West Timor), Japan (developments with regards to justice for comfort women), Myanmar, Russia (Chechnya), Sierra Leone and Sri Lanka. The report made detailed recommendations of measures to be taken at both the international and national levels.[60]

Other International Organisations

63. In a recommendation adopted in 1995 on Turkey's military intervention in northern Iraq, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe asked Turkey "to guarantee the fundamental rights of civilians, in particular those of the more vulnerable" groups, including women.[61]

64. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the European Parliament condemned the atrocities committed against the civilian population, and particularly women, in Sierra Leone.[62]

International Conferences

65. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed deep concern about "violations of human

[59] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict (1997–2000), UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/73, 23 January 2001, §§ 48 and 52.

[60] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report on Violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict (1997–2000), UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/73, 23 January 2001, §§ 68–71 (Afghanistan), §§ 72 and 73 (Burundi), §§ 74 and 75 (Colombia), §§ 76–78 (DRC), §§ 79–81 (East Timor), §§ 82–84 (FRY, Kosovo), §§ 85–87, (India), §§ 89–91 (Indonesia, West Timor), §§ 92–96 (Japan), §§ 97–99 (Myanmar), §§ 100–103 (Russia, Chechnya), §§ 104–108 (Sierra Leone), §§ 109–113 (Sri Lanka) and §§ 114–135.

[61] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1266, 26 April 1995, § 5.

[62] European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in Sierra Leone, 14 January 1999, § G.

rights during armed conflicts, affecting the civilian population, especially women" and therefore called upon States and all parties to armed conflicts "strictly to observe international humanitarian law".[63] It further stated that:

> Violations of the human rights of women in situations of armed conflict are violations of the fundamental principles of international human rights and humanitarian law. All violations of this kind, including in particular murder, systematic rape, sexual slavery, and forced pregnancy, require a particularly effective response.[64]

66. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 recognised "the fundamental link between assistance to and protection of women victims of conflict" and urged that "strong measures be taken to provide women with the protection and assistance to which they are entitled under national and international law". The Conference further encouraged:

> States, the Movement and other competent entities and organizations to develop preventive measures, assess existing programmes and set up new programmes to ensure that women victims of conflict receive medical, psychological and social assistance, provided if possible by qualified personnel who are aware of the specific issues involved.[65]

67. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "in the conduct of hostilities, every effort is made . . . to spare the life, protect and respect the civilian population, with particular protective measures for women and girls".[66]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

68. In 1992, in its General Recommendation on violence against women, the CEDAW stated that "gender-based violence . . . impairs or nullifies the enjoyment by women of human rights and fundamental freedoms [including] . . . the right to equal protection according to humanitarian norms in time of international or internal armed conflict".[67]

69. In 1998, in its concluding observations on the report of Mexico, the CEDAW expressed concern about the situation of indigenous women in Chiapas and

[63] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(29).
[64] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § II(38).
[65] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § B(b) and (e).
[66] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(a).
[67] CEDAW, General Recommendation No. 19 (Violence against women), 30 January 1992, § 7(c).

recommended that "the government of Mexico pay special attention to safeguarding the human rights of women in conflict zones".[68]

70. In 1998, in its report to the UN General Assembly, the CEDAW stated in relation to Indonesia that it was:

> concerned that the information provided on the situation of women in areas of armed conflict reflects a limited understanding of the problem. The Government's remarks are confined to the participation of women in the armed forces and do not address the vulnerability of women to sexual exploitation in conflict situation, as well as a range of other human rights abuses affecting women in such contexts.[69]

71. In 1999, in a report to the UN General Assembly, the CEDAW stated that "States parties should ensure that adequate protection and health services, including trauma treatment and counselling, are provided for women in especially difficult circumstances, such as those trapped in situations of armed conflict". The Committee expressed concern at "the persistence of widespread violence as a result of the armed conflict" in Colombia, stating that "women are the principal victims" and that they "lack the resources needed for survival in a situation in which they are called upon to assume greater responsibilities". In relation to Georgia, the Committee expressed concern that "the National Action Plan [had] not yet been implemented". The plan addressed, inter alia, "making special efforts for women . . . victims of armed conflicts".[70]

72. In 2000, in a report to the UN General Assembly, the CEDAW stated that it was "concerned that women [in India] were exposed to high levels of violence, . . . humiliation and torture in areas where there are armed insurrections". It recommended:

> a review of prevention of terrorism legislation and the Armed Forces Special Provisions Acts, . . . so that special powers given to security forces do not prevent the investigation and prosecution of acts of violence against women in conflict areas and during detention and arrest.[71]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

73. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "women . . . shall be treated with all regard due to their sex".[72]

74. In its pledge to promote the respect of women in armed conflicts, made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, [68] CEDAW, Concluding observations on the report of Mexico, UN Doc. A/53/38, 14 May 1998, § 425.

[69] CEDAW, Report to the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/53/38/Rev.1, 14 May 1998, § 295.
[70] CEDAW, Report to the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/54/38/Rev.1, 20 August 1999, Part I, §§ 16 and 358 and Part II, § 96.
[71] CEDAW, Report to the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/55/38, 17 August 2000, §§ 71 and 72.
[72] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 666.

the ICRC pledged "to put emphasis throughout its activities on the respect which must be accorded to women and girl children" and furthermore "to ensure that the specific protection, health and assistance needs of women and girl children affected by armed conflicts are appropriately assessed in its operations with the aim to alleviate the plight of the most vulnerable".[73]

VI. Other Practice

75. The Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights adopted in 1993 states that "in crisis situations – ethnic violence, communal riots, armed conflicts, military occupation and displacement – women's rights are specifically violated".[74]

Particular care for pregnant women and nursing mothers

Note: For practice concerning the establishment of hospital and safety zones to protect expectant mothers and mothers of children under seven, see Chapter 11, section A.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

76. Article 16, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "expectant mothers, shall be the object of particular protection and respect".

77. Article 38, fifth paragraph, GC IV provides that, as aliens in the territory of a party to the conflict, "pregnant women and mothers of children under seven years shall benefit by any preferential treatment to the same extent as the nationals of the State concerned".

78. Article 50, fifth paragraph, Article 89, fifth paragraph, and Article 132, second paragraph, GC IV contain specific mentions in relation to the provision of food, clothing, medical assistance and evacuation for both pregnant women and nursing mothers.

79. Article 18, first paragraph, Article 21, Article 22, first paragraph, Article 23, first paragraph, Article 91, second paragraph, and Article 127, third paragraph, GC IV contain specific mentions in relation to medical assistance to and transport for pregnant women.

80. Article 17 GC IV provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas, of . . . maternity cases".

[73] ICRC, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

[74] World Conference on Human Rights, Regional Preparatory Meeting for Asia–Pacific, Bangkok, 24–28 March 1993, Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/PC/83, 19 April 1993, § 3.

81. Article 70(1) AP I provides that "in distribution of relief consignments, priority shall be given to ... expectant mothers, maternity cases and nursing mothers, who under the fourth Geneva Convention or under this Protocol are to be accorded privileged treatment or special protection". Article 70 AP I was adopted by consensus.[75]
82. Article 76(2) AP I provides that "pregnant women and mothers having dependent infants who are arrested, detained or interned for reasons related to the armed conflict, shall have their cases considered with the utmost priority". Article 76 AP I was adopted by consensus.[76]
83. According to Article 8(a) AP I, the terms "wounded" and "sick" also cover maternity cases and expectant mothers. Article 8 AP I was adopted by consensus.[77]

Other Instruments
84. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 76(2) AP I.
85. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 76(2) AP I.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
86. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) contains several specific rules intended to protect pregnant women and nursing mothers from the effects of war.[78]
87. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "maternity cases, pregnant women ... are considered as" included in the concept of wounded and sick.[79] It further states that "pregnant women and mothers with dependent young children, who are arrested for reasons related to the armed conflict, shall be cared for with absolute priority".[80]
88. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that the terms "wounded" and "sick" "also cover maternity cases ... and expectant mothers".[81]

[75] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 245.
[76] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[77] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 68.
[78] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 1.014, 4.004(1) and 4.006; see also Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 4.05 and 4.11.
[79] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.02.
[80] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.13.
[81] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), glossary, p. xxiv.

89. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides specific rules "for the protection from the effects of war of . . . expectant mothers and mothers of children under seven years".[82]
90. Canada's LOAC Manual contains several specific rules intended to protect maternity cases and expectant mothers.[83]
91. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "in these cases, the IHL rules favour especially the civilian population, so that the assistance and protection which the parties to the conflict shall bring are given in priority to the most vulnerable persons or groups of persons, who are: . . . pregnant women".[84]
92. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "a particular attention shall be paid to the protection of . . . pregnant women and mothers accompanied by children under seven years old".[85]
93. France's LOAC Manual contains specific rules intended to protect maternity cases and provides that "out of concern for their protection, pregnant women and maternity cases . . . are included in the same category as the wounded and sick under humanitarian law".[86]
94. Germany's Military Manual contains specific rules intended to protect "expectant mothers and mothers of children under seven from any attack".[87]
95. Kenya's LOAC Manual contains specific rules intended to protect expectant mothers and maternity cases.[88]
96. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that maternity cases and pregnant women are included in the same category as the wounded and sick.[89]
97. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "pregnant women and mothers having dependent infants shall be respected".[90]
98. New Zealand's Military Manual contains several specific rules intended to protect expectant mothers and mothers of children under seven.[91]
99. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct provides that "under no circumstances should pregnant women be ill-treated or killed".[92]
100. Nigeria's Military Manual provides that "duly recognized civilian hospitals with their staff, as well as land, sea or air transport of wounded and sick persons, the infirm or maternity cases are entitled to similar respect and [82] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 735, 940, 946 and 1216; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 926.

[83] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-10, § 103, p. 6-4, § 35, p. 11-2, § 16, p. 11-3, § 23 and p. 12-4, § 32.
[84] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 25.
[85] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), pp. 4–5; see also LOAC Manual (2001), p. 125.
[86] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 32 and 64.
[87] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 512.
[88] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, pp. 5–6.
[89] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-SO, § B.
[90] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-3.
[91] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 508(3), 1106(1), 1108, 1110, 1111(1), 1118, 1131(1), 1318(1) and 1405(4).
[92] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(a).

protection as provided in the first and second conventions for their military counterparts".[93]

101. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "pregnant women and mothers of young children shall receive a particular attention".[94]

102. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual contains several rules intended to protect specifically maternity cases and pregnant women.[95]

103. The UK Military Manual contains several rules intended to protect specifically maternity cases and pregnant women.[96]

104. The UK LOAC Manual contains specific rules intended to protect specifically expectant women and mothers with children under seven years of age.[97]

105. The US Field Manual contains several rules intended to protect specifically maternity cases and pregnant women.[98]

106. The US Air Force contains several rules intended to protect specifically maternity cases and pregnant women.[99]

National Legislation

107. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "pregnant women and women with young children have to be assured of kind treatment and care".[100]

108. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[101]

109. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 14, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 23, 38, 50, 89, 91, 127 and 132 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Articles 70(1) and 76(2) AP I, are punishable offences.[102]

110. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[103]

111. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines provides that "expectant mothers and nursing mothers shall be given additional food in proportion to their physiological needs".[104]

[93] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 18, § 12.
[94] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.c.(1), see also §§ 4.5.b.(3), 9.4.a and 9.5.a.
[95] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 33, 36 and 37.
[96] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 28, 29, 32–35, 46 and 538.
[97] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, §§ 2, 3 and 5.
[98] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 44, 253, 256, 257, 260–262, 277(5), 296, 383.
[99] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 14-3 and 14-5.
[100] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 15.
[101] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[102] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[103] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[104] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Sections 23–24.

National Case-law
112. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
113. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 76 AP I to be part of customary international law.[105]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

114. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

115. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

116. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

117. No practice was found.

Death penalty on pregnant women and nursing mothers

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
118. Article 6(5) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "sentence of death shall not . . . be carried out on pregnant women".
119. Article 4(5) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "capital punishment shall not be . . . applied to pregnant women".
120. Article 76(3) AP I provides that:

> To the maximum extent feasible, the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to avoid the pronouncement of the death penalty on pregnant women or mothers having dependent infants, for an offence related to the armed conflict. The death penalty for such offences shall not be executed on such women.

Article 76 AP I was adopted by consensus.[106]
121. Article 6(4) AP II provides that "the death penalty shall not be pronounced . . . on pregnant women or mothers of young children". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[107]

[105] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[106] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[107] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

Other Instruments

122. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 76(3) AP I.

123. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 76(3) AP I.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

124. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "it is not possible to pronounce the death penalty against pregnant women or nursing mothers. If pronounced, it must not be executed."[108] With respect to non-international conflicts in particular, the manual states that "the death penalty shall not be pronounced against . . . pregnant women and mothers of young children".[109]

125. Canada's LOAC Manual provides, with respect to non-international conflicts in particular, that "the death penalty shall not be carried out on pregnant women or mothers of young children".[110]

126. New Zealand's Military Manual provides, with respect to non-international conflicts, that "the death penalty shall not be carried out on pregnant women or mothers of young children".[111]

127. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct provides that "under no circumstances should pregnant women be ill-treated or killed".[112]

128. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that if pregnant women and mothers of young children are condemned to death, the sentence shall not be executed on them.[113]

National Legislation

129. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 76(3) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(4) AP II, are punishable offences.[114]

130. Under Jordanian legislation, it is prohibited to pronounce or carry out the death penalty on pregnant women and this prohibition is valid for the three months following the birth of the child.[115]

[108] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.28, see also § 5.11.
[109] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[110] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 30.
[111] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(3).
[112] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(a).
[113] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.c.(1).
[114] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[115] Jordan, Criminal Code (1960), Article 17; Code of Criminal Procedure as amended (1961), Article 338.

131. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[116]

National Case-law

132. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

133. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 76 AP I to be customary.[117]

134. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[118]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

135. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

136. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

137. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the pronouncement of the death penalty on pregnant women or mothers having dependent infants, for an offence related to the armed conflict, shall be avoided. The death penalty for those offences shall in no circumstances be executed on such women."[119]

VI. Other Practice

138. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi

[116] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[117] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[118] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[119] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 203.

University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "sentences of death shall not be carried out on pregnant women [or] mothers of young children".[120]

B. Children

Note: For practice concerning rape and other forms of sexual violence, see Chapter 32, section G. For practice concerning accommodation of children deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, section C. For practice concerning the specific needs of displaced children, see Chapter 38, section C.

Special protection

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

139. Article 23, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "each High Contracting Party . . . shall permit the free passage of all consignments of essential foodstuffs, clothing and tonics intended for children under fifteen".

140. Article 24, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall take all necessary measures to ensure that children under fifteen, who are orphaned or are separated from their families as a result of the war, are not left to their own resources".

141. Article 38, fifth paragraph, GC IV provides that children under 15 years, aliens in the territory of a party to the conflict, "shall benefit by any preferential treatment to the same extent as the nationals of the State concerned".

142. Article 50 GC IV provides that "the Occupying Power shall not hinder the application of any preferential measures in regard to food, medical care and protection against the effects of war, which may have been adopted prior to the occupation in favour of children under fifteen years".

143. Article 76, fifth paragraph, GC IV provides that, in the treatment of detainees in occupied territory, "proper regard shall be paid to the special treatment due to minors".

144. Article 89, fifth paragraph, GC IV provides that "children under fifteen years of age [who are interned] shall be given additional food, in proportion with their physiological needs".

145. According to Article 8(a) AP I, the terms "wounded" and "sick" also cover new-born babies. Article 8 AP I was adopted by consensus.[121]

146. Article 70(1) AP I provides that "in the distribution of relief consignments, priority shall be given to . . . children". Article 70 AP I was adopted by consensus.[122]

[120] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 8(3), IRRC, No. 282, p. 333.
[121] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 68.
[122] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 245.

147. Article 77(1) AP I provides that "children shall be the object of special respect". Article 77 AP I was adopted by consensus.[123]
148. Article 4(3) AP II provides that "children shall be provided with the care and aid they require". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[124]
149. Article 38 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

> 1. States Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for rules of international humanitarian law applicable to them in armed conflicts which are relevant to the child . . .
> 4. In accordance with their obligation under international humanitarian law to protect the civilian population in armed conflicts, States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure protection and care of children who are affected by armed conflict.

150. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Netherlands stated that "in times of armed conflict, provisions shall prevail that are most conducive to guaranteeing the protection of children under international law".[125]
151. Article 22 of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that:

> 1. States Parties to this Charter shall undertake to respect and ensure respect for rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts which affect the child . . .
> 3. States Parties to the present Charter shall, in accordance with their obligations under international humanitarian law, protect the civilian population in armed conflicts and shall take all feasible measures to ensure the protection and care of children who are affected by armed conflicts. Such rules shall also apply to children in situations of internal armed conflicts, tension and strife.

Other Instruments
152. Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the 1974 UN Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict state that:

> 4. All the necessary steps shall be taken to ensure the prohibition of measures such as persecution, torture, punitive measures, degrading treatment and violence, particularly against that part of the civilian population that consists of . . . children.
> 5. All forms of repression and cruel and inhuman treatment of . . . children, including imprisonment, torture, shooting, mass arrests, collective punishment, destruction of dwellings and forcible eviction, committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories shall be considered criminal.

[123] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[124] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[125] Netherlands, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 February 1995, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 27.

153. Rule 13.5 of the 1985 Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice provides that "while in custody, juveniles shall receive care, protection and all necessary individual assistance . . . that they may require in view of their age, sex and personality".
154. Rule 24.1 of the 1985 Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice provides that "efforts shall be made to provide juveniles, at all stages of the proceedings, with necessary assistance . . . in order to facilitate the rehabilitative process".
155. Article 3 of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict, it is not permissible to kill non-belligerents such as . . . children".
156. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(1) AP I.
157. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(1) AP I.
158. Article 2(24) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines states that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote "the right of children . . . to protection, care, and a home, especially against physical and mental abuse, prostitution, drugs, forced labour, homelessness, and other similar forms of oppression and exploitation".
159. Section 7.4 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "children shall be the object of special respect".
160. In paragraph 26 of the United Nations Millennium Declaration, the heads of State and Government declared they would:

> spare no effort to ensure that children and all civilian populations that suffer disproportionately the consequences of natural disasters, genocide, armed conflicts and other humanitarian emergencies are given every assistance and protection so that they can resume normal life as soon as possible.

161. Article 24 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "children shall have the right to such protection and care as is necessary for their well-being".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

162. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "the belligerent parties shall take the necessary measures to ensure that children under the age of 7 who have been orphaned or separated from their families are not left to their own resources".[126] It further states that "the occupying Power shall not hinder the application of any preferential measures in regard to food, medical care and protection against the effects of war, which may have been adopted prior to the occupation in favour of children under 15 years".[127]

[126] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.007; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.

163. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that new-born babies are considered as included in the concept of wounded and sick.[128] It further states that "children shall be the object of a special respect and shall be protected against any form of indecent assault" and that "they are to receive care and aid as they require on account of their age or any other reasons".[129] With respect to non-international conflicts in particular, the manual provides that "children shall receive the assistance and care they require".[130]

164. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that the terms "wounded" and "sick" "also cover . . . new born babies".[131]

165. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "children are granted special protection under LOAC. Important rules are shown below: a. because of their age children should receive all the aid and care they require."[132] The manual further states that "the occupying power must take necessary steps to ensure that children under 15 years of age and who are separated from their families are not left to their own resources".[133]

166. Benin's Military Manual provides that "children shall be treated with respect due to their . . . age".[134]

167. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "belligerents must make provision for the care of children under 15 who have been orphaned or separated from their families as a result of the conflict. They must ensure the maintenance of such children."[135] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "children are to receive such aid and protection as required".[136]

168. Colombia's Basic military Manual provides that "IHL rules favour especially the civilian population so that assistance and protection, which the parties to the conflict shall bring, are given in priority to the most vulnerable persons or groups of persons, who are: children".[137] The manual further states that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "care and aid shall be provided to children".[138]

[127] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.009.
[128] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.02.
[129] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.
[130] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[131] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), glossary, p. xxiv.
[132] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 947.
[133] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1215.
[134] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 4.
[135] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-3, § 25.
[136] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 22.
[137] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 25.
[138] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 74.

169. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "children are entitled to special respect and protection".[139]

170. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that it is prohibited to "attack and maltreat . . . children". The manual further states that "any act of violence against . . . children . . . is a criminal, cowardly and dishonourable act, punishable by serious disciplinary sanctions".[140]

171. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces provides that children must be respected and protected.[141]

172. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "particular attention shall be paid to the protection of . . . children".[142]

173. France's LOAC Manual provides that "with concern about protection, . . . new-born babies . . . are assimilate to wounded and sick under humanitarian law".[143] It further states that "the law of armed conflicts provides for special protection of the following persons: . . . children".[144]

174. Germany's Military Manual provides that "children shall be the object of special respect and protection. They shall be provided with the care and aid they require, whether because of their youth or for any other reasons." It adds that "if they fall into the power of an adverse party, they shall be granted special protection".[145]

175. India's Manual of Military Law provides that special care must be taken in respect of children.[146]

176. India's Army Training Note orders troops not to "ill treat any one, and in particular, . . . children".[147]

177. The Report on the Practice of Indonesia, with reference to the Military Manual, states that children under 15 years of age, orphaned or separated from their families as a result of conflict, shall be protected and given access to health care and food.[148]

178. Italy's IHL Manual provides that the occupying power "shall take all necessary measures to ensure the care . . . of minors".[149]

179. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "parties to the conflict are to care for children under 15 years of age who are orphaned and who are separated from their families. They are not to be subjected to political propaganda."[150]

180. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "children shall be the object of a particular respect and be protected against indecent assault". It adds that "the occupant must . . . ensure the welfare of children".[151]

[139] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.3.
[140] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), pp. 3 and 5.
[141] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), pp. 7 and 13.
[142] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 4; see also LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 62 and 96.
[143] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 32.
[144] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 96.
[145] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 505.
[146] India, Manual of Military Law (1983), p. 5/3–5/6.
[147] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 4/24, § 10.
[148] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 5.3, referring to Military Manual (1982).
[149] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 48(9).
[150] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 5.
[151] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 27.

181. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that soldiers in combat are required to spare children.[152]

182. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "children shall be protected against any form of indecent assault. Children shall be provided with the care and aid they require, because of their age."[153]

183. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the Occupying Power must take the necessary steps to ensure that children under fifteen separated from their families are not left to their own resources".[154] It further states that "belligerents must make provision for the care of children under 15 who have been orphaned or separated from their families as a result of war".[155] The manual then states that, as aliens in the territory of a party to the conflict, "children under 15 . . . must be given the benefit of any preferential treatment that is accorded to similar classes of nationals of the belligerent".[156] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual provides that children under 15 "are to receive such aid and protection as they require".[157]

184. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that "special measures for children under 15 who are orphaned or are separated from their families as a result of the war" shall be taken.[158]

185. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct provides that "children must not be molested or killed. They will be protected and cared for."[159] It adds that "youths and school children must not be attacked unless they are engaged in open hostility against Federal Government Forces. They should be given all protection and care."[160]

186. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines provides that "all civilians, particularly . . . children . . . must be respected".[161]

187. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "children are also the object of a special respect and they shall be protected against any form of indecent assault. If they are taken prisoner, they shall be protected under special provisions."[162]

188. According to Sweden's IHL Manual, the "general protection of . . . children" contained in AP I has the status of customary international law.[163] The manual further provides that "the occupying power also has a particular responsibility in the area of child care".[164]

189. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "children shall be the object of a particular respect. Children shall be protected against any form of

[152] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(4).
[153] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-3.
[154] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1317(2).
[155] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1112(1).
[156] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1118(1).
[157] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1813(1).
[158] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(40).
[159] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1968), § 4(b).
[160] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1968), § 4(c).
[161] Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), Rule 1.
[162] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.c.(1), see also § 5.2.a.(2).
[163] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[164] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 123.

indecent assault."[165] It also states that "children shall be the object of a particular protection and respect".[166] The manual further provides that "necessary measures must be taken so that children under 15 years of age, who are separated from their families as a result of war, are not left to their own resources".[167] In addition, the manual states that "transports of ... children ... effected by convoys of vehicles and hospital trains, shall be respected and protected in the same way as hospitals".[168]

190. Togo's Military Manual provides that "children shall be treated with respect due to their ... age".[169]

191. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> 35. Belligerents must allow the free passage of ... all consignments of essential foodstuffs, clothing and tonics intended for children under 15 ...
> 36. Belligerents must make provision for the care of children under 15 who have been orphaned or separated from their families as a result of the war. They must ensure the maintenance of such children ... Belligerents must also facilitate the reception of these children by neutral countries for the duration of hostilities, with the consent of the Protecting Power, if any, and under due safeguards as above, and must endeavour to arrange for all children under 12 to be easily identifiable.[170]

The manual further states that as aliens in the territory of a party to the conflict, "children under fifteen ... must be given the benefit of any preferential treatment that is accorded to similar classes of nationals of the belligerents".[171] It also provides that "the Occupant must not prevent the application of any measures which may have been adopted prior to the occupation in favour of children under fifteen ... with regard to food, medical care and protection against the effects of war".[172]

192. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the free passage of medical and hospital stores and objects for religious worship is guaranteed as well as essential food and clothes for children".[173] It adds that "parties to the conflict are to care for children under 15, orphans and those separated from their families. They are not to be subject to political propaganda."[174]

193. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 23, 24, 38, 50 and 89 GC IV.[175]

[165] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 146(3).
[166] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 36; see also Military Manual (1984), p. 39 and Teaching Manual (1986), p. 107.
[167] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 157(1).
[168] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 37.
[169] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 4.
[170] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 35–36.
[171] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 46.
[172] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 538.
[173] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, § 5.
[174] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, § 6.
[175] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 44, 262, 263, 277, 296 and 389.

194. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "children under 15 . . . enjoy the same preferential treatment provided for the nationals of the state concerned".[176]

195. The US Naval Handbook provides that "children are entitled to special respect and protection".[177]

National Legislation

196. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes "any soldier who, in the event of an armed conflict: . . . [breaches the provisions governing] the special protection accorded to children".[178]

197. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in case of evacuation of civilian persons from a besieged zone, "special attention is given to children and they are taken great care of".[179]

198. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[180]

199. The Law on the Rights of the Child of Belarus states that children separated from their families as a result of armed conflict must be protected and provided with material and medical assistance by the public authorities.[181]

200. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 23, 24, 38, 50, 76 and 89 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Articles 70(1) and 77(1) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(3) AP II, are punishable offences.[182]

201. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[183]

202. According to Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, it is a crime against international law to "make a serious attempt on the life of . . . children".[184]

[176] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-5, see also § 14-3.
[177] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.3.
[178] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[179] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 15.
[180] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[181] Belarus, Law on the Rights of the Child (1993), Article 30.
[182] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[183] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[184] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474.

National Case-law

203. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

204. In a statement before the HRC in 1988, the Colombian representative reported that the child vaccination campaigns in Colombia had served as a model in other States, including El Salvador, where hostilities had been suspended in order to allow children to be vaccinated.[185]

205. According to a statement by France's Permanent Representative to the UN in 1999, France considers that the age limit to be protected as a child (15 years) in the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child is not satisfactory and that it should be raised to 18 years to ensure a better and more effective protection of children during conflicts.[186]

206. In 1995, its initial report to the CRC, Ghana reported that the "government agency responsible for abandoned and orphaned children worked with the Save the Children Fund to provide care for the children affected by the conflict" in the northern part of the country.[187]

207. In 1992, in its initial report to the CRC, Indonesia reported that according to its national legislation, "in any circumstances ... children should be protected first".[188]

208. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that special care is provided to children who have been orphaned or separated from their families.[189]

209. In 1993, in its initial report to the CRC, the Philippines reported that:

> 200. The Special Protection Act declares children as "Zones of Peace". This Act provides that children shall not be the object of attack and shall be the object of special respect. They are to be protected from any form of threat, assault, torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment ...
> 201. In any barangay where armed conflict occurs, the barangay chairperson shall submit to the municipal social welfare and development officer the names of all children residing in the barangay within 24 hours of the start of the conflict.
> ...
> 203. In any case where a child is arrested for reasons related to armed conflict, he or she shall be entitled to ... immediate full legal assistance ...
> 204. In support of the Special Protection Act, the Armed Forces of the Philippines issued in 1991 a memorandum order specifically on the protection of children during military operations.
> ...
> 206. Children who are lost, abandoned or orphaned as a result of an armed conflict are referred to the local Council for the Protection of Children or to the Department

[185] Colombia, Statement before the HRC, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.819, 14 July 1988, § 8.
[186] France, Statement of the Permanent Representative of France to the UN, "Protection of civilians affected by armed conflict", New York, 12 February 1999, Politique étrangère de la France, February 1999.
[187] Ghana, Report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.39, 19 December 1995, § 126.
[188] Indonesia, Report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.10, 14 January 1993, § 104.
[189] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

of Social Welfare and Development. All efforts are undertaken to locate the child's parents and relative. Arrangements are made for the temporary care of the child by a licensed foster family or a child-caring agency.[190]

210. In 1994, in its initial report to the CRC, Sri Lanka stated, with respect to child victims of armed conflict and refugees, that "there are several urgent needs that have to be met [including] the special health and nutritional needs of infants and pre-school children ... [and the] care and rehabilitation of children traumatized by violence".[191]

211. In 1993, in a statement before the CRC, Sudan referred to "days of tranquillity and corridors of peace. The former had begun in 1985 and had continued ever since ... The corridors had been used, for example, in vaccination campaigns run by UNICEF and in most cases the rebel movements had participated in those campaigns."[192]

212. In 1993, in its initial report to the CRC, Sudan stated that:

> 3. In fact, the efforts made by the Government of the Sudan ... are conclusive proof of its concern with and commitment to the rights and happiness of children; the Sudan is the country which introduced security corridors in areas of fighting and sought to cooperate with United Nations agencies ... to ensure the delivery of relief supplies to children, mothers and all citizens throughout the whole of the Sudan, including the areas controlled by the rebel movement.
> 17. .... concerning the situation of children in areas of armed conflict, ... "special" care is directed towards children and valuable efforts are being made ... to protect children and respond to their needs.[193]

213. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 77 AP I to be part of customary international law.[194]

214. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support ... the principle that ... children be the object of special respect and protection".[195]

215. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons

[190] Philippines, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.23, 3 November 1993, §§ 200, 201, 203, 204 and 206.
[191] Sri Lanka, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/8/Add.13, 5 May 1994, § 146.
[192] Sudan, Statement before the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/SR.70, 1 February 1993, §§ 13 and 20.
[193] Sudan, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.20, 2 August 1993, §§ 3 and 17.
[194] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[195] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[196]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

216. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Security Council expressed concern at the plight of children affected by the conflict in Sierra Leone and welcomed "the efforts of the government of Sierra Leone to coordinate an effective national response to the needs of children affected by armed conflict".[197]

217. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on children in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council called upon parties to armed conflicts "to undertake feasible measures during armed conflicts to minimize the harm suffered by children, such as 'days of tranquillity' to allow the delivery of basic necessary services and . . . to promote, implement and respect such measures".[198]

218. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on protection of civilians in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council reiterated its grave concern at "the particular impact that armed conflict has on children" and further reaffirmed in this regard "the importance of fully addressing their special protection and assistance needs in the mandates of peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building operations".[199]

219. In a resolution adopted in 2000, the UN Security Council emphasised the need to provide special protection for children in armed conflict and listed in detail what practical measures could be taken.[200]

220. In 1998, in a statement by its President on Sierra Leone, the UN Security Council condemned as gross violations of IHL the "atrocities carried out against the civilian population, particularly . . . children".[201]

221. In 1998, in a statement by its President on children and armed conflict, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "the targeting of children in armed conflicts . . . in violation of international humanitarian law".[202]

222. In 1999, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council expressed particular concern at "the harmful impact of armed conflict on children".[203]

[196] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[197] UN Security Council, Res. 1181, 13 July 1998, preamble.
[198] UN Security Council, Res. 1261, 25 August 1999, § 8.
[199] UN Security Council, Res. 1296, 19 April 2000, § 9.
[200] UN Security Council, Res. 1314, 11 August 2000, §§ 1–16.
[201] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/13, 20 May 1998, § 1.
[202] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/18, 29 June 1998, § 2.
[203] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1999/6, 12 February 1999, § 5.

223. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on protection of children affected by armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon States:

> fully to respect the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, of 1977, as well as those of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which accord children affected by armed conflicts special protection and treatment.[204]

224. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the situation of human rights in Sudan, the UN General Assembly urged all parties "to stop attacks on sites that usually have a significant presence of children as well as during the 'days of tranquillity' which had been agreed for the purpose of ensuring peaceful polio vaccination campaigns".[205]

225. In two resolutions adopted in 1982, ECOSOC expressed concern about the plight of children in situations of armed conflict and called upon governments and organisations to observe the rights of children, intensify their actions in this field and make generous contributions in this respect.[206]

226. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed its deep concern at "the continuing violations of human rights in Myanmar . . . [including] the widespread use of forced child labour".[207]

227. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed "the importance of the special attention for children in situations of armed conflict, in particular in the areas of health and nutrition, education and social reintegration".[208]

228. In 1997, in its Conclusion on Refugee Children and Adolescents, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR called upon States and relevant parties "to respect and observe rights and principles that are in accordance with international human rights and humanitarian law [including] . . . (iv) the right of children affected by armed conflict to special protection and treatment".[209]

229. In 1998, in a report on assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors, which included a section on internally displaced children, the UN Secretary-General noted that UNICEF was "pressing for an end to the systematic abduction of children from northern Uganda . . . [to] camps in southern Sudan . . . [where] they were tortured, enslaved, raped and otherwise abused".[210]

230. In 1996, in a report on the impact of armed conflict on children, the UN Expert on the Situation of Children in Armed Conflicts recommended that "during conflicts, Governments should support the health of their population

[204] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/157, 20 December 1993, § 2.
[205] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 3(d).
[206] ECOSOC, Res. 1982/24, 4 May 1982, §§ 3–4 and preamble; Res. 1982/25, 4 May 1982, §§ 1–2.
[207] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/63, 21 April 1998, § 3(a), (c) and (d).
[208] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, § 13(d).
[209] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 84(XLVIII): Refugee Children and Adolescents, 20 October 1997, § a(iv).
[210] UN Secretary-General, Report on assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors, UN Doc. A/53/325, 26 August 1998, § 20.

by facilitating 'days of tranquillity' or 'corridors of peace' to ensure continuity of basic child health measures and delivery of humanitarian relief".[211]

Other International Organisations

231. In a resolution adopted in 1987, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe condemned the imprisonment and torture of children during armed conflicts.[212]

232. In a recommendation adopted in 1991, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe expressed shock at the hundreds of deaths daily in the Kurdish provinces of Iraq, with special reference to children.[213]

233. In a recommendation adopted in 1995 on Turkey's military intervention in northern Iraq, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe asked Turkey to guarantee the fundamental rights of civilians, with special reference to vulnerable groups, including children.[214]

234. In a resolution adopted in 1989, the European Parliament expressed grave concern at the trial and imprisonment in Turkey of persons below adult age for political offences and called for their release.[215]

235. In a resolution adopted in 1989, the European Parliament stated that it considered that the most serious negative developments in the world with regard to respect for human rights included large-scale detention and reported torture or ill-treatment of children and minors in areas of civil unrest.[216]

International Conferences

236. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed deep concern about "violations of human rights during armed conflicts, affecting the civilian population, especially . . . children" and therefore called upon States and all parties to armed conflicts "strictly to observe international humanitarian law".[217]

237. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on protection of children in armed conflicts in which it recalled that "according to the Geneva Conventions and the two Additional Protocols, children under the age of 15 years who have taken direct part in hostilities and [211] UN Expert on the Situation of Children in Armed Conflicts, Report on the impact of armed conflict on children, UN Doc. A/51/306, 26 August 1996, Annex, § 165(c), see also §§ 208 and 280.

[212] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 881, 1 July 1987, § 13.
[213] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1150, 24 April 1991, § 3.
[214] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1266, 26 April 1995, § 5.
[215] European Parliament, Resolution on human rights violations in Turkey, 16 January 1989, § A(1).
[216] European Parliament, Resolution on the May Day events and continuing aggravation of the domestic political climate in Turkey, 26 June 1989, § 6(d).
[217] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(29), see also § II (50).

fall into the power of an adverse Party continue to benefit from special protection, whether or not they are prisoners of war" and invited "governments and the Movement to do their utmost to ensure that children who have taken part, directly or indirectly, in hostilities are systematically rehabilitated to normal life".[218]

238. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on protection of the civilian population in period of armed conflict in which it urgently drew attention to "the obligation to take all requisite measures to provide children with the protection and assistance to which they are entitled under national and international law", strongly condemned "the deliberate killing and exploitation of, and abuse of and violence against, children", and called for "particularly stringent measures to prevent and punish such behaviour". The Conference further encouraged

> States, the Movement and other competent entities and organizations to develop preventive measures, assess existing programmes and set up new programmes to ensure that child victims of conflict receive medical, psychological and social assistance, provided if possible by qualified personnel who are aware of the specific issues involved.[219]

239. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "in the conduct of hostilities, every effort is made . . . to spare the life, protect and respect the civilian population, with particular protective measures for . . . groups with special vulnerabilities such as children" and that "children receive the special protection, care and assistance . . . to which they are entitled under national and international law".[220]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

240. In 1993, in its preliminary observations on Sudan, the CRC expressed concern at "the effects of armed conflict on children . . . In emergency situations, all parties involved should do their utmost to facilitate humanitarian assistance to protect the lives of children."[221] In its concluding observations on the report of Sudan, the Committee stated that it continued to be alarmed at "the [218] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. IX, §§ 1, 3 and 6.

[219] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § C(a), (b) and (g).

[220] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(a) and (f).

[221] CRC, Preliminary observations on Sudan, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.6, 18 February 1993, § 9.

effects of emergency situations on children, as well as the problems faced by homeless . . . children. Reports on the forced labour and slavery of children give cause for the Committee's deepest concern."[222]

241. In 1993, in its concluding observations on the report of Peru, the CRC expressed concern that:

due to the internal violence [in Peru], several registration centres had been destroyed, adversely affecting the situation of thousands of children who are often without any identity documents, thus running the risk of their being suspected of involvement in terrorist activities . . .

The Committee deplores that, under [Peruvian law], children between 15 and 18 years of age who are suspected of being involved in terrorist activities do not benefit from safeguards and guarantees afforded by the system of administration of juvenile justice under normal circumstances . . .

The Committee also recommends that the provision of [the] law . . . be repealed or amended in order for children below 18 years of age to enjoy fully the rights guaranteed to [juveniles in non-emergency situations].[223]

242. In 1995, in its concluding observations on the report of the UK, the CRC stated that:

The Committee is concerned about the absence of effective safeguards to prevent the ill-treatment of children under emergency legislation. In this connection, the Committee observes that . . . it is possible to hold children as young as 10 for seven days without charge. It is also noted that the emergency legislation which gives the police and the army the power to stop, question and search people on the street has led to complaints of children being mistreated.[224]

243. In 1997, in its consideration of reports of Uganda, the CRC recommended that Uganda take "measures to stop the killing and abduction of children . . . in the area of the armed conflict".[225] It also recommended that "special attention be directed to refugee and internally displaced children to ensure that they have equal access to basic facilities" such as health and social services.[226]

244. In 1995, in examining a case involving the house arrest of the wife of the former President of Peru and their children, the IACiHR considered that the detention of the minors required separate examination. In view of the special

[222] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Sudan, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.10, 18 October 1993, § 14.

[223] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Peru, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.8, 18 October 1993, §§ 8, 9 and 17–18.

[224] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, UN Doc. CRC/C/38, 20 February 1995, § 212.

[225] CRC, Consideration of reports of Uganda, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.80, 21 October 1997, §§ 19 and 34.

[226] CRC, Consideration of reports of Uganda, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.80, 21 October 1997, §§ 21 and 37.

protection required for children under international law, the Commission found the measures taken by the Peruvian armed forces depriving the children of their freedom to be "particularly repugnant".[227]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

245. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "children shall be treated with all regard due to their . . . age".[228]

246. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on child soldiers in which it appealed to all parties to armed conflicts "strictly to observe the rules of international humanitarian law affording special protection to children" and invited National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies "to do everything possible to protect children during armed conflicts, particularly by ensuring that their basic needs are met".[229]

247. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "children and adolescents shall be granted favoured treatment at all times".[230]

248. In 1994, in a joint statement, the ICRC, the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, UNHCR and UNICEF reaffirmed that they "will continue to do their utmost to improve protection, medical and social conditions . . . so that the safety and the welfare of [unaccompanied] children can be ensured".[231]

249. At its Geneva Session in 1995, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on children in armed conflicts, which recognised that "the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols, as well as Articles 38 and 39 of the 1989 United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, accord children special protection and treatment". The resolution also endorsed the Plan of Action for the Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement which aimed "to take concrete action to protect and assist child victims of armed conflicts".[232]

[227] IACiHR, Case 11.006 (Peru), Report, 7 February 1995, Sections VI (B)(1) and VII (1).

[228] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 666.

[229] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 14, §§ 1 and 3.

[230] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

[231] ICRC, International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, UNHCR and UNICEF, Joint statement on the evacuation of unaccompanied children from Rwanda, 27 June 1994, § 4.

[232] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Geneva Session, 1–2 December 1995, Res. 5, preamble and § 2.

VI. Other Practice

250. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "every child has the right to the measures of protection required by his or her condition as a minor and shall be provided with the care and aid the child requires".[233]

Education

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

251. Article 24, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "the parties to the conflict shall take the necessary measures to ensure that [the education of] children under fifteen, who are orphaned or are separated from their families," is facilitated.

252. Article 50 GC IV provides that:

> The Occupying Power shall, with the co-operation of the national and local authorities, facilitate the proper working of all institutions devoted to the care and education of children.
> ...
> Should the local institutions be inadequate for the purpose, the Occupying Power shall make arrangements for the maintenance and education, if possible by persons of their own nationality, language and religion, of children who are orphaned or separated from their parents as a result of the war and who cannot be adequately cared for by a near relative or friend.

253. Article 94, second paragraph, GC IV provides that the education of interned children shall be ensured.

254. Article 13 of the 1966 ICESCR provides that "the States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to education". It further provides that "primary education shall be compulsory and available free to all".

255. Article 78(2) AP I provides that "whenever an evacuation occurs ... each child's education, including his religious and moral education as his parents desire, shall be provided while he is away with the greatest possible continuity". Article 78 AP I was adopted by consensus.[234]

256. Article 4(3)(a) AP II provides that children "shall receive education, including religious and moral education, in keeping with the wishes of their parents, or in the absence of parents, of those responsible for their care". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[235]

[233] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 10, IRRC, No. 282, p. 334.

[234] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 254.

257. Article 28 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "the States Parties recognize the right of the child to education".

258. Article 11 of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that "every child shall have the right to an education".

259. Article 1(12) of the 1995 Agreement on Human Rights annexed to the Dayton Accords states that "the Parties shall secure to all persons within their jurisdiction the right to education".

Other Instruments

260. Article 26 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages."

261. Rule 13.5 of the 1985 Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice states that "while in custody, juveniles shall receive . . . educational [assistance]".

262. Rule 24.1 of the 1985 Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice states that "efforts shall be made to provide juveniles, at all stages of the proceedings, with . . . education".

263. Guideline 20 of the 1990 Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency states that "governments are under an obligation to make public education accessible to all young persons".

264. Rule 38 of the 1990 Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty states that "every juvenile of compulsory school age has the right to education suited to his or her needs and abilities and designed to prepare him or her for a return to society".

265. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Article 78(2) AP I.

266. Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Article 78(2) AP I.

267. Principle 23 of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement states that:

1. Every human being has the right to education.
2. To give effect to this right for internally displaced persons, the authorities concerned shall ensure that such persons, in particular displaced children, receive education which shall be free and compulsory at the primary level. Education should respect their cultural identity, language and religion.
3. Special efforts should be made to ensure the full and equal participation of . . . girls in educational programmes.

[235] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

268. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that the parties to the conflict shall take the necessary measures for children under seven years of age to ensure "their maintenance, the exercise of their religion and their education are facilitated in all circumstances. The latter shall, as far as possible, be entrusted to persons of a similar cultural tradition."[236] The manual also states that "the occupying Power shall, with the cooperation of the national and local authorities, facilitate the proper working of all institutions devoted to the care and education of children".[237] It adds that:

> Should the local institutions be inadequate for the purpose, the occupying Power shall make arrangements to ensure the maintenance and education, if possible by persons of their own nationality, language and religion, of children who are orphaned or separated from their parents as a result of the war and who cannot be adequately cared for by a near relative or friend.[238]

269. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, that "children shall receive the assistance and care they require, in particular concerning their education, including their religious or moral education".[239]

270. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the occupying power must ensure that . . . proper steps are taken to maintain [the] education and religious welfare" of children under 15 years of age.[240]

271. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that belligerents "must ensure the maintenance of [children under 15] and facilitate the exercise of their religion, while their education must as far as possible be entrusted to persons of a similar cultural tradition".[241] The manual further states that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "children are to receive such aid and protection as required including: a. an education which makes provision for their religious and moral care".[242]

272. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that education shall be provided to children.[243]

273. The Report on the Practice of Indonesia, with reference to the Military Manual, states that children under 15 years of age, orphaned or separated from their families as a result of conflict, shall be given access to education.[244]

[236] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.007; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.
[237] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.009; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 6.06.
[238] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.009.
[239] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[240] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1215.
[241] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-3, § 25.
[242] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 22.
[243] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 74.
[244] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 5.3, referring to Military Manual (1982).

274. Italy's IHL Manual provides that the occupying power "shall take all necessary measures to ensure . . . the education of minors".[245]
275. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that belligerents "must ensure the maintenance of [children under 15] and facilitate the exercise of their religion, while their education must as far as possible be entrusted to persons of a similar cultural tradition".[246] It further states that "the Occupying Power must take the necessary steps to ensure that children under fifteen separated from their families are not left to their own resources and that proper steps are taken to maintain their education and religious welfare".[247] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that children "are to receive such aid and protection as they require, including an education which makes provision for their religious and moral care".[248]
276. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "necessary measures must be taken for children under 15 years . . . in any circumstances, so that their care, religious practice and education are facilitated".[249]
277. The UK Military Manual provides that belligerents "must ensure the maintenance of [children under 15] and facilitate the exercise of their religion, while their education must as far as possible be entrusted to persons of similar cultural tradition".[250] The manual further states that:

> If the local institutions are not adequate for the purpose, the Occupant must make arrangements for the maintenance and education of children who are orphaned or separated from their parents as a result of the war and who can not be adequately looked after by a near relative or friend. The persons entrusted for the maintenance and education of such children shall, if possible, be persons of the children's own nationality, language and religion.[251]

278. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 24 and 50 GC IV.[252]

National Legislation
279. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[253]
280. Croatia's Law on Displaced Persons and Directive on Displaced Persons provide that displaced children shall be educated.[254]

[245] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 48(9).
[246] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1112(1).
[247] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1317(2).
[248] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1813(1).
[249] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 157(1).
[250] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 36. [251] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 538.
[252] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 263 and 383.
[253] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[254] Croatia, Law on Displaced Persons (1993), Article 13; Directive on Displaced Persons (1991), Articles 2 and 13.

281. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 24, 50 and 94 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 78(2) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(3)(a) AP II, are punishable offences.[255]

282. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[256]

283. The Report on the Practice of Russia considers the 1997 Law on Refugees to be applicable to internally displaced persons. One of the principal rights contained in this law is the right of children to receive a primary education.[257]

National Case-law

284. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

285. According to the Report on the Practice of France, the French authorities consider the persistent closing of schools and universities in the West Bank to be a matter of serious concern.[258]

286. With reference to two memoranda on accommodation in detention camps, the Report on the Practice of Malaysia states that during the communist insurgency, children were detained in Advanced Approved Schools and were provided with an education.[259]

287. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines in 1991 provide that "the government shall undertake appropriate measures so that the schooling of children evacuees shall not be prejudiced".[260]

288. In 1994, in its initial report to the CRC, Sri Lanka stated, with respect to child victims of armed conflict and refugees, that "there are several urgent needs that have to be met [including] ... education for children of school age".[261]

[255] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[256] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[257] Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, Chapter 5.5.
[258] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.7.
[259] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.5, referring to Memorandum on Accommodation in Detention Camps, 13 June 1950, Ref. (4) in DCHQ/87/50 and Memorandum on Accommodation in Detention Camps, 6 December 1950, Ref. (56) in DCHQ/187/50.
[260] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Resolution No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, Manila, 26 March 1991, § 12.
[261] Sri Lanka, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/8/Add.13, 5 May 1994, § 146.

289. In 1993, in a statement before the CRC, Sudan reported that "education for displaced children had been made available in the form of special schools in the camps".[262]

290. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[263]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

291. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on children in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "attacks on objects protected under international law, including places that usually have a significant presence of children such as . . . schools, and calls on all parties concerned to put an end to such practices".[264]

292. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the protection of children in situations of armed conflict, the UN Security Council reiterated "the importance of ensuring that children continue to have access to basic services during conflict and post-conflict periods, including, inter alia, education and health care".[265]

293. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN General Assembly urged all parties involved in Kosovo "to support the efforts of the United Nations Children's Fund to ensure that all children in Kosovo return to school as soon as possible and to contribute to the rebuilding and repair of schools destroyed or damaged during the conflict in Kosovo".[266]

294. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed "the importance of special attention for children in situations of armed conflict, particularly in the area of . . . education".[267]

295. In 1997, in its Conclusion on Refugee Children and Adolescents, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR called upon States and relevant parties "to respect and observe rights and principles that are in accordance with international human rights and humanitarian law [including] . . . (iii) the right of children and adolescents to education".[268]

[262] Sudan, Statement before the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/SR.90, 5 November 1993, § 28.
[263] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[264] UN Security Council, Res. 1261, 25 August 1999, § 2.
[265] UN Security Council, Res. 1314, 11 August 2000, § 14.
[266] UN General Assembly, Res. 54/183, 17 December 1999, § 21.
[267] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, § 13(d).
[268] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 84(XLVIII): Refugee Children and Adolescents, 20 October 1997, § a(iii).

296. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that "violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II thereto committed in an armed conflict not of an international character have long been considered customary international law".[269]

297. In 1996, in a report on the impact of armed conflict on children, the UN Expert on the Situation of Children in Armed Conflict recommended that, with respect to education, "all possible efforts should be made to maintain education systems during conflicts", including "outside of formal school buildings" and in camps for displaced persons.[270]

298. In 1995, the Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions reported that in some of the camps for displaced persons in northern Burundi, "a number of NGOs have attempted to provide some minimum educational facilities".[271]

299. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in Zaire, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that the government establish resettlement programmes for IDPs, with special emphasis on the provision of education for children".[272]

300. In 1997, in a report on his visit to Mozambique, the Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons noted that "as regards education, displaced children were to some extent accommodated within the existing school system". However, "education was severely interrupted and the quality remained poor for a number of years".[273]

Other International Organisations

301. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged member States "to supply children in the former Yugoslavia affected by the conflict with a minimum of education and the educational and play materials (books, toys, etc.) which is vital for children's development".[274]

302. In a recommendation on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1994, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stated that children and students who had been moved outside the areas of fighting should, "as far as possible, . . . be able to continue their education in refugee camps or at least

[269] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

[270] UN Expert on the Situation of Children in Armed Conflict, Report on the impact of armed conflict on children, UN Doc. A/51/306, 26 August 1996, § 203(a)–(d)

[271] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/4/Add.1, 24 July 1995, § 82.

[272] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Zaire, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/6/Add.1, 16 September 1996, p. 25, § (j).

[273] Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons, Report on the Representative's visit to Mozambique from 24 November to 3 December 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/43/Add.1, 24 February 1997, § 47.

[274] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1011, 28 September 1993, § 7(x).

in the neighbourhood, where tuition in their own language can more easily be provided".[275]

International Conferences

303. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "children receive the special protection, care and assistance, including access to education and recreational facilities, to which they are entitled under national and international law".[276]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

304. In 1995, in discussing the question of children and armed conflict, the CRC recalled that provisions essential for the realisation of the rights of the child included access to education.[277]

305. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Uganda, the CRC expressed concerns "about the difficulties encountered . . . by displaced children in securing access to basic education" and recommended that Uganda pay special attention to "internally displaced children to ensure that they have equal access to basic facilities".[278]

306. In 1999, in its General Comment on Article 13 of the 1966 ICESCR, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights held that "education has to be within safe physical reach, either by attendance at some reasonably convenient geographic location . . . or via modern technology". It also held that "States parties have immediate obligations in relation to the right to education, such as the 'guarantee' that the right 'will be exercised without discrimination of any kind' and the obligation 'to take steps' towards the full realization of article 13". States must also "fulfil (provide) the availability of education by actively developing a system of schools, including building classrooms, delivering programmes, providing teaching materials and training teachers".[279]

307. In its judgement in the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found that "there has been a violation of Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 [to the 1950 ECHR (right to education)] in respect of Greek Cypriots living in northern Cyprus in so far as no appropriate secondary-school facilities were available to them".[280]

[275] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1239, 14 April 1994, § 25.
[276] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(f).
[277] CRC, Report on the 8th Session, UN Doc. CRC/C/38, 20 February 1995, §§ 45, 70 and 135.
[278] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Uganda, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.80, 21 October 1997, §§ 21 and 37.
[279] UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, General Comment No. 13 (The right to education (Article 13 ICESCR)), 8 July 1999, §§ 6(b), 43 and 50.
[280] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, § 280.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

308. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on child soldiers in which it invited National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies "to do everything possible to protect children during armed conflicts, particularly by . . . organizing educational activities for them".[281]

VI. Other Practice

309. No practice was found.

Evacuation

Note: For practice concerning the establishment of hospital and safety zones to protect children, see Chapter 11, section A.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

310. Article 17 GC IV provides that "the parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas . . . of children".

311. Article 24, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall facilitate the reception of such children [orphaned or separated from their families] in a neutral country for the duration of the conflict with the consent of the Protecting Power".

312. Article 78(1) AP I provides that:

> No Party to the conflict shall arrange for the evacuation of children, other than its own nationals, to a foreign country except for a temporary evacuation where compelling reasons of the health or medical treatment of the children or, except in occupied territory, their safety, so require. Where the parents or legal guardians can be found, their written consent to such evacuation is required . . .
>
> In each case, all Parties to the conflict shall take all feasible precautions to avoid endangering the evacuation.

Article 78 AP I was adopted by consensus.[282]

313. Article 4(3)(e) AP II provides that:

> Measures shall be taken, if necessary, and whenever possible with the consent of their parents or persons who by law or custom are primarily responsible for their care, to remove children temporarily from the area in which hostilities are taking place to a safer area within the country and ensure that they are accompanied by persons responsible for their safety and well-being.

[281] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 14, § 3.

[282] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 254.

Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[283]

Other Instruments

314. Article 19 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "Commanders, whenever admissible, inform the enemy of their intention to bombard a place, so that the non-combatants, and especially . . . children, may be removed before the bombardment commences".

315. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 78(1) AP I.

316. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 78(1) AP I.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

317. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "the belligerents shall endeavour to conclude agreements for the removal from besieged areas of . . . children".[284] The manual also provides that "the belligerent parties shall facilitate the reception of such children in a neutral country for the duration of the conflict with the consent of the Protecting Power, if any, and under due safeguards".[285]

318. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "no party in conflict shall undertake the evacuation of children to a foreign country. If an evacuation has been undertaken, they shall take all the necessary measures to facilitate the return of the children to their families and their country."[286] With respect to non-international conflicts in particular, the manual states that "all the necessary measures shall be taken so that, with the consent of their parents or guardians, they [children under 15 years] are transferred from the area in which hostilities are taking place".[287]

319. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "the opposing parties are required to try and conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . children".[288] It further states that:

As is the case with women, children are granted special protection under LOAC. Important rules are shown below . . .

[283] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[284] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 1.014.
[285] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.007.
[286] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.
[287] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[288] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 735; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 926.

e. children who are not nationals of the state may not be evacuated by that state to a foreign country unless the evacuation is temporary and accords to certain conditions set out in AP I.[289]

320. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that at the approach of the enemy, "all persons shall be evacuated, with priority . . . children".[290]

321. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "belligerents must also facilitate the reception of these children [children under 15 who have been orphaned or separated from their families] by neutral countries for the duration of hostilities, with the consent of the Protecting Power, if any".[291] It also states that "if circumstances permit, the parties to a conflict must endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged areas of . . . children".[292] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual provides that "if the children's safety requires their removal from the area in which they are, this should be done, whenever possible, with the consent of their parents or guardians. Persons responsible for the safety and well-being of the children should also accompany them."[293]

322. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "all measures shall be taken in order to temporarily transfer the children to safety zones, accompanied by persons responsible for their safety".[294]

323. France's LOAC Manual provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas, of . . . children".[295]

324. The Report on the Practice of Indonesia, with reference to the Military Manual, states that children under 15 years of age, orphaned or separated from their families as a result of conflict, should be evacuated to neutral States.[296]

325. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "children shall not be evacuated without reason to a foreign country. Exception shall be made for a temporary evacuation where compelling reasons of the health and safety of the children so required."[297]

326. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that:

> Belligerents must also facilitate the reception of these children [children under 15 who have been orphaned or separated from their families] by neutral States for the duration of hostilities, with the consent of the Protecting Power, if any, and under due safeguards as above.[298]

[289] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 947.
[290] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 67, § 242(1).
[291] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-3, § 25.
[292] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 6-4, § 35.
[293] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 23.
[294] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 74.
[295] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 64.
[296] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 5.3, referring to Military Manual (1982).
[297] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-3.
[298] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1112(1), see also § 1405(5).

The manual refers to Article 17 GC IV, which "requires that belligerents endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . children".[299] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual provides that "if children's safety requires their removal from the area in which they are, the consent of their parents or guardians should be obtained whenever possible and the children accompanied by persons responsible for their safety and well-being".[300]

327. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "in besieged or encircled areas where there is a civilian population, it shall be endeavoured to conclude local agreements with the enemy to organise the evacuation of . . . children".[301]

328. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that:

> It is also possible for the parties to reach an agreement during a conflict that all acts of war shall cease temporarily within a given part of a conflict area. Such agreements are commonly made to afford protection to civilian populations, and specially to such exposed groups as children[302]

329. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "belligerents shall conclude special agreements in order to evacuate . . . children . . . from besieged areas".[303] It further provides that it is prohibited to evacuate children into a foreign country, except with the temporary authorisation of the government.[304]

330. The UK Military Manual states that "the belligerents should endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . children".[305]

331. The UK LOAC Manual states that "a local cease-fire may be arranged for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . children".[306]

332. The US Field Manual provides that "the commanders of United States ground forces will, when the situation permits, inform the enemy of their intention to bombard a place, so that the noncombatants, especially . . . children, may be removed before the bombardment commences".[307] It further states that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas, of . . . children".[308] The manual also provides that "the parties to the conflict shall facilitate the reception of such children [under fifteen, who are orphaned or are separated from their families as a result of the war] in a neutral country for the duration of the conflict with the consent of the Protecting Power, if any, and under due safeguards".[309]

[299] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 508(3).
[300] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1813(1).
[301] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.4.a.
[302] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.4.1, p. 84.
[303] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 33.
[304] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 157.
[305] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 29.
[306] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, § 3.
[307] US, Field Manual (1956), § 43.
[308] US, Field Manual (1956), § 256, see also § 44.
[309] US, Field Manual (1956), § 263.

333. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "removal of ... children ... from besieged or encircled areas is encouraged".[310]

National Legislation

334. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[311]

335. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 17 and 24 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 78(1) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(3)(e) AP II, are punishable offences.[312]

336. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[313]

337. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines provides that children should be given priority during evacuations resulting from armed conflict.[314]

National Case-law

338. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

339. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that no state arrange for the evacuation of children except for temporary evacuation where compelling reasons of the health or medical treatment of the children or safety, except in occupied territory, so require".[315]

340. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons

[310] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-3.
[311] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[312] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[313] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[314] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Sections 23–24.
[315] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[316]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
341. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that "violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II thereto committed in an armed conflict not of an international character have long been considered customary international law".[317]

Other International Organisations
342. No practice was found.

International Conferences
343. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

344. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

345. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

346. No practice was found.

Death penalty on children

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
347. Article 68, fourth paragraph, GC IV provides that "in any case, the death penalty may not be pronounced against a protected person who was under eighteen years of age at the time of the offence".
348. Article 6(5) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "sentence of death shall not be imposed for crimes committed by persons below eighteen years of age".

[316] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[317] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

349. Article 4(5) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "capital punishment shall not be imposed upon persons who, at the time the crime was committed, were under 18 years of age".
350. Article 77(5) AP I provides that "the death penalty for an offence related to the armed conflict shall not be executed on persons who had not attained the age of eighteen years at the time the offence was committed". Article 77 AP I was adopted by consensus.[318]
351. Article 6(4) AP II provides that "the death penalty shall not be pronounced on persons who were under the age of eighteen years of age at the time of the offence". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[319]
352. Article 37(a) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

> No child shall be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Neither capital punishment nor life imprisonment without possibility of release shall be imposed for offences committed by persons below eighteen years of age.

Other Instruments
353. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(5) AP I.
354. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(5) AP I.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
355. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "in any case, the death penalty may not be pronounced against a protected person who was under the age of 18 at the time of the offence".[320]
356. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "the death penalty shall not be pronounced against a person who is under the age of 18".[321]
357. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the death penalty must not be executed on children who are under the age of 18 at the time the offence was committed".[322]

[318] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[319] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 85.
[320] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.028(1).
[321] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10, see also §§ 3.28 and 5.11.
[322] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 947.

358. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "regardless of the offence committed, no death penalty shall be pronounced upon persons under the age of eighteen at the time of the offence".[323]

359. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, national legislation provides that the death penalty may not be pronounced on a minor who was under 18 years of age at the time of the offence.[324]

360. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "the death penalty shall not be pronounced on persons who were under the age of eighteen years of age at the time of the offence".[325]

361. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "in any case, the death penalty may not be pronounced [by the Occupying Power] against a protected person who was under 18 years of age at the time of the offence".[326]

362. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that the occupying power can only pronounce the death penalty when the accused is over the age of 18 years.[327]

363. The UK Military Manual provides that "in any case, the death penalty may not be pronounced against a protected person who was under 18 years of age at the time of the offence".[328]

364. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 68 GC IV.[329]

National Legislation

365. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[330]

366. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 68 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 77(5) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(4) AP II, are punishable offences.[331]

367. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[332]

[323] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 30.
[324] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1998, Chapter 5.3
[325] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[326] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1327(1)(c).
[327] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 173.
[328] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 566(c).
[329] US, Field Manual (1956), § 438.
[330] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[331] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[332] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

National Case-law
368. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
369. In 1993, Peru informed the CRC that "children convicted of committing terrorist activities could not receive life sentences" and that "even if the death penalty were introduced for terrorists, it would not be applied to adolescents under the age of 18 because the Convention [on the Rights of the Child] took precedence over all other legislation".[333]
370. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 77 AP I to be part of customary international law.[334]
371. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[335]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
372. No practice was found.

Other International Organisations
373. No practice was found.

International Conferences
374. In the Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, the participants at the African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers in 1999 called upon African States:

> to respect fully the provisions of international humanitarian law, in particular in the case of captured child soldiers, especially by . . . ensuring that neither the death penalty nor life imprisonment without possibility of release is imposed for offences committed by persons below 18 years of age.[336]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

375. No practice was found.

[333] Peru, Statement before the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/SR.84, 30 September 1993, §§ 25 and 39.
[334] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[335] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[336] African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers, Maputo, 19–22 April 1999, Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, § 5.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

376. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the pronouncement of the death penalty for an offence related to the armed conflict shall not be executed on persons who had not attained the age of eighteen years at the time the offence was committed".[337]

VI. Other Practice

377. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "sentences of death shall not be carried out on . . . children under 18 years of age at the time of the commission of the offence".[338]

C. Recruitment of Child Soldiers

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

378. Article 50, second paragraph, GC IV, provides that the occupying power may not enlist children "in formations or organizations subordinate to it".

379. Article 77(2) AP I provides that:

> The Parties to the conflict shall take all feasible measures in order that children who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take a direct part in hostilities and, in particular, they shall refrain from recruiting them into their armed forces. In recruiting among those persons who have attained the age of fifteen years but who have not attained the age of eighteen years, the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to give priority to those who are oldest.

Article 77 AP I was adopted by consensus.[339]

380. Article 4(3)(c) AP II provides that "children who have not attained the age of fifteen years shall neither be recruited in the armed forces or groups nor allowed to take part in hostilities". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[340]

381. Article 38(3) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

> States Parties shall refrain from recruiting any person who has not attained the age of fifteen years into their armed forces. In recruiting among those persons who have

[337] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 204.
[338] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 8 (3), IRRC, No. 282, p. 333.
[339] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[340] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

attained the age of fifteen years but who have not attained the age of eighteen years, States Parties shall endeavour to give priority to those who are oldest.

382. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Colombia stated that "the age [for recruitment] shall be understood to be 18 years, given the fact that, under Colombian law, the minimum age for recruitment into the armed forces of personnel called for military service is 18 years".[341]

383. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Netherlands stated that "it is of the opinion that ... the minimum age for the recruitment or incorporation of children in the armed forces should be above 15 years".[342]

384. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Spain expressed its disagreement at the Convention "permitting the recruitment and participation in armed conflict of children having attained the age of 15 years".[343]

385. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Uruguay stated that it "will not under any circumstances recruit persons who have not attained the age of 18 years".[344]

386. Article 22(2) of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that "States Parties to the present Charter shall ... refrain, in particular, from recruiting any child".

387. Under Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years" into armed forces or groups constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

388. Article 1 of the 1999 Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labour states that each State party "shall take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency" Article 3(a) lists "forced or compulsory recruitment of children [under 18] for use in armed conflict" as one of the worst forms of child labour.

389. The 2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts provides that:

Article 2: States Parties shall ensure that persons who have not attained the age of 18 years are not compulsorily recruited into their armed forces.

[341] Colombia, Declaration made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 28 January 1991, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 15.

[342] Netherlands, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 February 1995, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 27.

[343] Spain, Declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 December 1990, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 29.

[344] Uruguay, Declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 20 November 1990, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 32.

Article 3:

1. States Parties shall raise the minimum age for the voluntary recruitment of persons into their national armed forces from that set out in article 38, paragraph 3, of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, taking account of the principles contained in that article and recognizing that under the Convention persons under the age of 18 years are entitled to special protection.
2. Each State Party shall deposit a binding declaration upon ratification of or accession to the present Protocol that sets forth the minimum age at which it will permit voluntary recruitment into its national armed forces and a description of the safeguards it has adopted to ensure that such recruitment is not forced or coerced.
3. States Parties that permit voluntary recruitment into their national armed forces under the age of 18 years shall maintain safeguards to ensure, as a minimum, that:
   (a) Such recruitment is genuinely voluntary;
   (b) Such recruitment is carried out with the informed consent of the person's parents or legal guardians;
   (c) Such persons are fully informed of the duties involved in such military service;
   (d) Such persons provide reliable proof of age prior to acceptance into national military service . . .
5. The requirement to raise the age in paragraph 1 of the present article does not apply to schools operated by or under the control of the armed forces of the States Parties, in keeping with articles 28 and 29 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Article 4:

1. Armed groups that are distinct from the armed forces of a State should not, under any circumstances, recruit . . . persons under the age of 18 years.
2. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to prevent such recruitment . . . including the adoption of legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize such practices . . .

Article 6:

. . .

3. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that persons within their jurisdiction recruited or used in hostilities contrary to the present Protocol are demobilized or otherwise released from service. States Parties shall, when necessary, accord to such persons all appropriate assistance for their physical and psychological recovery and their social reintegration . . .

Article 7:

1. States Parties shall cooperate in the implementation of the present Protocol, including in the prevention of any activity contrary thereto and in the rehabilitation and social reintegration of persons who are victims of acts contrary thereto, including through technical cooperation and financial assistance. Such assistance and cooperation will be undertaken in consultation with the States Parties concerned and the relevant international organizations.

390. Article 4 of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "the Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed the following serious violations of international humanitarian law: . . . conscripting or enlisting children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups".

Other Instruments

391. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(1) AP I.

392. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(1) AP I.

393. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii), "conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years" into armed forces or groups constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

394. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "children under the age of 15 shall not be recruited in the armed forces".[345]

395. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that children under the age of 15 "should not be recruited into the armed forces".[346]

396. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "children are to receive such aid and protection as required including: . . . a ban on their enlistment . . . while under the age of fifteen".[347]

397. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, it is prohibited to "recruit and allow direct participation in hostilities of children under the age of 15".[348]

398. France's LOAC Manual provides that "it is prohibited to recruit persons under 15 into the armed forces".[349] It considers such recruitment "a war crime".[350]

399. Germany's Military Manual provides that "the parties to the conflict shall take all feasible measures in order that children who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take direct part in hostilities and, in particular, they shall

[345] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[346] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 15, § 15.
[347] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 22.
[348] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 75.
[349] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 40.
[350] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 63.

refrain from recruiting them into their armed forces".[351] The manual further states that children under 15 "shall not be enlisted".[352]

400. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "children under the age of 15 shall not be recruited into the armed forces".[353]

401. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "children may not be recruited in armed forces".[354]

402. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, children "are to receive such aid and protection as they require, including . . . a ban on their enlistment . . . while under the age of fifteen".[355]

403. Nigeria's Military Manual states that "children under 15 years shall not be recruited".[356]

404. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "all possible means shall be taken, within the limits of military necessity, to avoid recruiting children under 15".[357]

405. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 50 GC IV.[358]

National Legislation

406. Under Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice, breaches of treaty provisions providing for special protection of children are war crimes.[359]

407. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "using, conscripting or enlisting children" in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[360]

408. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that "recruiting minors into the armed forces" constitutes a war crime.[361]

409. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[362]

410. The Law on the Rights of the Child of Belarus prohibits recruitment into the armed forces under the age of 18.[363]

411. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that it is a war crime to "recruit into the armed forces children under the age of 15 years".[364]

[351] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 306. [352] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 505.
[353] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 8.
[354] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-2, § 1.
[355] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1813.
[356] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 38, § 4.
[357] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.c.(1). [358] US, Field Manual (1956), § 383.
[359] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[360] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.68 and 268.88.
[361] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 116.0.5.
[362] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[363] Belarus, Law on the Rights of the Child (1993), Article 29.
[364] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 136(5).

412. Under Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, "conscripting or enrolling children under 15 years of age into national armed forces" constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.[365]

413. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[366]

414. Colombia's Law on Judicial Cooperation states that children under 18 may not be recruited into the armed forces, unless their parents give their consent. A five-year term of imprisonment is imposed on anyone who recruits children under 18.[367]

415. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on "anyone, who, in period of armed conflict, recruits minors under 18 years of age".[368]

416. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[369]

417. Croatia's Defence Law imposes a military service obligation only for persons who are 19 years old in the year when they start their military service. In wartime or in case of direct peril to the independence and integrity of the Republic, the President may impose a military service obligation for persons who are 17 years old.[370]

418. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, any war crime provided for by the 1998 ICC Statute, which is not explicitly mentioned in the Code, such as "conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years into the national armed forces" is a crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[371]

419. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code punishes anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "conscripts children under the age of fifteen years into the armed forces, or enlists them in the armed forces or in armed groups".[372]

420. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 50 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 77(2) AP I, as well as any [365] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(D)(g).

[366] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[367] Colombia, Law on Judicial Cooperation (1997), Articles 13–14.
[368] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 162.
[369] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[370] Croatia, Defence Law (1993), Article 98(1) and (5).
[371] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 413(d).
[372] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(5).

"contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(3)(c) AP II, are punishable offences.[373]

421. Jordan's Military Service Law No. 2 provides that children under 16 years old may not be enlisted in the armed forces.[374]

422. Malawi's National Service Act states that no person under the age of 18 years shall be liable for military service.[375]

423. Malaysia's Armed Forces Act establishes a minimum age of 18 for anyone to be considered for enrolment or recruitment in the armed forces. Persons below the age of 18 may be appointed as apprentices, but they are not considered as recruits and are therefore not subjected to service law.[376]

424. Under Mali's Penal Code, "conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years into the national armed forces or groups" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.[377]

425. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "conscripting or enlisting children under the age of fifteen years into the national armed forces or armed groups" is a crime, whether committed in an international or a non-international armed conflict.[378]

426. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[379]

427. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[380]

428. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines, in an article on "Children in situations of armed conflict", provides that "children shall not be recruited to become members of the Armed Forces of the Philippines or its civilians units or other armed groups".[381]

429. Under Spain's Penal Code, breaches of international treaty provisions providing for special protection of children are punished.[382]

430. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[383]

[373] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[374] Jordan, Military Service Law No. 2 (1972), Chapter 2, Article 5.
[375] Malawi, National Service Act (1951), Article 4.
[376] Malaysia, Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 18.
[377] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(i)(26).
[378] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(5)(r) and 6(3)(f).
[379] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[380] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[381] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Article X, Section 22(b).
[382] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 612(3).
[383] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).

431. Ukraine's Military Service Law states that 18 years is the recruitment age for the armed forces. Adolescents of 15 to 17 years old can enter military schools after having passed a medical examination. Military education and military service for persons who have not reached 15 years of age are forbidden.[384]
432. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[385]
433. The FRY Army Act states that military conscription duty falls in the year when a draftee is to become 18, but a conscript may be recruited when he is turning 17 on personal request or under an order of the President in case of war.[386]

National Case-law
434. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
435. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Canada pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[387]
436. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, it is the opinio juris of Chile that persons under the age of 18 must not be recruited in any hostilities.[388]
437. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Denmark pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[389]
438. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Finland pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[390]
439. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Guinea pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[391]

[384] Ukraine, Military Service Law (1992), Article 15.
[385] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[386] FRY, Army Act (1994), Article 291.
[387] Canada, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[388] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[389] Denmark, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[390] Finland, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[391] Guinea, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

440. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Iceland pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[392]

441. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Liberia, Italy described the warlords' practice of recruiting children for combat as "one of the most despicable actions". It insisted that the international community should use every means available to stop such behaviour immediately, notably the inclusion of a provision in the future ICC Statute aimed at "bring[ing] to justice the perpetrators of such intolerable acts".[393]

442. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Mexico pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[394]

443. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Mozambique pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age" and " to ensure non-conscription of teenagers under 18 years old to join the army".[395]

444. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Norway pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[396]

445. In 1993, in its initial report to the CRC, the Philippines stated that "children are not to be recruited into the Armed Forces of the Philippines or into any armed group".[397]

446. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, South Africa pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[398]

447. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Sweden pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international [392] Iceland, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

[393] Italy, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3694, 30 August 1996, p. 6.
[394] Mexico, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[395] Mozambique, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[396] Norway, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[397] Philippines, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.23, 3 November 1993, § 200.
[398] South Africa, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[399]

448. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Switzerland pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[400]

449. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 77 AP I to be part of customary international law.[401]

450. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Thailand pledged "to prevent the recruitment of children below the age of 18 years into the situation of armed conflict".[402]

451. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Liberia, the US denounced the practice of recruiting children for combat and called it an "abhorrent practice".[403]

452. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[404]

453. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Uruguay pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military recruitment . . . in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[405]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

454. In a resolution adopted in 1996 concerning the situation in Liberia, the UN Security Council condemned "the practice of some factions of recruiting . . . children for combat". It referred to such practice as "inhumane and abhorrent".[406] In a further resolution on the same subject adopted the same year, the Security Council condemned "in the strongest possible terms the practice of recruiting . . . children for combat" and demanded that "the warring parties

[399] Sweden, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[400] Switzerland, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[401] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[402] Thailand, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[403] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3694, 30 August 1996, p. 15.
[404] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[405] Uruguay, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[406] UN Security Council, Res. 1071, 30 August 1996, § 9.

immediately cease this inhumane and abhorrent activity and release all child soldiers for demobilization".[407]

455. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on children in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict, including . . . recruitment . . . of children in armed conflict in violation of international law".[408]

456. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the protection of children in situations of armed conflict, the UN Security Council requested parties to armed conflict:

> to include, where appropriate, provisions for the protection of children, including the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of child combatants, in peace negotiations and in peace agreements and the involvement of children, where possible, in these processes.[409]

457. In 1998, in a statement by its President concerning children and armed conflict, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "the recruitment . . . of child soldiers" and called upon "all parties concerned to put an end to such practice". It also called upon all parties concerned "to comply strictly with their obligations under international law, in particular their obligations under the Geneva Conventions of 1949, the Additional Protocols of 1977 and the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989". The Security Council expressed its readiness "to support efforts aimed at obtaining commitments to put to an end the recruitment . . . of children in armed conflicts . . . [and] to give special consideration to the . . . demobilization of child soldiers".[410]

458. In 1998, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council condemned the recruitment of child soldiers in the DRC.[411]

459. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the situation of human rights in Sudan, the UN General Assembly welcomed the commitments undertaken by the SPLM/A "not to recruit into its armed forces children under the age of eighteen and to demobilize all child soldiers still remaining in the military and hand them over to the competent civil authorities for reintegration.[412]

460. In two resolutions adopted in 1993 and 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights deplored "the continued practice of enlisting children in the armed forces".[413]

461. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that it was "deeply worried by the continued practice of enlisting

[407] UN Security Council, Res. 1083, 27 November 1996, § 6.
[408] UN Security Council, Res. 1261, 25 August 1999, § 2.
[409] UN Security Council, Res. 1314, 11 August 2000, § 11.
[410] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/18, 29 June 1998.
[411] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/26, 31 August 1998.
[412] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 1(m).
[413] UN Commission of Human Rights, Res. 1993/83, 10 March 1993, preamble; Res. 1994/94, 9 March 1994, preamble.

children in armed forces, in contravention of the Convention on the Rights of the Child".[414]

462. In two resolutions adopted in 1996 and 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan "to prohibit ... the recruitment of children as para-combatants".[415]

463. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the elimination of violence against women, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon States "to protect children, especially the girl child, in situations of armed conflict against ... recruitment ... through adherence to the applicable principles of international human rights and humanitarian law".[416]

464. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed "its deep concern ... at continuing violations of the rights of children in contravention of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, in particular by ... recruitment ... into the armed forces".[417]

465. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the abduction of children from northern Uganda, the UN Commission on Human Rights acknowledged "the concern expressed in the concluding observations of the Committee on the Rights of Child ... about ... the recruitment of children as child soldiers in northern Uganda" and condemned in the strongest terms "all parties involved in ... recruitment of children as child soldiers, particularly the Lord's Resistance Army".[418]

466. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all States and other parties to armed conflict "to end the use of children as soldiers and ensure their demobilization".[419]

467. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed its concern at the forcible recruitment and kidnapping of children by non-governmental armed groups in Burundi and invited the government to take measures to combat these practices.[420]

468. In 1996, in a report on the impact of armed conflict on children, the UN Expert on the Situation of Children in Armed Conflict stated that "practical protection measures to prevent ... the recruitment of children into armed forces must be a priority in all assistance programmes in refugee and displaced camps".[421]

[414] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/79, 8 March 1995, preamble.
[415] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/75, 23 April 1996, § 4; Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, § 5(c).
[416] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/52, 17 April 1998, § 9(g).
[417] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/63, 21 April 1998, § 3(d).
[418] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/75, 22 April 1998, preamble and § 3.
[419] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, § 12(b).
[420] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/82, 24 April 1998, § 8.
[421] UN Expert on the Situation of Children in Armed Conflict, Report on the impact of armed conflict on children, UN Doc. A/51/306, 26 August 1996, Annex, § 90(c).

469. In 1998, in a report on the situation in Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General mentioned the important commitments resulting from the visit to Sierra Leone of his Special Representative for Children in Armed Conflict. He noted that the government agreed "not to recruit children under 18 years of age into a new national army. The Civil Defence Force committed to stop recruiting and initiating children under 18 and to begin the process of demobilization of child combatants within their ranks."[422]

470. In 1998, in a report on the UNOMSIL in Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General collected allegations concerning the initiation, by the Civil Defence Force, of children between the ages of 15 and 17. He welcomed "the commitment of the government and the Civil Defence Force not to recruit children under the age of 18 as soldiers" and urged them "to implement their undertaking to demobilize any children currently under arms as soon as possible".[423]

471. In 1998, in a report on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations, the UN Secretary-General stated that compliance with IHL norms and principles had "worsened in recent years because of the changing pattern of conflicts" and gave as an illustration the fact that "young children are being recruited and trained to fight in violation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Additional Protocols of the Geneva Conventions".[424]

472. In 1999, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General stated that he had "announced a minimum age requirement for United Nations peacekeepers . . . and asked contributing Governments to send in their national contingent's troops preferably not younger than 21 years of age, and in no case less than 18". He therefore recommended that the UN Security Council:

> urge Member States to support the proposal to raise the minimum age for recruitment . . . to 18, and accelerate the drafting of an optional protocol on the situation of children in armed conflict to the Convention on the Rights of the Child for consideration by the General Assembly.[425]

473. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that "violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II thereto committed in an armed conflict not of an international character have long been considered customary international law". He also stated that:

[422] UN Secretary-General, Fifth report on the situation in Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/1998/486, 9 June 1998, § 23.

[423] UN Secretary-General, First progress report on UNOMSIL, UN Doc. S/1998/750, 12 August 1998, §§ 43 and 59.

[424] UN Secretary-General, Report on protection for humanitarian assistance to refugees and others in conflict situations, UN Doc. S/1998/883, 22 September 1998, pp. 2–3.

[425] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/1999/957, 8 September 1999, § 42 and Recommendation 8.

Other serious violations of international humanitarian law falling within the jurisdiction of the Court include: . . . abduction and forced recruitment of children under the age of 15 years into armed forces or groups for the purpose of using them to participate actively in hostilities . . .

The prohibition of child recruitment has by now acquired a customary international law status.[426]

474. In 1994, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that "it has been impossible to ascertain how many adolescents have been recruited – voluntarily or under duress – into various armies. In the Bihac pocket, there have been allegations that boys as young as 16 may have been forcibly drafted into the army." The Special Rapporteur also noted that in the United Nations Protected Areas, "many boys of 15 to 17 years of age have volunteered for, and sometimes been accepted, into the army of the so-called 'Serbian Republic of Krajina'".[427]

475. In 2001, in a report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences stated that "despite the specific needs and experiences of girls in armed conflict, girls are often the last priority when it comes to the distribution of humanitarian aid and their needs are often neglected in the formulation of demobilization and reintegration programmes".[428]

476. In 1992, in a report on El Salvador, the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL noted that:

60. . . . ONUSAL observers were able to verify that [a] huge number of children under 15 were in the FMLN ranks. When this situation was taken up with the Political and Diplomatic Commission of FMLN, it pledged to respect the international norms in force [Article 4(3)(c) AP II], which did not entirely prove to be the case. Although in several instances it was ascertained that the enlistments had been voluntary and in others it was not possible to establish the age of the minors, this prohibited recruitment practice was observed during the course of the conflict . . . [but] irregular recruitment, on the part of both the armed forces and FMLN, gradually ceased with the signing of the Peace Agreement on 16 January 1992.

. . .

101. . . . In regard to military recruitment, it was recommended that wide publicity be given to the Ministry of Defence regulations on recruitment procedures . . . FMLN was recommended to observe the rules of international humanitarian law

[426] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, §§ 14, 15(c) and 17.

[427] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Sixth periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/110, 21 February 1994, § 241.

[428] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict (1997–2000), UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/73, 23 January 2001, § 52.

concerning the prohibition of the recruitment of minors under the age of 15 . . . in hostilities.[429]

Other International Organisations

477. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the OAU Council of Ministers "exhorted all African countries, in particular the warring parties in those countries embroiled in civil wars, . . . to refrain from recruiting children under the age of 18 in armed conflicts or violent activities of any kind whatsoever" and urged them to "release child combatants from the army".[430] In another resolution adopted at the same session, the Council of Ministers reiterated its appeal to member States and to all the parties engaged in armed conflict "to put an end to the recruitment of children in these conflicts".[431]

478. The statement adopted at the 1997 OAU/African Network for Prevention and Protection Against Child Abuse and Neglect (ANPPCAN) Continental Conference on Children in Situations of Armed Conflict noted that "the recruitment of children under the age of 18 years into armed forces, militias or rebel forces, should be outlawed as stipulated in the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child, and treated as a crime against humanity".[432]

479. In the recommendations of the fifth OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1998, the participants "firmly condemned the recruitment of children into forces engaged in fighting".[433]

480. In 1998, speaking on behalf of the SADC in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, South Africa declared that the 1998 ICC Statute > would also serve as a reminder that even during armed conflict the rule of law must be upheld. For example, it was unlawful for children under the age of 15 to be robbed of their childhood by being recruited to national armed forces . . . [This act] was a war crime and would be punished.[434]

International Conferences

481. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 recalled that, in accordance with Article 77 AP I, the parties to the conflict shall refrain from recruiting children who have not attained the age of fifteen into their armed forces and that "in recruiting among those persons who have attained the age of fifteen but who have not attained the age of eighteen years, the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to give priority to those who are oldest".[435]

[429] ONUSAL, Director of the Human Rights Division, Report, UN Doc. A/46/955-S/24375, 12 August 1992, Annex, §§ 60 and 101.
[430] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1659 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, §§ 5–7.
[431] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1662 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, § 8.
[432] OAU/ANPPCAN Continental Conference on Children in Situations of Armed Conflict in Africa, Addis Ababa, 24–26 July 1997, Final Statement, § 10.
[433] OAU/ICRC, Fifth seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 30–31 March 1998, Recommendations, § 3.
[434] SADC, Statement by South Africa on behalf of SADC before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/53/SR.9, 21 October 1998, § 13.
[435] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. IX, § 2.

482. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 strongly condemned "recruitment and conscription of children under the age of 15 years in the armed forces or armed groups, which constitute a violation of international humanitarian law" and demanded that "those responsible for such acts be brought to justice and punished". The Conference further took note of "the efforts of the Movement to promote a principle of non-recruitment . . . of children under the age of 18 years".[436]

483. In the Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, the participants at the African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers in 1999 called upon all African States to end "the recruitment of all children under 18 years of age into the armed forces", to prohibit "the recruitment of all children into militia forces under their jurisdiction" and to bring to justice "those who continue to recruit or use children as soldiers". They also called upon armed opposition groups "to end the recruitment of children".[437]

484. In a resolution adopted on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the Geneva Conventions in 1999 on the contribution of parliaments to ensuring respect for and promoting international humanitarian law, the 102nd Inter-Parliamentary Conference requested all States "to take all feasible measures to ensure that children who have not attained the age of 18 years . . . are not recruited under compulsion into the armed forces; and to ensure the early adoption of the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict".[438]

485. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law and to ensure, in particular, that "all measures, including penal measures, are taken to stop . . . [the] recruitment [of children under the age of 15 years] into the armed forces or into armed groups which constitute[s] a violation of international humanitarian law".[439] The Conference stated that:

> The International Federation, National Societies and the ICRC will continue their efforts in pursuance of decisions taken within the International Movement and notably the Plan of Action for Children Affected by Armed Conflict (CABAC), to [436] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § C(c) and (f).

[437] African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers, Maputo, 19–22 April 1999, Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, §§ 2–3.

[438] 102nd Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Berlin, 10–15 October 1999, Resolution on the contribution of parliaments to ensuring respect for and promoting international humanitarian law on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the Geneva Conventions, § 4.

[439] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(f).

"promote the principle of non-recruitment . . . of children below the age of 18 years in armed conflicts".[440]

486. In its Final Declaration in 2002, the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict pledged "to give particular attention to vulnerable groups to prevent all forms of recruitment for military purpose of children under 18 years old".[441]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

487. In 1997, in its concluding observations on Myanmar, the CRC strongly recommended that "the army of the State party should absolutely refrain from recruiting under-aged children in the light of existing international human rights and humanitarian standards" and that "all forced recruitment of children should be abolished".[442]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

488. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces the rule that "children under the age of fifteen years shall not be recruited into the armed forces" and that "in recruiting among the persons having attained the age of fifteen years but not the age of eighteen years, priority shall be given to those who are the oldest".[443]

489. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on child soldiers in which it stressed "the responsibility of recruiters and commanders in armed forces or groups to prevent the recruitment and enrolment of children" and requested the ICRC and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, in cooperation with the Henry Dunant Institute, "to draw up and implement a Plan of Action for the Movement aimed at promoting the principle of non-recruitment . . . of children below the age of eighteen in armed conflicts".[444]

490. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "those under the age of 15 shall not be recruited".[445]

[440] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 7.

[441] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, § 9.

[442] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.69, 24 January 1997, § 42.

[443] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 38.

[444] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham Session, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 4, preamble and § 4.

[445] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

491. In 1994, in a statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, the ICRC stated that IHL prohibits the recruitment of children in both international and non-international armed conflicts and referred to Article 77(2) AP I, Article 4(3) AP II and Article 38 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child. The ICRC observed that despite these clear prohibitions, an ever-increasing number of children were involved in combat, emphasised the need for full compliance with the existing rules and expressed full support for the adoption of an optional protocol to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child to prohibit the recruitment of children under 18.[446]

492. In a document submitted to the CRC in 1995, the ICRC recalled that "in an international armed conflict, if children take part in the hostilities despite the prohibition against this in the Geneva Conventions, they are nevertheless entitled to prisoner-of-war status in the event of capture".[447]

493. At its Geneva Session in 1995, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on children in armed conflicts in which it endorsed "the Plan of Action for the Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement prepared by the International Federation and the ICRC, in cooperation with the Henry Dunant Institute, which aims to promote the principle of . . . non-recruitment of children below the age of 18 years in armed conflicts".[448]

494. In 1996, in a statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, the ICRC condemned the recruitment of children in armed forces and considered that "legal standards must be raised with a view to prohibiting the recruitment of children below 18 years of age".[449]

495. In a working paper on war crimes submitted in 1997 to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC listed recruiting children under the age of 15 years in the armed forces as a serious violation of IHL in international and non-international armed conflicts that should be subject to the jurisdiction of the ICC.[450]

496. At its Seville Session in 1997, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on peace, IHL and human rights in which it appealed to all National Societies "to promote the Movement's position on the 18-year age limit for recruitment . . . with a view to encouraging their respective governments to adopt national legislation and recruitment procedures in line with this position". It

[446] ICRC, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, 11 November 1994, p. 2.

[447] ICRC, Document submitted to the CRC, Administration of Juvenile Justice, Geneva, 13 November 1995, p. 1.

[448] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Geneva Session, 1–2 December 1995, Res. 5, § 2.

[449] ICRC, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, 12 November 1996, p. 1.

[450] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, 14 February 1997, §§ 2(v) and 3(xii).

asked National Societies that had already adopted the 18-year age limit for recruitment "to urge their governments to make their positions known to other governments, and to encourage their respective governments to participate in and support the process of drafting an optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflicts".[451]

497. In 1998, in a statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, the ICRC welcomed the adoption of the 1998 ICC Statute, "which lists as a war crime the conscription or enlistment of children under 15 into armed forces or groups".[452]

498. At its Geneva Session in 1999, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on children affected by armed conflict in which it encouraged all National Societies:

> to support, particularly through contacts with their government, the adoption of international instruments implementing the principle of non-participation . . . of children below the age of 18 in armed conflicts with a view to such instruments being applicable to all situations of armed conflict and to all armed groups.[453]

VI. Other Practice

499. In 1994, in a report on Angola, Human Rights Watch condemned the enrolment of children below the age of 15 in armed forces as a violation of human rights.[454]

500. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "children who have not yet attained the age of fifteen years shall not be recruited in or allowed to join armed forces or armed groups".[455]

501. The Report on SPLM/A Practice alleges that "the SPLM/A still recruits into the army . . . children under the age of 15 years, which is against the Convention on the Rights of the Child".[456]

[451] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Seville Session, 25–27 November 1997, Res. 8, §§ 5 and 6.

[452] ICRC, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, 21 October 1998, p. 2.

[453] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Geneva Session, 29–30 October 1999, Res. 8, § 4.

[454] Human Rights Watch, Arms Project Angola: Arms Trade and Violations of the Laws of War since the 1992 Elections, Luanda, 1994, pp. 83 ff.

[455] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 10, IRRC, No. 282, p. 334.

[456] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.3.

D. Participation of Child Soldiers in Hostilities

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

502. Article 77(2) AP I provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall take all feasible measures in order that children who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take a direct part in hostilities". Article 77 AP I was adopted by consensus.[457]

503. Article 4(3)(c) AP II provides that "children who have not attained the age of 15 shall . . . [not be] allowed to take part in hostilities". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[458]

504. Article 38(2) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that persons who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take a direct part in hostilities".

505. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Argentina stated that "it would have like the Convention categorically to prohibit the use of children in armed conflicts".[459]

506. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Austria stated that "to determine an age limit of 15 years for taking part in hostilities . . . is incompatible with . . . the best interests of the child".[460]

507. Upon signature of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Colombia stated that "it would have been preferable to fix [the age for taking part in armed conflicts] at 18 years in accordance with the principles and norms prevailing in various regions and countries, including Colombia".[461]

508. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Germany stated that it "regrets the fact that . . . even 15-year-olds may take a part in hostilities as soldiers, because this age limit is incompatible with the consideration of a child's best interests".[462]

509. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Netherlands stated that "it is of the opinion that States should not be allowed to involve children directly or indirectly in hostilities".[463]

[457] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[458] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[459] Argentina, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 4 December 1990, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 12.
[460] Austria, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 August 1992, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 12.
[461] Colombia, Declaration made upon signature of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 26 January 1990, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 15.
[462] Germany, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 March 1992, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 19.
[463] Netherlands, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 February 1995, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 27.

510. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Spain expressed its disagreement at the Convention "permitting the recruitment and participation in armed conflict of children having attained the age of 15 years".[464]

511. Upon ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, Uruguay stated that "it will not authorize any persons under its jurisdiction who have not attained the age of 18 years to take a direct part in hostilities".[465]

512. Article 22(2) of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that "States Parties to the present Charter shall take all necessary measures to ensure that no child shall take a direct part in hostilities".

513. According to Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "using [children under the age of fifteen years] to participate actively in hostilities" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts. During the March–April 1998 session of the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, when the proposal for this war crime was developed, the words "using" and "participate" were explained in a footnote to provide guidance for the interpretation of the scope of this provision. This footnote read:

> The words "using" and "participate" have been adopted in order to cover both direct participation in combat and also active participation in military activities linked to combat such as scouting, spying, sabotage and the use of children as decoys, couriers or at military checkpoints. It would not cover activities clearly unrelated to the hostilities such as food deliveries to an airbase or the use of domestic staff in an officer's married accommodation. However, use of children in a direct support function such as acting as bearers to take supplies to the front line, or activities at the front line itself, would be included within the terminology.[466]

514. The 2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts provides that:

> Article 1
> States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that members of their armed forces who have not attained the age of 18 years do not take a direct part in hostilities.
> . . .
> Article 4
> 1. Armed groups that are distinct from the armed forces of a State should not, under any circumstances, . . . use in hostilities persons under the age of 18 years.

[464] Spain, Declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 6 December 1990, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 29.

[465] Uruguay, Declarations made upon ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 20 November 1990, reprinted in UN Doc. CRC/C/2/Rev.4, 28 July 1995, p. 32.

[466] Roy S. Lee (ed.), The International Criminal Court. The Making of the Rome Statute: Issues, Negociations, Results, Kluwer Law International, The Hague, 1999, p. 118.

2. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to prevent such . . . use, including the adoption of legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize such practices.

515. Article 4(c) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "the Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed the following serious violations of international humanitarian law: . . . using [children under the age of 15 years] . . . to participate actively in hostilities".

Other Instruments

516. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77 AP I.

517. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 77(2) AP I.

518. In paragraph 16 of the 1999 Algiers Declaration, the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government reaffirmed its "determination to work relentlessly towards the promotion of the Rights and Welfare of the Child, and [its] commitment to combat all forms of child exploitation, and, in particular, put an end to the phenomenon of child soldiers".

519. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii), "using [children under the age of 15 years] to participate actively in hostilities" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

520. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "the belligerent parties shall take all measures to ensure that children under the age of 15 do not participate directly in hostilities".[467] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "children under the age of 15 shall not . . . be authorized to participate in hostilities".[468]

521. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "children are granted special protection under LOAC. Important rules are shown below: . . . children under 15 years of age should not take a direct part in hostilities."[469]

522. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, "children are to receive such aid and protection

[467] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.12.
[468] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[469] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 947.

as required including: . . . a ban on their . . . participation in the hostilities while under the age of fifteen".[470] The manual adds that "children under fifteen who do take part in hostilities remain protected".[471]

523. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, it is prohibited to "allow direct participation in hostilities of children under the age of 15".[472]

524. France's LOAC Manual provides that "only children aged at least 15 can participate in hostilities". It adds that "to make them participate directly in hostilities is a war crime". The manual states, however, that "a child who does take part in an armed conflict shall benefit, because of his military activity, from the status of combatant and of prisoner of war in case of capture".[473]

525. Germany's Military Manual provides that "the parties to the conflict shall take all feasible measures in order that children who have not attained the age of fifteen years do not take direct part in hostilities".[474]

526. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "the parties to the conflict shall take all feasible measures in order that children who have not attained the age of 15 years do not take a direct part in hostilities".[475]

527. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that, with respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, children "are to receive such aid and protection as they require, including . . . a ban on their . . . participation in the hostilities while under the age of fifteen". Referring to Article 4(3) AP II, it adds that "children under the age of fifteen who do in fact take part in hostilities remain protected by the Article".[476]

528. Nigeria's Military Manual deplores the fact that in past and current armed conflicts, such as those in Liberia, Chad, the Middle East or in Biafra, "children below the ages of 12 and 13 were used for the prosecution of the conflicts".[477]

National Legislation

529. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including the use of one or more persons under the age of 15 years "to participate actively in hostilities" in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[478]

530. The Law on the Rights of the Child of Belarus provides that it is prohibited "to make children participate in hostilities and armed conflicts".[479]

[470] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 22.
[471] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 23.
[472] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 75.
[473] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 40, see also p. 63.
[474] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 306, see also § 505.
[475] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-3, see also p. III-2, § 1.
[476] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1813(1).
[477] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 33, § 11.
[478] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.68 and 268.88.
[479] Belarus, Law on the Rights of the Child (1993), Article 29.

531. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that it is a war crime to allow children under the age of 15 years to take part in hostilities".[480]

532. Under Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, using children under 15 years of age in national armed forces to participate actively in hostilities constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflict.[481]

533. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[482]

534. Colombia's Law on Judicial Cooperation states that children under 18 may not be sent to participate in actual military activities.[483]

535. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on "anyone, who, in period of armed conflict, . . . forces [minors under 18 years of age] to participate directly or indirectly in the hostilities or armed operations".[484]

536. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[485]

537. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code punishes anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "uses [children under the age of 15 years] to participate actively in hostilities".[486]

538. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, any war crime provided for by the 1998 ICC Statute, which is not explicitly mentioned in the Code, such as "using [children under the age of 15 years] to participate actively in hostilities", is a crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[487]

539. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 77(2) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(3)(c) AP II, are punishable offences.[488]

540. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, the Military Service Law provides that children under 16 years old may not take a direct part in hostilities.[489]

[480] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 136(5).
[481] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(D)(g).
[482] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[483] Colombia, Law on Judicial Cooperation (1997), Articles 13–14.
[484] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 162.
[485] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[486] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(5).
[487] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 413(d).
[488] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[489] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.3, referring to Military Service Law (1972), Article 2.

541. Malaysia's Armed Forces Act provides that persons below the age of 18 may be appointed as apprentices, but are not considered as recruits and therefore, not being subjected to service law, do not participate in hostilities.[490]
542. Under Mali's Penal Code, "using [children under the age of 15 years] to participate actively in hostilities" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.[491]
543. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "using [children under the age of fifteen years] to participate actively in hostilities" is a crime, whether committed in an international or a non-international armed conflict.[492]
544. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[493]
545. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[494]
546. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines, in an article on "Children in situations of armed conflict", provides that "children shall not . . . take part in the fighting, or be used as guides, couriers or spies".[495]
547. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[496]
548. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxvi) and (e)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[497]

National Case-law
549. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
550. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Belgium pledged "to prohibit in times of war any person under 18 to take part in any kind of armed operational engagement".[498]
551. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Canada pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international

[490] Malaysia, Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 18.
[491] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(i)(26).
[492] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(5)(r) and 6(3)(f).
[493] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[494] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[495] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Article X, Section 22(b).
[496] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[497] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[498] Belgium, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[499]

552. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, it is the opinio juris of Chile that persons under the age of 18 must not participate in any hostilities.[500]

553. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Denmark pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[501]

554. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Finland pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[502]

555. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Guinea pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[503]

556. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Iceland pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[504]

557. The Report on the Practice of Iran emphasises that "Iraq denied using children at the battlefront and accused Iran of using children of Iraqi residents in Iran (sons of Iraqi dissidents) for propaganda".[505]

558. In 1988, during the Iran–Iraq War, the Iraqi President stated that "using children in war, without having the mature ability to make decisions, involves a violation of fundamental rights of the human being".[506]

559. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Liberia, Italy described the warlords' practice of deploying children for combat as "one of the most despicable actions". It insisted that the international community should use every means available to stop such behaviour immediately, notably the inclusion of a provision in the future ICC Statute aimed at "bring[ing] to justice the perpetrators of such intolerable acts".[507]

[499] Canada, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[500] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[501] Denmark, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[502] Finland, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[503] Guinea, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[504] Iceland, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[505] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[506] Iraq, Speech by the President of Iraq, 1 December 1988, Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 1.1.
[507] Italy, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3694, 30 August 1996, p. 6.

560. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Mexico pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[508]

561. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Mozambique pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[509]

562. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Norway pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[510]

563. In 1993, in its initial report to the CRC, the Philippines stated that "children are . . . not allowed to take part in the fighting and not to be used as guides, couriers and spies".[511]

564. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, South Africa pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[512]

565. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Sweden pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[513]

566. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Switzerland pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[514]

567. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 77 AP I to be part of customary international law.[515]

568. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support . . . the principle that . . . all feasible measures be taken in order that children under the age of fifteen do not take a direct part in hostilities".[516]

[508] Mexico, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[509] Mozambique, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[510] Norway, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[511] Philippines, Initial report to the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/3/Add.23, 3 November 1993, § 200.
[512] South Africa, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[513] Sweden, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[514] Switzerland, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[515] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[516] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International

569. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Liberia, the US stated that "the era of the child soldier in Liberia must come to an end immediately" and that it "is an outrage by any standard of civilization that children under the age of 15, numbering between 4,000 and 6,000, are toting automatic weapons, slaughtering innocent civilians and ignoring the rule of law".[517] It denounced again what it called this "abhorrent practice".[518]
570. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[519]
571. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Uruguay pledged "to promote the adoption of national and international standards prohibiting the military . . . participation in armed conflicts of persons under 18 years of age".[520]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

572. In a resolution on Liberia adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council condemned the practice of some factions of "deploying children for combat". It referred to such practice as "inhumane and abhorrent".[521] In a further resolution on the same subject adopted the same year, the Security Council also condemned in the strongest possible terms the practice of "deploying children for combat" and demanded that the warring parties "immediately cease this inhumane and abhorrent activity".[522]
573. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on children in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "the targeting of children in situations of armed conflict, including . . . use of children in armed conflict in violation of international law".[523]
574. In 1998, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council expressed its grave concern at "the harmful impact of armed conflict on children" and strongly condemned "the use in hostilities" of child soldiers. It called

Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.
[517] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3621, 25 January 1996, p. 5.
[518] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3694, 30 August 1996, p. 15.
[519] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[520] Uruguay, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[521] UN Security Council, Res. 1071, 30 August 1996, § 9.
[522] UN Security Council, Res. 1083, 27 November 1996, § 6.
[523] UN Security Council, Res. 1261, 25 August 1999, § 2.

upon all parties concerned "to put an end to such practice" and "to comply strictly with their obligations under international law, in particular their obligations under the Geneva Conventions of 1949, the Additional Protocols of 1977 and the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989". The UN Security Council expressed its readiness "to support efforts aimed at obtaining commitments to put to an end the ... use of children in armed conflicts".[524]

575. In 1998, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council condemned the use of child soldiers in the DRC.[525]

576. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the UN General Assembly expressed its deep concern about "the use of children as soldiers by all the parties, despite repeated calls from the international community to put an end to this practice".[526]

577. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the elimination of violence against women, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon States "to protect children, especially the girl child, in situations of armed conflict against participation, ... through adherence to the applicable principles of international human rights and humanitarian law".[527]

578. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the abduction of children from northern Uganda, the UN Commission on Human Rights concurred with the comments of the CRC on "the involvement of children in the conflict in northern Uganda, in particular the recommendation on measures to stop ... the use of children as child soldiers".[528]

579. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all States and other parties to armed conflict "to end the use of children as soldiers".[529]

580. In 1998, in a report on UNOMSIL in Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General welcomed the commitment of the government and the Civil Defence Force not to send children under the age of 18 into combat".[530]

581. In 1999, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General recommended that the UN Security Council:

> urge Member States to support the proposal to raise the minimum age for ... participation in hostilities to 18, and accelerate the drafting of an optional protocol on the situation of children in armed conflict to the Convention on the Rights of the Child for consideration by the General Assembly.[531]

[524] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/18, 29 June 1998.
[525] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/26, 31 August 1998.
[526] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/112, 12 December 1996, preamble.
[527] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/52, 17 April 1998, § 9(g).
[528] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/75, 22 April 1998, preamble and § 2.
[529] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, § 12(b).
[530] UN Secretary-General, First progress report on the UNOMSIL, UN Doc. S/1998/750, 12 August 1998, §§ 43 and 59.
[531] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflicts, UN Doc. S/1999/957, 8 September 1999, § 42 and Recommendation 8.

582. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that "violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II thereto committed in an armed conflict not of an international character have long been considered customary international law".[532]

583. In 1992, in a report on El Salvador, the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL noted that:

> 60. . . . ONUSAL observers were able to verify that [a] huge number of children under 15 were in the FMLN ranks. When this situation was taken up with the Political and Diplomatic Commission of FMLN, it pledged to respect the international norms in force [Article 4(3)(c) AP II], which did not entirely prove to be the case.
> . . .
> 101. . . . FMLN was recommended to observe the rules of international humanitarian law concerning the prohibition of . . . participation [of minors under the age of 15] in hostilities.[533]

Other International Organisations

584. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the plight of African children in situation of armed conflicts, the OAU Council of Ministers exhorted "all African countries, in particular the warring parties in those countries embroiled in civil wars, to keep children out of war situation". It also reaffirmed that "the use of children in armed conflicts constitutes a violation of their rights and should be considered as war crimes".[534] In another resolution adopted at the same session, the Council of Ministers expressed extreme "concern about the increasing use of children in armed conflicts".[535]

International Conferences

585. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on protection of children in armed conflict in which it recalled that, in accordance with Article 77 AP I, "the Parties to the conflict shall take all feasible measures in order that children who have not attained the age of fifteen do not take a direct part in hostilities". It also expressed "its deep concern that children under the age of 15 years are trained for military combat" and recommended that "in all circumstances children should be educated to respect humanitarian principles".[536]

586. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 recommended that "parties to conflict refrain from arming children under the age of 18 years and take every feasible step to ensure that children under the

[532] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.
[533] ONUSAL, Director of the Human Rights Division, Report, UN Doc. A/46/955-S/24375, 12 August 1992, Annex, §§ 60 and 101.
[534] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1659 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, §§ 5–7.
[535] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1662 (LXIV), 1–5 July 1996, § 8.
[536] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. IX, § 4.

age of 18 years do not take part in hostilities". It took note of "the efforts of the Movement to promote a principle of . . . non-participation in armed conflicts of children under the age of 18 years".[537]

587. In the Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, the participants at the African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers in 1999 solemnly declared that "the use of any child under 18 years of age by any armed force or armed group is wholly unacceptable, even where that child claims or is claimed to be a volunteer". They called upon all African States to bring to justice "those who continue to recruit or use children as soldiers". They also condemned "the use of children as soldiers by armed opposition groups" and called upon these groups "to demobilise or release into safety children already being used as soldiers".[538]

588. In a resolution adopted on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the Geneva Conventions in 1999 on the contribution of parliaments to ensuring respect for and promoting International humanitarian law, the 102nd Inter-Parliamentary Conference requested all States "to take all feasible measures to ensure that children who have not attained the age of 18 years do not take part in hostilities or military action . . . and to ensure the early adoption of the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict".[539]

589. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that:

> All the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law and to ensure, in particular . . .
>
> [that] all measures, including penal measures, are taken to stop the participation of children under the age of 15 years in armed hostilities . . . which constitute[s] a violation of international humanitarian law . . .
>
> The International Federation, National Societies and the ICRC will continue their efforts in pursuance of decisions taken within the International Movement and notably the Plan of Action for Children Affected by Armed Conflict (CABAC), to "promote the principle of . . . non-participation of children below the age of 18 years in armed conflicts".[540]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

590. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Uganda, the CRC expressed its concern about the "involvement of children as child soldiers" in northern Uganda and recommended that:

[537] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § C(d) and (f).

[538] African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers, Maputo, 19–22 April 1999, Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, §§ 1–3.

[539] 102nd Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Berlin, 10–15 October 1999, Resolution on the contribution of parliaments to ensuring respect for and promoting international humanitarian law on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the Geneva Conventions, § 4.

[540] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, §§ 1(f) and 7.

Awareness of the duty to fully respect the rules of international humanitarian law, in the spirit of article 38 of the Convention [on the Rights of the Child], inter alia with regard to children, should be made known to the parties to the armed conflict in the northern part of the State party's territory, and that violations of the rules of international humanitarian law entail responsibility being attributed to the perpetrators. Furthermore, the Committee recommends that the State party take measures to stop . . . the use of children as child soldiers in the area of the armed conflict.[541]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

591. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on child soldiers in which it invited "States and other parties to armed conflicts to strengthen the protection of children in armed conflicts through unilateral declarations or bilateral or regional instruments setting at eighteen the minimum age for participation in hostilities".[542]

592. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on child soldiers in which it expressed its deep concern about "the great number of children who bear arms in armed conflicts" and requested the ICRC and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, in cooperation with the Henry Dunant Institute, "to draw up and implement a Plan of Action for the Movement aimed at promoting the principle of . . . non-participation of children below the age of eighteen in armed conflicts".[543]

593. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "those under the age of 15 shall not be . . . authorized to take a direct or indirect part in hostilities".[544]

594. In 1994, in a statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, the ICRC recalled the relevant treaty provisions prohibiting the participation of children in hostilities. Underscoring the constant violations of these strict provisions, the ICRC pleaded for fuller compliance with the existing rules, and expressed the full support of the ICRC for the adoption of an optional protocol to the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child that would forbid any involvement in hostilities of children under 18.[545]

595. At its Geneva Session in 1995, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on children in armed conflicts which endorsed "the Plan of Action for the Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, prepared by the International

[541] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Uganda, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.80, 21 October 1997, §§ 19 and 34.

[542] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 14, § 2.

[543] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham Session, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 4, preamble and § 4.

[544] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

[545] ICRC, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, 11 November 1994, p. 2.

Federation and the ICRC, in cooperation with the Henry Dunant Institute, which aims to promote the principle of non-participation . . . of children below the age of 18 years in armed conflicts".[546]

596. In 1996, in a statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, the ICRC pointed out that "the shocking reality of armed conflicts is that, in many instances, children below the age of 15 take part in hostilities, in breach of existing international standards contained in IHL instruments and in the Convention on the Rights of the Child".[547]

597. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC listed allowing children under the age of 15 years to take part in hostilities as a serious violation of IHL in international and non-international armed conflicts that should be subject to the jurisdiction of the ICC.[548]

598. At its Seville Session in 1997, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on peace, IHL and human rights in which it appealed to all National Societies "to promote the Movement's position on the 18-year age limit for . . . participation in hostilities with a view to encouraging their respective governments to adopt national legislation . . . in line with this position". It asked National Societies that had already adopted the 18-year age limit for participation "to urge their governments to make their positions known to other governments, and to encourage their respective governments to participate in and support the process of drafting an optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on involvement of children in armed conflicts".[549]

599. In 1998, in a statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, the ICRC welcomed the adoption of the ICC Statute, which included in its list of war crimes the use of children under 15 to participate actively in hostilities. The ICRC noted that:

> The notion of participation must be understood to include both taking a direct part in the fighting and active participation in related activities, such as reconnaissance, espionage and sabotage. The same applies to the use of children as decoys, as messengers or at military checkpoints.[550]

600. At its Geneva Session in 1999, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on children affected by armed conflict in which it encouraged all National Societies:

[546] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Geneva Session, 1–2 December 1995, Res. 5, § 2.

[547] ICRC, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, 12 November 1996, p. 1.

[548] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, 14 February 1997, §§ 2(v) and 3(xii).

[549] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Seville Session, 25–27 November 1997, Res. 8, §§ 5 and 6.

[550] ICRC, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, 21 October 1998, p. 2.

to support, particularly through contacts with their government, the adoption of international instruments implementing the principle of non-participation ... of children below the age of 18 in armed conflicts with a view to such instruments being applicable to all situations of armed conflict and to all armed groups.[551]

VI. Other Practice

601. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "children who have not yet attained the age of fifteen years shall not be allowed to take part in acts of violence. All efforts shall be made not to allow persons below the age of 18 to take part in acts of violence."[552]

602. The Report on SPLM/A Practice alleges that "the SPLM/A still ... deploys in combat children under the age of 15 years, which is against the Convention on the Rights of the Child".[553]

E. The Elderly, Disabled and Infirm

Note: For practice concerning the establishment of hospital and safety zones to protect the elderly, see Chapter 11, section A. For practice concerning the specific needs of displaced elderly persons, see Chapter 38, section C.

The elderly

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

603. Article 17 GC IV provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas, of ... aged persons".

604. Articles 16, 44, 45 and 49 GC III and Articles 27, 85 and 119 GC IV state in relation to the treatment of detainees that the age of detained persons should be taken into account.

Other Instruments

605. Article 3 of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict, it is not permissible to kill non-belligerents such as old men".

[551] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Geneva Session, 29–30 October 1999, Res. 8, § 4.

[552] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 10, IRRC, No. 282, p. 334.

[553] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5.3.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

606. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "the belligerents shall endeavour to conclude agreements for the removal from a besieged area of . . . the elderly".[554]

607. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the opposing parties are required to try and conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . aged persons".[555]

608. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "if circumstances permit, the parties to a conflict must endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged areas of . . . aged persons".[556]

609. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "in these cases the IHL rules favour especially the civilian population so that assistance and protection, which the parties to the conflict shall bring, are given in priority to the most vulnerable persons or groups of persons, who are: . . . elderly".[557]

610. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that it is prohibited to "attack and maltreat . . . the elderly".[558] It further states that "every act of violence against . . . the elderly . . . is a criminal, cowardly and dishonourable act, punishable by serious disciplinary sanctions".[559]

611. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces provides that "the elderly must be protected".[560]

612. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "particular attention shall be paid to the protection of . . . the elderly".[561] It further states that "hospital zones are created, by mutual agreement between the belligerents, in order to protect from the effects of war . . . aged persons".[562]

613. France's LOAC Manual provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas, of . . . aged persons".[563]

614. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "a local cease-fire may be arranged for the removal from the besieged or encircled areas of . . . old persons".[564]

615. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that soldiers in combat are required to spare the elderly.[565]

554 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 1.014.
555 Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 735; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 926.
556 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 6-4, § 35.
557 Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 25.
558 El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 3.
559 El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 4.
560 El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 7.
561 France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 4.
562 France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 5; see also LOAC Manual (2001), p. 125.
563 France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 64.
564 Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 5.
565 Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(4).

616. New Zealand's Military Manual refers to Article 17 GC IV, which "requires that belligerents endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . aged persons".[566]
617. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines provides that all civilians, particularly the elderly, must be respected.[567]
618. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the law of armed conflicts provides a particular protection to . . . the elderly".[568] In addition, the manual states that "in besieged or encircled areas where there is a civilian population, it shall be endeavoured to conclude local agreements with the enemy to organise the evacuation of . . . aged persons".[569]
619. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that:

> It is also possible for the parties to reach an agreement during a conflict that all acts of war shall cease temporarily within a given part of a conflict area. Such agreements are commonly made to afford protection to civilian populations, and specially to such exposed groups as . . . old people.[570]

620. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "belligerents shall conclude special agreements in order to evacuate the . . . elderly . . . from besieged areas".[571] It further states that "transports of civilian . . . aged persons . . . effected by vehicles and hospital trains, shall be respected in the same way as hospitals".[572]
621. The UK Military Manual provides that "the belligerents should endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . old persons".[573]
622. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "a local cease-fire may be arranged for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . old persons".[574]
623. The US Field Manual provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . aged persons".[575]
624. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "removal of . . . aged persons . . . from besieged or encircled areas is encouraged".[576]

National Legislation
625. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in case of evacuation of civilian persons

[566] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 508(3).
[567] Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), Rule 1.
[568] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.a.(2).
[569] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.4.a.
[570] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.4.1, p. 84.
[571] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 33.
[572] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 37.
[573] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 29. [574] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, § 3.
[575] US, Field Manual (1956), § 256, see also § 44. [576] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-3.

from a besieged zone, "special attention is given to the old people, and they are taken great care of".[577]

626. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[578]

627. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 16, 44, 45 and 49 GC III and 14, 17, 27, 85 and 119 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[579]

628. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949... is liable to imprisonment".[580]

629. According to Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, it is a crime against international law to "make a serious attempt on the life of... elderly people".[581]

National Case-law

630. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

631. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that special care is provided for the elderly.[582]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

632. In 1997, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that the Croatian Office for Displaced Persons and Refugees had advised the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights that "emphasis in the immediate future will be placed on applications for return from relatives of elderly Serbs remaining in the former sectors, who require the assistance of younger family members to lead a normal life".[583]

[577] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 15.
[578] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[579] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[580] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[581] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474.
[582] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[583] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/9, 22 October 1996, § 51.

Other International Organisations

633. In a recommendation adopted in 1995 on Turkey's military intervention in northern Iraq, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe asked Turkey to guarantee the fundamental rights of civilians, with special reference to the more vulnerable, including the elderly.[584]

International Conferences

634. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed deep concern about "violations of human rights during armed conflicts, affecting the civilian population, especially ... the elderly" and therefore called upon States and all parties to armed conflicts "strictly to observe international humanitarian law".[585]

635. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "in the conduct of hostilities, every effort is made ... to spare the life, protect and respect the civilian population, with particular protective measures for ... groups with special vulnerabilities such as ... the elderly".[586]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

636. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

637. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

638. No practice was found.

The disabled and infirm

Note: For practice concerning the establishment of hospital and safety zones to protect the infirm, see Chapter 11, section A.

[584] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1266, 26 April 1995, § 5.

[585] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(29).

[586] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(a).

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

639. Article 30, second paragraph, GC III provides that "special facilities shall be afforded for the care to be given to the disabled, in particular to the blind, and for their rehabilitation, pending repatriation".

640. Article 110 GC III provides for special care for and evacuation of disabled POWs.

641. Article 16, first paragraph, GC IV provides that the infirm "shall be the object of particular protection and respect".

642. Article 17 GC IV provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . infirm".

643. Articles 21, 22, first paragraph, and 127, third paragraph, GC IV contain specific mentions of the infirm in relation to transport and evacuation.

644. Articles 16, 44, 45 and 49 GC III and 27, 85 and 119 GC IV state in relation to the treatment of detainees that the state of health of detained persons should be taken into account.

645. According to Article 8(a) AP I, the terms "'wounded' and 'sick' mean persons . . . who, because of . . . physical or mental disability, are in need of medical assistance or care . . . and other persons who may be in need of immediate medical assistance or care, such as the infirm". Article 8 AP I was adopted by consensus.[587]

Other Instruments

646. Article 2(24) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that:

> This Agreement seeks . . . to protect and promote the full scope of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including: . . . the right of . . . the disabled to protection, care, and a home, especially against physical and mental abuse, prostitution, drugs, forced labour, homelessness, and other similar forms of oppression and exploitation.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

647. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "transports of . . . the infirm . . . effected by convoys of vehicles and hospital trains on land or on sea, shall be respected and protected".[588]

[587] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 68.

[588] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 4.004(1) and 4.006(1); see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.05.

648. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that "the infirm are considered as" included in the concept of wounded and sick.[589]
649. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that the terms "wounded" and "sick" "also cover . . . other persons who may be in need of immediate medical assistance or care, such as the infirm".[590]
650. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "the opposing parties are required to try and conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . [the] infirm".[591]
651. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "special protection and respect must be given to . . . the infirm".[592] It also states that "if circumstances permit, the parties to a conflict must endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged areas of . . . [the] infirm".[593]
652. Colombia's Basic Military manual provides that the IHL rules favour especially the civilian population so that assistance and protection, which the parties in conflict shall bring, are given in priority to the most vulnerable persons or groups of persons, who are: . . . infirm".[594]
653. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that "every act of violence against . . . [the] infirm . . . is a criminal, cowardly and dishonourable act, punishable by serious disciplinary sanctions".[595]
654. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "particular attention shall be paid to the protection of the disabled".[596]
655. France's LOAC Manual provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . [the] infirm".[597] The manual also provides that "out of concern for their protection, . . . the disabled . . . are included in the same category as the wounded and sick under humanitarian law".[598]
656. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "persons who could need immediate medical care such as the infirm . . . are included in" the terms "wounded" and "sick".[599]
657. New Zealand's Military Manual refers to Article 17 GC IV, which "requires that belligerents endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . [the] infirm".[600] It further provides that "special protection must be given to . . . the infirm".[601] The manual also

[589] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.02.
[590] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), glossary, p. xxiv.
[591] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 735; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 926.
[592] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-2, § 16.
[593] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 6-4, § 35.
[594] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 25.
[595] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), pp. 4–5.
[596] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 4.
[597] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 64. [598] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 32.
[599] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-SO, § B.
[600] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 508(3).
[601] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1108.

provides that "infirm internees . . . must not be transferred if the journey would seriously prejudice their health, except when their safety imperatively so demands".[602] According to the manual, "convoys of vehicles or hospital trains on land, and specially provided vessels at sea, conveying . . . the infirm . . . must be protected and respected in the same way as civilian hospitals".[603] In addition, it is forbidden to attack "aircraft used for the removal of . . . the infirm".[604]

658. Nigeria's Military Manual provides that "duly recognized civilian hospitals with their staff, as well as land, sea or air transport of . . . the infirm . . . are entitled to similar respect and protection as provided in the first and second conventions for their military counter parts".[605]

659. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "in besieged or encircled areas where there is a civilian population, it shall be endeavoured to conclude local agreements with the enemy to organise the evacuation of . . . [the] infirm".[606]

660. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "belligerents shall conclude special agreements in order to evacuate the . . . infirm . . . from besieged areas".[607] It also states that "the infirm . . . shall be the object of a particular protection and respect".[608] The manual further provides that "transports of . . . the infirm . . . effected by vehicles and hospital trains, shall be respected in the same way as hospitals".[609]

661. The UK Military Manual provides that:

> Special protection and respect must be given to . . . the infirm . . .
>
> The belligerents shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of . . . [the] infirm . . .
>
> Convoys of vehicles or hospital trains on land, and specially provided vessels at sea, conveying . . . the infirm . . . must be protected and respected in the same way as civilian hospitals.[610]

662. The US Field Manual provides that:

> Special facilities shall be afforded for the care to be given to the disabled [POWS], in particular to the blind, and for their rehabilitation, pending repatriation . . .
>
> The Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas, of . . . [the] infirm . . .
>
> Civilian hospitals organized to give care to . . . the infirm . . . may in no circumstances be the object of attack, but shall be respected and protected by the Parties to the conflict . . .

602 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1131(1).
603 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1110(1).
604 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1110(2).
605 Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 18, § 12.
606 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.4.a.
607 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 33.
608 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 36.
609 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 37.
610 UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 28, 29, 32 and 33.

Convoys of vehicles or hospital trains on land or specially provided vessels on sea, conveying . . . the infirm . . .shall be respected and protected in the same manner as the hospitals provided for in Article 18.[611]

663. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that the "infirm . . . must be the object of particular protection and respect".[612]

National Legislation

664. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in case of evacuation of civilian persons from a besieged zone, "special attention is given to the invalids, and they are taken great care of".[613]

665. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[614]

666. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 16, 30, 44, 45 and 49 GC III and 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 27, 119 and 127 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[615]

667. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[616]

National Case-law

668. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

669. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that special care is provided for the disabled.[617]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

670. In 1992, in a report submitted to the UN Security Council, the UN Secretary-General reported that ICRC delegates in Bosnia and Herzegovina

611 US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 107, 256, 257 and 260, see also § 44.
612 US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-3.
613 Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 15.
614 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
615 Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
616 Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
617 Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

were "involved in the evacuation of specially vulnerable groups, such as ... handicapped people".[618]

Other International Organisations

671. No practice was found.

International Conferences

672. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed deep concern about "violations of human rights during armed conflicts, affecting the civilian population, especially ... the disabled" and therefore called upon States and all parties to armed conflicts "strictly to observe international humanitarian law".[619]

673. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "in the conduct of hostilities, every effort is made ... to spare the life, protect and respect the civilian population, with particular protective measures for ... groups with special vulnerabilities such as ... persons with disabilities".[620]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

674. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

675. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

676. No practice was found.

[618] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council Resolution 752 (1992), UN Doc. S/24000, 26 May 1992, §§ 9 and 10.

[619] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(29), see also § II(63).

[620] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(a).

PART VI

IMPLEMENTATION

CHAPTER 40

COMPLIANCE WITH INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW

A. Respect for International Humanitarian Law

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 25 of the 1929 GC provides that "the provisions of the present Convention shall be respected by the High Contracting Parties in all circumstances".

2. Article 82 of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that "the provisions of the present Convention shall be respected by the High Contracting Parties in all circumstances".

3. Common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that "the High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances".

4. Article 1(1) AP I provides that "the High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for this Protocol in all circumstances". Article 1 AP I was adopted by 87 votes in favour, one against and 11 abstentions.[1]
5. Article 38(1) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "States Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for rules of international humanitarian law applicable to them in armed conflicts which are relevant to the child".

Other Instruments
6. Article 3(2) of the 1986 Statutes of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, dealing with tasks of the National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, provides that the National Societies "also co-operate with their governments to ensure respect for international humanitarian law and to protect the red cross and red crescent emblems".
7. In the introductory paragraph to the 1991 Hague Statement on Respect for Humanitarian Principles, the Presidents of the six republics of the former Yugoslavia undertook "to respect and ensure respect for International Humanitarian Law".
8. Paragraph 14 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "the parties will respect the provisions of the Geneva Conventions and will ensure that any paramilitary or irregular units not formally under their command, control or political influence respect the present agreement".
9. Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "the parties commit themselves to respect and to ensure respect for the Article 3 of the four Geneva Conventions".
10. Article 3(i) and (ii) of the 1992 London Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues provides that:

> In carrying out the Programme of Action, the parties to the conflict undertook to abide by the following provisions:
>
> i) all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under International Humanitarian Law and in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto . . .
> ii) all parties to the conflict have the responsibility to exercise full authority over undisciplined elements within their areas so as to avoid anarchy, breaches of international humanitarian law and human rights abuse.

11. Paragraph 16 of the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict states that "States shall respect and ensure respect for the obligations under international law applicable in armed conflict, including the rules providing protection for the environment in times of armed conflict".

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.36, 23 May 1977, p. 41, § 58.

12. Principle 5 of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that "all authorities and international actors shall respect and ensure respect for their obligations under international law, including human rights and humanitarian law, in all circumstances, so as to prevent and avoid conditions that might lead to displacement of persons".

13. Article 1 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that "every State has the obligation to respect, ensure respect for and enforce international human rights and humanitarian law norms".

14. Article 3 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

> The obligation to respect, ensure respect for and enforce international human rights and humanitarian law includes, inter alia, a State's duty to:
> (a) Take appropriate legal and administrative measures to prevent violations;
> (b) Investigate violations and, where appropriate, take action against the violator in accordance with domestic and international law;
> (c) Provide victims with equal and effective access to justice irrespective of who may be the ultimate bearer of responsibility for the violation;
> (d) Afford appropriate remedies to victims; and > (e) Provide for or facilitate reparation to victims.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

15. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that "States have the responsibility to respect the treaties that they have ratified. The Geneva Conventions and Protocol I expressly oblige States not only to respect [those agreements], but also to ensure respect by issuing orders and instructions for that purpose."[2]

16. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that "Australia is responsible for ensuring that its military forces comply with LOAC" and that "all ADF members are responsible for ensuring that their conduct complies with the LOAC."[3] It adds that:

> Mission planners are responsible for ensuring that operations plans and ROE fully comply with LOAC. To discharge this responsibility, all operations plans and ROE should be reviewed by ADF legal advisers experienced in operations law. In addition, targeting lists and individual missions are to be carefully scrutinised by military planners and their operations law advisers.[4]

[2] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.01.
[3] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), §§ 1201–1202.
[4] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1205.

17. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "Australia is responsible for ensuring that its military forces comply with the laws of armed conflict (LOAC) . . . All ADF members are responsible for ensuring that their conduct complies with LOAC."[5]
18. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "the States signatory to the [Geneva] Conventions have undertaken to take a series of measures to promote respect thereof".[6]
19. Belgium's LOAC Teaching Directive states that "the general aim to be reached is to ensure in all circumstances full respect for the law of armed conflicts and the rules of engagement by all members of the Armed Forces".[7]
20. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers states that the purpose of the instruction is "to bring the soldier in an armed conflict to react spontaneously in conformity with the elementary principles of humanity".[8] The manual also provides the following rule for the combatant: "I must behave like a disciplined soldier and I respect humanitarian rules."[9]
21. Benin's Military Manual states that every combatant must "respect and ensure respect in all circumstances for the laws and customs of war, that means the law of war".[10] It emphasises that "the commander of forces engaged in a military operation is responsible for ensuring respect for the law of war".[11] The manual further states that "if the duty of the commander is to ensure respect for and the application of the law of war in all circumstances, it is important for the soldier to know and to understand that this law aims to limit and alleviate to the greatest extent possible the calamities of war".[12]
22. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that action against the enemy must be conducted "within the framework of respect for the laws and customs of war".[13] It also provides that "the Armed Forces shall conduct their operations . . . with the intent to respect sincerely . . . international humanitarian law".[14] The manual further provides that "respect for the rules of international law must be a natural duty for a Cameroonian soldier".[15]
23. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that "the Armed Forces shall be subject to a regime of internal discipline which ensures respect for the Law of War".[16] It also states that "each commander ensures respect for the Law of War within his sphere of command . . . The Law of War is above all a question of order and discipline."[17] The manual further specifies that "the State must respect

[5] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 1301 and 1302.
[6] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[7] Belgium, LOAC Teaching Directive (1996), Section 1.
[8] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 3.
[9] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 10.
[10] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, preamble, p. 3.
[11] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 14.
[12] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 17.
[13] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 26.
[14] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 31.
[15] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 35.
[16] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 15, § 15.
[17] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 86, §§ 11 and 12.

and ensure respect for the Law of Geneva and its rules" and that "from the beginning of the hostilities, the parties to the conflict: . . . shall ensure respect for the Law of War in their sphere of authority".[18]

24. Canada's LOAC Manual states that:

> The means for securing observance [of the law of armed conflict] depends upon the actions of the States which are bound by particular treaties in accordance with the terms of those treaties, or on their obligation to give effect to the requirements of customary international law.[19]

25. Canada's Code of Conduct instructs soldiers: "You must obey the Law of Armed Conflict".[20] It specifies that "it is CF policy to respect and abide by the Law of Armed Conflict in all circumstances".[21] It also states that "all CF personnel, allied and coalition personnel and opposing forces are required to abide by the Law of Armed Conflict and the basic principles these rules represent".[22] The manual further states that "it might appear that a momentary advantage may be gained from a breach of the Law of Armed Conflict or the Code of Conduct. However, experience has shown that even a momentary lapse in your duty may dishonour your country and also adversely affect the accomplishment of the overall mission."[23] It adds that:

> The obligation to obey these rules and the Law of Armed Conflict is a requirement under Canadian military law which includes the Criminal Code of Canada. Breaches of the Law of Armed Conflict or these rules by CF personnel will be dealt with regardless of which side is successful. Canada is committed to see that its forces conduct their operations in compliance with the Law of Armed Conflict. The Code of Service Discipline applies to CF members worldwide. As a result, your conduct must always be governed by the principles of Canadian law and society incorporated in the Code of Conduct.[24]

26. Colombia's Basic Military Manual notes that "States must . . . respect and ensure respect for the norms [of IHL] in all circumstances".[25]

27. Colombia's Instructors' Manual states that "the States which have ratified . . . international conventions and treaties on the law of war must respect them and ensure their respect in all circumstances".[26]

28. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations provides that combatants must not "violate the laws and customs of war established by international conventions signed by the Congolese Government".[27]

[18] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), pp. 133 and 138, § 462.22.
[19] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-1, § 2.
[20] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Introduction, § 14.
[21] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 1.
[22] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 2.
[23] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 7.
[24] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 8.
[25] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 37.
[26] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 14.
[27] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 30.

29. Croatia's Commanders' Manual notes that "each State undertakes to respect and to ensure respect for the law of war in all circumstances".[28]
30. Ecuador's Naval Manual states that "during wartime or other periods of armed conflict, the rules of engagement reaffirm the right and responsibility of the operational commander to seek out, engage, and destroy enemy forces consistent with . . . the law of armed conflict".[29]
31. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces begins with the order to "respect and ensure respect for human rights".[30]
32. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual begins by exhorting combatants to "always respect the rules stated in this manual".[31]
33. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that "combatants shall respect at any place and in all circumstances the rules of the law of armed conflicts. They may in no case release themselves from those rules, regardless of the framework and the mandate of their mission."[32]
34. France's LOAC Manual provides that "combatants shall respect the law of armed conflict in all circumstances".[33]
35. Germany's Military Manual provides that "the members of the Federal Armed Forces are obliged to comply and ensure compliance with all treaties of international humanitarian law binding upon the Federal Republic of Germany".[34] It further states that:

> It shall be a natural duty for a member of the Federal Armed Forces to follow the rules of international humanitarian law. With whatever means wars are being conducted, the soldier will always be obliged to respect and observe the rules of international law and take them as a basis for his actions.[35]

36. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "the laws of war are binding on every IDF soldier, also by virtue of their legal validity vis-à-vis himself as an IDF soldier".[36] It further states that "it is incumbent on combatants to behave in compliance with the rules and customs of war. This is the most basic of conditions."[37] The manual also states that "GHQ regulations and the conduct code obligate IDF soldiers to observe the laws of war which Israel recognizes".[38]
37. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual notes that "each State undertakes to respect and to ensure respect for the law of war in all circumstances".[39]

[28] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), Introduction.
[29] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 5.5.1.
[30] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 4.
[31] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 2.
[32] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[33] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 14.
[34] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 135.
[35] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 139.
[36] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 9.
[37] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 48.
[38] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 66.
[39] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), Introduction, p. 1.

38. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that:

> The States and the belligerent Parties have to undertake to respect the law of armed conflict in all circumstances and to give full implementation to its provisions. This means that it has to be respected by the government at strategic level, by the military at operational and tactical levels, and by the civilians.[40]

The manual also states that:

> The armed forces have to behave correctly, that means in accordance with the international rules ratified by their respective governments, when facing the double responsibility of accomplishing a military mission and of managing the results or consequence of their action or behaviour.[41]

The manual also provides the following rule for behaviour in combat: "Be a disciplined soldier. Disobedience of the law of war dishonours your Armed Forces and yourself and causes unnecessary suffering; far from weakening the enemy's will to fight, it often strengthens it."[42]

39. Madagascar's Military Manual states that "belligerent States and Parties undertake to respect and ensure respect for the law of war".[43] It also states that "military personnel . . . must strictly observe the rules and the laws established by the law of war".[44] It adds: "Be a disciplined soldier. Disobedience of the law of war dishonours your armed forces and yourself: it causes unnecessary suffering; far from weakening the enemy's will to fight, it often strengthens it."[45]

40. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "the rules of the law of war must be respected. They must be respected in all circumstances . . . States parties to law of war treaties must take all necessary measures to ensure respect for their obligations under these treaties."[46]

41. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "New Zealand is required to comply with the LOAC which is part of international law".[47] It further states that:

> The law of armed conflict, like other branches of international law, possesses no permanent means to secure its observance or enforcement. Observance is secured by the States which are bound by particular treaties both themselves acting and persuading other States to act in accordance with the terms of those treaties, and themselves giving effect to and persuading other States to give effect to the requirements of the customary law.[48]

[40] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 7.
[41] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 1.
[42] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 14.
[43] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 1-T, § 24(4).
[44] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Presentation, p. 69, § 1.
[45] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, § 1.
[46] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-1.
[47] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Introduction, p. ii, § 2.
[48] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1601.1.

42. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct tells troops that: "We are in honor bound to observe the rules of the Geneva Convention in whatever action you will be taking against the rebel".[49]

43. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines directs "all military personnel in the field [to] strictly observe and apply these humanitarian principles embodied in the aforementioned rules in the performance of their duties."[50]

44. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines instruct: "Be a disciplined soldier. Disobedience of the laws of war dishonours your army and yourself and causes unnecessary suffering; far from weakening the enemy's will to fight, it often strengthens it."[51]

45. Russia's Military Manual provides that:

> Having declared that international law pre-empts national law and having ratified the Protocols additional to the Geneva Conventions on 4 August 1989, the Soviet Union has accepted the obligation to ensure respect for them by all State and public organisations and by its citizens, including the Armed Forces of the USSR.[52]

The manual further provides that the "armed forces shall be subject to a disciplinary regime that ensures respect for the rules of IHL".[53] It also states that, in time of war, commanders must "ensure the strict application of the rules of IHL by military personnel".[54]

46. Spain's LOAC Manual notes that "each State undertakes to respect and to ensure respect for the Law of War in all circumstances".[55]

47. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "Switzerland has undertaken to respect the rules of the law [of armed conflict]".[56] It further states that "the laws and customs of war must be observed by Governments, the civilian and military authorities as well as by individuals, military or civilian".[57] The manual also provides that commanders "are responsible for ensuring that their troops respect the Conventions".[58]

48. Togo's Military Manual states that every combatant must "respect and ensure respect in all circumstances for the laws and customs of war, that means the law of the war".[59] It emphasises that "the commander of forces engaged in a military operation is responsible for ensuring respect for the law of war".[60] The manual further states that "if the duty of the commander is to ensure respect for and the application of the law of war in all circumstances, it is important for the soldier to know and to understand that this law aims to limit and alleviate to the greatest extent possible the calamities of war".[61]

[49] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 3.
[50] Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), § 2.
[51] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 1.
[52] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 3.
[53] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 12.
[54] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 14(b).
[55] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.8, see also §§ 2.1, 10.1.a and 11.3.b.(1).
[56] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), p. III, § 1.
[57] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 3.
[58] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 196.
[59] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, preamble, p. 3.
[60] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 14.
[61] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 17.

49. The UK LOAC Manual contains Rules for Soldiers, which include: "I must . . . comply with military discipline and the laws of war which are made for my protection and to reduce unnecessary suffering."[62]

50. The US Field Manual states that "the treaty provisions quoted herein will be strictly observed and enforced by United States forces without regard to whether they are legally binding upon this country" and that "the unwritten or customary law of war is binding upon all nations. It will be strictly observed by United States forces."[63]

51. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "compliance [with the law of armed conflict] is important because states have reciprocal interests in the law's continued application".[64] It also recognises that "States have important customary and treaty obligations to observe the law of armed conflict, as a matter of national policy, and to insure its implementation, observance and enforcement by [their] own armed forces".[65] The Pamphlet further provides that "Article 1 [common to the 1949 Geneva Conventions] requires all parties to respect and insure respect for the Conventions in all circumstances".[66] It also states that "the US . . . ensures observance and enforcement through a variety of national means including close command control, military regulations, rules of engagement, the Uniform Code of Military Justice and other national enforcement techniques".[67]

52. The US Naval Handbook states that "during wartime or other periods of armed conflict, U.S. rules of engagement reaffirm the right and responsibility of the operational commander to seek out, engage, and destroy enemy forces consistent with . . . the law of armed conflict".[68] The Handbook quotes Navy Regulations which provide that "at all times, commanders shall observe, and require their commands to observe, the principles of international law". It adds that "it is the responsibility of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps . . . to ensure that: 1. The U.S. Navy and Marine Corps observe and enforce the law of armed conflict at all times."[69]

National Legislation

53. Russia's Law on Status of Members of Armed Forces as amended provides that:

> Protection of the State sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Russian Federation . . . constitutes the essence of the soldier's duty, which obliges military servicemen: . . . to observe universally recognised principles and legal regulations of international law and international treaties [ratified] by the Russian Federation.[70]

[62] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Annex A, p. 44, § 1. [63] US, Field Manual (1956), § 7.
[64] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 1-4(d). [65] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-3.
[66] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 11-3, see also § 10-1(b).
[67] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(e).
[68] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 5.5. [69] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.2.
[70] Russia, Law on Status of Members of Armed Forces as amended (1993), Article 26.

54. Russia's Service Regulations of the Armed Forces provides that "a serviceman is obliged to know and pronouncedly observe international rules regarding the conduct of military operations and the treatment of the wounded, sick, shipwrecked and the civilian population in the military operations area, as well as prisoners of war".[71]

National Case-law

55. In its ruling in the Jenin (Mortal Remains) case in 2002 dealing with the question of when, how and by whom the mortal remains of Palestinians who died in a battle in Jenin refugee camp should be identified and buried, Israel's High Court of Justice stated that "of course, the rules of the law apply always and immediately... Even during combat one should uphold the laws that govern combat."[72]

Other National Practice

56. Many countries have created national commissions to assist them in ensuring respect for their obligations under IHL.[73]

57. A working paper prepared by the Colombian Ministry of Foreign Affairs in October 1996 for a meeting of experts on commissions and other bodies entrusted with proposing national measures for the application of IHL stated that:

> The Colombian Government reaffirms its inescapable commitment to respect and ensure respect for the rules of International Humanitarian Law, especially the norms of the four Geneva Conventions of 1949 and of their Additional Protocols of 1977 which are in force for Colombia.[74]

58. In comments on the text of the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, submitted in 1995 to the UN Commission on Human Rights, Mexico mentioned "the principle that States parties to the Geneva Conventions are under an obligation to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law".[75]

[71] Russia, Service Regulations of the Armed Forces (1993), Article 19.
[72] Israel, High Court of Justice, Jenin (Mortal Remains) case, Ruling, 14 April 2002, § 12.
[73] Examples include Albania, Argentina, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Canada, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Gambia, Georgia, Guatemala, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Mali, Moldova, New Zealand, Panama, Paraguay, Poland, Portugal, Senegal, Slovenia, South Africa, Tajikistan, Togo, Ukraine, Uruguay, Uzbekistan, Venezuela, Yemen.
[74] Colombia, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Working paper prepared for the meeting of experts on commissions and other bodies entrusted with developing national measures for the application of International Humanitarian Law, 19 October 1996, p. 4, § 2.
[75] Mexico, Comments of 15 November 1995 on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards included in the Report of the UN Secretary-General prepared pursuant to UN Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/29, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/80, 28 November 1995, § 10.

59. At the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002, Niger declared that:

We reiterate our determination to do everything in our power in order that our States and all parties to armed conflicts honour their duties as regards International Humanitarian Law and international instruments related to human rights and refugee law and respect, in all circumstances, the rights of the victims of armed conflicts and the dignity of the human person.[76]

60. In 1997, at a seminar on national implementation of IHL in Russia, a Russian Major-General of Justice and Deputy Chief for Training and Research Activities, stated that:

Given that the 1993 Constitution of the Russian Federation recognized that the commonly accepted principles and norms of international law and international treaties to which the Russian Federation is a party are an integral part of its legal system (Article 15, Part 4), we can assert that in Russia there is a constitutional guarantee of respect of rules of international humanitarian law.[77]

61. In 1999, during a debate on the UN Decade of International Law in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, South Africa stated that "the rules of international humanitarian law should also be subject to constant revision, in the sense not of making new laws but of ensuring compliance with existing ones. States should work to instil a culture of compliance."[78]

62. In a declaration adopted in 2002 with regard to respect for the Geneva Conventions in the context of the fight against terrorism, the Swiss National Council stated that:

The Swiss National Council calls upon all States to respect the Geneva Conventions, in particular today with regard to the "war against terrorism":

- in practical terms (treatment of combatants, of prisoners, of civilians);
- in legal terms (application de jure: unconditional and non-selective).

The Swiss National Council calls upon the authorities of all States in no way to question the legitimacy and legal force of the humanitarian rules which are established in the Geneva Conventions.[79]

[76] Niger, Declaration made at the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18-20 February 2002, § 4.

[77] Russia, Mikhail Mikhailovich Korneev, Major-general of Justice, Deputy Chief for Training and Research Activities, cited in Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Russia and ICRC, National seminar on the implementation of international humanitarian law in the Russian Federation, Military University, Moscow, 2–3 December 1997, p. 84.

[78] South Africa, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/54/SR.10, 19 October 1999, § 76.

[79] Switzerland, National Council, Declaration concerning respect for the Geneva Conventions, 6 March 2002, Spring Session 2002, Third Session, Official Bulletin, No. 02.9100 (provisional version of the text).

63. In a resolution adopted in 2002 on the occasion of the 25th Anniversary of the Additional Protocols, the Swiss Conseil des Etats solemnly recalled "the importance to have and to respect universal humanitarian rules" and expressed its firm belief in "the essential role which the national Parliaments can play in order to protect the victims of armed conflicts".[80]

64. The 1979 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program stated that "it is the policy of the Department of Defense to ensure that: . . . the law of war and the obligations of the U.S. Government under that law are observed and enforced by the U.S. Armed Forces".[81] It also stated that "the Armed Forces of the United States shall comply with the law of war in the conduct of military operations and related activities in armed conflict, however such conflicts are characterized".[82]

65. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

> Common Article 1 of the four 1949 Geneva Conventions for the Protection of War Victims requires that parties to those treaties "respect and ensure respect" for each of those treaties. The obligation to "respect and ensure respect" was binding upon all parties to the Persian Gulf War. It is an affirmative requirement to take all reasonable and necessary steps to bring individuals responsible for war crimes to justice.[83]

Under "Observations", the report stated that:

> DOD-mandated instruction and training in the law of war were reflected in US operations, which were in keeping with historic US adherence to the precepts of the law of war. Adherence to the law of war impeded neither Coalition planning nor execution; Iraqi violations of the law of war provided Iraq no advantage.
> . . .
> The willingness of commanders to seek legal advice at every stage of operational planning ensured US respect for the law of war throughout Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.[84]

66. The 1998 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program, which aimed "to ensure DoD compliance with the law of war obligations of the United States", stated that "it is the DoD policy to [80] Switzerland, Council of States, Declaration concerning the Protocols additional to the Geneva Conventions, 12 June 2002, Summer Session 2002, Seventh Session, Official Bulletin, No. 02.048 (provisional version of the text).

[81] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, Section C(1).
[82] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, Section E (1)(a).
[83] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 633.
[84] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 644.

ensure that: . . . the law of war obligations of the United States are observed and enforced by the DoD Components".[85] It further stated that:

The Heads of the DoD Components shall: . . . ensure that the members of their Components comply with the law of war during all armed conflicts, however such conflicts are characterized, and with the principles and spirit of the law of war during all other operations.[86]

67. In 1991, the Federal Executive Council of the SFRY (FRY), in a "Statement regarding the need for respect of the norms of international humanitarian law in the armed conflict in Yugoslavia", called on all the participants in the armed conflicts on the territory of Yugoslavia:

to respect the fundamental rules and principles of international humanitarian law in conformity with the international conventions signed by Yugoslavia and which constitute a part of its legal system . . . The Federal Executive Council wishes once again to underline the importance of the observance of international humanitarian law for all the participants in the armed conflicts.[87]

68. In the Legality of Use of Force cases in 1999, the FRY initiated proceedings before the ICJ against ten NATO member States (Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, UK and US) on the ground, inter alia, that:

- by taking part in attacks on civilian targets, [the respective States had] acted against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in breach of [their] obligation to spare the civilian population, civilians and civilian objects;
- by taking part in destroying or damaging monasteries, monuments of culture, [the respective States had] acted against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in breach of [their] obligation not to commit any act of hostility directed against historical monuments, works of art or places of worship which constitute cultural or spiritual heritage of people;
- by taking part in the use of cluster bombs, [the respective States had] acted against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in breach of [their] obligation not to use prohibited weapons, i.e. weapons calculated to cause unnecessary suffering;
- by taking part in the bombing of oil refineries and chemical plants, [the respective States had] acted against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in breach of [their] obligation not to cause considerable environmental damage;
- by taking part in the use of weapons containing depleted uranium, [the respective States had] acted against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia in breach of [85] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Sections 1(1) and 4(1).

[86] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(3)(1).
[87] SFRY (FRY), Federal Executive Council, Statement regarding the need for the respect of the norms of international humanitarian law in the armed conflicts in Yugoslavia, Belgrade, 31 October 1991.

[their] obligation not to use prohibited weapons and not to cause far-reaching health and environmental damage.[88]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

69. In a resolution on Liberia adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council called upon "all parties to the conflict and all others concerned to respect strictly the provisions of international humanitarian law".[89]

70. In a resolution adopted in 1993 concerning the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "all parties are bound to comply with the principles and rules of international humanitarian law".[90]

71. In a resolution on Angola adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council reiterated "its appeal to both parties strictly to abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law".[91]

72. In a resolution adopted in 1993 "recalling the statement made by the President of the Security Council" regarding the conflict in Angola, the UN Security Council reiterated its appeal "to both parties to abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law".[92]

73. In a resolution adopted in 1993 concerning the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "all parties are bound to comply with the principles and rules of international humanitarian law".[93]

74. In a resolution adopted in 1993 concerning the conflict in Angola, the UN Security Council reiterated "its appeal to both parties [to the conflict] . . . strictly to abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law".[94]

75. In a resolution adopted in 1994 following the massacre of Palestinians in a mosque in Hebron, the UN Security Council called upon Israel "to continue to take and implement measures, including, inter alia, confiscation of arms, with the aim of preventing illegal acts of violence by Israeli settlers". The Security Council called "for measures to be taken to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians throughout the occupied territory".[95]

76. In two resolutions adopted in 1995 on the situation in Liberia, the UN Security Council demanded that "all factions in Liberia . . . strictly abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law".[96]

77. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "all violations of international humanitarian law

[88] FRY, Applications instituting proceedings submitted to the ICJ, Legality of Use of Force cases, 29 April 1999.
[89] UN Security Council, Res. 788, 19 November 1992, § 5.
[90] UN Security Council, Res. 822, 30 April 1993, § 3.
[91] UN Security Council, Res. 834, 1 June 1993, § 13.
[92] UN Security Council, Res. 851, 15 July 1993, § 19.
[93] UN Security Council, Res. 853, 29 July 1993, § 11.
[94] UN Security Council, Res. 864, 15 September 1993, § 15.
[95] UN Security Council, Res. 904, 18 March 1994, preamble and §§ 2 and 3.
[96] UN Security Council, Res. 985, 13 April 1995, § 6; Res. 1001, 30 June 1995, § 13.

and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia" and demanded that "all concerned comply fully with their obligations in this regard".[97]

78. In a resolution on UNOMIL adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council demanded that all factions in Liberia "strictly abide by the relevant rules of international humanitarian law".[98] This demand was reiterated in another resolution adopted the same year.[99]

79. In a resolution on Liberia adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council demanded that "the factions and their leaders . . . strictly abide by the relevant principles and rules of international humanitarian law".[100]

80. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation in Liberia, the UN Security Council demanded that the factions in the conflict in Liberia "strictly abide by the principles and rules of international humanitarian law".[101]

81. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law and in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949".[102]

82. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Security Council called on the government of Angola and in particular UNITA "to respect international humanitarian, refugee and human rights law".[103]

83. In 1993, in a statement by its President following the death of persons detained by Bosnian Serb forces when the vehicle transporting them for work at the front was ambushed, the UN Security Council stated that "the ICRC had already repeatedly called on all parties to the conflict in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina strictly to observe the provisions of international humanitarian law".[104]

84. In 1993, in a statement by its President regarding Angola, the UN Security Council strongly condemned an attack by UNITA on a train carrying civilians and urged "UNITA leaders to make sure that its forces abide by the rules of international humanitarian law".[105]

85. In 1993, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council requested that the UN Secretary-General investigate the massacre of displaced civilians in Liberia and demanded that "the leaders of any faction responsible for such acts effectively control their forces and take decisive steps to ensure that such deplorable tragedies do not happen again".[106]

86. In 1993, in a statement by its President with respect to the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reiterated that "all the

[97] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, § 1.
[98] UN Security Council, Res. 1041, 29 January 1996, § 6.
[99] UN Security Council, Res. 1059, 31 May 1996, § 7.
[100] UN Security Council, Res. 1071, 30 August 1996, § 10.
[101] UN Security Council, Res. 1083, 27 November 1996, § 8.
[102] UN Security Council, Res. 1193, 28 August 1998, § 12.
[103] UN Security Council, Res. 1213, 3 December 1998, § 7.
[104] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25557, 8 April 1993.
[105] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25899, 8 June 1993.
[106] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25918, 9 June 1993.

parties in the former Yugoslavia comply with their obligations under international humanitarian law".[107]

87. In November 1993, in a statement by its President on Angola, the UN Security Council called upon all the parties "strictly to abide by applicable rules of international humanitarian law".[108]

88. In 1997, in a statement by its President with respect to the situation in the Great Lakes region, the UN Security Council underlined "the obligation of all concerned to respect the relevant provisions of international humanitarian law".[109]

89. In 1998, in a statement by its President on the situation in the DRC, the UN Security Council urged all parties to "respect humanitarian law, in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols of 1977, as applicable to them".[110]

90. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly considered that "the principles of the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949 should be strictly observed by all States and that States violating these international instruments should be condemned and held responsible to the world community".[111]

91. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties to any armed conflict "to observe the rules laid down in the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and other humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts".[112]

92. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon "all parties to any armed conflict to observe the rules laid down in the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and other humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts". It also called upon "all States ... to take all the necessary measures to ensure full compliance by their armed forces of humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts".[113]

93. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly reiterated its call upon all parties to any armed conflict "to observe the rules laid down in the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and other humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts".[114]

[107] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/26661, 28 October 1993.
[108] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/26677, 1 November 1993.
[109] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/5, 7 February 1997, p. 1.
[110] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/26, 31 August 1998, p. 1.
[111] UN General Assembly, Res. 2674 (XXV), 9 December 1970, § 3.
[112] UN General Assembly, Res. 2677 (XXV), 9 December 1970, § 1.
[113] UN General Assembly, Res. 2852 (XXVI), 20 December 1971, §§ 1 and 6.
[114] UN General Assembly, Res. 2853 (XXVI), 20 December 1971, § 1.

94. In a resolution adopted in 1972 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties to armed conflicts "to observe the international humanitarian rules which are applicable, in particular, the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949".[115]

95. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties to armed conflicts:

to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under the humanitarian instruments and to observe the international humanitarian rules which are applicable, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949.[116]

96. In a resolution adopted in 1974 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties to armed conflicts:

to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under the humanitarian instruments and to observe the international humanitarian rules which are applicable, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949.[117]

97. In a resolution adopted in 1975 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon:

all parties to armed conflicts to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under the humanitarian instruments and to observe the international humanitarian rules which are applicable, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949.[118]

98. In a resolution adopted in 1977 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties to armed conflicts:

to acknowledge and to comply with their obligations under the existing instruments of international humanitarian law and to observe the international humanitarian rules which are applicable, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949.[119]

99. In a resolution adopted in 1985 on the situation in Afghanistan, the UN General Assembly called upon the parties to the conflict "to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law".[120]

[115] UN General Assembly, Res. 3032 (XXVII), 18 December 1972, § 2.
[116] UN General Assembly, Res. 3102 (XXVIII), 12 December 1973, § 4.
[117] UN General Assembly, Res. 3319 (XXIX), 14 December 1974, § 3.
[118] UN General Assembly, Res. 3500 (XXX), 15 December 1975, § 1; see also Res. 31/19, 24 November 1976, § 1.
[119] UN General Assembly, Res. 32/44, 8 December 1977, § 6.
[120] UN General Assembly, Res. 40/137, 13 December 1985, § 8.

100. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN General Assembly urged "States to take all measures to ensure compliance with the existing international law applicable to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict".[121]
101. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the United Nations Decade of International Law, the UN General Assembly reminded "all States of their responsibility to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law in order to protect the victims of war".[122]
102. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed "the obligation of all to respect international humanitarian law".[123]
103. In a resolution adopted in 1991 on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the parties to the conflict:

> to guarantee respect for the humanitarian rules applicable to non-international armed conflicts such as that in El Salvador, particularly with regard to the evacuation of the war wounded and maimed ... and the non-use of explosive devices affecting the civilian population.[124]

104. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights invited the government of Myanmar "to fully respect its obligations under the [1949] Geneva Conventions ... in particular their common article 3".[125]
105. In resolutions adopted in 1995 and 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights invited the government of Myanmar "to respect fully its obligations under the [1949] Geneva Conventions".[126]
106. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all the parties to the conflict in Afghanistan "to respect fully international humanitarian law".[127]
107. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights expressed:

> its deep concern at the continuing increase in the number of human rights violations being committed in El Salvador and at the persistent failure to observe the fundamental norms of humanitarian law proclaimed in the Geneva Conventions and in the Additional Protocols thereto.[128]

[121] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/37, 25 November 1992, § 1.
[122] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/30, 9 December 1993, § 4.
[123] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, preamble.
[124] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1991/75, 6 March 1991, § 9.
[125] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/85, 9 March 1994, § 17.
[126] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/72, 8 March 1995, § 20; Res. 1996/80, 23 April 1996, § 18.
[127] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, § 5(c); see also Res. 1990/53, 6 March 1990, § 5, Res. 1992/68, 4 March 1992, § 6, Res. 1995/74, 8 March 1995, § 6, Res. 1996/75, 23 April 1996, § 4 and Res. 1997/65, 16 April 1997, § 13.
[128] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/9, 31 August 1989, § 1.

The Sub-Commission also strongly urged the government of El Salvador "to take all necessary measures to ensure . . . that human rights are respected by all military, paramilitary and police forces".[129]

108. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the role of universal or extraterritorial competence in preventive action against impunity, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recalled "the obligation of States parties to respect and to ensure respect for humanitarian law under the Geneva Conventions . . . an obligation explicitly provided for in common article 1 thereof".[130]

109. In 1998, in a report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, the UN Secretary-General stated that "adherence to international humanitarian and human rights norms by all parties to a conflict must be insisted upon, and I intend to make this a priority in the work of the United Nations".[131]

110. In 1997, in his second report on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

> It would . . . be unfair to put the rebel groups, no matter what their role in the violence and massacres has been, on the same footing as a State which has ratified the major international instruments on human rights and international humanitarian law and is therefore bound by strict obligations. While these obligations are not, technically speaking, binding to the same extent for the rebels or armed gangs, these groups do, nevertheless, also have an obligation to respect certain humanitarian principles that are part of international customary law and are recognized by all civilized nations.[132]

Other International Organisations

111. In a resolution adopted in 1987, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited "all sides in the conflict [in Sri Lanka] to respect the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the international humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts".[133]

112. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the crisis in the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited "the governments of member states: . . . to launch an appeal to the conflicting parties to respect the four Geneva conventions of 1949 which provide protection to wounded military personnel, to prisoners of war and to civilian persons in time of war".[134]

113. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the massive and flagrant violations of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe launched "a solemn appeal to all parties

[129] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/9, 31 August 1989, § 5.
[130] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2000/24, 18 August 2000, preamble.
[131] UN Secretary-General, Report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, UN Doc. A/52/871-S/1998/318, 13 April 1998, § 50.
[132] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Burundi, Second report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/12, 10 February 1997, § 11.
[133] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 881, 1 July 1987, § 16.
[134] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 984, 30 June 1992, § 13(iii).

involved in the conflict in the territory of the former Yugoslavia to respect the Geneva conventions on humanitarian law".[135]

114. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited governments to "ensure that the Geneva Conventions of 1949, their 1977 protocols and other provisions of international humanitarian law are respected strictly and in all circumstances".[136]

115. In 2000, the Rapporteur of the Council of Europe on the human rights situation in Chechnya called on the Chechen fighters to respect IHL.[137]

116. In a resolution on respect for IHL adopted in 1996, the OAS General Assembly urged all members to "observe and fully enforce . . . the customary principles and norms contained in the 1977 Additional Protocols".[138]

International Conferences

117. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution in which it recommended that "appropriate arrangements be made to ensure that armed forces placed at the disposal of the United Nations observe the provisions of the Geneva Conventions and be protected by them".[139]

118. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on the application of GC IV "to the occupied territories in the Middle East" in which it called upon "the occupying power to acknowledge and comply with its obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention, and to this effect cease forthwith all policies and practices in violation of any article of this Convention".[140]

119. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution in which it solemnly appealed that "the rules of international humanitarian law and the universally recognized humanitarian principles be safeguarded at all times and in all circumstances".[141]

120. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution in which it appealed to all parties involved in armed conflicts "to fully respect their obligations under international humanitarian law".[142]

121. In 1992, at the Helsinki Summit of the CSCE, the participating States declared that they would "in all circumstances respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law including the protection of the civilian population".[143]

[135] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 994, 3 February 1993, § 5(i).
[136] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1085, 24 April 1996, § 8(a).
[137] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Opinion on Russia's request for membership in the light of the situation in Chechnya, Doc. 7231, 2 February 1995, § 75.
[138] OAS, General Assembly, Res. 1408 (XXVI-O/96), 7 June 1996, § 4.
[139] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXV, § 1.
[140] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. III, § 4.
[141] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. VI.
[142] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. I, § 2.
[143] CSCE, Helsinki Summit of Heads of State or Government, 9–10 July 1992, Helsinki Document 1992: The Challenges of Change, Decisions, Chapter VI: The Human Dimension, § 48.

122. In the Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants declared that:

> We undertake to act in cooperation with the UN and in conformity with the UN Charter to ensure full compliance with international humanitarian law in the event of genocide and other serious violations of this law . . .
>
> We affirm our responsibility, in accordance with Article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions, to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law in order to protect the victims of war.[144]

123. In 1994, at the Budapest Summit of the CSCE, the participating States reaffirmed "their commitment to respect and ensure respect for general international humanitarian law and in particular for their obligations under the relevant international instruments, including the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their additional protocols, to which they are a party".[145]

124. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on challenges posed by calamities arising from armed conflict, the 93rd Inter-Parliamentary Conference stressed States' "obligation to respect and enforce international humanitarian law, in particular by strengthening mechanisms for its implementation".[146]

125. In the Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, the African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers in 1999 called upon African States "to respect fully the provisions of international human rights and humanitarian law, in particular in the case of captured child soldiers".[147]

126. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the contribution of parliaments to ensuring respect for and promoting IHL, the 102nd Inter-Parliamentary Conference urged the States concerned "to comply strictly and ensure compliance with their obligations under international humanitarian law".[148]

127. In 2001, the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention adopted a declaration stating that:

> 4 The participating High Contracting Parties call upon all parties, directly involved in the conflict [between Israel and Palestinians] or not, to respect and to ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions in all circumstances . . .

[144] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, §§ I(6) and II.

[145] CSCE, Budapest Summit of Heads of State or Government, 5–6 December 1994, Budapest Document 1994: Towards a Genuine Partnership in a New Area, Decisions, Chapter VIII: The Human Dimension, § 33.

[146] 93rd Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Madrid, 27 March–1 April 1999, Resolution on the International Community in the Face of the Challenges posed by Calamities Arising from Armed Conflicts and by Natural or Man-made Disasters: The Need for a Coherent and Effective Response through Political and Humanitarian Assistance Means and Mechanisms Adapted to the Situation, § 13.

[147] African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers, Maputo, 19–22 April 1999, Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, § 5.

[148] 102nd Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Berlin, 10–15 October 1999, Resolution on the contribution of parliaments to ensuring respect for and promoting international humanitarian law on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the Geneva Conventions, § 2.

5 The participating High Contracting Parties stress that the Fourth Geneva Convention, which takes fully into account imperative military necessity, has to be respected in all circumstances.
...
12 The participating High Contracting Parties call upon the Occupying Power to fully and effectively respect the Fourth Geneva Convention in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem, and to refrain from perpetrating any violation of the Convention.
...
17 The participating High Contracting Parties welcome and encourage the initiatives by States Parties, both individually and collectively, according to art. 1 of the Convention and aimed at ensuring the respect of the Convention, and they underline the need for the Parties, to follow up on the implementation of the present Declaration.[149]

128. In the Final Declaration adopted in 2002 by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, the participants stated that:

1. We pledge our commitment to further uphold humanitarian principles and to the respect for international humanitarian law.
2. To this end, we resolve to ensure that our parliaments fully play their role in the process of acceding to the instruments of International Humanitarian Law and adjust national legislation in order to ensure the effective application thereof.
3. We undertake also, as men and women elected by the people, to contribute to promote awareness of the relevant humanitarian values, norms and rules.
4. We reaffirm our determination to see to it that our States and all parties to an armed conflict honor their obligations under International Humanitarian Law, International Human Rights Law and International Refugee Law and respect, under all circumstances, the rights of the victims of armed conflict as well as the dignity of the human person.[150]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

129. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ stated with respect to common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions:

The Court considers that there is an obligation on the United States Government, in the terms of Article 1 of the Geneva Conventions, to "respect" the Conventions and even "to ensure respect" for them "in all circumstances", since such an obligation does not derive only from the Conventions themselves, but from the general principles of humanitarian law to which the Conventions merely give specific expression. The United States is thus under an obligation not to encourage persons or groups engaged in the conflict in Nicaragua to act in violation of the provisions of Article 3 common to the four 1949 Geneva Conventions.[151]

[149] Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, Declaration, §§ 4–5, 12 and 17.
[150] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, §§ 1–4.
[151] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 220.

130. In its order in the Application of the Genocide Convention case (Provisional Measures) in 1993 concerning a case brought by Bosnia and Herzegovina against the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the ICJ stated that:

> The Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) should in particular ensure that any military, paramilitary or irregular armed units which may be directed or supported by it, as well as any organizations and persons which may be subject to its control, direction or influence, do not commit any acts of genocide, of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, or in complicity in genocide, whether directed against the Muslim population of Bosnia and Herzegovina or against any other national, ethnical, racial or religious group.[152]

131. In its order in the Armed Activities on the Territory of the DRC case (Provisional Measures) in 2000, the ICJ unanimously stated that "both Parties must, forthwith, take all measures necessary to ensure full respect within the zone of conflict for . . . the applicable provisions of humanitarian law".[153]

132. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the ACiHPR invited "all African States Parties to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights to adopt appropriate measures at the national level to ensure the promotion of the provisions of international humanitarian law".[154]

133. In Loizidou v. Turkey in 1995, the ECtHR addressed the issue of whether a State party to the 1950 ECHR was obliged to ensure respect for the Convention even in territories that it was occupying. The Court held that:

> Bearing in mind the object and purpose of the Convention, the responsibility of a Contracting Party may also arise when as a consequence of military action – whether lawful or unlawful – it exercises effective control over an area outside its national territory. The obligation to secure, in such an area, the rights and freedoms set out in the Convention, derives from the fact of such control whether it be exercised directly, through its armed forces, or through subordinate local administration.[155]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

134. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the States and belligerent Parties undertake to respect the law of war and to ensure respect for it in all circumstances. The law of war must be respected by governments, by military and civilian authorities as well as by military and civilian persons."[156] Delegates

[152] ICJ, Application of the Genocide Convention case (Provisional Measures), Order, 8 April 1993, § 52(A)(2).
[153] ICJ, Armed Activities on the Territory of the DRC case (Provisional Measures), Order, 1 July 2000, § 47(3).
[154] ACiHPR, Addis Ababa, 1–10 December 1993, Res. 2 (XIV), § 1.
[155] ECtHR, Loizidou v. Turkey, Preliminary Objections, Judgement, 23 March 1995, § 62, see also IACiHR, Case 11.589 (Cuba), 29 September 1999, §§ 24–25.
[156] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 25–26.

also teach that "as with order and discipline, the law of war must be respected and enforced in all circumstances".[157]

135. In an appeal issued in 1991 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the ICRC urged "the military and civilian authorities of the parties involved to take all necessary steps to ensure compliance with the obligations contained in the provisions of international humanitarian law".[158]

136. In a joint statement issued in 1991, the Yugoslav Red Cross and the Hungarian Red Cross expressed their deep concern about "the protracting internal conflict in Yugoslavia" and stated that they "consider it of utmost importance that the parties to the conflict respect the provisions of humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, especially in non-international armed conflicts".[159]

137. In a press release issued in 1992 with respect to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC appealed "to the parties involved to take all necessary steps to ensure compliance with the basic rules of international humanitarian law".[160]

138. In a press release issued in 1992 with respect to the conflict in Afghanistan, the ICRC appealed "to all the parties to respect international humanitarian law and to ensure respect for its rules by everyone involved in the fighting".[161] This appeal was repeated later the same year.[162]

139. In a communication to the press issued in 1993 with respect to the conflict in Somalia, the ICRC appealed "to all forces involved to respect international humanitarian law and to ensure respect for its rules by all of their members".[163]

140. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in which it welcomed "the reaffirmation by States of their responsibility under Article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law".[164]

141. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "the parties to the conflict must take all necessary steps to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law".[165]

[157] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 269.
[158] ICRC, Appeal in behalf of civilians in Yugoslavia, Geneva, 4 October 1991.
[159] Yugoslav Red Cross and Hungarian Red Cross, Joint Statement, Subotica, 25 October 1991.
[160] ICRC, Press Release No. 1705, Bosnia-Herzegovina: ICRC calls for protection of civilians, 10 April 1992.
[161] ICRC, Press Release No. 1712, Afghanistan: ICRC appeals for compliance with humanitarian rules, 5 May 1992.
[162] ICRC, Press Release No. 1726, Afghanistan: New ICRC appeal for compliance with humanitarian rules, 14 August 1992.
[163] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.
[164] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham Session, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 2, preamble.
[165] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, preamble, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 502.

142. In a press release issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC appealed to all parties involved in hostilities in and around Bihać "to respect international humanitarian law and to ensure that it is respected in all circumstances".[166]

143. In a press release in 1995, the ICRC appealed to all the parties involved in Turkey's military operations in northern Iraq "to respect international humanitarian law" and stated that it had sent the Turkish government a note "reminding it of its obligation to comply with international humanitarian law".[167]

144. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC appealed "to all those involved in the violence or in a position to influence the situation to respect and to ensure respect for international humanitarian law and its underlying principles in all circumstances".[168]

145. In a communication to the press issued in 2001 in the context of the conflict in Afghanistan, the ICRC stated that:

> In view of the situation in and around the besieged town of Kunduz and in other parts of the country where fighting continues, the ICRC feels it necessary to impress upon all parties concerned that the rules governing armed conflict must be respected at all times and in all circumstances.[169]

VI. Other Practice

146. In 1979, an armed opposition group wrote to the ICRC to confirm its commitment to IHL in a letter entitled "Engagement . . . to comply with international humanitarian laws in times of armed conflict". It also asked the ICRC "to call upon the [enemy] and his allies . . . to respect the Geneva Conventions and international law applicable in case of armed conflicts".[170]

147. In a resolution adopted at its Berlin Session in 1999, the Institute of International Law stated that:

> All parties to armed conflicts in which non-State entities are parties, irrespective of their legal status, as well as the United Nations, and competent regional and other international organizations have the obligation to respect international humanitarian law as well as fundamental human rights. The application of such principles rules and does not affect the legal status of the parties to the conflict and is not dependent on their recognition as belligerents or insurgents.[171]

[166] ICRC, Press Release No. 1792, Bihać: Urgent ICRC Appeal, 26 November 1994.
[167] ICRC, Press Release No. 1797, ICRC calls for compliance with international law in Turkey and northern Iraq, 22 March 1995.
[168] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.
[169] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 01/58, Afghanistan: ICRC calls on all parties to comply with international humanitarian law, 23 November 2001.
[170] ICRC archive document.
[171] Institute of International Law, Berlin Session, Resolution on the Application of International Humanitarian Law and Fundamental Human Rights in Armed Conflicts in which Non-State Entities are Parties, 25 August 1999, § II.

Orders and instructions to ensure respect for international humanitarian law

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

148. Article 1 of the 1899 Hague Convention (II) provides that "the High Contracting Parties shall issue instructions to their armed land forces, which shall be in conformity with the 'Regulations respecting the laws and customs of war on land' annexed to the present Convention".

149. Article 1 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) provides that "the Contracting Powers shall issue instructions to their armed land forces which shall be in conformity with the Regulations respecting the laws and customs of war on land, annexed to the present Convention".

150. Article II(17) of the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement provides that:

> Responsibility for compliance with and enforcement of the terms and provisions of this Armistice Agreement is that of signatories hereto and their successors in command. The Commanders of the opposing sides shall establish within their respective commands all measures and procedures necessary to insure complete compliance with all the provisions hereof by all elements of their commands.

151. Article 7(1) of the 1954 Hague Convention provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake to introduce in time of peace into their military regulations or instructions such provisions as may ensure observance of the present Convention, and to foster in the members of their armed forces a spirit of respect for the culture and cultural property of all peoples.

152. Article 80(2) AP I provides that "the High Contracting Parties and the Parties to the conflict shall give orders and instructions to ensure observance of the Conventions and this Protocol, and shall supervise their execution". Article 80 AP I was adopted by consensus.[172]

153. Article 14(3) of the 1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW provides that "each High Contracting Party shall . . . require that its armed forces issue relevant military instructions and operating procedures . . . to comply with the provisions of this Protocol".

Other Instruments

154. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

155. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and Protocol I expressly oblige States not only to respect [those agreements], but also to ensure respect by issuing orders and instructions for that purpose".[173]

[172] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 256.
[173] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.01.

156. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "Rules of Engagement (ROE) provide authoritative guidance on the use of military force by the ADF . . . ROE will include legal considerations and so will comply with the law of armed conflict."[174]

157. Belgium's LOAC Teaching Directive provides that the General Staff of the Forces and the Medical Service "shall give the necessary instructions [to ensure in all circumstances full respect for the law of armed conflicts and the rules of engagement by all members of the Armed Forces]".[175]

158. Benin's Military Manual states that missions assigned to subordinates "shall contain the details necessary to ensure respect for the law of war".[176]

159. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that "the main responsibility of members of the 'Etats-Majors' consists of verifying that their contribution to orders and instructions are in conformity with the Law of War".[177]

160. Canada's LOAC Manual defines the rules of engagement as "orders issued by competent military authority which delineate the circumstances and limitations within which force may be applied by the CF to achieve military objectives in furtherance of national policy".[178]

161. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "the purpose of the Code . . . is to provide simple and understandable instructions to ensure that CF members apply as a minimum, the spirit and principles of the Law of Armed Conflict in all CF operations other than Canadian domestic operations".[179]

162. Colombia's Directive on IHL defines its own aim as "defining general principles and giving instructions towards the strict respect of the rules of International Humanitarian Law".[180] It also states that:

> The Ministry of National Defence gives instructions aimed at intensifying the development of capacity-building programmes of the members of the public force, on themes referring to the respect for Human Rights and the application of the rules of International Humanitarian Law, with a view to prevent and correct conduct which violates those rules . . .
>
> The General Command of the Military Forces and the Direction of the National Police [g]ive the Commanders of the public force the necessary instructions for each Force to intensify, develop and complete, in the corresponding formation and capacity-building courses of their personnel, the relevant studies on the respect for Human Rights and ensure the obligatory application of International Humanitarian Law.[181]

163. France's LOAC Manual defines rules of engagement as "instructions established by the competent political or military authority to determine the circumstances of and the limitations to the use of force by the armed

[174] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 211.
[175] Belgium, LOAC Teaching Directive (1996), Section 1.
[176] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 10.
[177] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 133, § 461.1.
[178] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), Glossary, p. GL-17.
[179] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Introduction, § 5.
[180] Colombia, Directive on IHL (1993), Section I.(A).
[181] Colombia, Directive on IHL (1993), Sections IV.(A) and IV.(B)(1).

forces when, confronted with other forces, they undertake or continue armed engagement".[182]

164. Germany's Military Manual states that "superiors shall only issue orders which are in conformity with international law".[183]

165. Germany's IHL Manual, referring to common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 1(1) AP I, states that "it necessarily follows that each soldier of the [German Armed Forces] must know the rules of international humanitarian law in armed conflicts. This is relevant especially for superiors who may give orders only by respecting the rules of public international law."[184]

166. Hungary's Military Manual emphasises that the commander of the forces engaged must provide "guidance to subordinates".[185] It also states that each mission "has to be consistent with the L.O.W. [law of war]".[186]

167. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "States parties to law of war treaties must take all necessary measures to ensure respect for their obligations under these treaties. They must give orders and instructions which ensure their respect and must supervise their execution."[187]

168. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct directs "all officers and men to observe strictly the following rules during operations. (These instructions must be read in conjunction with the Geneva Convention)".[188] It also states that "to be successful in our tasks as soldiers these rules must be carefully observed. I will not be proud of any member of the Armed Forces under my command who fails to observe them."[189]

169. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines was issued "to effectively pursue the intents and purposes of Presidential Memorandum Order No. 393 dated September 9, 1991, directing the Armed Forces and National Police to reaffirm their adherence to the Principles of Humanitarian Law and Human Rights in the conduct of security/police operations" and "for strict compliance of every member of the AFP and PNP in all levels of command/office".[190]

170. Spain's LOAC Manual states that:

> The 1907 Hague Convention IV already provided that "the high contracting parties shall issue instructions to their Armed Forces which shall be in conformity with the rules that have been adopted", rules that were contained in the [Hague] Conventions of 1899 and 1907. This obligation takes shape in the existence of military manuals which include the norms applicable to armed conflicts.[191]

[182] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 107.
[183] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 141.
[184] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), §§ 107 and 108.
[185] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 39.
[186] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 49.
[187] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-1.
[188] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4.
[189] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 5.
[190] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2.
[191] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, Annex A.

171. Sweden's IHL Manual notes that "the [1907] IV Hague Convention ... provides that contracting powers shall give their land forces instructions that comply with the Convention".[192] It adds that "for the Swedish defence forces, the commander-in-chief has laid down eight servicemen's rules pointing out what every combatant must bear in mind in combat situations".[193]
172. Togo's Military Manual states that missions assigned to subordinates "shall contain the details necessary to ensure respect for the law of war".[194]
173. The US Air Force Pamphlet emphasises that "the US ... ensures observance and enforcement through a variety of national means including ... military regulations [and] rules of engagement".[195]

National Legislation
174. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "if [the] Azerbaijan Republic is one of the parties to the conflict, then necessary instruction is given to [the] civilian population in such a conflict area and to the personnel staff of the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic involved in the solution of this conflict".[196]
175. In its Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols, the Russian Ministry of Defence required "the implementation of the instructions concerning the application of the rules of international humanitarian law by the armed forces of the USSR" annexed to the said order, i.e. Russia's Military Manual.[197]

National Case-law
176. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
177. During the Algerian war of independence, the leaders of the ALN emphasised that:

> The laws of war have always been respected by our side. Formal instructions have been given to the combatants during their political education already at the beginning of the Algerian Revolution and have been made the object of directives ... These directives have been repeated, clarified and codified since the Congress of 20 August 1956.[198]

178. The instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of

[192] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.1, p. 91.
[193] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 95.
[194] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 10.
[195] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(e).
[196] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 1 and 30.
[197] Russia, Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols (1990), § 1.
[198] El Moudjahid, Vol. 1, p. 440.

self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, in a part dealing with the "eight fundamental rules of international humanitarian law", state that "the parties to the conflict shall give the necessary orders and instructions in order to insure the respect of these rules and will supervise the execution thereof".[199]

179. An Israeli Chief of Staff Order of 1982 refers to the Geneva Conventions and states that "IDF soldiers are obliged to conduct themselves in accordance with the directives contained in the above[-mentioned Geneva] Conventions".[200] The Order also refers to the 1954 Hague Convention and provides that "IDF soldiers are obliged to observe the directives of the said [1954 Hague] Convention, as well as the Regulations and attendant Protocols".[201]

180. In 1972, the General Counsel of the US Department of Defense considered that:

> Rules of engagement are directives issued by competent military authority which delineate the circumstances and limitations under which United States Forces will initiate and/or continue combat engagement with the enemy.
>
> These rules are the subject of constant review and command emphasis. They are changed from time to time to conform to changing situations and the demands of military necessity. One critical and unchanging factor is their conformity to existing international law as reflected in the Hague Conventions of 1907 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949, as well as with the principles of customary international law of which UNGA Resolution 2444 (XXIII) is deemed to be a correct restatement.[202]

181. In Order No. 985-1/91 issued in 1991, the YPA Chief of General Staff stated that "YPA units have the duty to secure in the area of their operations full and unconditional implementation of rules of international law of armed conflicts and suppress violations of those rules".[203]

182. In 1991, the YPA Chief of General Staff issued Order No. 579 aiming "to completely eliminate violations of international humanitarian law in armed conflicts in Croatia" according to which "YPA units shall ensure full and consistent respect of norms of international humanitarian law in all areas under its jurisdiction".[204]

[199] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1 June 1995, Section 6, § 67.

[200] Israel, IDF Order of the Chief of Staff No. 33.0133, Discipline – Conduct in accordance with the international conventions to which the State of Israel is a party, 20 July 1982, § 3.

[201] Israel, IDF Order of the Chief of Staff No. 33.0133, Discipline – Conduct in accordance with the international conventions to which the State of Israel is a party, 20 July 1982, § 8.

[202] US, Letter from J. Fred Buzhardt, General Counsel of the Department of Defense, to Senator Edward Kennedy, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Refugees of the Committee on the Judiciary, 22 September 1972, AJIL, Vol. 67, 1973, p. 124.

[203] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Legal Department, Order No. 985-1/91, 3 October 1991, § 1.

[204] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Political Department, Order No. 579, 14 October 1991, preamble and § 1.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

183. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights called upon States "to make possible respect for their obligations in situations of conflict by, inter alia: . . . adopting suitable instructions for and training of their armed forces so that they know that all forms of sexual violence and sexual slavery are criminal and will be prosecuted".[205]

184. In 1995, in his first report concerning the conflict in Guatemala, the Director of MINUGUA stated that:

> The Mission recommends to URNG that it should issue precise instructions to its combatants to refrain from placing at risk persons wounded in the armed conflict and from endangering ambulances and duly identified health workers who assist such wounded persons.[206]

185. In 1995, in his second report concerning the conflict in Guatemala, the Director of MINUGUA observed that:

> Verification has uncovered cases in which the Government failed to guarantee the right to integrity and security of person in terms of freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, or the threat of such treatment . . . The Mission reiterates its recommendation that the Government transmit specific instructions to military and police officers in order to prevent these acts, warning them that such acts are crimes subject to disciplinary, administrative and criminal penalties.[207]

He further stated that:

> The Mission recommends that URNG issue precise instructions to its combatants to refrain from causing unnecessary harm to individuals and property, to take due care not to create additional risks to life in attacking military targets and, in particular, to end the practice of laying mines or explosives in areas where civilians work, live or circulate.[208]

Other International Organisations

186. No practice was found.

International Conferences

187. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on application of the Geneva Conventions by the United Nations

[205] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/16, 26 August 1999, § 11(a).
[206] MINUGUA, Director, First report, UN Doc. A/49/856, 1 March 1995, § 194.
[207] MINUGUA, Director, Second report, UN Doc. A/49/929, 29 June 1995, § 179.
[208] MINUGUA, Director, Second report, UN Doc. A/49/929, 29 June 1995, § 197.

Emergency Forces in which it recommended that "the Governments of countries making contingents available to the United Nations give their troops – in view of the paramount importance of the question – . . . orders to comply with [the 1949 Geneva Conventions]".[209]

188. In the Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants urged all States to make every effort to "adopt and implement, at the national level, all appropriate regulations, laws and measures to ensure respect for international humanitarian law applicable in the event of armed conflict and to punish violations thereof".[210]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

189. In 1980, in a report on the situation of human rights in Argentina, the IACiHR recommended that the Argentine government:

> instruct all the officials and agents responsible for the maintenance of public order, the security of the state, and the custody of detainees, with respect to the rights of detainees, particularly as regards the prohibition of all cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, and . . . inform them of the sanctions to which they become liable in the event that they violate these rights.[211]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

190. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that instructions and orders shall be given to ensure respect for the law of war including those for the supervision of its execution.[212]

191. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "it is extremely important for the members of the armed forces stationed in the Gulf to be aware of their obligations under international humanitarian law. Proper instructions must be issued to this effect."[213]

192. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that:

[209] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXV, § 2.
[210] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § II(5).
[211] IACiHR, Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Argentina, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.49 Doc. 19 corr.1, 11 April 1980, p. 265.
[212] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 154.
[213] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, Geneva, 14 December 1990, § IV, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 25

The parties to the conflict must ensure that the members of their armed forces as well as all military and paramilitary forces acting under their responsibility are aware of their obligations under international humanitarian law. To that effect, it is essential that specific instructions to ensure respect for such obligations be issued.[214]

193. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that:

The parties concerned must ensure that all the military and paramilitary forces and other militias for whose actions they are responsible are aware of their obligations under international humanitarian law. It is essential that instructions calculated to safeguard respect for those obligations are reiterated.[215]

VI. Other Practice

194. In 1989, in the context of the conflict in El Salvador, following a period of resurgence of violence marked by bomb explosions in a central market and attacks on political figures, military officers and municipal employees, the Chief of Staff of the FMLN publicly recognised that "numerous civilians had fallen victim to its actions and accordingly recommended to its officers and combatants measures to avoid these occurrences in the future".[216]

B. Principle of Reciprocity

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

195. Common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions requires parties to respect the provisions of the Geneva Conventions "in all circumstances".

196. Common Article 2(3) of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that:

Although one of the Powers in conflict may not be a party to the present Convention, the Powers who are parties thereto shall remain bound by it in their mutual relations. They shall furthermore be bound by the Convention in relation to the said Power, if the latter accepts and applies the provisions thereof.

197. Article 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties states that:

[214] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § V, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 505.

[215] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, Geneva, 23 June 1994, § V, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1309.

[216] IACiHR, Annual Report 1988–1989, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.76 Doc. 10, 18 September 1989, Chapter IV (El Salvador), p. 166.

Paragraphs 1 to 3 [laying down the principle of reciprocity] do not apply to provisions relating to the protection of the human person contained in treaties of a humanitarian character, in particular to provisions prohibiting any form of reprisals against persons protected by such treaties.

198. Article 1(1) AP I requires parties to respect the provisions of AP I "in all circumstances". Article 1 AP I was adopted by 87 votes in favour, one against and 11 abstentions.[217]

Other Instruments

199. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

200. Australia's Commanders' Guide and Defence Force Manual note that "the ADF obligation to comply with LOAC is not conditional upon an enemy's compliance; unilateral compliance by the ADF is required".[218]

201. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "the conventional law of war remains, in principle, obligatory between signatory parties, even if one of them violates it".[219]

202. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the principle of reciprocity refers to the premise that all should be treated as you would like to be treated. Compliance with the LOAC is not only required by law, it is also to our operational advantage."[220] It further states that "a party to an international armed conflict is bound to comply with the LOAC even if an adverse party breaches the law. Compliance with the law by one party is a strong inducement for the adverse party to comply with the law."[221]

203. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "CF personnel will treat detained persons properly regardless of how CF personnel may have been treated while in the hands of opposing forces".[222] It further stresses that "there is no exception to your obligation to follow Canadian law even when confronted with an opposing force which refuses to comply with the Law of Armed Conflict".[223]

204. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that "it is important to note that in IHL the principle of reciprocity does not exist, which means that none of the parties to the conflict can put forward the violations of the enemy as a reason to stop implementing humanitarian norms".[224]

[217] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.36, 23 May 1977, p. 41.
[218] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1209; Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1308.
[219] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 18.
[220] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 2-3, § 18, see also Glossary, p. GL-16.
[221] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-1, § 5.
[222] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 12.
[223] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 8.
[224] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 35.

205. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that:

Some obligations under the law of armed conflict are reciprocal in that they are binding on the parties only so long as both sides continue to comply with them. A major violation by one side will release the other side from all further duty to abide by that obligation. The concept of reciprocity is not applicable to the rules of humanitarian law that protect the victims of armed conflict, that is, those persons protected by the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[225]

206. Germany's Military Manual states that:

People complying with the provisions of international humanitarian law themselves can expect the adversary to observe the dictates of humanity in an armed conflict. No one shall be guided by the suspicion that soldiers of the other party to the conflict might not observe the rules. Soldiers must treat their opponents in the same manner as they themselves want to be treated.[226]

207. Germany's IHL Manual notes that "only those who respect themselves the regulations of international humanitarian law may expect that the adversary also respects them (so-called principle of reciprocity)".[227]

208. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that "combatants shall respect at any place and in all circumstances the rules of the law of armed conflict . . . They may in no case release themselves from those rules, regardless of the framework and the mandate of their mission, even if the enemy does not respect those rules."[228]

209. France's LOAC Manual provides that combatants must respect in all circumstances the rules of the law of armed conflict "even if the adversary does not respect these rules".[229]

210. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "mutuality is the cardinal basis for the existence of the laws of war. The breakdown of rules anywhere would lead to a deterioration in which each side would respond to the acts of the other."[230]

211. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "the rules of the law of war must be respected. They must be respected under all circumstances. This means that respect must not be made conditional on the behaviour of the adverse party. In other words: reciprocity may not be used as a measure for respect."[231]

212. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "generally speaking, a Party to an international armed conflict is bound to comply with the customary law of armed conflict and with its treaty obligations even if an adverse Party breaches the law".[232]

[225] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.4.
[226] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1204.
[227] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 109.
[228] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[229] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 14.
[230] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 4.
[231] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-1.
[232] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1601.3

213. Spain's LOAC Manual notes that "international treaties and agreements are made up of imperative norms of law . . . They do not lose their validity because one of the opposing parties does not respect them."[233]

214. The UK Military Manual provides that "a belligerent is not justified in declaring itself freed altogether from the obligation to observe the laws of war or any of them on account of their suspected or ascertained violation by his adversary".[234]

215. The US Air Force Pamphlet notes that:

> The most important relevant treaties, the 1949 Geneva Conventions for the Protection of War Victims, are not formally conditioned on reciprocity. Parties to each Convention "undertake to respect and ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances" under Article 1 common to the Conventions. The Vienna Convention On the Law of Treaties, Article 60(5), also recognizes that the general law on material breaches, as a basis for suspending the operation of treaties, does not apply to provisions protecting persons in treaties of a humanitarian character. Yet reciprocity is an implied condition in other rules and obligations including generally the law of armed conflict. It is moreover a critical factor in actual observance of the law of armed conflict. Reciprocity is also explicitly the basis for the doctrine of reprisals. Additionally, a few obligations, such as those contained in the 1925 Geneva Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous, or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, are even formally conditioned on reciprocal adherence.[235] [emphasis in original]

The Pamphlet further states that "the UN Resolutions and the Geneva Conventions set forth standards regardless of whether observance is reciprocated. Hence, reciprocity is neither a formal condition precedent qualifying the obligation to observe the Conventions, nor does lack of reciprocity excuse failures to comply."[236]

216. The US Naval Handbook states that:

> Some obligations under the law of armed conflict are reciprocal in that they are binding on the parties only so long as both sides continue to comply with them. A major violation by one side will release the other side from all further duty to abide by that obligation. The concept of reciprocity is not applicable to humanitarian rules of law that protect the victims of armed conflict, that is, those persons protected by the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The decision to consider the United States released from a particular obligation following a major violation by the enemy will be made by the [National Command Authorities].[237]

National Legislation

217. No practice was found.

[233] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.1.d.(2).
[234] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 121.
[235] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-1(b).
[236] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 11-5.
[237] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.4.

National Case-law

218. In the Rauter case in 1948, a Special Court in the Netherlands rejected the argument of the defence that the Dutch government in exile and the Dutch population had themselves, previously to the committing of the acts by the accused, violated the laws and customs of war and had thereby relieved the accused of the obligation to abide by such laws and rules.[238] On appeal by the accused, the Special Court of Cassation, in the relevant parts, confirmed the judgement of the trial of first instance and again rejected the defence, which had repeated its plea that the German Reich, and the accused as its executive organ, were relieved of the obligation of abiding by the laws and customs of war and were entitled to commit the acts because they were directed – as "reprisals" – against the Dutch civilian population by individuals of which, previously to the taking of the acts by the accused, violations of the laws of war would have been committed.[239]

219. In the Von Leeb (The High Command Trial) case in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that "under general principles of law, an accused does not exculpate himself from a crime by showing that another committed a similar crime, either before or after the alleged commission of the crime by the accused".[240]

Other National Practice

220. In a report on a symposium on IHL held in Belgium in 1974, a representative of the Belgian Ministry of Justice noted that:

> The notion of reciprocity, which has recently again been rejected by the Committee of Experts on Human Rights of the Council of Europe, has several times been mentioned, which appears to be somewhat shocking. In fact, it is difficult to imagine how one could justify "inhumane treatments" under the pretext that the adversary has recourse to them.[241]

221. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, India cited Fitzmaurice and stated that:

> Reprisals or retaliation under international law are also governed by certain specific principles . . . Reprisals could not involve acts which are malum in se such as certain violations of human rights, certain breaches of the laws of war and rules in the nature of ius cogens, that is to say obligations of an absolute character compliance with which is not dependent on corresponding compliance by others but is requisite in all circumstances unless under stress of literal vis major . . . In other words . . . even where a wrongful act involved the use of a nuclear weapon the reprisal

[238] Netherlands, Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague, Rauter case, Judgement, 4 May 1948.
[239] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Rauter case, Judgement, 12 January 1949.
[240] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb (The High Command Trial) case, Judgement, 30 December 1947–28 October 1948.
[241] Belgium, Ministry of Justice, Note for the Minister of Justice, 18 December 1974, Report on the Practice of Belgium, 1997, Chapter 5.7.

action cannot involve [the] use of a nuclear weapon without violating certain fundamental principles of humanitarian law. In this sense, prohibition of the use of a nuclear weapon in an armed conflict is an absolute one, compliance with which is not dependent on corresponding compliance by others but is a requisite in all circumstances.[242]

222. The Report on the Practice of Iraq states that "for the activities which constitute a violation of human rights or the humanitarian law, this can never be reciprocated". The report cites a speech by the Iraqi President during the Iran–Iraq War, in which he declared that "we do not react in the same way despite the bitterness of their behaviour. We stick to our values and let them stick to their methods, and as a result, history will record our special known values and record their heinous methods."[243]

223. At the CDDH, Mexico stated that "the mandatory nature of humanitarian law does not depend on the observance of its rules by the adverse Party, but stems from the inherently wrongful nature of the act prohibited by international humanitarian law".[244]

224. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case in 1994, the Solomon Islands stated that:

> The rule elaborated in Art. 1 [common to the 1949 Geneva Conventions] also indicates that reciprocity has no place in the law of armed conflicts . . . The principle of non-reciprocity excludes a fortiori recourse to reprisals in relation to the use of nuclear weapons, even against combatants.[245]

225. On 21 January 1991, in the context of the Gulf War, the UK Minister of Foreign Affairs summoned the Iraqi Ambassador to discuss Iraq's obligations under international law. According to a statement by an FCO spokesperson following the meeting, "the Ambassador said that Iraq would abide by the Convention and treat POWs well if the Allies avoided civilian targets. Mr Hogg said that we expected unconditional observance of the requirements of the Convention."[246]

226. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

> Central Command . . . forces adhered to . . . fundamental law of war proscriptions in conducting military operations during Operation Desert Storm through discriminating target selection and careful matching of available forces and weapons

[242] India, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 2.
[243] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 2.9, referring to a speech of the President of Iraq, 4 January 1983.
[244] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, pp. 449–450.
[245] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.78.
[246] UK, Statement by FCO spokesperson, 21 January 1991, BYIL, Vol. 62, 1991, p. 680.

systems to selected targets and Iraqi defenses, without regard to Iraqi violations of its law of war obligations toward the civilian population and civilian objects.[247]

227. In 1987, an official of a State party to a non-international armed conflict asserted that, as international law had been breached by all the parties to the conflict, it did not have any value.[248]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

228. In 1994, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

> The idea of a "linkage" between the provision of humanitarian aid to Srebrenica and the evacuation of Serbs from Tuzla is to be condemned. Compliance with human rights and humanitarian law obligations by one party is not conditional upon compliance by others with their obligations: such obligations are absolute for each party and do not depend on reciprocity.[249]

Other International Organisations

229. No practice was found.

International Conferences

230. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on activities of the ICRC in which it recalled that the Geneva Conventions "provide essential protection for the human person, constitute solemn commitments vis-à-vis the whole international community" and that "the application of the provisions contained therein cannot therefore be subject to reciprocity or to political or military considerations".[250]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

231. In its advisory opinion in the Namibia case in 1971, the ICJ noted:

> the general principle of law that a right of termination on account of breach must be presumed to exist in respect of all treaties, except as regards provisions relating to the protection of the human person contained in treaties of a humanitarian character (as indicated in Art. 60, para. 5, of the [1969] Vienna Convention [on the Law of Treaties].[251]

[247] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 622.
[248] ICRC archive document.
[249] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/3, 5 May 1993, § 91.
[250] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. I.
[251] ICJ, Namibia case, Advisory Opinion, 21 June 1971, § 96.

232. In its review of the indictment in the Martić case in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

The prohibition against attacking the civilian population as such as well as individual civilians must be respected in all circumstances regardless of the behaviour of the other party. The opinion of the great majority of legal authorities permits the Trial Chamber to assert that no circumstances would legitimise an attack against civilians even if it were a response proportionate to a similar violation perpetrated by the other party. The exclusion of the application of the principle of reprisals in the case of such fundamental humanitarian norms is confirmed by Article 1 Common to all Geneva Conventions.[252]

233. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY held that:

515. Defence counsel have indirectly or implicitly relied upon the tu quoque principle, i.e. the argument whereby the fact that the adversary has also committed similar crimes offers a valid defence to the individuals accused. This is an argument resting on the allegedly reciprocal nature of obligations created by the humanitarian law of armed conflict. This argument may amount to saying that breaches of international humanitarian law, being committed by the enemy, justify similar breaches by a belligerent. Or it may amount to saying that such breaches, having been perpetrated by the adversary, legitimise similar breaches by a belligerent in response to, or in retaliation for, such violations by the enemy. Clearly, this second approach to a large extent coincides with the doctrine of reprisals, and is accordingly assessed below. Here the Trial Chamber will confine itself to briefly discussing the first meaning of the principle at issue.
516. It should first of all be pointed out that although tu quoque was raised as a defence in war crimes trials following the Second World War, it was universally rejected. The US Military Tribunal in the High Command trial, for instance, categorically stated that under general principles of law, an accused does not exculpate himself from a crime by showing that another has committed a similar crime, either before or after the commission of the crime by the accused. Indeed, there is in fact no support either in State practice or in the opinions of publicists for the validity of such a defence.
517. Secondly, the tu quoque argument is flawed in principle. It envisages humanitarian law as based upon a narrow bilateral exchange of rights and obligations. Instead, the bulk of this body of law lays down absolute obligations, namely obligations that are unconditional or in other words not based on reciprocity. This concept is already encapsulated in Common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, which provides that "The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect . . . the present Convention in all circumstances" [emphasis added]. Furthermore, attention must be drawn to a common provision (respectively Articles 51, 52, 131 and 148) which provides that "No High Contracting party shall be allowed to absolve itself or any other High Contracting Party of any liability incurred by itself or by another High Contracting Party in respect of breaches referred to in the preceding Article (i.e. grave breaches)". Admittedly, this provision only refers to State responsibility for grave breaches committed by State agents or de facto State agents, or at any rate for grave breaches generating State responsibility (e.g. for an omission by the State to prevent or punish such breaches). Nevertheless, the general notion underpinning those provisions is that liability for grave breaches is absolute and may in no case be set aside by resort to any legal means such as derogating treaties or agreements. A fortiori such liability and, more generally, individual criminal responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law may not be thwarted by recourse to arguments such as reciprocity.

[252] ICTY, Martić case, Review of the Indictment, 8 March 1996, § 15.

518. The absolute nature of most obligations imposed by rules of international humanitarian law reflects the progressive trend towards the so-called "humanisation" of international legal obligations, which refers to the general erosion of the role of reciprocity in the application of humanitarian law over the last century. After the First World War, the application of the laws of war moved away from a reliance on reciprocity between belligerents, with the consequence that, in general, rules came to be increasingly applied by each belligerent despite their possible disregard by the enemy. The underpinning of this shift was that it became clear to States that norms of international humanitarian law were not intended to protect State interests; they were primarily designed to benefit individuals qua human beings. Unlike other international norms, such as those of commercial treaties which can legitimately be based on the protection of reciprocal interests of States, compliance with humanitarian rules could not be made dependent on a reciprocal or corresponding performance of these obligations by other States. This trend marks the translation into legal norms of the "categorical imperative" formulated by Kant in the field of morals: one ought to fulfil an obligation regardless of whether others comply with it or disregard it.[253]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

234. The ICRC Commentary on the First Geneva Convention states that IHL treaties are not:

an engagement concluded on a basis of reciprocity, binding each party to the contract only in so far as the other party observes its obligations. [They are] rather a series of unilateral engagements solemnly contracted before the world as represented by the other Contracting Parties. Each State contracts obligations "vis-à-vis" itself and at the same time "vis-à-vis" the others.[254]

235. In a communication to the press in 2000, the ICRC condemned grave breaches of IHL in Colombia and stated that "international law expressly states that a violation committed by one party does not legitimize similar action by the adversary".[255]

VI. Other Practice

236. In 1992, when the issue of the protection of civilians was raised by an ICRC delegate, the representative of an armed opposition group replied: "We are not the first to start these violations of humanitarian law. It's simply our reply."[256]

[253] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, §§ 515–518.
[254] Jean S. Pictet (ed.), Commentary on the First Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1952, p. 25.
[255] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/36, Colombia: ICRC condemns grave breaches of international humanitarian law, suspends medical evacuations of wounded combatants, 3 October 2000.

237. In 1993, when the ICRC reminded the parties to an armed conflict that a violation of IHL could not be justified by invoking a violation committed by the enemy, the representative of the authorities of a separatist entity party to an armed conflict replied that it agreed that violations of the laws of war were unacceptable, even if the adversary had itself committed violations.[257]

C. Legal Advisers for Armed Forces

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

238. Article 82 AP I provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties at all times, and the Parties to the conflict in time of armed conflict, shall ensure that legal advisers are available, when necessary, to advise military commanders at the appropriate level on the application of the Conventions and this Protocol and on the appropriate instruction to be given to the armed forces on this subject.

Article 82 AP I was adopted by consensus.[258]

Other Instruments

239. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

240. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that:

> In some situations, legal advisers are available to assist commanders in ensuring compliance. In contrast, an aircraft pilot, a company commander or a commander of a RAN vessel does/may not have this direct access; consequently, it is essential that they be adequately trained in LOAC issues.[259]

The manual also states that "all operations plans and ROE should be reviewed by ADF legal advisers experienced in operations law. In addition, targeting lists and individual missions are to be carefully scrutinised by military planners and their operations law advisers."[260]

241. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that:

[256] ICRC archive document. [257] ICRC archive document.
[258] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 256.
[259] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1206.
[260] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1205.

As appropriate, legal advisers should be available to assist commanders in ensuring compliance. In contrast, an aircraft pilot, a company commander or a commander of a RAN vessel may not have this direct access; consequently, it is essential that they have a sound knowledge and understanding of LOAC issues.[261]

242. Australia's Defence Training Manual states that:

In accordance with the requirements of Article 82 of Additional Protocol One, the ADF is to ensure that legal advisers are available, when necessary, to advise military commanders at the appropriate level on the application of the [Geneva] Conventions and this Protocol and on the appropriate instruction to be given to the armed forces on this subject.[262]

It further states that:

The role of the legal adviser is to provide advice which will assist the commander to execute his mission in compliance with LOAC. It is concerned with the application and the respect for the rules of LOAC. The legal adviser will be called upon to:

a. actively participate in the preparation of exercises, the development of plans for military operations, to give his evaluation of the legal consequences of their execution, particularly with respect to the methods planned and the means to be used;
b. supervise the organisation of instruction in subordinate units, and to ensure that the levels of understanding are obtained;
c. ensure that instruction on the subject of LOAC is carried out on a continuous basis;
d. provide expertise on particular problems (for example, by developing a legal profile which will assist with weapons and target selection);
e. ensure the functioning of the procedure of legal consultation, particularly at subordinate levels; and
f. advise commanders of their obligations under the terms of Article 87 of Additional Protocol I.[263]

243. Belgium's Law of War Manual, referring to Articles 47 and 49 GC I, 48 and 50 GC II, 127 and 129 GC III, 144 and 146 GC IV and 82 AP I, provides that "the States signatory to the [Geneva] Conventions undertook to take a series of measures to promote respect thereof", among which it lists "the appointment of legal advisers to military commands".[264]

244. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that:

The profile of a legal adviser is defined as follows:

– having undergone thorough training in International Humanitarian Law and the Law of War for legal advisers, – holding a degree in public law (or, as a minimum, be well versed in legal matters),
– possessing a sound knowledge of public international law,

[261] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1305.
[262] Australia, Defence Training Manual (1994), § 16.
[263] Australia, Defence Training Manual (1994), § 17.
[264] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.

– having undergone high-level military training and holding a senior military rank.

Within the General Staff, legal advisers provide high-level training for senior officers.

They may also carry out normal General Staff duties and, in particular, ensure the legality of orders related to property that enjoys special protection.

In addition to their General Staff duties, legal advisers may be assigned special tasks.[265]

245. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

As a party to AP I, Canada has the obligation to ensure that legal advisors are available to advise military commanders on the application of the LOAC and the appropriate instruction to be given to the CF. Legal officers with the Office of the Judge Advocate General fulfil this mandate.[266]

246. France's LOAC Manual provides that "legal advisers present in external areas of operations are required to assist the command in order to take into account these legal parameters [i.e. of the law of armed conflict] in the planning and conduct of operations".[267]

247. Germany's Military Manual states that:

A lawyer who is qualified to exercise the function of a judge is assigned to every military commander at the division level and above to perform the following tasks:
– to advise the commander (and his subordinate disciplinary superiors) in all matters pertinent to the military law and the international law;
– to examine military orders and instructions on the basis of legal criteria; – to participate in military exercises (in his wartime assignment) as a legal officer whose duties include giving advice on matters pertinent to international law; and – to give legal instruction to soldiers of all ranks, particularly including the further education of officers . . .

The Legal Adviser has direct access to the commander to whom he is assigned.[268]

248. Hungary's Military Manual provides for a series of administrative measures including translation of legal texts and the presence of legal advisers, because "everybody must know the rules".[269]

249. Italy's Peace Operations Manual states that the availability of a legal adviser is always necessary and useful in national detachments of peacekeeping operations in order to dissipate any doubt on the interpretation or applicability of international law.[270]

[265] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 134, § 461.3.
[266] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 8.
[267] France, LOAC Manual (2001), preamble, p. 7.
[268] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 146 and 147.
[269] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 31.
[270] Italy, Peace Operations Manual (1994), Part III, No. 1a(4).

250. The Military Manual of the Netherlands notes that "States must ensure that legal advisers are available to advise military commanders concerning the application of the law of war".[271]

251. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "the purpose of this . . . Manual is to provide interim guidance to members of the New Zealand Defence Force, particularly to legal officers engaged in advising commanders, on the customary and treaty law applicable in armed conflict".[272] It also states that:

> Some armed forces have trained legal advisers attached to their higher echelons and these officers are competent to indicate what the law is as it affects a particular operation or whether a particular operation or whether a particular act is legally acceptable. By AP I Art. 82 the parties to the Protocol are obliged to ensure that such advisers are available . . .
>
> The Protocol does not indicate the level of command to which these advisers are to be attached, merely providing that, "when necessary", they will be available to advise "military commanders at the appropriate level". The requirement only relates to advice concerning the application of the Geneva Conventions and the Protocol. Art. 82 also provides for these legal advisers being employed to advise on "the appropriate instruction to be given to the armed forces" on these documents.[273]

252. Nigeria's Military Manual notes that Part V Section I of AP I "recommends for legal advisers to be assigned to Commanders at all time[s]".[274] It also states that "[Article 82] of Protocol I provides that Commanders may be assisted by special legal advisers . . . where there's need".[275]

253. Russia's Military Manual states that:

> As far as questions of application of the rules of IHL are concerned, the Commanders . . . shall, when necessary, turn to the assistance of legal advisers (art. 82 of Additional Protocol I). The officers of the Legal Service have been entrusted to perform this function by an order of the USSR Ministry of Defence.[276]

254. Spain's LOAC Manual, referring to Article 82 AP I, provides that "the State must ensure that Military Commanders, at the appropriate level, can count on the legal advice necessary for the application of the Law of War and its instruction to the Armed Forces".[277] It further states that "when legal advisers are available, they shall cooperate in the work of the Chiefs of Staff and, if necessary, perform specific tasks".[278] Annex A to the manual, referring to the 1907 Hague Convention IV and the Nuremberg trials, adds the following:

[271] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-1
[272] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Introduction, p. xxxiv.
[273] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1604, including footnote 11, see also § 1710.1, footnote 68.
[274] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 9, § 9e.
[275] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 31, § 4.
[276] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 16.
[277] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.3.b.(4).
[278] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.4.c.(5).

Protocol I additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, specifically Article 82 thereof, provides that legal advisers shall be available to the Armed Forces. That obligation is binding at all times on the High Contracting Parties and in time of armed conflict on those involved in the conflict in particular.

This Article represents an innovation in terms of the previous conventions governing the law of armed conflicts. The origins of the obligation imposed in Article 82 can nevertheless be traced back to previous treaties.

...

As has been demonstrated... Article 82 [AP I] obliges the contracting parties to ensure that legal advisers are available within the Armed Forces with a view to the application of the Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols and to the instruction to be given in the Army on the subject. Although the article is vaguely worded, the competent authorities have discretion only with regard to the terms and conditions on which the advice is given, the hierarchical level of the advisers and the method by which they are recruited. As has been pointed out by one author, "the article in question creates the obligation for the high contracting parties to adopt the adequate rules to ensure that legal advisers are available to the armed forces".

...

In the case of Spain, the following formula has been adopted within the limits of the methods to implement the terms of Article 82:

1. Existence of a specific technical corps of legal experts specifically belonging to the Armed Forces.

   ...

3. The existence of a military legal corps has undeniable advantages, since advice is not provided only in the command decision-making phase but also with regard to the disciplinary and penal repression of violations of the Law of Armed Conflict.[279]

255. Sweden's IHL Manual states that:

A generally accepted opinion is that proper application of the humanitarian legal rules depends to a large degree on the states' genuinely following the rules laid down in Article 82 of Additional Protocol I.

Article 82 states that "The High Contracting Parties at all times, and the Parties to the conflict in time of armed conflict, shall ensure that legal advisers are available, when necessary, to advise military commanders at the appropriate level on the application of the [Geneva] Conventions and this Protocol and on the appropriate instruction to be given to the armed forces on this subject". This is an obligation that Sweden through her ratification of the Protocol has undertaken to put into practice.

The legal advisers associated with the armed forces shall thus act both in peace and in war at appropriate military levels. They shall give general advice concerning instruction in international law within military defence. In this way they will also play a not unimportant part in such training within the civilian parts of the total defence system. Further, they shall give special guidance concerning the application of the rules of international law in both preparations for and the execution of military operations...

[279] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, Annex A.

It is . . . crucial that legal advisers, even in peacetime, can ensure that international law is included in instruction and planning.[280]

The manual also quotes a decision of the Swedish government of 1990 concerning advisers on international law and the text of the Total Defence Ordinance relating to International Humanitarian Law, containing similar provisions, notably that:

The wartime organization of the armed forces shall have appointments for advisers on international law . . . They shall be stationed at high-level staffs and shall have the task of advising military leaders as to how the rules of international law in war . . . shall be applied . . .

The peacetime organization of the armed forces shall have an adviser on international law with the Supreme Commander and one with every General Officer commanding Military Command Area.

The advisers on international law shall participate in the instruction of personnel of the armed forces as to how the rules of international law in war . . . are to be applied.[281]

256. The US Operational Law Handbook states that "a successful deployment legal assistance program will generally involve: 1. Advance planning by the legal assistance officer(s) and other judge advocates that may become involved in providing assistance to deploying soldiers."[282] Appendix 4 to Annex E to CJTF Tandem Thrust-92 Explan 1-92 (U) Legal (U) states that:

The CJTF Staff Judge Advocate will:

(1) (U) Provide legal assistance to CJTF and his staff.
(2) (U) Serve as a single point of contact for operational law matters within the JTF AOR [Area of Responsibility].
(3) (U) Monitor foreign criminal jurisdiction matters with respect to U.S. personnel with the JTF AOR.
(4) (U) Ensure that all plans, policies, directives, rules of engagement, and targeting are consistent with the DoD Law of War Program and domestic international law.[283]

The document further states that "the CJTF SJA [Staff Judge Advocate] is the Commander's principle advisor in all matters pertaining to the LOAC".[284] The deployment checklist, dealing with "international law considerations" at the post-alert stage, states that "the International/Operational Law Officer should be the SJA office's point of contact at the EOC [Emergency Operations Center]

[280] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 9, pp. 163 and 164.
[281] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 9, p. 166 and Appendix (Sections 27 and 28), p. 185.
[282] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. R-195.
[283] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), Appendix 4 to Annex E to CJTF Tandem Thrust-92 Explan 1-92 (U), Legal (U), § 1(b).
[284] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), Appendix 4 to Annex E to CJTF Tandem Thrust-92 Explan 1-92 (U) Legal (U), § 2(b)(3)(a).

and should keep the office advised at all times. He should attend all EOC briefings."[285] The post-deployment checklist states that:

The early stages of a deployment will usually have a multitude of issues of International/OPLAW [operational law] concern. Close coordination/contact must be maintained with the operational section . . . Trial counsel or legal advisers assigned to each subordinate unit (usually Brigade size units) should watch for potential International/OPLAW issues in their units.[286]

Regarding Special Operations Forces, the Handbook provides for the assignment of a Judge Advocate to each Special Forces Group, a Psychological Operations Group, a Ranger Regiment and a Special Operations Aviation Regiment, stating that "these attorneys are responsible for providing the legal advice a SO [Special Operations] unit commander requires to perform his assigned mission".[287] It adds that:

SO missions are politically sensitive, particularly in a peacetime or low-intensity conflict environment, and thus, the area of SO is fraught with potential legal pitfalls. The commander must consider not only the effect of traditional law of war requirements on his operation, but also the requirements of US law, such as security assistance and intelligence statutes, and international law in the form of mutual defence treaties and host nation support agreements.[288]

257. The US Naval Handbook provides that "Navy and Marine Corps judge advocates responsible for advising operational commanders are especially trained to provide officers in command with advice and assistance in the law of armed conflict on an independent and expeditious basis".[289]

National Legislation

258. The Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL of Belarus, with reference to Article 82 AP I, entrusts the military law section of the Ministry of Defence's legal department with the coordination of the activities of the legal advisers of the armed forces.[290]

259. Sweden's Total Defence Ordinance relating to IHL provides that:

The wartime organization of the Armed Forces shall have appointments for advisers on international law of the number decided by the Armed Forces. They shall be stationed at high-level staffs and shall have the task of advising military leaders as to how the rules of international law in war and during neutrality shall be applied. The advisers shall also take part in the planning work of the military staffs.

The Ordinance further states that "the peacetime organization of the Armed Forces shall have an adviser on international law within the Armed Forces and [285] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Mc-12.

[286] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Mc-14.
[287] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. N-146.
[288] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. N-146.
[289] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.2.
[290] Belarus, Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL (1997), § 4.

two with every Commander [and] Joint Command". Moreover, the Ordinance provides for two appointments of advisers on international law for the wartime organization of every director of a regional civil defence and for two appointments of advisers on international law for the wartime organization of every county administrative board. It stipulates that the advisers on international law shall be lawyers.[291]

260. Russia's Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols requires that Vice-Ministers of Defence and commanders at several levels "charge the officers of the Legal Service of the Ministry of Defence with the duty of legal advisers foreseen by art. 82 of Protocol I".[292]

National Case-law

261. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

262. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Austria pledged to "strengthen and review the system of legal advisers established under Article 82 of [AP I] and to undertake to include such advisers in Austrian units participating in international peace-support operations".[293]

263. In 1999, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Burkina Faso and the ICRC, in cooperation with the Burkinabé Red Cross Society, held the first national seminar on implementation of IHL. The seminar, inter alia, urged Burkina Faso to appoint legal advisers to the armed forces.[294]

264. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Burkina Faso pledged to "appoint legal advisers in the armed forces".[295]

265. In 1999, at a seminar on national implementation of IHL, organised by the ICRC, the Gambia Red Cross Society and the Gambian Department of State for Justice, the participants encouraged the authorities, inter alia, to appoint legal advisers to the armed forces.[296]

266. The Report on the Practice of India states that:

> As regards the legal advice on matters regarding international humanitarian law, it is the responsibility of [the] Judge Advocate General. He is supposed to advise the higher military authorities on military, martial and international law related issues referred to him. The Army Rules also provide for reference of legal questions including questions involving [the] interpretation and application of humanitarian [291] Sweden, Total Defence Ordinance relating to IHL (1990), Sections 27–32.

[292] Russia, Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols (1990), § 2.
[293] Austria, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[294] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 16.
[295] Burkina Faso, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[296] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 28.

law to Deputy Judges Advocate General as well as other subordinate legal personnel within the armed forces.[297]

267. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the International Law Department of the IDF is responsible for advising all military commanders on the application of the laws of war in the field.[298]

268. In 1999, at a seminar on implementation of IHL organised by the Kenyan Attorney-General's chambers and the ICRC, the participants encouraged the authorities, inter alia, to step up IHL training for legal advisers to the armed forces.[299]

269. In 1999, at a seminar on national implementation of IHL organised by Malawi's Ministry of Defence, the Law Commissioner, the ICRC and the National Red Cross Society, the participants urged the authorities, inter alia, to provide for the appointment and training of personnel qualified in IHL, including legal advisers to the armed forces.[300]

270. On the basis of an interview with high-ranking officers of the army of the Netherlands, the Report on the Practice of the Netherlands states that the Royal Netherlands Army has legal advisers at all levels higher than brigade level.[301]

271. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Niger pledged to "appoint legal advisers at all levels of the armed forces".[302]

272. The 1979 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program states that:

> The DoD General Counsel shall provide overall legal guidance within the Department of Defense pertaining to the DoD law of war program, to include review of policies developed in connection with the program and coordination of special legislative proposals and other legal matters with other Federal departments and agencies.[303]

273. In 1987, a Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, referring to Articles 80–85 AP I, affirmed that "we support the principle that legal advisers be made available, when necessary, to advise military commanders at the appropriate level on the application of these principles".[304]

[297] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 6.11.
[298] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[299] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 42.
[300] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 44.
[301] Report on the Practice of Netherlands, 1997, Interview with two high-ranking officers of the Royal Netherlands Army staff, both legal advisers, 15 April 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[302] Niger, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[303] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, Section E(2)(d).
[304] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols

274. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

> The Office of General Counsel of the Department of Defense (DOD), as the chief DOD legal office, provided advice to the Secretary of Defense, the Deputy Secretary of Defense, the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy, other senior advisers to the Secretary and to the various components of the Defense legal community on all matters relating to Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, including the law of war. For example, the Secretary of Defense tasked the General Counsel to review and opine on such diverse issues as the means of collecting and obligating for defense purposes contributions from third countries; the War Powers Resolution; DOD targetting policies; the rules of engagement; the rules pertinent to maritime interception operations; issues relating to the treatment of prisoners of war; sensitive intelligence and special access matters; and similar matters of the highest priority to the Secretary and DOD. In addition, military judge advocates and civilian attorneys with international law expertise provided advice on the law of war and other legal issues at every level of command in all phases of Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. Particular attention was given to the review of target lists to ensure the consistency of targets selected for attack with United States law of war obligations.[305]

275. The 1998 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program provides that the General Counsel of the Department of Defense shall "establish a DoD Law of War Working Group" which shall "provide advice to the General Counsel on legal matters covered by this Directive".[306] It also states that the Heads of the Department of Defense Components shall "ensure that qualified legal advisers are immediately available at all levels of command to provide advice about law of war compliance during planning and execution of exercises and operations".[307] The Directive further provides that the Commanders of the Combatant Commands shall "designate the command legal adviser to supervise the administration of those aspects of this program dealing with possible, suspected, or alleged enemy violations of the law of war".[308] Moreover, the Commanders of the Combatant Commands shall "ensure all plans, policies, directives, and rules of engagement issued by the command and its subordinate commands and components are reviewed by legal advisers to ensure their consistency with this Directive and the law of war".[309]

Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

[305] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 617.

[306] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(1)(2).

[307] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(3)(3).

[308] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(8)(3).

[309] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(8)(6).

276. In 1993, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the UN programme of assistance in the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, the representative of Trinidad and Tobago stated that "her delegation noted the growing interest in the legal aspects of peacekeeping operations. Legal advisers attached to such operations should be equipped to tackle the legal problems that might arise."[310]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

277. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

278. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

279. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states with respect to Article 82 AP I that:

The obligatory character of the present provision was maintained [at the adoption of the Article at the CDDH]. The word "ensure" is a term sometimes used in the Conventions; it means that the Party in question must make sure that the task is executed. There is therefore no justification for thinking that the task itself might be optional. To be more precise, Article 82 creates the obligation for the Parties to the Protocol to adopt all appropriate regulations to ensure that legal advisers are available to the armed forces. The fact that the conditions for the use and allocation of these advisers are regulated in particularly flexible terms ("when necessary", "at the appropriate level") does not in any way alter the fact that the creation of the post of legal adviser is obligatory.[311]

280. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that legal advisers shall be available, when necessary, to advise military commanders at the appropriate level on the application of the law of war.[312] They also teach that:

To solve specific problems, the superior can:

a) ask for legal advice;
b) seek the participation of a legal adviser in the theoretical training;

[310] Trinidad and Tobago, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/48/SR.33, 19 November 1993, § 11.
[311] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 3344.
[312] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 156.

c) make a legal adviser participate in normal staff work (e.g. for drafting and/or reviewing orders and instructions, for advice with regard to specifically protected objects).[313]

VI. Other Practice

281. No practice was found.

D. Instruction in International Humanitarian Law within Armed Forces

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

282. Article 26 of the 1906 GC provides that "the signatory governments shall take the necessary steps to acquaint their troops, and particularly the protected personnel, with the provisions of this convention and to make them known to the people at large".

283. Article 27 of the 1929 GC provides that "the High Contracting Parties shall take the necessary steps to instruct their troops, and in particular the personnel protected, in the provisions of the present Convention, and to bring them to the notice of the civil population".

284. Articles 47 GC I, 48 GC II, 127 GC III and 144 GC IV provide that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of war, to disseminate the text of the present Convention as widely as possible in their respective countries and, in particular, to include the study thereof in their programmes of military ... instruction, so that the principles thereof may become known to the entire population, in particular the armed fighting forces, the medical personnel and the chaplains.

285. Article 25 of the 1954 Hague Convention provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of armed conflict, to disseminate the text of the present Convention and the Regulations for its execution as widely as possible in their respective countries. They undertake, in particular, to include the study thereof in their programmes of military ... training, so that its principles are made known ... especially the armed forces and personnel engaged in the protection of cultural property.

286. Article 83 AP I provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of armed conflict, to disseminate the Conventions and this Protocol as widely as possible in their respective countries and, in particular, to include the study thereof in their programmes of military instruction.

[313] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 285.

Article 83 AP I was adopted by consensus.[314]

287. Article 19 AP II provides that "this Protocol shall be disseminated as widely as possible". Article 19 AP II was adopted by consensus.[315]

288. Article 6 of the 1980 CCW provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of armed conflict, to disseminate this Convention and those of its annexed Protocols by which they are bound as widely as possible in their respective countries and, in particular, to include the study thereof in their programmes of military instruction, so that those instruments may become known to their armed forces.

289. Article 14(3) of the 1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW provides that:

> Each High Contracting Party shall also require that its armed forces issue relevant military instructions and operating procedures and that armed forces personnel receive training commensurate with their duties and responsibilities to comply with the provisions of this Protocol.

290. Article 30 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that:

> 2. The Parties shall disseminate this Protocol, as widely as possible, both in time of peace and in time of armed conflict.
> 3. Any military or civilian authorities who, in time of armed conflict, assume responsibilities with respect to the application of this Protocol, shall be fully acquainted with the text thereof. To this end the Parties shall, as appropriate:
> (a) incorporate guidelines and instructions on the protection of cultural property in their military regulations;
> (b) develop and implement, in cooperation with UNESCO and relevant governmental and non-governmental organizations, peacetime training and educational programmes;
> (c) communicate to one another, as soon as possible, through the Director-General, information on the laws, administrative provisions and measures taken under sub-paragraphs (a) and (b).

Other Instruments

291. Article 20 of the 1956 New Delhi Draft Rules provides that "all States or Parties concerned shall make the terms of the provisions of the present rules known to their armed forces".

292. Article 3(2) of the 1986 Statutes of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, dealing with tasks of the National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, provides that the National Societies "disseminate and assist their governments in disseminating international humanitarian law; they take initiatives in this respect".

293. Article 5(2)(g) of the 1986 Statutes of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, in the context of the tasks of the ICRC, provides that

[314] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 260.
[315] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 151.

"the role of the International Committee, in accordance with its Statutes, is in particular: . . . to work for the understanding and dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts and to prepare any development thereof".

294. Paragraph 19 of the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials provides that:

Governments and law enforcement agencies shall ensure that all law enforcement officials are provided with training and are tested in accordance with appropriate proficiency standards in the use of force. Those law enforcement officials who are required to carry firearms should be authorized to do so only upon completion of special training in their use.

295. Paragraph 20 of the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials provides that:

In the training of law enforcement officials, Governments and law enforcement agencies shall give special attention to issues of police ethics and human rights, especially in the investigative process, to alternatives to the use of force and firearms, including the peaceful settlement of conflicts, the understanding of crowd behaviour, and the methods of persuasion, negotiation and mediation, as well as to technical means, with a view to limiting the use of force and firearms. Law enforcement agencies should review their training programmes and operational procedures in the light of particular incidents.

296. Paragraph 13 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that:

The parties undertake to spread knowledge of and promote respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and the terms of the present agreement, especially among combatants. This shall be done in particular:

- by providing appropriate instruction on the rules of international humanitarian law to all units under their command, control or political influence, and to paramilitary or irregular units not formally under their command, control or influence;
- by facilitating the dissemination of ICRC appeals urging respect for international humanitarian law;
- via articles in the press, and radio and television programmes prepared also in cooperation with the ICRC and broadcast simultaneously;
- by distributing ICRC publications.

297. Paragraph 4 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that:

The parties undertake to spread knowledge of and promote respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and the terms of the present agreement, especially among combatants. This shall be done in particular:

- by providing appropriate instruction on the rules of international humanitarian law to all units under their command, control or political influence;
- by facilitating the dissemination of ICRC appeals urging respect for international humanitarian law;
- by distributing ICRC publications.

298. In Paragraph II(10) of the 1992 Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC requested that the parties "undertake to ensure that the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and, in particular, [the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina] are known to all combatants".

299. Paragraph IV of the 1992 Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina states that "the ICRC considers it essential to launch a major information campaign without delay in order to ensure that all combat units are aware of the humanitarian rules governing the conduct of hostilities". (emphasis in original)

300. Paragraph 17 of the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict provides that "States shall disseminate these rules, make them known as widely as possible in their respective countries and include them in their programmes of military . . . instruction".

301. Paragraph 29 of the 1994 CSCE Code of Conduct provides that "the participating States will make widely available in their respective countries the international humanitarian law of war. They will reflect, in accordance with national practice, their commitments in this field in their military training programmes and regulations".

302. Paragraph 30 of the 1994 CSCE Code of Conduct provides that "each participating State will instruct its armed forces personnel in international humanitarian law, rules, conventions and commitments governing armed conflict".

303. Paragraph 34 of the 1994 CSCE Code of Conduct provides that:

> Each participating State will ensure that its armed forces are, in peace and in war, commanded, manned, trained and equipped in ways that are consistent with the provisions of international law and its respective obligations and commitments related to the use of armed forces in armed conflict, including as applicable the Hague Conventions of 1907 and 1954, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the 1977 Protocols Additional thereto, as well as the 1980 Convention on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons.

304. Section 3 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "the United Nations also undertakes to ensure that members of the military personnel of the force are fully acquainted with the principles and rules of those international instruments [principles and rules of the general conventions applicable to the conduct of military personnel]".

305. Paragraph 52 of the 2000 Cairo Plan of Action urges States "to implement international humanitarian law in full, in particular by . . . ensuring that international humanitarian law is fully integrated into the training programmes and operational procedures of armed forces and the police force".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

306. Numerous States have issued military manuals as an educational tool for their armed forces, including Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Croatia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, France, Germany, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kenya, South Korea, Kuwait, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Madagascar, Mali, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Russia, Rwanda, Senegal, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Togo, Uganda, UK, Uruguay, US and SFRY (FRY).[316]

307. Argentina's Navy Regulations state that "an adequate knowledge of the relevant rules of international law, as well as of relevant conventions, must be demanded at all levels".[317]

308. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that its objectives include to:

1. Disseminate lawful methods and means of warfare.
2. Disseminate the rules regulating the conduct of the military forces in operation.
3. Disseminate the rules that the military forces must observe in their relations with the enemy populations and the occupied territories.[318]

The manual also points out that the duty to disseminate the Additional Protocols and to train qualified persons applies already in peacetime.[319]

309. Australia's Commanders' Guide stipulates that ADF members "are to be trained in [LOAC] basic principles and therefore avoid breaches of these laws".[320] It also states that "the training adviser for LOAC training in the ADF is the Director-General of Defence Force Legal Services".[321]

310. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that ADF members "are to be trained in [LOAC] basic principles and avoid breaches of these laws".[322]

316 The full references for the military manuals of these States can be found in the list of Military Manuals at the end of this publication.
317 Argentina, Navy Regulations (1986), Article 11.702.014.
318 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), Introduction, p. IX.
319 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), Annex 9, § 9.
320 Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1202.
321 Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 109.
322 Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1302.

311. Australia's Defence Training Manual states that:

> 4. ... the Government of Australia is required to disseminate the text of the conventions [Geneva Conventions, AP I and AP II, and 1907 Hague Convention (IV)] as widely as possible, so that the principles become known to the members of the ADF ...
> 5. The aim of this Instruction is to set out LOAC training policy and objectives for the ADF ...
> 6. The training adviser for LOAC training is the Director-General of Defence Force Legal Services ...
> 7. The requirement for training in LOAC in the Australian Defence Force is based on the following considerations:
>   a. Australia is bound by the Hague and Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols to disseminate their texts for study by the military.[323]

312. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "the study [of the law of war] is required for those who may be concerned by its provisions".[324] It further states that "States signatory to the [Geneva] Conventions undertook to take a series of measures to promote the respect thereof", among which it lists "the widest dissemination possible of the content of the Conventions ... among military personnel".[325]

313. Belgium's LOAC Teaching Directive states that "the dissemination of the LOAC is a legal obligation fulfilled by incorporating its instruction in military teaching programmes and by training the personnel".[326] The Directive refers to the teaching of the Geneva Conventions, AP I and AP II.[327]

314. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers states that "every soldier must know the essential rules of the law of war ... and their meaning in order to be able to apply them".[328] It further states that "since respect for humanitarian rules depends on the degree of discipline of a unit, their instruction is logically included in general military instruction".[329]

315. Benin's Military Manual provides that "the law of war must be incorporated in the military instruction programmes in the different military units".[330] It adds that "the instruction of individual combatants is a priority. The aim is to develop automatic behaviours. Such automatic behaviours shall: be obtained by an individual instruction and practice; be controlled during combat exercises."[331]

316. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that:

> The military commander must incorporate in his programmes the legal problems that shall permit all members of the Armed Forces not only to realistically complete

[323] Australia, Defence Training Manual (1994), §§ 4–7.
[324] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 2.
[325] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[326] Belgium, LOAC Teaching Directive (1996), Section 1.
[327] Belgium, LOAC Teaching Directive (1996), preamble.
[328] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 1.
[329] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 4.
[330] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 15.
[331] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 16.

their knowledge of the international law of war, but also to solve, in time of peace, problems he will face in case of armed conflict. This instruction, in addition to military training, must be the object of instruction sessions in all military units and schools.[332]

317. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "the teaching and dissemination of the Law of War is of prime importance to Cameroon, in civilian as well as military circles".[333] It further states that "each member [of the armed forces] shall receive an instruction in accordance with . . . his function . . . Instruction in the law of war must be specific, simple and must refer to concrete situations."[334]

318. Canada's Unit Guide states that:

1. The aim of this manual is to acquaint all ranks with the principles of the Geneva Conventions for the Protection of War Victims signed on August 12, 1949.
2. Each of the 1949 Geneva Conventions contains a provision requiring participating nations to distribute the text of the Convention as widely as possible and, in particular, to include a study of these texts in programmes of military instruction.[335]

319. Canada's LOAC Manual notes that it is designed "to be used as the main source for the preparation of lesson plans required for the training of all members of the CF on the LOAC".[336] It also states that:

The most important factor in ensuring that the LOAC is applied by all parties to an armed conflict is knowledge of the law. Canada has the obligation, as a party to the Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions (AP I), to instruct the CF on the LOAC, in time of peace as well as in time of armed conflict. Canada also has the obligation to include the study of LOAC in military instruction programmes.[337]

320. Canada's Code of Conduct states that:

CF members are not expected to know all the details of the various treaties and international customs that make up the Law of Armed Conflict. They are, however, expected to know at least the basic principles which, when followed, will ensure CF members carry out their duties in accordance with the spirit and principles of the Law of Armed Conflict. These principles of the Law of Armed Conflict are set out in the CF Code of Conduct.[338]

The Code of Conduct further states that "it is CF policy to respect and abide by the Law of Armed Conflict in all circumstances. To meet this commitment, every CF member must know and understand, as a minimum, the basic principles of the Law of Armed Conflict."[339]

[332] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 35.
[333] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 2.
[334] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 71, §§ 251.2 and 253.
[335] Canada, Unit Guide (1990), § 101.
[336] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), Introduction, p. i, § 5.
[337] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-1, § 6.
[338] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Introduction, § 8.
[339] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 1.

321. Colombia's Directive on IHL issued in 1993 by the Colombian Ministry of National Defence stated that:

> The Ministry of National Defence is issuing instructions intended to intensify the development of training programmes for members of the police in subjects pertaining to respect for human rights and compliance with the rules of international humanitarian law, with the aim of preventing and rectifying conduct that violates those rules.[340]

322. In Colombia's Basic Military Manual, the Minister of National Defence defined various priorities, including:

> We are trying to firmly establish within the Armed Forces and the National Police a culture and an ethic of respect, and to this end, activities of dissemination, instruction and capacity building with respect to human rights and humanitarian law have been started and developed.[341]

He added that:

> The publication today of this Manual is intended to increase the dissemination and application of the instruments of international humanitarian law to which we are party. With it, we are fulfilling the obligation contained in the four Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols to disseminate their content as widely as possible, in time of peace as well as in time of war, and to incorporate their study in the programmes of military instruction.[342]

The manual stresses that, before conflicts occur, there is an obligation "to adopt plans and programmes of dissemination and capacity building through which IHL is made known to . . . the Armed Forces".[343] It further states that this obligation to instruct also binds organised armed opposition groups.[344] Lastly, in a chapter dealing with AP II, the manual states that "it is important to underline the obligation incumbent upon States to organise periodical and systematic instruction on the content of the Protocol, so that the Public Force . . . can apply and insist on respect for its norms".[345]

323. Colombia's Instructors' Manual states that it "aims to serve as a tool, as a guiding instrument by which the instructor presents in a simple form to the soldiers and seamen the minimum rules regarding persons, objects, the wounded and others, in times of peace, war and conflict".[346]

324. Croatia's Commanders' Manual states that "law of war training has to be integrated into normal military activity".[347]

[340] Colombia, Directive on IHL (1993), Section IV(A).
[341] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. XIV.
[342] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), pp. XIV and XV.
[343] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), pp. 27 and 28.
[344] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 37.
[345] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 46.
[346] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 15.
[347] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 22.

325. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic notes that "although all [Dominicans] – soldiers, citizens, and leaders – have a legal obligation to know, understand and abide by these laws of war, soldiers must be especially aware of them . . . This publication is intended to help you, today's soldier, know and understand these laws."[348]

326. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "combatants . . . must be made aware of the rules of the law of armed conflicts, which essentially includes the Geneva Conventions and the Hague Conventions".[349]

327. France's LOAC Manual notes that it "is to be used for the instruction of any military personnel of the French armed forces, in the context of the instruction given in schools".[350]

328. Germany's Military Manual notes that it "shall serve soldiers and civilian personnel of all command levels in training courses, military exercises and in general training".[351] It also states that:

> The four Geneva Conventions and [AP I] oblige all contracting parties to disseminate the text of the conventions as widely as possible . . . This shall particularly be accomplished through programmes of instruction for the armed forces . . . Considering their responsibility in times of armed conflict, military . . . authorities shall be fully acquainted with the text of the Conventions and the Protocol Additional to them.[352]

It further states that:

> All soldiers of the Federal Armed Forces shall receive instruction in international law. It is conducted in the military units by the superiors and the legal advisers and at the armed forces schools by teachers of law . . . This instruction has the purpose not only of disseminating knowledge, but also and primarily of developing an awareness of what is right and what is wrong.[353]

Lastly, the manual stresses that:

> Effective implementation is depending on dissemination of humanitarian law. Providing information about it is the necessary basis to create common consciousness and to further the attitude of the peoples towards a greater acceptance of these principles as an achievement of the social and cultural development of mankind.[354]

329. Germany's IHL Manual states that "all enforcement methods of international humanitarian law are . . . incomplete without extensive dissemination of the basic principles of international humanitarian law and the personal sense of the individual to take responsibility for their respect".[355] Referring to common

[348] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 2.
[349] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 1.
[350] France, LOAC Manual (2001), preamble, p. 7.
[351] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1.
[352] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 136.
[353] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 137.
[354] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1223.
[355] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 806.

Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 1(1) AP I, the manual states that:

> It necessarily follows that each soldier of the [German Armed Forces] must know the rules of international humanitarian law in armed conflicts . . . Therefore, the four Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols oblige all Contracting Parties to disseminate the content of the Conventions in their countries and to incorporate it in the programmes of military education.[356]

330. Hungary's Military Manual provides that "everybody must know the rules [of war]".[357]

331. India's Army Training Note states that its aim is "to educate all ranks in maintaining and upholding Human Dignity and protecting Human Rights in accordance with the law of the land and National and International conventions, during peace and war".[358] It also states that "a soldier is trained to do only the correct and proper things from the time he is enrolled into the Service. Any violation is strictly dealt with by the superior authorities."[359]

332. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "there is room for and importance to being familiar with the laws of war and directing our conduct in accordance therewith".[360]

333. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual states that "law of war training has to be integrated into normal military activity".[361]

334. Kenya's LOAC Manual notes that:

> The need for dissemination is as old as International Humanitarian Law itself. The law can only be respected if it is known.
>
> To be effective, dissemination must take place in peacetime. It is too late for dissemination once a conflict has started since the authorities concerned have by then turned to questions of greater priority that may overwhelm any argument in favour of humanitarian conduct.
>
> It is not enough for States to ratify the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols; besides the legal obligation for dissemination they contain, there must also be a genuine political will to apply them. Their content and "directions for use" must be known so that those responsible for their implementation take the appropriate steps at the proper time. For this reason, their dissemination is mandatory, as ignorance of International Humanitarian Law can cost human lives.[362]

The manual further explains that "behaviour is the reflection of training. This means that all members of a fighting force must undergo training such as to ensure the enforcement of the existing rules at all levels of the military hierarchy".[363]

[356] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), §§ 107 and 108.
[357] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 31.
[358] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 1/2.
[359] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 5/1.
[360] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 9.
[361] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 22.
[362] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 1, p. vi.
[363] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 1.

335. South Korea's Military Regulation 187 provides that all members of the armed forces must have training in the laws of war.[364]

336. Madagascar's Military Manual notes that:

> Madagascar ratified the Geneva Conventions in 1963 and their two Additional Protocols [AP I and AP II] in 1992 and has the obligation to promote the instruction [and] dissemination of international humanitarian law, in particular within the Armed Forces, and to ensure their application, if needed . . .
>
> In the framework of dissemination of international humanitarian law (IHL), the law of armed conflict or law of war shall from now on be included in the general programme of instruction of the military personnel of the Armed Forces . . .
>
> The Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Additional Protocol I of 1977 stipulate in some of their articles that "all States parties to the conventions and/or to the Additional Protocols are obliged to disseminate IHL in their respective countries".
>
> The ultimate goal of the dissemination of International Humanitarian Law is to create through a wide knowledge of its principles, inherent rights and duties, a true humanitarian consciousness, imperatively guiding troops' behaviour in conflict situations.[365]

The manual also provides that "law of war training has to be integrated into normal military activity".[366]

337. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "States must disseminate the treaties as widely as possible in time of peace and include the law of war in their military training".[367]

338. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

> 1. The first step to ensuring observance of the law is to make the law known to those whose conduct it is intended to regulate. With this in view, the various Conventions relating to the law of armed conflict impose an obligation upon their parties to disseminate the particular Convention among their armed forces.
> 2. The manner in which dissemination is effected is left to the various States, but is normally carried out by means of instruction courses or through the medium of commentaries upon particular Conventions or manuals devoted to the law of armed conflict.[368]

The manual further states that in the armed forces, in addition to courses conducted at various rank levels, "the publications of the International Committee of the Red Cross are available for reference".[369]

339. Nicaragua's Military Manual states that the objective of the manual is "to give Commanders, Officers, Troops, Soldiers and Seamen of the Army of Nicaragua knowledge of how to behave in situations of peace, war, internal disturbances . . . in the theatre of military operations and in their relations with [364] South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), Article 5.1.

[365] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), preamble, pp. 2–4, see also presentation, p. 9.
[366] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-O, § 22.
[367] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-1.
[368] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1602.
[369] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1602.2, footnote 6.

the civilian population".[370] It further states that "the study of and respect for the Constitution of the Republic, Military Laws, other Laws, Directives, Norms and Ordinances, especially those that regulate the actions of the Armed Forces in the fulfilment of their missions, are obligatory".[371]

340. Nigeria's Military Manual incorporates the content of Article 47 GC I and adds that "dissemination simply means that in the law of armed conflict, the obligation is that States make the principles of the law known to its armed forces ... by teaching them in military training programmes".[372] The manual further states that:

> [AP I] in its Article 6 further provides that the High Contracting Parties with the assistance of the various national Red Cross Societies and under the guidance and general superintendence of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), shall train qualified personnel to facilitate the application of the [Geneva] conventions and the protocols [AP I and AP II] ... Furthermore the ICRC shall hold at the disposal of the High Contracting Parties the lists of the persons so trained which the High Contracting Parties may have established and may have transmitted to it for that purpose.
> ...
> The dissemination of the [Geneva] conventions and the protocols therefore must be as orderly as possible in the respective countries and in particular to include the study thereof in their programmes of military instruction ... The purpose therefore is that any military ... authorities, who in time of armed conflict, assume responsibilities in respect of the application of the [Geneva] conventions and the protocols, shall be fully acquainted with the text thereof.[373]

In addition, the manual states that "the law of war training is aimed at ensuring full respect for the law of war by all members of the armed forces irrespective of their function, time, location and situation".[374]

341. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines provides that "these provisions [among which the relevant provisions of the Geneva Conventions] shall be integrated into the regular Program of Instructions for AFP and PNP troops/police information and education sessions in all levels of command/office".[375]

342. Russia's Military Manual states that, in time of peace, commanders must:

- promote among the members of the USSR Armed Forces knowledge of IHL, to study it within the system of military ... training, to distribute among subordinates texts of international legal instruments and legislative acts defining the conduct of the members of the army and the navy during an armed conflict.[376]

[370] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Objetivo, p. 1.
[371] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 5.
[372] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 29, § 1.
[373] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), pp. 29–30, §§ 2–3.
[374] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 41, § 8.
[375] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 3(d).
[376] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 14(a).

343. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that it is "imperative that every member of the SANDF has a good knowledge of, and is able to apply, the law of armed conflict (LOAC)".[377] It also states that "in the circumstances of combat, soldiers may often not have time to consider the principles of the LOAC before acting. Soldiers must therefore not only know these principles but must be trained so that the proper response to specific situations is second nature."[378]

344. Spain's Order 60/1992 on Military Instruction for High-Ranking Officers includes the subjects "international law of war", "law of armed conflicts" and "humanitarian principles" in the instruction plan of high-ranking officers.[379]

345. Spain's Order 63/1993 on Military Instruction for Other Officers includes the subjects "the International Conventions of the Hague and Geneva" and "Public International Law" in the instruction plan of the Military Intervention Corps and of the specialised branches of the Army Medical Service, and the subject "International Law and the Law of War" and "the International Conventions of Geneva and the Hague" in the instruction plan of the Military Legal Corps.[380]

346. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "the instruction and dissemination of [IHL] are established as obligatory, so that the State has the duty to introduce it in its programmes of military . . . instruction".[381] Thus, the Ministry of Defence "shall programme courses on the Law regulating Armed Conflicts at different levels for the various Commanding Officers".[382] The manual also states that "law of war training has to be integrated into normal military activity".[383] A chapter of the manual devoted to "Dissemination of the Law of Armed Conflict" establishes a detailed programme including instructional methods, guidelines, priorities based on hierarchical levels within the military sector, a general framework for the instruction of the law of armed conflict, norms and models of instruction according to hierarchical levels, a summary of the law of armed conflict for non-commissioned officers, officers and superior officers, model curricula and a model course for the national and international levels.[384] The manual further stresses that "it is very important to include the Law of War in instruction courses for the military personnel who are going to take part in [peacekeeping] operations".[385]

347. Sweden's IHL Manual notes that:

The undertaking of the parties concerning information and instruction in international humanitarian law is stressed in Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva

[377] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 4.
[378] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 14.
[379] Spain, Order 60/1992 on Military Instruction for High-Ranking Officers (1992), Article 1 and Annex.
[380] Spain, Order 63/1993 on Military Instruction for Other Officers (1993), Article 1 and Annex.
[381] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.1.a, see also §§ 1.1.d.(7) and 11.3.b.(2) (which add that the instruction must take place in time of peace as well as in time of war) and § 6.2.a.(1).
[382] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.2.a.(5).
[383] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.8.c.(2).
[384] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 10.1–10.11.
[385] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, Annex B.

Conventions (AP I, Art. 83), which, however, goes further than the earlier conventions. According to the Protocol, the military and civilian authorities responsible for their application during a conflict shall possess full knowledge of the texts both of the Protocol and of the Conventions. Thus a definite tightening of the demands has been introduced.[386]

The manual further states that "by its ratification in 1977 of the Additional Protocols to the Geneva 1949 Conventions, Sweden pledged herself to inform and instruct the authorities and personnel responsible for total defence . . . on the rules of international humanitarian law".[387]

348. In Order No. 148 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses, Tajikistan's Minister of Defence decided "to include in the curricula . . . of the S. Safarov Tajik Higher Military College and of the Military Lycees of the Republic of Tajikistan, the subject 'Law of Armed Conflict'".[388]

349. Togo's Military Manual provides that "the law of war must be incorporated in the military instruction programmes in the different military units".[389] It adds that "the instruction of individual combatants is a priority. The aim is to develop automatic behaviours. Such behaviours shall: be obtained by individual instruction and practice; be controlled during exercises of combat."[390] The manual also contains the text of a Note de Service of Togo's Armed Forces, which states that "the follow up committee of the ICRC activities within the FAT [Togo's Armed Forces], in charge of the instruction of [IHL], shall elaborate in collaboration with the ICRC delegation in Lomé programmes adapted to each training level of the personnel of the FAT".[391]

350. The UK Military Manual notes that:

> Violations of the law of war have often been shown to have been the deeds of subordinates who acted through ignorance or excess of zeal or the result of orders issued by superiors who acted either in ignorance or disregard of the laws of war. Care must therefore be taken that all ranks are acquainted with the laws of war and that they endeavour to observe them. Under the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions the parties are bound, both in time of peace and in war, to disseminate the text of the Conventions in their countries and to include the study of them in their programmes of military instruction.[392]

351. The UK LOAC Manual states that the manual "is designed for use by personnel of all ranks who need to study or give instruction in the law of armed conflict".[393]

352. The US Field Manual states that "the purpose of this Manual is to provide authoritative guidance to military personnel on the customary and treaty law

[386] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.1, pp. 91 and 92.
[387] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 10.1, p. 168.
[388] Tajikistan, Order No. 148 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses (1997), § II.
[389] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 15.
[390] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 16.
[391] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 24, Fascicule II, p. 23 and Fascicule III, p. 23.
[392] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 120.
[393] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), p. iii, § 1.

applicable to the conduct of warfare on land".[394] It further incorporates the content of Articles 47 GC I, 48 GC II, 127 GC III and 144 GC IV.[395]

353. The US Air Force Pamphlet quotes a directive of the Department of Defense which provides that:

> The Armed Forces of the United States will insure that programs to prevent violations of the law of war to include training and dissemination as required by the Geneva Conventions . . . and by [the 1907] Hague Convention IV . . . are instituted and implemented . . .
>
> The Secretaries of the Military Departments will develop internal policies and procedures consistent with this Directive in support of the [Department of Defense] law of war program in order to:
>
> 1. Provide publications, instructions, and training so that the principles and rules of the law of war will be known to members of their respective departments, the extent of such knowledge to be commensurate with each individual's duties and responsibilities.[396]

The Pamphlet also stipulates that "all states must include the text of the Conventions in programs of military . . . instruction".[397]

354. The US Soldier's Manual notes that "although all Americans – soldiers, citizens, and leaders – have a legal obligation to know and abide by these laws of war, soldiers must be especially aware of them . . . This publication is intended to help you, today's soldier, know and understand these laws of war."[398]

355. The US Instructor's Guide states that "all soldiers must know about [the 1907 Hague Conventions and the 1949 Geneva Conventions] and customary laws and understand how they work".[399] It also specifies that "this circular provides guidance, lesson outlines, and courses for required training in the law of war which includes the Hague Convention Number IV of 1907, the Geneva Conventions of 1949, and the customary law of war".[400]

356. The US Naval Handbook provides that:

> It is the responsibility of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps . . . to ensure that:
>
> . . .
>
> All service members of the Department of the Navy, commensurate with their duties and responsibilities, receive, through publications, instructions, training programs and exercises, training and education in the law of armed conflict.[401]

National Legislation

357. Argentina's National Committee on the Implementation of International Humanitarian Law (CADIH) was established by a national decree to undertake studies on the teaching and dissemination of the rules of IHL.[402]

[394] US, Field Manual (1956), § 1. [395] US, Field Manual (1956), § 14.
[396] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 1-4(c).
[397] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(b).
[398] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 3. [399] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 5.
[400] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. ii. [401] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.2.
[402] Argentina, Decree on the Creation of the National Committee on IHL (1994), Article 1(b).

358. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War states that:

> The appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of [the] Azerbaijan Republic insure . . . [the] preparation of the military servicemen of all categories within the framework of training programmes.
>
> If [the] Azerbaijan Republic is one of the parties to the conflict, then necessary instruction is given . . . to the personnel staff of the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic involved in the solution of this conflict.[403]

359. The Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL of Belarus, whose aim is "the implementation of international obligations of the Republic of Belarus with respect to the study and dissemination of international humanitarian law", provides for the adoption of an annexed "Regulation on the application of the rules of international humanitarian law for the officers of the Belarussian armed forces".[404] It further provides for the establishment, within the Ministry of Defence, of a commission on the study and the dissemination of IHL in charge of, inter alia, the preparation of measures for the study of IHL within the armed forces.[405] The Order also provides for the preparation of manuals on IHL designed for the armed forces.[406]

360. By a decree in 1999, Côte d'Ivoire set up a national IHL bureau in charge of dissemination and training for the armed forces.[407]

361. Croatia's Emblem Law provides that:

> In accordance with the commitments made on [the] international level concerning the promotion of [the] Geneva Conventions, it is necessary to elaborate adequate programmes and ensure their implementation among:
>
> . . .
>
> – members of [the] armed forces of the Republic of Croatia – Ministry of Defence.[408]

362. Germany's Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel provides that "soldiers are to be instructed with regard to their duties and rights under . . . public international law in times of peace and in times of war".[409]

363. Peru's Law on Compulsory Human Rights Education, provides for the establishment of a national plan on the teaching of human rights and IHL in establishments for military and police training. It states that "the duty to teach human rights and international humanitarian law must aim at full implementation and strict compliance with the international treaties and conventions as

[403] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 1 and 30.
[404] Belarus, Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL (1997), preamble and Article 1.
[405] Belarus, Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL (1997), Articles 2 and 3(d).
[406] Belarus, Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL (1997), Article 4(b).
[407] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 22, referring to Côte d'Ivoire, Decree on Dissemination and Training for the Armed Forces (1999).
[408] Croatia, Emblem Law (1993), Article 14.
[409] Germany, Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel (1995), § 33(2).

well as the protection of fundamental rights in the national and international arena".[410]

364. Russia's Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols requires the Vice-Ministers of Defence and commanders at several levels

- to ensure, in the context of the legal preparation of the personnel, the study of the Geneva Conventions . . . the Protocols and the instructions on the application of the rules of international humanitarian law by the armed forces of the USSR;
- to take into account the provisions of the [above-]mentioned documents during studies and teaching.[411]

365. Russia's Draft Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem states that:

Familiarisation of the members of the federal bodies of executive power, where military service is provided for by the legislation of the Russian Federation, with the norms of international humanitarian law (including the texts of the Geneva Conventions) shall be carried out by the competent bodies of the appropriate organisations.[412]

366. Sweden's Total Defence Ordinance relating to IHL states that:

The [Armed Forces and the authorities having functional responsibilities under the Emergency Preparedness Ordinance] shall ensure that the personnel in this field receive satisfactory instruction and information about the rules of international humanitarian law in war and during neutrality. The Swedish Agency for Civil Emergency Planning shall co-ordinate the training in the civil part of the Total Defence.[413]

367. Uruguay's Law on the National Armed Forces provides that "the personnel of the National Armed Forces shall know and strictly comply with all the principles and rules provided for in the Conventions and Conferences on the International Law of War which have been ratified by the Republic".[414]

National Case-law

368. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

369. Many countries have created national committees to assist them in ensuring respect for the obligations of IHL, among which are the following: Argentina, Belarus, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Canada, Cape Verde, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Finland, France, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Guatemala, Hungary, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kenya, South Korea, Kyrgyzstan, [410] Peru, Law on Compulsory Human Rights Education (2002), Article 3.

[411] Russia, Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols (1990), § 2.
[412] Russia, Draft Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem (1998), Article 5.
[413] Sweden, Total Defence Ordinance relating to IHL (1990), Section 20.
[414] Uruguay, Law on the National Armed Forces (1983), Article 362, see also Article 363.

Lesotho, Lithuania, Malawi, Mali, Mauritius, Moldova, Namibia, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Seychelles, Slovakia, Slovenia, Sri Lanka, Sweden, Tajikistan, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Ukraine, UK, Uruguay and Yemen.[415] The tasks of these committees usually include dissemination of IHL or the promotion of such dissemination.

370. According to the Report on the Practice of Algeria, introductory lectures in IHL are given at the largest military academies for the armed forces. The teaching is based on the study of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[416]

371. Article 10 of the Internal Rules of Procedure of the Argentine National Committee on the Implementation of International Humanitarian Law (CADIH) states that "the CADIH will establish its working methods with regard to legal measures of application and teaching and dissemination, in the civil and military fields respectively".[417]

372. In 1997, at the first meeting of the Argentine and Chilean national committees on the implementation of IHL, a legal adviser of the Argentine Ministry of Foreign Affairs stated that Argentina recognised the importance of efforts made by States to disseminate IHL in peacetime and that persons be trained to apply the law in situations described in the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols.[418]

373. The Report on the Practice of Argentina contains, as annexes, documents which aim to provide teaching material for the armed forces in which rules of IHL have been incorporated.[419]

374. In 1984, in an assessment of the military implications of AP I and AP II, Australia's Joint Military Operations and Plans Division of the ADF stated that:

> In recognition of the requirement for training in the laws of armed conflict, COSC [Chiefs of Staff Committee], in February 1983, agreed to the introduction of a formal training programme in the laws of armed conflict in the ADF to meet the provisions of The Hague and Geneva Conventions, Protocols I and II and customary law ...
>
> However, the requirement for the Convention and Protocols to be disseminated "as widely as possible in respective countries" has not been addressed by Defence, as this is not a Defence responsibility.[420]

[415] ICRC, Advisory Service, Table of National Committees on International Humanitarian Law, 30 June 2002.

[416] Report on the Practice of Algeria, 1998, Chapter 6.6.

[417] Argentina, Committee on the Implementation of International Humanitarian Law (CADIH), Internal Rules of Procedure, Article 10.

[418] Argentina, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, International Trade and Religion, Statement by a Legal Adviser, First Meeting of the Argentine and Chilean Committees on the Implementation of International Humanitarian Law, Buenos Aires, 17–18 April 1997, p. 5.

[419] Argentina, Model curriculum for instruction in the law of war for the armed forces (undated); Curriculum for Senior Officers at the Escuela Superior de Guerra (Higher College of War), 1997; Curriculum for the course on international law applicable in armed conflicts, Escuela Superior de Guerra (Higher College of War), 1996; Programme on International Law, Escuela de Guerra Naval (Naval War College), 1996; Report on the Practice of Algeria, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

[420] Australia, Joint Military Operations and Plans Division of the ADF, Assessment of the Military Implications of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, September 1984, Series No. AA-A1838/376, File No. AA-1710/10/3/1 Pt 2, §§ 12 and 15, see also § 23.

375. Enumerating the matters which Australia believed must receive priority attention in the outcomes of the 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995, the head of the Australian delegation noted that:

All States must take effective action to disseminate the law [of armed conflict] within their armed forces . . . States and relevant international organizations must work together to ensure that dissemination programs are given the highest priority in terms of funding and materials.[421]

376. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council concerning the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, Australia stated that:

Practical measures can be taken by Governments to promote understanding and observance of international humanitarian law within their own communities, especially among military and security forces . . . including by disseminating information about international humanitarian law.[422]

377. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Austria pledged to "strengthen its efforts to provide internationally deployed members of the armed forces with training in international humanitarian law".[423]

378. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Belarus pledged to "continue the dissemination of information on the fundamental norms and principles of [IHL] among the population of the Republic of Belarus as well as among military forces personnel and attached to them medical and religious staff".[424]

379. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Belgium, jointly with the Belgian Red Cross, pledged to:

implement training programmes in international humanitarian law targeted at those who are most directly concerned by the application of and respect for this body of law, namely . . . the armed forces:

. . .

2. The armed forces not only have advisers in the law of armed conflict, but training in international humanitarian law is given at every level. Because of the increasing number of international operations under way, in particular those relating to peace-keeping and peace-making, it has become necessary to supplement the training already given with practical experience in applying international humanitarian law and improved knowledge of relations between

[421] Australia, Statement at the 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, reprinted in Australian Year Book of International Law, Vol. 17, 1996, p. 787.

[422] Australia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 6.

[423] Austria, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

[424] Belarus, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

> the military and humanitarian workers. Accordingly, instruction in this subject will be given as part of the preparations for each departure on such an operation, and exercises on this material will be systematically included in training and manoeuvres.[425]

380. In 1987, Benin's Ministry of Defence and Popular Armed Forces established a committee for the supervision of the dissemination of IHL in the armed forces, the task of which being "the promotion and supervision of the dissemination of the principles of the law of war in the units of the Popular Armed Forces".[426]

381. In 1991, by way of a service note, the Ministry of National Defence of Benin instituted the teaching of IHL in the school and training centres of the armed forces of Benin.[427]

382. In 1999, the Bolivian military authorities began to provide instruction in IHL for the armed forces as part of the teaching programmes at military academies and other institutions.[428]

383. It is reported that in 1993 the new Herzegovinan Chief of Staff, in response to international criticism of the destruction of the Mostar Bridge by the Bosnian Croat forces, distributed to his officers and soldiers a brochure describing international provisions regarding IHL, war crimes and the protection of cultural heritage and POWs.[429]

384. According to the Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the "training of all members of armed forces should be organized on a regular basis in order to disseminate the rules of international law of war".[430]

385. According to the Report on the Practice of Brazil, the government of Brazil has distributed an ICRC booklet on the essential rules of IHL to the members of its armed forces.[431]

386. In a decree in 1994, Burkina Faso's Ministry of State and of Defence stated that "the teaching of international humanitarian law (IHL) in the Armed Forces is mandatory. It is disseminated at all levels of military hierarchy and forms an integral part of every programme of instruction, training or instruction."[432]

[425] Belgium, Pledge made together with the Belgian Red Cross at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[426] Benin, Ministry of Defence and Popular Armed Forces, Service Note No. 468/MDFAP/DGM/DEP, 13 July 1987.
[427] Benin, Ministry of National Defence, Service Note No. 91-0034/EMA/BESS, 22 February 1991.
[428] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 15.
[429] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Committee on Culture and Education, Fourth information report on war damage to the cultural heritage in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, Doc. 6999, 19 January 1994, p. 23, § 71.
[430] Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2000, Chapter 1.6.
[431] Report on the Practice of Brazil, 1997, Chapter 6.6, referring to Folheto de difusão das normas essenciais do direito internacional humanitário (DIH) entre as Forcas Armadas, 30 March 1995.
[432] Burkina Faso, Ministry of State and of Defence, Decree No. 94-0125/DEF/CAB, 26 December 1994.

387. In a decree in 1995, Burkina Faso's Ministry of State and of Defence established a unit for the dissemination of IHL with the task, inter alia, of teaching and disseminating IHL within the armed forces.[433]

388. In 1999, Burkina Faso's Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the ICRC, in co-operation with the Burkinabé Red Cross Society, held the first national seminar on implementation of IHL. The seminar, inter alia, urged Burkina Faso to step up IHL training for the armed forces. A workshop was also held by the ICRC Advisory Service and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs for government officials on specific issues, such as the application of IHL to non-international armed conflict, the 1997 Ottawa Convention and the 1998 ICC Statute. Another workshop organised the same year by the ICRC and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was held on the obligation of States to adopt legislation giving effect to the Geneva Conventions, their Additional Protocols and the 1997 Ottawa Convention.[434]

389. In a directive in 1994, Cameroon's Ministry of Defence stated that:

> Military instruction must . . . fully integrate this new topic [IHL and LOAC] which it is imperative to teach . . . This instruction must figure . . . on the table of jobs of the units. A wider dissemination of the [Instructors' Manual] will be carried out so that every unit possesses it.[435]

390. The 1997 Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia stated that:

> The training plan for Operation Cordon did not adequately provide for sufficient and appropriate training in relation to several non-combat skills that are essential for peacekeeping, including: . . . the Law of Armed Conflict, including arrest and detention procedures . . . The failure of the training plan to provide adequately for these non-combat skills arose primarily from the lack of any doctrine recognizing the need for such training, and the lack of supporting training materials and standards.[436]

The report also stated that:

> The CF is obliged under international law to provide training in the LOAC . . . Documents that we have received indicate that in the mid-1980s, individual non-commissioned members within the CF were expected to have a "basic knowledge" of the Geneva Conventions, including treatment of prisoners of war and civilian detainees. Field officers attending the Command and Staff College would have received three hours of training in the LOAC in the mid-1980s, and some majors and most lieutenant-colonels would receive a full day session on the LOAC and ROE.

[433] Burkina Faso, Ministry of State and of Defence, Decree No. 95-0026/DEF/CAB, Articles 1 and 3, 1 March 1995.
[434] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 16.
[435] Cameroon, Ministry of Defence, Directive No. 00280/DV/MINDEF/1043, 14 February 1994.
[436] Canada, Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Public Works and Government Services Canada – Publishing, Ottawa, 1997, pp. 586 and ES-27.

According to the CF, there is considerable LOAC training taking place within the CF but it is not well co-ordinated.

...

- In 1992, there was insufficient training in the CF generally on the Law of Armed Conflict (LOAC). This in turn resulted from a lack of institutional commitment within the CF regarding a systematic and thorough dissemination of the LOAC to all its members...
- There was a serious lack of training on the LOAC during the pre-deployment training for Somalia, as evidenced by the soldier's confusion in theatre over how to treat detainees once they were captured.
- The lack of attention to the LOAC and its dissemination demonstrates a profound failure of the CF leadership, both in adequate preparation of Canadian troops sent to Somalia, and in Canada's obligation to respect the elementary principles of international law in the field of armed conflict.[437]

However, the report further stated that:

In making recommendations on training, we are mindful of the developments that have occurred in the Canadian Forces since the incidents in Somalia in March 1993... We... certainly endorse the specific attention being given to the Law of Armed Conflict and rules of engagement, and the increased emphasis on humanitarian and legal aspects of operations.[438]

391. The Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, recommended with respect to the training of the armed forces for peacekeeping missions, inter alia, that:

21.8 The Chief of the Defence Staff oversee the development of specialist expertise within the Canadian Forces in training in the Law of Armed Conflict and the rules of engagement...
21.9 The Chief of the Defence Staff ensure that the time and resources necessary for training a unit to a state of operational readiness be assessed before committing that unit's participation in a peace support operation.
...
21.14 The Chief of the Defence Staff establish mechanisms to ensure that all members of units preparing for deployment on peace support operations receive sufficient and appropriate training on the local culture, history, and politics of the theatre of operations, together with refresher training on negotiation and conflict resolution and the Law of Armed Conflict.
21.15 The Chief of the Defence Staff establish in doctrine and policy that no unit be declared operationally ready unless all its members have received sufficient and appropriate training on mission-specific rules of engagement and steps have been taken to establish that the rules of engagement are fully understood.

[437] Canada, Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Public Works and Government Services Canada – Publishing, Ottawa, 1997, pp. 613–615.

[438] Canada, Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Public Works and Government Services Canada – Publishing, Ottawa, 1997, pp. 625–626.

21.16 The Chief of Defence Staff ensure that training standards and programs provide that training in the Law of Armed Conflict, rules of engagement, cross-cultural relations, and negotiation and conflict resolution be scenario-based and integrated into training exercises, in addition to classroom instruction or briefings, to permit the practice of skills and to provide a mechanism for confirming that instructions have been fully understood.[439]

392. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Chile pledged to "maintain and develop the study of international humanitarian law as part of regular armed forces instruction".[440]

393. In 1999, training in IHL was provided to the Chilean armed forces as part of the curricula at military academies and other institutions.[441]

394. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, official correspondence was exchanged in the 1990s between Chile's National Committee on Humanitarian Law, an interministerial committee established with the aim of studying and proposing measures for the concrete application of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols, and the Ministry of National Defence reporting on the teaching of IHL within the armed forces.[442]

395. The Report on the Practice of China notes that the PLA has published manuals and collections since 1954 compiling the main international conventions relative to the law of war and has distributed them to the armed forces. According to the report, regulations and orders of the PLA in China provide that officers and soldiers must be organised to study international law and the Geneva Conventions and must be familiar with the principles and rules of the Geneva Conventions.[443]

396. A directive issued in 1995 by the Colombian Ministry of National Defence stated, under the heading "Initial measures", that "to achieve these objectives the Ministry of National Defence has taken the following action: . . . Training and instruction in human rights and international humanitarian law within the Armed Forces and the National Police are being substantially increased."[444] It further stated that:

The Armed Forces and the National Police shall draw up, by 30 September 1995, a national programme of training and instruction in human rights and international humanitarian law for all their members, for civilian personnel attached to them and [439] Canada, Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Public Works and Government Services Canada – Publishing, Ottawa, 1997, pp. 628–631, Recommendations No. 21(8), 21(9), 21(14), 21(15) and 21(16).

[440] Chile, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

[441] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 20.

[442] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

[443] Report on the Practice of China, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

[444] Colombia, Ministry of National Defence, Permanent Directive No. 024, Development of Government Policy relating to Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law at the Ministry of National Defence, 5 July 1995, Section 3(C)(5).

for military Judge Advocates, in coordination with the Human Rights Secretariat of this Ministry.[445]

In addition, the directive stated that:

Directors of training schools for the Armed Forces and National Police shall be responsible for the education of their students in human rights and international humanitarian law and shall conduct all the activities necessary for implementation of the national training programme referred to in [Section 4(B)(1) above].[446]

397. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Congo pledged to "promote the basic principles of international humanitarian law in the training of military personnel (in partnership)".[447]
398. In 1999, the Croatian Ministry of Defence, in conjunction with the ICRC, held a seminar on the law of armed conflict for senior officers.[448]
399. According to the Report on the Practice of Croatia, training in IHL is provided in the Military Academy and during military service.[449]
400. According to the Report on the Practice of Cuba, the Centre for International Humanitarian Law Studies was established in November 1994. Since then, the Ministry of the Armed Forces has supported its operations by providing graduates of the IIHL in San Remo as instructors and by authorising and requiring senior officers to take part in the courses. IHL is also taught in military academies for officers and cadets and is the subject of courses for privates and sergeants. The Ministry of Internal Order sends officials to these courses systematically.[450]
401. In 1999, the Egyptian government, in cooperation with the National Red Crescent Society, the League of Arab States and the ICRC, organised a regional seminar commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Geneva Conventions. The seminar adopted the Cairo Declaration, which urges Arab countries to implement IHL and set up national committees on IHL.[451]
402. According to the Report on the Practice of Egypt, IHL is taught in military camps and military institutions in cooperation with the ICRC. The report also notes that in 1991, the Egyptian Ministry of Defence published a manual entitled "Basic Principles of the Law of War and International Humanitarian Law".[452]

[445] Colombia, Ministry of National Defence, Permanent Directive No. 024, Development of Government Policy relating to Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law at the Ministry of National Defence, 5 July 1995, Section 4(B)(1).
[446] Colombia, Ministry of National Defence, Permanent Directive No. 024, Development of Government Policy relating to Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law at the Ministry of National Defence, 5 July 1995, Section 4(C)(4).
[447] Congo, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[448] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 23.
[449] Report on the Practice of Croatia, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[450] Report on the Practice of Cuba, 1998, Chapter 6.6.
[451] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 24.
[452] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

403. In 1999, efforts were made by El Salvador to encourage the inclusion of IHL in training programmes for the armed and security forces of El Salvador.[453]
404. According to the Report on the Practice of El Salvador, a small handbook on basic rules of IHL was distributed by the National Red Cross Society to members of the armed forces of El Salvador.[454]
405. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Estonia pledged to "continue dissemination of IHL in armed forces".[455]
406. In 1996, in a report on the implementation of IHL in Ethiopia, the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs stated that:

> After the formation of a Federal Government the Federal army had taken steps to disseminate and educate the rules of International Humanitarian Laws to its members on a regular basis. To this effect the preparation of a new army training curriculum has been finalized and is in the implementation phase, with rules of international humanitarian law at its centrepiece.[456]

407. In a note in 1992, the French Ministry of Defence highlighted its cooperation with the ICRC in the production of an audio-visual document on the Geneva Conventions intended for distribution among the armed forces.[457]
408. In a directive issued in 2000 on the dissemination of the law of armed conflict within the armed forces, the French Ministry of Defence stated that "since . . . 1991, significant efforts have been made. The fundamental basics of the law of armed conflict figure systematically in the cursus of military education, during both initial training and advanced courses". The directive also provides that further measures, such as the production of videos and CD-Roms and training at the IIHL in San Remo, must be taken in order to reinforce the implementation of IHL within the framework of the armed forces. In the same instrument, the Ministry of Defence, with respect to the LOAC Teaching Note (2000) attached to the directive, asks that it be disseminated within the French armed forces, as widely as possible and down to the most basic level.[458]
409. In 1999, at a seminar on national implementation of IHL, organised by the ICRC, the Gambia Red Cross Society and the Gambian Department of State for Justice, the participants encouraged the authorities to increase IHL training for the armed forces.[459]
410. In 1973, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the protection of human rights in times of armed conflict, the FRG

[453] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 25.
[454] Report on the Practice of El Salvador, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[455] Estonia, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[456] Ethiopia, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, General Information on Measures Taken at National Level to Implement International Humanitarian Law Instruments in Ethiopia, 1996, p. 19.
[457] France, Ministry of Defence, Note No. 432/DEF/EMA/OL.2/NP, 16 March 1992.
[458] France, Ministry of Defence, Directive No. 147, 4 January 2000.
[459] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 28.

stated that it thought "it necessary to promote the wider dissemination of international humanitarian law".[460]

411. At the CDDH, the FRG stated that:

> The development of international humanitarian law would be merely theoretical unless vigorous efforts for a better dissemination, application and enforcement of international humanitarian law were undertaken at the same time. His government believed that it was by no means unrealistic to demand that armed forces and civil defence organizations should be thoroughly familiar with the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts.[461]

412. At the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, Germany stated that "international humanitarian law must become the basis for the training of all members of armed forces".[462]

413. In reply to a formal question from a member of parliament in 1996, a German Minister of State, referring to Article 83(1) AP I and Article 19 AP II, stated that:

> The Federal Government supports the dissemination of International Humanitarian Law in all areas and at all levels of state. It hereby fulfils its duties resulting from international public law. The four Geneva Conventions and the two Additional Protocols oblige all contracting parties to disseminate the wording of the Conventions as widely as possible ... This shall be done in particular by [providing] training programmes for the armed forces ... Military and civil offices shall, in times of an armed conflict [and] with regard to their responsibilit[ies], be entirely familiar with the wording of the Conventions and the Additional Protocols ... Since the [coming into] existence of the Bundeswehr [the Federal armed forces], the transmission of knowledge about International Humanitarian Law has formed an integral part of the training and further education of all soldiers.[463]

The Minister went on to outline the different levels of training provided for the armed forces: troops received instructions as laid down in the Military Manual; trainee sergeants and officers received IHL education as one of the main parts of their training; special training was given to members of the armed forces who participated in UN contingents, conducted immediately before the deployment of the troops; and teachers of law and legal advisers also participated in seminars on IHL, often held in cooperation with international partners. The Minister also listed a number of official regulations and teaching materials used for the education of soldiers.[464]

[460] FRG, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/28/SR.1452, 3 December 1973, § 43.
[461] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. V, CDDH/SR.13, 6 March 1974, § 28.
[462] Germany, Statement at the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August 1–September 1993, Bulletin, No. 69, Presse- und Informationsamt der Bundesregierung, Bonn, 4 September 1993, p. 733.
[463] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Reply of a Minister of State to a parliamentary question, 20 November 1996, BT-Drucksache 13/6197, 22 November 1996, p. 2.
[464] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Reply of a Minister of State to a parliamentary question, 20 November 1996, BT-Drucksache 13/6197, 22 November 1996, pp. 2–4.

414. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Greece pledged:

To enhance dissemination of international humanitarian law:
- by reviewing existing educational and training curricula so as to integrate international humanitarian law into the Hellenic armed forces, security forces, universities, schools, media and public administration.
- by providing training in international humanitarian law, the role and the mandate of the humanitarian organizations to military and security forces, administration and member[s] of NGO's or volunteers participating in international missions.[465]

415. In 1999, various national Greek authorities, including the Hellenic Armed Forces and the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, of Justice and of Education, made commitments to enhance awareness and knowledge of IHL among various groups (the military, diplomats, judges, lawyers, detention personnel, students and youth in general).[466]

416. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Guatemala pledged to "pursue its policy to train armed forces members in international humanitarian law, with the help of the ICRC's training guidelines and material".[467]

417. In 1977, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Honduras stated that "equally important [was Resolution] 21 . . . of the [CDDH], relating to the dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law".[468]

418. The Report on the Practice of India notes that a Military Law Institute was established in 1996 and states that:

The members of the armed forces are adequately trained in humanitarian law and human rights law at the time of recruitment as well as while in service. The Geneva Conventions form part of training manuals. In addition, they are trained in human rights norms especially in view of the fact that they may be required to deal with civilians in times of internal conflicts . . . The police personnel are trained in human rights while undergoing training in police academies . . . The police personnel are not specifically trained in humanitarian law.[469]

419. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Indonesia pledged to "intensify the dissemination and education in

[465] Greece, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[466] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 32.
[467] Guatemala, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[468] Honduras, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/32/SR.16, 13 October 1977, § 60.
[469] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

International Humanitarian Law and the works of humanitarian organizations to . . . military forces".[470]

420. According to the Report on the Practice of Indonesia, teaching of IHL is offered at all levels of training and education of the Indonesian armed forces.[471]

421. According to the Report on the Practice of Iraq, IHL is taught in Iraqi military colleges.[472]

422. In 1999, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Israel stated that:

> There are practical steps that every signatory to the Fourth Geneva Convention can adopt in order to ensure greater respect and adherence to its provisions. First, States have a responsibility to educate their peoples regarding the importance of international humanitarian law in general. This should not be confined to the small community of legal experts in foreign ministries and universities who write on this subject. States should disseminate information about the Fourth Geneva Convention even before they became involved in armed conflicts. For example, the Fourth Geneva Convention should be included in military training. In fact, the provisions of the Convention should be included in the staff orders of every soldier, which is the practice of the Israel Defence Forces.[473]

423. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF carries out extensive training of military personnel in the field of the laws of war, with the aim of ensuring that "all IDF personnel have at least a basic understanding of the humanitarian principles and other principles governing armed conflict". All such instruction is the responsibility of the IDF's Military Advocate-General's Corps and is carried out by the IDF's International Law Department and the International Law Section of the IDF Military Law School. The report also notes that "the IDF has a policy of cooperating with the ICRC in the dissemination of the Laws of War. In this context, the IDF enables representatives of the ICRC to present lectures in various IDF schools and courses."[474]

424. In 1997, in its final report on the events in Somalia, the Italian Government Commission of Inquiry emphasised the need for special training in IHL and human rights law for the forces participating in peacekeeping operations.[475]

425. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, IHL is taught to the Jordanian armed forces and to the Jordanian contingents engaged in UN peacekeeping missions.[476]

426. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, South Korea pledged to "continue and enhance our International

[470] Indonesia, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[471] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[472] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 6.6.
[473] Israel, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3980 (Resumption 1) (Provisional), 22 February 1999, p. 11.
[474] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[475] Italy, Government Commission of Inquiry, Final Report on the Events in Somalia, 8 August 1997, pp. 44–45.
[476] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

Humanitarian Law education of military forces, especially those being sent on missions abroad".[477]

427. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, the Kuwaiti armed forces have allowed the ICRC to organise several seminars and conferences on IHL. The report, which refers to a notice of the National Guard General Headquarters (Military Authority) and a note of the Kuwaiti Ministry of Defence, also states that brochures on IHL have been disseminated within the armed forces of Kuwait.[478]

428. The Report on the Practice of Kuwait refers to a commentary on the draft Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims made in 1993 by the Kuwaiti Ministry of Justice which states that "instruction of IHL should be comprehensive, not restricted to the fundamental or essential rules only".[479]

429. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, the government of Laos, jointly with the Lao Red Cross Society, pledged "to conduct National workshop/seminars in giving orientation/dissemination on International Humanitarian Law".[480]

430. According to the Report on the Practice of Lebanon, which refers to a speech of the Director General of the Lebanese Ministry of Justice made at a regional meeting in 1997, IHL is taught in Lebanese military schools.[481]

431. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Madagascar pledged "to use all means available to improve dissemination of international humanitarian law at the national level".[482]

432. In 1999, Malawi's Ministry of Defence, the Law Commissioner, the ICRC and the National Red Cross Society held a seminar on national implementation of IHL. Among other things, the seminar encouraged Malawi to intensify IHL instruction for members of the Malawi Defence Force and include the subject in training programmes for the police, prison and immigration services and in university curricula.[483]

433. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, no national legislation imposes a duty on the Malaysian authorities to teach IHL to every member of the security forces. However, the report, referring to an interview with the [477] South Korea, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

[478] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[479] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 6.6, referring to Remarks and proposals of the Ministry of Justice concerning the Project of the Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993.
[480] Laos, Pledge made together with the Lao Red Cross at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[481] Report on the Practice of Lebanon, 1998, Chapter 6.6, referring to a Speech of the Director General of the Ministry of Justice, Regional meeting on the implementation of IHL, Amman, 21–22 December 1997.
[482] Madagascar, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[483] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 44.

Ministry of Home Affairs, states that efforts have been made by the armed forces to disseminate knowledge of the Geneva Conventions, that the armed forces organise courses on the LOAC to train "selected members of the Armed Forces to enable these members to brief or give lectures to other members of the Armed Forces" and that selected members of the armed forces are sent to attend courses in IHL in international institutions such as the IIHL in San Remo. The report further states that some dissemination activities are also carried out by the Malaysian National Red Crescent Society and that Malaysian officers of the armed forces sent on peacekeeping operations are taught the principles of the Geneva Conventions at a Malaysian Armed Forces Peacekeeping Centre.[484]

434. In 1999, IHL training was included in the programmes of Mali's military academies, and a Military Code of Conduct adopted by the Ministry of Defence was distributed to members of the armed forces.[485]

435. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Mozambique pledged to "undertake efforts aimed at disseminating and promoting the International Humanitarian Law in the Army, Security Forces [and] Police".[486]

436. According to high-ranking officers of the army of the Netherlands, soldiers are required to study IHL in theory and in practice during their entire career. During operational training, attention is devoted to IHL and theory is repeated. Courses are given to senior personnel of all units of the armed forces (army, air force and navy) at brigade level. The courses consist of case studies. Considerable attention is devoted to the study of norms and ethics, as it is supposed that IHL should be instinctive.[487]

437. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Dutch Parliament in the context of the ratification procedure of the CCW, the government of the Netherlands stated that every soldier in the Netherlands received training in IHL.[488]

438. In 1999, during a debate in the UN Security Council, New Zealand noted that "the dissemination of international humanitarian law needs our fullest support, so that the knowledge of the basic rules governing armed conflict and human rights spreads to all those who bear arms" and stressed that this was of "fundamental importance".[489]

439. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Niger pledged to "ensure that armed forces taking part in international

[484] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[485] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 45.
[486] Mozambique, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[487] Report on the Practice of Netherlands, 1997, Interview with two high-ranking officers of the Royal Netherlands Army staff, both legal advisors, Chapter 6.6.
[488] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum for the ratification of the CCW, 1983–1984 Session, Doc. 18 278 (R 1248), Nos. 1–3, p. 9.
[489] New Zealand, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3980 (Provisional), 22 February 1999, p. 15.

missions receive instruction in international humanitarian law and the activities of humanitarian organizations".[490]

440. In 1999, the ICRC and the Ministry of Justice of Niger held a training seminar for government officials on IHL and its implementation.[491]

441. According to an academic report on the level of implementation of IHL in Nigeria, the Directorate of Legal Services of the army is responsible for dissemination, education and advice on matters relating to IHL. This report also states that, in 1996, the Nigerian army was in the process of producing a series of instruction manuals on various aspects of IHL intended to be incorporated and used at the training courses of officers at various levels. It also notes that the Nigerian army sponsors officers to participate in courses in IHL abroad, such as at the IIHL in San Remo.[492]

442. The Report on the Practice of Nigeria states that no normative practice relative to the duty to instruct members of the armed forces in IHL was found. However, it mentions brochures/manuals on IHL published by the Nigerian armed forces.[493]

443. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Norway and the Norwegian Red Cross pledged:

> to co-operate on the development of new IHL training programmes for the Norwegian Armed Forces . . . with the aim to:
> – Further motivate the integration of IHL as an obligatory component in military exercises, maneuvers, and training programs on all levels > – Ensure that the Norwegian armed forces hold the highest possible standards with regard to respect for and integration of IHL and > – Contribute to the development of model IHL training concepts with potential international applications.[494]

444. According to the Report on the Practice of Pakistan, IHL is taught in Pakistani military colleges. The report also states that cooperation has been established between the ICRC local mission and the Pakistani Army General Headquarters for the dissemination of IHL.[495]

445. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Peru pledged to "strengthen and gradually expand the incorporation of international humanitarian law into the instruction provided to armed and police forces members".[496]

[490] Niger, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[491] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 51.
[492] Itse E. Sagay, Evaluation/Assessment of the Level of Implementation of International Humanitarian Law in Nigeria, Paper presented at the National Seminar on the implementation of humanitarian law in Nigeria, Lagos, 13 August 1996, pp. 20–21.
[493] Report on the Practice of Nigeria, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[494] Norway, Pledge made together with the Norwegian Red Cross at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[495] Report on the Practice of Pakistan, 1998, Chapter 6.6.
[496] Peru, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

446. According to the Report on the Practice of Peru, which refers to Peru's military manuals and other teaching materials for the armed forces produced by the Peruvian Ministry of Defence in the 1990s, principles of IHL applicable to international and non-international conflicts are taught to the Peruvian armed forces.[497]

447. The Guidelines on Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP, issued in 1989 by the Office of the Chief of Staff of the armed forces of the Philippines, states that:

> The nature of human rights violations including its legal implications and consequences should be inculcated repeatedly to the troops. The rule of law and respect for the dignity of man which are the foundations of human rights should be emphasized in conferences, seminars, dialogues, troop information sessions, and regular training courses.[498]

448. An order issued in 1995 by the President of the Philippines provides that:

> The Department of Interior and Local Government, the Department of Justice and the Department of National Defence are hereby directed to include, as an integral part of the continuing education and training of their personnel, the study of human rights as conducted by the Commission on Human Rights. Said human rights education and training shall also include the various international treaties and conventions on human rights to which the Philippines is a party.[499]

449. According to the Report on the Practice of the Philippines, which refers to a publication of 1996, subjects or courses dealing with international conventions, agreements, declarations or covenants on human rights and IHL ratified by the Philippines or of which the Philippines is a signatory are to be included in the curriculum of the armed forces of the Philippines and of the Philippine National Police.[500]

450. In 1999, Poland held several seminars and courses for military officers. The Polish Ministry of Defence issued new material for teaching the international law of armed conflict to non-commissioned officers and private soldiers. In addition, an agreement on dissemination of IHL was signed between the Ministry of Defence of Poland and the ICRC.[501]

451. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Russia pledged to "broaden the campaign of dissemination of the [497] Report on the Practice of Peru, 1998, Chapter 6.6.

[498] Philippines, Ministry of National Defence, Office of the Chief of Staff, Guidelines on Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP, 2 January 1989, § 2(3).

[499] Philippines, The President, Memorandum Order No. 259, Requiring Human Rights Education and Training of Law Enforcement, Police, Military and Prison Personnel, 7 February 1995.

[500] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 6.6, referring to Human Rights Curriculum for AFP/PNP, Unit 2 Course No. 8: Your Rights and the Rights of Others in Times of Armed Conflict, cited in R. P. Claude, Educating for Human Rights: The Philippines and Beyond, 1996, p. 256.

[501] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 54.

International Humanitarian Law and, in particular, among the military who participate in the international peace-keeping operations".[502]

452. On the basis of replies by army officers to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Rwanda, states that, during the period 1990–1994, soldiers of the RPF received basic instruction in IHL, and a military manual was issued. The report also notes that, with the agreement of the Rwandan authorities, training of officers of the armed forces in IHL is carried out by the ICRC.[503]

453. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Slovenia pledged "support to the dissemination of the Geneva Conventions with Additional Protocols and other instruments of International Humanitarian Law within armed and security forces".[504]

454. In 1999, a course on IHL was organised in Slovenia, in cooperation with the ICRC's regional delegation, for officers and instructors of the Centre for Military Academies and the Staff College of the Republic of Slovenia.[505]

455. South Africa's White Paper on National Defence of 1996, which presents the defence policy of the Government of National Unity, provides that:

> 31. Education and training programmes within the SANDF are a cardinal means of building and maintaining a high level of professionalism. In this regard, the [interim] Constitution [of 1994] provides that all members of the SANDF "shall be properly trained in order to comply with international standards of competency".
> ...
> 35. Education and training will also play an essential role in developing the political and ethical dimensions of military professionalism. To this end, the Minister will oversee the design and implementation of a civic education programme on "defence in a democracy" ...
> 36. The mission of the civic education programme is to instil respect amongst military personnel and other members of the DOD for the core values of a democratic South Africa through appropriate education and training. These values derive principally from the Constitution. They include respect for human rights, the rights and duties of soldiers, the rule of law, international law, non-partisanship, non-discrimination, and civil supremacy over the armed forces.
> 37. The programme will cover the following subjects: ... international law on armed conflicts ...
> 38. This programme will extend to all members of the DOD but will necessarily be tailored according to function and rank ...
> ...

[502] Russia, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[503] Report on the Practice of Rwanda, 1997, Replies by army officers to a questionnaire, Chapter 6.6.
[504] Slovenia, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[505] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 57.

41. The SANDF, together with the International Committee of the Red Cross, is currently developing a comprehensive curriculum on international humanitarian law and international law on armed conflict.[506]

456. In a paper entitled "Presentation of the South African Approach to International Humanitarian Law" produced in the late 1990s, the South African government emphasised that:

It is acknowledged today that the armed formations which now comprise the South African National Defence Force (SANDF) were all guilty, to a greater or lesser extent, of human rights abuses during the apartheid era. None of these forces were trained and orientated to serve a democracy, nor to apply International Humanitarian Law in their operations . . .

One of the major initiatives was a clear commitment by the Government in its White Paper on Defence . . . [One of the statements therein] was the Government's undertaking . . . that it was prepared to institutionalise International Humanitarian Law in the military's training.

The other initiative was the process to ensure that the SANDF incorporated International Humanitarian Law into its training. This initiative was in fact launched during the transitional period just prior to the April 1994 elections . . .

The SA Army has . . . held a successful instructor's course during August 1997 where 55 instructors were qualified, using material supplied originally by the ICRC. This was followed by an instruction for all Commanders and formations to start training in IHL. Furthermore, the SA Army has drawn up curricula for all the personnel development courses, starting from the basic military course up to the senior staff course. Training has already commenced on most of these courses.[507]

457. In a training order issued in 1997, the South African Department of Defence stated that:

In September 1997, the Minister of Defence authorised the Civic Education Guidelines and programme, after the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Defence had reviewed the contents and provided their approval . . . All members of the Department of Defence are to receive training in civic education as contained in the Guidelines, as approved by Parliament . . . The introduction of [the LOAC Manual (1996)] has already been commenced with under separate instruction and with the assistance of the representative of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). The training in International Humanitarian Law/Law of Armed Conflict which has already been introduced is to be harmonized with the complete civic education programme . . . Arms of the Service are also to introduce International Humanitarian Law/Law of Armed Conflict on those courses, other than formative courses, where it is appropriate, such as operational courses.[508]

[506] South Africa, Minister of Defence, Defence in a Democracy, White Paper on National Defence for the Republic of South Africa, 8 May 1996, Chapter 3, §§ 31, 35–38 and 41.

[507] South Africa, SANDF, Presentation on the South African Approach to International Humanitarian Law, CPERS/DPD/103/1/B (undated), Report on the Practice of South Africa, 1997, Chapter 6.6, Annex.

[508] South Africa, Department of Defence, Training Order 1/1/97: Introduction of Civic Education in the Department of Defence, C PERS/DPD/R/103/1/B, C PERS/DPD/R/103/2, September 1997, §§ 2–3 and 7–8.

458. In a speech in 1998, the South African Minister of Defence stated that "[1998] sees the implementation of our Civic Education Programme. The programme will assist our members in becoming familiar with: . . . International Humanitarian Law".[509]

459. In 1999, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the UN Decade of International Law, South Africa stated that "States should work to instil a culture of compliance [with rules of IHL], in particular by training soldiers in humanitarian law".[510]

460. The Report on the Practice of South Africa refers to an opening address at a UN human rights seminar by the South African Deputy Minister of Defence in which he emphasised that training for the armed forces should cover both international human rights standards as well as IHL, since the armed forces were likely to intervene in situations not covered by the Geneva Conventions or the Additional Protocols. He referred to the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials.[511]

461. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Spain pledged to "continue organising training courses in international humanitarian law, in cooperation with the Committee of the Spanish Red Cross, for the leaders and officers of the armed forces of Iberoamerican, African and eastern European countries".[512]

462. The Report on the Practice of Spain notes that IHL disseminated and taught in the Spanish armed forces includes the rules applicable in both international and internal armed conflicts.[513]

463. In 1999, members of the Swedish Defence Force received thorough instruction in IHL.[514]

464. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Switzerland pledged to "produce learning materials (CD-ROMs) on the law of armed conflicts, with the aim of facilitating instruction carried out by armed-forces commanders, whether of army corps, battalions or brigades" and to "improve the defence ministry's Website on the international law of armed conflict, in order to disseminate international humanitarian law more broadly".[515]

[509] South Africa, Minister of Defence, Speech delivered during the Parliamentary Media Briefing Week, 12 February 1998, Part III.

[510] South Africa, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/54/SR.10, 19 October 1999, § 76.

[511] Report on the Practice of South Africa, 1997, Chapter 6.6, referring to Deputy Minister of Defence, Presentation at the opening of a UN Human Rights Seminar, p. 3.

[512] Spain, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

[513] Report on the Practice of Spain, 1998, Chapter 6.6.

[514] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 61.

[515] Switzerland, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

465. The Report on the Practice of Syria states that Syria has cooperated with the National Red Crescent Society on a programme of intensive IHL courses for the armed forces since 1994.[516]

466. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Thailand pledged "to ensure that International Humanitarian Law and its Principles are integrated into the educational and training programme of armed forces".[517]

467. In 1993, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the UN programme of assistance in the teaching, study, dissemination and wider appreciation of international law, the representative of Trinidad and Tobago stated that:

> 11. Her delegation noted the growing interest in the legal aspects of peace-keeping operations . . . International humanitarian law had not yet been fully developed and greater emphasis should be placed on that issue during training programmes. Other issues, such as procurement of goods and services, privileges and immunities of members of the peace-keeping operations, personal injury, deaths and damage to property, could also be considered.
> 12. . . . She agreed that instead of codifying [the rules on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict], it would be more productive to ensure increased compliance with and wider dissemination of existing rules on the subject. Accordingly lectures and seminars had been organised in Trinidad and Tobago to familiarize members of the armed forces with the relevant provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 1949.[518]

468. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Turkey pledged to "provide training in International Humanitarian Law and the work of humanitarian organisations to the Turkish Military Forces and through the 'Partnership for peace (PFP) Training Center' in Ankara to the other countries' armed forces participating in PFP".[519]

469. The UK Ministry of Defence has produced a training video for UK soldiers containing a summary of basic principles of IHL.[520]

470. In a decree issued in 1992, the government of Uruguay entrusted the administration of IHL courses, in coordination with the National Committee on Humanitarian Law of the Ministry of National Defence, to the country's main military academy, Instituto Militar de Estudios Superiores, and in coordination with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, to the Instituto Artigas de

[516] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[517] Thailand, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[518] Trinidad and Tobago, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/48/SR.33, 19 November 1993, §§ 11–12.
[519] Turkey, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[520] UK, Ministry of Defence, Training Video: The Geneva Conventions, 1986, Report on UK Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

Relaciones Exteriores – Escuela Diplomática.[521] Courses on the law of war and public international law (including the law of armed conflict) are taught at the Instituto Militar de Estudios Superiores (courses for first-year students in the programme that trains officers), at the Escuela de Armas y Servicios (training and finishing programme for officers) and at the Escuela Militar (courses for future officers).[522] IHL instruction is also included in the law programme of the Escuela de Policía.[523]

471. The 1979 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program stated that "the Armed Forces of the U.S. shall institute and implement programs to prevent violations of the law of war to include training and dissemination, as required, by the Geneva Conventions".[524]

472. In 1987, a Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, referring to Articles 80–85 AP I, affirmed that "we support the principle that their study be included in programs of military instruction".[525]

473. In 1991, in response to an ICRC memorandum on the applicability of IHL in the Gulf region, the US Department of the Army stated that "the U.S. strongly supports [dissemination of IHL]. DoD Directive 5100.77, in implementation of U.S. law of war obligations, requires that all military personnel receive law of war training commensurate with their duties and responsibilities."[526]

474. The 1998 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program, reissuing the one of 1979 and aiming "to ensure DoD compliance with the law of war obligations of the United States", provided that "the Heads of the DoD Components shall: . . . institute and implement effective programs to prevent violations of the law of war, including law of war training and dissemination, as required by [the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) and the 1949 Geneva Conventions]".[527]

475. In an Order of 1988, on the basis of which the YPA Military Manual was issued, the Presidency of the SFRY stated that:

[521] Uruguay, Executive Decree No. 678 del PEN, Cométesa la instrumentación de Cursos en coordinación con la Comisión Nacional de Derecho Humanitario, 24 November 1992, Diario Oficial, 1 March 1993, pp. 498-A and 499-A.

[522] Uruguay, Instituto Militar de Estudios Superiores, Law of War Syllabus; Escuela de Armas y Servicios del Ejército, Public International Law Syllabus; Escuela Militar, Public International Law Syllabus; Report on the Practice of Uruguay, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

[523] Uruguay, Escuela de Policía Juan Carlos Gómez Folle, Human Rights Syllabus, Report on the Practice of Uruguay, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

[524] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, p. 2, Section E(1)(b).

[525] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

[526] US, Letter from the Department of the Army to the legal adviser of the US Army forces deployed in the Gulf region, 11 January 1991, § 8(S), Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

[527] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(3)(2).

Regular training of all personnel of the armed forces should be organised with the aim of learning the rules of international humanitarian law.

Plans for exercises, manoeuvres and other activities of the armed forces, the objective of which is to prepare them for combat action, should include activities and behaviour related to the implementation of rules of international humanitarian law.[528]

476. According to an academic report on the implementation of IHL in Zaire (DRC), in 1996, officers of the armed forces of Zaire (DRC) were trained in IHL within the framework of the training programme established in military training centres and schools or in seminars. Security seminars had also been provided by the FAZ for officers who operated in refugee camps.[529]

477. A ministerial directive of Zimbabwe requires the inclusion of IHL in all the Zimbabwean armed forces' training courses.[530]

478. In 1980 and again in 1994, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of a State formally committed itself to support the efforts of the ICRC in the dissemination of IHL among the armed forces. ICRC delegates had several meetings with governmental authorities on the means and methods of dissemination of IHL to the armed forces and to the civilian population.[531]

479. In 1990, an officer of a peacekeeping force undertook to introduce the "Rules for combatants" to his troops in an area concerned with an armed conflict. He added that he preferred using "Rules for peacekeeping forces". He did not, however, accept the organisation of dissemination sessions.[532]

480. In 1994, in the context of a military operation authorised by the UN, a high-ranking official of a State participating in the operation confirmed that its troops would respect IHL and stated that training in IHL, in cooperation with the ICRC, was provided for officers.[533]

481. In 1995, a spokesman for the General Staff of the Armed Forces of a State party to a non-international armed conflict acknowledged that field commanders did not have the time to teach IHL to the troops under their command. He emphasised that it was also difficult to change entrenched reflexes. The ICRC proposed setting up basic courses for new recruits, a proposal that was well received. Another officer considered that a series of simple rules posted in barracks and repeated each morning should be enough.[534]

482. In 1995, an official of the Ministry of Interior of a State stated – with respect to an armed conflict to which his country was a party – that he was not in favour of more or less permanent dissemination in the region of the conflict.

[528] SFRY (FRY), Presidency, Order on the implementation of the rules of international humanitarian law in the armed forces of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, 13 April 1988, § 4.
[529] Mavungu Mvumbi-di-Ngoma, Report on the Promotion and Implementation of International Humanitarian Law in the Republic of Zaire, September 1996, p. 20.
[530] ICRC, Advisory Service, 2001 Annual Report, Geneva, 2002, p. 137.
[531] ICRC archive documents.
[532] ICRC archive document.
[533] ICRC archive document.
[534] ICRC archive documents.

He would rather favour dissemination only to security forces of a certain level, and not to operational units.[535]

483. In 1996, the government of a State concerned by an internal armed conflict agreed to introduce IHL teaching in schools and among police forces.[536]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

484. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the protection of refugees, the UN Security Council requested that the UN Secretary-General:

> respond, as appropriate, to requests from African States, the OAU and subregional organizations for advice and technical assistance in the implementation of international refugee, human rights and humanitarian law relevant to the present resolution, including through appropriate training programmes and seminars.[537]

The Security Council also encouraged the Secretary-General and member States involved in efforts to enhance Africa's peacekeeping capacity:

> to continue to ensure that training gives due emphasis to international refugee, human rights and humanitarian law and in particular to the security of refugees and the maintenance of the civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements.[538]

485. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN Security Council underlined:

> the importance of the widest possible dissemination of international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law and of relevant training for, inter alia, civilian police, armed forces, members of the judicial and legal professions, civil society and personnel of international and regional organizations.[539]

486. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on protection of civilians in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council reiterated "the importance . . . of providing appropriate training in [IHL], including child and gender-related provisions, . . . to personnel involved in peacemaking, peacekeeping and peace-building activities". It also requested the UN Secretary-General "to disseminate appropriate guidance and to ensure that such United Nations personnel have the appropriate training" and urged "relevant Member States, as necessary and feasible, to disseminate appropriate instructions and to ensure that appropriate training is included in their programmes for personnel involved in similar activities".[540]

487. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all States "to disseminate widely

[535] ICRC archive document. [536] ICRC archive document.
[537] UN Security Council, Res. 1208, 19 November 1998, § 8.
[538] UN Security Council, Res. 1208, 19 November 1998, § 10.
[539] UN Security Council, Res. 1265, 17 September 1999, preamble.
[540] UN Security Council, Res. 1296, 19 April 2000, § 19.

information and to provide instruction concerning human rights in armed conflicts" and requested that the UN Secretary-General "encourage the study and teaching of principles of respect for human rights applicable in armed conflicts by the means at his disposal".[541]

488. In a resolution adopted in 1972 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties to armed conflicts "to provide instruction concerning [the international humanitarian rules which are applicable] to their armed forces". It requested that the UN Secretary-General "encourage the study and teaching of principles of respect for international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict".[542]

489. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly urged that "instruction concerning [international humanitarian] rules be provided to armed forces . . . with a view to securing their strict observance" and requested that the UN Secretary-General "encourage the study and teaching of principles of international humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts".[543]

490. In a resolution adopted in 1975 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called "the attention of the [CDDH], and of the Governments and organizations participating in it, to the need for measures to promote on a universal basis the dissemination of and instruction in the rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts".[544]

491. In a resolution adopted in 1977 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all States "to take effective steps for the dissemination of humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts".[545]

492. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, the UN General Assembly urged States "to take steps to incorporate the provisions of international law applicable to the protection of the environment into their military manuals and to ensure that they are effectively disseminated".[546]

493. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN General Assembly referred to the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict and invited:

> all States to disseminate widely the revised guidelines for military manuals and instructions on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict received from the International Committee of the Red Cross and to give due consideration to the possibility of incorporating them into their military manuals and other instructions addressed to their military personnel.[547]

[541] UN General Assembly, Res. 2852 (XXVI), 20 December 1971, §§ 6 and 7.
[542] UN General Assembly, Res. 3032 (XXVII), 18 December 1972, §§ 2–3.
[543] UN General Assembly, Res. 3102 (XXVIII), 12 December 1973, §§ 5 and 6.
[544] UN General Assembly, Res. 3500 (XXX), 15 December 1975, § 2; see also Res. 31/19, 24 November 1976, § 2.
[545] UN General Assembly, Res. 32/44, 8 December 1977, § 7.
[546] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/37, 25 November 1992, § 3.
[547] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/50, 9 December 1994, § 11.

494. In a resolution adopted in 1987, the UN Commission on Human Rights invited the government of Sri Lanka to "intensify its co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross in the fields of dissemination and promotion of international humanitarian law".[548]

495. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights encouraged the government of Guatemala to include in the curricula and training programmes for personnel of the armed forces and security forces the international commitments of Guatemala in the field of human rights.[549]

496. In resolutions adopted in 1994, 1995 and 1996 on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed "the first measures taken by the Government of Myanmar to provide for the training of military personnel in international humanitarian law" and requested it "to intensify its efforts in that regard and to extend them to police and prison personnel".[550]

497. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights encouraged:

> Governments, United Nations bodies and organs, the specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as appropriate, to initiate, coordinate or support programmes designed to train and educate military forces, law enforcement officers and government officials, as well as members of the United Nations peace-keeping or observer missions, on human rights and humanitarian law issues connected with their work.

It appealed "to the international community to support endeavours to that end".[551]

498. In a resolution adopted in 2000 concerning the situation in Chechnya, the UN Commission on Human Rights requested that the Russian government "disseminate, and ensure that the military at all levels has a knowledge of basic principles of human rights and international humanitarian law".[552]

499. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on human rights in times of armed conflict, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended that the UN Commission on Human Rights adopt a resolution calling upon all governments "to give particular attention to the education of all members of security and other armed forces, and all law enforcement agencies, in the international law of human rights and of humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts".[553]

500. In a resolution adopted in 1997 on respect for humanitarian and human rights law provisions in United Nations peacekeeping operations, the UN

[548] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1987/61, 12 March 1987, § 3.
[549] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/58, 4 March 1994, § 8.
[550] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/85, 9 March 1994, § 19; Res. 1995/72, 8 March 1995, § 22; Res. 1996/80, 23 April 1996, § 20.
[551] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/73, 8 March 1995, § 13.
[552] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2000/58, 25 April 2000, § 5.
[553] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/24, 31 August 1989, § 1.

Sub-Commission on Human Rights requested "the Secretary-General to disseminate the Guidelines for United Nations Forces Regarding Respect for International Humanitarian Law of 1996 drafted by the United Nations in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross".[554]

501. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights called upon States "to make possible respect for their obligations in situations of conflict by, inter alia: . . . adopting suitable instructions for and training of their armed forces so that they know that all forms of sexual violence and sexual slavery are criminal and will be prosecuted".[555]

502. In 1999, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General, referring, inter alia, to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols, stated that:

> In order to promote a "climate of compliance", Member States should take advantage of the technical services of United Nations bodies and other appropriate organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, . . . to develop strong national institutions charged with the dissemination, monitoring and enforcement of these instruments and to establish systematic training programmes for armed forces and police in international humanitarian, human rights and refugee law, including child rights and gender related provisions.[556]

The Secretary-General recommended that the UN Security Council:

> underscore the importance of compliance with international humanitarian and human rights law in the conduct of all peacekeeping operations by urging that Member States disseminate instructions among their personnel serving in United Nations peacekeeping operations and among those participating in authorized operations conducted under national or regional command and control.[557]

503. In 1999, in a report on the United Nations Decade of International Law, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

> The guidelines for United Nations forces regarding respect for international humanitarian law proposed by ICRC contain fundamental principles of humanitarian law and, as such, constitute a very good training tool for forces engaged in peacekeeping and enforcement missions.[558]

504. In 2001, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General urged Member States and donors "to support efforts to disseminate information on international humanitarian and human rights law

[554] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1997/34, 28 August 1997, § 3.
[555] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/16, 26 August 1999, § 11(a).
[556] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/1999/957, 8 September 1999, § 36.
[557] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/1999/957, 8 September 1999, § 61, Recommendation 30.
[558] UN Secretary-General, Report on the United Nations Decade of International Law, UN Doc. A/54/362, 21 September 1999, § 48.

to armed groups and initiatives to enhance their practical understanding of the implications of those rules".[559]

505. In 1997, in a report on the question of human rights in Myanmar, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that in Myanmar:

> military and law enforcement personnel, including prison guards, should be thoroughly informed and trained as to their responsibilities towards all persons in full accord with international human rights norms and humanitarian law. Such standards should be incorporated into Myanmar law, including the new constitution to be drafted.[560]

A similar recommendation had already been made in 1996.[561]

506. In 2000, in a report on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the Special Representative of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

> The Prosecutor [of Rwanda] has held seminars for officers on the promotion of humanitarian law and human rights with the help of the ICRC. He would like to hold more, but is constrained by a lack of funds. His office also publishes a monthly bulletin, Military Justice Gazette, six issues of which had appeared by June 2000 with all Articles in three languages . . . These important initiatives help to ensure the accountability of the armed forces.[562]

507. In 1996, in a report entitled "Making human rights a reality", the UN High Commissioner on Human Rights reported that in 1995, the UN Human Rights Field Operation in Rwanda (HRFOR) set up several programmes of dissemination, such as a consulting service for the administration of justice, human rights seminars and training in human rights and IHL for military and police forces.[563]

Other International Organisations

508. In a recommendation adopted in 1982, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stressed that "past experience in armed conflict has established the need for the Geneva Conventions and the two protocols to be disseminated as widely as possible in the armed forces". It recommended that the Committee of Ministers invite the governments of member States "to ensure that international humanitarian law becomes known by disseminating [559] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, Recommendation 10.

[560] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Myanmar, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/64, 6 February 1997, § 108, Recommendation 17.

[561] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Myanmar, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/65, 5 February 1996, § 180, Recommendation (o).

[562] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Representative on the Situation of Human Rights in Rwanda, Report, UN Doc. A/55/269, 4 August 2000, Annex, § 155.

[563] UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Report entitled "Making human rights a reality", UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/103, 18 March 1996, §§ 125–137.

and teaching the Geneva Conventions . . . and their protocols among the armed forces".[564]

509. In a resolution adopted in 1989, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stressed "the importance, as laid down in the Geneva Conventions, of making known as widely as possible, within states involved in conflict and most notably in their armed forces, the basic provisions and fundamental principles of international humanitarian law".[565]

510. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited governments to "promote the dissemination of international humanitarian law in their own countries, particularly among the armed forces and police".[566]

511. The Final Declaration of the Second Summit of Heads of State and Government of the Council of Europe in 1997 recalled "the protection due to victims of conflicts, as well as the importance of the respect for humanitarian international law and the knowledge of its rules at national level, in particular among the armed forces and the police".[567]

512. In a recommendation adopted in 1999 on respect for IHL in Europe, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe affirmed that States were responsible for disseminating the principles of IHL. It further pointed out that "those which have not yet done so should establish national interministerial commissions responsible for monitoring and implementing international humanitarian law, a task in which they are ably assisted by the ICRC". The Assembly recommended that the Committee of Ministers "invite the governments of the member states . . . to increase resources devoted to the dissemination of the principles of international humanitarian law, particularly among the armed forces, police and prison staff".[568]

513. The first OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1994, concluded that:

1. It is necessary to make an important effort in order to provide NGO's and soldiers in the armed forces of OAU Member States with appropriate teaching, many countries having already integrated the teaching of IHL in their programmes at officers level. This effort should not await the outbreak of hostilities.
2. There is need to ensure that the teaching of IHL is extended to all combatants, including the guerilla movements.[569]

The OAU Council of Ministers took note of the recommendations of the seminar.[570]

[564] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 945, 2 July 1982, §§ 10 and 11(b).
[565] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 921, 6 July 1989, § 18.
[566] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1085, 24 April 1996, § 8(h).
[567] Council of Europe, Second Summit of Heads of State and Government, Strasbourg, 10–11 October 1997, Final Declaration.
[568] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1427, 23 September 1999, §§ 4 and 8.
[569] OAU/ICRC, First seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 7 April 1994, Conclusions and Recommendations, §§ 1 and 2.
[570] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1526 (LX), 11 June 1994, § 1.

514. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the OAU Conference of African Ministers of Health called upon member States "to implement the educational and information programmes intended to popularize the International Humanitarian Law and the specific problems of armed conflicts".[571]

515. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on refugees, returnees and displaced persons, the OAU Council of Ministers urged member States "to uphold principles of good governance and promote the teaching and dissemination of International Humanitarian Law".[572]

516. The third OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1996, recommended "compilations, study and application of African traditional humanitarian norms especially through education and the adoption of legislations at national level" and "translation and popularization of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols into local languages".[573] The OAU Council of Ministers took note of the recommendations of the seminar.[574]

517. In the recommendations of the fourth OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1997, the participants reiterated:

> the need for the teaching of International Humanitarian Law and its wide dissemination more especially as the principles which subtended that IHL were the same as those which constitute the basis of the values of the African societies. In this connection, the need for a sustained action for the youths and culture of peace was unanimously stressed. The "culture of peace" and the dissemination of the IHL should be carried out.[575]

518. In the recommendations of the fifth OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1998, the participants:

> stressed the need for the teaching of International Humanitarian Law, for its widespread dissemination and implementation, notably since this could facilitate conflict prevention. Special emphasis was placed on the need to promote education at all levels taking due account of traditional African humanitarian norms and values.[576]

519. In 1999, speaking on behalf of the OAU during a UN Security Council debate on the distinction between combatants and non-combatants, Burkina Faso emphasised that the OAU, as a possible solution "to avoid the growing recurrence of violations of international humanitarian law", had formulated, inter

[571] OAU, Conference of African Ministers of Health, 26–28 April 1995, Res. 14 (V), § 5.
[572] OAU, Council of Ministers, 21–23 June 1995, Res. 1588 (LXII), § 9.
[573] OAU/ICRC, Third seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 2–3 May 1996, Recommendations, § 1(e) and (f).
[574] OAU, Council of Ministers, 1–5 July 1996, Res. 1662 (LXIV), § 1.
[575] OAU/ICRC, Fourth seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 29–30 April 1997, Recommendations, § 1.
[576] OAU/ICRC, Fifth seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, 30–31 March 1998, Recommendations, § 2.

alia, "the need to teach, publicize and implement international humanitarian law".[577]

520. In 2001, the OSCE Supplementary Human Dimension Meeting recommended to the OSCE institutions and field operations that "training on humanitarian law and human rights should be organised".[578]

International Conferences

521. The 4th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1887 adopted a resolution on measures which have been or should be taken by the Societies in order to spread knowledge of the 1864 Geneva Convention in the army, in circles especially interested in its implementation and among the general public. The resolution stated that:

> It falls within the competence of Governments to spread knowledge of the [1864] Geneva Convention within the army. The Government must ensure that the Convention is taught to all military personnel, like all other military laws and rules . . . One of the best means of bringing the Convention to the knowledge of the army seems to be its reproduction in the service booklet of each soldier.[579]

522. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the implementation and dissemination of the Geneva Conventions stating that it considered that the application of Articles 47 GC I, 48 GC II, 127 GC III and 144 GC IV was "of the greatest importance in ensuring the observance of these Conventions" and that "it is essential that all members of the armed forces have adequate knowledge of the Geneva Conventions". The Conference appealed "to all States parties to the Geneva Conventions to make increased efforts to disseminate and apply these Conventions, in particular by including the essential principles of the Conventions in the instruction given to officers and troops".[580]

523. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on application of the Geneva Conventions by the United Nations Emergency Forces in which it recommended that "the Governments of countries making contingents available to the United Nations give their troops – in view of the paramount importance of the question – adequate instruction in the Geneva Conventions before they leave the country of origin".[581]

524. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on dissemination of the Geneva Conventions in which it made reference to Resolution 2412 (XXIII) of 17 December 1968 by which the UN General Assembly had declared that 1970 would be "International Education Year".

[577] OAU, Statement by Burkina Faso on behalf of the OAU before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3980 (Provisional), 22 February 1999, p. 6.
[578] OSCE, Supplementary Human Dimension Meeting, Human Rights: Advocacy and Defenders, Vienna, 22–23 October 2001, Final report, p. 8.
[579] 4th International Conference of the Red Cross, Karlsruhe, 22–27 September 1887, Res. VIII.
[580] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXI.
[581] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXV, § 2.

The Conference expressed its hope that "the United Nations and in particular [UNESCO] will provide for events devoted to education and the dissemination of the Geneva Conventions during 1970" and requested "for that purpose, that a World Day be devoted to such events, with the use of the audio-visual aids made available by the most modern techniques".[582]

525. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the implementation and dissemination of the Geneva Conventions in which it called "upon governments and National Societies to intensify their efforts with a view . . . to imparting clear concepts regarding the Geneva Conventions to specialized spheres such as the armed forces". It requested that the ICRC "support the efforts of governments and National Societies in their dissemination of and instruction in the Geneva Conventions".[583]

526. In a resolution adopted in 1977 on dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, the CDDH invited:

> the signatory States to take all appropriate measures to ensure that knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, and of the fundamental principles on which that law is based, is effectively disseminated, particularly by:
>
> . . . encouraging the authorities concerned to plan and give effect, if necessary with the assistance and advice of the International Committee of the Red Cross, to arrangements to teach international humanitarian law, particularly to the armed forces and to appropriate administrative authorities, in a manner suited to national circumstances.[584]

The resolution was adopted by 63 votes in favour, 2 against and 21 abstentions.[585]

527. The 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1977 adopted a resolution in which it noted with interest "the Red Cross Teaching Guide prepared jointly by the [ICRC] and the League of Red Cross Societies in consultation with National Societies, mainly for the use of school teachers" and urged "the appropriate authorities to support their respective National Society's efforts to disseminate the Teaching Guide". The Conference further called upon:

> the League and the ICRC to help National Societies to make the Teaching Guide a success in particular by:
>
> (a) assisting with the training of persons responsible for disseminating the Teaching Guide in their respective countries,
> (b) co-operating with National Societies and with the competent authorities in adapting the Teaching Guide to the sections of the population to be reached.[586]

[582] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. IX.
[583] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. XII.
[584] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, CDDH/446, 7 June 1977, Res. 21, Dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, Article 2(a).
[585] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.55, 7 June 1977, § 48.
[586] 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross, Bucharest, 15–21 October 1977, Res. XVIII.

528. In 1992, at the Helsinki Summit of the CSCE, the participating States committed themselves "to fulfilling their obligation to teach and disseminate information about their obligations under international humanitarian law".[587]

529. The Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993 urged all States to make every effort to:

> Organise the teaching of international humanitarian law in the public administrations responsible for its application and incorporate the fundamental rules in military training programmes, as well as military code books, handbooks and regulations, so that each combatant is aware of his or her obligation to observe and help enforce these rules.[588]

530. In 1993, the 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference adopted a resolution in which it called on governments "to promote awareness of international humanitarian law among the armed forces".[589]

531. In 1994, at the Budapest Summit of Heads of State or Government, CSCE participating States committed themselves "to ensure adequate information and training within their military services with regard to the provisions of international humanitarian law" and considered, in this context, "that relevant information should be made available".[590]

532. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on international humanitarian law in which it endorsed:

> the Final Declaration of the [1993] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims . . . [and] the recommendations drawn up by the Intergovernmental Group of Experts . . . which aim at translating the Final Declaration of the Conference into concrete and effective measures.

It also encouraged States and National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies "to organize meetings, workshops and other activities on a regional basis to enhance the understanding and implementation of international humanitarian law".[591]

533. In 1999, the Report on the Outcome of the Celebrations of the Centennial of the First International Peace Conference, drafted on the basis of an expert meeting and the international conference entitled "Centennial of the Russian Initiative: from the First Peace Conference, 1899 – to the Third, 1999", was

[587] CSCE, Helsinki Summit of Heads of State or Government, 9–10 July 1992, Helsinki Document 1992: The Challenges of Change, Decisions, Chapter VI: The Human Dimension, § 52.

[588] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § II(2), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, pp. 299–300.

[589] 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Canberra, 13–18 September 1993, Resolution on Respect for International Humanitarian Law and Support for Humanitarian Action in Armed Conflicts, § 2(d).

[590] CSCE, Budapest Summit of Heads of State or Government, 5–6 December 1994, Budapest Document 1994: Towards a Genuine Partnership in a New Area, Decisions, Chapter VIII: The Human Dimension, § 34.

[591] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. I, preamble and §§ 3, 4 and 6.

presented to the UN General Assembly by the governments of the Netherlands and Russia. The report concluded that:

> Important practical steps which would contribute to enhancing compliance with international humanitarian law and which all states and other relevant entities should be encouraged to take included the following [in discussions during the meetings]:
> 1. Measures of education and training designed to ensure that the principles of international humanitarian law are widely understood and to create a "culture of compliance" with international law.[592]

534. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that "States examine their educational and training curricula to ensure that international humanitarian law is integrated in an appropriate manner in their programmes for armed and security forces".[593]

535. The Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in 2001 adopted a declaration calling upon "all parties, directly involved in the conflict [between Israel and Palestinians] or not, to ... disseminate and take measures necessary for the prevention and suppression of breaches of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions".[594]

536. In the Final Declaration of the Second Review Conference of States Parties to the CCW in 2001, the participants underlined "the importance of the High Contracting Parties' obligation to disseminate this Convention and its annexed Protocols, and, in particular to include the content in their programmes of military instruction at all levels".[595]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

537. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the ACiHPR stressed "the need for specific instruction of military personnel and the training of the forces of law and order in international humanitarian law and human and peoples' rights respectively".[596]

---

[592] Outcome of the Celebrations of the Centennial of the First International Peace Conference: Report on the Conclusions of the expert discussions on the three "Centennial themes", The Hague, 18–19 May 1999 and St. Petersburg, 22–25 June 1999, annexed to Letter dated 10 September 1999 from the Netherlands and Russia to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/54/381, 21 September 1999.

[593] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.4, § 16.

[594] Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, Declaration, § 4.

[595] Second Review Conference of States Parties to the CCW, Geneva, 11–21 December 2001, Final Declaration, UN Doc. CCW/CONF.II/2, 25 January 2002, p. 15.

[596] ACiHPR, Addis Ababa, 1–10 December 1993, Res. 2 (XIV), § 2.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

538. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

> 274. The overall aim of law of war training is to ensure full respect for the law of war by all members of the armed forces, irrespective of their function, time, location and situation . . .
> 275. The law of war has to be included in the programmes for military instruction . . .
> 276. It is not possible to teach everything to everybody. The trainer must only teach what the trainees need to know for their function. Need to know comes before nice to know . . .
> 277. Law of war problems shall be integrated into the normal exercise of military activities. Integrated training requires no time and no special material, but it does require the active participation of the trainees . . .
> 278. Combat reality requires automatic responses resulting in instinctively correct behaviour. Thus law of war training is part of the basic training . . .
> 279. Lectures, which leave the audience passive, should be delivered only as an introduction and given at times when trainees are receptive (e.g. not after training in the field or after lunch).[597] [emphasis in original]

Delegates also teach that:

> As commanders hold full responsibility for the respect of the law of war in their sphere of authority, they shall be trained so that they, in turn, can train their subordinates. Emphasis shall be put on conduct of combat and, as far as necessary, also on logistics and rear-area problems related to the law of war.[598]

539. In an appeal issued in 1979 with respect to the conflict in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe, the ICRC appealed "to all the parties that they: . . . disseminate, or allow the ICRC to disseminate, to their armed forces the basic humanitarian rules for conduct of warfare".[599]

540. At its Rio de Janeiro Session in 1987, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on information and dissemination of IHL in which it encouraged National Societies:

> which have not already done so to appoint officers to disseminate international humanitarian law and the Fundamental Principles and to make approaches to the authorities with a view to setting up joint committees composed of representatives of the relevant ministries and National Societies.

The Council of Delegates also invited the entire Movement "to continue and expand its activities for the dissemination of knowledge of international

[597] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 274–279.
[598] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 288.
[599] ICRC, Conflict in Southern Africa: ICRC appeal, 19 March 1979, § 5, IRRC, No. 209, 1979, p. 88.

humanitarian law and the Fundamental Principles in various circles, ... nationally, regionally and internationally".[600]

541. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that:

> It is extremely important for the members of the armed forces stationed in the Gulf to be aware of their obligations under international humanitarian law ... The teaching of the law to the armed forces is, moreover, an obligation expressly stipulated by the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[601]

542. In an appeal issued in 1991 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the ICRC appealed to the parties in the former Yugoslavia "to ensure that combat units are aware of the humanitarian rules governing the conduct of hostilities and to facilitate ICRC efforts in that respect".[602]

543. In a press release issued in 1992 with respect to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC enjoined the parties involved in the conflict "to ensure that combat units are aware of the humanitarian rules governing the conduct of hostilities".[603]

544. In 1993, in a report to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that:

> 45. The treaties of international humanitarian law provide various mechanisms ... for implementing their substantive provisions. Among these mechanisms it is worth mentioning the following: ... (c) the obligation of States to ensure that the provisions of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols are known as widely as possible.
> ...
> 51. Each State Party to the Geneva Conventions or to their Additional Protocols must ensure that the text of these treaties is disseminated as widely as possible throughout its territory in both peacetime and wartime. The States must, inter alia, incorporate study of the subject into their programmes of military ... instruction.[604]

545. At its Budapest Session in 1991, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on dissemination of international humanitarian law and of the principles and ideals of the Movement in which it stressed that "responsibility for the dissemination and teaching of international humanitarian law lies mainly [600] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Rio de Janeiro Session, 27 November 1987, Res. 4, §§ 1 and 2.

[601] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, Geneva, 14 December 1990, § IV, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 25

[602] ICRC, Appeal in behalf of civilians in Yugoslavia, Geneva, 4 October 1991.

[603] ICRC, Press Release No. 1705, Bosnia-Herzegovina: ICRC calls for protection of civilians, 10 April 1992.

[604] ICRC, Report on the Protection of the Environment in Time of Armed Conflict submitted to the 48th Session of the UN General Assembly, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, UN Doc. A/48/269, 29 July 1993, §§ 45 and 51.

with the States, by virtue of the obligations set out in the four Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their two Additional Protocols". It also urged States "fully to discharge their treaty obligations so that international humanitarian law may be known, understood and respected at all times". The Council of Delegates further reiterated its earlier recommendation that "National Societies appoint and train dissemination experts, and cooperate with their countries' authorities, particularly within the framework of joint dissemination committees".[605]

546. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in which it underlined "in particular the States' determination: to disseminate systematically international humanitarian law, especially among the armed forces".[606]

547. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on armed protection of humanitarian assistance in which it appealed to "the United Nations and governments when employing military forces in order to ensure the implementation of United Nations Resolutions to employ military personnel which have as part of their training been properly educated in international humanitarian law".[607]

548. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on respect for and dissemination of the Fundamental Principles in which it requested "the National Societies, in cooperation with the ICRC and the Federation, to intensify and develop their activities to spread knowledge of the Fundamental Principles at the national, regional and international levels".[608]

549. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "the parties to the conflict must ensure that the members of their armed forces as well as all military and paramilitary forces acting under their responsibility are aware of their obligations under international humanitarian law".[609]

550. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "the parties concerned must ensure that all the military and paramilitary forces and other militias for whose actions they

[605] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Budapest Session, 28–30 November 1991, Res. 8, preamble and §§ 2 and 3.
[606] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham Session, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 2, preamble.
[607] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham Session, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 5, § 1.
[608] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham Session, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 9, § 3.
[609] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § V, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 505.

are responsible are aware of their obligations under international humanitarian law".[610]

551. In 2001, in Zimbabwe, the ICRC continued to contribute to the UN Military Observer Course at the Regional Peacekeeping Training Centre in Harare.[611]

VI. Other Practice

552. In a resolution adopted at its Zagreb Session in 1971, the Institute of International Law stated that:

In order to secure effective compliance with the humanitarian rules of armed conflict by United Nations Forces, it is necessary that the individuals who may be called upon to participate in such Forces receive adequate and previous instruction on the law of armed conflict in its entirety, and especially on the meaning and the scope of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949.

It is desirable that the United Nations, as well as those of its specialized agencies which are concerned with furthering education and health, take all steps within their power in order to co-ordinate the measures which the states parties to the Geneva Conventions have been invited to take in this field by the International Committee of the Red Cross.[612]

553. In 1979, an armed opposition group agreed with the ICRC to take steps to educate its armed forces pursuant to its intention to respect the rules of IHL.[613]

554. In 1980, an armed opposition group agreed with the ICRC to educate its combatants in the rules of IHL as part of its obligation to respect and ensure respect for that law.[614]

555. According to the Report on SPLM/A Practice, following a national convention of the SPLM/A in 1994, at which resolutions calling for a human rights awareness campaign were adopted, a campaign led by local NGOs to disseminate principles of IHL was launched.[615]

556. In 1995, the IIHL, commenting on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, stated that:

The importance of making known, disseminating and teaching these minimum humanitarian standards should be underlined. A clause on that subject could form a special article at the end of the declaration, which could read:

[610] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, Geneva, 23 June 1994, § V, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1309.
[611] ICRC, Advisory Service, 2001 Annual Report, Geneva, 2002, p. 137.
[612] Institute of International Law, Zagreb Session, Resolution on Conditions of Application of Humanitarian Rules of Armed Conflict to Hostilities in Which United Nations Forces May Be Engaged, 3 September 1971, Article 4.
[613] ICRC archive document.
[614] ICRC archive document.
[615] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 6.6.

"The minimum humanitarian standards, defined in this Declaration, should be made known and disseminated to all the authorities concerned, and to individuals who may be potential victims".[616]

557. In a resolution adopted at its Berlin Session in 1999, the Institute of International Law stated that "all States and non-State entities must disseminate the principles and rules of humanitarian law and fundamental human rights which are applicable in internal armed conflicts".[617]

Obligation of commanders to instruct the armed forces under their command

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

558. Article 87(2) AP I provides that:

In order to prevent and suppress breaches, High Contracting Parties and the Parties to the conflict shall require that, commensurate with their level of responsibility, commanders ensure that members of the armed forces under their command are aware of their obligations under the Conventions and this Protocol.

Article 87 AP I was adopted by consensus.[618]

Other Instruments

559. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

560. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "military commanders of all Services and at all levels bear responsibility for ensuring that forces under their control comply with LOAC".[619]

561. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "military commanders of all Services and at all levels bear responsibility for ensuring that forces under their control comply with LOAC".[620]

562. Australia's Defence Training Manual states that one of the tasks of the legal adviser of the armed forces is to "supervise the organisation of instruction

[616] IIHL, Comments on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards submitted to the UN Secretary-General, § 23, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General prepared pursuant to Commission resolution 1995/29, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/80, 28 November 1995, p. 11.
[617] Institute of International Law, Berlin Session, Resolution on the Application of International Humanitarian Law and Fundamental Human Rights in Armed Conflicts in which Non-State Entities are Parties, 25 August 1999, § XII.
[618] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR. 45, 30 May 1977, p. 307.
[619] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1204.
[620] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1304.

in subordinate units, and to ensure that the levels of understanding are obtained".[621]

563. Belgium's LOAC Teaching Directive states that "each commander is responsible for ensuring that the personnel placed under his authority have sufficient knowledge of their obligations [under the law of armed conflict] and that they have . . . received appropriate instruction and training".[622]

564. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers states that "every soldier must know the essential rules of the law of war . . . and their meaning in order to be able to apply them. The command must ensure this knowledge by means of an appropriate instruction."[623]

565. Benin's Military Manual states that:

> Each military commander is responsible for respect for the law of war within his sphere of command. Within his unit, he is in particular responsible for the instruction of the law of war in order to induce his troops to adopt a behaviour in conformity with the law and above all vis-à-vis specifically protected persons and objects.[624]

The manual adds that "the military commander must take all measures so that: the subordinates know their obligations arising from the law of war and respect them".[625]

566. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that:

> The military commander must incorporate in his programmes the legal problems that shall permit all members of the Armed Forces not only to realistically complete their knowledge of the international law of war, but also to solve, in time of peace, problems he will face in case of armed conflict. This instruction, in addition to military training, must be the object of instruction sessions in all military units and schools.[626]

567. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "in the Armed Forces, every Commander is responsible for the instruction of his soldiers and their behaviour in action".[627] It adds that "instruction in the Law of War constitutes an essential part of the activity of commanding".[628]

568. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "commanders have a responsibility to ensure that forces under their command are aware of their responsibilities related to the LOAC and that they behave in a manner consistent with the LOAC".[629] It further notes that "in order to prevent and suppress breaches,

621 Australia, Defence Training Manual (1994), § 17.
622 Belgium, LOAC Teaching Directive (1996), Section 1.
623 Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 1.
624 Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 14, see also p. 15.
625 Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, pp. 14 and 15.
626 Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 35.
627 Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 15, § 14.
628 Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 133, see also p. 86, § 13.
629 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-1, § 7.

commanders are responsible for ensuring that members of the armed forces under their command are aware of their obligations under the LOAC".[630]

569. Canada's Code of Conduct states that "a military unit that obeys the Law of Armed Conflict is one that demonstrates discipline and leadership. This requires training. The responsibility for this training rests with leaders at all levels."[631]

570. Colombia's Directive on IHL states that:

> The Ministry of National Defence gives instructions aimed at intensifying the development of capacity-building programmes of the members of the public force, on themes referring to respect for Human Rights and the application of the rules of International Humanitarian Law, with the view to prevent and correct conduct which violates those rules ...
>
> The General Command of the Military Forces and the Directorate of the National Police [g]ive the commanders of the public force the necessary instructions for each force to intensify, develop and complete, in the corresponding courses of training and capacity-building of their personnel, the relevant studies on respect for Human Rights and ensure the obligatory application of International Humanitarian Law.[632]

571. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual states that it is useful for commanders, especially officers in charge of the instruction of troops, to be able to "count on an efficient instrument of practical and daily use to educate and train Colombian soldiers".[633]

572. Croatia's Commanders' Manual states that "the commander himself ensures that his subordinates are aware of their obligations under the law of war and respect them".[634] It adds that "the commander is responsible for proper law of war training" and that "the superior is the normal instructor of his subordinates also for law of war training".[635]

573. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "the commander must ensure that subordinates know their obligations [under IHL] and respect them. He is ... responsible for their instruction."[636]

574. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that "the commander ... must ensure that members of the armed forces know their rights, but also their obligations under the law of armed conflicts. As such, he is responsible for their instruction."[637]

575. France's LOAC Manual, referring to respect for IHL, provides that "the commander ... must ensure that the members of the armed forces know their rights and discharge the corresponding obligations. As such, he is responsible for their instruction."[638]

[630] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-7, § 50.
[631] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Introduction, § 15.
[632] Colombia, Directive on IHL (1993), Sections IV.(A) and IV.(B)(1).
[633] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. i.
[634] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 19.
[635] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), §§ 21 and 23.
[636] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 5.1.
[637] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[638] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 14.

576. Germany's Military Manual provides that "the superior has to ensure that his subordinates are aware of their duties and rights under international law".[639]

577. Hungary's Military Manual provides that it is the "responsibility of every commander . . . [to] ensure knowledge of [the law of war]".[640] It further provides that, in order to ensure respect for the law of war, every commander shall organise training on the law of war for all members of the armed forces.[641]

578. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual states that "the commander himself ensures that his subordinates are aware of their obligations under the law of war and respect them".[642] It further states that "the commander is responsible for proper training" and that "the superior is the normal instructor of his subordinates also for law of war training".[643]

579. South Korea's Military Regulation 187 provides that it is a duty of the commander to teach the principles and rules of the laws of war.[644]

580. Madagascar's Military Manual states that "the commander himself shall ensure that his subordinates know their obligations arising from the law of war and respect them".[645] It further provides that "the commander is responsible for proper law of war training" and that "the superior is the normal instructor of his subordinates also for law of war training".[646] In addition, the manual states that "the aim of instruction is: . . . to ensure true respect for this law of war by all combatants".[647]

581. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, referring to Article 87 AP I, states that "commanders must first of all ensure that their people know the rules of the law of war".[648]

582. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that "commanders must ensure that their people know the rules of the law of war".[649]

583. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "it is incumbent upon a commanding officer to ensure that the forces under his command behave in a manner consistent with the laws and customs of war . . . and it is part of his responsibility to ensure that the troops under his command are aware of their obligations".[650]

584. Nigeria's Military Manual recalls that "commanders are . . . enjoined to ensure that members of the armed forces under their command are aware of

639 Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 138.
640 Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 40.
641 Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 41.
642 Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 19.
643 Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), §§ 21 and 23.
644 South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), Article 6.6.1.
645 Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-O, § 19, see also Presentation, p. 9 and p. 69, § 1.
646 Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-O, §§ 21 and 23.
647 Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-O, § I.
648 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-7.
649 Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-44.
650 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1603.2, see also § 1710.1, footnote 68.

their obligations under the [Geneva] conventions and the Protocols [AP I and AP II]".[651] In addition, it states that "every commander . . . holds full responsibility for proper law of war training within his sphere of authority and it is his duty to determine the needs of his subordinate which shall be integrated into the normal exercise of military activities".[652]

585. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines provides that "commanders shall ensure that all participants in security/police operations shall be briefed and de-briefed before and after every operation to insure proper behavior of personnel and understanding of their mission"[653] It adds that "commanders shall ensure that . . . pertinent provisions of . . . the Geneva Conventions and United Nations declarations on Humanitarian Law and Human Rights . . . are understood by every member of the AFP and PNP personnel".[654]

586. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "the commander himself ensures that his subordinates are aware of their obligations under the law of war and respect them".[655] It also states that "the commander is responsible for proper law of war training" and that "the superior is the normal instructor of his subordinates also for law of war training".[656]

587. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "there is . . . a clear responsibility for a senior commander to check his subordinates' knowledge of the Conventions".[657]

588. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "commanders must inform the troops of their obligations under the Conventions".[658]

589. Togo's Military Manual provides that:

> Each military commander is responsible for respect for the law of war within his sphere of command. Within his unit, he is in particular responsible for the instruction of the law of war in order to induce his troops to adopt a behaviour in conformity with the law and above all vis-à-vis specifically protected persons and objects.[659]

The manual adds that "the military commander must take all measures so that: the subordinates know their obligations arising from the law of war and respect them".[660]

[651] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 30, § 3.
[652] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 41, § 8.
[653] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 3(b).
[654] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 3(d).
[655] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.8.c.(1), see also § 2.2.b.
[656] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.8.c.(2), see also § 11.4.b.
[657] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 94.
[658] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 196.
[659] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 14, see also p. 15.
[660] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, pp. 14 and 15.

590. The US Instructor's Guide states that, as a commander, "you must ensure your troops receive instruction in the law of war. You should ensure that they know and follow the applicable rules of engagement."[661]
591. The US Naval Handbook provides that "officers in command of operational units are encouraged to utilize this publication as a training aid for assigned personnel".[662]

National Legislation
592. The Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL of Belarus provides that the Vice-Ministers of Defence as well as commanders must, within the framework of the training of commanders, guarantee the study of the Geneva Conventions, the Additional Protocols and Belarussian regulations on the application of IHL and that they must take into account these instruments and documents during military training.[663]
593. Spain's Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces provides that a soldier "shall know the rights and duties incumbent on him and the penal laws affecting him, which shall be read out and periodically explained at unit level with a view to guiding his conduct and preventing him from committing faults or offences".[664]

National Case-law
594. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
595. According to the Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, it is the opinio juris of Bosnia and Herzegovina that "commanders of units and each individual member of armed forces are responsible for the implementation of the international law of war".[665]
596. The 1997 Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia stated that:

> Training is one of the fundamental elements of preparing troops for operations . . . It is therefore to be expected that commanders at all levels of the chain of command, even the highest, pay particular attention to the training of a contingent, both to supervise and assess the preparations and, through their presence, to demonstrate their personal interest in and commitment to the operation that their troops are about to undertake.

[661] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 19.
[662] US, Naval Handbook (1995), Preface, p. 21
[663] Belarus, Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL (1997), Article 5.
[664] Spain, Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces (1978), Article 57.
[665] Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2000, Chapter 1.6.

In its findings with respect to this statement, the Commission noted that "leaders at all levels of the chain of command, with the notable exception of the Brigade Commander during the initial stages of training, failed to provide adequate supervision of the training preparations undertaken by the CAR for Operation Cordon".[666] Regarding the Rules of Engagement (ROE) established with respect to the Somalia mission, the Commission further noted that:

The ... briefing provided by LCol Watkin on December 10th [1992] included information on the ROE ... The officers were then supposed to pass the information on to their subordinates. However, there were no efforts made to ensure that this information was properly understood before being passed down the chain of command to the troops, nor even that it was in fact passed down ... While the need to systematically reinforce the ROE training once in theatre was recognized by senior commanders who testified before us, this did not translate into effective ROE training throughout the deployment period. Maj Pommet showed great concern for the understanding of the ROE by his commando and took steps to train his soldiers, but he did so on his own initiative. On several occasions he verified his troops' knowledge of the ROE by presenting them with scenarios and asking them to respond. Although there may have been some discussion and briefings on the ROE, there was no organized and structured scenario-based training done in theatre. In our view, and notwithstanding the obvious need for it, the leaders failed to ensure that all of the soldiers had a comprehensive understanding of the use of force in Somalia through accessible and systematic training.[667]

597. The Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, in its recommendations with respect to training of the armed forces, stated that:

We recommend that: ... Canadian Forces doctrine recognize the personal supervision of training by commanders, including the most senior, as an irreducible responsibility and an essential expression of good leadership. Canadian Forces should also recognize that training provides the best opportunity, short of operations, for commanders to assess the attitude of troops and gauge the readiness of a unit and affords a unique occasion for commanders to impress upon their troops, through their presence, the standards expected of them, as well as their own commitment to the mission on which the troops are about to be sent.[668]

[666] Canada, Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Public Works and Government Services Canada – Publishing, Ottawa, 1997, pp. 592–593, see also p. ES-28.

[667] Canada, Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Public Works and Government Services Canada – Publishing, Ottawa, 1997, pp. 616–617.

[668] Canada, Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Dishonoured Legacy: The Lessons of the Somalia Affair. Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Public Works and Government Services Canada – Publishing, Ottawa, 1997, p. 631, Recommendation No. 21(18).

598. An Order of the Israeli Chief of Staff requires that "all operational directive or order which precedes action by the soldiers has to include a directive requiring that the provisions of the Conventions be taught to the soldiers". The Order refers to the Geneva Conventions and the 1954 Hague Convention.[669]

599. On the basis of an interview with high-ranking officers of the army of the Netherlands, the Report on the Practice of the Netherlands states that commanders are responsible for training in IHL.[670]

600. The 1979 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program provided that:

> The Secretaries of the Military Departments shall develop internal policies and procedures consistent with this Directive in support of the DoD law of war program in order to:
>
> (1) Provide publications, instructions, and training so that the principles and rules of the law of war will be known to members of their respective Departments, the extent of such knowledge to be commensurate with each individual's duties and responsibilities.[671]

601. In 1991, in response to an ICRC memorandum on the applicability of IHL in the Gulf region, the US Department of the Army stated that "[IHL] training is a command responsibility".[672]

602. The 1998 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program provided that the Secretaries of the Military Departments shall "provide directives, publications, instructions, and training so that the principles and rules of the law of war will be known to members of their respective Departments, the extent of such knowledge to be commensurate with each individual's duties and responsibilities". Furthermore, they shall "ensure that programs are implemented in their respective Military Departments to prevent violations of the law of war, emphasizing any types of violations that have been reported".[673]

603. According to the Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, an official of the armed forces of Zimbabwe stated that he was of the view that "Zimbabwe accepts the practice that commanders [should] ensure that their [subordinates] are aware of their obligations".[674]

669 Israel, IDF Order of the Chief of Staff No. 33.0133, Discipline – Conduct in accordance with the international conventions to which the State of Israel is a party, 20 July 1982, § 10.

670 Report on the Practice of the Netherlands, 1997, Interview with two high-ranking officers of the Royal Netherlands Army staff, both legal advisors, Chapter 6.6.

671 US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, Section E(2)(e)(1).

672 US, Letter from the Department of the Army to the legal adviser of the US Army deployed in the Gulf region, 11 January 1991, § 8(S), Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

673 US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Sections 5(5)(1) and 5(5)(2).

674 Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 6.7.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
604. No practice was found.

Other International Organisations
605. In 1995, the Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe on the conflict in Chechnya noted that the Russian federal command, after having originally adopted a policy of trying to brand the Chechen as the cruel enemy, was apparently trying to make amends by strengthening discipline. It was to be achieved "by directives and recommendations to officers to explain the rules of international law to their soldiers".[675]

International Conferences
606. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference called on "all States to remind military commanders that they are required to make their subordinates aware of obligations under international humanitarian law [and] to make every effort to ensure that no violations are committed".[676]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

607. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

608. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the commander himself must ensure that: a) his subordinates are aware of their obligations under the law of war".[677] Delegates also teach that:

> 275. . . . Every commander holds full responsibility for proper law of war training within his sphere of authority. Thus, law of war training is an essential part of command activity . . .
> 282. The superior is the normal instructor of his subordinates, also for law of war training. Thus, every commander must be acquainted with those parts of the law of war that are relevant for him and to those under his command . . .
> 292. Commanders shall issue instructions and organize appropriate training for specific circumstances, such as:

[675] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Opinion on procedure on Russia's request for membership of the Council of Europe, Doc. 7384, 15 September 1995, § 67.
[676] 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Canberra, 13–18 September 1993, Resolution on Respect for International Humanitarian Law and Support for Humanitarian Action in Armed Conflicts, § 2(e).
[677] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 270.

a) commando and other small units with independent missions;
b) combat in unusual environment;
c) warfare between dissimilar forces (e.g. a modern high technology force opposing a more or less organized group fighting with primitive weapons).[678]

609. In a communication to the press in 2002, the ICRC called upon the parties to the conflict in Colombia to respect IHL and stated that "commanders must supervise their men so as to ensure that their conduct towards civilians complies at all times with the ... rules and principles [of IHL]".[679]

VI. Other Practice

610. No practice was found.

E. Dissemination of International Humanitarian Law among the Civilian Population

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

611. Article 26 of the 1906 GC provides that "the signatory governments shall take the necessary steps ... to make [the provisions of this convention] known to the people at large".

612. Article 27 of the 1929 GC provides that "the High Contracting Parties shall take the necessary steps ... to bring [the provisions of the present Convention] to the notice of the civil population".

613. Articles 47 GC I, 48 GC II, 127 GC III and 144 GC IV provide that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of war, to disseminate the text of the present Convention as widely as possible in their respective countries and, in particular, to include the study thereof [if possible] in their programmes of ... civilian instruction, so that the principles thereof may become known to the entire population.

614. Article 25 of the 1954 Hague Convention states that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of armed conflict, to disseminate the text of the present Convention and the Regulations for its execution as widely as possible in their respective countries. They undertake, in particular, to include the study thereof [if possible] in their programmes of ... civilian training, so that its principles are made known to the whole population.

[678] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 275, 282 and 292.
[679] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 02/16, Colombia: ICRC calls on all parties to conflict to respect international humanitarian law, 21 February 2002.

615. Article 83 AP I provides that:

1. The High Contracting Parties undertake, in time of peace as in time of armed conflict, to disseminate the Conventions and this Protocol as widely as possible in their respective countries and, in particular, ... to encourage the study thereof by the civilian population, so that those instruments may become known ... to the civilian population.
2. Any ... civilian authorities who, in time of armed conflict, assume responsibilities in respect of the application of the Conventions and this Protocol shall be fully acquainted with the text thereof.

Article 83 AP I was adopted by consensus.[680]

616. Article 30 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that:

1. The Parties shall endeavour by appropriate means, and in particular by educational and information programmes, to strengthen appreciation and respect for cultural property by their entire population.
2. The Parties shall disseminate this Protocol, as widely as possible, both in time of peace and in time of armed conflict.
3. Any military or civilian authorities who, in time of armed conflict, assume responsibilities with respect to the application of this Protocol, shall be fully acquainted with the text thereof. To this end, the Parties shall, as appropriate:
   ...
   (b) develop and implement, in cooperation with UNESCO and relevant governmental and non-governmental organizations, peacetime training and educational programmes.

Other Instruments

617. Article 3(2) of the 1986 Statutes of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, dealing with tasks of the National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, provides that the National Societies "disseminate and assist their governments in disseminating international humanitarian law; they take initiatives in this respect".

618. Paragraph 13 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY states that:

The parties undertake to spread knowledge of and promote respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law ... this shall be done in particular:

...
- via articles in the press, and radio and television programmes prepared also in cooperation with the ICRC and broadcast simultaneously;
- by distributing ICRC publications.

619. Paragraph 4 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that:

[680] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 30 May 1977, p. 307.

The parties undertake to spread knowledge of and promote respect for the principles and rules of international humanitarian law . . . [T]his shall be done in particular:

. . .

– by facilitating the dissemination of ICRC appeals urging respect for international humanitarian law;
– by distributing ICRC publications.

620. In Paragraph II (10) of the 1992 Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina the ICRC requested the parties to "undertake to ensure that the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and, in particular, [the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina] are known . . . to the civilian population".

621. Section 17 of the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict provides that "States shall disseminate these rules and make them known as widely as possible in their respective countries and include them in their programmes of . . . civil instruction".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

622. Australia's Defence Training Manual provides that "the Government of Australia is required to disseminate the text of the conventions [Geneva Conventions, AP I and AP II, and 1907 Hague Convention (IV)] as widely as possible, so that the principles become known . . . to the civilian population".[681]

623. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that:

States signatory to the [Geneva] Conventions undertook to take a series of measures to promote the respect thereof.

These measures can be summarised as follows:

1) the widest dissemination possible of the content of the Conventions among the civilian population.[682]

624. Canada's LOAC Manual states that "Canada . . . has the obligation to . . . encourage the study of the LOAC by the civilian population".[683]

625. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "the teaching and dissemination of the Law of War is of capital importance for Cameroon, on the civilian . . . level".[684]

626. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that, before conflicts occur, there is an obligation "to adopt plans and programmes of dissemination and capacity building through which IHL is made known to . . . the civil society (. . . public servants, students and the community in general)".[685] In a chapter dealing with [681] Australia, Defence Training Manual (1994), § 4.

[682] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[683] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-1, § 6.
[684] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 2.
[685] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), pp. 27 and 28.

AP II, the manual further states that "it is important to underline the obligation incumbent upon States to organise periodical and systematic instruction on the content of the Protocol, so that ... civil society in general can apply and insist on respect for its norms".[686]

627. Germany's Military Manual states that:

> The four Geneva Conventions and [AP I] oblige all contracting parties to disseminate the text of the conventions as widely as possible ... This shall particularly be accomplished ... by encouraging the civilian population to study these conventions ... Considering their responsibility in times of armed conflict, ... civilian authorities shall be fully acquainted with the text of the Conventions and the Protocol Additional to them.[687]

The manual further states that:

> Effective implementation is depending on dissemination of humanitarian law. Providing information about it is the necessary basis to create a common consciousness and to further the attitude of peoples towards greater acceptance of these principles as an achievement of the social and cultural development of mankind.[688]

628. Hungary's Military Manual stresses that "everybody must know the rules".[689]

629. New Zealand's Military Manual notes that "the parties [to the Geneva Conventions] are ... encouraged to disseminate the Conventions as widely as possible among their civilian populations".[690]

630. Nigeria's Military Manual incorporates the content of Article 47 GC I and adds that "dissemination simply means that in the law of armed conflict, the obligation is that States make the principles of the law known to ... the civilian population by ... encouraging the civilian population to study them".[691] The manual further states that:

> The dissemination of the conventions and the protocols therefore must be as orderly as possible in the respective countries and in particular to encourage the study thereof by the civilian population. The purpose therefore is that any ... civilian authorities, who in time of armed conflict, assume responsibilities in respect of the application of the [Geneva] conventions and the protocols, shall be fully acquainted with the text thereof.[692]

631. Sweden's IHL Manual notes that:

> I Geneva Convention (GC I, Art. 47) states that the contracting parties shall undertake, both in peace and in war, to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the convention texts and to introduce study thereof into programmes of ... civilian instruction. The III Geneva Convention (GC III, Art. 127) states that the principles

[686] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 46.
[687] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 136.
[688] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1223.
[689] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 31.
[690] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1602.1, footnote 5.
[691] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 29, § 1.
[692] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 30, § 3.

of the conventions shall be made known to . . . the entire population. Similarly, the IV Geneva Convention (GC IV, Art. 144) states that the principles for protection of civilians shall be made known to the entire population. The undertaking of the parties concerning information and instruction in international humanitarian law is stressed in Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions (AP I, Art. 83), which, however, goes further than the earlier conventions. According to the Protocol, the military and civilian authorities responsible for their application during a conflict shall possess full knowledge of the texts both of the Protocol and of the Conventions. Thus a definite tightening of the demands has been introduced.[693]

The manual further states that "by its ratification in 1977 of the Additional Protocols to the Geneva 1949 Conventions, Sweden pledged herself to inform and instruct . . . the civilian population . . . on the rules of international humanitarian law".[694]

632. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the instruction and dissemination of [IHL] are established as obligatory, so that the State has the duty to introduce it in its programmes of . . . civil instruction".[695] The manual identifies the sectors of the public that should be targeted in priority: National Societies, universities, schools, medical circles, communication media, and the general public, particularly young people and teachers.[696]

633. In the Order on Law of Armed Conflict Curriculum, Tajikistan's Minister of Education decided "to include in the curriculum of the Republican Specialised Boarding School No. 1 for the Intensive Study of the Russian Language and for Military-Physical Training in Dushanbe the subject 'Law of Armed Conflict'".[697]

634. In the Order No. 148 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses, Tajikistan's Minister of Defence decided "to include in the curricula of the Military Chairs of civilian Institutions of Higher Education . . . the subject 'Law of Armed Conflict'".[698]

635. In the Order No. 554 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses, Tajikistan's Minister of Education decided "to include in the curricula of the Military Chairs of civilian Institutions of Higher Education the subject 'Law of Armed Conflict'".[699]

636. The UK Military Manual notes that:

Under the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions the parties are bound, both in time of peace and in war, to disseminate the text of the Conventions in their countries and to include the study of them in their programmes . . . if possible (i.e., according to the constitution of the country concerned) of civilian instruction.[700]

693 Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.1, pp. 91 and 92.
694 Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 10.1, p. 168.
695 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.1.a, see also §§ 1.1.d.(7) and 11.3.b.(2) (which add that the instruction must take place in time of peace as well as in time of war).
696 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.2.b.(3).
697 Tajikistan, Order on Law of Armed Conflict Curriculum (1997), § 1.
698 Tajikistan, Order No. 148 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses (1997), § II.
699 Tajikistan, Order No. 554 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses (1997), § 2.
700 UK, Military Manual (1958), § 120.

637. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 47 GC I, 48 GC II, 127 GC III and 144 GC IV.[701]

638. The US Air Force Pamphlet quotes a directive of the Department of Defense which provides that "the Armed Forces of the United States will insure that programs to prevent violations of the law of war to include training and dissemination as required by the Geneva Conventions . . . and by [the 1907] Hague Convention IV . . . are instituted and implemented".[702] The Pamphlet adds that "all states must include the text of the Conventions in programs of . . . if possible, civil instruction".[703]

National Legislation

639. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies of [the] Azerbaijan Republic insure [that] all the citizens always learn the provisions of this law on civil defence".[704] It further provides that "if [the] Azerbaijan Republic is one of the parties to the conflict, then necessary instruction is given to [the] civilian population in such a conflict area".[705]

640. Croatia's Emblem Law provides that:

> In accordance with the commitments made on [the] international level concerning the promotion of [the] Geneva Conventions, it is necessary to elaborate adequate programmes and ensure their implementation among:
>
> – [the] civilian population of the Republic of Croatia – Croatian Red Cross;
> . . .
> – high schools and university students – Ministry of Culture and Education.[706]

641. Peru's Law on Compulsory Human Rights Education, providing, inter alia, for the establishment of a national plan on the teaching of human rights and IHL in universities and higher education establishments, states that "the duty to teach human rights and international humanitarian law must aim at full implementation and strict compliance with the international treaties and conventions as well as the protection of fundamental rights in the national and international arenas".[707]

642. Russia's Ordinance regarding Ratification of the Additional Protocols recommends that the Executive Committee of the Union of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies of the USSR take measures for the publication and dissemination of the texts of the Additional Protocols among the civilian population.[708]

[701] US, Field Manual (1956), § 14.
[702] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 1-4(c).
[703] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(b).
[704] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 1.
[705] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 30.
[706] Croatia, Emblem Law (1993), Article 14.
[707] Peru, Law on Compulsory Human Rights Education (2002), Article 3.
[708] Russia, Ordinance regarding Ratification of the Additional Protocols (1989), § 3.

643. Russia's Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols contains a provision for the teaching of these treaties during studies and education.[709]

644. Russia's Draft Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem provides that:

> The Russian Red Cross Society shall interact with the bodies of state power and local self-government bodies in carrying out the following tasks: . . . dissemination of international humanitarian law, including the provisions of the Geneva Conventions, of the principles and ideals of the International Movement of the Red Cross and Red Crescent.[710]

The Draft Law also provides that:

> The dissemination of international humanitarian law among the population is carried out by the Russian Red Cross Society in cooperation with the bodies of State power and local self-government.
>
> The dissemination of international humanitarian law in the educational establishments is carried out by the Russian Red Cross Society in cooperation with the appropriate administrative bodies.[711]

645. Slovakia's Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem provides that:

> The Slovak Red Cross fulfils in accordance with the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols and the conclusions of the International Conferences of the Red Cross and Red Crescent during the peace and war period primarily the following tasks:
>
> . . .
> – it familiarises the population with the basic principles of the Red Cross, with the principles of international humanitarian law, disseminates the ideas of peace, mutual respect and understanding among people and nations.[712]

National Case-law

646. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

647. According to the Report on the Practice of Algeria, courses in IHL are organized at Algerian universities and at the École Nationale d'Administration at postgraduate level. The report also mentions the activities of the Algerian Red Crescent Society, stating, however, that they consist mainly of first-aid training.[713]

[709] Russia, Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols (1990), § 2.
[710] Russia, Draft Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem (1998), Article 2.
[711] Russia, Draft Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem (1998), Article 5.
[712] Slovakia, Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem (1994), Section 2(h).
[713] Report on the Practice of Algeria, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

648. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Argentina pledged to "incorporate the study of international humanitarian law into the curricula of secondary schools and universities".[714]

649. The rules of procedure of the Argentine Committee on the Implementation of International Humanitarian Law (CADIH), established to undertake studies on the teaching and dissemination of the rules of IHL, make specific reference to the teaching and dissemination of the law among the civilian population.[715]

650. According to the Report on the Practice of Argentina, which refers to several annexed university curricula, IHL is part of some university programmes in Argentina. The report further notes that the CADIH also plans to introduce courses on IHL in secondary school curricula.[716]

651. In its report to UNESCO on measures to implement the 1954 Hague Convention, the Australian government noted that it provided funds to the Australian Red Cross to enable it to conduct IHL dissemination activities throughout Australia, which included a description of the contents of the 1954 Hague Convention.[717]

652. Enumerating the matters which Australia believed must receive priority attention in the outcomes of the 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995, the head of the Australian delegation noted that:

> All States must take effective action to disseminate the law [of armed conflict] . . . because of the growth of irregular conflict, to their general populations. States and relevant international organizations must work together to ensure that dissemination programs are given the highest priority in terms of funding and materials.[718]

653. In 2002, during a debate in the UN Security Council concerning the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, Australia stated that "practical measures can be taken by Governments to promote understanding and observance of international humanitarian law within their own communities . . . also among civilian

[714] Argentina, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

[715] Argentina, Committee on the Implementation of International Humanitarian Law (CADIH), Internal Rules of Procedure, Article 10.

[716] Argentina, Curricula for the courses on Human Rights and Humanitarian Law, Law Faculty, University of Buenos Aires, 1986; Curriculum for the course on International Public Law as part of the Political Science degree, Pontifical Catholic University of Argentina; Curriculum for the course on International Public Law, Faculty of Law, Austral University; Statement by the Legal Adviser to the Argentine Ministry of Foreign Affairs, First Meeting of the Argentine and Chilean Committees on the Implementation of International Humanitarian Law, 1997; Report on the Practice of Argentina, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

[717] Australia, Report to UNESCO on Australian Measures to Implement the 1954 Hague Convention, 1994, § 2.

[718] Australia, Statement at the 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, reprinted in Australian Year Book of International Law, Vol. 17, 1996, p. 787.

populations, including by disseminating information about international humanitarian law".[719]

654. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Belarus pledged "to continue the dissemination of information on the fundamental norms and principles of [IHL] among the population of the Republic of Belarus".[720]

655. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Belgium pledged "to implement training programmes in international humanitarian law targeted at those who are most directly concerned by the application of and respect for this body of law, namely the judiciary . . .".[721]

656. The Report on the Practice of Belgium notes that, although the Belgian government does not itself conduct dissemination activities for the civilian population, it actively supports such activities undertaken by the Belgian Red Cross, by institutions of higher education and by NGOs.[722]

657. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Chile pledged to "incorporate study of [international humanitarian] law's fundamental principles into Ministry of Education programmes".[723]

658. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, China pledged that it would promote and strengthen "the wide dissemination and education of international humanitarian law among the people of China".[724]

659. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Colombia solemnly pledged to "promote and spread knowledge of international humanitarian law through training courses for all sectors of Colombian society and through general education programmes for trade schools, universities and schools".[725]

660. According to a report on the promotion and implementation of IHL in the DRC (Zaire), IHL is taught in the law and political science faculties of universities.[726]

661. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Cuba solemnly pledged to "continue promoting dissemination of the

[719] Australia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 6.
[720] Belarus, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[721] Belgium, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[722] Report on the Practice of Belgium, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[723] Chile, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[724] China, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[725] Colombia, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[726] Mavungu Mvumbi-di-Ngoma, Report on the Promotion and Implementation of International Humanitarian Law in the Republic of Zaire, September 1996, p. 22.

norms and principles governing international humanitarian law, with a view to heightening the population's awareness thereof".[727]

662. According to the Report on the Practice of Cuba, IHL is taught in the law faculties' departments of international law and is included in postgraduate courses in Cuba.[728]

663. According to the Report on the Practice of Egypt, IHL is taught to second-year and postgraduate university students.[729]

664. In 1996, in reply to a formal question from a member of parliament, a German Minister of State, referring to Articles 83(1) AP I and 19 AP II, stated that:

> The Federal Government supports the dissemination of International Humanitarian Law in all areas and at all levels of state. It hereby fulfils its duties resulting from international public law. The four Geneva Conventions and the two Additional Protocols oblige all contracting parties to disseminate the wording of the Conventions as widely as possible ... This shall be done in particular by ... stimulating the civilian population to study the Conventions. Military and civil offices shall, in times of an armed conflict [and] with regard to their responsibilit[ies], be entirely familiar with the wording of the Conventions and the Additional Protocols.[730]

The Minister of State further stated that, in addition to members of the armed forces, civil defence personnel, fire brigades and border guards receive instruction in IHL. According to the Minister, "aspects of international humanitarian law" are part of the general instruction in first aid given to the civilian population by aid organisations. He also pointed out the commitment of the German Red Cross Society with respect to the dissemination of IHL among the civilian population and stated that the material for the teaching of soldiers is, within certain limits, available free of charge for interested citizens.[731]

665. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Greece pledged to "enhance dissemination of international humanitarian law ... by reviewing existing educational and training curricula so as to integrate international humanitarian law into ... universities, schools, media and public administration".[732]

666. In 1999, the Greek authorities, namely the Hellenic Armed Forces and the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Justice and Education, made commitments

[727] Cuba, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[728] Report on the Practice of Cuba, 1998, Chapter 6.6.
[729] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[730] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Reply of a Minister of State to a parliamentary question, 20 November 1996, BT-Drucksache 13/6197, 22 November 1996, p. 2.
[731] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Reply of a Minister of State to a parliamentary question, 20 November 1996, BT-Drucksache 13/6197, 22 November 1996, pp. 2–4.
[732] Greece, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

to enhance awareness and knowledge of IHL among various groups (the military, diplomats, judges, lawyers, detention personnel, students and youth in general).[733]

667. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, the Holy See pledged "to take suitable initiatives in favour of instruction in international humanitarian law for religious personnel in the armed forces (Catholic military chaplains)".[734]

668. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Iceland, jointly with the Icelandic Red Cross, pledged "to cooperate on disseminating international humanitarian law together by... organizing seminars and workshops for relevant government officials and other groups".[735]

669. According to the Report on the Practice of India, there is no dissemination activity for the civilian population in general. IHL is taught at graduate level in Indian universities.[736]

670. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Indonesia pledged to "intensify the dissemination and education in International Humanitarian Law and the works of humanitarian organizations to the civilian community".[737]

671. According to the Report on the Practice of Indonesia, IHL is part of the curriculum of some academic institutions in Indonesia.[738]

672. According to the Report on the Practice of Iraq, IHL is taught at university in Iraq.[739]

673. In 1997, in its Final Report on the Events in Somalia, the Italian Government Commission of Inquiry stated that it was necessary to establish a compulsory course on IHL and on human rights not only for the armed forces but also for civilians, and that instruction in these subjects should be introduced in military and non-military schools.[740]

674. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, IHL is taught at Kuwait University.[741]

675. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, Malaysian legislation does not provide specifically for the dissemination of IHL among the civilian population. According to the report, which refers to an interview conducted

[733] ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 32.
[734] Holy See, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[735] Iceland, Pledge made together with the Icelandic Red Cross at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[736] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[737] Indonesia, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[738] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 6.6
[739] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 6.6.
[740] Italy, Government Commission of Inquiry, Final Report on the Events in Somalia, 8 August 1997, pp. 44–46.
[741] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

with the Ministry of Home Affairs, in practice efforts to disseminate IHL among the civilian population have been undertaken by the Malaysian Red Crescent Society and by the law faculty of the University of Malaya.[742]

676. In 1999, a seminar on implementation of IHL organised by Malawi's Ministry of Defence, the Law Commissioner, the ICRC and the National Red Cross Society encouraged Malawi to include IHL in training programmes for the police, prison and immigration services and in university curricula.[743]

677. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Mozambique pledged to "undertake efforts aimed at disseminating and promoting the International Humanitarian Law in ... educational institutions particularly at the university level".[744]

678. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Dutch Parliament in the context of the ratification procedure of the CCW, both the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Defence expressed themselves in favour of information on IHL being given not only to soldiers, but also to a broader group of people. However, it was stressed that to support governmental activities in this field, non-governmental activities were also needed.[745]

679. In 2002, at the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, the President of the National Assembly of Niger committed the National Assembly and the deputies of Niger:

> 3) To observe that the government disseminates international humanitarian law through the education of the Forces of Defence and Security and the sensitisation of the population.
> 4) To fully engage in the process of sensitisation, information and education of the citizens.[746]

680. According to the Report on the Practice of Peru, which refers to various university programmes and curricula, IHL is taught at university level.[747]

681. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Slovenia pledged to give "support to the dissemination of the Geneva Conventions with the Additional Protocols and other instruments of International Humanitarian Law within ... educational, health and other institutions".[748]

742 Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
743 ICRC, Advisory Service, 1999 Annual Report, Geneva, 2000, p. 44.
744 Mozambique, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
745 Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum for the ratification of the CCW, 1983–1984 Session, Doc. 18 278 (R 1248), Nos. 1–3, p. 9.
746 Niger, Pledge made at the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, §§ 3–4.
747 Report on the Practice of Peru, 1998, Chapter 6.6.
748 Slovenia, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

682. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, Thailand pledged "to raise awareness of and promote respect for International Humanitarian Law and Principles in Thai society".[749]

683. According to the Report on the Practice of Uruguay, which contains, as annexes, several syllabi of courses of the faculty of law of the University of Uruguay, IHL is part of the teaching in public international law and human rights law in the university's law faculty.[750]

684. By a ministerial decree, a national committee on humanitarian law was created within the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Uruguay to study and formulate recommendations on the dissemination of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols at all levels of public and private education, and on the implementation of IHL through legislation, regulations, and measures guaranteeing the effective application of the Conventions.[751]

685. At the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, the US pledged that "the United States will work to broaden and enhance efforts for dissemination of IHL, including in co-operation with the American Red Cross".[752]

686. The Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY) notes that dissemination activities should be carried out in a much more systematic manner and that the curricula of law faculties and faculties of political sciences, which include subjects on international law, do not pay sufficient attention to IHL.[753]

687. The Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe notes that "little has been done to educate civilians [in IHL]".[754]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

688. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on protection of civilians in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council underlined the importance of the widest possible dissemination of IHL and of relevant training for civilian police, armed forces, members of the judicial and legal professions, civil society and personnel of international and regional organisations.[755]

689. In a resolution adopted in 1972 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly called upon all parties to armed conflicts

749 Thailand, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

750 Uruguay, Syllabi of the courses in Public International Law and Human Rights, Faculty of Law, University of the Republic, 1990, Report on the Practice of Uruguay, 1997, Chapter 6.6.

751 Uruguay, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Decree No. 677/1992 creating the National Commission of Humanitarian Law, 24 November 1992, Article 1, Diario Oficial, 1 March 1993, p. 498-A.

752 US, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.

753 Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY), 1997, Chapter 6.6.

754 Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 6.6.

755 UN Security Council, Res. 1265, 17 September 1999, preamble. (The resolution was adopted unanimously.)

"to provide . . . instruction concerning [the international humanitarian rules which are applicable] to the civilian population". It also requested that the UN Secretary-General "encourage the study and teaching of principles of respect for international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict".[756]

690. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly urged that "information concerning the [rules of IHL] be given to civilians everywhere, with a view to securing their strict observance".[757]

Other International Organisations

691. In a recommendation adopted in 1982, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stressed that "past experience in armed conflict has established the need for the Geneva Conventions and the two protocols to be disseminated as widely as possible . . . among the civilian population". It recommended that the Committee of Ministers invite the governments of member States "to ensure that international humanitarian law becomes known by disseminating and teaching the Geneva Conventions . . . and their protocols among the . . . civilian population".[758]

692. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the OAU Council of Ministers requested that member States "educate their population on the fundamental rules and principles of the International Humanitarian Law".[759]

693. The first OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1994, concluded that "it is necessary to lay emphasis on the creation and improvement of the teaching materials [of IHL], particularly in the field of teaching even to the civilian education starting with primary schools".[760] The OAU Council of Ministers took note of the recommendations of the seminar.[761]

694. The second OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1995, recommended the "implementation of specific sensitization and information activities on the International Humanitarian Law . . . for the people in general".[762]

International Conferences

695. The 15th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1934 adopted a resolution in which it asked the ICRC and the League of Red Cross Societies to prepare a small booklet designed for youth – children between 10 and 14 years

[756] UN General Assembly, Res. 3032 (XXVII), 18 December 1972, §§ 2–3.
[757] UN General Assembly, Res. 3102 (XXVIII), 12 December 1973, § 5.
[758] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 945, 2 July 1982, §§ 10 and 11(b).
[759] OAU, Council of Ministers, 6–11 June 1994, Res. 1526 (LX), § 7.
[760] OAU/ICRC, First seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 7 April 1994, Conclusions and Recommendations, § 3.
[761] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1526 (LX), 11 June 1994, § 1.
[762] OAU/ICRC, Second seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 11–12 April 1995, Recommendations, § 1(b).

of age – with respect to the Geneva Convention and the activity of the Red Cross.[763]

696. The 19th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1957 adopted a resolution on young people and the Geneva Conventions stating that it considered that Article 144 GC IV "makes it incumbent on the Governments which have ratified that Convention to make known the letter and spirit thereof to the whole population". It recommended that "in negotiations with the Governments, the National Societies endeavour to obtain space in the school curricula for the history and aims of [the] Red Cross and for the basic principles of the Geneva Conventions".[764]

697. The 19th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1957 adopted a resolution on practical means of spreading knowledge of the Geneva Conventions among young people in which it stated that "the Geneva Conventions constitute a sound basis for social education". The Conference recommended that "radio and television broadcasts dealing with the questions [of the history of the Red Cross and the Geneva Conventions] be regularly organized" and invited the ICRC and the League of Red Cross Societies to "examine, with National Societies, the possibilities of producing one or more films for Juniors covering the history, subject matter and aims of the Geneva Conventions". The Conference further recommended that the ICRC and the League of Red Cross Societies "issue informative publications suitable for children and young people, dealing with the history of the Red Cross and the fundamental principles of the Geneva Conventions".[765]

698. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on instruction of medical personnel in the Geneva Conventions in which it urged:

> the Governments and National Societies to intensify and co-ordinate their efforts to disseminate the 1949 Geneva Conventions among the medical personnel of their country, by introducing this subject in the compulsory syllabi of nursing and assistant nurses' schools, and including it in all courses for Red Cross voluntary auxiliaries and first aiders.[766]

699. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the implementation and dissemination of the Geneva Conventions in which it called upon governments and National Societies:

> to intensify their efforts with a view, on the one hand, to making known to the population as a whole the basic principles of the Red Cross and international humanitarian law by all effective means available to competent authorities at all [763] 15th International Conference of the Red Cross, Tokyo, 20–29 October 1934, Res. IX.

[764] 19th International Conference of the Red Cross, New Delhi, 28 October–7 November 1957, Res. XXIX.
[765] 19th International Conference of the Red Cross, New Delhi, 28 October–7 November 1957, Res. XXX.
[766] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXXIII.

levels, and on the other hand, to imparting clear concepts regarding the Geneva Conventions to specialized spheres such as . . . civil administrations, institutes of higher learning, the medical and para-medical professions, etc.

It requested that the ICRC "support the efforts of governments and National Societies in their dissemination of and instruction in the Geneva Conventions".[767]

700. In a resolution adopted in 1977 on dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, the CDDH invited:

> the signatory States to take all appropriate measures to ensure that knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, and of the fundamental principles on which that law is based, is effectively disseminated, particularly by:
>
> . . .
>
> (c) recommending that the appropriate authorities intensify the teaching of international humanitarian law in universities (faculties of law, political science, medicine, etc.);
>
> (d) recommending to educational authorities the introduction of courses on the principles of international humanitarian law in secondary and similar schools.[768]

The resolution was adopted by 63 votes in favour, 2 against and 21 abstentions.[769]

701. The 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1977 adopted a resolution stating that it considered that "the dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts is one of the vital conditions for its observance". The Conference invited "National Societies to intensify their efforts, in collaboration with their governments, for the dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law and of its principles as widely as possible among the population and especially among youth". It also recognised "the role of UNESCO in the dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law" and invited "the ICRC and the League [of Red Cross Societies] to intensify their collaboration with UNESCO with a view in particular to the award of training fellowships at specialized institutes".[770]

702. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on protection of the civilian population in armed conflicts in which it recommended "a universal campaign to make known to all, not only to the armed forces, but to the civilians, the rights of the latter according to international law".[771]

[767] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. XII.
[768] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, CDDH/446, 7 June 1977, Resolution 21, Dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts, Article 2.
[769] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.55, 7 June 1977, § 48.
[770] 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross, Bucharest, 15–21 October 1977, Res. VII, preamble and §§ 2 and 4.
[771] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. VIII, § 3.

703. The Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993 urged all States to make every effort to:

> disseminate international humanitarian law in a systematic way by teaching its rules to the general population, including incorporating them in education programmes and by increasing media awareness, so that people may assimilate that law and have the strength to react in accordance with these rules to violations thereof.[772]

704. In 1993, the 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference adopted a resolution in which it called on all States "to increase public awareness of and to promote respect for international humanitarian law through education and information programmes".[773]

705. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that:

> States examine their educational and training curricula to ensure that international humanitarian law is integrated in an appropriate manner in their programmes for . . . relevant civil servants. States promote knowledge of international humanitarian law among decision-makers and the media and work for the inclusion of international humanitarian law in the general educational programmes of relevant organizations, professional bodies and educational institutions.[774]

706. In the Final Declaration adopted in 2002 by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, the participants stated that:

> 15. We undertake to promote knowledge of International Humanitarian Law and humanitarian norms as well as International Refugee Law among parliamentarians at national, regional and sub-regional levels.
> 16. We wish that seminars and workshops be organized for parliamentarians on these issues at the national, regional and sub-regional levels with the cooperation of competent organizations, particularly through the APU and other African parliamentary organizations.
> 17. We encourage the ICRC and National Societies of the Red Cross and Red Crescent to intensify their efforts to disseminate the rules of International Humanitarian Law in our States.[775]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

707. No practice was found.

[772] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § II(1), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, p. 299.

[773] 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Canberra, 13–18 September 1993, Resolution on Respect for International Humanitarian Law and Support for Humanitarian Action in Armed Conflicts, § 2(c).

[774] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.4, § 16.

[775] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Final Declaration, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, §§ 15–17.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

708. The ICRC Commentary on the First Geneva Convention notes with respect to Article 47 GC I that:

> The provision is, however, qualified by the words "if possible", not because the Diplomatic Conference of 1949 thought civilian instruction any less imperative than military instruction, but because education comes under the provincial authorities in certain countries with federal constitutions, and not under the central Government. Constitutional scruples, the propriety of which is open to question, led some delegations to safeguard the freedom of provincial decisions.[776]

709. At its Rio de Janeiro Session in 1987, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on information and dissemination of IHL in which it invited the entire Movement "to continue and expand its activities for the dissemination of knowledge of international humanitarian law and the Fundamental Principles in various circles, including young people, nationally, regionally and internationally".[777]

710. In 1993, in its report to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that:

> The treaties of international humanitarian law provide various mechanisms . . . for implementing their substantive provisions. Among these mechanisms it is worth mentioning the following:
>
> . . .
>
> (c) the obligation of States to ensure that the provisions of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols are known as widely as possible . . .
>
> Each State Party to the Geneva Conventions or to their Additional Protocols must ensure that the text of these treaties is disseminated as widely as possible throughout its territory in both peacetime and wartime. The States must, inter alia, incorporate study of the subject [if possible] into their programmes of . . . civilian instruction.[778]

VI. Other Practice

711. In 1995, the IIHL, commenting on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, stated that:

[776] Jean S. Pictet et al. (eds.), Commentary on the First Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1952, p. 349.

[777] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Rio de Janeiro, 27 November 1987, Res. 4, §§ 1 and 2.

[778] ICRC, Report on the Protection of the Environment in Time of Armed Conflict submitted to the 48th Session of the UN General Assembly, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, UN Doc. A/48/269, 29 July 1993, §§ 45 and 51.

The importance of making known, disseminating and teaching these minimum humanitarian standards should be underlined. A clause on that subject could form a special article at the end of the declaration, which could read:

> "The minimum humanitarian standards, defined in this Declaration, should be made known and disseminated to all the authorities concerned, and to individuals who may be potential victims".[779]

[779] IIHL, Comments on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards submitted to the UN Secretary-General, § 23, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General prepared pursuant to Commission resolution 1995/29, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/80, 28 November 1995, p. 11.

CHAPTER 41

ENFORCEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW

A. Ensuring Respect for International Humanitarian Law Erga Omnes

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions states that "the High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances".

2. Article 1(1) AP I provides that "the High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for this Protocol in all circumstances". Article 1 AP I was adopted by 87 votes in favour, 1 against and 11 abstentions.

3. Article 89 AP I provides that "in situations of serious violations of the Conventions or of this Protocol, the High Contracting Parties undertake to act, jointly or individually, in co-operation with the United Nations and in conformity with the United Nations Charter". Article 89 AP I was adopted by 50 votes in favour, 3 against and 40 abstentions.[1]

4. Upon ratification of AP I, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation. In this context it wishes to assert that military commanders planning or executing attacks make their decisions on the basis of their assessment of all kinds of information available to them at the time of the military operations.[2]

5. In communications in relation to the declarations made in the instruments of accession by Oman, Syria and UAE to AP I and, in the case of Oman, also AP II, Israel stated that:

> The Instrument deposited by the Sultanate of Oman includes a hostile declaration of a political character regarding Israel . . . The statement by the Sultanate of Oman cannot in any way affect whatever obligations are binding upon it under general international law or under particular conventions. In so far as the substance of the matter is concerned, the Government of Israel will adopt towards the Sultanate of Oman an attitude of complete reciprocity.
> . . .
> The Instrument deposited by the Government of the Arab Republic of Syria contains a hostile statement of a political character in respect of Israel . . . This statement by the Government of the Arab Republic of Syria cannot in any way affect whatever obligations are binding upon the Arab Republic of Syria under general international law or under particular conventions. The Government of the State of Israel will, in so far as concerns the substance of the matter, adopt towards the Government of the Arab Republic of Syria an attitude of complete reciprocity.
> . . .

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.36, 23 May 1977, p. 41.
[2] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I, 9 October 1992.

The Instrument deposited by the Government of the United Arab Emirates contains a statement of a political character in respect of Israel . . . This statement by the Government of the United Arab Emirates cannot in any way affect whatever obligations are binding upon the United Arab Emirates under general international law or under particular conventions. The Government of the State of Israel will, in so far as concerns the substance of the matter, adopt towards the Government of the United Arab Emirates an attitude of complete reciprocity.[3]

6. Upon accession to AP I and AP II, Oman declared that "while deposing these instruments, the Government of the Sultanate of Oman declares that these accessions shall in no way amount to recognition of nor the establishment of any relations with Israel with respect to the application of the provisions of the said protocols".[4]

7. Upon accession to AP I, Syria made a reservation to the effect that "this accession in no way constitutes recognition of Israel nor the establishment of relations with Israel as regards the application of the provisions of the aforementioned Protocol".[5]

8. Upon accession to AP I, the UAE declared that "on accepting the said protocol, the Government of the United Arab Emirates takes the view that its acceptance of the said protocol does not, in any way, imply its recognition of Israel, nor does it oblige it to apply the provisions of the protocol in respect of the said country".[6]

9. Article 31 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "in situations of serious violations of this Protocol, the Parties undertake to act, jointly through the Committee, or individually, in cooperation with UNESCO and the United Nations and in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations".

Other Instruments

10. Article 16 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Aid or assistance in the commission of an internationally wrongful act", states that:

A State which aids or assists another State in the commission of an internationally wrongful act by the latter is internationally responsible for doing so if:

(a) That State does so with knowledge of the circumstances of the internationally wrongful act; and
(b) The act would be internationally wrongful if committed by that State.

[3] Israel, Communications made in relation to the declarations made in the instruments of accession by Oman, Syria and the UAE to AP I and, in the case of Oman, also AP II, reprinted in Dietrich Schindler and Jirí Toman, The Law of Armed Conflicts, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers/Henry Dunant Institute, Dordrecht/Geneva, 1988, pp. 711–712.
[4] Oman, Declaration made upon accession to AP I and AP II, 29 March 1984.
[5] Syria, Declaration made upon accession to AP I, 14 November 1983.
[6] UAE, Declaration made upon accession to AP I, 9 March 1983.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
11. No practice was found.

National Legislation
12. No practice was found.

National Case-law
13. In the Sinnappu case before a Canadian Federal Court in 1997, the applicants, unsuccessful claimants for refugee status, argued that, inter alia, their deportation to Sri Lanka would violate Canada's obligations under the Geneva Conventions Act of 1985. The judge held that:

> I cannot agree that common Article 1 of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 imposes upon Canada an obligation not to return unsuccessful refugee claimants to Sri Lanka. In my opinion, Sri Lanka is engaged in an internal armed conflict to which common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions, 1949 and customary law on armed conflicts apply. Since Canada has no involvement whatsoever in that dispute, common Article 1 of the Geneva Conventions, 1949 does not impose upon our country an obligation to ensure that the parties to that conflict respect common Article 3. Furthermore, even if Canada does have such an obligation under common Article 1, I cannot accept that it would affect the application of our laws pertaining to immigration. Alternatively, even if I am wrong in determining that the armed conflict in Sri Lanka is internal in nature, I have nevertheless concluded that nothing in common Article 1 of the Geneva Conventions, 1949 would prevent Canada from removing a person, who had exhausted all of his avenues of recourse under the Act and Regulations, to the territory of a state engaged in an international armed conflict.[7]

14. In 1985, in the case of a Salvadoran citizen who had fled El Salvador in 1980 and applied for asylum in the US, it was argued on behalf of the applicant that the US was precluded from deporting her to El Salvador, as that would mean exposing her to violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and thus, by virtue of common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, involved the responsibility of the US to ensure respect for GC IV, notably its Article 3. An Immigration Court in the US held that the applicant, "a Salvadoran citizen who is not taking active part in the hostilities, is a protected person under the minimum provisions set forth in Article 3" common to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and that GC IV "provides a potential basis for relief from deportation within the jurisdiction of the immigration judge".[8] However, on appeal, the US Board of Immigration Appeals reversed these findings and concluded that it was unclear "what obligations, if any, Article 1 [common to the 1949 Geneva Conventions] was intended to impose with respect to violations of the Conventions by other States" and that, in any event, the said provision was not self-executing.[9]

[7] Canada, Federal Court Trial Division, Sinnappu case, Judgement, 14 February 1997.
[8] US, Executive Office for Immigration Review, Harlingen, Texas, Case No. A26 949 415: In the Matter of Jesus del Carmen Medina, in Deportation Proceedings, Decision, 25 July 1985, referred to in Frits Kalshoven, "The Undertaking to Respect and Ensure Respect in All Circumstances: From Tiny Seed to Ripening Fruit", YIHL, Vol. 2, 1999, pp. 4–5.

15. In the Baptist Churches case in 1989, a US District Court considered an application for an injunction to prevent the deportation of Central American nationals seeking temporary refuge based on, inter alia, Articles 1, 3 and 45 GC IV. The plaintiffs argued that "by deporting Salvadorans and Guatemalans to countries where Article 3 violations are occurring, the United States . . . failed to 'respect and ensure respect' for the Convention within the meaning of Article 1".[10] Reiterating criteria that had to be met by a treaty in order to be self-executing and applying them to Article 1 GC IV, the Court stated that:

> Article 1 of the Geneva Conventions is not a self-executing treaty provision. The language used does not impose any specific obligations on the signatory nations, nor does it provide any intelligible guidelines for judicial enforcement . . . The treaty provision is "phrased in broad generalities" . . . and contains no "rules by which private rights may be determined".[11]

Other National Practice

16. In 1995, in reply to a question from members of parliament concerning Russian action in Chechnya, the German government stated that:

> The Federal Government has repeatedly reminded Russia of the latter's duty to abide by its obligations under Protocol II additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, which provides for the protection of victims of non-international armed conflicts and thus applies to the conflict in Chechnya.[12]

17. In 1980, during a debate in the Special Political Committee of the UN General Assembly on Israeli practices in the occupied territories, Oman stated that the obligations imposed by Article 1 GC IV on all State parties involved "collective action to ensure adherence to the Convention, non-recognition of measures taken in contravention of its provisions and refraining from offering any aid to the occupying Power which might encourage it in its obstinacy".[13]

18. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Jordan has:

> always protested against the Israeli breaches of Human Rights and of International Humanitarian Law in the occupied territories and it always asked Israel to refrain from further breaches. Jordan used also to request the ICRC to urge Israel to observe [9] US, Board of Immigration Appeals, Case No. A26 949 415 – Harlingen, In re Jesus del Carmen Medina, in Deportation Proceedings: Certification, Decision of 7 October 1988, referred to in Frits Kalshoven, "The Undertaking to Respect and Ensure Respect in All Circumstances: From Tiny Seed to Ripening Fruit", YIHL, Vol. 2, 1999, p. 5.

[10] US, District Court for the Northern District of California, Baptist Churches case, Judgement, 24 March 1989, § 9.

[11] US, District Court for the Northern District of California, Baptist Churches case, Judgement, 24 March 1989, § 12.

[12] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Reply of the Federal Government to a question from members of the Federal Parliament, BT-Drucksache 13/718, 9 March 1995, p. 3.

[13] Oman, Statement before the Special Political Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/SPC/35/SR.27, 11 November 1980, § 4.

the rules of I.H.L. and to appeal to the UN and through it to the whole community of States.[14]

19. In 1979, in reaction to the appeal made by the ICRC to ensure respect for international humanitarian law with regard to the conflict in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe, the UK stated that "we give our wholehearted support" to the ICRC Appeal.[15]

20. In 1979, in reaction to the appeal made by the ICRC to ensure respect for international humanitarian law with regard to the conflict in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe, the US stated that "we . . . wish to endorse the appeal issued by the International Committee of the Red Cross".[16]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

21. In a resolution adopted in 1990 following Israel's decision to deport four Palestinians from the occupied territories, the UN Security Council called upon "the high contracting parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for its obligations under the Convention in accordance with Article 1 thereof" and requested:

> the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, to develop further the idea expressed in his report of convening a meeting of the high contracting parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention and to discuss possible measures that might be taken by them under the Convention and for this purpose to invite these parties to submit their views on how the idea could contribute to the goals of the Convention, as well as on other relevant matters, and to report thereon to the Council.[17]

22. In a resolution adopted in 1977, the UN General Assembly, considering that GC IV was applicable to the territories occupied by Israel, urged all parties thereto "to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with the provisions thereof in all the Arab territories occupied by Israel".[18]

23. In a resolution adopted in 1982 on the situation in the Middle East, the UN General Assembly called upon "the parties [to the 1907 Hague Convention IV and GC IV] to respect and ensure respect of their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances".[19]

[14] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 6.2.
[15] UK, Secretary of State (FCO), Speech given by Mr. David Owen at the Bow Group meeting, House of Commons, 26 March 1979.
[16] US, Department of State, Statement by the Spokesperson for the Department of State, Mr. Hodding Carter, 21 March 1979.
[17] UN Security Council, Res. 681, 20 December 1990, §§ 5 and 6.
[18] UN General Assembly, Res. 32/91 A, 13 December 1977, § 4; see also Res. 33/113 A, 18 December 1978, § 4, Res. 34/90 A, 12 December 1979, § 4, Res. 34/90 C, 12 December 1979, § 5, Res. 35/122 A, 11 December 1980, § 4, Res. 35/122 B, 11 December 1980, § 5, Res. 36/147 A, 16 December 1981, § 5, Res. 36/147 B, 16 December 1981, § 5, Res. 37/88 A, 9 December 1982, § 4, Res. 37/88 B, 9 December 1982, § 5, Res. 38/79 A, 15 December 1983, §4, Res. 38/79 B, 15 December 1983, § 5, Res. 39/95 A, 14 December 1984, § 4, Res. 39/95 B, 14 December 1984, § 5, Res. 40/161 B, 16 December 1985, § 4 and Res. 40/161 C, 16 December 1985, § 5.
[19] UN General Assembly, Res. 37/123 A, 16 December 1982, § 6.

24. In a resolution adopted in 1983 on the situation in the Middle East, the UN General Assembly called upon "parties [to the 1907 HR and GC IV] to respect and ensure respect of their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances".[20]

25. In a resolution adopted in 1988 on the uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people, the UN General Assembly called upon "all the High Contracting Parties to [GC IV] to take appropriate measures to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for the Convention in all circumstances, in conformity with their obligation under article 1 thereof".[21]

26. In a resolution adopted in 1990 on the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights called upon the States parties to GC IV "to apply article 1 of the Convention and to ensure respect by Israel for the Convention".[22] This appeal was reiterated in 1991 and 1992.[23]

27. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights called upon "the States parties to [GC IV] to implement article 1 of the Convention, to ensure respect by Israel for the Convention and to secure protection for the Palestinian people under occupation, until the end of this occupation".[24]

28. In 1984, in reaction to the appeals made by the ICRC to ensure respect for international humanitarian law in the Iran-Iraq war, the UN Secretary-General stated that he remained "deeply concerned that serious infringements of the terms of the Geneva Conventions may bring into discredit those rules of law and universal principles" and underscored "the vital importance of ensuring the observance of the principles embodied in the Geneva Conventions".[25]

29. In 1988, in a report on the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories, the UN Secretary-General recommended that:

> The Security Council should consider making a solemn appeal to all the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention that have diplomatic relations with Israel, drawing their attention to their obligation under article 1 of the Convention to "... ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances" and urging them to use all the means at their disposal to persuade the Government of Israel to change its position as regards the applicability of the Convention.[26]

[20] UN General Assembly, Res. 38/180 A, 19 December 1983, § 6.
[21] UN General Assembly, Res. 43/21, 3 November 1988, § 5.
[22] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1990/12, 30 August 1990, § 4.
[23] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1991/6, 23 August 1991, § 4; Res. 1992/10, 26 August 1992, § 4.
[24] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/15, 20 August 1993, § 4.
[25] UN Secretary-General, Note verbale dated 26 June 1984 addressed to the member States and observer States that are States Parties to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, UN Doc. S/16648, 26 June 1984, p. 2.
[26] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in the territories occupied by Israel submitted in accordance with UN Security Council Resolution 605 (1987), UN Doc. S/19443, 21 January 1988, § 27.

Other International Organisations

30. In a resolution adopted in 1984 on the activities of the ICRC, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe noted that "all the High Contracting Parties to the [1949] Geneva Conventions share an equal burden of responsibility to ensure respect for the principle of humanitarian protection, which is the cornerstone of the said conventions".[27]

31. In a resolution adopted in 1987 on the activities of the ICRC, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe recalled that "the members of the Council of Europe, as parties to the [1949] Geneva Conventions, have a particular responsibility and must exert their influence to ensure respect for the rules of international humanitarian law at all times and in all circumstances".[28] It invited the governments of member States "to help to ensure respect in all circumstances for the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the international humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts".[29]

32. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on the activities of the ICRC, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited the governments of member States "to respect and to help to ensure respect in all circumstances for the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols of 1977, and the international humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts".[30]

33. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the crisis in the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe invited the governments of member States "to launch an appeal to the conflicting parties to respect the four Geneva conventions of 1949".[31]

34. In a declaration adopted in 1993 on the rape of women and children in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, "having regard to the specific responsibility of the Council of Europe to safeguard human rights and fundamental freedoms", appealed "to member States and the international community at large to ensure that these atrocities cease and that their instigators and perpetrators are prosecuted by an appropriate national or international penal tribunal".[32]

35. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the NATO Parliamentary Assembly reminded all States of their obligation, under the Geneva Conventions, not only to respect but to ensure respect for IHL in all circumstances.[33]

36. In a resolution on health and war adopted in 1995, the OAU Conference of African Ministers of Health, after urging member States to accede to the Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols, stressed "the obligation for them to [27] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 823, 28 June 1984, § 8.

[28] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 881, 1 July 1987, § 21.
[29] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 881, 1 July 1987, § 23(iii).
[30] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 921, 6 July 1989, § 20(i).
[31] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 984, 30 June 1992, § 13(iii).
[32] Council of Europe, Committee of Ministers, Declaration on the rape of women and children in the territory of former Yugoslavia, 18 February 1993, § 4.
[33] NATO, Parliamentary Assembly, Civilian Affairs Committee Resolution, Amsterdam, 15 November 1999, § 7.

respect and have the International Humanitarian Law respected, particularly by the strengthening of the implementation mechanisms".[34]

37. In a resolution on respect for IHL adopted in 1996, the OAS General Assembly urged all members to "observe and fully enforce . . . the customary principles and norms contained in the 1977 Additional Protocols".[35]

International Conferences

38. The World Conference on Human Rights in 1968 adopted a resolution in which it noted that "States parties to the Red Cross Geneva Conventions sometimes fail to appreciate their responsibility to take steps to ensure the respect of these humanitarian rules in all circumstances by other States, even if they are not themselves directly involved in an armed conflict". It further requested:

> the Secretary-General, after consultation with the [ICRC], to draw the attention of all States members of the United Nations system to the existing rules of international law on the subject and urge them, pending the adoption of new rules of international law relating to armed conflicts, to ensure that in all armed conflicts the inhabitants and belligerents are protected in accordance with "the principles of the law of nations derived from the usages established among civilized peoples, from the laws of humanity and from the dictates of the public conscience".[36]

39. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on the application of GC IV "to the occupied territories in the Middle East" in which it expressed its consciousness "of the fact that the Parties to the Geneva Conventions have undertaken, not only to respect, but also to ensure respect for the Conventions in all circumstances".[37]

40. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution in which it recalled that "pursuant to the Geneva Conventions, the States have the obligation not only to respect but to ensure respect for these Conventions" and made "a solemn appeal that the rules of international humanitarian law and the universally recognized humanitarian principles be safeguarded at all times and in all circumstances".[38]

41. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution in which it appealed "to Parties to the Geneva Conventions to fully carry out their obligations under the Fourth Geneva Convention" and reminded "all parties to the Geneva Conventions of their common obligation to respect and ensure respect for those Conventions in all circumstances".[39]

[34] OAU, Conference of African Ministers of Health, 24–29 April 1995, Res. 14 (V), § 2.
[35] OAS, General Assembly, Res. 1408 (XXVI-O/96), 7 June 1996, § 4.
[36] World Conference on Human Rights, Res. XXIII on Human Rights in Armed Conflicts, Teheran, 12 May 1968, preamble and § 2.
[37] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. III, preamble.
[38] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. VI.
[39] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. I, §§ 4–5.

42. In 1992, at the Helsinki Summit of Heads of State or Government, CSCE participating States declared that they would "in all circumstances respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law including the protection of the civilian population".[40]

43. In the Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants undertook "to act in co-operation with the UN and in conformity with the UN Charter to ensure full compliance with international humanitarian law in the event of genocide and other serious violations of this law", affirmed their responsibility, "in accordance with Article 1 common to the Geneva Conventions, to respect and ensure respect for international humanitarian law in order to protect the victims of war" and urged all States to make every effort to "ensure the effectiveness of international humanitarian law and take resolute action, in accordance with that law, against States bearing responsibility for violations of international humanitarian law with a view to terminating such violations".[41]

44. In 1994, at the Budapest Summit of Heads of State or Government, CSCE participating States reaffirmed "their commitment to respect and ensure respect for general international humanitarian law and in particular for their obligations under the relevant international instruments, including the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their additional protocols, to which they are a party".[42]

45. The Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in 2001 adopted a declaration stating that:

> 4. The participating High Contracting Parties call upon all parties, directly involved in the conflict [between Israel and Palestinians] or not, to respect and to ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions in all circumstances . . .
> 5. The participating High Contracting Parties stress that the Fourth Geneva Convention, which takes fully into account imperative military necessity, has to be respected in all circumstances.
> . . .
> 17. The participating High Contracting Parties welcome and encourage the initiatives by States Parties, both individually and collectively, according to art. 1 of the Convention and aimed at ensuring the respect of the Convention, and they underline the need for the Parties to follow up on the implementation of the present Declaration.[43]

[40] CSCE, Helsinki Summit of Heads of State or Government, 9–10 July 1992, Helsinki Document 1992: The Challenges of Change, Decisions, Chapter VI: The Human Dimension, § 48.

[41] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, §§ I(6), II and II(11), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, pp. 299 and 301.

[42] CSCE, Budapest Summit of Heads of State or Government, 5–6 December 1994, Budapest Document 1994: Towards a Genuine Partnership in a New Area, Decisions, Chapter VIII: The Human Dimension, § 33.

[43] Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, Declaration, §§ 4–5 and 17.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

46. In the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ addressed the issue of US responsibilities under IHL. It considered that:

> There is an obligation on the United States Government, in the terms of Article 1 of the Geneva Conventions, to "respect" the Conventions and even "to ensure respect" for them "in all circumstances", since such an obligation does not derive only from the Conventions themselves, but from the general principles of humanitarian law to which the Conventions merely give specific expression. The United States is thus under an obligation not to encourage persons or groups engaged in the conflict in Nicaragua to act in violation of the provisions of Article 3 common to the four 1949 Geneva Conventions.[44]

The ICJ also stated that "the US is bound to refrain from encouragement of persons or groups engaged in the conflict in Nicaragua to commit violations of Article 3 which is common to all four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949". The Court then went on to consider some of the activities allegedly carried out by the US, in particular, the publication and dissemination of a manual on "psychological operations", which provided advice on how to "neutralize" certain "carefully selected and planned targets" such as judges, police officers and State security officials. The Court held that:

> When considering whether the publication of such a manual, encouraging the commission of acts contrary to general principles of humanitarian law, is unlawful, it is material to consider whether that encouragement was offered to persons in circumstances where the commission of such acts was likely or foreseeable. The Court has however found . . . that at the relevant time those responsible for the issue of the manual were aware of, at the least, the allegations that the behaviour of the contras in the field was not consistent with humanitarian law . . . The publication and dissemination of a manual in fact containing the advice quoted above must therefore be regarded as an encouragement, which was likely to be effective, to commit acts contrary to general principles of international humanitarian law reflected in treaties.[45]

47. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

> Furthermore, the prohibition of torture imposes upon States obligations erga omnes, that is, obligations owed towards all the other members of the international community, each of which then has a correlative right. In addition, the violation of such an obligation simultaneously constitutes a breach of the correlative right of all members of the international community and gives rise to a claim for compliance accruing to each and every member, which then has the right to insist on fulfilment of the obligation or in any case to call for the breach to be discontinued.[46]

48. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber, in rejecting the defence's arguments based on the tu quoque principle (whereby

[44] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 220.
[45] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, §§ 255 and 256.
[46] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 151.

the fact that the adversary has also committed similar crimes offers a valid defence to the accused), held that:

As a consequence of their absolute character, these norms of international humanitarian law do not pose synallagmatic obligations, i.e. obligations of a State vis-à-vis another State. Rather – as was stated by the International Court of Justice in the Barcelona Traction case (which specifically referred to obligations concerning fundamental human rights) – they lay down obligations towards the international community as a whole, with the consequence that each and every member of the international community has a "legal interest" in their observance and consequently a legal entitlement to demand respect for such obligations.[47]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

49. The ICRC Commentary on the Third Geneva Convention states with respect to Article 1 GC III that:

In the event of a Power failing to fulfil its obligations, each of the Contracting Parties (neutral, allied or enemy) should endeavour to bring it back to an attitude of respect for the Convention. The proper working of the system of protection provided by the Convention demands in fact that the States which are parties to it should not be content merely to apply its provisions themselves, but should do everything in their power to ensure that it is respected universally.[48]

50. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states with respect to Article 1 AP I that by including the express reference to the duty to ensure respect for IHL, as well as articles on specific methods of implementing this duty, the CDDH "clearly demonstrated that humanitarian law creates for each State obligations towards the international community as a whole (erga omnes); in view of the importance of the rights concerned, each State can be considered to have a legal interest in the protection of such rights".[49]

51. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states with respect to Article 89 AP I that:

The article prescribes for all Contracting Parties, and not only those who are Members of the United Nations, that they should act in those situations in co-operation with the Organization and in conformity with its Charter . . .

The wording of this article follows mutatis mutandis Article 56 of the United Nations Charter which is aimed at co-operation for the achievement of universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all with a view to ensuring peaceful and friendly relations among nations . . .

Acting for the protection of man, also in time of armed conflict, accords with the aims of the United Nations no less than does the maintenance of international peace and security.[50]

[47] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 519.
[48] Jean S. Pictet (ed.), Commentary on the Third Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1960, p. 18.
[49] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 45.
[50] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 3594–3596.

52. In an appeal issued in 1979 with respect to the conflict in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe, the ICRC stated that:

> 2. . . . Fundamental humanitarian rules accepted by all nations – such as the obligation to distinguish between combatants and civilians, and to refrain from violence against the latter – have been largely ignored . . .
> 3. Since the end of 1976, the ICRC has on several occasions launched formal appeals to the authorities in Salisbury and to the leaders of the nationalist movements in order that they respect and apply the basic humanitarian rules in their conduct of warfare. The Front-Line States as well as the United Kingdom have been informed of the launching of these appeals and invited to support them . . .
> 8. The ICRC points out that ultimate responsibility for respecting and applying the provisions of humanitarian law lies, not with the ICRC, but with the parties to the conflict and with all States which have ratified or adhered to the Geneva Conventions and have thereby committed themselves to respect and to ensure respect for these Conventions in all circumstances. It therefore also appeals to:
>
> – all the States parties to the Geneva Conventions, and in particular the United Kingdom,
> – the Front-Line States (Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zambia),
> – the members of the United Nations Security Council,
> – the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity,
> – the Secretary-General of the United Nations,
> – to fully support its appeal to the warring parties in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe in order that an end be put to all the suffering there and that all the victims of the conflict receive the humanitarian protection and assistance to which they are entitled and which they so urgently need.[51]

53. In an appeal issued in 1983 concerning the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC asked:

> the States parties to the [1949] Geneva Conventions to make every effort – in discharge of the obligation they assumed under article 1 of the Conventions not only to respect but to ensure respect for the Conventions – to see that international humanitarian law is applied and these violations affecting tens of thousands of persons cease . . . Every means provided for in the Geneva Conventions to ensure their respect must be used to effect, especially the Protecting Powers which should be appointed to represent the belligerents' interests in their enemy's territory.[52]

54. In an appeal issued in 1984 concerning the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC stated that it wished "the States to take up in their dealings with the two belligerents the humanitarian issues it has brought to their attention, and to that effect it submitted a new memorandum to the States party to the [1949] Geneva Conventions on 13 February 1984". It further stated that "it is convinced that the States, conscious of what is at stake, will have the desire and determination to act in accordance with the commitment they made of their own volition to respect and ensure respect for the Geneva Conventions".[53]

[51] ICRC, Conflict in Southern Africa: ICRC appeal, 19 March 1979, § 8, IRRC, No. 209, 1979, pp. 87–90.
[52] ICRC, Conflict between Iraq and Iran: ICRC Appeal, 7 May 1983, IRRC, No. 235, 1983, p. 222.

55. In a speech to all permanent Representatives of States in Geneva in late 1984 concerning the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC stated that:

> The ICRC, in its resolve to use all means to ensure the respect for international humanitarian law in the conflict between Iraq and Iran, has already approached the international community in order to denounce violations of the [1949] Geneva Conventions, and this in two memoranda dated 7 May 1983 and 10 February 1984 . . . The states signatory to the Geneva Conventions, who have undertaken to ensure that countries at war respect these Conventions, hold in their hands the fate of . . . threatened people, whom the ICRC alone is unable to save.[54]

56. In a letter to two UK Members of Parliament in 1989, the ICRC Director of Principles, Law and Relations within the Movement wrote that:

> The ICRC considers it vital that the States party to the Geneva Conventions take all possible steps to ensure respect for [IHL] . . . It is moreover a legal obligation for them to do so because, in becoming party to the Geneva Conventions, those States have undertaken not only to respect the said Conventions themselves, but also to ensure respect for them by other States in all circumstances. This is the tenor of Article 1 common to the four Conventions . . . [It is] a matter of direct responsibility for the States. The ICRC therefore cannot but encourage them to make every effort to ensure that international humanitarian law is duly respected.[55]

57. At its Birmingham Session in 1993, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in which it underlined the determination of States "to take firm action with respect to those States which are responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law".[56]

58. At the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in 2001, the ICRC stated that:

> 10. Article 1 common to the four Geneva Conventions stipulates that the "High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances". This conference is to be viewed within that context. The ICRC has always welcomed all individual and joint efforts made by States party to the Geneva Conventions to fulfil this obligation and ensure respect for international humanitarian law. These efforts are all the more vital as violations of humanitarian law are far too common around the globe.

[53] ICRC, Conflict between Iran and Iraq: Second ICRC Appeal, 10 February 1984, IRRC, No. 239, 1984, p. 113.

[54] ICRC, Press Release No. 1498, The ICRC appeals to governments: its work halted in Iran, 23 November 1984.

[55] ICRC, Letter dated 18 October 1989 from the ICRC Director of Principles, Law and Relations within the Movement to two UK Members of Parliament, reprinted in Labour Middle East Council and Conservative Middle East Council (eds.), Towards a Strategy for the Enforcement of Human Rights in the Israeli Occupied West Bank and Gaza, A Working Symposium, London, 25 July 1989, pp. vii–viii.

[56] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Birmingham, 29–30 October 1993, Res. 2, preamble.

11. The means used to meet these legal and political responsibilities are naturally a matter to be decided upon by States. Whatever the means chosen, however, the ICRC wishes to emphasize that any action States may decide to take at international level must be aimed at achieving practical results and at ensuring application of and compliance with international humanitarian law, in the interests of the protected population.[57]

VI. Other Practice

59. In a resolution adopted during its Berlin Session in 1999, the Institute of International Law stated that:

V. Every State and every non-State entity participating in an armed conflict are legally bound vis-à-vis each other as well as all other members of the international community to respect international humanitarian law in all circumstances, and any other State is legally entitled to demand respect for this body of law. No State or non-State entity can escape its obligations by denying the existence of an armed conflict.

...

VII. Without prejudice to the functions and powers which the Charter attributes to the organs of the United Nations, in case of systematic and massive violations of humanitarian law or fundamental human rights, States, acting individually or collectively, are entitled to take diplomatic, economic and other measures towards any party to the armed conflict which has violated its obligations, provided such measures are permitted under international law.[58]

B. Definition of Reprisals

Note: For practice concerning the principle of reciprocity in the application of international humanitarian law, see Chapter 40, section B. For practice concerning collective punishment, see Chapter 32, section O.

Purpose of reprisals

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

60. Neither the Geneva Conventions nor the Additional Protocols provide a definition of "reprisal". They are also silent on the requirements for legitimate reprisals in cases where they are not explicitly prohibited.

61. Common Article 1 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that "the High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances".

[57] ICRC, Statement at the Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, §§ 10–11.

[58] Institute of International Law, Berlin Session, Resolution on the Application of International Humanitarian Law and Fundamental Human Rights in Armed Conflicts in which Non-State Entities are Parties, 25 August 1999, §§ V and VII.

62. Article 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties states that the principle of reciprocity does not apply "to provisions relating to the protection of the human person contained in treaties of a humanitarian character, in particular to provisions prohibiting any form of reprisals against persons protected by such treaties".
63. Article 1(1) AP I provides that "the High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for this Protocol in all circumstances". Article 1 AP I was adopted by 87 votes in favour, one against and 11 abstentions.[59]
64. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that this would be true "to the extent that it considers such measures necessary for the sole purpose of compelling the adverse party to cease committing violations under those Articles".[60]

Other Instruments
65. Article 28 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that:

> Retaliation will, therefore, never be resorted to as a measure of mere revenge, but only as a means of protective retribution, and moreover, cautiously and unavoidably; that is to say, retaliation shall only be resorted to after careful inquiry into the real occurrence, and the character of the misdeeds that may demand retribution.
>
> Unjust or inconsiderate retaliation removes the belligerents farther and farther from the mitigating rules of regular war, and by rapid steps leads them nearer to the internecine wars of savages.

66. Article 49 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Object and limits of countermeasures", provides that:

1. An injured State may only take countermeasures against a State which is responsible for an internationally wrongful act in order to induce that State to comply with its obligations under Part Two [Articles 28–41].
2. Countermeasures are limited to the non-performance for the time being of international obligations of the State taking the measures towards the responsible State.
3. Countermeasures shall, as far as possible, be taken in such a way as to permit the resumption of performance of the obligations in question.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
67. Australia's Commanders' Guide defines a reprisal as "an act, otherwise unlawful under the international law regulating armed conflict, utilised for the purpose of coercing an adversary to stop violating the recognised rules of armed conflict".[61] It further states that "reprisals are otherwise illegal actions that are taken by one nation for the sole purpose of persuading another nation to comply with LOAC. Nevertheless, because there is a risk that the conflict may escalate as a result, reprisals are rarely employed."[62]

[59] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.36, 23 May 1977, p. 41.
[60] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

68. Australia's Defence Force Manual, in its table of definitions, defines the term "reprisal" as "an act, otherwise unlawful under the international law regulating armed conflict, utilised for the purpose of coercing an adversary to stop violating the recognised rules of armed conflict".[63] It also states that "a reprisal is an otherwise illegal act done in response to a prior illegal act by the enemy. A reprisal aims to counter unlawful acts of warfare and to force the enemy to comply with the LOAC."[64] The manual further states that "reprisals are otherwise illegal actions that are taken by one nation for the sole purpose of persuading another nation to comply with the LOAC. Nevertheless, because there is a risk that the conflict may escalate as a result, reprisals are rarely employed."[65]

69. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "belligerent reprisals are actions which in themselves are contrary to the law of armed conflict but which are taken in response to violations committed by the adversary and to oblige him to comply with the law of armed conflict". It adds that, when recourse is made to reprisals, "the following conditions must be fulfilled: 1) the adversary must have committed a violation duly established by the law of armed conflict".[66]

70. Benin's Military Manual states that "as far as reprisals are concerned, under customary law, they are permitted to counter an unlawful act of warfare".[67] It also states that "acts of vengeance are prohibited".[68]

71. Canada's LOAC Manual defines a reprisal as "an act, otherwise unlawful under the LOAC . . . utilized for the purpose of coercing an adversary to stop violating the recognized rules of armed conflict".[69] It also states that:

> In the event of serious or persistent breaches of the LOAC it may be necessary for the adverse party to resort to a reprisal in an attempt to terminate the illegality. A reprisal is an illegal act resorted to after the adverse party has performed illegal acts and has refused to stop after being called upon to do so.[70]

The manual further states that a reprisal "is not a retaliatory act or a simple act of vengeance".[71] It goes on to say that:

> To qualify as a reprisal, an act must satisfy the following conditions:

[61] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), Glossary, p. xxiii.
[62] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1211.
[63] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 804.
[64] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 920.
[65] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1310.
[66] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 35.
[67] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[68] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 17.
[69] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), Glossary, p. GL-17.
[70] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 12.
[71] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 14.

a. It must respond to serious violations and manifestly unlawful acts, committed by an adversary government, its military commanders, or combatants for whom the adversary is responsible;
b. It must be accomplished for the purpose of compelling the adversary to observe the LOAC. Reprisals can not be undertaken for revenge or punishment. They are directed against an adversary in order to induce compliance with LOAC. Thus, reprisals serve as a law enforcement mechanism. Above all, reprisals are justifiable only to force an adversary to stop its illegal activity. If, for example, a party to an armed conflict commits a breach of law but follows that violation with an expression of regret and promise that it will not be repeated, and even takes steps to punish those responsible, then the action taken by another party to "redress" the situation cannot be justified as a lawful reprisal;
c. There must be reasonable notice that reprisals will be taken. What degree of notice is required will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Notice is normally given after the violation but may, in appropriate circumstances, predate the violation. An example is an appeal to the transgressor to cease its offending conduct and punish those responsible. Thus, such an appeal may serve both as a plea for compliance and a notice to the adversary that reprisals will be taken;
...
g. It must be publicized. Since reprisals are undertaken to induce an adversary's compliance with the recognized rules of LOAC, any action taken as a reprisal must be announced as a reprisal and publicized so that the adversary is aware of its obligation to abide by the law.[72]

72. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited [to military personnel in combat] to commit reprisals".[73]
73. Croatia's LOAC Compendium defines a reprisal as a "direct law enforcement procedure" and as a "breach of the L.O.W. [laws of war] for the purpose of terminating enemy violations". It also states that a condition for a reprisal is that it is directed "against [a] serious, manifest and deliberate breach of [the] L.O.W.".[74]
74. Ecuador's Naval Manual states that:

A reprisal is an enforcement measure under the law of armed conflict consisting of an act which would otherwise be unlawful but which is justified as a response to the unlawful acts of an enemy. The sole purpose of a reprisal is to induce the enemy to cease its illegal activity and to comply with the law of armed conflict.[75]

It further states that:

To be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria:
...
2. It must respond to illegal acts of warfare committed by an adversary government, its military commanders, or combatants for which the adversary is responsible. Anticipatory reprisal is not authorized.
...

[72] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 17.
[73] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[74] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[75] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.

4. Its purpose must be to cause the enemy to cease its unlawful activity. Therefore, acts taken in reprisal should be brought to the attention of the enemy in order to achieve maximum effectiveness. Reprisal must never be taken for revenge.[76]

75. France's LOAC Manual states that:

Reprisals aim to obtain the cessation of a violation committed by the enemy . . . The United Nations Charter permitting the use of force only in case of aggression, reprisals are permitted only in response to a previous attack. They must always aim at a military objective and be preceded by a warning. One must not confuse reprisals, retaliation and vengeance. Vengeance is always prohibited.[77]

76. Germany's Soldiers' Manual states that "reprisals are measures of retaliation, as such adverse to international public law, which a State may, as an exception, use against another State in order to induce the latter to stop the violation of international public law".[78]

77. Germany's Military Manual states that "reprisals are retaliatory measures normally contrary to international law taken by one party to the conflict in order to stop the adversary from violating international law".[79] It further states that "the use of reprisals can cause an adversary acting contrary to international law to stop his violations of the law. Reprisals are permissible only in exceptional cases and only for the purpose of enforcing compliance with international law."[80]

78. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are compulsory measures which one State may exceptionally use against another State in order to cause the latter to stop violations of international public law".[81]

79. Hungary's Military Manual defines a reprisal as a "direct law enforcement procedure" and as a "breach of the L.O.W. [laws of war] for the purpose of terminating enemy violations". It also provides that a condition for a reprisal is that it is directed "against [a] serious, manifest and deliberate breach of [the] L.O.W.".[82]

80. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that:

In principle, reprisals in warfare are prohibited, i.e. an act which categorize[s] against the laws of war and aim[s] to [answer to] the breach of the laws of war treaties committed by the adverse party. The reprisal could be allowed if, although it has been warned, the adverse party still continue[s] to violate the laws of war.[83]

81. Italy's IHL Manual states that:

The purpose of a reprisal is to induce the enemy to respect its obligations under international law and can be carried out either by means of acts similar to those illegally committed or by means of acts of a different nature. Therefore, a reprisal does not have the nature of a punishment, but is only a measure of direct coercion in

[76] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.1.
[77] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 108 and 109.
[78] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 2.
[79] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 476.
[80] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1206.
[81] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 318.
[82] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[83] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).

inducing the enemy to respect its obligations towards [Italy] . . . Given the nature and scope of a reprisal, it can, as a general rule, only be directed against the belligerent that violated the laws of war with regard to [Italy].[84]

The manual further states that the Italian government has declared in international fora that, in response to grave and systematic violations of the obligations relative to the protection of the civilian population and civilian objects, Italy will react by every measure permitted under international law to prevent the recurrence of such violations.[85]

82. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that:

Under customary law, reprisals are permitted to counter unlawful acts of warfare. They can only be taken if:

- they are intended to secure legitimate warfare;
  . . .
- . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives.

Reprisals are an unsatisfactory way of enforcing the law. They tend to be used as an excuse for illegal methods of warfare and carry a danger of escalation through repeated reprisals and counter reprisals.[86]

83. Mali's Army Regulations states that it is prohibited for military personnel in combat "to commit reprisals".[87]

84. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[88]

85. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "a reprisal is a measure which by itself constitutes a violation of the rules of humanitarian law of war but which is justified by the fact that it aims to force a state to put an end to previously committed violations of humanitarian law of war and to comply with the law".[89] The manual, referring to customary law, further states that reprisals are in principle allowed, provided that a number of conditions are fulfilled:

- Reprisals are only lawful when they aim at a violation previously committed by the adverse party the existence of which must be properly determined.
  . . .
- Reprisals against reprisals are prohibited.[90]

The manual concludes that "the freedom of states which have ratified Additional Protocol I to take recourse to reprisals is very limited".[91]

[84] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 23.
[85] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 26.
[86] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[87] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[88] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[89] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-5, see also p. IX-2.
[90] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-5.
[91] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-6.

86. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "a reprisal is an illegal act resorted to after the adverse Party has himself indulged in illegal acts and refused to desist from them after being called upon to do so. The reprisal is not a retaliatory act or simple act of vengeance."[92] The manual further states that:

In order to be considered a reprisal, an act must have certain characteristics:

a) It must respond to grave and manifestly unlawful acts committed by an adverse government, its military commanders, or combatants for whom the adversary is responsible.

b) It must be for the purpose of compelling the adverse Party to observe the law of armed conflict. Reprisals cannot be undertaken for the law of armed revenge, spite or punishment. Rather, they are directed against an adverse Party in order to induce him to refrain from further violations of the law of armed conflict. Thus, reprisals serve as an ultimate legal sanction or law enforcement mechanism. Above all, they are justifiable only to force an adverse Party to stop its illegal activity. If, for example, one Party to an armed conflict commits a breach of law but follows that violation with an expression of regret and promise that it will not be repeated, and even takes steps to punish those immediately responsible, the other Party cannot justify a lawful reprisal as the appropriate action to "right" the situation.

c) There must be reasonable notice that reprisals will be taken. What degree of notice is required will depend on the particular circumstances of each case. Notice is normally given after the violation but may, in appropriate circumstances, predate the violation. An example of notice is an appeal to the transgressor to cease its offending conduct and punish those responsible. Thus, such an appeal may serve both as a plea for compliance and a notice to the adverse Party that reprisals will be undertaken.

. . .

g) It must be publicized. Since reprisals are undertaken to induce an adverse Party's compliance with the recognized rules of armed conflict, any action taken as a reprisal must be announced as a reprisal and publicized so that the adverse Party is aware of its obligation to abide by the law.[93]

87. Nigeria's Military Manual, in a section dealing with GC I and those upon whom reprisals are prohibited, states that "[in the cases where reprisals are prohibited], a belligerent party cannot claim a right to set aside the rules of the convention in order to induce the enemy to return to an attitude of respect for the law of armed conflict".[94]

88. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines states that a soldier must "abstain from all acts of vengeance".[95]

89. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "a reprisal is an otherwise illegal act in response to a prior illegal act by the enemy. The purpose of a reprisal is to get the enemy to adhere to the law of war. Reprisals are only permitted according to strict criteria."[96] (emphasis in original)

[92] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(1).
[93] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(4).
[94] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 14, § 5.
[95] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), §§ 8 and 9.
[96] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).

90. Spain's LOAC Manual defines a reprisal as "a violation of the law of war, committed in response to the violation of the said law committed by the enemy".[97] Among the conditions which must be fulfilled for the lawful taking of reprisals, the manual states that "the action of the enemy must constitute a grave, manifest and deliberate violation of the law of war". It further emphasises that reprisals are only permitted if authorisation is given by the international conventions.[98] In another chapter, the manual states that "the fear of reprisals can influence belligerent parties and induce them to respect the International Conventions. Reprisals are authorized only in case of a violation of the law of war."[99]

91. Sweden's IHL Manual states that:

> Reprisals very seldom achieve their intended aim – the return of a wrongdoer to compliance with international law. In most cases, use of reprisals has, instead, led to a serious increase of suffering and losses among civilians. For these reasons, Sweden has, during the [CDDH] and elsewhere, worked for a strict limitation to the right to reprisal. Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[100]

92. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "reprisals are measures contrary to international law taken by one of the belligerents to punish unlawful acts committed by the enemy Power and to bring them to a halt".[101]

93. Togo's Military Manual states that "as far as reprisals are concerned, under customary law, they are permitted to counter an unlawful act of warfare".[102] It also states that "acts of vengeance are prohibited".[103]

94. The UK Military Manual states that "reprisals between belligerents are acts of retaliation for illegitimate acts of warfare. One of their objects is to cause the enemy to comply in future with the recognised laws of war. Reprisals are by custom admissible as a means of securing legitimate warfare."[104] It further states that "the illegitimate acts in respect of which reprisals are admissible may be committed by a government, by its military commanders, or by some person or persons whom it is impossible, for the time being, to apprehend, try and punish".[105] The manual also notes that:

> Reprisals are an extreme measure of coercion, because in most cases they inflict suffering upon innocent individuals. Nevertheless, in the circumstances of war, they often provide the only remedy as a punishment, as a deterrent and as a means of inducing the enemy to desist from his unlawful conduct.[106]

[97] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c(5)(a).
[98] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(a).
[99] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.10.c.
[100] Sweden, IHL Manual (1990), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[101] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(1).
[102] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[103] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 18.
[104] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 642.
[105] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 643.
[106] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644.

In addition, in a footnote on a provision regarding the procedure before recourse to reprisals is made, the manual states that "a certain caution should be exercised before deciding to institute reprisals, as in some cases counter-reprisals may follow, thus defeating the purpose of the original reprisals".[107]

95. The UK LOAC Manual states that "under customary law reprisals are permitted to counter unlawful acts of warfare. They can only be taken if: a. they are intended to secure legitimate warfare."[108] It also states that "reprisals are an unsatisfactory way of enforcing the law. They tend to be used as an excuse for illegal methods of warfare with a danger of escalation through repeated reprisals and counter-reprisals."[109] However, the manual also states that "the United Kingdom reserves the right to take proportionate reprisals against an enemy's civilian population or civilian objects where the enemy has attacked our own civilians or civilian objects in violation of [AP I]".[110]

96. The US Field Manual states that:

> Reprisals are acts of retaliation in the form of conduct which would otherwise be unlawful, resorted to by one belligerent against enemy personnel or property for acts of warfare committed by the other belligerent in violation of the law of war, for the purpose of enforcing future compliance with the recognized rules of civilized warfare.[111]

The manual further states that "reprisals are never adopted merely for revenge, but only as an unavoidable last resort to induce the enemy to desist from unlawful practices".[112] It goes on to say that "the rule requiring careful inquiry into the real occurrence will always be followed unless the safety of the troops requires immediate drastic action and the persons who actually committed the offence cannot be ascertained".[113] Furthermore, the manual notes that "the taking of prisoners by way of reprisal for acts previously committed (so-called "reprisal prisoners") is likewise forbidden (See GC [IV], art. 33)."[114]

97. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that:

> In order to be considered as a reprisal, an act must have the following characteristics when employed:
>
> (1) It must respond to grave and manifestly unlawful acts, committed by an adversary government, its military commanders, or combatants for whom the adversary is responsible.
> (2) It must be for the purpose of compelling the adversary to observe the law of armed conflict. Reprisals cannot be undertaken for revenge, spite or punishment. Rather, they are directed against an adversary in order to induce him to refrain from further violations of the law of armed conflict. Thus, reprisals serve as an ultimate legal sanction or law enforcement mechanism. Above all, they are justifiable only to force an adversary to stop its extra-legal activity.

[107] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 646, footnote 2.
[108] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 14.
[109] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 15.
[110] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 17.
[111] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(a).
[112] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(d).
[113] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(f).
[114] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(g).

If, for example, one party to an armed conflict commits a breach of law but follows that violation with an expression of regret and promise that it will not be repeated, and even takes steps to punish those immediately responsible, then any action taken by another party to "right" the situation cannot be justified as a lawful reprisal.

(3) There must be reasonable notice that reprisals will be taken. What degree of notice is required will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Notice is normally given after the violation but may, in appropriate circumstances, predate the violation. An example of notice is an appeal to the transgressor to cease its offending conduct and punish those responsible. Thus, such an appeal may serve both as a plea for compliance and a notice to the adversary that reprisals will be undertaken.[115]

The Pamphlet also states that:

If an act is a lawful reprisal, then as a legal measure it cannot lawfully be the excuse for a counter-reprisal. Under international law, as under domestic law, there can be no reprisal against a lawful reprisal. In fact, reprisals have frequently led to counter-reprisals, and the escalation of the conflicts through reprisals and counter-reprisals is one of the reasons for decline in the use of reprisals.[116]

It further states that:

[The reprisal] must be publicized. Since reprisals are undertaken to induce an adversary's compliance with the recognized rules of armed conflict, any action taken as a reprisal must be announced as a reprisal and publicized so that the adversary is aware of its obligation to abide by the law.[117]

98. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that:

A reprisal is an otherwise illegal act committed to persuade the enemy to cease some illegal activity on their part . . .

(1) While it is both lawful and proper to plan reprisal actions, as a practical matter, reprisals are often subject to abuse and merely result in escalation of the conflict.

. . .

(3) In most twentieth century conflicts, the United States has, as a matter of national policy, chosen not to carry out reprisals against the enemy, both because of the potential for escalation and because it is generally in our national interest to follow the law even if the enemy does not.

(4) The term "reprisal" is sometimes used to refer to any act or retaliation between the parties to a conflict. In law, however, the term should be limited to otherwise illegal acts done in reply to prior illegal acts of the enemy, as described in this paragraph.[118]

99. The US Naval Handbook states that:

A reprisal is an enforcement measure under the law of armed conflict consisting of an act which would otherwise be unlawful but which is justified as a response

[115] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(c)(1), (2) and (3).
[116] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(a).
[117] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(c)(7).
[118] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(b).

to the unlawful acts of an enemy. The sole purpose of a reprisal is to induce the enemy to cease its illegal activity and to comply with the law of armed conflict.[119]

It further states that:

To be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria:

...

2. It must respond to illegal acts of warfare committed by an adversary government, its military commanders, or combatants for which the adversary is responsible. Anticipatory reprisal is not authorized. ...
4. Its purpose must be to cause the enemy to cease its unlawful activity. Therefore, acts taken in reprisal should be brought to the attention of the enemy in order to achieve maximum effectiveness. Reprisal must never be taken for revenge.[120]

The Handbook also provides that "although reprisal is lawful when the foregoing requirements are met, there is always the risk that it will trigger retaliatory escalation (counter-reprisals) by the enemy. The United States has historically been reluctant to resort to reprisal for just this reason."[121]

100. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook states that:

A careful inquiry by the injured belligerent into the alleged violating conduct should precede the authorization of any reprisal measure. This is subject to the important qualification that, in certain circumstances, an offended belligerent is justified in taking immediate reprisals against illegal acts of warfare, particularly in those situations where the safety of his armed forces would clearly be endangered by a continuance of the enemy's illegal acts.[122]

It also states that:

Acts taken in reprisal may also be brought to the attention of neutrals if necessary to achieve maximum effectiveness. Since reprisals are undertaken to induce an adversary's compliance with the recognized rules of armed conflict, any action taken as a reprisal must be announced as a reprisal and publicized so that the adversary is aware of its obligation to abide by the law and to ensure that the reprisal action is not, itself, viewed as an unlawful act.[123]

The Annotated Supplement further states that "if an act is a lawful reprisal, it cannot lawfully be a basis for a counter-reprisal. Under international law, there can be no reprisal against a lawful reprisal."[124] In another note, it states that "although it is not prohibited to issue ... an order [that no quarter will be given or that no prisoners will be taken] as a reprisal, this form of reprisal offers little military advantage".[125]

101. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that:

[119] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.
[120] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.1.
[121] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.3.
[122] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.1, footnote 38.
[123] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.1, footnote 40.
[124] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.1, footnote 43.
[125] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.7, footnote 45.

Reprisal, under the provisions of this military manual, means an act which is contrary to the laws of war, but whose unlawfulness is abolished because it is undertaken in response to acts of the enemy who does not respect the laws of war, in order to force him to stop such violations, and to respect the laws of war in future.[126]

In another provision entitled "Aim and duration of reprisals", the manual states that "the aim of reprisals is to prevent the enemy from repeating violations of the laws of war and to force him to respect the laws of war".[127] It further provides that "the armed forces of the SFRY shall undertake reprisals against the enemy exceptionally and temporarily . . . Reprisals shall not be undertaken for every violation of the laws of war by the enemy but only in response to preceding, serious and repeated violations."[128] Moreover, it states that "the taking of hostages is prohibited in reprisal as well".[129]

National Legislation

102. Under the DRC Code of Military Justice as amended, killing as a means of reprisal is prohibited.[130]

103. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended states that "reprisals have the aim of inducing the enemy to observe the obligations deriving from international law and can be carried out either by means of acts similar to those committed [by the enemy] or by means of acts of a different nature".[131]

104. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of a commander who orders the taking of acts of reprisal – other than those permitted under the law or international conventions – or who does not order them to be stopped.[132]

105. Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes states that putting a person to death by means of reprisal is considered to be murder.[133]

106. Niger's Penal Code as amended, under a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and war crimes", states that "no interest and no political, military or national necessity whatsoever can justify [war crimes under the 1949 Geneva Conventions and both AP I and AP II], not even as a means of reprisal".[134]

107. Under Spain's Penal Code "anyone who . . . carries out or orders . . . reprisals or violent acts or threats in order to terrify [the civilian population]" is punishable.[135]

[126] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 27.
[127] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 28.
[128] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 29.
[129] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31.
[130] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 523.
[131] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.
[132] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 176.
[133] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 2(3)
[134] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.6.
[135] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611.

National Case-law

108. In the Priebke case in 1996, the Military Tribunal of Rome stated that reprisals "are to carry out an act in order to bring a violation to an end or to deter the commission of other violations [of international law]". It went on to state that "a reprisal is based on the need to recognise the injured State a means of self-help allowing it to attack any interest of the offending State". The Tribunal further stated that:

> It is useful to underline that a reprisal must have as its objective prevention or repression, but not revenge. It must aim for the cessation or non-repetition of an illegitimate injurious act, and must be carried out in a direct manner for this purpose and must not be more serious as the [initial] violation. Otherwise it becomes an act which is itself unjust and illegitimate, giving rise to an endless spiral of disproportionate reactions.[136]

109. In the Hass and Priebke case in 1997, the Military Tribunal of Rome made a similar statement to the one made in its judgement in the Priebke case in 1996 and added that "reprisals basically are a sanction, that is a reaction to an unlawful act. The unlawfulness of the act to which it is replying gives lawfulness to the sanctional activities." It further recalled the definition of reprisals contained in Italy's Law of War Decree as amended.[137] In its relevant parts, this judgement was confirmed by Italy's Military Appeals Court and the Supreme Court of Cassation.[138]

110. In its judgement in the Rauter case in 1948, the Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague observed that "it is in fact generally accepted that a belligerent has the right to take reprisals as a requital for unlawful acts of war committed by the opponent". Referring to the judgement of the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg in the List (Hostages Trial) case as well as to the conditions required for reprisals in general by the UK and US military regulations, the Court stated, however, that reprisals may never be taken for revenge but only as a means of inducing the enemy to desist from unlawful practices of warfare.[139] Nevertheless, on appeal, the Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands stated that:

> In the proper sense one can speak of reprisals only when a State resorts, by means of its organs, to measures at variance with International Law, on account of the fact that its opponent – in this case the State with which it is at war – had begun, by means of one or more of its organs, to commit acts contrary to International Law, quite irrespective of the question as to what organ this may have been,

[136] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 1 August 1996, Section 7.

[137] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 22 July 1997, Section 4.

[138] Italy, Military Appeals Court, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 March 1998; Supreme Court of Cassation, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, 16 November 1998.

[139] Netherlands, Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague, Rauter case, Judgement, 4 May 1948.

Government or legislator, Commander of the Fleet, Commander of the Land Forces, or of the Air Force, diplomat or colonial governor. The measures which the appellant describes . . . as "reprisals" bear an entirely different character, they are indeed retaliatory measures taken in time of war by the occupant of enemy territory as a retaliation not of unlawful acts of the State with which it is at war, but of hostile acts of the population of the territory in question or of individual members thereof.[140]

111. In the Bruns case before the Norwegian Eidsivating Court of Appeal (sitting as the Tribunal of first instance) in 1946, the Counsel for Defence claimed that the Norwegian military organisation and its activities were at variance with international law and that the Germans in fighting the organisation were, therefore, justified in using methods contrary to international law. The German methods of carrying out interrogations had to be regarded as constituting reprisals. However, the Court held that the Norwegian underground military movement did not constitute a breach of international law and therefore the Germans were not justified in using torture against its members as a means of reprisal.[141] In the same case, the Norwegian Supreme Court stated that it could not be established that the acts of torture had been carried out as reprisals. Reprisals were generally understood to aim at changing the adversary's conduct and forcing him to keep to the generally accepted rules of lawful warfare. If this aim were to be achieved, the reprisals must be made public and announced as such. During the whole of the occupation there was no indication from the German side to the effect that their acts of torture were to be regarded as reprisals against the Norwegian military organisation. They appeared to be German police measures designed to extort during interrogations information which could be used to punish people or could eventually have led to real reprisals to stop activities about which information was gained. The method applied to the interrogatories ("verschärfte Vernehmung") was nothing but a German routine police method and could, therefore, not be regarded as a reprisal.[142]

112. In the Flesch case in 1946 in which a German national was charged with having ordered the killing of Norwegian citizens who had allegedly been members of the Norwegian underground movement, the Frostating Court of Appeal stated that whatever the legal position, an act of reprisal can in no circumstances be pleaded in exculpation unless it was, at the time, announced publicly as such, or it appeared from the act itself that it was intended as a reprisal and showed clearly against what unlawful acts it was directed. None of the incidents in question fulfilled any of these minimum demands. As the defendant maintained that the acts were acts of reprisal directed against a number of subversive acts, the Frostating Court of Appeal did not regard the alleged acts of sabotage carried out by soldiers in uniform as constituting a breach of international law and therefore concluded that the acts committed by the [140] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Rauter case, Judgement, 12 January 1949.

[141] Norway, Eidsivating Court of Appeal, Bruns case, Judgement, 20 March 1946.
[142] Norway, Supreme Court, Bruns case, Judgement, 3 July 1946.

accused could not be regarded as reprisals but must be considered as acts solely intended to terrorise the population in order to stem the underground movement.[143] In the same case, the Norwegian Supreme Court agreed with the view held by the Frostating Court of Appeal to the effect that the execution of the Norwegian citizens without previous trial could not be regarded as constituting justifiable reprisals and made reference to what had been held by the Supreme Court in the Bruns case.[144]

113. In the List (Hostages Trial) case in the late 1947/48, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg held that "a reprisal is a response to an enemy's violation of the laws of war which would otherwise be a violation on one's own side".[145] As to the difference between the taking of hostages and measures of reprisal, the Tribunal stated that:

> Where innocent individuals are seized and punished for a violation of the laws of war which has already occurred, no question of hostages is involved. It is nothing more than the infliction of a reprisal. Throughout the evidence in the present case, we find the term hostage applied where a reprisal only was involved.

However, it stated that "the term 'reprisal prisoners' will be considered as those individuals who are taken from the civilian population to be killed in retaliation for offences committed by unknown persons within the occupied area". It also stated that:

> Where legality of action is absent, the shooting of innocent members of the population as a measure of reprisal is not only criminal but it has the effect of destroying the basic relationship between the occupant and the population. Such a condition can progressively degenerate into a reign of terror. Unlawful reprisals may bring on counter reprisals and create an endless cycle productive of chaos and crime. To prevent a distortion of the right into a barbarous method of repression, International Law provides a protective mantle against the abuse of the right.[146]

Other National Practice

114. During the Algerian war of independence, the FLN denounced violations of IHL by French forces, stating that "it will be impossible for the FLN to respect the laws of war, if France persists in ignoring them".[147]

115. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, Argentina welcomed the efforts of the French delegation with regard to the introduction of a provision on the prohibition of reprisals in AP I.[148] It further noted that the French proposal "should perhaps be completed so as to ensure that excessive reprisals did not lead to counter-reprisals".[149]

[143] Norway, Frostating Court of Appeal, Flesch case, Judgement, 2 December 1946.
[144] Norway, Supreme Court, Flesch case, Decision, 12 February 1948.
[145] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, 8 July 1947–19 February 1948.
[146] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, 8 July 1947–19 February 1948.
[147] El Moudjahid, Vol. 1, p. 372.
[148] Argentina, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.46, 28 April 1976, p. 61, § 32.
[149] Argentina, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.46, 28 April 1976, p. 61, § 35.

116. The Report on the Practice of Australia states that "Australia's opinio juris is, with certain exceptions, supportive of a prohibition against belligerent reprisals".[150]

117. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, Austria stated that the French proposal on a prohibition of reprisals "gave a good definition of what a reprisal was", stating, however, that Austria "had great difficulty with the idea of introducing into humanitarian law a legal sanction of the law of war always regarded as incompatible with the very principle of humanity".[151]

118. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, Belarus, opposing the French proposal on a prohibition of reprisals and referring to a number of international instruments, stated that "there was a clearly expressed general trend towards the prohibition of reprisals". It went on to say that "any toleration of the possibility of taking reprisals ... would be in radical conflict with the spirit and meaning of the Geneva Conventions ... Furthermore, it would run counter to a number of resolutions of the United Nations General Assembly."[152]

119. In 1981, in a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Foreign Affairs noted that AP I "has so effectively limited the areas of permissible reprisals as to virtually constitute a total ban on them".[153] As a counter-argument against a reservation on reprisals, it noted, inter alia, that "reprisals are punitive rather than protective in character and therefore do not belong within the framework of a humanitarian agreement" and that "they cannot be controlled and contribute to counter-reprisals and a general escalation of violence".[154] It further stated that:

> A reservation on reprisals would also affect the operation of the general obligation contained in Article 1 of [AP I], viz, "The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and ensure respect for this Protocol in all circumstances". The phrase "in all circumstances" can be taken to include circumstances in which the adverse party is violating the Protocol.[155]

The memorandum also stated that:

> The "material breach" provision of the Vienna Convention on the Law of the Treaties (Article 60) cannot be invoked to permit a party to the Protocol to suspend

[150] Report on the Practice of Australia, 1998, Chapter 2.9.

[151] Austria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 78, § 52.

[152] Belarus, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, pp. 80 and 81, §§ 61 and 62.

[153] Canada, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Memorandum of the Legal Operations Division on the ratification of the 1977 Protocol I to the Geneva Red Cross Convention: Canada's attitude to possible reservations, Doc. FLO-830, 16 June 1981, § 6.

[154] Canada, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Memorandum of the Legal Operations Division on the ratification of the 1977 Protocol I to the Geneva Red Cross Convention: Canada's attitude to possible reservations, Doc. FLO-830, 16 June 1981, § 8.

[155] Canada, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Memorandum of the Legal Operations Division on the ratification of the 1977 Protocol I to the Geneva Red Cross Convention: Canada's attitude to possible reservations, Doc. FLO-830, 16 June 1981, § 12.

the operation of the prohibition of reprisals in the face of e.g. enemy bombardment of the civilian population. The fifth paragraph of the Article 60 of the Convention . . . was expressly introduced in the Treaty to reinforce the already existing prohibitions against reprisals contained in the Geneva Conventions. It could therefore be argued that to enter a reservation on reprisals with respect to [AP I] defeats the object of the Conventions and Protocol and also the object of the relevant provision of the Vienna Convention. In other words, the reserving State would be attempting to do by reservation what it could not do by suspension of the agreement on the grounds of material breach.[156]

With regard to the compatibility of a possible reservation regarding reprisals in respect of AP I and Principle II of the Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States of the Final Act of the CSCE Helsinki Summit of 1975, the memorandum noted that "the Final Act does not of course have the force of law except to the extent that it incorporates already binding obligations. Nevertheless, it comprises commitments undertaken at the highest political level on the part of the thirty-five states participating in the CSCE." It therefore stated that "a reservation regarding reprisals under [AP I] is thus likely to provoke allegations of non-compliance with the CSCE Final Act".[157]

120. In 1986, in an annex to a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Defence noted that:

The expression "reprisal" is not defined in any international agreement. An acceptable definition would be as follows:

A reprisal is an otherwise illegal act of retaliation committed by one belligerent against another belligerent after that belligerent has violated the laws of war which is intended to cause that belligerent to comply in future with the laws of war. The act of reprisal must be proportional to the illegal act or acts committed by the other belligerent.[158]

It further noted that:

Under the [1949] Geneva Conventions, reprisals are permissible when directed against enemy military or civilian property or personnel behind the enemy's lines. Under [AP I], the only legitimate reprisal targets are enemy armed forces or military objectives. Since these are already legitimate targets, the only means for carrying out reprisals would be the use of unlawful methods of combat, such as denial of quarter, or the use of unlawful weapons, such as biological weapons or lethal gases . . . The use of such methods or weapons would be more likely to increase the scale or [156] Canada, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Memorandum of the Legal Operations Division on the ratification of the 1977 Protocol I to the Geneva Red Cross Convention: Canada's attitude to possible reservations, Doc. FLO-830, 16 June 1981, § 13.

[157] Canada, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Memorandum of the Legal Operations Division on the ratification of the 1977 Protocol I to the Geneva Red Cross Convention: Canada's attitude to possible reservations, Doc. FLO-830, 16 June 1981, §§ 14–15.

[158] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, Annex A, § 1.

intensity of the conflict than a response to a violation which is proportional and similar in kind.[159]

The Ministry of Defence also stated that "it is difficult to point out individual cases where the possibility of reprisal deterred the commission of breaches of the law of armed conflict".[160]

121. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals and expressed regret that the term had not been adequately defined".[161]

122. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the representative of Czechoslovakia said that "his delegation was in favour of the absolute prohibition of all measures of reprisal".[162]

123. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

Add a new Article 74 bis [to AP I]:

1. Reprisals shall be prohibited under the present Protocol.
2. Nevertheless, in the event of a belligerent State infringing the regulations laid down by the present Protocol and the State victim of that breach considering the violation to be so serious and deliberate as to render it imperative to call upon its perpetrator to respect the law, the prohibition referred to in paragraph 1 of the present Article may be waived on condition . . .[163]

124. At the CDDH, France made another proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

Add a new Article 74 bis [to AP I]:

1. In the event that the Party to a conflict commits serious, manifest and deliberate breaches of its obligations under this Protocol, and a Party victimized by these breaches considers it imperative to take action to compel the Party violating its obligations to cease doing so, the victimized Party shall be entitled, subject to the provisions of this Article, to resort to certain measures which are designed to repress the breaches and induce compliance with the Protocol, but which would otherwise be prohibited by the Protocol.[164]

125. During discussions in the First Committee of the CDDH with respect to its delegation's draft provisions on reprisals in AP I, France noted that "many delegations had, in fact, felt that the effect of the proposal was to justify

[159] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, Annex A, § 8.
[160] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, Annex A, § 14.
[161] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[162] Czechoslovakia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.48, 30 April 1976, p. 94, § 52.
[163] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221, 19 February 1975, p. 323.
[164] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.

reprisals" but that "that was not the true aim of the proposal and in drafting it the French delegation had had in mind only the cause of humanitarian law".[165] It further noted that:

> The purpose of its proposal was not to allow the victim [of a breach of the law] to react with violence, but to give it the possibility under the Conventions of deterring the party committing the breach from continuing its action, of obliging it to respect the law. Such a threat ... should of course arise from "serious, manifest and deliberate" breaches not requiring recourse to a commission of inquiry. They would clearly not just be the individual breaches mentioned in [draft] article 74. Such a possibility of deterrence sanctioned by a convention would have to be limited by strict conditions.[166]

France also noted that "generally speaking, the French proposal was designed to cover cases in which, as the Oxford Manual stated, there was an urgent need to recall the party committing the breach to a respect for the rules to which it had subscribed".[167]

126. In 1973, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the protection of human rights in times of armed conflict, the FRG stated that "it supported proposals for a restriction on the right to resort to reprisals".[168]

127. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the GDR stated that his delegation felt that the French proposal on a prohibition of reprisals "would not help to implement [AP I] but would rather tend to weaken it; and he therefore strongly opposed it".[169]

128. The Report on the Practice of Germany states that the Rules of Engagement for the German Composite Force in Somalia provided that when it became necessary to open fire, "retaliation is forbidden".[170]

129. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, Hungary, opposing the French proposal on a prohibition of reprisals, stated that "if the parties to the conflict were evenly balanced, reprisals would lead to counter-reprisals and thus to escalation, rather than to respect for law. When the forces were not evenly balanced, reprisals would merely increase the advantage of the stronger power."[171]

[165] France, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.46, 28 April 1976, p. 58, § 15.
[166] France, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.46, 28 April 1976, p. 58, § 24.
[167] France, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.46, 28 April 1976, p. 58, § 27.
[168] FRG, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/28/SR.1452,3 December 1973, § 43.
[169] GDR, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 72, § 27.
[170] Report on the Practice of Germany, 1997, Chapter 2.9, referring to Rules of Engagement for the German Composite Force in Somalia.
[171] Hungary, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 79, § 56.

130. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, India stated that:

> Reprisals or retaliation under international law are also governed by certain specific principles. First, reprisals to be valid and admissible could only be taken in response to a prior delict or wrongful act by a State . . . In other words, a nuclear weapon could not be used by way of reprisal against another State if that State did not commit any wrongful act or delict involving use of force.[172]

After pointing out the principle of proportionality and the obligation to respect "certain fundamental principles of humanitarian law", India stated that:

> In view of the above, use of nuclear weapons even by way of reprisal or retaliation, appears to be unlawful. In any case, if the wrongful use of force in the first instance did not involve the use of nuclear weapons, it is beyond doubt that even in response by way of retaliation States do not have the right to use nuclear weapons because of their special quality as weapons of mass destruction.[173]

131. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, the opinio juris of Iran is supportive of the right to take reprisals. It states that in practice during the Iran–Iraq War, Iran resorted to reprisals. However, it also notes that in most cases, Iran stopped carrying out reprisals after Iraq had ceased attacking civilian objects.[174]

132. According to the Report on the Practice of Iraq, a reprisal is "a reaction from one party to the adverse party which undertook an act that led to damages thereto with the aim of revenge and deterrence".[175]

133. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the representative of Italy stated that "from the standpoint of the required conditions laid down, he could accept the [French] proposal [on a prohibition of reprisals] in principle".[176]

134. At the CDDH, in an explanation of vote, Mexico stated that:

> The delegation of Mexico could not have accepted that a Protocol intended to strengthen the law concerning warlike activities should authorize reprisals, even if it were claimed that the intention was to force the enemy to respect humanitarian law . . . Experience shows that reprisals do not lead the enemy to respect humanitarian law, but result in an increase in violations and hostilities.
>
> Legalization of reprisals, as proposed by France, would have enabled belligerents who were in breach of humanitarian law to claim every time that their breach was a legitimate reprisal sanctioned by international law. The delegation of Mexico believes that the mandatory nature of humanitarian law does not depend from the observance of its rules by the adverse Party, but stems from the inherently wrongful nature of the act prohibited by international humanitarian law. The Declaration on [172] India, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 2.

[173] India, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, pp. 2–3.
[174] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[175] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 2.9.
[176] Italy, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 77, § 48.

Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, unanimously adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in its resolution 2625 (XXV) of 24 October 1970, prohibits reprisals involving the use of force. The delegation of Mexico maintains that this Declaration is a valid interpretation of the United Nations Charter, so that the prohibition in question is legally binding.[177]

135. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the Netherlands stated that "reprisals were a very questionable means of securing respect for humanitarian law". It further stated that "reprisals should remain a measure of last resort by which to induce an enemy to respect the law, provided that certain strict conditions and safeguards were observed".[178]

136. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Dutch parliament in the context of the ratification procedure of the Additional Protocols, the government of the Netherlands stated that "a reprisal is a means of sanction, consisting in an act that itself is prohibited by international law, to which a State resorts in order to compel another State to cease a violation which that other State is committing". It further stated that:

> In practice, it will often be very difficult to fulfil all the requirements that make a reprisal a justified action. Moreover, reprisals can lead to counter-reprisals and create a risk of a fast escalation of violations of humanitarian law. Finally, reprisals are objectionable because, even if all conditions are met, they create victims among persons who have no fault in the immediate causes of the reprisals.[179]

It also noted that under AP I, only the section on means and methods of warfare did not contain any prohibition on reprisals. Adopting an a contrario reasoning resulting from this, it took the view that reprisals could only be taken in the event of the use of prohibited weapons or of acts of perfidy.[180]

137. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, Norway stated that "it was doubtful whether a victim State or party would be helped by resorting to actions directed against the innocent, even if it had done so in the past. Reprisals might well have the opposite effect, and lead to counter-reprisals."[181]

138. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[182]

[177] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, pp. 449–450.
[178] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.48, 30 April 1976, p. 86, § 14.
[179] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum for the ratification of the Additional Protocols, 1983–1984 Session, Doc. 18 277 (R 1247), No. 3, p. 40.
[180] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum for the ratification of the Additional Protocols, 1983–1984 Session, Doc. 18 277 (R 1247), No. 3, p. 41.
[181] Norway, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 76, § 45.
[182] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

139. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the representative of Poland noted that:

> To admit reprisals, even on a limited or exceptional scale, would be a backward step. All reprisals against persons and objects were prohibited by the Hague and Geneva Conventions, and . . . prohibition should be confirmed and extended by the Protocol. Moreover, reprisals would be contrary to the spirit of both the United Nations Charter and the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (General Assembly Resolution 2625 (XXV)) . . . His delegation did not share the view of those who held that reprisals might help to ensure respect for international law. They could only lead to counter-reprisals, even if the strictest conditions were laid down . . . The Second World War had shown that it was completely possible to refrain from taking reprisals.[183]

140. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, Switzerland stated that it supported the French amendment on a prohibition of reprisals "in principle".[184]

141. In 1988, in a note on the prohibition on the use of chemical weapons, the Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs stated that "the 1925 Protocol declares a custom". It added that "the 1925 Protocol and custom prohibit the first use of chemical weapons and accept the lawfulness of second use only in the case of reprisals in kind".[185]

142. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the representative of the USSR, opposing the French proposal on a prohibition of reprisals, stated that his delegation was "really concerned with reprisals, and analysis revealed that they contravened the meaning and spirit of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and draft [AP I]". He also stated that the implementation of the French proposal "could in practice lead to far-reaching consequences and could even undermine the basis of international humanitarian law" and that "his delegation took the view that reprisals were inhumane and unjust. They inevitably involved persons who had not participated in the original violation alleged to have taken place, and they mainly affected the civilian population."[186]

143. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the UK stated that it was "not true that at the present time [in 1976] the old system of lawful counter-measures was excluded; it still existed under customary law, [183] Poland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.46, 28 April 1976, p. 63, §§ 42 and 43.

[184] Switzerland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.46, 28 April 1976, p. 65, § 50.

[185] Switzerland, Note of the Directorate for Public International Law of the Federal Department of Foreign Affairs, 15 December 1988, reprinted in Annuaire Suisse de Droit International, Vol. 46, 1989, pp. 244–247 (in French) and in Marco Sassóli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War!, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, pp. 608–610 (in English).

[186] USSR, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, pp. 74 and 75, §§ 39 and 40.

and any exclusion must be expressed, as in the Geneva Conventions". It also stated that it would "support the principle embodied in [the French proposal on a prohibition of reprisals]".[187]

144. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> A belligerent reprisal is an action, taken by a party to an armed conflict, which would normally constitute a violation of the laws of armed conflict but which is lawful because it is taken in response to a prior violation of that law by an adversary . . . To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions . . . It must meet the criteria for the regulation of reprisals, namely that it is taken in response to a prior wrong . . . is undertaken for the purpose of putting an end to the enemy's unlawful conduct and for preventing further illegalities.[188]

145. In 1980, in a footnote to a memorandum of law on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", a legal adviser of the US Department of State noted that "reprisals are permitted under the laws of war only for the limited purpose of compelling the other belligerent to observe the laws of war".[189]

146. In 1987, a Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, explaining "the position of the United States on current law of war agreements", stated with regard to Article 51 AP I that "[this provision] prohibits any reprisal attacks against the civilian population, that is, attacks that would otherwise be forbidden but that are in response to the enemy's own violations of the law and are intended to deter future violations".[190]

147. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

> For the purpose of the law of armed conflict, reprisals are lawful acts of retaliation in the form of conduct that would otherwise be unlawful, resorted to by one belligerent in response to violations of the law of war by another belligerent. Such reprisals would be lawful if conducted in accordance with the applicable principles governing belligerent reprisals. Specifically, the reprisals must be taken with the intent to cause the enemy to cease violations of the law of armed conflict . . . As in the case of other requirements of the law of armed conflict, a judgment about compliance of any use of nuclear weapons with these requirements would have to be made on the [187] UK, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 74, § 38.

[188] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, p. 58.

[189] US, Department of State, Memorandum of law by a Legal Adviser on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", 9 April 1980, reprinted in Marian Nash Leich, Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1980, Department of State Publication 9610, Washington, D.C., December 1986, pp. 1034 and 1041, footnote 38.

[190] US, Remarks of Judge Abraham D. Sofaer, Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, 22 January 1987, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 469.

basis of the actual circumstances in each case, and could not be made in advance or in the abstract.[191]

148. During discussions on reprisals in Committee I of the CDDH, the representative of Venezuela stated that the French proposal on a prohibition of reprisals "was excellent". However, he suggested that the final text "should also include a formal prohibition of counter-reprisals so as to avoid situations in which the parties to a conflict become involved in a vicious circle and also because counter-reprisals were a negation of the law".[192]

149. In 1991, notwithstanding the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY, according to which these States agreed that hostilities should be conducted in accordance with, inter alia, Articles 48–58 AP I, the YPA issued a general warning to the attention of the Croatian authorities to the effect that "a number of impudent crimes has been committed against the members of the Y.P.A. . . . Family members of the Y.P.A. are being maltreated, persecuted and destroyed in many different ways. This cannot be tolerated any longer." The YPA therefore warned that:

1. For every attacked and seized object of the [YPA] – an object of vital importance for the Republic of Croatia will be destroyed immediately.
2. For every attacked and occupied garrison – an object of vital importance to the town in which the garrison is located will be destroyed. This is, at the same time, a warning to civilian persons to abandon such settlement in time.[193]

According to the Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY), "this warning calls for detailed analysis, but arguably it can be classified as a threat of the use of belligerent reprisals".[194]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

150. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 49 entitled "Object and limits of countermeasures", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[195]

[191] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 30.
[192] Venezuela, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 72, §§ 30 and 32.
[193] SFRY, Headquarters of the Supreme Command of the Armed Forces of the S.F.R.Y, Warning to the attention of the President of Croatia, the Government of Croatia and the General Staff of the Croatian Army, 1 October 1991.
[194] Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY), 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[195] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.

151. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) stated that:

> 63. A reprisal must be distinguished from a simple act of retaliation or vengeance. An unlawful act committed under the guise of retaliation or vengeance remains unlawful, and the claim of retaliation or vengeance is no defence.
> 64. A reprisal is an otherwise illegal act resorted to after the adverse party has himself indulged in illegal acts and refused to desist therefrom after being called upon to do so. The purpose of a reprisal is to compel the adverse party to terminate its illegal activity.[196]

Other International Organisations

152. No practice was found.

International Conferences

153. The Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States of the Final Act of the CSCE Helsinki Summit of 1975 provides, inter alia, that the participating States "will also refrain in their mutual relations from any act of reprisal by force".[197]

IV. Practice of International Judical and Quasi-judicial Bodies

154. In its advisory opinion in the Namibia case in 1971, the ICJ considered it to be a general principle of law that "a right of termination on account of breach must be presumed to exist in respect of all treaties, except as regards provisions relating to the protection of the human person contained in treaties of a humanitarian character".[198]

155. In the Naulilaa case in 1928 regarding acts taken by Germany against Portugal in reprisal for the killing of three German officials by Portuguese soldiers, the Special Arbitral Tribunal stated that:

> The latest doctrine, and more particularly German doctrine, defines reprisals in these terms:
>
> Reprisals are an act of taking the law into its own hands . . . by the injured State, an act carried out – after an unfulfilled demand – in response to an act contrary to the law of nations by the offending State. Their effect is to suspend temporarily, in the relations between the two States, the observance of a particular rule of the law of nations. They are limited by the experiences of mankind and the rules of good faith, applicable in relations between States. They would be illegal if an earlier act, contrary to the law of nations, had not furnished the motive.[199]

[196] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, §§ 63–64.
[197] CSCE, Final Act of the 1975 Summit, Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States, Helsinki, 1 August 1975, Principle II.
[198] ICJ, Namibia case, Advisory Opinion, 21 June 1971, § 96.
[199] Special Arbitral Tribunal, Naulilaa case, Decision, 31 July 1928, pp. 1025–1026.

156. In the Cysne case in 1930 dealing with the destruction of a Portuguese vessel by Germany in reprisal for violations of international law by the UK, the Special Arbitral Tribunal stated that:

> As the respondent maintains, an act contrary to international law may be justified, by way of reprisals, if motivated by a like act . . . However, the German argument, which is sound up to this point, overlooks an essential question which can be put in the following terms: Could the measure which the German Government was entitled to take, by way of reprisals against Great Britain and its allies, be applied to neutral vessels and specifically to Portuguese vessels?
>
> The answer must be in the negative, even according to the opinion of German scholars. This answer is the logical consequence of the rule that reprisals, which constitute an act in principle contrary to the law of nations, are defensible only in so far as they were provoked by some other act likewise contrary to that law. Only reprisals taken against the provoking State are permissible. Admittedly, it can happen that legitimate reprisals taken against an offending State may affect the nationals of an innocent State. But that would be an indirect and unintentional consequence which, in practice, the injured State will always endeavor to avoid or to limit as far as possible. By contrast, the measures taken by the German State in 1915 against neutral merchant vessels were aimed directly and deliberately against the nationals of States innocent of the violations of the London Declaration attributed to Great Britain and its allies. Consequently, not being in conformity with the Declaration, they constituted acts contrary to the law of nations, unless one of the neutral States had committed against Germany an act contrary to the law of nations that could make it liable to reprisals. There is no evidence of any such act having been committed by Portugal, and the German claim relies exclusively on the acts committed by Great Britain and its allies. Hence, in the absence of any Portuguese provocation warranting reprisals, the German State must be held not to have been entitled to violate article 23 of the Declaration in respect of Portuguese nationals. Accordingly, it was contrary to the law of nations to treat the cargo of the Cysne as absolute contraband.[200]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

157. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

158. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that:

> (1) Subject to Subsection (2), a state victim of a violation of an international obligation by another state may resort to countermeasures that might otherwise be unlawful, if such measures
>
> (a) are necessary to terminate the violation or prevent further violation, or to remedy the violation; and
>
> (b) are not out of proportion to the violation and the injury suffered.

[200] Special Arbitral Tribunal, Cysne case, Decision, 30 June 1930, pp. 1956–1057.

(2) The threat or use of force in response to a violation of international law is subject to prohibitions on the threat or use of force in the United Nations Charter, as well as to Subsection (1).[201]

159. Greenwood states that:

It has never been doubted that reprisals may only be taken in response to a violation of international law by the party against which they are directed (or its ally). In the case of belligerent reprisals, however, a question arises about the nature of the prior violation which provides the justification for the reprisal. Belligerent reprisals consist of acts which, if they could not be justified as reprisals, would constitute violations of the law which regulates the conduct of war or armed conflict . . . The better view is . . . that belligerent reprisals may lawfully be taken only in response to a prior violation of the law of armed conflict and not in retaliation for an unlawful resort to force.
. . .
The prior violation to which the reprisals are a response must be imputable to the State against which the reprisals are directed, or perhaps to an ally of that State . . . Allies of a State which is responsible for a violation of the laws of armed conflict may also be subjected to reprisals where they are themselves implicated in the violation and probably even where they have no direct involvement if the violation takes the form of a policy of conducting hostilities in a particular way. Thus, the United Kingdom extended the maritime reprisals adopted against Germany to Italy and Japan when they entered the Second World War. The United Kingdom maintained that, in allying themselves with Germany, Italy and Japan had made themselves "party to the methods of waging war adopted by Germany" and would "share in any advantages derived therefrom".[202]

Measure of last resort

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

160. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that this would be true "only after [a] formal warning to the adverse party requiring cessation of the violations has been disregarded".[203]

Other Instruments

161. Article 52 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Conditions relating to resort to countermeasures", states that:

[201] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 905.
[202] Christopher Greenwood, "The Twilight of the Law of Belligerent Reprisals", Netherlands Yearbook of International Law, Vol. 20, 1989, pp. 40–43. On the extension by the UK of maritime reprisals adopted against Germany to Italy, see also Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, pp. 120 and 156.
[203] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

1. Before taking countermeasures, an injured State shall:
   (a) Call on the responsible State . . . to fulfil its obligations under Part Two [Articles 28–41];
   (b) Notify the responsible State of any decision to take countermeasures and offer to negotiate with that State.
2. Notwithstanding paragraph 1(b), the injured State may take such urgent countermeasures as are necessary to preserve its rights.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

162. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "some nations may not comply with LOAC in the conduct of armed conflict. Where this occurs, and all methods of persuasion and diplomatic pressure have failed, reprisals may be justified but only against military objectives."[204] It adds that "in any case, reprisals must . . . only be resorted to after lesser forms of redress have been tried".[205]

163. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that, when recourse is made to reprisals, the following conditions must be fulfilled: "2) attempts must first be made to stop [the violation of the LOAC by the adversary] or to prevent its repetition by peaceful means".[206]

164. Benin's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . a prior warning is given".[207]

165. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

To qualify as a reprisal, an act must satisfy the following conditions:

. . .

c. There must be reasonable notice that reprisals will be taken. What degree of notice is required will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Notice is normally given after the violation but may, in appropriate circumstances, predate the violation. An example of notice is an appeal to the transgressor to cease its offending conduct and punish those responsible. Thus, such an appeal may serve both as a plea for compliance and a notice to the adversary that reprisals will be undertaken;
d. The victim of a violation must first exhaust other reasonable means of securing compliance in order to justify taking a reprisal.[208]

166. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that a condition for a reprisal is that it is a "last resort" and that "prior warning" be given.[209]

167. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that:

To be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria:

. . .

3. When circumstances permit, reprisal must be preceded by a demand for redress by the enemy of his unlawful acts.

[204] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1309; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1210.
[205] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1310; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1211.
[206] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 35.
[207] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[208] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-3, § 17.
[209] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.

...

5. Reprisal must only be used as a last resort when other enforcement measures have failed or would be of no avail.[210]

168. France's LOAC Manual states that reprisals must always be preceded by a warning.[211]

169. Germany's Military Manual provides that "reprisals ... shall be the last resort, if all other means to stop the illegal behaviour have failed and the warning has not been heeded".[212]

170. Hungary's Military Manual states that a condition for a reprisal is that it is a "last resort" and that "prior warning" be given.[213]

171. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that:

> In principle, reprisals in warfare are prohibited, i.e. an act which categorize[s] against the laws of war and aim[s] to [answer to] the breach of the laws of war treaties committed by the adverse party. The reprisal could be allowed if, although it has been warned, the adverse party still continue[s] to violate the laws of war.[214]

172. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that reprisals "can only be taken if ... prior warning is given".[215]

173. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, referring to customary law, states that reprisals are in principle allowed, provided that a number of conditions are fulfilled. Among these conditions it lists that "it must first have been tried to stop the violation of humanitarian law of war by other means (for example by the intervention of a protecting power)".[216]

174. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

> There must be reasonable notice that reprisals will be taken. What degree of notice is required will depend on the particular circumstances of each case. Notice is normally given after the violation but may, in appropriate circumstances, predate the violation. An example of notice is an appeal to the transgressor to cease its offending conduct and punish those responsible. Thus, such an appeal may serve both as a plea for compliance and a notice to the adverse Party that reprisals will be undertaken.
>
> The victim of a violation must first exhaust other reasonable means of securing compliance in order to justify taking reprisal.[217]

175. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals are only permitted according to strict criteria".[218]

176. Spain's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with the exercise of command and its restrictions with regard to reprisals, states that "reprisals must be the ultimate resort to re-establish respect for the law of war and may not

[210] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.1.
[211] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 109.
[212] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 478.
[213] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[214] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).
[215] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[216] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-5.
[217] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(4)(c) and (d).
[218] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).

lose sight of this aim".[219] In the chapter dealing with methods of combat, the manual lists among the conditions which must be fulfilled for the lawful taking of reprisals that: "they must be a last resort to re-establish respect for the laws of war"; that the State which takes reprisals "has unsuccessfully tried to make the enemy respect the law of war or that such attempts would be of no use"; and that the enemy has been formally warned of the measure that would be taken if it failed to comply with or repeated its violations of the law of war.[220]

177. Togo's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . a prior warning is given".[221]

178. The UK Military Manual states that:

> An infraction of the laws of war having been definitely established, every effort should first be made to detect and punish the actual offenders. Only if this is impossible may recourse be had to reprisals, if the injured belligerent is of the opinion that the facts warrant them. As a rule, the injured party must not at once resort to reprisals, but must first lodge a complaint with the enemy (or with a neutral Power, for transmission to the enemy) with a view to preventing any repetition of the offence and to securing the punishment of the guilty. This course should always be pursued unless the safety of the troops requires immediate drastic action and the persons who actually committed the offences cannot be secured.[222]

179. The UK LOAC Manual states that reprisals can only be taken if "prior warning is given".[223]

180. The US Field Manual states that:

> Priority to Other Remedies. Other measures of securing compliance with the law of war should normally be exhausted before resort is had to reprisals. This course should be pursued unless the safety of the troops requires immediate drastic action and the persons who actually committed the offences cannot be secured. Even when appeal to the enemy for redress has failed, it may be a matter of policy to consider, before resorting to reprisals, whether the opposing forces are not more likely to be influenced by a steady adherence to the law of war on the part of their adversary.[224]

The manual stresses that "reprisals are never adopted merely for revenge, but only as an unavoidable last resort to induce the enemy to desist from unlawful practices".[225]

181. The US Air Force Pamphlet, in explaining reprisals, states that "the action is taken in the last resort, in order to prevent the adversary from behaving illegally in the future".[226] It further states that:

> In order to be considered a reprisal, an act must have the following characteristics when employed:

[219] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.3.b.(6).
[220] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(a).
[221] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[222] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 646.
[223] UK, LOAC Manual, Section 4, p. 17, § 14(b).
[224] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(b).
[225] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(d).
[226] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(a).

...

(3) There must be reasonable notice that reprisals will be taken. What degree of notice is required will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Notice is normally given after the violation but may, in appropriate circumstances, predate the violation. An example of notice is an appeal to the transgressor to cease its offending conduct and punish those responsible. Thus, such an appeal may serve both as a plea for compliance and a notice to the adversary that reprisals will be undertaken.

(4) Other reasonable means to secure compliance must be attempted. The victim of a violation in order to justify taking a reprisal must first exhaust other reasonable means of securing compliance. This may involve appeals or notice ... Finally, even if an appeal or other methods fail, reprisals should not be undertaken automatically since there are various other factors governing their employment.[227]

182. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that "the taking of reprisals should be preceded by a request for redress of the wrong".[228]

183. The US Naval Handbook provides that:

To be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria:

...

3. When circumstances permit, reprisal must be preceded by a demand for redress by the enemy of his unlawful acts.

...

5. Reprisal must only be used as a last resort when other enforcement measures have failed or would be of no avail.[229]

184. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "before they undertake reprisals, the armed forces of the SFRY shall try to force the enemy to respect the laws of war by means of other methods for preventing violations of such laws".[230]

National Legislation

185. No practice was found.

National Case-law

186. In its judgement in the Hass and Priebke case in 1997, the Military Tribunal of Rome stated that, according to the unanimous views of writers, reprisals were legitimate only when they appeared as the only possible reaction because all possible means of identification and capture of the author of the unlawful act had been exhausted.[231] In its relevant parts, this judgement was confirmed by the Military Appeals Court and the Supreme Court of Cassation.[232]

[227] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(c).
[228] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(b)(2).
[229] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.1.
[230] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 29.
[231] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in the Trial of First Instance, 22 July 1997, Section 4.
[232] Italy, Military Appeals Court, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 March 1998; Supreme Court of Cassation, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, 16 November 1998.

187. In its judgement in the Rauter case in 1948, the Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague referred to the judgement of the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg in the List (Hostages Trial) case, as well as to the conditions required for reprisals in general by the UK and US military regulations, and stated that, accordingly, reprisals were admitted only as a measure of last resort.[233]
188. In its judgement in the List (Hostages Trial) case in the late 1940s, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, discussing the taking of hostages in occupied territories, noted that "the occupant is required to use every available method to secure order and tranquillity before resort may be had to the taking and execution of hostages". However, the Tribunal had previously stated that:

> Where innocent individuals are seized and punished for a violation of the laws of war which has already occurred, no question of hostages is involved. It is nothing more than the infliction of a reprisal. Throughout the evidence in the present case, we find the term hostage applied where a reprisal only was involved.[234]

Other National Practice
189. The Report on the Practice of Australia states that "Australia's opinio juris is, with certain exceptions, supportive of a prohibition against belligerent reprisals". It adds, however, that "Australian opinio juris does not consider that exceptions to the prohibition against reprisals, where these represent measures of last resort, will place it in breach of its customary obligations".[235]
190. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

> 2. ... The prohibition [of the taking of reprisals] may be waived on condition:
> (a) that the Party victim of the breach clearly has no means of putting an end to the breach other than by considering recourse to reprisals,
> ...
> (c) that the Party responsible for the violation shall be given due warning that such measures will be taken if the violation is continued or renewed.[236]

191. At the CDDH, France made another proposal for a draft Article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

> 2. The measures [which are designed to repress the breaches of and induce compliance with the Protocol] may be taken only when the following conditions are met:
> (a) The measures may be taken only when other efforts to induce the adverse Party to comply with the law have failed or are not feasible, and the victimized Party clearly has no other means of ending the breach;
> ...

[233] Netherlands, Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague, Rauter case, Judgement, 4 May 1948.
[234] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 8 July 1947–19 February 1948.
[235] Report on the Practice of Australia, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[236] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221, 19 February 1975, p. 323.

(c) The Party committing the breach must be given specific, formal, and prior warning that such measures will be taken if the breach is continued or renewed.[237]

192. During discussions on reprisals at the CDDH, the representative of the Netherlands that "reprisals were a very questionable means of securing respect for humanitarian law". He also said that his delegation felt that "reprisals should remain a measure of last resort".[238]

193. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Dutch parliament in the context of the ratification procedure of the Additional Protocols, the government of the Netherlands stated that for a reprisal to be lawful "the taking of the reprisal as such must be announced [and] other attempts to force the other party to comply with international law must have failed".[239]

194. In a written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the Netherlands stated that:

> The Netherlands Government ... believes that even if it were to be assumed that the (first) use of nuclear weapons by a State were unlawful per se under present international law – quod non –, this would not necessarily exclude the permissibility of the use of nuclear weapons by way of belligerent reprisal against an unlawful use of (nuclear) weapons, provided of course the retaliating State observed the conditions set by international law for the taking of lawful reprisals, i.e. satisfies, inter alia, the requirement that the retaliation ... serves as an ultimum remedium.[240] [emphasis in original]

195. In a written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that "to be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions ... It must meet the criteria for the regulation of reprisals, namely that it is ... a means of last resort."[241]

196. In 1980, in a footnote to a memorandum of law on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", a legal adviser of the US Department of State stated that "reprisals are permitted under the laws of war ... only after other means of achieving this objective [i.e. "the limited purpose of compelling the other belligerent to observe the laws of war"] have been exhausted (including diplomatic protest)".[242]

---

[237] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.

[238] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.48, 30 April 1976, p. 86, § 14.

[239] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum for the ratification of the Additional Protocols, 1983–1984 Session, Doc. 18 277 (R 1247), No. 3, pp. 40.

[240] Netherlands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, § 29.

[241] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, p. 58.

[242] US, Department of State, Memorandum of law by a Legal Adviser on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", 9 April 1980, reprinted in Marian Nash Leich, Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1980, Department of State Publication 9610, Washington, D.C., December 1986, pp. 1034 and 1041, footnote 38.

197. In a written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

> Reprisals would be lawful if conducted in accordance with the applicable principles governing belligerent reprisals. Specifically . . . other means of securing compliance [of the enemy with the law of armed conflict] should be exhausted . . . As in the case of other requirements of the law of armed conflict, a judgment about compliance of any use of nuclear weapons with these requirements would have to be made on the basis of the actual circumstances in each case, and could not be made in advance or in the abstract.[243]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

198. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 52 entitled "Conditions relating to resort to countermeasures", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[244]

199. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) stated that "a reprisal is an otherwise illegal act resorted to after the adverse party has himself indulged in illegal acts and refused to desist therefrom after being called upon to do so".[245]

Other International Organisations

200. No practice was found.

International Conferences

201. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

202. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

> It should also be pointed out that at any rate, even when considered lawful, reprisals are restricted by . . . the principle whereby they must be a last resort in attempts to impose compliance by the adversary with legal standards (which entails, amongst

[243] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 30.
[244] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[245] UN Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, §§ 63–64.

other things, that they may be exercised only after a prior warning has been given which has failed to bring about the discontinuance of the adversary's crimes).[246]

203. In the Naulilaa case in 1928 regarding acts taken by Germany against Portugal in reprisal for the killing of three German officials by Portuguese soldiers, the Special Arbitral Tribunal stated that "reprisals . . . are an act carried out – after an unfulfilled demand" and that "reprisals are only lawful when preceded by an unsatisfied demand. The use of force is only satisfied by its character of necessity."[247]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

204. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

205. Kalshoven states that:

The requirement of subsidiarity has generally been taken to mean that recourse to belligerent reprisals is an exceptional measure which must be regarded as an ultimate remedy, after other available means of a less exceptional character have failed. Applying this criterion to inter-State belligerent reprisals (as opposed to State-to-population or quasi-reprisals), it would imply that protests, warnings appeals to third parties and other suitable means must have remained without effect, or so obviously been doomed to failure that there was no need to attempt them first. Nor is this an unreasonable requirement even in time of war: the practice of belligerents shows a frequent recourse to such comparatively innocent means as protests, appeals to international public opinion, complaints lodged with appropriate international bodies, threats to punish individual war criminals, and so on. Indeed, it would seem that in no instance have belligerent reprisals been taken without previous attempts to obtain satisfaction in other ways, or in any event without its having been considered that these would have been possible. However, on theoretical considerations the possibility cannot be excluded of situations where the fruitlessness of any other remedy but reprisals is apparent from the outset. In such exceptional situations, too, recourse to reprisals can be regarded as an ultimate remedy and, hence, as meeting the requirement of subsidiarity.[248]

206. Greenwood notes that "reprisals are a subsidiary means of redress and thus should be used only as a last resort. This principle is often expressed in terms of a requirement that a State must actually employ all other methods of securing redress before recourse is had to reprisals." With regard to the exceptional cases referred to by Kalshoven, he states that:

While the availability of other sanctions for violations of the law of armed conflict should not be underestimated, it is likely that there will be occasions when the possibility to which Kalshoven refers will be more than theoretical . . . However, the use of reprisals in an armed conflict is such a serious step and may have such disastrous consequences that the requirement that all reasonable steps be taken to achieve redress by other means before reprisals are ordered is probably one which should be strictly insisted upon, unless delay will endanger the safety of troops or civilians.[249]

[246] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 535.
[247] Special Arbitral Tribunal, Naulilaa case, Decision, 31 July 1928, pp. 1026–1027.
[248] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, p. 340.

Proportionality of reprisals

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

207. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that "any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom will not be disproportionate to the violations giving rise thereto".[250]

Other Instruments

208. Article 86 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "in grave cases in which reprisals appear to be absolutely necessary, their nature and scope shall never exceed the measure of the infraction of the laws of war committed by the enemy".

209. Article 51 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Proportionality", provides that "countermeasures must be commensurate with the injury suffered, taking into account the gravity of the internationally wrongful act and the rights in question".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

210. Australia's Defence Force Manual and Commanders' Guide state that "in any case, reprisals must be timely, responsive to the enemy's conduct [and] proportional".[251]

211. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that, when recourse is made to reprisals, the following conditions must be fulfilled: "3) the damage suffered by the adversary must be proportionate to the damage that he has caused".[252]

[249] Christopher Greenwood, "The Twilight of the Law of Belligerent Reprisals", Netherlands Yearbook of International Law, Vol. 20, 1989, p. 47.
[250] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).
[251] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1310; Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1211.
[252] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 35.

212. Benin's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are proportional to the violation of the law of war committed by the enemy".[253]
213. Canada's LOAC Manual states that:

> [The reprisal] must be proportionate to the original wrongdoing, and must be terminated as soon as the original wrongdoer ceases the illegal actions. Proportionality is not strict, for, if the reprisal is to be effective, it may often be greater than the original wrongdoing. Nevertheless, there must be a reasonable relationship between the original wrong and the reprisal measure.[254]

The manual further provides that:

> To qualify as a reprisal, an act must satisfy the following conditions:
> . . .
> f. A reprisal must be proportional to the original violation. Although a reprisal need not conform in kind to the same type of acts complained of (bombardment for bombardment, weapon for weapon) it may not significantly exceed the adversary's violation either in violence or effect.[255]

214. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that a condition for reprisals is that they be "proportionate".[256]
215. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "to be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria: . . . 6. Each reprisal must be proportional to the original violation".[257]
216. Germany's Military Manual provides that "reprisals shall not be excessive in relation to the offence committed by the adversary".[258]
217. Hungary's Military Manual states that a condition for reprisals is that they be "proportionate".[259]
218. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "the reprisal must be sufficiently proportionate to the gravity of the offence suffered and may not consist, except in cases of absolute necessity, in belligerent acts directed against the civilian population".[260]
219. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "under customary law, reprisals are permitted to counter unlawful acts of warfare. They can only be taken if: . . . they are proportionate to the breach of the law of war committed by the enemy."[261]
220. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, referring to customary law, states that reprisals are in principle allowed, provided that a number of conditions are fulfilled. Among these conditions, it states that "the damage

[253] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[254] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 14.
[255] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-3, § 17.
[256] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[257] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.1.
[258] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 478.
[259] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[260] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 23.
[261] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.

to be caused to the adversary and the damage unlawfully suffered must be proportional".[262]

221. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

> [The reprisal] must be proportionate to the original wrongdoing... The proportionality is not strict: if the reprisal is to be effective, it will often be greater than the original wrongdoing. Nevertheless, there must be a reasonable relationship between the original wrong and the reprisal measure.[263]

The manual further states that:

> In order to be considered a reprisal, an act must have certain characteristics:... A reprisal must be proportional to the original violation. Although a reprisal need not conform in kind to the same type of acts complained of (bombardment for bombardment, weapon for weapon) it may not significantly exceed the adverse Party's violation either in violence or in effect. Effective but disproportionate reprisals cannot be justified by the argument that only an excessive response will forestall further transgressions.[264]

222. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals are only permitted according to strict criteria".[265]

223. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "the action must be in proportion to the violation committed by the enemy".[266]

224. Togo's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if:... they are proportional to the violation of the law of war committed by the enemy".[267]

225. The UK Military Manual states that "what kinds of acts should be resorted to as reprisals is a matter for consideration by the injured party. Acts done by way of reprisals must not, however, be excessive. They must bear a reasonable relation to the degree of violation committed by the enemy."[268] In a footnote relating to this provision, the manual refers to the Nuremberg trials and states that:

> Acts of reprisal that are grossly excessive against non-protected persons... constitute a war crime. During the Second World War German forces applied a "hundred to one" order in occupied territories, whereby one hundred civilians would be seized at random and shot as a reprisal for the killing of one German. On occasions civilians already held as prisoners were shot in the same proportion.[269]

226. The UK LOAC Manual states that reprisals can only be taken if "they are in proportion to the violation complained of".[270]

[262] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-5.
[263] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(1).
[264] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(4)(f).
[265] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[266] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(a).
[267] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[268] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 648.
[269] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 648, footnote 1.
[270] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 14(c).

227. The US Field Manual states that "what kinds of acts should be resorted to as reprisals is a matter for consideration by the injured party. Acts done by way of reprisals must not, however, be excessive. They must bear reasonable relation to the degree of violation committed by the enemy."[271]

228. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that:

A reprisal must be proportional to the original violation. Although a reprisal need not conform in kind to the same type of acts complained of (bombardment for bombardment, weapon for weapon) it may not significantly exceed the adversary's violation either in violence or effect. Effective but disproportionate reprisals cannot be justified by the argument that only an excessive response will forestall further transgressions.[272]

229. The US Naval Handbook provides that "to be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria: . . . 6. Each reprisal must be proportional to the original violation."[273]

230. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook states that:

This rule [that a reprisal must be proportional to the original violation] is not of strict equivalence because the reprisal will usually be somewhat greater that the initial violation that gave rise to it. However, care must be taken that the extent of the reprisal is measured by some degree of proportionality and not solely by effectiveness. Effective but disproportionate reprisals cannot be justified by the argument that only an excessive response will forestall a further transgression . . . The acts resorted to by way of reprisal need not conform in kind to those complained of by the injured belligerent. The reprisal action taken may be quite different from the original act which justified it, but should not be excessive or exceed the degree of harm required to deter the enemy from continuance of his initial unlawful conduct.[274]

231. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "reprisals may be undertaken by application of the same or similar measures. The consequences of such measures must be proportionate to the consequences that the enemy caused by violating the laws of war."[275] The manual further states that:

When reprisals are undertaken, care must be taken that they be in proportion to the seriousness of the violations committed by the enemy, that is, that the seriousness of the reprisals undertaken corresponds to the seriousness of the violations of the laws of war committed by the enemy.[276]

National Legislation

232. No practice was found.

[271] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(e).
[272] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(c)(6).
[273] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.1.
[274] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.1, footnote 43.
[275] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 27.
[276] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 29.

National Case-law

233. In its judgement in the Kappler case in 1948, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome found that the massacre of 335 prisoners in the Ardeatine Caves, ordered as a reprisal for a bomb attack by the Italian resistance which killed 33 German military policemen, was disproportionate, because of the ratio of 10:1 and because of the ranks of the executed Italian prisoners.[277]

234. In its judgement in the Priebke case in 1996 in connection with the Ardeatine Caves massacre during the Second World War, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome stated that "the principle of proportionality has never been questioned by international law scholars, as it finds its origin in the unquestionable axioms of rationality". The Tribunal found that the executions were grossly disproportionate.[278]

235. In its judgement in the Hass and Priebke case in 1997 concerning the Ardeatine Caves massacre during the Second World War, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome, with respect to the conditions required for a reprisal, stated that "also such a reaction must be proportionate to the damage suffered". It found unacceptable the disproportion between the deaths of 33 German soldiers and the execution of 335 persons.[279] In its relevant parts, the decision was confirmed by the Military Appeals Court and the Supreme Court of Cassation.[280]

236. In its judgement in the Rauter case in 1948, the Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague referred to the judgement of the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg in the List (Hostages Trial) case, as well as to the conditions required for reprisals in general by the UK and US military regulations and stated that, accordingly, the taking of reprisals required a due proportion between the acts undertaken in reprisals and the original offence. It found, inter alia, that by killing several hostages at a time for the death of one member of the German authorities, the accused had committed excessive reprisals in violation of the rule requiring due proportion.[281] In its judgement on appeal in 1949, the Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands also stated, inter alia, that genuine reprisals may be taken, "provided they are taken within certain limits and provided attention is paid to a certain proportion".[282]

237. In its judgement in the List (Hostages Trial) case in the late 1940s, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that "it is a fundamental rule that a reprisal may not exceed the degree of the criminal act it is designed to correct.

[277] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Kappler case, Judgement, 20 July 1948.
[278] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 1 August 1996, Section 7.
[279] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 22 July 1997, Section 4.
[280] Italy, Military Appeals Court, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 March 1998; Supreme Court of Cassation, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, 16 November 1998.
[281] Netherlands, Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague, Rauter case, Judgement, 4 May 1948.
[282] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Rauter case, Judgement, 12 January 1949.

Where an excess is knowingly indulged, it in turn is criminal and may be punished."[283]

Other National Practice

238. In 1967, a Belgian Senator stated with respect to bombardments of North Vietnam by the US that "it is recognised today that [reprisals] must be proportionate to the injury suffered. In case one has not suffered any damage, as it was the case, it is incomprehensible to pretend to start a period of bombardments on North Vietnam, as reprisals for attacks on the high sea."[284]

239. In 1986, in an annex to a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Defence noted that "the act of reprisal must be proportional to the illegal act or acts committed by the other belligerent".[285]

240. According to the Report on the Practice of China, in 1972, during the conflict in the Middle East, China condemned Israeli reprisals allegedly "not in conformity with the principle of proportionality".[286]

241. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

> 2. ... The prohibition [of the taking of reprisals] may be waived on condition:
> ...
> (d) that the means of application and the extent of such measures, if it proves imperative to take them, shall in no case exceed the extent of the breach which they are designed to end.[287]

242. At the CDDH, France made another proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "3. If it proves imperative to take these measures, their extent and their means of application shall in no case exceed the extent of the breach which they are designed to end. The measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[288]

243. At the CDDH, the FRG, with regard to the French proposal for a draft article on reprisals, held that the principle of proportionality laid down therein was based on "precedents established in 1928 and 1930, which were now universally recognised".[289]

[283] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 8 July 1947–19 February 1948.
[284] Belgium, Parliamentary Debates, 30 November 1967, Annales Parlementaires, Senate, p. 95, reprinted in RBDI, Vol. 6, 1970, pp. 656–657.
[285] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, Annex A, § 1.
[286] Report on the Practice of China, 1997, Chapter 2.9, referring to a Statement on the Middle East made by the Vice Foreign Minister, 5 December 1972.
[287] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221, 19 February 1975, p. 323.
[288] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[289] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.48, 30 April 1976, p. 84, § 6.

244. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, India stated that:

> Reprisals or retaliation under international law are also governed by certain specific principles . . . Reprisals must remain within reasonable bounds of proportionality to the effect created by the original wrongful act . . . In other words . . . when a State commits . . . a wrongful act or delict, the use of force by way of reprisal would have to be proportionate and as such if the wrongful act did not involve the use of a nuclear weapon, the reprisal could also not involve the use of a nuclear weapon . . . In view of the above, use of nuclear weapons, even by way of reprisal or retaliation, appears to be unlawful. In any case, if the wrongful use of force in the first instance did not involve the use of nuclear weapons, it is beyond doubt that even in response by way of retaliation States do not have the right to use nuclear weapons because of their special quality as weapons of mass destruction.[290]

245. In its oral pleadings before the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Mexico stated that "in the opinion of my country the use of nuclear weapons in reprisal – or any other pretext – against a non-nuclear attack is contrary to the principle of proportionality".[291]

246. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Dutch parliament in the context of the ratification procedure of the Additional Protocols, the government of the Netherlands stated that for the reprisal to be lawful, "the violation of the law caused by the reprisal must be proportionate with the violation(s) committed by the adverse party".[292]

247. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the Netherlands stated that:

> The Netherlands Government . . . believes that even if it were to be assumed that the (first) use of nuclear weapons by a State were unlawful per se under present international law – quod non –, this would not necessarily exclude the permissibility of the use of nuclear weapons by way of belligerent reprisal against an unlawful use of (nuclear) weapons, provided of course the retaliating State observed the conditions set by international law for the taking of lawful reprisals, i.e. satisfies, inter alia, the requirement that the retaliation is proportionate and serves as an ultimum remedium.[293] [emphasis in original]

248. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions . . . It must meet the criteria for the regulation of reprisals, namely that it is . . . proportionate . . . It has been argued that the use of nuclear weapons could never satisfy the requirements of proportionality . . . This argument, however, suffers from the same flaws as the [290] India, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 2.

[291] Mexico, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, CR 95/25, 3 November 1995, p. 51.
[292] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum for the ratification of the Additional Protocols, 1983–1984 Session, Doc. 18 277 (R 1247), No. 3, pp. 40.
[293] Netherlands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, § 29.

argument that the use of nuclear weapons could never satisfy the requirements of self-defence. Whether the use of nuclear weapons would meet the requirements of proportionality cannot be answered in the abstract: it would depend upon the nature and circumstances of the wrong which prompted the taking of reprisal action.[294]

249. In 1980, in a footnote to a memorandum of law on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", a legal adviser of the US Department of State noted that "reprisals are permitted under the laws of war . . . only in proportion to the original violations".[295]

250. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

> Reprisals would be lawful if conducted in accordance with the applicable principles governing belligerent reprisals. Specifically . . . the reprisals must be proportionate to the violations [of the law of armed conflict by the enemy] . . . As in the case of other requirements of the law of armed conflict, a judgment about compliance of any use of nuclear weapons with these requirements would have to be made on the basis of the actual circumstances in each case, and could not be made in advance or in the abstract.[296]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

251. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 51 entitled "Proportionality", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[297]

252. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) stated that a reprisal "must be proportionate to the original wrongdoing". It added that "the proportionality is not strict, for if the reprisal is to be effective, it will often be greater than the original wrongdoing. Nevertheless, there must be a reasonable relationship between the original wrong and the reprisal measure."[298]

[294] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–60.
[295] US, Department of State, Memorandum of law by a Legal Adviser on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", 9 April 1980, reprinted in Marian Nash Leich, Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1980, Department of State Publication 9610, Washington, D.C., December 1986, pp. 1034 and 1041, footnote 38.
[296] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 30.
[297] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[298] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 64.

Other International Organisations
253. No practice was found.

International Conferences
254. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

255. In its advisory opinion in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1996, the ICJ observed that "in any case any right of recourse to such reprisals would, like self-defence, be governed inter alia by the principle of proportionality".[299]
256. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

It should also be pointed out that at any rate, even when considered lawful, reprisals are restricted by . . . the principle of proportionality (which entails not only that the reprisals must not be excessive compared to the precedent unlawful act of warfare, but also that they must stop as soon as that unlawful act has been discontinued).[300]

257. In its judgement in the Naulilaa case in 1928 regarding acts taken by Germany against Portugal in reprisal for the killing of three German officials by Portuguese soldiers, the Special Arbitral Tribunal stated that:

The definition of reprisals does not require that the reprisal be proportionate to the offence. On this issue, the writers, unanimous until recently, start being divided in their opinions. In a certain proportionality between offence and reprisal the majority sees a necessary condition for the legitimacy of [reprisals]. Other writers, among the most modern ones, do not require this condition any more. As regards international law . . . it certainly tends to limit the notion of legitimate reprisals and prohibit excess.

The Tribunal went on to say that:

Even if one should assume that the law of nations does not require that the reprisal is approximatively measured with relation to the offence, one must certainly consider as being excessive and . . . illicit reprisals out of any proportion to the act which has caused them and that, even if it had been admitted that the conduct of the Portuguese authorities had been internationally wrongful, the German reprisals would still have been wrongful, for, inter alia, they were disproportionate to the alleged wrong.[301]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

258. No practice was found.

[299] ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, Advisory Opinion, 8 July 1996, § 46.
[300] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 535.
[301] Special Arbitral Tribunal, Naulilaa case, Decision, 31 July 1928, pp. 1026 and 1028.

VI. Other Practice

259. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "a state victim of a violation of an international obligation by another state may resort to countermeasures that might otherwise be unlawful, if such measures . . . (b) are not out of proportion to the violation and the injury suffered".[302]

260. Kalshoven states that:

> [The requirement of proportionality] . . . can be clarified to a certain degree. In particular, it can confidently be stated that the proportionality envisaged here is proportionality to the preceding illegality, not to such future illegal acts as the reprisal may (or may not) prevent. Expectations with respect to such future events will obviously play a part in the decision-making process; thus, a prognosis that the enemy, unless checked, will commit increasingly grave breaches of the laws of war, will tend to make the reaction to the breaches already committed still more severe. Whilst, however, this psychological mechanism may be of interest from the point of view of theories of escalation, it cannot influence a legal judgement of the retaliatory action, which can take account only of its proportionality to the act against which it constitutes retaliation.
>
> Furthermore, it can be stated with equal confidence that proportionality in this context means the absence of obvious disproportionality, as opposed to strict proportionality. In other words, belligerents are left with a certain freedom of appreciation; a freedom which in law is restricted by the requirement of reasonableness, but which in practice can easily lead to arbitrariness and excessive reactions . . . But . . . in the absence of a more precise rule . . . there is no alternative but to accept the flexibility and relative vagueness of the requirement of proportionality.[303]

Order at the highest authority of government

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

261. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that such measures would be taken "only after a decision taken at the highest level of government".[304]

Other Instruments

262. Article 86 of the 1880 Oxford Manual states that reprisals "can only be resorted to with the authorization of the commander in chief".

[302] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, § 905.

[303] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, pp. 341–342; see also Christopher Greenwood, "The Twilight of the Law of Belligerent Reprisals", Netherlands Yearbook of International Law, Vol. 20, 1989, pp. 43–45, with more references.

[304] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

263. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that "reprisal action by ADF members requires prior approval at the highest level".[305]

264. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "reprisal action by the ADF members requires prior approval at government level".[306]

265. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "although no precise rules exist on the subject, reprisals may only be ordered by the government or commanders-in-chief, because of the importance of the political and/or military consequences they may entail".[307]

266. Benin's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are ordered at a high level".[308]

267. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[309]

268. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[310]

269. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the use of reprisals has great political and strategic implications. The decision to take reprisal action must therefore be authorized at the highest political level. Operational commanders on their own initiative are not authorized to carry out reprisals."[311] The manual further states that:

> To qualify as a reprisal, an act must satisfy the following conditions:
>
> . . .
>
> h. It must be authorized by national authorities at the highest political level as it entails full state responsibility. Therefore, military commanders are not on their own authorized to carry out reprisals.[312]

270. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[313]

271. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that a condition for reprisals is that the "decision [is] taken at [the] highest governmental level".[314]

[305] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1211.
[306] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1310.
[307] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 35.
[308] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[309] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[310] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[311] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 13.
[312] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-3, § 17.
[313] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[314] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.

272. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "to be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria: . . . 1. Reprisal must be ordered by the highest authority of the belligerent government."[315]

273. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "by virtue of international conventions regularly ratified or approved: . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat] . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[316]

274. Germany's Soldiers' Manual states that "because of their political and military consequences reprisals on the part of the German Military Forces may only be ordered by the Federal Government".[317]

275. Germany's Military Manual provides that "because of their political and military significance, reprisals shall be ordered by the supreme political level, which would be in the Federal Republic of Germany the Federal Government. No soldier is entitled to order reprisals on his own accord."[318] The manual further states that reprisals "require a decision to be taken by the supreme political level".[319]

276. Hungary's Military Manual states that a condition for reprisals is that the "decision [is] taken at [the] highest governmental level".[320]

277. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "a reprisal is ordered by the Head of Government or by the authorities to which the power to order them has been lawfully delegated".[321]

278. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "under customary law, reprisals are permitted to counter unlawful acts of warfare. They can only be taken if: . . . they are ordered at a high level."[322]

279. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[323]

280. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, referring to customary law, states that reprisals are in principle allowed, provided that a number of conditions are fulfilled, including that "because of its important political and military consequences, the power to decide on a reprisal belongs to the government".[324]

281. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "in order to be considered a reprisal, an act must have certain characteristics: . . . It must be authorized

[315] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.1.
[316] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 10 bis (2).
[317] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 2; see also IHL Manual (1996), § 319.
[318] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 477.
[319] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1206.
[320] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[321] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 27.
[322] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[323] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[324] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-5.

by national authorities at the highest political level and involve full State responsibility."[325]

282. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals are only permitted according to strict criteria. Decisions must be made at the highest level. Soldiers cannot take reprisals at their own initiative."[326]

283. Spain's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with the exercise of command and its restrictions with regard to reprisals, states that:

> The taking of measures which constitute violations of the law of war, as a response to violations previously committed by the enemy with the aim of making such violations cease, is decided at the highest governmental level, because of the politico-military consequences to which they give rise.[327]

The manual further states that reprisals "require a decision taken at the highest political level".[328]

284. Sweden's IHL Manual states that:

> Ultimately, responsibility for observance of the system of rules of international humanitarian law, among them the conventions, lies with the government. If in special circumstances the question arises of the use of prohibited means or methods as a measure of reprisal, or even the making of significant exceptions from international humanitarian law for reasons of military necessity, the responsibility for this would fall upon the government.[329]

285. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, in its introductory remarks, states that:

> In case an adversary should not respect these international rules ["rules of international public law in times of armed conflict"], only the Conseil fédéral [Federal Council] would be competent to decide which measures would be opportune, especially possible reprisals, or to give the necessary instructions to the command of the army.[330]

In a provision dealing with reprisals, the manual further states that "only the Conseil fédéral [Federal Council] is competent to order possible reprisals".[331]

286. Togo's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are ordered at a high level".[332]

287. The UK Military Manual states that "although there is no clear rule of international law on the matter, reprisals should be resorted to only by order of a commander and never on the responsibility of an individual soldier".[333]

[325] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(4)(h).
[326] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[327] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.3.b.(6).
[328] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.10.c.
[329] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.1, p. 91.
[330] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Introductory remarks, p. III.
[331] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(1).
[332] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[333] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 645.

288. The UK LOAC Manual states that reprisals can only be taken if "they are ordered at a high level".[334] For cases in which the UK should have recourse to reprisals against the enemy's civilian population or civilian objects, the manual states that "the decision to do so will be taken at Government level".[335]

289. The US Field Manual stipulates that:

> [Reprisals] should never be employed by individual soldiers except by direct orders of a commander, and the latter should give such orders only after careful inquiry into the alleged offence. The highest accessible military authority should be consulted unless immediate action is demanded, in which event a subordinate commander may order appropriate reprisals upon his own initiative. Ill-considered action may subsequently be found to have been wholly unjustified and will subject the responsible officer himself to punishment for a violation of the law of war. On the other hand, commanders must assume responsibility for retaliative measures when an unscrupulous enemy leaves no other recourse against repetition of unlawful acts.[336]

290. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that:

> In order to be considered a reprisal, an act must have the following characteristics when employed:
>
> . . .
>
> (8) It must be authorized by national authorities at the highest political level and entails full state responsibility.[337]

291. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that "a decision to violate the law in reprisal for enemy violations must be taken at the highest levels of the US government".[338] It further states that "only the national command authorities may authorize the execution of reprisals or other reciprocal violations of the law of armed conflict by US armed forces".[339]

292. The US Instructor's Guide states that "the individual soldier must never decide to make a reprisal. The decision to make a reprisal must be made at the highest command level."[340]

293. The US Naval Handbook provides that "to be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria: 1. Reprisal must be ordered by an authorized representative of the belligerent government."[341] It further provides that "the President alone may authorize the taking of reprisal action by U.S. Forces".[342]

294. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook, in a part dealing with the necessity for the US that the President alone may authorize the taking [334] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 14(e).

[335] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 17.
[336] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(d).
[337] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(c)(8).
[338] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 1-3(a)(2).
[339] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(b)(2).
[340] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 27.
[341] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.1. [342] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.3.

of reprisal action by US forces, states that there is "always the risk that it will trigger retaliatory escalation (counter-reprisals) by the enemy". It adds that:

Other factors which governments will usually consider before taking of reprisals include the following:

1. Reprisals may have an adverse influence on the attitudes of governments not participating in an armed conflict.
2. Reprisals may only strengthen enemy morale and underground resistance.
3. Reprisals may only lead to counter-reprisals by an enemy, in which case the enemy's ability to retaliate is an important factor.
4. Reprisals may render enemy resources less able to contribute to the rehabilitation of an area after the cessation of hostilities.
5. The threat of reprisals may be more effective than their actual use.
6. Reprisals, to be effective, should be carried out speedily and should be kept under control. They may be ineffective if random, excessive, or prolonged.
7. In any event, the decision to employ reprisals will generally be reached as a matter of strategic policy. The immediate advantage sought must be weighed against the possible long-range military and political consequences.

. . .
In addition to the legal requirements which regulate resort to reprisals, there are various practical factors which governments will consider before taking reprisals. For example, when appeal to the enemy for redress has failed, it may be a matter of policy to consider before resorting to reprisals, whether the opposing forces are not more likely to be influenced by a steady adherence to the law of armed conflict.[343]

295. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the armed forces of the SFRY shall undertake reprisals against the enemy . . . only by order of a commander who is competent to determine reprisals".[344] In another provision, the manual specifies that reprisals must be ordered by a competent commander (corps commander and equal or higher rank responsible for the sector in which the violation of the adversary took place), except when a commander of a lesser rank cannot establish contact with higher command. Reprisals against an entire enemy force can only be ordered by the Supreme Command.[345]

National Legislation

296. Argentina's Constitution provides for the competence of the President to order reprisals, with the authorisation and approbation of the National Congress.[346]

297. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that:

Reprisals . . . are ordered by means of a "decree" of il Duce or by a delegated authority from him.

[343] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.3, footnote 52.
[344] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 29.
[345] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 30.
[346] Argentina, Constitution (1994), Articles 75(26) and 99(15).

Reprisals . . . inasmuch as they consist of military operations, can also be ordered by the supreme commander, or, when an immediate or exemplary action is necessary, by any other commander.[347]

National Case-law

298. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

299. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

2. . . . The prohibition [of the taking of reprisals] may be waived on condition:
   . . .
   (b) that the decision to have recourse to such measures shall be taken by the Government of the Party alleging the violation.[348]

300. At the CDDH, France made another proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

The measures [which are designed to repress the breaches and induce compliance with the Protocol] may be taken only when the following conditions are met:
. . .
(b) The decision to have recourse to such measures must be taken at the highest level of the government of the victimized Party.[349]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

301. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

302. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

It should also be pointed out that at any rate, even when considered lawful, reprisals are restricted by . . . (b) the obligation to take special precautions before implementing them (they may be taken only after a decision to this effect has been made at the highest political or military level; in other words they may not be decided by local commanders).[350]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

303. No practice was found.

[347] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 10.
[348] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221, 19 February 1975, p. 323.
[349] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[350] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 535.

VI. Other Practice

304. No practice was found.

Termination of reprisals as soon as the adversary complies again with the law

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
305. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that "such measures [will not] be continued after the violations have ceased".[351]

Other Instruments
306. Article 85 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "reprisals are formally prohibited in case the injury complained of has been repaired".
307. Article 53 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Termination of countermeasures", provides that "countermeasures shall be terminated as soon as the responsible State has complied with its obligations under Part Two [Articles 28–41] in relation to the internationally wrongful act".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
308. Benin's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they cease as soon as the violation [of the law of war] which has triggered them ceases".[352]
309. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that a reprisal "must be terminated as soon as the original wrongdoer ceases the illegal actions".[353] In another provision, the manual states that:

> Above all, reprisals are justifiable only to force an adversary to stop its illegal activity. If, for example, a party to an armed conflict commits a breach of law but follows that violation with an expression of regret and promise that it will not be repeated, and even takes steps to punish those responsible, then any action taken by another party to "redress" the situation cannot be justified as a lawful reprisal.[354]

310. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that a condition for reprisals is that they "cease when [the] purpose [is] achieved".[355]

[351] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).
[352] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[353] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 14.
[354] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 17(b).
[355] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.

311. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "to be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria: . . . 7. A reprisal action must cease as soon as the enemy is induced to desist from its unlawful activities and to comply with the law of armed conflict."[356]

312. Hungary's Military Manual states that a condition for reprisals is that they "cease when [the] purpose [is] achieved".[357]

313. Italy's IHL Manual states that "when the belligerent enemy who committed the unlawful act . . . has given proper satisfaction, each justification to continue or take [measures of reprisal] stops".[358]

314. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "under customary law, reprisals are permitted to counter unlawful acts of warfare. They can only be taken if: . . . they cease when the violation complained of ceases."[359]

315. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "a reprisal . . . must be terminated as soon as the original wrongdoer ceases his illegal actions".[360]

316. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals are only permitted according to strict criteria".[361]

317. Spain's LOAC Manual specifies, among the conditions which must be fulfilled for the lawful taking of reprisals, that the action must cease once its objective has been met.[362]

318. Togo's Military Manual states that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they cease as soon as the violation [of the law of war] which has triggered them ceases".[363]

319. The UK Military Manual states that "if the enemy ceases to commit the acts complained of, reprisals must not be resorted to; if reprisals have already begun, they must at once cease".[364]

320. The UK LOAC Manual states that reprisals can only be taken if "they cease when the violation complained of ceases".[365]

321. The US Naval Handbook states that "to be valid, a reprisal action must conform to the following criteria: . . . 7. A reprisal action must cease as soon as the enemy is induced to desist from its unlawful activities and to comply with the law of armed conflict."[366]

322. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook, with reference to the rule that a reprisal must cease as soon as the enemy is induced to desist from its unlawful activities, states that "when, for example, one party to an armed conflict commits a breach of law but follows that violation with an expression of regret and promise that it will not be repeated, then any action

[356] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.1.
[357] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[358] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 24.
[359] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[360] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(1).
[361] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[362] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(a).
[363] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[364] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 649.
[365] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 14(d).
[366] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.1.

taken by another party to 'right' the situation cannot be justified as a lawful reprisal".[367]

323. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY), in a provision entitled "Aim and duration of reprisals", states that "when the enemy stops violating the rules of the international laws of war, the party to the conflict undertaking reprisals is obliged to terminate reprisals".[368] The manual further provides that "the armed forces of the SFRY shall undertake reprisals against the enemy exceptionally and temporarily".[369]

National Legislation

324. No practice was found.

National Case-law

325. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

326. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, Iran reacted to violations by Iraq of the 1984 agreement relative to the cessation of attacks on cities by resorting to reprisals against Iraqi cities. The report notes, however, that Iran declared that it was ready to end these attacks and respect the agreement as soon as Iraq complied with it.[370]

327. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "3. . . . The measures must cease, in all events, when they have achieved their objective, namely, cessation of the breach which prompted the measures."[371]

328. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Dutch parliament in the context of the ratification procedure of the Additional Protocols, the government of the Netherlands stated that for the reprisal to be lawful, "as soon as the adverse party behaves in compliance with the law the reprisal must end".[372]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

329. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles

[367] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.1, footnote 44.
[368] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 28.
[369] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 29.
[370] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 1.3.
[371] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[372] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum for the ratification of the Additional Protocols, 1983–1984 Session, Doc. 18 277 (R 1247), No. 3, p. 40.

on State Responsibility, and thus Article 53 entitled "Termination of countermeasures", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[373]

330. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) stated that "a reprisal ... must be terminated as soon as the original wrongdoer ceases his illegal actions".[374]

Other International Organisations

331. No practice was found.

International Conferences

332. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

333. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

> It should also be pointed out that at any rate, even when considered lawful, reprisals are restricted by ... the principle of proportionality (which entails not only that the reprisals must not be excessive compared to the precedent unlawful act of warfare, but also that they must stop as soon as that unlawful act has been discontinued).[375]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

334. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

335. No practice was found.

Limitation of reprisals by principles of humanity

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

336. No practice was found.

[373] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[374] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 64.
[375] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 535.

Other Instruments

337. Article 86 of the Oxford Manual provides that reprisals "must conform in all cases to the laws of humanity and morality".

338. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility states that:

> Countermeasures shall not affect:
>
> . . .
>
> (b) Obligations for the protection of fundamental human rights;
>
> . . .
>
> (d) Other obligations under peremptory norms of general international law.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

339. Belgium's Law of War Manual, regarding the circumstances in which reprisals may be taken against individuals, cites a writer's opinion and states that "putting to death innocent persons to impose order by terror is a violation of both written law and the basic principles of humanity".[376]

340. Italy's IHL Manual, in the part dealing with reprisals, states that:

> The Italian laws of war, which are modelled upon the principles of civilisation and humanity as much as it is permitted by military necessity, provides for the humane treatment of enemy combatants, wounded or prisoners, as well as of the civilian population, even in cases in which there is no special obligation under international law to do so.[377]

341. Sweden's IHL Manual states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.
>
> The possibility just recounted – for a party to Additional Protocol I suffering a breach of international law to employ reprisals – is to be considered as a hypothetical case. The Committee strongly discourages such application in view of its manifestly inhuman effect.[378]

342. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "Yugoslav military officers competent to determine reprisals cannot order the application of dishonourable methods of reprisals".[379]

National Legislation

343. No practice was found.

[376] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 36, referring to Lord Wright, BYIL, Vol. 25, 1954, p. 296–310.
[377] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 28.
[378] Sweden, IHL Manual (1990), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[379] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 29.

National Case-law

344. In the Priebke case in 1995, Argentina's Public Prosecutor of First Instance, dealing with Italy's request to extradite the accused, stated, inter alia, that writers had condemned the killing in reprisal of 330 civilians and POWs carried out by German soldiers in the Ardeatine Caves in Italy during the Second World War and qualified this act as "a reprisal which violated the fundamental principles of humanity".[380]

345. In the Kappler case in 1948, dealing with the Ardeatine Caves massacre during the Second World War, the Military Tribunal of Rome stated that:

> Reprisals are subject to a general limitation which consists in the duty not to violate those rights intended to safeguard fundamental needs. This principle . . . now finds clear expression in the preamble of the Hague Convention . . . where the activities of States are set a limit by "the principles of the law of nations, as they result from the usages established between civilized nations, from the laws of humanity and the requirements of the public conscience".[381]

346. In its judgement in the Priebke case in 1996, the Military Tribunal of Rome, with regard to the principle of proportionality to which reprisals were subject, stated that:

> This is confirmed by the general limit on States' freedom to act, fixed by international custom and recalled in the preamble to the Hague Convention of 1907 which prohibits injuring fundamental rights established by "ius gentium", by the customs of civilised States, by the laws of humanity and by the exigencies of public conscience.[382]

347. In its judgement in the Hass and Priebke case in 1997, the Military Tribunal of Rome stated that actions taken by way of reprisals could never violate the fundamental and primary requirements of humanity and public conscience.[383]

Other National Practice

348. At the CDDH, during the discussions on Draft AP II, Finland stated that "there was universal agreement that reprisals of an inhumane nature were inadmissible".[384]

349. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, India cited G. Fitzmaurice and stated that:

[380] Argentina, Hearing of the Public Prosecutor of the First Instance, Priebke case, 1995, Section V.2.
[381] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Kappler case, Judgement, 20 July 1948.
[382] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 1 August 1996, Section 7.
[383] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 22 July 1997, Section 4.
[384] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 324, § 8.

Reprisals or retaliation under international law are also governed by certain specific principles . . . Reprisals could not involve acts which are malum in se such as certain violations of human rights, certain breaches of the laws of war and rules in the nature of ius cogens, that is to say obligations of an absolute character compliance with which is not dependent on corresponding compliance by others but is requisite in all circumstances unless under stress of literal vis major . . . In other words . . . even where a wrongful act involved the use of a nuclear weapon the reprisal action cannot involve [the] use of a nuclear weapon without violating certain fundamental principles of humanitarian law. In this sense, prohibition of the use of a nuclear weapon in an armed conflict is an absolute one, compliance with which is not dependent on corresponding compliance by others but is a requisite in all circumstances. In view of the above, [the] use of nuclear weapons even by way of reprisal or retaliation, appears to be unlawful.[385]

350. The Report on the Practice of Iraq, in the chapter dealing with reprisals and with reference to a speech of the Iraqi President in 1983, notes that "as for the activities which constitute a violation to the human rights or the humanitarian law, this can never be reciprocated".[386]

351. The Report on the Practice of Italy, having discussed the decisions in the Schintlholzer, Priebke, and Hass and Priebke cases, concludes that it is the opinio juris of Italy that States acting by way of reprisal could never violate the general limit fixed to their actions by customary law and by the preamble to the 1907 Hague Convention (IV).[387]

352. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Malaysia stated that reprisals "must conform in all cases to the laws of humanity and morality". It referred to Article 86 of the Oxford Manual.[388]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

353. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(b) and (d) stating that countermeasures shall not affect obligations for the protection of fundamental human rights or other obligations under peremptory norms of general international law, were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[389]

[385] India, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 2.
[386] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 2.9.
[387] Report on the Practice of Italy, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[388] Malaysia, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 19 June 1995, p. 18.
[389] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.

Other International Organisations
354. No practice was found.

International Conferences
355. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

356. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "it should also be pointed out that at any rate, even when considered lawful, reprisals are restricted by . . . 'elementary considerations of humanity'".[390]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

357. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

358. No practice was found.

C. Reprisals against Protected Persons

Captured combatants and prisoners of war

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
359. Article 2, third paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that "measures of reprisal against [POWs] are forbidden".
360. Article 13, third paragraph, GC III provides that "measures of reprisal against prisoners of war are prohibited".

Other Instruments
361. Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin which deals under Section 7.1 with the protection of "persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations, including civilians, members of armed forces who have laid down their weapons and persons placed hors de combat by reason of . . . detention", states that "the following acts against any of the persons mentioned in section 7.1 are prohibited at any time and in any place: . . . reprisals".

[390] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 535.

362. Section 8 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, dealing with "Treatment of detained persons", states that "without prejudice to their legal status, they shall be treated in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Third Geneva Convention of 1949, as may be applicable to them mutatis mutandis".
363. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
364. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969), in a provision dealing with the treatment of POWs, refers to Article 13 GC III and provides that "measures of reprisal with respect to them remain prohibited".[391]
365. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989), in an annex containing a list of "Fundamental rules of International Humanitarian Law applicable in armed conflict", provides that "captured combatants . . . will be protected against all acts of violence and reprisals".[392]
366. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that "protected from the moment of their surrender or capture, PW and PW camps must not be made the objects of . . . reprisals".[393] The Guide further refers to Article 13 GC III and states that "protected persons . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[394]
367. Australia's Defence Force Manual, in a provision dealing with POWs, provides that "protected from the moment of their surrender or capture, prisoners of war must not be made the object of attack or reprisals".[395] In a chapter entitled "Prisoners of war and detained persons", the manual further states that "the fundamental rules for the treatment of [a] PW are: . . . reprisals against them are prohibited".[396] It also states that "reprisals may be justified but only against military objectives".[397] In another provision, the manual states that "protected persons . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[398]
368. Belgium's Law of War Manual, citing several examples of jurisprudence, states that "the persons protected by the Geneva Conventions (. . . prisoners of war . . .) . . . may not be made the object of reprisals. Therefore, [reprisals] may

[391] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.013(1).
[392] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), Annex 10, § 4.
[393] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 414.
[394] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[395] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 519.
[396] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1002(c).
[397] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1309.
[398] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.

be directed only against combatants, non-protected property and a restricted group of non-protected civilians."[399]

369. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: ... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[400] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: ... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[401]

370. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[402]

371. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[403]

372. Canada's LOAC Manual, in the section dealing with the treatment of POWs, provides that "reprisals against PWs are prohibited".[404] In the section dealing with enforcement measures, the manual further states that "reprisals are permitted against combatants and against objects constituting military objectives".[405] In the same section, it also states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: ... c. prisoners of war (PWs)".[406]

373. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "no reprisals will be taken against PWs or detainees".[407]

374. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "captured combatants ... shall be protected against ... reprisals".[408]

375. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[409]

376. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL states that captured combatants and civilians must be protected against all acts of violence and reprisals.[410]

377. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that reprisals are prohibited against POWs. It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[411]

399 Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 36.
400 Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
401 Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
402 Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
403 Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
404 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 25, see also p. 15-2, § 15(c).
405 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 16.
406 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-3, § 15.
407 Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 12.
408 Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 4.
409 Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
410 Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), Instruction No. 4.
411 Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.

378. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic, under the heading "Treat all captives and detainees humanely", states that "you must never carry out reprisals or acts of vengeance against any person, enemy or civilian, you have taken prisoner or detained during the fighting".[412]

379. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: 1. Prisoners of war . . .".[413] It also provides that "prisoners of war may not be subjected to collective punishment nor may reprisal action be taken against them".[414]

380. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended, in a provision entitled "Respect for the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "by virtue of the international conventions ratified or approved: . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[415]

381. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "captured combatants . . . must be protected against violence and reprisals".[416]

382. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits . . . the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: . . . to reprisals against non-military objectives".[417] The manual refers to Article 13 GC III and states that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . prisoners of war".[418]

383. Germany's Soldiers' Manual states that "reprisals against prisoners of war are forbidden".[419]

384. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Article 13 GC III, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: . . . prisoners of war (Art. 13 para 3 GC III)".[420] In the part dealing with the protection of POWs, and under a provision entitled "Fundamental rules for the treatment of prisoners of war", the manual refers to Article 13 GC III and provides that "reprisals against prisoners of war are prohibited".[421]

385. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against . . . prisoners of war".[422]

386. Hungary's Military Manual states that reprisals are prohibited against POWs. It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[423]

[412] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 7.
[413] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.2.
[414] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.8.1.
[415] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[416] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[417] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[418] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[419] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 7.
[420] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[421] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 704.
[422] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[423] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.

387. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[424]

388. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals against POWs, states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals, such as, for instance, the rules regarding prisoners of war".[425]

389. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[426] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against prisoners of war".[427]

390. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[428] In the attached list of "Fundamental rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts", the manual states that "captured combatants . . . will be protected against any act of violence and reprisals".[429]

391. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[430]

392. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with the protection of POWs, states that "reprisals against prisoners of war are forbidden".[431]

393. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that "protected persons under the laws of war are: . . . prisoners of war . . . Reprisals against them must not be taken."[432]

394. New Zealand's Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with POWs and referring to Article 13 GC III, states that "reprisals against prisoners of war are prohibited".[433] In the footnote relative to this provision, the manual states that:

> Since prisoners of war are in the Power of the Detaining Power, they are among the easiest victims for reprisal action and are, of themselves, unable to affect the conduct of their national government. The [1907] HR made no reference to this matter and during World War I prisoners were often made the object of reprisals.

[424] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).
[425] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.
[426] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[427] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[428] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[429] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 4.
[430] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[431] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-3.
[432] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-38.
[433] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 918(1).

The ban on such action first appeared in the 1929 Geneva Convention on Prisoners of War, Art. 2. In accordance with the provisions of AP I, reprisals are forbidden against all persons who are hors de combat, as well as against protected objects, the destruction of which would primarily affect such persons. During World War II the Germans fettered British prisoners of war claiming it as a reprisal for a raid on Sark in 1942, when five German captives had their hands tied so that they could be linked to their captors while being escorted to the boats of the raiding party. During the Dieppe raid, the Germans captured a Canadian order authorising the tying of prisoners' hands, the Germans protested about the order, which was subsequently described as unauthorized and countermanded.[434]

In the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring to Articles 13 GC I and 44 AP I, the manual further states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited . . . prisoners of war".[435]

395. Nicaragua's Military Manual, in the part dealing with international armed conflict, states that "prisoners of war . . . must be protected against . . . measures of reprisal".[436]

396. Nigeria's Military Manual, in a part dealing with GC III, states that "reprisals directed against prisoner[s] of war are prohibited".[437]

397. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "it is prohibited to take measures of reprisal against prisoners of war as a retaliation for violation of the Laws of War by the enemy".[438]

398. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "soldiers who have surrendered or who are in the control of the enemy cannot be made the object of reprisal and must be protected".[439] It further provides that "reprisals against the persons and property of prisoners of war . . . are prohibited".[440]

399. Spain's LOAC Manual, referring to Article 13 GC III, lists POWs among the persons against whom the taking of reprisals is prohibited.[441]

400. Sweden's IHL Manual, while noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[442]

401. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with the "Fundamental protection of prisoners of war", contains a provision entitled [434] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 918(1), footnote 51.

[435] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2)(c).
[436] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(18).
[437] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 16, § 9.
[438] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 37.
[439] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 30.
[440] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[441] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[442] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.

"Prohibition of reprisals" which refers to Article 13, third paragraph, GC III and states that "measures of reprisal are prohibited with regard to prisoners of war".[443] In the provision dealing with reprisals, referring, inter alia, to Article 13 GC III, the manual further states that "by virtue of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, [reprisals] are prohibited with regard to . . . prisoners of war".[444]

402. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[445] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[446]

403. The UK Military Manual, which in a footnote to the relevant provision refers to Article 2 of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention and Article 13 of GC III, states that:

> Measures of reprisal against prisoners of war are prohibited. This prohibition is of an absolute character, so that reprisals against prisoners of war are prohibited even if intended to be adopted as a measure of retaliation against the violation of provisions of [GC III] by the other party. Reprisals against such violations of the Convention are permissible, but they must not be directed against prisoners of war or any other persons protected by the 1949 Conventions.[447]

In the part dealing with reprisals, the manual refers to Article 13 GC III and states that "reprisals against prisoners of war . . . are . . . prohibited".[448] In a footnote relating to this provision, the manual further notes that "reprisals are unlawful against all persons except enemy combatants and those few classes of civilians who are not protected persons".[449] In a footnote relating to another provision, the manual moreover states that "reprisals against . . . prisoners of war . . . constitute war crimes".[450]

404. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against prisoners of war".[451]

405. The US Field Manual, referring to Article 13 GC III, stipulates that "reprisals against the persons or property of prisoners of war, including the wounded and sick, . . . are forbidden . . . However, reprisals may still be visited on enemy troops who have not yet fallen into the hands of the forces making the reprisals."[452]

406. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Article 13 GC III, provides that "reprisals against prisoners of war are prohibited . . . No protected person may

[443] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 98.
[444] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(2).
[445] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[446] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[447] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 133(b) and footnotes 4 and 5.
[448] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644.
[449] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644, footnote 2.
[450] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 647, footnote 1.
[451] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
[452] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(c).

be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited."[453] The Pamphlet further states that:

> Reprisals are forbidden, under all circumstances, against the persons or objects referenced above in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. At least some, and possibly all, of these prohibitions are regarded as customary law and are binding regardless of whether the adversary is a party to the Geneva Conventions. For definitions as to persons or objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, applicable articles of those documents must be consulted.[454]

In the chapter dealing with GC III, the Pamphlet reiterates that "measures of reprisal against prisoners of war are prohibited".[455]

407. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", states that "under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, reprisals may not be directed against . . . prisoners of war. (The reprisals against British prisoners of war that the US threatened during the Revolution would thus be illegal today, though at the time, reprisals against PWs were lawful.)"[456]

408. The US Soldier's Manual, under the heading "Treat all captives and detainees humanely", tells soldiers that "you must never engage in reprisals or acts of revenge against any persons, enemy or civilian, whom you capture or detain in combat".[457]

409. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that:

> The following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity:
>
> . . .
>
> m. Reprisals against persons or property protected by the Geneva Conventions, to include . . . prisoners of war, detained personnel . . .[458]

410. The US Naval Handbook states that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: 1. Prisoners of war . . .".[459] It also provides that "prisoners of war may not be subjected to collective punishment nor may reprisal action be taken against them".[460]

411. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook, with regard to the prohibition of taking reprisals against POWs, states that "in light of the wide acceptance of the 1949 Geneva Conventions by the nations of the world today, this prohibition is part of customary law . . . The taking of prisoners by

[453] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(1).
[454] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).
[455] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-2.
[456] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
[457] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 15.
[458] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.
[459] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.2.
[460] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.7.1.

way of reprisal for acts previously committed (so-called 'reprisal prisoners') is likewise forbidden."[461]

412. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: . . . prisoners of war".[462]

National Legislation

413. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[463]

414. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[464]

National Case-law

415. In the Priebke case in 1995, Argentina's Public Prosecutor of First Instance, dealing with a Italy's request to extradite the accused, held that the alleged killing in reprisal of 330 civilians and POWs committed by German soldiers in the Ardeatine Caves in Italy during the Second World War was "an act which must be qualified as a war crime".[465]

416. In its judgement in the Rauter case in 1949, the Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands, dealing with the limits to reprisals, stated that "among the limits referred to, the prohibition should especially be mentioned of taking reprisals against prisoners of war, as this was expressly prohibited by Art. 2 of the 1929 [Geneva POW] Convention".[466]

417. In its judgement in the Dostler case in 1945, in which a German commander had been accused of having ordered, in March 1944, the shooting of 15 American POWs in violation of the 1907 HR, the US Military Commission at Rome referred to Article 2, third paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention and held that from this provision followed that under the law as codified by this Convention there can be no legitimate reprisals against prisoners of war. No soldier, and still less a Commanding General, could be heard to say that he considered the summary shooting of prisoners of war legitimate even as a reprisal. Referring to the decision of the German Reichsgericht in the Dover Castle case, the US Military Commission of Rome stated that through the express provision of Article 2, third paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention the decision of the German Reichsgericht in the said case had lost

[461] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.2, footnote 45.
[462] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(1).
[463] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[464] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.
[465] Argentina, Hearing of the Public Prosecutor of the First Instance, Priebke case, 1995, Section V.2.
[466] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Rauter case, Judgement, 12 January 1949.

even such little persuasive authority as it may have had at the time it was rendered.[467]

Other National Practice

418. In 1986, in a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Defence noted that "the Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit reprisals against certain categories of persons such as . . . prisoners of war".[468]

419. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[469]

420. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . prisoners of war . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks."[470]

421. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[471]

422. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "3. . . . The measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[472]

423. At the CDDH, the FRG, with respect to the French proposal on reprisals according to which "the measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949", stated that this provision "was the most important in the whole of the proposal since it really did protect prisoners of war".[473]

[467] US, Military Commission at Rome, Dostler case, Judgement, 8–12 October 1945.
[468] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, § 2.
[469] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[470] Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
[471] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
[472] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[473] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.48, 30 April 1976, p. 84, § 6.

424. On the basis of the reply by Iraq's Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that reprisals "must not be directed, in any way, against . . . prisoners of war . . ., but [have] to be confined to purely military targets".[474]

425. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF does not condone nor conduct reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Geneva Conventions.[475]

426. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law . . . In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal".[476]

427. In 1984, during a debate in the UN Security Council, Lebanon stated with respect to Israeli practices that it deplored the fact that the "occupying authorities often resort to inhuman reprisals . . . against the detainees, practices which are in violation of articles 27 and 32 of the fourth Geneva Convention and article 46 of [the 1907 HR]".[477]

428. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[478]

429. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the [Geneva] Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[479]

430. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . The Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit the taking of reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Conventions.[480]

431. In April 1965, when a North Vietnamese prisoner was sentenced to death by a South Vietnamese court, the communist rebel group announced that if the sentence was carried out, it would kill an American aid officer in their hands. Neither of the executions was carried out. Three months later, a North Vietnamese prisoner was executed apparently after having been tried, convicted and sentenced by a South Vietnamese special military tribunal. A few days

[474] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 2.9, referring to the reply from the Ministry of Defense to a questionnaire, July 1997.
[475] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[476] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[477] Lebanon, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.2552, 29 August 1984, § 22.
[478] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[479] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[480] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

later, it was announced that an American sergeant held as a POW had been executed in reprisal. In September 1965, three North Vietnamese prisoners were executed, again apparently after having been tried, convicted and sentenced. The execution of two American POWs in reprisal was announced a few days later.[481] The US refused to accept that the executions were justified as reprisals and the acts were denounced as "two more acts of brutal murder". The ICRC was asked to take all possible action with respect to these violations.[482] North Vietnam also threatened to treat captured US pilots as war criminals subject to trial. The US charged that the threat was to justify reprisals for executions by the South Vietnamese of North Vietnamese prisoners as terrorists.[483]

432. An instruction card issued to all US troops engaged in Vietnam directed soldiers always to treat prisoners humanely, adding that "all persons in your hands, whether suspects, . . . or combat captives, must be protected against violence, insults, curiosity, and reprisals of any kind".[484]

433. At the 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965, the US delegate declared that his government had been "shocked and deeply saddened by the brutal murder of prisoners of war as acts of reprisals" in the Vietnam War and that it was "profoundly concerned that other prisoners may be executed in violation of international law".[485]

434. According the Report on US Practice, "the United States does not regard the summary execution of persons in custody as a lawful means of reprisals".[486]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

435. In 1980, in a statement by its President regarding the capture and killing of two UNIFIL soldiers by the de facto forces in southern Lebanon after the UN had been warned that reprisals would be taken if there were any victims following UNIFIL actions, the UN Security Council stated that "the members of the Security Council are shocked and outraged at the report that the Council has received on . . . the cold-blooded murder of peace-keeping soldiers" and denounced the "unprecedented, barbaric act".[487]

436. In a resolution adopted in 1991 on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN General Assembly urged all parties to the conflict "to [481] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, pp. 295–305.

[482] US, Department of State Bulletin, Vol. LIII, No. 1373, 18 October 1965, p. 635.
[483] N.Y. Times Index, 1965, p. 1098.
[484] US, The enemy in your hands, Reproduction of 3x5 instruction card issued to all troops, reprinted in George. S. Prugh, Law at War: Vietnam 1964–1973, Department of the Army, Vietnam Studies, 1975, Appendix H. III.
[485] US, Department of State Bulletin, Vol. LIII, No. 1375, 1 November 1965, p. 725.
[486] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[487] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PV.2217, 18 April 1980, § 15.

protect all prisoners of war from acts of reprisals".[488] It reiterated this appeal in 1992.[489]

437. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[490]

438. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all parties to the conflict "to treat all prisoners in their custody in accordance with the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law and to protect them from all acts of reprisal and violence".[491] It reiterated these appeals in 1990, 1991 and 1992.[492]

439. In 1980, the UN Secretary-General reported to the Security Council that two UNIFIL soldiers had been captured and killed by the de facto forces in southern Lebanon. UNIFIL had been warned that if there were any victims following UNIFIL actions, reprisals would be taken.[493] A few days later, the UN Under Secretary-General for Special Political Affairs told the Security Council that "this murder of unarmed soldiers can only be described as a killing in cold blood, following on repeated threats by the de facto forces against the lives of members of UNIFIL".[494]

440. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Articles 13 GC III and 44 AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (c) Prisoners of war".[495] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in

[488] UN General Assembly, Res. 46/136, 17 December 1991, § 6.
[489] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/141, 18 December 1992, § 5.
[490] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[491] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/67, 8 March 1989, § 11.
[492] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1990/53, 6 March 1990, § 5; Res. 1991/78, 6 March 1991, § 6; Res. 1992/68, 4 March 1992, § 6.
[493] UN Secretary-General, Oral report before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.2212, 13 April 1980, § 8.
[494] UN Under Secretary-General, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.2217, 18 April 1980, § 14.
[495] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.

the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[496]

Other International Organisations

441. No practice was found.

International Conferences

442. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it recognised that irrespective of GC III, > the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war, including identification and accounting for all prisoners, provision of an adequate diet and medical care, authorization for prisoners to communicate with each other and with the exterior, the prompt repatriation of seriously sick or wounded prisoners, and protection at all times from physical and mental torture, abuse and reprisals.[497]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

443. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

444. The US protest against the execution of two American POWs during the Vietnam War, which had been justified as a reprisal, was forwarded to the adversary by the ICRC.[498]

445. In 1980, the ICRC reminded an armed opposition group of its commitment to respect the fundamental rules of IHL, in particular that "nobody will be held responsible for acts he didn't commit", which according to the ICRC, "excludes from the outset every recourse to acts of reprisals".[499]

VI. Other Practice

446. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle

[496] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[497] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. XI.
[498] ICRC, Annual Report 1965, Geneva, 1966, pp. 8–17; Annual Report 1966, Geneva, 1967, pp. 16–28.
[499] ICRC archive document.

that "captured combatants . . . shall be protected against all acts of violence and reprisals".[500]

447. Kalshoven notes that "none of the parties to the conflict in Vietnam have so much hinted at the argument that common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] would not prohibit reprisals".[501]

Wounded, sick and shipwrecked in the power of the adversary

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

448. Article 46 GC I states that "reprisals against the wounded [and] sick . . . protected by the Convention are prohibited".

449. Article 47 GC II provides that "reprisals against the wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons . . . protected by the Convention are prohibited".

450. Article 20 AP I, figuring in a part of AP I which gives a more extensive definition of the terms "wounded", "sick" and "shipwrecked", provides that "reprisals against the persons and objects protected by this Part are prohibited". Article 20 AP I was adopted by consensus.[502]

451. Upon ratification of AP I and AP II, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[503]

452. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany stated that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[504]

453. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[505]

454. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that "any

[500] ICRC archive document.
[501] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, p. 305.
[502] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[503] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[504] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.
[505] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.

measures thus taken by the United Kingdom . . . will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949".[506]

Other Instruments

455. Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, which deals under Section 7.1 with the protection of "persons placed hors de combat by reason of sickness [or] wounds . . .", states that "the following acts against any of the persons mentioned in section 7.1 are prohibited at any time and in any place: . . . reprisals".

456. Section 9.6 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against the wounded [and] the sick . . .".

457. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

458. Australia's Commanders' Guide, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, states that "protected persons, such as . . . wounded and sick . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[507]

459. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "reprisals against the wounded, sick, shipwrecked . . . are forbidden".[508] It further states that "protected persons, such as . . . wounded and sick . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[509]

460. Belgium's Law of War Manual, citing several examples of jurisprudence, states that "the persons protected by the Geneva Conventions (wounded and sick, shipwrecked . . .) . . . may not be made the object of reprisals. Therefore, [reprisals] may be directed only against combatants, non-protected property and a restricted group of non-protected civilians."[510]

461. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[511] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[512]

[506] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).
[507] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[508] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 985.
[509] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.
[510] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 36.
[511] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[512] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.

462. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[513]

463. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[514]

464. Canada's LOAC Manual, in a section dealing with the treatment of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, states that "reprisals against the wounded, sick, and shipwrecked are forbidden".[515] In a section dealing with enforcement measures, the manual further provides that "reprisals are permitted against combatants and against objects constituting military objectives".[516] It adds that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: ... a. the wounded, sick ... protected by [G]C I; b. the wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons ... protected by [G]C II".[517]

465. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[518]

466. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that reprisals are prohibited against the sick, wounded and shipwrecked. It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[519]

467. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: ... 2. Wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons."[520]

468. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended, in a provision entitled "Respect for the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "by virtue of the international conventions ratified or approved: ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[521]

469. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits ... methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: ... to reprisals against non-military objectives".[522] The manual further refers to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against ... the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[523]

[513] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[514] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[515] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 7.
[516] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 16.
[517] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[518] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[519] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[520] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.2.
[521] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[522] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[523] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.

470. Germany's Soldiers' Manual states that "reprisals against [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] are prohibited".[524]

471. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[525] In a chapter dealing with the "Protection of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked", the manual, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, provides that "reprisals against the wounded, sick and shipwrecked are prohibited".[526]

472. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[527]

473. Hungary's Military Manual states that reprisals against the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked" are prohibited. It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[528]

474. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[529]

475. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals against the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals, such as, for instance, the rules regarding . . . the wounded and the sick".[530]

476. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[531] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[532]

477. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[533]

478. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[534]

479. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with the protection of the wounded and sick and referring to Article 20 AP I, states that "measures of reprisal are prohibited against . . . the wounded, sick . . . in short against all protected persons and objects".[535]

[524] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 5.
[525] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[526] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 604.
[527] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[528] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[529] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).
[530] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.
[531] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[532] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[533] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[534] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[535] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-9.

480. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that "protected persons under the laws of war are: the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, regardless of whether they are military personnel or civilians . . . Reprisals against them must not be taken."[536] In the chapter dealing with the wounded and sick, the Handbook further states that "reprisals against [wounded and sick military personnel who have laid down their arms] are prohibited".[537]

481. New Zealand's Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with the wounded, sick and shipwrecked and referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, states that "reprisals against the wounded, sick, shipwrecked . . . are forbidden".[538] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: a) the wounded, sick . . . protected by [Article 46 GC I]; b) the wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons . . . protected by [Article 47 GC II]".[539]

482. Nigeria's Military Manual, in a part dealing with GC I, states that reprisals "are prohibited 'against the wounded, sick . . . protected by the convention' (Art. 46)".[540]

483. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals against . . . the persons and objects of . . . the wounded and sick . . . are prohibited".[541]

484. Spain's LOAC Manual, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, lists among the persons against whom the taking of reprisals is prohibited "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked as well as specially protected persons".[542]

485. Sweden's IHL Manual, while noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[543]

486. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual referring, inter alia, to Article 46 GC I, states that "by virtue of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, [reprisals] are prohibited with regard to the wounded and sick".[544]

487. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[545] It

[536] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-38.
[537] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-40.
[538] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1002(7).
[539] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2).
[540] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 14, § 5.
[541] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[542] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[543] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[544] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(2).
[545] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.

adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[546]

488. The UK Military Manual, in the part dealing with the sick, wounded and dead, refers to the provisions which GC I and GC II have in common with GC III and states that "the provisions of [GC I] are substantially the same as in the other 1949 [Geneva] Conventions. This applies in particular to such questions as . . . the prohibition of reprisals."[547] In the part dealing with reprisals, and referring to Articles 14 and 46 GC I and 16 and 47 GC II, the manual states that "reprisals against . . . sick, and wounded and against shipwrecked members of the enemy armed forces . . . protected by [GC I and GC II] . . . are . . . prohibited".[548] In a footnote relating to this provision, the manual notes that "the effect of this rule is that reprisals are unlawful against all persons except enemy combatants and those few classes of civilians who are not protected persons".[549] In a footnote relating to another provision, the manual moreover states that "reprisals against wounded and sick . . . constitute war crimes".[550]

489. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[551]

490. The US Field Manual, referring to Articles 13 GC III and 33 GC IV, provides that "reprisals against the persons or property of prisoners of war, including the wounded and sick, . . . are forbidden . . . However, reprisals may still be visited on enemy troops who have not yet fallen into the hands of the forces making the reprisals."[552]

491. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II, provides that:

> Reprisals against the wounded [and] sick . . . protected by [GC I] are prohibited . . .
>
> Reprisals against the wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons . . . protected by [GC II] are prohibited . . .
>
> No protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited.[553]

The Pamphlet further states that:

> Reprisals are forbidden, under all circumstances, against the persons or objects referenced above in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. At least some, and possibly all, of these prohibitions are regarded as customary law and are binding regardless of whether the adversary is a party to the Geneva Conventions. For

[546] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[547] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 385.
[548] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644.
[549] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644, footnote 2.
[550] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 647, footnote 1.
[551] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
[552] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(c).
[553] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(1).

definitions as to persons or objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, applicable articles of those documents must be consulted.[554]

492. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", states that "under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, reprisals may not be directed against . . . the sick and wounded [and] the shipwrecked".[555]
493. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity: . . . m. Reprisals against persons or property protected by the Geneva Conventions, to include the wounded, sick, or shipwrecked."[556]
494. The US Naval Handbook states that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: . . . 2. Wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons."[557]
495. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: . . . the sick, the wounded and the shipwrecked".[558]

National Legislation
496. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[559]
497. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[560]

National Case-law
498. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
499. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[561]
500. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against the wounded, sick and shipwrecked . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In

[554] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).
[555] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
[556] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.
[557] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.2.
[558] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(1).
[559] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[560] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.
[561] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.

consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks."[562]

501. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[563]

502. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read as follows "3. . . . The measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[564]

503. On the basis of the reply by Iraq's Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that reprisals "must not be directed, in any way, against the injured, sick . . ., but [have] to be confined to purely military targets".[565]

504. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF does not condone or conduct reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Geneva Conventions.[566]

505. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law . . . In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal."[567]

506. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[568]

507. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[569]

---

[562] Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
[563] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
[564] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[565] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Reply by the Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, July 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[566] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[567] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[568] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[569] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.

508. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case in 1994, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

> During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against . . . the injured [and] the infirm . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties . . . A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) . . . The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[570]

509. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . The Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit the taking of reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Conventions.[571]

510. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, mentioning that the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked was an area in which AP I "does contain some useful codifications or improvements of existing rules", affirmed that "we support the principle that all the wounded, sick, and shipwrecked be respected and protected, and not be made the object of attacks or reprisals, regardless of the party to the conflict to which they belong".[572]

511. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US noted that it considered that the provisions of AP I regarding reprisals were "new rules".[573]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

512. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft

[570] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.
[571] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.
[572] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 423.
[573] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[574]

513. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: (a) The wounded [and] sick . . . protected by the First Geneva Convention . . .; (b) The wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons . . . protected by the Second Geneva Convention."[575] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[576]

Other International Organisations

514. No practice was found.

International Conferences

515. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

516. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

517. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

518. No practice was found.

[574] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[575] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[576] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.

Medical and religious personnel in the power of the adversary

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

519. Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II provide that "reprisals against the ... personnel ... protected by the Convention are prohibited".

520. Article 20 AP I, figuring in a part of AP I which extends the category of persons who cannot be the object of reprisals to the wider range of personnel and objects involved in the care of the wounded, the sick and the shipwrecked, states that "reprisals against the persons and objects protected by this Part are prohibited". Article 20 AP I was adopted by consensus.[577]

521. Upon ratification of AP I and AP II, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[578]

522. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany stated that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I ... with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[579]

523. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I ... with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[580]

524. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that "any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom ... will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949".[581]

Other Instruments

525. Section 9.6 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin which deals under Section 9.4 with the protection of "medical personnel exclusively engaged in the search for, transport or treatment of the wounded or sick, as well as religious personnel", states that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against ... the personnel ... protected under this section".

[577] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[578] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[579] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.
[580] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.
[581] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

526. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

527. Australia's Commanders' Guide, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, states that "protected persons, such as medical personnel . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[582]

528. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "reprisals against . . . medical personnel . . . are forbidden".[583] It also states that "protected persons, such as medical personnel . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[584]

529. Belgium's Law of War Manual, citing several examples of jurisprudence, states that "the persons protected by the Geneva Conventions . . . may not be made the object of reprisals. Therefore, [reprisals] may be directed only against combatants, non-protected property and a restricted group of non-protected civilians."[585]

530. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[586] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[587]

531. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[588]

532. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[589]

533. Canada's LOAC Manual, in a section dealing with enforcement measures, provides that "reprisals are permitted against combatants and against objects constituting military objectives".[590] In the same section, the manual states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: a. the . . . medical personnel . . . protected by [G]C I; b. the . . . personnel . . . protected by [G]C II".[591]

[582] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[583] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 985.
[584] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.
[585] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 36.
[586] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[587] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[588] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[589] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[590] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 16.
[591] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.

534. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo, ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[592]

535. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[593]

536. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: ... 4. Hospitals and medical facilities, personnel, and equipment."[594]

537. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended, in a provision entitled "Respect for the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "by virtue of the international conventions ratified or approved: ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[595]

538. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits ... the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: ... to reprisals against non-military objectives".[596] The manual refers to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against ... the persons and objects particularly protected".[597]

539. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: ... medical and religious personnel".[598] Referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II, the manual further provides that "reprisals against chaplains are prohibited. This prohibition shall protect chaplains from any restriction of the rights assigned to them."[599]

540. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against ... medical and religious personnel".[600]

541. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[601]

542. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[602]

543. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals against protected medical personnel and protected persons, states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[603]

[592] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[593] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19. [594] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.2.
[595] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[596] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85. [597] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[598] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479. [599] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 814.
[600] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320. [601] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[602] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c). [603] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.

544. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[604] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . medical and religious personnel".[605]

545. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[606]

546. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[607]

547. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with the protection of the wounded and sick, states that "measures of reprisal are prohibited against . . . medical and religious personnel . . . in short against all protected persons and objects".[608]

548. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that "protected persons under the laws of war are: . . . medical personnel, both military and civil; religious personnel with the armed forces . . . Reprisals against them must not be taken."[609]

549. New Zealand's Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with the wounded, sick and shipwrecked and referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, states that "reprisals against medical personnel, buildings and equipment are forbidden".[610] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited . . . a) the . . . personnel . . . protected by [Article 46 GC I]; b) the . . . personnel . . . protected by [Article 47 GC II]".[611]

550. Nigeria's Military Manual, in a part dealing with GC I, states that reprisals "are prohibited 'against the . . . personnel . . . protected by the convention' (Art. 46)".[612]

551. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War, which states that "it is prohibited to take measures of reprisal against prisoners of war as a retaliation for [a] violation of the Laws of War by the enemy", also provides for the same protection and benefits to be granted, as a minimum, to medical personnel and military chaplains captured by the enemy.[613]

[604] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[605] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[606] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[607] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[608] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-9.
[609] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-38.
[610] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1002(7).
[611] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2).
[612] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 14, § 5.
[613] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), §§ 33 and 37.

552. Spain's LOAC Manual, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, lists among the persons against whom the taking of reprisals is prohibited "specially protected persons".[614]

553. Sweden's IHL Manual, while noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[615]

554. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, referring, inter alia, to Article 46 GC I, states that "by virtue of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, [reprisals] are prohibited with regard to ... medical personnel".[616]

555. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: ... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[617] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: ... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[618]

556. The UK Military Manual, in a footnote relating to a provision which refers to Articles 14 and 46 GC I and 16 and 47 GC II, notes that "reprisals are unlawful against all persons except enemy combatants and those few classes of civilians who are not protected persons".[619]

557. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against ... medical and religious personnel".[620]

558. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II, provides that:

> Reprisals against the ... personnel ... protected by [GC I] are prohibited ...
> Reprisals against ... the persons protected by [GC II] are prohibited ...
> No protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited.[621]

The Pamphlet further states that:

> Reprisals are forbidden, under all circumstances, against the persons or objects referenced above in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. At least some, and possibly all, of these prohibitions are regarded as customary law and are binding regardless of whether the adversary is a party to the Geneva Conventions. For

[614] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[615] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[616] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(2).
[617] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[618] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[619] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644, footnote 2.
[620] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
[621] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(1).

definitions as to persons or objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, applicable articles of those documents must be consulted.[622]

559. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", states that "under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, reprisals may not be directed against . . . medical personnel".[623]
560. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity: . . . m. Reprisals against persons or property protected by the Geneva Conventions."[624]
561. The US Naval Handbook states that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: . . . 4. Hospitals and medical facilities, personnel, and equipment."[625]
562. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: . . . medical personnel, medical units".[626]

National Legislation
563. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning . . . medical organisations and their personnel . . . During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[627]

564. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[628]
565. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[629]

National Case-law
566. No practice was found.

622 US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).
623 US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
624 US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.
625 US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.2.
626 SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(2).
627 Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
628 Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
629 Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.

Other National Practice

567. At the CDDH, Australia proposed an amendment to Article 20 of draft AP I which read: "Measures in the nature of reprisals against the persons and objects protected by this Part are prohibited."[630] However, the Australian delegation noted that "the law concerning reprisals was far from settled and it might be found not to be applicable to peoples fighting wars of self-determination to which draft [AP I] had now been extended".[631]

568. In 1986, in a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Defence noted that "the Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit reprisals against certain categories of persons such as medical personnel".[632]

569. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[633]

570. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . medical services and personnel . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks."[634]

571. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[635]

572. According to the Report on the Practice of Egypt, military communiqués issued during the Middle East War in 1973 and Egypt's declaration upon ratification of AP I highlight Egypt's position according to which reprisals should not be directed against protected persons and objects, but that this would not prevent Egypt from resorting to reprisals "in the most strict limits possible".[636]

573. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "3. . . . The [630] Australia, New proposal concerning Article 20 draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/II/214, 13 February 1975, p. 97.

[631] Australia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XI, CDDH/II/SR.23, 24 February 1975, § 13.
[632] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, § 2.
[633] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[634] Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
[635] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
[636] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[637]

574. On the basis of a reply by Iraq's Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that reprisals should not be directed against civilians and civilian objects, but only against military targets.[638]

575. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF does not condone or conduct reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Geneva Conventions.[639]

576. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law . . . In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal".[640]

577. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[641]

578. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[642]

579. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands in 1994, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

> During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against medical installations, transportation and units . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties . . . A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) . . . The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[643]

580. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

[637] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[638] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Reply by the Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, July 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[639] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[640] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[641] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[642] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[643] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.

To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . The Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit the taking of reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Conventions.[644]

581. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, referring to Articles 12–20 AP I, affirmed that "we . . . support the principle that medical units, including properly authorized civilian medical units, be respected and protected at all times and not be the object of attacks or reprisals".[645]
582. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US noted that it considered that the provisions of AP I regarding reprisals were "new rules".[646]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
583. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[647]
584. In 1994 in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: (a) The . . . personnel . . . protected by the First Geneva Convention . . .; (b) The . . . personnel . . . protected by the Second Geneva Convention."[648] It further stated that:

In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in 644 UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

645 US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 423.
646 US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.
647 UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
648 UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.

the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[649]

Other International Organisations
585. No practice was found.

International Conferences
586. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

587. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

588. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

589. No practice was found.

Civilians in the power of the adversary

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
590. Article 33, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "reprisals against protected persons . . . are prohibited".
591. In its reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that "any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom . . . will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949".[650]

[649] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[650] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

Other Instruments

592. Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin which deals under Section 7.1 with the protection of "persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations, including civilians . . . and persons placed hors de combat by reason of . . . detention", states that "the following acts against any of the persons mentioned in section 7.1 are prohibited at any time and in any place: . . . reprisals".

593. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

594. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969), in the chapter dealing with the "Protection of civilian persons in times of war", which contains "provisions common to the territories of the belligerent parties and occupied territories", states that "measures of reprisal with respect to protected persons and their property remain equally prohibited".[651]

595. Argentina's Regulation for the Treatment of POWs, in a part dealing with interned civilians, states that "reprisals against innocent interned [persons] are prohibited".[652]

596. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989), in a part dealing with the "Treatment given to protected persons", which contains "provisions common to the territories of the belligerent parties and occupied territories", refers to Article 33 GC IV and provides that "remain absolutely prohibited: . . . measures of reprisal against protected persons and their objects".[653] In an annex containing a list of "Fundamental rules of International Humanitarian Law applicable in armed conflict", the manual provides that "civilian persons who find themselves in the hands of the adversary . . . will be protected against all acts of violence and reprisals".[654]

