597. Australia's Commanders' Guide refers to Article 33 GC IV and states that "protected persons, such as . . . civilians . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[655]

598. Australia's Defence Force Manual, in a provision entitled "Effects of occupation on the population", provides that "measures for the control of the population which are prohibited include: . . . reprisals or collective penalties".[656]

[651] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.012(3).
[652] Argentina, Regulation for the Treatment of POWs (1985), § 4.02(5).
[653] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.29(5).
[654] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), Annex 10, § 4.
[655] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[656] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1221(c).

599. Belgium's Law of War Manual, citing several examples of jurisprudence and referring to Articles 4 and 33 GC IV, states that "the persons protected by the Geneva Conventions (... civilians)... may not be made the object of reprisals. Therefore, [reprisals] may be directed only against combatants, non-protected property and a restricted group of non-protected civilians."[657]

600. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected:... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[658] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if:... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[659]

601. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat:... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[660]

602. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat:... to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[661]

603. Canada's LOAC Manual, in a chapter entitled "Treatment of civilians in the hands of a party to the conflict or an occupying power" and, more specifically, in a section containing "Provisions common to the territories of the parties to the conflict and to occupied territories", refers to GC IV and states that "the following are expressly prohibited:... the taking of reprisals against protected persons and their property".[662] In a section dealing with enforcement measures, the manual further provides that "reprisals are permitted against combatants and against objects constituting military objectives".[663] In the same section, it also states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited:... d. civilians in the hands of a party to the conflict of which they are not nationals, including inhabitants of occupied territory".[664]

604. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "civilian persons under the authority of the adversary... shall be protected against... reprisals".[665]

605. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]:... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[666]

[657] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 36.
[658] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[659] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[660] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[661] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[662] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-4, § 33.
[663] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 16.
[664] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[665] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 4.
[666] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).

606. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic, under the heading "Treat all captives and detainees humanely", states that "you must never carry out reprisals or acts of vengeance against any person, enemy or civilian, you have taken prisoner or detained during the fighting". It also provides that "the Geneva Convention prohibits reprisals against civilians for the acts of enemy soldiers".[667]

607. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "reprisals may be taken against enemy armed forces, [and] enemy civilians other than those in occupied territory".[668]

608. Ecuador's Naval Manual further provides that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: . . . 3. Civilians in occupied territory."[669] The manual also provides that "interned civilians . . . may not be subjected to collective punishment or acts of reprisal".[670]

609. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended, in a provision entitled "Respect for the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "by virtue of the international conventions ratified or approved: . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[671]

610. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "civilians in the power of the adversary must be protected against violence and reprisals".[672]

611. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits . . . the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: . . . to reprisals against non-military objectives".[673] The manual further refers to Articles 33 GC IV and 20 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against civilian persons".[674]

612. Germany's Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with reprisals, refers to Articles 33 GC IV and 51 AP I and provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: . . . civilians".[675] Referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 20 and 51 AP I, the manual further states that "reprisals against the civilian population . . . are prohibited".[676] In a chapter entitled "Belligerent occupation", the manual, referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 20 and 51 AP I, states that "reprisals against civilians . . . are prohibited".[677]

613. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[678]

667 Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), pp. 7 and 10.
668 Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.
669 Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.2.
670 Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.9.
671 France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
672 France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
673 France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
674 France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
675 Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
676 Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 507.
677 Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 535.
678 Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.

614. India's Manual of Military Law prohibits reprisals. This provision is in a section relative to the action by a commander acting in aid of civil authorities for the handling of crowds and mobs. It adds that action is preventive and not punitive and that no soldier can punish a civilian, except under martial law.[679]
615. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[680]
616. Italy's IHL Manual, in a chapter dealing with occupied territory, states that "in occupied territories, civilian persons have the following rights: ... they may not be ... made the object of reprisals".[681]
617. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: ... (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[682] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives ... The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against ... civilians".[683]
618. Madagascar's Military Manual, in the part dealing with civilian persons, instructs soldiers to "protect them against ill-treatment". It states that "acts of vengeance ... are prohibited".[684] The manual further instructs soldiers to refrain from all acts of revenge.[685] In its attached list of "Fundamental rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts", the manual states that "captured combatants and civilians who are under the authority of the adverse party ... will be protected against any act of violence and reprisals".[686]
619. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[687]
620. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with the protection of the civilian population and referring to Article 33 GC IV, states that "a protected person cannot be punished for acts which he/she has not personally committed. Collective punishments are also prohibited."[688]
621. New Zealand's Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with civilians and referring to Articles 32–34 GC IV, states that "the following are ... prohibited: ... the taking of reprisals against protected persons and their property".[689] In the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 73 AP I, the manual states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited ... d) civilians in the hands of a

[679] India, Manual of Military Law (1983), Vol. 1, Chapter VII, § 8.
[680] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).
[681] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(f).
[682] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[683] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[684] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-T, § 23(3).
[685] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[686] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 4.
[687] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[688] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-2.
[689] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1116(2)(d).

Party to the conflict of which they are not nationals, including inhabitants of occupied territory".[690]

622. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals against the persons and property of . . . protected civilians are prohibited".[691]

623. Spain's LOAC Manual lists among the persons against whom the taking of reprisals is prohibited "civilian persons and objects". It refers, however, to Article 46 GC I.[692]

624. Sweden's IHL Manual, referring to Article 33 GC IV, states that:

> Protected persons may not be punished for actions they have not themselves performed. Collective punishment of a whole group is also prohibited. Also, the occupying power may not punish protected persons . . . in reprisal for some action directed against the occupying power. If disturbances occur, the occupant may not attempt to restore order by taking innocent persons hostage.[693]

625. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, in the part dealing with "Hostilities and their limits" refers, inter alia, to Articles 33 GC IV and 51, 54 and 55 AP I and states that "reprisals against the civilian population are prohibited".[694] In the part dealing with civilian persons and, more specifically, "civilian persons who are in the power of the troops at the moment of combat", refers to Article 33 GC IV and states that "measures of reprisal or attacks [carried out] as measures of reprisal are prohibited".[695] In the provision dealing with reprisals, the manual, referring to Article 33 GC IV, states that "by virtue of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, [reprisals] are prohibited with regard to . . . the civilian population".[696]

626. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[697] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[698]

627. The UK Military Manual, in a chapter dealing with the "treatment of enemy alien civilians" and referring to Articles 32–34 GC IV, states that "the following are prohibited: . . . the taking of reprisals against protected persons and their property".[699] In a chapter dealing with "the occupation of enemy territory", the manual states that "[Article 33 GC IV] effected a change in the law by laying down expressly that no protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed and that collective penalties and all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited".[700] It

[690] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2).
[691] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[692] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[693] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[694] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 25(2).
[695] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 149.
[696] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(2).
[697] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[698] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[699] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 42.
[700] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 553.

goes on to say, with reference to Articles 33 and 34 GC IV, that "[GC IV], provides . . . that 'Reprisals against protected persons and their property are prohibited'."[701] Moreover, in the part dealing with reprisals, the manual states that "reprisals against . . . civilian protected persons and their property in occupied territory and in the belligerent's own territory, are . . . prohibited".[702] In a footnote relating to this provision, the manual, referring to Articles 4 and 33 GC IV, notes that "the effect of this rule is that reprisals are unlawful against all persons except enemy combatants and those few classes of civilians who are not protected persons".[703] In a footnote relating to another provision, the manual states that "reprisals against . . . civilians protected under [GC IV], constitute war crimes".[704]

628. The UK LOAC Manual, in a part dealing with the protection of civilians, states that "it is forbidden: . . . to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[705] It further states that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . enemy civilians in territory controlled by a belligerent".[706]

629. The US Field Manual, referring to Article 33 GC IV, stipulates that "reprisals against . . . protected civilians are forbidden . . . However, reprisals may still be visited on enemy troops who have not yet fallen into the hands of the forces making the reprisals."[707]

630. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Article 33 GC IV, provides that "no protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited. Reprisals against protected persons . . . are prohibited."[708] The Pamphlet further states that:

> Reprisals are forbidden, under all circumstances, against the persons or objects referenced above in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. At least some, and possibly all, of these prohibitions are regarded as customary law and are binding regardless of whether the adversary is a party to the Geneva Conventions. For definitions as to persons or objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, applicable articles of those documents must be consulted. Also, the prohibition in Article 33, GC [IV], protecting civilians includes all those who . . . at a given moment and in any manner whatsoever, find themselves, in case of a conflict or occupation, in the hands of a Party to the conflict or Occupying Power of which they are not nationals. (Article 4, GC [IV]).[709]

631. The US Soldier's Manual, under the heading "Treat all captives and detainees humanely", tells soldiers that "you must never engage in reprisals or acts of revenge against any persons, enemy or civilian, whom you capture or detain in combat". In a part dealing with the treatment of civilians and private

[701] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 554. [702] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644.
[703] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644, footnote 2.
[704] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 647, footnote 1.
[705] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 14, § 5(e).
[706] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16. [707] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(c).
[708] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(1). [709] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).

property, the manual further states that "the Geneva Conventions forbid retaliating against civilians for the actions of enemy soldiers".[710]

632. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", states that "under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, reprisals may not be directed against ... the inhabitants of occupied territory".[711]

633. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity: ... m. Reprisals against persons or property protected by the Geneva Conventions, to include ... civilians."[712]

634. The US Naval Handbook states that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: 1. ... interned civilians ... 3. Civilians in occupied territory."[713] It also provides that "all interned civilians ... may not be subjected to reprisal action or collective punishment".[714]

635. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: ... civilian persons and their property".[715]

National Legislation

636. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning civilian persons, medical organisations and their personnel, civilian objectives, civilian property ... During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[716]

637. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[717]

638. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[718]

[710] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), pp. 15 and 23.
[711] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
[712] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.
[713] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.2.
[714] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.8.
[715] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(1).
[716] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
[717] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[718] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.

National Case-law

639. In its judgement in the Schintlholzer case in 1988 dealing with the killing of Italian civilians by German soldiers in 1944, Italy's Military Tribunal of Verona stated that the acts > definitely cannot be seen as falling within the limited system of reprisals or collective punishments; a system which, in any case, refers to the conditions and procedures provided for in international law. However, it seems difficult to deny that systematic violence against the defenceless constitutes a completely unjustified corollary of a military operation carried out by German troops [which had the aim to combat the partisans].[719]

640. In the Priebke case in 1995, Argentina's Public Prosecutor of First Instance, dealing with Italy's request to extradite the accused, held that the alleged killing in reprisal of 330 civilians and POWs committed by German soldiers in the Ardeatine Caves in Italy during the Second World War was "an act which must be qualified as a war crime".[720]

641. In the Calley case in 1973, a US army officer was convicted of murder for killing South Vietnamese civilians. The US Army Court of Military Review dismissed the argument that the acts were lawful reprisals for illegal acts of the enemy and held that "slaughtering many for the presumed delicts of a few is not a lawful response to the delicts . . . Reprisal by summary execution of the helpless is forbidden in the laws of land warfare."[721]

Other National Practice

642. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[722]

643. In its written comments on other written statements concerning the Nuclear Weapons case before the ICJ in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[723]

644. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft Article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows:

[719] Italy, Military Tribunal of Verona, Schintlholzer case, Judgement, 15 November 1988.
[720] Argentina, Hearing of the Public Prosecutor of the First Instance, Priebke case, 1995, Section V.2.
[721] US, Army Court of Military Review, Calley case, Judgement, 16 February 1973.
[722] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[723] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.

"3. . . . The measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[724]

645. At the CDDH, the FRG, with regard to a French proposal on reprisals according to which "the measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949", stated that this provision "was the most important in the whole of the proposal since it really did protect . . . the civilian population in occupied territory".[725]

646. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF does not condone or conduct reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Geneva Conventions.[726]

647. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law . . . In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal."[727]

648. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[728]

649. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[729]

650. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . The Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit the taking of reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Conventions.[730]

651. An instruction card issued to all US troops engaged in Vietnam directed soldiers always to treat prisoners humanely, adding that "all persons in your hands, whether suspects [or] civilians . . . must be protected against violence, insults, curiosity, and reprisals of any kind".[731]

[724] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[725] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.48, 30 April 1976, p. 84, § 6.
[726] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[727] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[728] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[729] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[730] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.
[731] US, The enemy in your hands, Reproduction of 3x5 instruction card issued to all troops, reprinted in George. S. Prugh, Law at War: Vietnam 1964–1973, Department of the Army, Vietnam Studies, 1975, Appendix H. III.

652. In 1980, in a footnote to a memorandum of law on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", a legal adviser of the US Department of State stated that:

> In theory, an attempt might also be made to justify the use of chemical weapons in Afghanistan as a lawful reprisal against violations of the general laws of war by Afghan insurgents (such as the summary execution of Soviet prisoners). However, such an argument would face several serious problems. First, the prohibition in the [1925 Geneva Gas] Protocol and in customary international law apparently itself precludes use of chemical weapons in reprisal except in response to enemy use of weapons prohibited by the [1925 Geneva Gas] Protocol . . . Second, reprisals against the civilian population of occupied territories are expressly precluded by the law of war, and this would apply to reprisals against Afghan villages in areas occupied by Soviet forces. See Article 33 of [GC IV].[732]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

653. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[733]

654. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all parties to the conflict "to treat all prisoners in their custody in accordance with the internationally recognized principles of humanitarian law and to protect them from all acts of reprisal and violence".[734] It reiterated these appeals in 1990, 1991 and 1992.[735]

655. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Article 33 GC IV and Article 73 AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (d) Civilians in the hands of a party to the conflict of which they are [732] US, Department of State, Memorandum of law by a Legal Adviser on the "Reported Use of Chemical Agents in Afghanistan, Laos, and Kampuchea", 9 April 1980, reprinted in Marian Nash Leich, Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1980, Department of State Publication 9610, Washington, D.C., December 1986, pp. 1034 and 1041, footnote 38.

[733] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.

[734] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/67, 8 March 1989, § 11.

[735] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1990/53, 6 March 1990, § 5; Res. 1991/78, 6 March 1991, § 6; Res. 1992/68, 4 March 1992, § 6.

not nationals, including inhabitants of occupied territory."[736] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[737]

Other International Organisations

656. No practice was found.

International Conferences

657. The Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in 2001 adopted a declaration calling upon "the Occupying Power [in the conflict between Israel and Palestinians] to refrain from perpetrating any other violation of [GC IV], in particular reprisals against protected persons and their property".[738]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

658. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "as for reprisals against civilians, under customary international law they are prohibited as long as civilians find themselves in the hands of the adversary".[739]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

659. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "civilians under the authority of an adverse party . . . shall be protected against all acts of violence and reprisals".[740]

660. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC reminded all those involved in the violence and those in a position to influence the situation that "terrorist acts

[736] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[737] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[738] Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, Declaration, § 14.
[739] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 527.
[740] ICRC archive document.

are absolutely and unconditionally prohibited, as are reprisals against the civilian population, indiscriminate attacks and attacks directed against the civilian population".[741]

VI. Other Practice

661. No practice was found.

Civilians in general

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

662. Article 51(6) AP I provides that "attacks against the civilian population or civilians by way of reprisals are prohibited". Article 51 AP I was adopted by 77 votes in favour, one against and 16 abstentions.[742]

663. Upon ratification of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, China declared that "Although [GC IV] does not apply to civilian persons outside enemy-occupied areas and consequently does not completely meet humanitarian requirements, it is found to be in accord with the interest of protecting civilian persons in occupied territory and in certain other cases".[743]

664. Upon ratification of AP I and AP II, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[744]

665. Upon ratification of AP I, France stated that it would:

> apply the provisions of [Article 51(8)] to the extent that their interpretation does not hinder, in conformity with international law, the use of such means as it considers indispensable for the protection of its civilian population from grave, manifest and deliberate violations of the Conventions and the Protocol by the enemy.[745]

666. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany stated that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I and in particular its Articles 51 and 52 with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[746]

741 ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.
742 CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 163.
743 China, Reservations made upon ratification of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, 28 December 1956, § 4.
744 Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
745 France, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 11 April 2001, § 11.
746 Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.

667. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I and in particular its Articles 51 and 52 with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[747]
668. Upon signature of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, the USSR stated that "[GC IV] does not cover the civilian population in territory not occupied by the enemy and does not, therefore, completely meet humanitarian requirements". The USSR upheld its reservations upon ratification of the said instruments.[748]
669. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that:

> The obligations of Articles 51 and 55 are accepted on the basis that any adverse party against which the United Kingdom might be engaged will itself scrupulously observe those obligations. If an adverse party makes serious and deliberate attacks, in violation of Article 51 or Article 52 against the civilian population or civilians or against civilian objects, or, in violation of Articles 53, 54 and 55, on objects or items protected by those Articles, the United Kingdom will regard itself as entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by the Articles in question to the extent that it considers such measures necessary for the sole purpose of compelling the adverse party to cease committing violations under those Articles, but only after formal warning to the adverse party requiring cessation of the violations has been disregarded and then only after a decision taken at the highest level of government. Any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom will not be disproportionate to the violations giving rise thereto and will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949 nor will such measures be continued after the violations have ceased. The United Kingdom will notify the Protecting Powers of any such formal warning given to an adverse party, and if that warning has been disregarded, of any measures taken as a result.[749]

670. Article 3(2) of the 1980 Protocol II to the CCW provides that "it is prohibited in all circumstances to direct [mines, booby-traps and other devices], either in offence, defence or by way of reprisals, against the civilian population as such or against individual civilians".
671. Article 3(7) of the 1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW provides that "it is prohibited in all circumstances to direct [mines, booby-traps and other devices], either in offence, defence or by way of reprisals, against the civilian population as such or against individual civilians or civilian objects".

Other Instruments
672. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

[747] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.
[748] USSR, Reservations made upon signature and maintained upon ratification of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, 12 December 1949 and 10 May 1954, § 4.
[749] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

673. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.
674. Section 5.6 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against civilians".
675. Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin which deals in Section 7.1 with the protection of, inter alia, "persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations, including civilians", states that "the following acts against any of the persons mentioned in section 7.1 are prohibited at any time and in any place: . . . reprisals".
676. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

677. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "specific prohibitions dictate that civilians are not to be made the express object of an attack or reprisal".[750] In another provision, the manual refers to Articles 51–56 AP I and states that "protected persons, such as . . . civilians . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[751]
678. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "reprisal actions against civilians are . . . prohibited".[752] In another provision, the manual states that "reprisals against civilians . . . are prohibited".[753] It further provides that "protected persons, such as . . . civilians . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[754]
679. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[755] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[756]
680. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[757]

[750] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 604.
[751] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[752] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 531.
[753] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 920.
[754] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.
[755] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[756] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[757] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).

681. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[758]
682. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual, in a part listing the rules of conduct in combat and referring to "civilian persons", provides that "protect them against ill treatment [and] acts of vengeance. The taking of hostages is prohibited."[759]
683. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "reprisals against civilians ... are prohibited".[760] In a part dealing with enforcement measures, the manual states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: ... e. civilians".[761]
684. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[762]
685. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "civilian persons and objects". It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[763]
686. Croatia's Soldiers' Manual, in a part dealing with civilians, provides that "measures of reprisal and the taking of hostages are prohibited".[764]
687. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "reprisals may be taken against enemy armed forces, [and] enemy civilians other than those in occupied territory".[765]
688. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended, in a provision entitled "Respect for the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "by virtue of the international conventions ratified or approved: ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[766]
689. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits ... the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: ... to reprisals against non-military objectives".[767] The manual further refers to Articles 51–56 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against civilians".[768]
690. Germany's Soldiers' Manual states that "reprisals against the civilian population are prohibited".[769]

[758] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[759] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 151.
[760] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-5, § 39.
[761] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[762] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[763] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[764] Croatia, Soldiers' Manual (1992), p. 5, § 3.
[765] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.
[766] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[767] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[768] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[769] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 4.

691. Germany's Military Manual, in a chapter dealing with "Certain Conventional Weapons" and referring to Article 3(2) of the 1980 Protocol II to the CCW, provides that "it is prohibited to direct the above-mentioned munitions – neither by way of reprisals – against the civilian population as such or against individual civilians".[770] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual, referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 51 AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: ... civilians".[771] Referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 20 and 51 AP I, the manual further states that "reprisals against the civilian population ... are prohibited".[772] In a chapter entitled "Belligerent occupation", the manual, referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 20 and 51 AP I, further states that "reprisals against civilians ... are prohibited".[773]

692. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against ... civilians".[774]

693. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "civilian persons and objects". It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[775]

694. India's Manual of Military Law prohibits reprisals. This provision is in a section relative to the action by a commander acting in aid of civil authorities for the handling of crowds and mobs. It adds that action is preventive and not punitive and that no soldier can punish a civilian, except under martial law.[776]

695. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[777] According to the Report on the Practice of Indonesia,

> The meaning of protected persons is not exclusively referring to the Geneva Conventions ... but also referring to the customary sources, such as the moral values which are generally recognized and exist among the international community, and other Conventions ... Reprisals against civilian[s] other than protected civilians under Geneva Convention IV [are] prohibited as far as they are not engage[d in] the conflict and [do] not violate the law[s] and customs of war. The civilian[s] other than protected civilians under Geneva Convention IV will [be] protected ... as necessary.[778]

696. Italy's IHL Manual provides that reprisals cannot be directed against the civilian population, except in case of absolute necessity.[779] However, providing for the prohibition of reprisals against, inter alia, protected civilian persons and protected persons, the manual also states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[780]

[770] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 410.
[771] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[772] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 507.
[773] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 535.
[774] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[775] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[776] India, Manual of Military Law (1983), Vol. 1, Chapter VII, § 8.
[777] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).
[778] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[779] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 23.
[780] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.

697. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[781] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . civilians."[782]

698. Lebanon's Teaching Manual prohibits reprisals against civilians.[783]

699. Madagascar's Military Manual, in the part of its instructions dealing with civilian persons, instructs soldiers to "protect them against ill treatment". It states that "acts of vengeance and the taking of hostages are prohibited".[784] The manual further instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[785]

700. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring to Article 51 AP I, states that "attacking the civilian population by measures of reprisal is forbidden".[786]

701. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that "protected persons under the laws of war are: . . . personnel of civil defence organisations such as the fire brigade . . . civilians . . . Reprisals against them must not be taken."[787] It further states that "reprisals against the civilian population are prohibited".[788]

702. New Zealand's Military Manual, referring to Article 52(6) AP I, states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited . . . e) civilians".[789]

703. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals against the persons and property of . . . protected civilians are prohibited".[790]

704. Spain's LOAC Manual lists among the persons against whom the taking of reprisals is prohibited "civilian persons and objects". It refers, however, to Article 46 GC I (relative to the prohibition of reprisals against the wounded, the sick and medical personnel protected under GC I).[791]

705. Sweden's IHL Manual, referring to Article 51(6) AP I and stating that this provision "contains another rule prohibiting reprisal attacks on civilian populations and individual civilians", states that:

> It may appear remarkable that not until the advent of the Additional Protocol was it possible to obtain general protection for civilians against reprisals. Protection for civilians in this respect remains inadequate, however, as long as the majority of states have not ratified the Protocol.

[781] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[782] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[783] Lebanon, Teaching Manual (1997), p. 78.
[784] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-T, § 23(3).
[785] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[786] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-6, see also p. V-5.
[787] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-38.
[788] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-43.
[789] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2).
[790] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[791] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).

The [Swedish] International Humanitarian Law Committee considers that Article 51 can be of great importance in improving protection for civilian populations and civilian objects. It is of the greatest importance for the article to be applied in such a way that the intended humanitarian purpose is achieved as far as possible.[792]

While noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, the manual further states that:

Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[793]

706. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, in the part dealing with "Hostilities and their limits", refers, inter alia, to Articles 33 GC IV and 51, 54 and 55 AP I and states that "reprisals against the civilian population are prohibited".[794] In the part entitled "Civilian persons", the manual refers to Articles 33 GC IV and 51 AP I and states that "measures of reprisal or attacks [carried out] as measures of reprisal are prohibited". The provision is placed in the part dealing with civilian persons and, more specifically, "civilian persons who are in the power of the troops at the moment of combat".[795]

707. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: ... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[796] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: ... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[797]

708. The UK LOAC Manual, in a part dealing with the protection of civilians, states that "it is forbidden: ... to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[798] It further states that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against ... enemy civilians in territory controlled by a belligerent".[799] However, the manual also states that "the United Kingdom reserves the right to take proportionate reprisals against an enemy's civilian population or civilian objects where the enemy has attacked our own civilians or civilian objects in violation of [AP I]".[800]

709. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Articles 4 and 33 GC IV, states that "the protection against reprisals expressed in the Conventions ... does not protect civilians who are under the control of their own country".[801]

792 Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section § 3.2.1.5, pp. 50 and 51.
793 Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.
794 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 25(2).
795 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 149.
796 Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
797 Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
798 UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 14, § 5(e).
799 UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
800 UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 17.
801 US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).

710. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", lists a number of persons and objects protected under the Geneva Conventions against which it is prohibited to take reprisals, among which are "inhabitants of occupied territory". The Handbook adds, however, that "a Protocol to the 1949 Geneva Conventions would expand this list to include all civilians... The United States signed this Protocol in 1977, but has not yet ratified it. Consult the Staff Judge Advocate for further guidance."[802]

711. The US Naval Handbook provides that "reprisals may be taken against enemy armed forces, enemy civilians other than those in occupied territory, and enemy property".[803]

712. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: ... civilian persons and their property".[804]

National Legislation

713. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who carries out reprisals or orders the carrying out of reprisals against the civilian population.[805]

714. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning civilian persons, medical organisations and their personnel, civilian objectives, civilian property... During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[806]

715. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against "the civilian population" and against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[807]

716. Under Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, organising, ordering or implementing reprisals, in times of war or occupation, is punishable when resulting in grave injury to the physical integrity of the civilian population.[808]

802 US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
803 US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.
804 SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(1).
805 Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(1) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
806 Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
807 Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Articles 144 and 158.
808 Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(5).

717. Under the Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended, "a commander who, contrary to the provisions of international law on means and methods of warfare, intentionally: (a) . . . leads an attack against [the civilian population or civilians] for the reason of reprisals" is punishable.[809]
718. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[810]
719. Under Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended, "a commander who, contrary to the provisions of international law on means and methods of warfare, intentionally: (a) . . . leads an attack against [the civilian population or civilians] for the reason of reprisals" is punishable.[811]
720. Spain's Penal Code provides for the punishment of "anyone who [in the event of armed conflict] should . . . carry out or order . . . reprisals or violent acts or threats in order to terrify [the civilian population]".[812]

National Case-law
721. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
722. At the CDDH, during a discussion in Committee I on a French proposal regarding a provision on reprisals within AP I, Belarus, opposing the French proposal and referring to a number of international instruments, stated that:

> Any toleration of the possibility of taking reprisals, especially against the civilian population, would be in radical conflict with the spirit and meaning of the Geneva Conventions . . . Furthermore, it would run counter to a number of resolutions of the United Nations General Assembly . . . Thus, any attempt to commit reprisals against the civilian population represented . . . a serious blow against the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I . . . and a whole series of international instruments already adopted.[813]

723. At the CDDH, Belarus stated that "the taking of reprisals against a civilian population must be prohibited".[814]
724. At the CDDH, the representative of Canada, with respect to paragraph 4 of draft Article 46 (which became Article 51 AP I), stated that "his delegation could accept a prohibition on reprisals against civilians or the civilian population".[815]

[809] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 262(2)(a).
[810] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.
[811] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 262(2)(a).
[812] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611.
[813] Belarus, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.47, 29 April 1976, p. 81, § 62.
[814] Belarus, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.48, 30 April 1976, p. 94, § 55.
[815] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.15, 7 February 1975, p. 117, § 2.

725. In 1986, in a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Defence noted that:

> Under [the 1949 Geneva Conventions] . . . reprisals directed against the enemy civilian population or property in enemy controlled areas are permissible. [AP I] goes beyond the Geneva Conventions and prohibits reprisals directed against the enemy civilian population or civilian property under all circumstances.[816]

726. In 1973, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly relative to respect for human rights in times of armed conflict, China stated that civilians should not be the object of reprisals.[817]

727. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[818]

728. In 1972, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on a resolution relative to measures to prevent international terrorism, Denmark stated that "the legitimacy of the use of force in international life did not in itself legitimize the use of certain forms of violence, especially against the innocent. That principle had long been recognized even in the customary law of war." It concluded that:

> Consequently, even in time of war, acts of a terrorist nature were not a legitimate means of combat. Personally, he was convinced that acts such as the taking of hostages, reprisals and murder aimed at innocent persons had never truly served the struggle for independence and fundamental freedoms.[819]

729. In its written statement before the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case before the ICJ in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . civilians . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks."[820]

730. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[821]

[816] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, § 2.
[817] China, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.1450, 29 November 1973, § 32.
[818] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[819] Denmark, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.1364, 17 November 1972, § 15.
[820] Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
[821] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.

731. At the CDDH, Finland stated that "the main intention of paragraph 4 [of draft Article 46 which became Article 51 of AP I] was to extend the protection to the civilian population as a whole. That was desirable."[822]
732. At the CDDH, France voted against Article 46 of draft AP I (now Article 51), stating, however, that it considered that:

> The provisions of paragraphs 4, 5 and 7 were of a type which by their very complexity would seriously hamper the conduct of defensive military operations against an invader and prejudice the exercise of the inherent right of legitimate defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations.[823]

733. The instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, in a part dealing with the "eight fundamental rules of international humanitarian law", state that "reprisal attacks against the civilian population are prohibited".[824]
734. At the CDDH, in its explanations of vote on Article 46 of draft AP I (which became Article 51 AP I), the representative of the GDR stated that his delegation:

> gave particular support to paragraph 4 [which became paragraph 6 of Article 51 of AP I], which contained a clear prohibition on attacks against the civilian population or civilians by way of reprisals. That prohibition, he was convinced, had the same importance, and was of the same absolute nature, as the prohibition of reprisals against prisoners of war, the wounded and the sick, which were already contained in the Geneva Conventions. His delegation would therefore regard any reservation on the prohibition as incompatible with the humanitarian object and purpose of the Protocol.[825]

735. In 1990, during a parliamentary debate on the ratification of the Additional Protocols, a member of the German parliament called the prohibition of reprisals as contained in AP I "newly introduced rules".[826]
736. In 1983, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General, Iran deplored the fact that Iraqi television had announced "a statement by the Iraqi minister of culture and information to the effect that Iraq will bombard Iranian cities in retaliation to Iranian shelling of Iraqi cities".[827]
737. In 1987, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General, Iran stated that:

[822] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.7, 13 March 1974, p. 54, § 29.
[823] France, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 163, § 118.
[824] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1 June 1995, Section 6, § 66.
[825] GDR, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 167, § 137.
[826] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Günter Verheugen, Member of Parliament, 20 September 1990, Plenarprotokoll 11/226, p. 17919.
[827] Iran, Letter dated 5 May 1983 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc.S/15747, 5 May 1983.

Because of the polite acquiescence of the relevant international bodies with regard to Iraqi acts of lawlessness . . . Iran has had to take symbolic retaliatory and preventive measures in response to the Iraqi bombardment of civilian areas. Such measures have been adopted with great reluctance and self-restraint. However, should the Iraqi régime persist in its war crimes . . . the armed forces of . . . Iran will be obliged to inflict unprecedented heavy and deadly blows in retaliation. Clearly, the responsibility for the consequences of such retaliatory and preventive measures lies with the aggressor régime of Iraq.[828]

738. In 1987, after an Iraqi Command had stated that the Iraqi forces were ready for reprisal attacks, Iran stated in a letter to the UN Secretary-General that:

While the high-ranking Iraqi officials have openly declared their criminal policies of attacking our civilian areas, the Islamic Republic of Iran adheres to strict observance of all norms of international humanitarian law and continues to remain committed to refraining from attacks on purely civilian quarter . . . Iran has been forced to resort to retaliatory measures against its desire . . . The number of civilian casualties on both sides is a testament to the degree of self-restraint exercised by . . . Iran in taking retaliatory measures . . . We have been consistently asking the international body to take serious action against those attacking civilians.[829]

739. In 1987, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General, the Iranian Minister of Foreign Affairs stated that:

The reluctant but unavoidable retaliatory fire of our Islamic combatants were directed against economic and industrial quarters of Iraq and with ample prior warning to the civilian occupants of the adjacent areas to leave the scene of our intended attacks. The comparatively very low number of civilian casualties in Iraq is testimony to the humanitarian consideration of . . . Iran even in its retaliatory exercises. Nevertheless . . . Iran, based on its position of principle which is in compliance with the universally recognized norms of international law believes in the necessity for strict observance of the rules of law governing the conduct of hostilities.[830]

740. In 1987, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General, Iran stated with respect to Iraqi warplanes allegedly bombarding villages inhabited by civilians in June 1987 that:

The Government of . . . Iran, faced with an enemy who so easily and frequently resorts to illegal tactics, has in the past found it necessary to take, however reluctantly, limited retaliatory measures as the only method of compelling the rulers of Baghdad to respect their international obligations. Should the régime of Baghdad continue its attacks against civilian centres of . . . Iran, the Iranian Government will once again be left with no option other than retaliation in kind.[831]

[828] Iran, Letter dated 2 February 1987 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/18648, 2 February 1987.
[829] Iran, Letter dated 24 February 1987 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/18721, 25 February 1987.
[830] Iran, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Letter dated 27 February 1987 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/18728, 27 February 1987.
[831] Iran, Letter dated 24 June 1987 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/18945, 24 June 1987.

741. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, during the Iran–Iraq War, Iran did not resort to reprisals against Iraqi cities until Iraqi bombardments of an Iranian city in 1982. The report refers to military communiqués and a message from the commander of the Joint Staff, which stated that Iran did not consider attacking the cities as being "in conformity with the notion of real war", but after three and a half years of Iraqi attacks on civilian objects and cities, Iran had no option but to resort to reprisals against these attacks. The report also notes that in resorting to reprisals, Iran had always issued statements and asked the Iraqi people to evacuate their city. Furthermore, the report states that the real reason for Iran's attacks on Iraqi cities was Iraq's attacks on civilian centres and that, when Iraqi attacks on civilian targets ceased, Iran stopped its reprisals.[832] The report notes that, in February 1984, Iran announced that it had changed its policy and that Iraqi cities would be attacked as a reprisal measure and that only four holy cities were left immune from such action. Virtually all official communiqués reporting the results of these military operations named military and economic objectives, not civilian objects.[833]

742. In 1983, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General in response to Iranian allegations relative to attacks on civilians and civilian objects by Iraq, Iraq recalled its position according to which the bombardment of cities and economic installations had been initiated by Iran in 1980. It also questioned Iran's statement that "although the Iraqi cities are well within the range of our artillery . . . Iran has no intention of retaliation against civilians".[834]

743. In 1987, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General following a meeting between officials of both parties to the Iran–Iraq War, Iraq stated that:

> Iraq has long hesitated before responding to the cruel and deliberate bombardments of Iraqi towns contemptuously carried out by the Iranian régime; over a period of several months that régime had on numerous occasions fired missiles on Baghdad and pounded Basra, Sulaymaniyah and other Iraqi towns with its heavy artillery. Iraq had not retaliated for those acts of aggression, choosing instead to issue repeated warnings that had gone unheeded. [These acts had forced] Iraq to deter the aggressor . . . The following decisions were taken . . . First: Iraq will halt its bombardment of Iranian towns for two weeks as of . . . Iraq will consider itself released from this commitment and will resume its bombings forcefully and on greater scale if the forces of the Iranian régime shell Iraqi towns and residential areas and if the Iranian régime launches a new assault against Iraqi territory and Iraq's international borders. Secondly: This temporary halt in the bombing of towns is contingent upon the position of the Iranian régime with regard to peace; that régime must unequivocally espouse a new position consistent with international law.[835]

[832] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[833] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 1.3.
[834] Iraq, Letter dated 2 May 1983 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc.S/15743, 4 May 1983.
[835] Iraq, Letter dated 18 February 1987 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/18704, 18 February 1987.

744. On the basis of a reply by Iraq's Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that reprisals "must not be directed, in any way, against ... civilians ... but [have] to be confined to purely military targets".[836]

745. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law ... In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal."[837]

746. The Report on the Practice of Lebanon notes that an advisor to the Lebanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs stated in an interview that the protection of civilians was not compatible with the principle of reprisals.[838]

747. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Malaysia stated that "civilian populations ... should not be the object of reprisals" and that "attacks against the civilian population or civilians by way of reprisals are prohibited". It referred to paragraph 7 of UN General Assembly Resolution 2675 (XXV) and Article 51(6) AP I.[839]

748. At the CDDH, the Netherlands, introducing an amendment to draft AP I on behalf of its sponsors (Austria, Egypt, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines and USSR),[840] stated that:

> In fact, reprisals could rarely be confined to civilian objects alone and the infliction of suffering on the civilian population would be virtually inevitable ... The sponsors of the amendment were in favour of extending [the prohibition of reprisals against civilians] to a complete ban on all reprisals against the civilian population and civilian objects alike.[841]

749. At the CDDH, during discussions on the protection of civilian objects, the Netherlands stated that "reprisals on civilian populations were prohibited by international law".[842]

750. In 1973, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly relative to respect for human rights in times of armed conflict, Peru recalled that the General Assembly had reaffirmed in various resolutions that "civilian populations and individual civilians must not be subjected to attacks against their persons as reprisals".[843]

[836] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Reply by the Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, July 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[837] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[838] Report on the Practice of Lebanon, 1998, Chapter 2.9.
[839] Malaysia, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 19 June 1995, p. 18.
[840] Austria, Egypt, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines and USSR, New proposal concerning Article 47 draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/57, 19 March 1974, p. 210.
[841] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.14, 6 February 1975, pp. 113–114, § 26.
[842] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, p. 128, § 8.
[843] Peru, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.1453, 4 December 1973, § 15.

751. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[844]

752. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[845]

753. At the CDDH, in its explanation of vote, the representative of Poland stated that the adopted provision of AP I on the protection of civilians (Article 46 of draft AP I which became Article 51 AP I):

> contained the most important provision of the Protocol, such as the prohibition ... of attacks by way of reprisals. The latter often affected the most innocent persons and those who were least able to defend themselves, and gave rise to a mood of desperation which lead to counter-reprisals and to chain reactions which became increasingly difficult to stop.
>
> His delegation therefore welcomed the clear and categorical prohibition of reprisals in [the adopted provision]. The whole article, with its general rules, would fill some of the gaps in existing rules of a more specific character ...[846]

754. In 1973, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly relative to respect for human rights in times of armed conflict, Romania stated that:

> International humanitarian law should be developed in two main directions. First, there should be increased protection for the civilian population and non-military objectives ... To that end, it was essential to adopt the broadest possible definition of the civilian population and non-military objectives and to take steps to ensure their effective protection. Such steps should include: ... the prohibition ... of reprisals ... and of any other act of terror directed against the civilian population.[847]

755. In 1994, in its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

> During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against ... civilian populations, property and various categories of civilian property which are subject to special protection ... The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties ... A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) ... The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, [844] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

[845] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[846] Poland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 166, §§ 129 and 130.
[847] Romania, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.1451, 1 December 1973, § 8.

paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[848]

756. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited ... The Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit the taking of reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Conventions ... The Conventions do not preclude the taking of reprisals against the enemy's civilian population ... Additional Protocol I prohibits the taking of reprisals against the civilian population (Article 51(6)) ... The application of these provisions would have a greater effect on the retaliatory use of nuclear weapons. Again, however, these provisions are correctly regarded as innovative and thus as inapplicable to the use of nuclear weapons.[849]

757. At the CDDH, the US stated that:

[AP I] had gone far to remove the deterrent of reprisals, for understandable and commendable reasons and in view of past abuses. In the event of massive and continuing violations of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions and [AP I], however, the series of prohibitions on reprisals might prove unworkable. Massive and continuing attacks directed against a nation's civilian population could not be absorbed without a response in kind. By denying the possibility of such response and not offering any workable substitute, [AP I] was unrealistic and, in that respect, could not be expected to withstand the test of future armed conflicts.[850]

758. In 1987, in submitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the US President announced his decision not to ratify AP I, stating, inter alia, that AP I "fails to improve substantially the compliance and verification mechanisms of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and eliminates an important sanction against violations of those Conventions".[851]

759. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that the US did not support "the prohibition on reprisals in article 51 and subsequent articles" and did not consider it part of customary law.[852] On the same occasion, another Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, explaining

[848] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.

[849] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

[850] US, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.58, 9 June 1977, p. 294, § 81.

[851] US, Message from the US President transmitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987.

[852] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 426.

"the position of the United States on current law of war agreements", stated that:

Article 51 of Protocol I prohibits any reprisal attacks against the civilian population, that is, attacks that would otherwise be forbidden but that are in response to the enemy's own violations of the law and are intended to deter future violations. Historically, reciprocity has been the major sanction underlying the laws of war. If article 51 were to come into force for the United States, an enemy could deliberately carry out attacks against friendly civilian populations, and the United States would be legally forbidden to reply in kind. As a practical matter, the United States might, for political or humanitarian reasons, decide in a particular case not to carry out retaliatory or reprisal attacks involving unfriendly civilian populations. To formally renounce even the option of such attacks, however, removes a significant deterrent that presently protects civilians and other war victims on all sides of a conflict.[853]

760. According to an army lawyer who participated in the review of AP I by the US Joint Chiefs of Staff:

Article 51, paragraph 6, and article 52, paragraph 1, of [AP I] prohibit reprisals against the civilian population or civilian objects of an enemy nation, respectively. These provisions are not a codification of customary international law, but, in fact, a reversal of that law. The military review considered whether surrender of these rights would advance the law of war, or threaten the continued respect for the rule of law in war. It was concluded that removal of this legal right placed any further respect for the rule of law by certain nations in jeopardy . . .

The American review recognized the historic pattern for abuse of U.S. and allied prisoners of war by their enemies, and concluded that a broad reservation to the prohibition of reprisals contained in articles 51 and 52 of [AP I] was essential as a legitimate enforcement mechanism in order to ensure respect for the law of war.[854]

761. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

Various provisions of Additional Protocol I contain prohibitions on reprisals against specific types of persons or objects, including the civilian population or individual civilians (Article 51(6)) . . . These are among the new rules established by the Protocol that . . . do not apply to nuclear weapons.[855]

762. According to the Report on US Practice, during the review of AP I by the US government prior to the decision on whether to seek its ratification, the discussion of the reprisal issue shifted from the need to deter attacks on civilians to the need to protect US POWs by enforcing GC III.[856]

[853] US, Remarks of Judge Abraham D. Sofaer, Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, 22 January 1987, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 469.

[854] W. Hays Parks, "Air War and the Law of War", Air Force Law Review, Vol. 32, 1990, pp. 94 and 97.

[855] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

[856] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

763. In 1986, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council deplored "the violation of international humanitarian law and other laws of armed conflict" and expressed its deepening concern over the widening of the conflict [between Iran and Iraq] through the escalation of attacks on purely civilian targets".[857]

764. In 1988, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council strongly deplored "the escalation of hostilities between these two countries [Iran and Iraq], particularly the attacks against civilian targets and cities". The members of the Security Council also insisted that "Iran and Iraq immediately cease all such attacks and desist forthwith from all acts that lead to the escalation of the conflict".[858]

765. General Assembly Resolution 2444 (XXIII) adopted in 1968 affirmed Resolution XXVIII of the 20th International Conference of the Red Cross and the basic humanitarian principle applicable in all armed conflicts laid down therein that "it is prohibited to launch attacks against the civilian population as such".[859] This phrase was interpreted by some government experts at the CE (1971) as including a prohibition of reprisals against the civilian population.[860]

766. In Resolution 2675 (XXV) on basic principles for the protection of civilian populations in armed conflicts, unanimously adopted in 1970, the UN General Assembly stated that "civilian populations, or individual members thereof, should not be the object of reprisals, forcible transfers or other assaults on their integrity".[861]

767. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[862]

768. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on assistance to Somalia in the field of human rights, the UN Commission on Human Rights deplored "continued

[857] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PV.2730, 22 December 1986, p. 3.
[858] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PV.2798, 16 March 1988, p. 2.
[859] UN General Assembly, Res. 2444 (XXIII), 19 December 1968, § 1(b).
[860] ICRC, Protection of the Civilian Population against the Dangers of Hostilities, Documents submitted to the First Session of the Conference of Government Experts, Geneva, 24 May–12 June 1971, Vol. III, January 1971, p. 38.
[861] UN General Assembly, Res. 2675 (XXV), 9 December 1970, § 7.
[862] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.

attacks, acts of reprisal, abductions and other acts of violence committed against United Nations personnel, personnel of other humanitarian organizations and non-governmental organizations and representatives of the international media in Somalia, sometimes resulting in serious injury or death".[863]

769. In 1984, in a message addressed to the Presidents of Iran and of Iraq, the UN Secretary-General stated that he:

> was profoundly distressed on learning of the heavy civilian casualties caused by the aerial attack on the town of Banesh on 5 June 1984 . . . and the retaliatory and counter-retaliatory attacks that followed on towns in Iran and Iraq.
>
> Deliberate military attacks on civilian areas cannot be condoned by the international community. The initiation of such attacks in the past, and the reprisals and counter-reprisals they provoke, have resulted in mounting loss of life and suffering to innocent and defenceless civilian populations. It is imperative that this immediately cease.[864]

770. In 1993, in a periodic report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that:

> The Special Rapporteur also received allegations of individual murders inspired by ethnic revenge. One concerned Radislav and Marina Komjenac, two elderly civilians – said to be Bosnian Serbs – who were taken from their homes in Sarajevo and summarily executed on 26 June 1993. The killings appear to have been in retaliation for a mortar attack which killed seven Muslim civilians in the old town. Government militia were alleged to be responsible. The Special Rapporteur wrote to the Government on 14 August 1993 expressing concern about the report and asking what steps had been taken to punish the perpetrators.[865]

The Special Rapporteur also noted that in the Serb Krajina, Croats "have frequently been the victims of retaliations for actions of the Croatian armed forces".[866]

771. In 1994, in an interim report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that "in July 1994, some 50 civilians were reportedly killed in an act of revenge for the murder of a prominent commander".[867]

772. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN

[863] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/56, 3 March 1995, preamble.

[864] UN Secretary-General, Message dated 9 June 1984 to the Presidents of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Republic of Iraq, UN Doc. S/16611, 11 June 1984.

[865] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Fifth periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/47, 17 November 1993, § 32.

[866] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Fifth periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/47, 17 November 1993, § 145.

[867] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan, Interim report, UN Doc. A/49/650, 8 November 1994, § 75.

Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Article 51(6) AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (e) Civilians."[868] It further stated that:

In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[869]

Other International Organisations
773. No practice was found.

International Conferences
774. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

775. In the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) in 1995, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that UN General Assembly Resolution 2444 (XXIII) of 1968 and Resolution 2675 (XXV) of 1970 were "declaratory of the principles of customary international law regarding the protection of civilian populations and property in armed conflicts of any kind".[870]
776. In the review of the indictment in the Martić case in 1996 in which the accused was held accountable for having knowingly and wilfully ordered the shelling of Zagreb in May 1995, the ICTY Trial Chamber I held that:

> 15. . . . Does the fact that the attack was carried out as a reprisal reverse the illegality of the attack? The prohibition against attacking the civilian population as such as well as individual civilians must be respected in all circumstances regardless of the behaviour of the other party. The opinion of the great majority of legal authorities permits the Trial Chamber to assert that no circumstances would legitimise an attack against civilians even if it were a response proportionate to a similar violation perpetrated by the other party. The exclusion of the application of the principle of reprisals in the case of such fundamental humanitarian norms is confirmed by Article 1 Common to all Geneva Conventions. Under this provision, the High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and ensure respect for the Conventions in all circumstances, even when the behaviour of the other party might be considered wrongful. The [ICJ] considered that this obligation does not derive only from the Geneva Conventions themselves but also from the general principles of humanitarian law . . .

[868] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[869] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[870] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 112.

16. The prohibition on reprisals against the civilian population or individual civilians which is applicable to all armed conflicts, is reinforced by the texts of various instruments. General Assembly resolution 2675, underscoring the need for measures to ensure better protection of human rights in armed conflicts of all types, posits that "civilian populations, or individual members thereof, should not be the object of reprisals". Furthermore, Article 51(6) of Protocol I . . . states an unqualified prohibition because "in all circumstances, attacks against the civilian population or civilians by way of reprisals are prohibited" . . .
17. Therefore, the rule which states that reprisals against the civilian population as such, or individual civilians, are prohibited in all circumstances, even when confronted by wrongful behaviour of the other party, is an integral part of customary international law and must be respected in all armed conflicts.[871]

777. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

527. . . . With regard to civilians in combat zones, reprisals against them are prohibited by Article 51(6) of the First Additional Protocol of 1977 . . . The question nevertheless arises as to whether these provisions, assuming that they were not declaratory of customary international law, have subsequently been transformed into general rules of international law. In other words, are those States which have not ratified the First Protocol . . . nevertheless bound by general rules having the same purport as those two provisions? Admittedly, there does not seem to have emerged recently a body of State practice consistently supporting the proposition that one of the elements of custom, namely usus or diuturnitas has taken shape. This is however an area where opinio iuris sive necessitatis may play a much greater role than usus, as a result of the . . . Martens Clause. In the light of the way States and courts have implemented it, this Clause clearly shows that principles of international humanitarian law may emerge through a customary process under the pressure of the demands of humanity or the dictates of public conscience, even where State practice is scant or inconsistent. The other element, in the form of opinio necessitatis, crystallising as a result of the imperatives of humanity or public conscience, may turn out to be the decisive element heralding the emergence of a general rule or principle of humanitarian law.
528. The question of reprisals against civilians is a case in point. It cannot be denied that reprisals against civilians are inherently a barbarous means of seeking compliance with international law. The most blatant reason for the universal revulsion that usually accompanies reprisals is that they may not only be arbitrary but are also not directed specifically at the individual authors of the initial violation. Reprisals typically are taken in situations where the individuals personally responsible for the breach are either unknown or out of reach. These retaliatory measures are aimed instead at other more vulnerable individuals or groups. They are individuals or groups who may not even have any degree of solidarity with the presumed authors of the initial violation; they may share with them only the links of nationality and allegiance to the same rulers.

[871] ICTY, Martić case, Review of the Indictment, 8 March 1996, §§ 15–17.

529. In addition, the reprisal killing of innocent persons, more or less chosen at random, without any requirement of guilt or any form of trial, can safely be characterized as a blatant infringement of the most fundamental principles of human rights. It is difficult to deny that a slow but profound transformation of humanitarian law under the pervasive influence of human rights has occurred. As a result belligerent reprisals against civilians and fundamental rights of human beings are absolutely inconsistent legal concepts. This trend towards the humanisation of armed conflict is amongst other things confirmed by the works of the United Nations International Law Commission on State Responsibility . . .
530. It should be added that while reprisals could have had a modicum of justification in the past, when they constituted practically the only effective means of compelling the enemy to abandon unlawful acts of warfare and to comply in future with international law, at present they can no longer be justified in this manner . . .
531. Due to the pressure exerted by the requirements of humanity and the dictates of public conscience, a customary rule of international law has emerged on the matter under discussion.[872]

Considering practice of States, international organisations, the ILC and ICRC, as well as previous practice of the ICTY, the Trial Chamber then stated that:

The aforementioned elements seem to support the contention that the demands of humanity and the dictates of public conscience, as manifested in opinio necessitatis, have by now brought about the formation of a customary rule also binding upon those few States that at some stage did not intend to exclude the abstract legal possibility of resorting to the reprisals under discussion.[873]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

778. In a press release issued in 1983 concerning the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC stressed that "civilians must not be the object of attack, nor of reprisals".[874]
779. In a press release issued in 1984 concerning the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC, after the bombardment of the Iranian town of Baneh "during which hundreds of civilians were killed or injured", stated that "this murderous raid with its tragic consequences has provoked a spiral of reprisals and counter-reprisals against the inhabitants of Iraqi and Iranian towns". The ICRC called upon "Iran and Iraq to cease immediately their current bombardment of defenceless civilians".[875]
780. In a communication to the press in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC reminded all those taking active part in the violence that "reprisals against the civilian population" are absolutely and unconditionally prohibited.[876]

[872] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, §§ 527–531.
[873] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 533.
[874] ICRC, Press Release No. 1479, Iran/Iraq: ICRC appeals to belligerents, 15 December 1983.
[875] ICRC, Press Release No. 1489, Bombing of Iraqi and Iranian Cities, 7 June 1984.
[876] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.

VI. Other Practice

781. In 1990, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group denounced reprisals against the civilian population by soldiers and militiamen of a State.[877]

782. Oppenheim states that:

> In the War of 1914–1918 the illegality, except by way of reprisals, of aerial bombardment directed exclusively against the civilian population for the purpose of terrorisation or otherwise seems to have been generally admitted by the belligerents, – although this fact did not actually prevent attacks on centres of civilian population in the form either of reprisals or of attack against military objectives situated therein.[878]

D. Reprisals against Protected Objects

Civilian objects in general

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

783. Article 33, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "reprisals against protected persons and their property are prohibited".

784. Article 52(1) AP I provides that "civilian objects shall not be the object of attack or of reprisals. Civilian objects are all objects which are not military objectives." Article 52 AP I was adopted by 79 votes in favour, 0 against and 7 abstentions.[879]

785. Upon ratification of AP I and AP II, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[880]

786. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany stated that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I and in particular its Articles 51 and 52 with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[881]

[877] ICRC archive document.
[878] Lassa Oppenheim, International Law. A Treatise, Vol. II, Disputes, War and Neutrality, Sixth edition, revised, Hersch Lauterpacht (ed.), Longmans, Green and Co., London/New York/Toronto, 1944, p. 414, § 214*ea*.
[879] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 168.
[880] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[881] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.

787. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I and in particular its Articles 51 and 52 with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[882]
788. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that:

> The obligations of Articles 51 and 55 are accepted on the basis that any adverse party against which the United Kingdom might be engaged will itself scrupulously observe those obligations. If an adverse party makes serious and deliberate attacks, in violation of Article 51 or Article 52 against the civilian population or civilians or against civilian objects, or, in violation of Articles 53, 54 and 55, on objects or items protected by those Articles, the United Kingdom will regard itself as entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by the Articles in question to the extent that it considers such measures necessary for the sole purpose of compelling the adverse party to cease committing violations under those Articles, but only after formal warning to the adverse party requiring cessation of the violations has been disregarded and then only after a decision taken at the highest level of government. Any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom will not be disproportionate to the violations giving rise thereto and will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949 nor will such measures be continued after the violations have ceased. The United Kingdom will notify the Protecting Powers of any such formal warning given to an adverse party, and if that warning has been disregarded, of any measures taken as a result.[883]

789. Article 3(7) of the 1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW provides that "it is prohibited in all circumstances to direct [mines, booby-traps and other devices], either in offence, defence or by way of reprisals, against . . . civilian objects".

Other Instruments
790. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.
791. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.
792. Section 5.6 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against civilians or civilian objects".
793. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) Obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals."

[882] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.
[883] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

794. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969), in the chapter dealing with the "Protection of civilian persons in times of war", which contains "provisions common to the territories of the belligerent parties and occupied territories", states that "measures of reprisal with respect to protected persons and their property remain equally prohibited".[884]

795. Argentina's Regulation for the Treatment of POWs states that "reprisals against the property of innocent interned [civilians] are prohibited".[885]

796. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989), in a part dealing with the "Treatment given to protected persons", which contains "provisions common to the territories of the belligerent parties and occupied territories", refers, inter alia, to Article 33 GC IV and provides that "remain absolutely prohibited: ... measures of reprisal against protected persons and their objects".[886] In a part dealing with "property of a civilian character", the manual states that "property of civilian character cannot be made the object of ... reprisals".[887]

797. Australia's Commanders' Guide, referring, inter alia, to Articles 51–56 AP I, states that "protected persons, such as ... civilians ... as well as protected buildings and facilities should not be the subject of reprisals".[888]

798. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "reprisals are prohibited against ... civilian objects".[889]

799. Belgium's Law of War Manual, citing several examples of jurisprudence and referring to Articles 4 and 33 GC IV, states that "the persons protected by the Geneva Conventions (... civilians) may not be made the object of reprisals. Therefore, [reprisals] may be directed only against combatants, non-protected property and a restricted group of non-protected civilians."[890]

800. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers, in the part containing exercises (questions and answers) for the training of soldiers, gives a negative response to the question as to whether civilian property may be destroyed in reprisal.[891]

801. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: ... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[892] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: ... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[893]

884 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.012(3).
885 Argentina, Regulation for the Treatment of POWs (1985), § 4.02(5).
886 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.29(5).
887 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.45.
888 Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212; see also Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.
889 Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 920.
890 Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 36.
891 Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 86.
892 Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
893 Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.

802. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[894]

803. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[895]

804. Canada's LOAC Manual, in a part dealing with targeting, provides that "reprisals against civilians and civilian objects are prohibited".[896] It further provides that "civil defence buildings and materiel, as well as shelters provided for the civilian population, are considered 'civilian objects' and shall not be attacked or subjected to reprisals".[897] In a chapter entitled "Treatment of civilians in the hands of a party to the conflict or an occupying power" and, more specifically, in a section containing "provisions common to the territories of the parties to the conflict and to occupied territories", the manual refers to GC IV and states that "the following are expressly prohibited: . . . the taking of reprisals against protected persons and their property".[898] In the part dealing with enforcement measures, the manual also states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: . . . f. civilian objects".[899]

805. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[900]

806. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "civilian persons and objects". It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[901]

807. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic, under a provision entitled "No theft or arson against civilian property", states that "the Geneva Convention prohibits reprisals against civilians for acts of enemy soldiers".[902]

808. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "reprisals may be taken against enemy armed forces, enemy civilians other than those in occupied territory, and enemy property".[903] However, it also states that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: . . . 3. Civilians in occupied territory."[904] The manual further provides that "interned civilians . . . may not be subjected to collective punishment or acts of reprisal".[905]

[894] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[895] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[896] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-5, § 39.
[897] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-10, § 95.
[898] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-4, § 33.
[899] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[900] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[901] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[902] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.
[903] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.
[904] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.2.
[905] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.9.

809. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "by virtue of international conventions regularly ratified or approved: . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat] . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[906]

810. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits . . . the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: . . . to reprisals against non-military objectives".[907] It further refers, inter alia, to Articles 20 and 51–56 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . civilian property".[908]

811. Germany's Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with reprisals, referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 51 AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: . . . civilians . . . private property of civilians on occupied territory and of enemy foreigners on friendly territory".[909] Referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 20 and 51 AP I, the manual further states that "reprisals against the civilian population and its property . . . are prohibited".[910] In a chapter entitled "Belligerent occupation", the manual, referring to Articles 33 GC IV and 20 and 51 AP I, states that "reprisals against civilians and their property are prohibited".[911]

812. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against . . . the private property of civilians in occupied territories".[912]

813. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "civilian persons and objects". It further provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[913]

814. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[914]

815. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals against, inter alia, "protected civilian persons" and "protected persons and property", states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[915]

816. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[916] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . civilians."[917]

817. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[918]

[906] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 10 bis (2).
[907] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[908] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[909] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[910] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 507.
[911] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 535.
[912] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[913] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[914] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).
[915] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.
[916] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[917] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[918] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.

818. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[919]
819. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring to, inter alia, Article 52 AP I, states that "no reprisals may be undertaken against civilian property".[920]
820. New Zealand's Military Manual, in the chapter dealing with civilians and referring to Articles 32–34 GC IV, states that "the following are . . . prohibited: . . . the taking of reprisals against protected persons and their property".[921] In the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring to Article 52(1) AP I, the manual further states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited . . . civilian objects".[922]
821. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "reprisals against the persons and property of . . . protected civilians are prohibited".[923]
822. Spain's LOAC Manual lists among the persons against whom the taking of reprisals is prohibited "civilian persons and objects". It refers, however, to Article 46 GC I (relative to the prohibition of reprisals against the wounded, the sick and medical personnel protected under GC I).[924] It also refers to Article 52 AP I with regard to the prohibition of reprisals against cultural objects. In another provision, the manual, also referring to Article 52 AP I, states that "property of a civilian character will not be made the object of attacks nor of reprisals".[925]
823. Sweden's IHL Manual, referring to Article 52 AP I, states that:

> The basic rule in Article 52 is that civilian objects and civilian property may not constitute objectives for attack or be subjected to reprisals. The article does not represent any new thinking: but is, rather, a clarification of humanitarian principles established in older conventions."[926]

While noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, the manual states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[927]

[919] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[920] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-6, see also p. V-5.
[921] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1116(2)(d).
[922] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2)(f).
[923] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(e).
[924] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[925] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.3.b.(1).
[926] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section § 3.2.1.5, p. 53.
[927] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.

Referring to Article 33 GC IV, the manual further states that "protected persons may not be punished for actions they have not themselves performed. Collective punishment of a whole group is also prohibited. Also, the occupying power may not . . . destroy civilian property in reprisal for some action directed against the occupying power."[928]

824. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[929] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[930]

825. The UK Military Manual, in a chapter dealing with the "treatment of enemy alien civilians" and referring to Articles 32–34 GC IV, states that "the following are prohibited: . . . the taking of reprisals against protected persons and their property".[931] In the chapter dealing with "the occupation of enemy territory", the manual, referring to Articles 33 and 34 GC IV, states that "[GC IV] provides . . . that 'Reprisals against protected persons and their property are prohibited'".[932] In the chapter dealing with the "treatment of enemy property", the manual further states that:

> The custom of war formerly permitted as an act of reprisal the destruction, by burning or otherwise, of a house whose inmates, though not possessing the rights of combatants, have fired on enemy troops. However, this practice is no longer lawful. [Article 33 GC IV] prohibits reprisals against protected persons and their property.[933]

Moreover, the manual, in the part dealing with reprisals, states that "reprisals against . . . civilian protected persons and their property in occupied territory and in the belligerent's own territory, are . . . prohibited".[934] In a footnote relating to this provision, the manual, referring to Articles 4 and 33 GC IV, notes that "the effect of this rule is that reprisals are unlawful against all persons except enemy combatants and those few classes of civilians who are not protected persons".[935]

826. The UK LOAC Manual, in a part dealing with the protection of civilians, states that "it is forbidden: . . . to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[936] It further states that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . enemy civilians in territory controlled by a belligerent".[937] However, the manual also states that "the United Kingdom reserves the right to take proportionate reprisals against an enemy's civilian population or civilian

[928] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[929] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[930] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[931] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 42.
[932] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 554.
[933] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 596.
[934] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644.
[935] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644, footnote 2.
[936] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 14, § 5(e).
[937] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.

objects where the enemy has attacked our own civilians or civilian objects in violation of [AP I]".[938]

827. The US Field Manual, referring to Articles 13 GC III and 33 GC IV, stipulates that "reprisals against the persons or property of prisoners of war, including the wounded and sick, and protected civilians are forbidden".[939]

828. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Article 33 GC IV, provides that "no protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited. Reprisals against protected persons and their property are prohibited."[940] The Pamphlet further provides that:

> Reprisals are forbidden, under all circumstances, against the persons or objects referenced above in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. At least some, and possibly all, of these prohibitions are regarded as customary law and are binding regardless of whether the adversary is a party to the Geneva Conventions. For definitions as to persons or objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, applicable articles of those documents must be consulted.[941]

829. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", lists a number of persons and objects protected under the Geneva Conventions against whom reprisals are prohibited. It adds, however, that "a Protocol to the 1949 Geneva Conventions would expand this list to include all civilians and civilian property on land... The United States signed this Protocol in 1977, but has not yet ratified it. Consult the Staff Judge Advocate for further guidance."[942]

830. The US Soldier's Manual, in the part which deals with the treatment of civilians and private property, states that "the Geneva Conventions forbid retaliating against civilians for the actions of enemy soldiers".[943]

831. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that:

> The following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity:
>
> ...
>
> m. Reprisals against persons or property protected by the Geneva Conventions, to include the wounded, sick, or shipwrecked, prisoners of war, detained personnel, civilians [and] their property.[944]

832. The US Naval Handbook provides that "reprisals may be taken against enemy armed forces, enemy civilians other than those in occupied territory, and enemy property".[945] It states, however, that "reprisals are forbidden

[938] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 17.
[939] US, Field Manual (1956), § 497(c).
[940] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(1). [941] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).
[942] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
[943] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 23. [944] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.
[945] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.

to be taken against: 1. . . . interned civilians . . . 3. Civilians in occupied territory."[946]

833. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook, referring to Article 33 GC IV, states that "also immune from reprisals under the Geneva Conventions are the property of such inhabitants [i.e. of occupied territory], enemy civilians in a belligerent's own territory, and the property of such civilians".[947]

834. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: . . . civilian persons and their property".[948]

National Legislation

835. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who carries out reprisals or orders the carrying out of reprisals against civilian objects, causing their destruction, provided that the said acts do not offer a definite military advantage in the circumstances ruling at the time, and that the said objects do not make an effective contribution to the adversary's military action.[949]

836. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning civilian persons, medical organisations and their personnel, civilian objectives, civilian property . . . During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[950]

837. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[951]

838. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended states that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[952]

839. Spain's Penal Code provides that:

[946] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.2.
[947] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.1, footnote 43.
[948] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(1).
[949] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 293, introducing a new Article 877(2) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[950] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
[951] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[952] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.

[Shall be punished] whoever, in the event of an armed conflict: . . . attacks or makes the object of reprisals or the object of hostilities civilian objects of the adverse party, causing extensive destruction, provided that the said acts do not offer a definite military advantage in the circumstances of the case or that the said objects do not make an effective contribution to the adverse party's military effort.[953]

National Case-law

840. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

841. In 1991, in briefing notes prepared for a debate on the Geneva Convention Amendment Bill in Australia's House of Representatives, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade expressed the view that:

The extension in [AP I of the prohibition of reprisals] is to civilian, cultural and other non-military objects. It was felt that an Australian reservation on this point, while leaving the way open for us to use such reprisals, would not only allow Australia to be portrayed as barbaric but also leave such Australian objects open to attack in enemy reprisals, in return for very little military advantage. This is now a settled Australian Defence Force view.[954]

842. The Report on the Practice of Australia expressly names open towns, undefended areas, demilitarised zones and humanitarian corridors among the protected objects against which reprisals are prohibited.[955]

843. At the CDDH, Bulgaria stated that "his delegation favoured [an] amendment which sought to prohibit reprisals against civilian objects".[956]

844. At the CDDH, the representative of Canada, with respect to paragraph 4 of draft Article 46 (which became Article 51 AP I), stated that:

His delegation did not wish an unenforceable provision to be adopted, disrespect for which would lead to disrespect for the whole Protocol. His delegation could accept a prohibition on reprisals against civilians or the civilian population, but not on reprisals against civilian objects.[957]

845. At the CDDH, Canada, reverting to a proposed amendment on the prohibition of reprisals against protected objects (sponsored by Egypt, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco, Qatar, Syria, United Arab Emirates and Yemen),[958] stated that:

[953] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 613(1)(b).
[954] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Minute on the Geneva Protocols, 13 February 1991, File 1710/10/3/1, § 5.
[955] Report on the Practice of Australia, 1998, Chapter 2.9.
[956] Bulgaria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, p. 134, § 31.
[957] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.7, 13 March 1974, p. 55, § 38.
[958] Egypt, Democratic Yemen, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco, Qatar, Syria, United Arab Emirates and Yemen, New proposal concerning Article 47 draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/63, 19 March 1974, p. 211.

If it attempted to provide for a total prohibition of reprisals, the Committee would be drawing up a theoretically ideal document at the humanitarian level, but that such a prohibition would be based on the assumption that the Party or State in question would not retaliate, and it was doubtful whether such would be the case; there had been in fact abuses, not only on the pretext of reprisals, but also on the pretext of the law of war. The question was whether an attempt should be made to curb the victim's desire for vengeance by formulating a rule, or whether that aspect could be left undecided. He thought it was better to lay down a rule.[959]

846. In 1986, in a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Foreign Affairs noted that:

Under [the 1949 Geneva Conventions] . . . reprisals directed against the enemy civilian population or property in enemy controlled areas are permissible. [AP I] goes beyond the Geneva Conventions and prohibits reprisals directed against . . . civilian property under all circumstances.[960]

847. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[961]

848. In its written statement before the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case before the ICJ in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . civilians . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks."[962]

849. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[963]

850. At the CDDH, Finland stated that:

The main intention of paragraph 4 [of draft Article 46 which became Article 51 of AP I] was to extend the protection to the civilian population as a whole. That was desirable, but it was not sufficient. Civilian objects should also be protected from reprisals everywhere, even in the field of hostilities.[964]

[959] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.7, 13 March 1974, p. 55, § 38.
[960] Canada, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, § 2.
[961] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[962] Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
[963] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
[964] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.7, 13 March 1974, p. 54, § 29.

851. At the CDDH, Finland, with regard to amendments made by other States concerning the prohibition of reprisals, stated that it "accepted [those amendments] which would prohibit reprisals against civilian objects".[965]
852. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "3. . . . The measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[966]
853. At the CDDH, during discussions on amendments made by other States concerning the prohibition of reprisals against civilian objects, the GDR stated that it "supported . . . the amendments concerning reprisals".[967]
854. In 1990, during a parliamentary debate on the ratification of the Additional Protocols, a member of the German parliament called the prohibition of reprisals as contained in AP I "newly introduced rules".[968]
855. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, during the Iran–Iraq War, Iranian authorities, including the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the parliament, condemned Iraqi attacks on civilian objects, which Iran always regarded as war crimes. The report points out that Iran always insisted that war must be limited to battlefronts and that it had no intention of attacking civilian objects. When Iraq accused Iran of bombarding civilian targets, Iranian military communiqués denied these allegations and claimed that Iranian attacks were limited to military or economic facilities.[969]
856. On the basis of a reply by Iraq's Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that reprisals "must not be directed, in any way, against . . . civilian objects, but [have] to be confined to purely military targets".[970]
857. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF does not condone nor conduct reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Geneva Conventions.[971]
858. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law . . . In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal".[972]
859. At the CDDH, the Netherlands, introducing an amendment to draft AP I which read that "attacks against civilian objects by way of reprisals are [965] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.15, 7 February 1975, p. 118, § 7.

[966] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.
[967] GDR, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, p. 130, § 19.
[968] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Günter Verheugen, Member of Parliament, 20 September 1990, Plenarprotokoll 11/226, p. 17919.
[969] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 1.3.
[970] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Reply by the Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, July 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[971] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[972] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

prohibited" on behalf of its sponsors (Austria, Egypt, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, USSR),[973] stated that:

In fact, reprisals could rarely be confined to civilian objects alone and the infliction of suffering on the civilian population would be virtually inevitable . . . The sponsors of the amendment were in favour of extending [the prohibition of reprisals against civilians] to a complete ban on all reprisals against the civilian population and civilian objects alike.[974]

860. At the CDDH, the Netherlands, during discussions on the protection of civilian objects, stated that "reprisals on civilian populations were prohibited by international law".[975]

861. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[976]

862. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[977]

863. At the CDDH, Poland, referring to an amendment on the prohibition of attacks against civilian objects by way of reprisals sponsored by other States, stated that it supported the amendment and pointed out that "it was impossible to carry out reprisals against civilian objects without injuring civilians".[978]

864. In 1994, in its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against . . . civilian populations, property and various categories of civilian property which are subject to special protection . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties . . . A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) . . . The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello,

[973] Austria, Egypt, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines and USSR, New proposal concerning Article 47 draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/57, 19 March 1974, p. 210.

[974] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.14, 6 February 1975, pp. 113–114, § 26.

[975] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, p. 128, § 8.

[976] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

[977] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.

[978] Poland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, p. 129, § 15.

it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[979]

865. At the CDDH, Sweden, with respect to amendments made by other States concerning the prohibition of attacks against civilian objects by way of reprisals, stated that it was "in favour of such a ban".[980]

866. At the CDDH, the UK, with respect to an amendment concerning the protection of civilian objects, stated that:

> The amendment proposed no ban on reprisals, the intention being to leave intact the existing ban on reprisals against civilian objects in occupied territory which were contained in the [1907 HR] and [GC IV], and to retain the right of reprisal against such objects in enemy territory subject to the existing restraints in customary law, which were considerable. His delegation shared the misgivings expressed by the representative of Canada concerning the proposed ban on reprisals and agreed that such bans would have to be conditional on the improvement of the means of enforcement and supervision of the provisions on protection of the civilian population ... If a ban was introduced, it should not, in his view, be absolute but qualified, so that the right should be retained, subject to strict legal restraint on its exercise, in the circumstances where a Party to the conflict was subjected to persistent attacks on its own civilians and civilian objects which did not cease despite repeated protests. In such circumstances a Party to the conflict would undoubtedly take reprisal measures.[981]

867. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited ... The Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit the taking of reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Conventions ... The Conventions do not preclude the taking of reprisals against ... civilian objects in enemy territory. Additional Protocol I prohibits the taking of reprisals against ... civilian objects (Article 52(1)) ... The application of these provisions would have a greater effect on the retaliatory use of nuclear weapons. Again, however, these provisions are correctly regarded as innovative and thus as inapplicable to the use of nuclear weapons.[982]

868. In 1987, in submitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the US President announced his decision not to ratify AP I, stating, inter alia, that AP I "fails to improve substantially the compliance and

[979] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.
[980] Sweden, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.15, 7 February 1975, p. 125, § 39.
[981] UK, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, pp. 139–140, §§ 57–58.
[982] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

verification mechanisms of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and eliminates an important sanction against violations of those Conventions".[983]

869. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that the US did not support "the prohibition on reprisals in article 51 AP I and subsequent articles" and did not consider it part of customary law.[984]

870. According to an army lawyer who participated in the review of AP I by the US Joint Chiefs of Staff:

> Article 51, paragraph 6, and article 52, paragraph 1, of [AP I] prohibit reprisals against the civilian population or civilian objects of en enemy nation, respectively. These provisions are not a codification of customary international law, but, in fact, a reversal of that law. The military review considered whether surrender of these rights would advance the law of war, or threaten the continued respect for the rule of law in war. It was concluded that removal of this legal right placed any further respect for the rule of law by certain nations in jeopardy . . .
>
> The American review recognized the historic pattern for abuse of U.S. and allied prisoners of war by their enemies, and concluded that a broad reservation to the prohibition of reprisals contained in articles 51 and 52 of [AP I] was essential as a legitimate enforcement mechanism in order to ensure respect for the law of war.[985]

871. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

> Various provisions of Additional Protocol I contain prohibitions on reprisals against specific types of persons or objects, including . . . civilian objects (Article 52(1)) . . . These are among the new rules established by the Protocol that . . . do not apply to nuclear weapons.[986]

872. At the CDDH, the SFRY stated that "reprisals against civilian objects . . . should be prohibited".[987]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

873. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting

[983] US, Message from the US President transmitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987.

[984] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 426.

[985] W. Hays Parks, Air War and the Law of War, Air Force Law Review, Vol. 32, No. 1, 1990, pp. 94 and 97.

[986] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

[987] SFRY, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, p. 127, § 5.

reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[988]

874. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Article 52(1) AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (f) Civilian objects."[989] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[990]

Other International Organisations

875. No practice was found.

International Conferences

876. The Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in 2001 adopted a declaration calling upon "the Occupying Power [in the conflict between Israel and Palestinians] to refrain from perpetrating any other violation of [GC IV], in particular reprisals against protected persons and their property".[991]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

877. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "reprisals against civilian objects are outlawed by Article 52(1) of [AP I]".[992]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

878. No practice was found.

[988] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[989] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[990] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[991] Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, Declaration, § 14.
[992] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 527.

VI. Other Practice

879. No practice was found.

Medical objects

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

880. Article 46 GC I provides that "reprisals against the . . . buildings or equipment protected by the Convention are prohibited".

881. Article 47 GC II provides that "reprisals against . . . the vessels or the equipment protected by the Convention are prohibited".

882. Article 20 AP I, which refers, inter alia, to Article 12 AP I dealing with the protection of medical units, provides that "reprisals against the persons and objects protected by this Part are prohibited". Article 20 AP I was adopted by consensus.[993]

883. Upon ratification of the Additional Protocols, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[994]

884. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany declared that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[995]

885. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[996]

886. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that in the event of violations of Articles 51–55 AP I by the adversary, the UK would regard itself entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by these Articles, noting, however, that "any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom . . . will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[997]

[993] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[994] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[995] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.
[996] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.
[997] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

Other Instruments

887. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

888. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

889. Section 9.6 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, which deals under Section 9.3 and 9.5 with the protection of "medical establishments or mobile medical units" and "medical equipment [and] mobile medical units", states that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against . . . establishments and equipment protected under this section".

890. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) Obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals."

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

891. Australia's Commanders' Guide, referring, inter alia, to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and Article 20 AP I, states that "protected buildings and facilities should not be the subject of reprisals".[998]

892. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "reprisals against . . . medical personnel, buildings and equipment are forbidden".[999] In another provision, the manual further states that "protected buildings and facilities . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[1000]

893. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1001] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1002]

894. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1003]

895. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1004]

[998] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[999] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 985.
[1000] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.
[1001] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1002] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1003] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[1004] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.

896. Canada's LOAC Manual, in the part dealing with enforcement measures, states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: a. the . . . medical buildings or equipment protected by G[C] I; b. the . . . vessels and equipment protected by G[C] II".[1005]
897. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[1006]
898. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1007]
899. Ecuador's Naval Manual states that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: . . . 4. Hospitals and medical facilities . . . and equipment, including [hospital] ships, hospitals, [medical] aircraft and medical vehicles."[1008]
900. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "by virtue of international conventions regularly ratified or approved: . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat] . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1009]
901. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits . . . the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: . . . to reprisals against non-military objectives".[1010] The manual refers, inter alia, to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . the property particularly protected".[1011]
902. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: . . . medical facilities and supplies".[1012]
903. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against . . . medical establishments and material".[1013]
904. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected persons and objects".[1014]
905. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[1015]
906. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals against, inter alia, "protected persons, medical buildings and material", states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the

[1005] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[1006] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[1007] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[1008] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.3.2.
[1009] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 10 bis (2).
[1010] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[1011] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[1012] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[1013] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[1014] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[1015] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).

obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[1016]

907. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[1017] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . medical . . . buildings and equipment."[1018]

908. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[1019]

909. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1020]

910. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with the protection of the wounded and sick and referring to Article 20 AP I, states that "measures of reprisal are prohibited against . . . medical units and medical means of transportation, in short against all protected persons and objects".[1021]

911. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited. a) the . . . buildings or equipment protected by [Article 46 GC I]; b) the . . . vessels and equipment protected by [Article 47 GC II]".[1022]

912. Nigeria's Military Manual, in a part dealing with GC I, states that reprisals "are prohibited 'against the . . . buildings or equipment protected by the convention' (Art. 46)".[1023]

913. Spain's LOAC Manual, referring to Articles 46 GC I, 47 GC II and 20 AP I, lists among the persons and objects against whom/which the taking of reprisals is prohibited "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, as well as specially protected persons and property".[1024]

914. Sweden's IHL Manual, while noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[1025]

[1016] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.
[1017] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[1018] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[1019] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[1020] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[1021] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-9.
[1022] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2).
[1023] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 14, § 5.
[1024] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[1025] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.

915. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1026] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1027]

916. The UK Military Manual, in the part dealing with reprisals and referring, inter alia, to Articles 14 and 46 GC I and 16 and 47 GC II, states that "reprisals against . . . buildings, equipment and vessels protected by [GC I and GC II] . . . are . . . prohibited".[1028] In a footnote relating to this provision, the manual notes that "the effect of this rule is that reprisals are unlawful against all persons except enemy combatants and those few classes of civilians who are not protected persons".[1029]

917. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . medical and religious . . . buildings and equipment".[1030]

918. The US Air Force Pamphlet, referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC III, provides that:

> Reprisals against the . . . buildings or equipment protected by [GC I] are prohibited . . . Reprisals against . . . the vessels or the equipment protected by [GC II] are prohibited. No protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited.[1031]

The Pamphlet further states that:

> Reprisals are forbidden, under all circumstances, against the persons or objects referenced above in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Conventions. At least some, and possibly all, of these prohibitions are regarded as customary law and are binding regardless of whether the adversary is a party to the Geneva Conventions. For definitions as to persons or objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, applicable articles of those documents must be consulted.[1032]

919. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", states that "under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, reprisals may not be directed against hospitals".[1033]

920. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity: . . . m. Reprisals against persons or property protected by the Geneva Conventions."[1034]

[1026] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1027] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1028] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644.
[1029] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 644, footnote 2.
[1030] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
[1031] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(1).
[1032] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).
[1033] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
[1034] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.

921. The US Naval Handbook states that "reprisals are forbidden to be taken against: . . . 4. Hospitals and medical facilities . . . and equipment, including hospital ships, medical aircraft, and medical vehicles."[1035]
922. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook, referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II, states that "fixed establishments and mobile medical units of the medical service, hospital ships, coastal rescue craft and their installations, medical transports, and medical aircraft are immune from reprisal".[1036]
923. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: . . . medical units, medical establishments, medical transports and medical material".[1037]

National Legislation
924. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning . . . medical organisations . . . During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[1038]

925. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[1039]
926. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended states that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[1040]

National Case-law
927. In its judgement in the Dover Castle case in 1921, the German Reichsgericht held that the accused, the commander of a submarine from which a British hospital ship had been torpedoed, was in the circumstances of the case entitled to hold the opinion that the measures taken by the German authorities against foreign hospital ships were not contrary to international law but were legitimate reprisals. The accused had pleaded that in sinking the ship he had merely carried out an order of the German Admiralty, which, in the belief

[1035] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.3.2.
[1036] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2.3.2, footnote 50.
[1037] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(2).
[1038] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
[1039] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[1040] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.

that the enemy utilised their hospital ships for military purposes in violation of the 1907 Hague Convention (X), issued a number of orders instructing the submarines to attack hospital ships as vessels of war.[1041]

Other National Practice

928. In 1991, in briefing notes prepared for a debate on the Geneva Convention Amendment Bill in Australia's House of Representatives, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade expressed the view that:

> The extension in [AP I of the prohibition of reprisals] is to civilian, cultural and other non-military objects. It was felt that an Australian reservation on this point, while leaving the way open for us to use such reprisals, would not only allow Australia to be portrayed as barbaric but also leave such Australian objects open to attack in enemy reprisals, in return for very little military advantage. This is now a settled Australian Defence Force view.[1042]

929. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[1043]

930. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . medical services and personnel . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks."[1044]

931. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[1045]

932. At the CDDH, France made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "3. . . . The measures may not involve any actions prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949."[1046]

[1041] Germany, Reichsgericht, Dover Castle case, Judgement, 4 June 1921.
[1042] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Minute on the Geneva Protocols, 13 February 1991, File 1710/10/3/1, § 5.
[1043] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[1044] Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
[1045] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
[1046] France, Draft Article 74 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/221/Rev.1, 22 April 1976, p. 324.

933. In 1990, during a parliamentary debate on the ratification of the Additional Protocols, a member of the German parliament called the prohibition of reprisals as contained in AP I "newly introduced rules".[1047]
934. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF does not condone nor conduct reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Geneva Conventions.[1048]
935. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law ... In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal."[1049]
936. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[1050]
937. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[1051]
938. In 1994, in its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

> During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against medical installations, transportation and units ... The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties ... A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) ... The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[1052]

939. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited ... The Geneva Conventions of 1949 prohibit the taking of reprisals against persons or objects protected by the Conventions.[1053]

[1047] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Günter Verheugen, Member of Parliament, 20 September 1990, Plenarprotokoll 11/226, p. 17919.
[1048] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1049] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1050] Report on the Practice of Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1051] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[1052] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.
[1053] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

940. In 1987, in submitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the US President announced his decision not to ratify AP I, stating, inter alia, that AP I "fails to improve substantially the compliance and verification mechanisms of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and eliminates an important sanction against violations of those Conventions".[1054]

941. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, referring to Articles 12–20 AP I, affirmed that:

> We . . . support the principle that medical units, including properly authorized civilian medical units, be respected and protected at all times and not be the object of attacks or reprisals . . . Further, we support the principle that the relevant provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions be applied to all properly authorized medical vehicles, hospital ships, and other medical ships and craft, regardless of the identity of the wounded, sick, and shipwrecked that they serve. This is, in effect, a distillation of much of what appears in articles 18 through 23 [AP I].[1055]

942. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US noted that it considered that the provisions of AP I regarding reprisals were "new rules".[1056]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

943. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[1057]

944. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Articles 46 GC I and 47 GC II, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: (a) The . . . buildings or equipment protected by the First Geneva

[1054] US, Message from the US President transmitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987.

[1055] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 423.

[1056] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

[1057] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.

Convention . . . (b) The . . . vessels and equipment protected by the Second Geneva Convention."[1058] It further stated that:

In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[1059]

Other International Organisations
945. No practice was found.

International Conferences
946. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

947. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

948. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

949. No practice was found.

Cultural property

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
950. Article 4(4) of the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "[The High Contracting Parties] shall refrain from any act directed by way of reprisals against cultural property".
951. Article 53 AP I provides that:

Without prejudice to the provisions of the Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict of 14 May 1954, and of other relevant international instruments, it is prohibited:

[1058] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[1059] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.

...

(c) to make such objects [historic monuments, works of art or places of worship which constitute the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples] the object of reprisals.

Article 53 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1060]

952. Upon ratification of the Additional Protocols, Egypt stated that:

The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[1061]

953. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany declared that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I... with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1062]

954. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I... with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1063]

955. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that:

The obligations of Articles 51 and 55 are accepted on the basis that any adverse party against which the United Kingdom might be engaged will itself scrupulously observe those obligations. If an adverse party makes serious and deliberate attacks, in violation of Article 51 or Article 52 against the civilian population or civilians or against civilian objects, or, in violation of Articles 53, 54 and 55, on objects or items protected by those Articles, the United Kingdom will regard itself as entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by the Articles in question to the extent that it considers such measures necessary for the sole purpose of compelling the adverse party to cease committing violations under those Articles, but only after formal warning to the adverse party requiring cessation of the violations has been disregarded and then only after a decision taken at the highest level of government. Any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom will not be disproportionate to the violations giving rise thereto and will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949 nor will such measures be continued after the violations have ceased. The United Kingdom will notify the Protecting Powers of any such formal warning given to an adverse party, and if that warning has been disregarded, of any measures taken as a result.[1064]

[1060] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.42, 27 May 1977, p. 206.
[1061] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[1062] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.
[1063] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.
[1064] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

Other Instruments

956. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

957. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

958. Section 6.9 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, which deals under Section 6.6 with the protection of "monuments of art, architecture or history, archeological sites, works of art, places of worship and museums and libraries which constitute the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples", states that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against objects and installations protected under this section".

959. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) Obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals."

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

960. Argentina's Law of War Manual refers to Articles 53 AP I and 16 AP II, as well as to the 1954 Hague Convention, and provides that "it remains absolutely prohibited . . . to make [cultural property] the object of reprisals".[1065]

961. Australia's Commanders' Guide, under the heading "Protection of Cultural Objects and Places of Worship", provides that:

> LOAC . . . extends immunity [from attack] to cultural property of great importance to cultural heritage. This is irrelevant of origin, ownership or whether the property is movable or immovable. LOAC requires such property to be protected, safeguarded and respected and not made the object of reprisals.[1066]

Referring, inter alia, to Articles 51–56 AP I, as well as to Article 4 of the 1954 Hague Convention, the manual further states that "protected buildings and facilities . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[1067]

962. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "historic monuments, places of worship and works of art, which constitute the cultural and spiritual heritage of peoples, are protected from acts of hostility. These objects must not be . . . the subject of reprisals."[1068] The manual further states that "protected buildings and facilities . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[1069]

[1065] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.44.
[1066] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 961.
[1067] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[1068] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 928.
[1069] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.

963. Belgium's Law of War Manual, citing several examples of jurisprudence, states that the "property protected by the [1954 Hague Convention] may not be made the object of reprisals. Therefore, [reprisals] may be directed only against combatants, non-protected property and a restricted group of non-protected civilians."[1070]

964. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: ... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1071] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: ... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1072]

965. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1073]

966. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1074]

967. Canada's LOAC Manual, in the part dealing with targeting, provides that "reprisals against cultural objects and places of worship are forbidden".[1075] In the part dealing with enforcement measures, the manual states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: ... g. cultural objects and places of worship".[1076]

968. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1077]

969. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of taking reprisals against "specifically protected ... objects".[1078]

970. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "by virtue of international conventions regularly ratified or approved: ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat] ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1079]

971. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits ... the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: ... to reprisals against non-military

[1070] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 36.
[1071] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1072] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1073] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[1074] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[1075] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-7, § 71.
[1076] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[1077] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[1078] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[1079] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 10 bis (2).

objectives".[1080] The manual refers, inter alia, to Articles 51–56 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against ... property particularly protected".[1081]

972. Germany's Soldiers' Manual states that "cultural property may never be made the object of reprisals".[1082]

973. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Articles 52(1) and 53(c) AP I, as well as to Article 4(4) of the 1954 Hague Convention, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: ... cultural objects".[1083] In another provision, the manual, referring to Articles 52(1) and 53(c) AP I, as well as to Article 4(4) of the 1954 Hague Convention, provides that "it is prohibited to make cultural property the object of reprisals".[1084]

974. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against ... cultural property".[1085]

975. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "specifically protected ... objects".[1086]

976. Indonesia's Air Force Manual provides that a "reprisal is absolutely prohibited against protected persons and objects".[1087] According to the Report on the Practice of Indonesia,

> The meaning of ... the protected objects is not only referring to the Geneva Conventions ... but also referring to the customary sources, such as the moral values which are generally recognized and exist among the international community, and other Conventions such as the Convention for the protection of the cultural property which [has] already [been] ratified by Indonesia.[1088]

977. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals, inter alia, against "cultural property", states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[1089]

978. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: ... (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[1090] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives ... The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against ... religious ... buildings and equipment ... cultural objects."[1091]

979. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring, inter alia, to Article 53 AP I, states that "no reprisals

[1080] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[1081] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[1082] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 8.
[1083] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[1084] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 909.
[1085] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[1086] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[1087] Indonesia, Air Force Manual (1990), § 15(c).
[1088] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1089] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.
[1090] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[1091] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.

may be undertaken against cultural objects (historical monuments, works of art, places of worship, etc.)".[1092]

980. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that "reprisals against cultural property are prohibited".[1093]

981. New Zealand's Military Manual, referring to Article 53(c) AP I, states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: . . . cultural objects and places of worship".[1094]

982. Spain's LOAC Manual, referring to Articles 52 and 53 AP I and Article 4 of the 1954 Hague Convention, lists "cultural objects" among the persons and objects against whom/which the taking of reprisals is prohibited.[1095] In another provision, the manual states that "combatants must remember that it is prohibited to commit acts of hostility, to execute reprisals . . . against the property which constitutes the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples, regardless of whether it is public or private property".[1096]

983. Sweden's IHL Manual, while noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[1097]

984. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, referring, inter alia, to Articles 53 AP I and 4 of the 1954 Hague Convention, states that "by virtue of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, [reprisals] are prohibited with regard to . . . cultural property".[1098]

985. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1099] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1100]

986. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . cultural objects".[1101]

987. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "reprisals against protected cultural property are not taken because of their questionable legality".[1102]

[1092] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-6, see also p. V-7.
[1093] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-43.
[1094] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2)(g).
[1095] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[1096] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.3.b.(2).
[1097] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[1098] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(2).
[1099] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1100] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1101] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
[1102] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-7(b)(2).

988. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", lists a number of persons and objects protected under the Geneva Conventions against whom reprisals are prohibited. It adds, however, that "a Protocol to the 1949 Geneva Conventions would expand this list to include ... cultural property ... The United States signed this Protocol in 1977, but has not yet ratified it. Consult the Staff Judge Advocate for further guidance."[1103]

989. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity: ... m. Reprisals against ... religious or cultural edifices."[1104]

990. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: ... cultural monuments, historical monuments and buildings, establishments used for science, the arts, education or humanitarian purposes".[1105]

National Legislation

991. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of making cultural property or places of worship which constitute the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples the object of reprisals.[1106]

992. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning ... civilian objectives, civilian property, historical monuments, art works, places of worship ... During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[1107]

993. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[1108]

994. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended states that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[1109]

[1103] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
[1104] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.
[1105] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(3).
[1106] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 293, introducing a new Article 877(1) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[1107] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
[1108] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[1109] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.

995. Spain's Penal Code provides that:

[Shall be punished] whoever, in the event of an armed conflict: a) attacks or makes the object of reprisals or the object of hostilities clearly recognizable cultural objects or places of worship which constitute the cultural or spiritual heritage of peoples and upon which, by virtue of special agreements, protection is conferred, causing, as a consequence, extensive destruction of such objects, and provided that such objects are not situated in the immediate proximity of military objectives or are not used in support of the military effort of the adversary.[1110]

996. Switzerland's Law on the Protection of Cultural Property contains a provision which stipulates, inter alia, that "respect for cultural property involves . . . the prohibition of reprisals with regard to cultural property".[1111]

National Case-law

997. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

998. In 1991, in briefing notes prepared for a debate on the Geneva Convention Amendment Bill in Australia's House of Representatives, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade expressed the view that:

The extension in [AP I of the prohibition of reprisals] is to civilian, cultural and other non-military objects. It was felt that an Australian reservation on this point, while leaving the way open for us to use such reprisals, would not only allow Australia to be portrayed as barbaric but also leave such Australian objects open to attack in enemy reprisals, in return for very little military advantage. This is now a settled Australian Defence Force view.[1112]

999. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[1113]

1000. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[1114]

[1110] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 613(1)(a).
[1111] Switzerland, Law on the Protection of Cultural Property (1966), Article 2(3).
[1112] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Minute on the Geneva Protocols, 13 February 1991, File 1710/10/3/1, § 5.
[1113] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[1114] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.

1001. In 1990, during a parliamentary debate on the ratification of the Additional Protocols, a member of the German parliament called the prohibition of reprisals as contained in AP I "newly introduced rules".[1115]
1002. In 1995, in response to a private inquiry, the Department of Legal Affairs of the German Ministry of Defence stated that "according to international conventional law, reprisals are expressly prohibited against ... cultural property".[1116]
1003. At the CDDH, Greece, with regard to an amendment sponsored by Greece, Jordan and Spain which read that "historic monuments and ... works of art which constitute the cultural heritage of a country ... shall not be made the object of reprisals",[1117] stated that "the principle of the prohibition of reprisals incorporated in the amendment only reaffirmed Article 33 [GC IV]".[1118]
1004. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, during the Iran–Iraq War, Iran offered a special protection to four Iraqi holy cities. Each time Iran resorted to reprisals against Iraqi cities, it issued a statement asking Iraqi people to leave the cities to be attacked and go to the protected holy cities. According to the report, it committed itself not to attack these historic sites.[1119]
1005. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law ... In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal.."[1120]
1006. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[1121]
1007. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[1122]
1008. In 1994, in its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against ... various categories of civilian property which are subject to special protection ... The prohibition

[1115] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Günter Verheugen, Member of Parliament, 20 September 1990, Plenarprotokoll 11/226, p. 17919.
[1116] Germany, Ministry of Defence, Response of the Department of Legal Affairs to a private inquiry, 19 December 1995, Doc. VR II 3-Az 39-61-18.
[1117] Greece, Jordan and Spain, Amendment concerning a new Article 47(3) draft AP I, CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/17/Rev.1, 18 March 1974, p. 213.
[1118] Greece, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.15, 7 February 1975, p. 118, § 6.
[1119] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 4.3.
[1120] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1121] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1122] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.

applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties . . . A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) . . . The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to ius ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[1123]

1009. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . Additional Protocol I prohibits the taking of reprisals against historic monuments (Article 53(c)) . . . The application of these provisions would have a greater effect on the retaliatory use of nuclear weapons. Again, however, these provisions are correctly regarded as innovative and thus as inapplicable to the use of nuclear weapons.[1124]

1010. In 1987, in submitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the US President announced his decision not to ratify AP I, stating, inter alia, that AP I "fails to improve substantially the compliance and verification mechanisms of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and eliminates an important sanction against violations of those Conventions".[1125]

1011. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that the US did not support "the prohibition on reprisals in article 51 AP I and subsequent articles" and did not consider it part of customary law.[1126]

1012. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

Various provisions of Additional Protocol I contain prohibitions on reprisals against specific types of persons or objects, including . . . cultural objects and places of worship (Article 53(c)) . . . These are among the new rules established by the Protocol that . . . do not apply to nuclear weapons.[1127]

[1123] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.

[1124] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

[1125] US, Message from the US President transmitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987.

[1126] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 426.

[1127] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1013. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[1128]

1014. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Article 53(c) AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (g) Cultural objects and places of worship."[1129] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[1130]

Other International Organisations

1015. No practice was found.

International Conferences

1016. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1017. In the Tadić case in 1995, the ICTY Appeals Chamber stated that Article 19 of the 1954 Hague Convention was part of customary law.[1131]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1018. No practice was found.

[1128] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[1129] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[1130] UN Commission of Experts established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[1131] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 98.

VI. Other Practice

1019. No practice was found.

Objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1020. Article 54(4) AP I provides that "objects [indispensable to the survival of the civilian population] shall not be made the object of reprisals". Article 54 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1132]

1021. Upon ratification of the Additional Protocols, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[1133]

1022. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany declared that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1134]

1023. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1135]

1024. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that:

> The obligations of Articles 51 and 55 are accepted on the basis that any adverse party against which the United Kingdom might be engaged will itself scrupulously observe those obligations. If an adverse party makes serious and deliberate attacks, in violation of Article 51 or Article 52 against the civilian population or civilians or against civilian objects, or, in violation of Articles 53, 54 and 55, on objects or items protected by those Articles, the United Kingdom will regard itself as entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by the Articles in question to the extent that it considers such measures necessary for the sole purpose of compelling the adverse party to cease committing violations under those Articles, but only after formal warning to the adverse party requiring cessation of the violations has been disregarded and then only after a decision taken at the highest level of government. Any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom will not be disproportionate to the violations giving rise thereto and will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949 nor will such measures be continued after the

[1132] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.42, 27 May 1977, p. 208.
[1133] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[1134] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.
[1135] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.

violations have ceased. The United Kingdom will notify the Protecting Powers of any such formal warning given to an adverse party, and if that warning has been disregarded, of any measures taken as a result.[1136]

Other Instruments

1025. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

1026. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

1027. Section 6.9 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, which deals under Section 6.7 with the protection of "objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population, such as foodstuff, crops, livestock and drinking-water installations and supplies", states that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against objects and installations protected under this section".

1028. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) Obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals."

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1029. Australia's Commanders' Guide, referring, inter alia, to Articles 51–65 AP I, states that "protected buildings and facilities . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[1137]

1030. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "protected buildings and facilities . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[1138]

1031. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1139] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1140]

1032. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1141]

[1136] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).
[1137] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[1138] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.
[1139] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1140] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1141] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).

1033. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1142]
1034. Canada's LOAC Manual, in the part dealing with targeting, provides that "objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population shall not be made subject to reprisals".[1143] In the part dealing with enforcement measures, the manual states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: . . . h. objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population".[1144]
1035. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population".[1145]
1036. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1146]
1037. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "by virtue of international conventions regularly ratified or approved: . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat] . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1147]
1038. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits . . . the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: . . . to reprisals against non-military objectives".[1148] The manual refers, inter alia, to Articles 51–56 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population".[1149]
1039. Germany's Military Manual, referring, however, to Article 55(2) AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: . . . objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population".[1150]
1040. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against . . . objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population".[1151]
1041. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "objects for [the] survival of [the] civilian population".[1152]
1042. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals, inter alia, against "objects indispensable for the survival of the civilian population", states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[1153]

[1142] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[1143] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-8, § 81.
[1144] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[1145] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[1146] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[1147] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 10 bis (2).
[1148] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[1149] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[1150] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[1151] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[1152] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[1153] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.

1043. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[1154] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . objects indispensable for the survival of the civilian population."[1155]

1044. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[1156]

1045. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring, inter alia, to Article 54 AP I, states that "no reprisals my be undertaken against objects indispensable for the survival of the civilian population (inter alia, foodstuffs, crops, livestock and drinking water installations)".[1157]

1046. New Zealand's Military Manual, referring to Article 54(4) AP I, states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: . . . objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population".[1158]

1047. Spain's LOAC Manual lists "objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population" among the persons and objects against whom/which the taking of reprisals is prohibited.[1159]

1048. Sweden's IHL Manual, referring to Article 54 AP I, provides that "the article also states . . . that the property [i.e. "such property as is essential for the survival of a civilian population"] may not be subjected to reprisal attacks".[1160] While noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, the manual states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[1161]

1049. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, in the part dealing with "Hostilities and their limits" and, more specifically, in a provision regarding the prohibition of the taking of reprisals against the civilian population, refers, inter alia, to Article 54 AP I.[1162] It further provides that "objects vital to the civilian population, such as drinking water, foodstuffs, crops and livestock as well as agricultural areas, must not . . . be made the object of reprisals".[1163]

[1154] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[1155] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[1156] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[1157] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-6, see also p. V-8.
[1158] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2)(h).
[1159] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[1160] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section § 3.2.1.5, p. 60.
[1161] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[1162] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 25(2).
[1163] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 35.

1050. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1164] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1165]

1051. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . objects indispensable for the survival of the civilian population".[1166]

1052. The US Operational Law Handbook provides that "the following measures are expressly prohibited by the law of war and are not excusable on the basis of military necessity: . . . m. Reprisals against . . . items such as food stuffs and livestock essential to the survival of the civilian population."[1167]

National Legislation

1053. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[1168]

1054. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended states that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[1169]

National Case-law

1055. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

1056. In 1991, in briefing notes prepared for a debate on the Geneva Convention Amendment Bill in Australia's House of Representatives, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade expressed the view that:

> The extension in [AP I of the prohibition of reprisals] is to civilian, cultural and other non-military objects. It was felt that an Australian reservation on this point, while leaving the way open for us to use such reprisals, would not only allow Australia to be portrayed as barbaric but also leave such Australian objects open to attack in enemy reprisals, in return for very little military advantage. This is now a settled Australian Defence Force view.[1170]

1057. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[1171]

[1164] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1165] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1166] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
[1167] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-182.
[1168] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[1169] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.
[1170] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Minute on the Geneva Protocols, 13 February 1991, File 1710/10/3/1, § 5.
[1171] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.

1058. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[1172]

1059. In 1990, in a parliamentary debate on the ratification of the Additional Protocols, a member of the German parliament called the prohibition of reprisals as contained in AP I "newly introduced rules".[1173]

1060. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law ... In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal."[1174]

1061. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[1175]

1062. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[1176]

1063. In 1994, in its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

> During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against ... various categories of civilian property which are subject to special protection ... The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties ... A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) ... The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[1177]

[1172] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
[1173] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Günter Verheugen, Member of Parliament, 20 September 1990, Plenarprotokoll 11/226, p. 17919.
[1174] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1175] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1176] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[1177] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.

1064. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . Additional Protocol I prohibits the taking of reprisals against . . . objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population (Article 54(4)) . . . The application of these provisions would have a greater effect on the retaliatory use of nuclear weapons. Again, however, these provisions are correctly regarded as innovative and thus as inapplicable to the use of nuclear weapons.[1178]

1065. In 1987, in submitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the US President announced his decision not to ratify AP I, stating, inter alia, that AP I "fails to improve substantially the compliance and verification mechanisms of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and eliminates an important sanction against violations of those Conventions".[1179]

1066. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that the US did not support "the prohibition on reprisals in article 51 AP I and subsequent articles" and did not consider it part of customary law.[1180]

1067. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

> Various provisions of Additional Protocol I contain prohibitions on reprisals against specific types of persons or objects, including . . . objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population (Article 54(4)) . . . These are among the new rules established by the Protocol that . . . do not apply to nuclear weapons.[1181]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1068. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments

[1178] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

[1179] US, Message from the US President transmitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987.

[1180] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 426.

[1181] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

"without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[1182]

1069. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Article 54(4) AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (h) Objects indispensable to the survival of the civilian population."[1183] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[1184]

Other International Organisations

1070. No practice was found.

International Conferences

1071. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1072. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1073. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

1074. No practice was found.

[1182] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[1183] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[1184] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.

Natural environment

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1075. Article 55(2) AP I provides that "attacks against the natural environment by way of reprisals are prohibited". Article 55 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1185]

1076. Upon ratification of the AP I and AP II, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[1186]

1077. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany declared that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1187]

1078. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1188]

1079. Upon ratification of AP I, the UK stated that:

> The obligations of Articles 51 and 55 are accepted on the basis that any adverse party against which the United Kingdom might be engaged will itself scrupulously observe those obligations. If an adverse party makes serious and deliberate attacks, in violation of Article 51 or Article 52 against the civilian population or civilians or against civilian objects, or, in violation of Articles 53, 54 and 55, on objects or items protected by those Articles, the United Kingdom will regard itself as entitled to take measures otherwise prohibited by the Articles in question to the extent that it considers such measures necessary for the sole purpose of compelling the adverse party to cease committing violations under those Articles, but only after formal warning to the adverse party requiring cessation of the violations has been disregarded and then only after a decision taken at the highest level of government. Any measures thus taken by the United Kingdom will not be disproportionate to the violations giving rise thereto and will not involve any action prohibited by the Geneva Conventions of 1949 nor will such measures be continued after the violations have ceased. The United Kingdom will notify the Protecting Powers of any such formal warning given to an adverse party, and if that warning has been disregarded, of any measures taken as a result.[1189]

[1185] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.42, 27 May 1977, p. 209.
[1186] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[1187] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.
[1188] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.
[1189] UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § (m).

Other Instruments

1080. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

1081. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

1082. Section 13 of the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict states that "attacks against the natural environment by way of reprisals are prohibited for States party to Protocol I additional to the Geneva Conventions".

1083. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) Obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1084. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "attacks against the environment by way of reprisals are prohibited".[1190]

1085. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1191] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1192]

1086. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1193]

1087. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: . . . to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1194]

1088. Canada's LOAC Manual, in a part dealing with targeting, provides that "attacks against the natural environment by way of reprisals are prohibited".[1195] In the part dealing with enforcement measures, the manual further states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: . . . i. the natural environment".[1196]

[1190] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 545(f).
[1191] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1192] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1193] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[1194] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[1195] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-9, § 85.
[1196] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.

1089. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1197]

1090. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of reprisals against the "natural environment".[1198]

1091. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "by virtue of international conventions regularly ratified or approved: . . . it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat] . . . to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1199]

1092. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits . . . the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: . . . to reprisals against non-military objectives".[1200] The manual further refers, inter alia, to Articles 51–56 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . the natural environment".[1201]

1093. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Article 55(2) AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: . . . the natural environment".[1202]

1094. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against . . . the natural environment".[1203]

1095. Hungary's Military Manual provides for the prohibition of reprisals against the "natural environment".[1204]

1096. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals, inter alia, against "the natural environment", states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[1205]

1097. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: . . . (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[1206] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives . . . The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . the natural environment."[1207]

1098. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[1208]

[1197] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[1198] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[1199] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 10 bis (2).
[1200] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[1201] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[1202] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[1203] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[1204] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.
[1205] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.
[1206] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[1207] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[1208] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.

1099. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring, inter alia, to Article 55 AP I, states that "attacks against the natural environment by way of reprisal are prohibited".[1209]
1100. New Zealand's Military Manual, referring to Article 55(2) AP I, states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: ... the natural environment".[1210]
1101. Spain's LOAC Manual lists among the persons and objects against whom/which the taking of reprisals is prohibited "the natural environment" and refers to Article 55 AP I.[1211]
1102. Sweden's IHL Manual, while noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[1212]

1103. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, in the part dealing with "Hostilities and their limits" and, more specifically, in a provision regarding the prohibition of the taking of reprisals against the civilian population, refers, inter alia, to Article 55 AP I.[1213] The manual further states, with reference to, inter alia, Article 55 AP I, that "by virtue of the Geneva Conventions and their additional Protocols, [reprisals] are prohibited with regard to ... the environment".[1214]
1104. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: ... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1215] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: ... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1216]
1105. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against ... the natural environment".[1217]
1106. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook, under the heading "Persons and Things Not Subject to Reprisals", lists a number of persons and objects protected under the Geneva Conventions against whom reprisals are prohibited. It adds, however, that "a Protocol to the 1949 Geneva Conventions would expand this list to include ... the natural environment. The United States signed this

[1209] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-6, see also p. V-9.
[1210] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2)(i).
[1211] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[1212] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[1213] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 25(2).
[1214] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 197(2).
[1215] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1216] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.
[1217] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.

Protocol in 1977, but has not yet ratified it. Consult the Staff Judge Advocate for further guidance."[1218]

1107. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: . . . the natural environment".[1219]

National Legislation

1108. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

> The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning . . . [the] natural environment . . . During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[1220]

1109. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[1221]

1110. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended states that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[1222]

National Case-law

1111. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

1112. In 1991, in briefing notes prepared for a debate on the Geneva Convention Amendment Bill in Australia's House of Representatives, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade expressed the view that:

> The extension in [AP I of the prohibition of reprisals] is to civilian, cultural and other non-military objects. It was felt that an Australian reservation on this point, while leaving the way open for us to use such reprisals, would not only allow Australia to be portrayed as barbaric but also leave such Australian objects open to attack in enemy reprisals, in return for very little military advantage. This is now a settled Australian Defence Force view.[1223]

[1218] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 8-4(c).
[1219] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(5).
[1220] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
[1221] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[1222] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.
[1223] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Minute on the Geneva Protocols, 13 February 1991, File 1710/10/3/1, § 5.

1113. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[1224]

1114. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against . . . the natural environment. The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks."[1225]

1115. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[1226]

1116. In 1990, in a parliamentary debate on the ratification of the Additional Protocols, a member of the German parliament called the prohibition of reprisals as contained in AP I "newly introduced rules".[1227]

1117. In 1992, prior to the adoption of a UN General Assembly resolution on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, Jordan and the US submitted a memorandum entitled "International Law Providing Protection to the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict" which provided, inter alia, that:

> For States parties the following principles of international law, as applicable, provide additional protection for the environment in times of armed conflict: Article 55(2) of Additional Protocol I prohibits States parties from attacking the natural environment by way of reprisals.[1228]

1118. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law . . . In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal."[1229]

1119. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[1230]

[1224] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
[1225] Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
[1226] Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
[1227] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Günter Verheugen, Member of Parliament, 20 September 1990, Plenarprotokoll 11/226, p. 17919.
[1228] Jordan and US, International Law Providing Protection to the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict, annexed to Letter dated 28 September 1992 to the Chairman of the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/47/3, 28 September 1992, § 2(d).
[1229] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1230] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

1120. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[1231]

1121. In 1994, in its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

> During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against . . . various categories of civilian property which are subject to special protection . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties . . . A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) . . . The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to Jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[1232]

1122. At the CDDH, Ukraine stated that it "agreed with those who had mentioned the need to prohibit reprisals and damage to the natural environment".[1233]

1123. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . Additional Protocol I prohibits the taking of reprisals against . . . the natural environment (Article 55(2)) . . . The application of these provisions would have a greater effect on the retaliatory use of nuclear weapons. Again, however, these provisions are correctly regarded as innovative and thus as inapplicable to the use of nuclear weapons.[1234]

1124. In 1987, in submitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the US President announced his decision not to ratify AP I, stating, inter alia, that AP I "fails to improve substantially the compliance and verification mechanisms of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and eliminates an important sanction against violations of those Conventions".[1235]

[1231] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[1232] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.
[1233] Ukraine, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XIV, CDDH/III/SR.16, 10 February 1975, p. 140, § 59.
[1234] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.
[1235] US, Message from the US President transmitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987.

1125. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that the US did not support "the prohibition on reprisals in article 51 AP I and subsequent articles" and did not consider it part of customary law.[1236]

1126. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

> Various provisions of Additional Protocol I contain prohibitions on reprisals against specific types of persons or objects, including . . . the natural environment (Article 55(2)) . . . These are among the new rules established by the Protocol that . . . do not apply to nuclear weapons.[1237]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1127. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, the UN General Assembly recognised the importance of the provisions of international law applicable to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, referring, inter alia, to the provisions of AP I. Moreover, it urged "all States to take all measures to ensure compliance with the existing international law applicable to the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict" and appealed "to all States that have not yet done so to consider becoming parties to the relevant international conventions".[1238]

1128. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the United Nations Decade on International Law, the UN General Assembly referred to the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict. The General Assembly invited:

> all States to disseminate widely the revised guidelines for military manuals and instructions on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict received from the International Committee of the Red Cross and to give due consideration to the possibility of incorporating them into their military manuals and other instructions addressed to their military personnel.[1239]

1129. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . (o)bligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note

[1236] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 426.

[1237] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

[1238] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/37, 25 November 1992, preamble and §§ 1 and 2.

[1239] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/50, 9 December 1994, § 11.

of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[1240]

1130. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Article 55(2) AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (i) The natural environment."[1241] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[1242]

Other International Organisations

1131. No practice was found.

International Conferences

1132. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1133. In its advisory opinion in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1996, the ICJ observed that any right of recourse to reprisals would, like self-defence, be governed by the principle of proportionality. The Court noted that:

> Articles 35, paragraph 3, and 55 of Additional Protocol I provide additional protection for the environment. Taken together, these provisions embody a general obligation to protect the natural environment against widespread, long-term and severe environmental damage; the prohibition of methods and means of warfare which are intended, or may be expected, to cause such damage; and the prohibition of attacks against the natural environment by way of reprisals.
>
> These are powerful constraints for all the States having subscribed to these provisions.[1243]

[1240] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[1241] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.
[1242] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[1243] ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, Advisory Opinion, 8 July 1996, § 31.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1134. The ICRC Guidelines for Military Manuals and Instructions on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict provides that "attacks against the natural environment by way of reprisals are prohibited".[1244]

VI. Other Practice

1135. No practice was found.

Works and installations containing dangerous forces

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1136. Article 56(4) AP I provides that "it is prohibited to make any of the works, installations or military objectives mentioned in paragraph 1 [namely dams, dykes and nuclear electrical generating stations] the object of reprisals". Article 56 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1245]

1137. Upon ratification of the AP I and AP II, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[1246]

1138. Upon ratification of AP I, France made a reservation concerning works and installations containing dangerous forces, in which it stated that:

> The Government of France cannot guarantee absolute protection for works and installations containing dangerous forces, which can contribute to the war effort of the adverse party, or for the defenders of such installations. It will nevertheless take all necessary precautions in conformity with the provisions of Article 56, Article 57 paragraph 2 (a) (iii) and Article 85 paragraph 3 (c), in order to avoid severe collateral losses among the civilian population, including in the case of eventual direct attacks.[1247]

1139. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany declared that "the Federal Republic of Germany will react against serious and systematic violations of the [1244] ICRC, Guidelines for Military Manuals and Instructions on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict, § 13, annexed to UN Doc. A/48/269, Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, 29 July 1993, p. 26.

[1245] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.42, 27 May 1977, p. 209.
[1246] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[1247] France, Reservation made upon ratification of AP I, 11 April 2001, § 15.

obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1248]

1140. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy stated that "Italy will react to serious and systematic violations by an enemy of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocol I . . . with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation".[1249]

Other Instruments

1141. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

1142. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

1143. Section 6.9 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, which deals under Section 6.8 with the protection of "installations containing dangerous forces, namely dams, dykes and nuclear electrical generating stations", states that "the United Nations force shall not engage in reprisals against objects and installations protected under this section".

1144. Article 50(1) of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Obligations not affected by countermeasures", states that "countermeasures shall not affect: . . . (c) Obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals."

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1145. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "no reprisals may be taken against the works or installations [containing dangerous forces]".[1250] Referring, inter alia, to Articles 51–56 AP I, the manual further provides that "protected buildings and facilities . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[1251]

1146. According to Australia's Defence Force Manual "protected buildings and facilities . . . should not be the subject of reprisals".[1252]

1147. Benin's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: . . . to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1253] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: . . . they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1254]

[1248] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 6.
[1249] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 10.
[1250] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 962.
[1251] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1212.
[1252] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1311.
[1253] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1254] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule III, p. 13.

1148. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "Laws and customs of war" dealing with the duties of and prohibitions for combatants, states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1255]

1149. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to soldiers in combat: ... to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1256]

1150. Canada's LOAC Manual, in the part dealing with targeting, provides that "no reprisals may be taken against dams, dykes, nuclear electrical generating stations, or legitimate targets located at or in the vicinity of such installations".[1257] In the part dealing with enforcement measures, the manual further states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: ... j. works and installations containing dangerous forces".[1258]

1151. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, in a provision entitled "International conventions, laws and customs of war", states that "according to the conventions adhered to by the Congo ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat]: ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1259]

1152. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides for the prohibition of reprisals against "specifically protected ... objects".[1260]

1153. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "by virtue of international conventions regularly ratified or approved: ... it is prohibited [to soldiers in combat] ... to take hostages, to engage in reprisals or collective punishments".[1261]

1154. France's LOAC Manual, in the chapter dealing with means and methods of warfare, states that "the law of armed conflict prohibits ... the methods of warfare which consist in the recourse: ... to reprisals against non-military objectives".[1262] The manual refers, inter alia, to Articles 51–56 AP I and states that "reprisals are prohibited against ... objects particularly protected".[1263]

1155. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Article 56(4) AP I, provides that "it is expressly prohibited by agreement to make reprisals against: ... works and installations containing dangerous forces".[1264]

1156. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "reprisals are expressly prohibited against ... works and installations which constitute a source of danger".[1265]

1157. Hungary's Military Manual prohibits reprisals against "specifically protected ... objects".[1266]

[1255] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[1256] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[1257] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 4-8, § 77.
[1258] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 15.
[1259] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[1260] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 19.
[1261] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 10 bis (2).
[1262] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 85.
[1263] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 108.
[1264] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 479.
[1265] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 320.
[1266] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 35.

1158. Italy's IHL Manual, providing for the prohibition of reprisals against, inter alia, "works and installations containing dangerous forces", states that "the observance of international rules which expressly provide for the obligation to abide by them in any circumstances cannot be suspended by way of reprisals".[1267]

1159. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "it is forbidden: ... (e) to carry out reprisals against protected persons or property".[1268] In the chapter dealing with reprisals, the manual further provides that reprisals "are carried out only against combatants and military objectives ... The Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against ... works or installations containing dangerous forces".[1269]

1160. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs soldiers not to take hostages and to refrain from all acts of revenge.[1270]

1161. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, in the chapter dealing with reprisals and referring, inter alia, to Article 56 AP I, states that "reprisals against dams, dikes and nuclear power plants are forbidden".[1271]

1162. New Zealand's Military Manual, referring to Article 56(4) AP I, states that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are prohibited: ... works and installations containing dangerous forces".[1272]

1163. Spain's LOAC Manual lists "works and installations containing dangerous forces" among the persons and objects against whom/which the taking of reprisals is prohibited and refers to Article 56 AP I.[1273]

1164. Sweden's IHL Manual, while noting that the Swedish IHL Committee strongly discourages even this possibility in view of its manifestly inhuman effect, states that:

> Under Additional Protocol I, reprisals are permitted only against military personnel. A state acceding to Additional Protocol I thereby accepts a limitation of its freedom to employ reprisals. The [Swedish International Humanitarian Law] Committee believes that this involves a considerable humanitarian advance.[1274]

1165. Togo's Military Manual states that "the following prohibitions must be respected: ... to launch reprisals against protected persons and property".[1275] It adds that reprisals "may only be used if: ... they are carried out only against combatants and military objectives".[1276]

[1267] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 25.
[1268] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[1269] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 4.
[1270] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, §§ 8 and 9.
[1271] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IV-6, see also p. V-10.
[1272] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1606(2)(j).
[1273] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 3.3.c.(5)(b).
[1274] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.5, p. 89.
[1275] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1276] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 13.

1166. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the Geneva Conventions and [AP I] prohibit reprisals against . . . works containing dangerous forces".[1277]
1167. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "the laws of war prohibit reprisals against the following persons and objects: . . . buildings and installations containing dangerous forces (dams, dykes, nuclear power stations and similar)".[1278]

National Legislation
1168. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of:

making works or installations containing dangerous forces the object of reprisals, if such attacks may cause the release of such [dangerous] forces and consequent severe losses among the civilian population, except if such works or installations are used in regular, significant and direct support of military operations and if such attack is the only feasible way to terminate such support.[1279]

1169. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that:

The Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic, the appropriate authorities and governmental bodies, as an answer to the same actions of the adverse party to the conflict or to put an end to these all, don't give opportunity to carry out any action which is considered to be [a] measure of pressure concerning . . . dangerous installations. During military operations in the condition of final necessity the measures taken compulsorily by the Armed Forces of [the] Azerbaijan Republic can't be considered as such measures of pressure.[1280]

1170. Under Colombia's Penal Code, reprisals against protected persons and objects taken "in the event of and during armed conflict" are punishable offences.[1281]
1171. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended states that "respect for rules adopted in order to comply with international conventions which expressly exclude reprisals cannot be suspended".[1282]
1172. Spain's Penal Code provides that:

[Shall be punished] whoever, in the event of an armed conflict: . . . attacks or makes the object of reprisals works or installations containing dangerous forces, if such attack may cause the release of dangerous forces and consequent severe losses among the civilian population, except if such works or installations are used in regular,

[1277] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 17, § 16.
[1278] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(4).
[1279] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 293, introducing a new Article 877(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[1280] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 16.
[1281] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 158.
[1282] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 8.

significant and direct support of military operations and if such attack is the only feasible way to terminate such support.[1283]

National Case-law

1173. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

1174. In 1991, in briefing notes prepared for a debate on the Geneva Convention Amendment Bill in Australia's House of Representatives, the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade expressed the view that:

> The extension in [AP I of the prohibition of reprisals] is to civilian, cultural and other non-military objects. It was felt that an Australian reservation on this point, while leaving the way open for us to use such reprisals, would not only allow Australia to be portrayed as barbaric but also leave such Australian objects open to attack in enemy reprisals, in return for very little military advantage. This is now a settled Australian Defence Force view.[1284]

1175. At the CDDH, following the adoption of Article 20 AP I, Colombia stated that it "was opposed to any kind of reprisals".[1285]

1176. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that "reprisals are prohibited against ... installations containing dangerous forces ... The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons. In consequence, they (i.e. protected persons and objects) can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks".[1286]

1177. In its written comments on other written statements submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Egypt stated that:

> Reprisals are prohibited against protected persons and objects according to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their additional Protocols. This prohibition of reprisal is absolute and applies to the use of all weapons. In consequence, the protected persons and objects can never become targets of any attack, including nuclear attacks. The provisions of the Conventions and the Protocols carrying this prohibition of reprisals against protected persons and objects are considered declaratory of customary law.[1287]

1178. In 1990, in a parliamentary debate on the ratification of the Additional Protocols, a member of the German parliament called the prohibition of reprisals as contained in AP I "newly introduced rules".[1288]

1283 Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 613(1)(d).
1284 Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Minute on the Geneva Protocols, 13 February 1991, File 1710/10/3/1, § 5.
1285 Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, § 34.
1286 Egypt, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, § 46.
1287 Egypt, Written comments submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, September 1995, § 43.
1288 Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Speech by Günter Verheugen, Member of Parliament, 20 September 1990, Plenarprotokoll 11/226, p. 17919.

1179. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, "the prohibition of belligerent reprisals against protected persons and property is viewed as customary law . . . In practice, Jordan never resorted to attacks by way of reprisal."[1289]
1180. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines states that "reprisals are generally prohibited".[1290]
1181. At the CDDH, Poland made a proposal for a draft article on reprisals within AP I – which it later withdrew – which read, inter alia, as follows: "Insert a new article after [draft] Article 70 worded as follows: 'Measures of reprisal against persons and objects protected by the Conventions and by the present Protocol are prohibited'."[1291]
1182. In 1994, in its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, the Solomon Islands, referring to Articles 20, 51(6), 52(1), 53, 54(4), 55(2) and 56(4) AP I, stated that:

> During hostilities, it is forbidden to resort to reprisals against . . . various categories of civilian property which are subject to special protection . . . The prohibition applies in respect of all weapons, including nuclear weapons. This rule had previously been established in a general manner by Art. 60(5) of the 1969 Vienna Convention of the Law of Treaties . . . A similar provision is set forth in paragraph 7 of the UN General Assembly resolution 2675 (XXV) . . . The prohibition of reprisals in these situations appears also in Principle 1, paragraph 6 of UN General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV) on friendly relations. Even if, in that case, it relates to jus ad (or contra) bellum rather than jus in bello, it is nonetheless applicable to the second. It follows from the above that reprisals can, in no circumstances, be lawful against this category of targets.[1292]

1183. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that:

> To be lawful, a belligerent reprisal must meet two conditions. First, it must not be directed against persons or objects against which the taking of reprisals is specifically prohibited . . . Additional Protocol I prohibits the taking of reprisals against . . . works and installations containing natural forces (Article 56(4)). The application of these provisions would have a greater effect on the retaliatory use of nuclear weapons. Again, however, these provisions are correctly regarded as innovative and thus as inapplicable to the use of nuclear weapons.[1293]

1184. In 1987, in submitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the US President announced his decision not to ratify AP I, stating, inter alia, that AP I "fails to improve substantially the compliance and

[1289] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1290] Report on the Practice of Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1291] Poland, Proposal on a new Article 70 bis draft AP I submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/III/103, 1 October 1974, p. 313.
[1292] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, § 3.75.
[1293] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, pp. 58–59.

verification mechanisms of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and eliminates an important sanction against violations of those Conventions".[1294]

1185. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that the US did not support "the prohibition on reprisals in article 51 AP I and subsequent articles" and did not consider it part of customary law. He added that it did not support Article 56 AP I and that the US did not consider it to be customary law.[1295]

1186. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US stated that:

> Various provisions of Additional Protocol I contain prohibitions on reprisals against specific types of persons or objects, including . . . works and installations containing dangerous forces (Article 56(4)). These are among the new rules established by the Protocol that . . . do not apply to nuclear weapons.[1296]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1187. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts, to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 50(1)(c) stating that "Countermeasures shall not affect . . . obligations of a humanitarian character prohibiting reprisals", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[1297]

1188. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), referring to Article 65(4) AP I, stated that "reprisals against the following categories of persons and objects are specifically prohibited: . . . (j) Works and installations containing dangerous forces."[1298] It further stated that:

> In international armed conflicts to which the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I apply, lawful reprisals . . . must be directed exclusively against combatants or other military objectives subject to the limitations contained in the [1294] US, Message from the US President transmitting AP II to the US Senate for advice and consent to ratification, Treaty Doc. 100-2, 29 January 1987.

[1295] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 426 and 427.

[1296] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 31.

[1297] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.

[1298] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 65.

Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and customary international law of armed conflicts. In international armed conflicts where Additional Protocol I does not apply, reprisals may be directed against a much wider category of persons and objects, but subject to the limitations of customary international law of armed conflicts.[1299]

Other International Organisations
1189. No practice was found.

International Conferences
1190. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1191. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1192. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

1193. No practice was found.

E. Reprisals in Non-international Armed Conflicts

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
1194. Article 4(4) of the 1954 Hague Convention provides that the High Contracting Parties "shall refrain from any act directed by way of reprisals against cultural property". Article 19(1) of the same Convention states that:

In the event of an armed conflict not of an international character occurring within the territory of one of the High Contracting Parties, each party to the conflict shall be bound to apply, as a minimum, the provisions of the present Convention which relate to respect for cultural property.

1195. Article 8(4) of draft AP II submitted by the ICRC to the CDDH provided that "measures of reprisals against [all persons whose liberty has been restricted by capture or arrest for reasons in relation to the armed conflict] are prohibited".[1300]

[1299] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 66.
[1300] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, Part Three, Draft Additional Protocols, June 1973, p. 36.

1196. Article 19 of draft AP II submitted by the ICRC to the CDDH provided that "measures of reprisals against the wounded, the sick, and the shipwrecked as well as against medical personnel, medical units and means of medical transport are prohibited".[1301]
1197. Article 26(4) of draft AP II submitted by the ICRC to the CDDH provided that "attacks against the civilian population or civilians by way of reprisals are prohibited".[1302]
1198. Upon ratification of AP I and AP II, Egypt stated that:

> The Arab Republic of Egypt, while declaring its commitment to respecting all the provisions of Additional Protocols I and II, wishes to emphasize, on the basis of reciprocity, that it upholds the right to react against any violation by any party of the obligations imposed by Additional Protocols I and II with all means admissible under international law in order to prevent any further violation.[1303]

Other Instruments
1199. Paragraph 6 the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.
1200. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Articles 48–58 AP I.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
1201. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual, in a part dealing with "victims of civil war", states that "during all military operations, offensive or defensive, certain forms of conduct are prohibited and remain contrary to the law of war. Examples [are] . . . to carry out reprisals against populations."[1304]
1202. India's Manual of Military Law prohibits reprisals. The provision is in a section relative to the actions of a commander acting in aid of civil authorities for the handling of crowds and mobs. The manual adds that action is preventive and not punitive and that no soldier can punish a civilian, except under martial law.[1305]

National Legislation
1203. No practice was found.

[1301] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, Part Three, Draft Additional Protocols, June 1973, p. 38.
[1302] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, Part Three, Draft Additional Protocols, June 1973, p. 40.
[1303] Egypt, Declaration made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 9 October 1992, § 3.
[1304] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 150, § 532(1).
[1305] India, Manual of Military Law (1983), Vol. 1, Chapter VII, § 8.

National Case-law
1204. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
1205. At the CDDH, in its explanation of vote concerning draft Article 10 bis AP II, the Australian delegation stated that it had abstained from voting because it considered that the article "did no more than prohibit in internal conflicts acts that violate the provisions of the Protocol and that the article was not concerned with reprisals", whereas "many delegations interpreted the article as a prohibition of reprisals, which they claimed found no place in the law applicable to internal armed conflicts". Australia further stated that delegations of other States "also saw the article as an interference with the sovereignty of the State". The Australian delegation expressed its disappointment that the provision had not been acceptable to a majority of States.[1306]
1206. At the CDDH, the representative of the Belarus said that he fully supported the opinion of GDR and Poland in favour of draft Article 10 bis AP II.[1307]
1207. At the CDDH, the Belgian delegation stated that it "regretted that [draft] Articles 6 to 8 [of draft AP II] did not include a strict prohibition of reprisals. The term was doubtless less important then the deed". The Belgian delegation also stated that "the words 'are, and shall remain prohibited at any time and at any place whatsoever' which already appeared in Article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . should serve as a rule of conduct and an absolute prohibition of recourse to reprisals in the Articles of Part II.[1308] It announced that it would abstain from voting on draft Article 10 bis AP II. However, as to the fundamental guarantees within draft AP II, the Belgian delegation stated that "the question of reprisals could not arise, since under the terms of that article, persons who did not take a direct part or who had ceased to take part in hostilities, were in all circumstances to be treated humanely".[1309] 1208. At the CDDH, in its explanation of vote on draft Article 10 bis AP II, the delegation of Cameroon stated that it had:

voted for this provision in the belief that a blanket prohibition of reprisals would not be feasible. No State could reasonably be asked to stand by and allow grave and repeated breaches of the Conventions or the Protocols by its adversary. The [1306] Australia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 119.

[1307] Belarus, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 429, § 16.
[1308] Belgium, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.40, 14 April 1975, p. 425, §§ 21–22.
[1309] Belgium, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 109, § 11.

prohibition of reprisals should . . . be limited to certain well-defined cases, restrictively enumerated.[1310]

1209. At the CDDH, Canada proposed an amendment to draft AP II which read, inter alia, that "measures of reprisal against [persons whose liberty has been restricted by capture or otherwise for reasons relative to the armed conflict] are prohibited".[1311]

1210. At the CDDH, the Canadian delegation submitted a proposal for a new Article 9(4) AP II which read: "Acts of retaliation comparable to reprisals against [all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take a part in hostilities, whether or not their liberty has been restricted] are prohibited."[1312] It further proposed a new Article 17 which read: "Acts of retaliation comparable to reprisals against the wounded and sick and the shipwrecked as well as against medical personnel, medical units and means of medical transports are prohibited."[1313] A proposal for a new Article 22(3) read: "Attacks against the civilian population or civilians by way of acts of retaliation comparable to reprisals are prohibited."[1314]

1211. At the CDDH, Canada made another draft proposal for an article to be inserted in AP II, which provided that:

> If a Party to the conflict persistently violates the provisions of the Protocol and refuses to comply with those provisions after being called upon to do so, then, except concerning the persons protected by articles . . . [footnote: these would be the articles that concern, in particular, the protection of persons within the power of one of the Parties to the conflict], the adverse Party may nevertheless resort to measures which are in breach of the Protocol, provided it had warned the offending party that such action will be resorted to if the offensive acts are not terminated within a specific time [footnote: As is clear from the language of the proposal, this is intended to be of general application affecting the entire Protocol].[1315]

1212. At the CDDH, during discussions on Article 10 bis of draft AP II, the Canadian representative stated that:

> As his delegation regarded the concept of reprisals as appertaining to international law, it considered that there was no place for that concept in Protocol II. There was a risk that the introduction of such a concept in Protocol II might increase the danger of reprisals followed by counter-reprisals and result in an escalation of [1310] Cameroon, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 455.

[1311] Canada, Article 8 draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/I/37, 14 March 1974, pp. 23–24.

[1312] Canada, Article 9(4) of draft amendment concerning AP II as a whole submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/212, 4 April 1975, p. 196.

[1313] Canada, Article 17 of draft amendment concerning AP II as a whole submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/212, 4 April 1975, p. 199.

[1314] Canada, Article 22(3) of draft amendment concerning AP II as a whole submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/212, 4 April 1975, p. 201.

[1315] Canada, New proposal concerning an Article to be introduced in AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/I/287/Rev. 1, 3 February–18 April 1975, p. 109.

hostilities. Its conclusion might also inhibit some States from becoming Parties to the Protocol.[1316]

1213. In 1986, in an annex to a memorandum on Canada's attitude to possible reservations with regard to AP I, the Canadian Ministry of Defence stated that:

It should be noted that the ... limitations on the use of reprisals apply only in the event of an international armed conflict. Common Article 3 of the [1949] Geneva Conventions, which is the only treaty law concerning internal armed conflict other than [AP II], does not make any explicit reference to reprisals ...

[AP II], concerned with internal armed conflicts, does not contain the word "reprisal" or any similar expression.[1317]

1214. At the CDDH, Colombia, supported by a representative of the delegation of Indonesia, supported the view that draft Article 10 bis AP II should be deleted.[1318]

1215. At the CDDH, Finland proposed an amendment concerning the provision of fundamental guarantees within AP II (Part II, Article 6) according to which "measures of reprisal" should have been prohibited.[1319] With respect to this proposal, the delegation of Finland declared that:

[A] reference to measures of reprisals should be included in [AP II], so that civilian populations would have at least minimum guarantees against inhumane treatment by the parties to non-international armed conflicts ... The amendment by the Finnish delegation was aimed at adding a new subparagraph [in the draft provision of AP II dealing with fundamental guarantees] in order to place a general prohibition on reprisals, as had been done in Article 33 of [GC IV].[1320]

The representative of Finland explained further that:

Contrary to what was often stated, reprisals were not limited to times of war or other types of armed conflict, but were also exercised in times of peace. Reprisals should never in any circumstances be used against the civilian populations. They could possibly be employed between States or Parties to a conflict. For example, they could be regarded as legitimate in the event of destruction of public property or a violation of international law by one or other Party to a conflict. But there was universal agreement that reprisals of an inhumane nature were inadmissible. That was why innocent civilians should be protected against such acts in times both of war and peace.[1321]

[1316] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 428, § 9.

[1317] Canada, Ministry of Defence, Memorandum on Ratification of AP I, Reprisals Reservation, Operational Considerations, Doc. 3440-13-2 (D Law/I), 14 March 1986, Annex A, §§ 5 and 9.

[1318] Colombia (supported by Indonesia), Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 429, § 14.

[1319] Finland, New proposal concerning Article 6 draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/I/93, 4 October 1974, p. 18.

[1320] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 324, § 7.

[1321] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 324, § 8.

The representative of Finland also stated that:

> With regard to the word "reprisals", he still considered that there was no reason why it should not be used also in connexion with non-international armed conflicts; but his delegation would be willing to accept another word, provided that the content [i.e. of the proposal prohibiting reprisals] was not changed.[1322]

1216. At the CDDH, in its explanation of vote concerning draft Article 10 bis AP II, the delegation of Finland stated that "as the article was put to the vote . . . the Finnish delegation had to cast a favourable vote in view of its consistent support throughout the Conference for the prohibition of reprisals or measures in kind in armed conflicts, whether international or non-international".[1323]

1217. At the CDDH, the delegation of France, in its explanation of vote concerning draft Article 10 bis AP II, stated that it had voted against the retention of the provision, without, however, expressing any views on the substance of the provision.[1324]

1218. At the CDDH, the FRG proposed an amendment to Article 8 of draft AP II which read, inter alia: "Amend Article 8 to read: . . . 2. . . . (b) measures of reprisals against [all persons whose liberty has been restricted by capture or arrest for reasons in relation to the armed conflict] are prohibited".[1325]

1219. At the CDDH, in discussing the Finnish proposal to introduce an explicit prohibition of reprisals in AP II, the FRG stated:

> Was it advisable to use the word "reprisal" in draft Protocol II? Perhaps it would be possible to find another term where non-international armed conflicts were concerned. There were no objections from the legal point of view to the use of the word "reprisal", but from the political point of view it could be inferred that its use gave the Parties to a conflict a status under international law which they had no right to claim. He suggested that another formulation, for example "measures of retaliation comparable to reprisals", might not meet with the same objections.[1326]

1220. At the CDDH, the GDR delegation expressed its strong support for draft Article 10 bis AP II.[1327]

1221. At the CDDH, in the run-up to the vote on draft Article 10 bis AP II, Greece supported the views expressed by the representative of Mexico, whose

[1322] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 339, § 79.
[1323] Finland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 119.
[1324] France, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 120.
[1325] FRG, New proposal concerning Article 8 draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/I/236, 13 March 1975, p. 25.
[1326] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 325, § 11.
[1327] GDR, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 428, § 10.

delegation objected to any provision that would authorise reprisals either directly or a contrario.[1328]

1222. At the CDDH, the Holy See expressed its favourable position concerning the inclusion of draft Article 10 bis in AP II.[1329] In its explanation of vote concerning the draft Article, the Holy See declared that it had voted for the retention of the article, "because it provided for the prohibition of reprisals".[1330]

1223. At the CDDH, India said that it supported the view of a US representative according to which Article 10 bis should be deleted and also prepared to vote against the provision. Nevertheless, it expressed the opinion that while compromises were to be appreciated, they tended to jeopardise the national sovereignty of States.[1331]

1224. At the CDDH, a representative of Indonesia supported the view of the delegation of Colombia that draft Article 10 bis AP II should be deleted.[1332]

1225. At the CDDH, Iran submitted a new proposal to be included in draft AP II, according to which "acts of vengeance likely to affect the humanitarian rights conferred upon persons protected by this Part are prohibited".[1333]

1226. At the CDDH, Iran stated that "it had reservations concerning the addition of the word 'reprisals', which was not appropriate in a protocol concerning non-international armed conflicts".[1334]

1227. At the CDDH, Iran stated that it "supported the Canadian representative's view that the concept of reprisals should not be included in Protocol II".[1335]

1228. At the CDDH, Iraq, considering draft Article 19 AP II, stated that "in any case, the question of reprisals had no place in Protocol II, for the Conference was not entitled to legislate for the treatment of citizens of sovereign States".[1336]

1229. At the CDDH, Italy submitted the following proposal to be included in draft AP II to the effect that "the provisions of the present Part must be observed at all times and in all circumstances, even if the other Party to the conflict is guilty of violating the provisions of the present Protocol".[1337]

[1328] Greece, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 429, § 20.
[1329] Holy See, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 428, § 12.
[1330] Holy See, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 120.
[1331] India, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 108, § 8.
[1332] Indonesia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 429, § 14.
[1333] Iran, New proposal concerning an Article of draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/I/287/Rev. 1, 3 February–18 April 1975, p. 109.
[1334] Iran, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 330, § 37.
[1335] Iran, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, § 15, p. 429.
[1336] Iraq, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 326, § 16.
[1337] Italy, New proposal concerning an Article of draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/I/287/Rev. 1, 3 February–18 April 1975, p. 110.

1230. At the CDDH, when Article 10 bis was rejected, Italy, in its explanation of vote, stated that:

> The Italian delegation abstained in the vote leading to the deletion of Article 10 bis, which provided that certain articles of Protocol II "shall not, in any circumstances or for any reason whatsoever, be violated, even in response to a violation of the provisions of the Protocol".
>
> A majority of delegations decided to delete Article 10 bis because of the widely felt need to simplify Protocol II as far as possible, in order to render it clear, to the point, well balanced and thus acceptable to a large number of countries . . .
>
> . . .
>
> . . . Protocol II contains many provisions mentioning obligations which must be respected "in all circumstances", or rules which must be followed "as a minimum". The language is very clear, highlighting the need for unconditional respect for those obligations and rules, even if the other Party to the conflict does not respect them. This is to be expected, since what is involved are elementary human rights, to which a basic morality (much older than the legal rule) ascribes absolute value . . .
>
> . . .
>
> Moreover, everything in Protocol II which represents a development of the common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, is subject to the conditions and rules set out in that article. And that article specifically mentions rules which must be applied "as a minimum" or "at any time and in any place whatsoever"; this clearly shows that these rules (and thence the rules derived from them in the present Protocol) must be understood as requiring unconditional respect.[1338]

1231. At the CDDH in 1976, in an explanation of vote concerning Article 10 bis AP II, Mexico stated that it "had opposed the adoption of article 10 bis, because it introduced the notion of reprisals in internal conflicts, which was unacceptable".[1339]

1232. At the CDDH in 1977, Mexico reiterated "its formal objection to any provision that would authorize reprisals either directly or a contrario".[1340] With regard to draft Article 10 bis of draft AP II, Mexico re-emphasised that it "objected to any provision that would authorize reprisals either directly or indirectly".[1341] In its explanation of vote on draft Article 74 of draft AP I and draft Article 10 bis of draft AP II, Mexico explained that it had voted against draft Article 10 bis AP II on the basis of its conviction that "experience shows that reprisals do not lead the enemy to respect humanitarian law, but result in an increase in violations and hostilities". Mexico believed that the draft provision, as well as the French and Polish proposals, would have authorised reprisals (the Polish in an a contrario sensu) and that "the mandatory nature of humanitarian law does not depend on the observance of its rules by the adverse Party, but

[1338] Italy, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, pp. 120–121.

[1339] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.64, 7 June 1976, p. 318, § 80.

[1340] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/I/349/Rev.1, published as CDDH/405/Rev.1, 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 231, § 43.

[1341] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 429, § 13.

stems from the inherently wrongful nature of the act prohibited by international humanitarian law", and therefore voted against these provisions.[1342]

1233. At the CDDH, a representative of New Zealand suggested that the Finnish amendment concerning reprisals in Part II of draft AP II should be accepted.[1343]

1234. At the CDDH, the representative of Nigeria stated that "he was unhappy about the use of the word 'reprisals', but might endorse the Finnish amendment if another term were found, as for example 'retaliation' or 'vengeance'".[1344] In its explanation of vote concerning draft Article 10 bis AP II, Nigeria stated that:

> This article is no less and no more than a disguised article on reprisals. Right from the beginning . . . the Nigerian delegation had repeatedly opposed the inclusion of an article on reprisals in this additional Protocol II. We are of the firm conviction that reprisals as a legal notion properly belongs to international legal relations as between sovereign States and should have no place in a Protocol dealing with internal armed conflicts. Also, the inclusion of an article on reprisals in this Protocol could lead Governments and States into embarrassing situations. This is because it is not inconceivable that in the course of an internal conflict, rebels may deliberately commit acts to which the normal reaction would be in the nature of reprisals but because of a prohibitory article such as this, Governments would feel bound to fold their arms while dissident groups go on a rampage killing and maiming innocent civilians and burning dwellings and food crops. No responsible Government can allow such a situation to develop, but if this article had been adopted this is the kind of scenario that would repeat itself time and again.[1345]

1235. In introducing Resolution 2675 (XXV) (providing for the prohibition of reprisals against civilian populations or individual members thereof), which it cosponsored, in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly in 1970, Norway explained that as used in the resolution, "the term 'armed conflicts' was meant to cover armed conflicts of all kinds, an important point, since the provisions of the Geneva Conventions and the Hague Regulations did not extend to all conflicts".[1346]

1236. At the CDDH, Pakistan made the following new proposal in order to prohibit reprisals:

> Isolated cases of disrespect of the provisions of the present Protocol by one party shall not in any circumstances authorize the non-compliance by the other party

[1342] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, pp. 449–450.
[1343] New Zealand, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 331, § 44.
[1344] Nigeria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 327, § 21.
[1345] Nigeria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 122.
[1346] Norway, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1785, 11 November 1970, p. 281.

with the provisions of [the relevant Part], even for the purpose of inducing the adverse party to comply with its obligations.[1347]

In a later statement, Pakistan stated that "after consultations between various delegations, groups and inter-regional groups, it had been proposed, as a compromise, that [draft] Article 10 bis should be deleted".[1348]

1237. At the CDDH, the Philippines made the following new proposal for an Article in draft AP II concerning the prohibition of "reprisals" in the context of non-international armed conflicts which read: "Failure of one Party to the conflict to comply with the provisions of the present Protocol shall not authorize the other party to employ counter measures for the purpose of enforcing the provisions".[1349]

1238. At the CDDH, the delegation of Poland, in its explanation of vote on articles of draft Protocols I and II relating to reprisals, stated that it had withdrawn an earlier proposed amendment which envisaged a general prohibition of reprisals, while stressing that if a group of persons should not be covered by specific provisions prohibiting reprisals, "there should be no attempt to prove by an a contrario argument that such a group is outside the prohibition of reprisals" and that this would be, in its understanding, "an argument in bad faith directed against the very spirit of the Geneva Law".[1350]

1239. At the CDDH, in her comments on the Finnish proposal to prohibit all measures of reprisal in draft Article 6 AP II, the Swedish representative recalled approvingly a statement by the UK representative expressing the view that the phrase "at any time and in any place whatsoever" excluded the possibility of reprisals against the categories of persons in question. Questioning why this should not be stated explicitly, she supported the Finnish proposal.[1351]

1240. At the CDDH, the delegation of Syria, in its explanation of vote on draft Article 10 bis AP II, expressed regret that Poland had withdrawn an amendment prohibiting reprisals. It stated that "the reasons of expediency should not be interpreted, by an a contrario reasoning, as opening up the possibility of such measures". It further stated that "humanitarian law is dependent on jus cogens and it is therefore unthinkable that an inhuman act should provoke a similar act involving innocent persons".[1352]

[1347] Pakistan, New proposal concerning an Article of draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/I/287/Rev. 1, 3 February–18 April 1975, p. 109.

[1348] Pakistan, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 107, § 4.

[1349] Philippines, New proposal concerning an Article of draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/I/287/Rev. 1, 3 February–18 April 1975, p. 109.

[1350] Poland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 452.

[1351] Sweden, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 331, § 45.

[1352] Syria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, p. 453.

1241. At the CDDH, a representative of the UK stated that the provision of draft Article 6(2) "'at any time and in any place whatsoever' was so comprehensive that it would probably not leave room for the operation of reprisals in any form". Draft Article 6(2) contained a detailed list of specially prohibited acts directed against persons in the power of the parties to the conflict.[1353]

1242. At the CDDH, a representative of the US stated that "he hoped that ... Article 10 bis would be rejected, since the whole concept of reprisals had no place in Protocol II".[1354]

1243. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that:

> The basic core of Protocol II is, of course, reflected in common article 3 of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions and therefore is, and should be, a part of generally accepted customary law. This specifically includes its prohibitions on violence toward persons taking no active part in hostilities, hostagetaking, degrading treatment, and punishment without due process.[1355]

1244. At the CDDH, the delegation of the SFRY, in its explanation of vote on draft Article 10 bis AP II, stated that "it goes without saying ... that reprisals are already forbidden against protected persons and objects, that is to say, against persons and objects in the power of the adversary". Moreover, it expressed its view that "this rule of customary law ... was codified in 1949 in the Geneva Conventions". Nevertheless, it stated that the SFRY still felt that "reprisals on the field of battle against an unscrupulous adversary who uses illicit methods and means of combat remain permissible under customary law, as a last resort against lawless conduct". Nonetheless, the representative stated that "it seems both unjust and pointless to make non-combatants, women and children, pay for breaches for which they are in no way responsible".[1356]

1245. Notwithstanding the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY, according to which these States agreed to abide by the prohibition of reprisals contained in Articles 51 and 52 AP I, in 1991, the YPA issued a general warning to the attention of the Croatian authorities, stating that "a number of impudent crimes has been committed against the members of the Y.P.A. ... Family members of the Y.P.A. are being maltreated, persecuted and destroyed in many different ways. This cannot be tolerated any longer." The YPA therefore warned that:

[1353] UK, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.32, 19 March 1975, p. 330, § 40.

[1354] US, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 108, § 7.

[1355] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 430–431.

[1356] SFRY, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.73, 16 May 1977, pp. 456 and 457.

1. For every attacked and seized object of the [YPA] – an object of vital importance for the Republic of Croatia will be destroyed immediately.
2. For every attacked and occupied garrison – an object of vital importance to the town in which the garrison is located will be destroyed. This is, at the same time, a warning to civilian persons to abandon such settlement in time.[1357]

According to the Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY):

This warning calls for detailed analysis, but arguably it can be classified as a threat of the use of belligerent reprisals. In any event, a question may be raised whether the approach of the YPA Supreme Command reflected the position that belligerent reprisals may be freely carried out in internal conflicts as well, without the IHL restrictions that apply to international conflicts. The text of the Supreme Command warning leads to this conclusion.[1358]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1246. UN General Assembly Resolution 2444 (XXIII) adopted in 1968 affirmed Resolution XXVIII of the 20th International Conference of the Red Cross and the basic humanitarian principle applicable in all armed conflicts laid down therein that "it is prohibited to launch attacks against the civilian population as such".[1359] This phrase was interpreted by some government experts at the CE (1971) as including a prohibition of reprisals against the civilian population.[1360]

1247. In 1970, the UN General Assembly, "bearing in mind the need for measures to ensure the better protection of human rights in armed conflicts of all types", adopted Resolution 2675 (XXV) on basic principles for the protection of civilian populations in armed conflicts in which it is stated that "civilian populations, or individual members thereof, should not be the object of reprisals, forcible transfers or other assaults on their integrity".[1361]

1248. In a resolution on Afghanistan adopted in 1993, the UN General Assembly urged all the Afghan parties "to protect all civilians from acts of reprisal".[1362] It reiterated this appeal in another resolution in 1994.[1363]

1249. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all the Afghan parties "to respect accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the [1949] Geneva

[1357] SFRY, Headquarters of the Supreme Command of the Armed Forces of the SFRY, Warning to the attention of the President of Croatia, the Government of Croatia and the General Staff of the Croatian Army, 1 October 1991.
[1358] Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY), 1997, Chapter 2.9.
[1359] UN General Assembly, Res. 2444 (XXIII), 19 December 1968, § 1(b).
[1360] ICRC, Protection of the Civilian Population against the Dangers of Hostilities, Documents submitted to the First Session of the Conference of Government Experts, 24 May–12 June 1971, Vol. III, Geneva, January 1971, p. 38.
[1361] UN General Assembly, Res. 2675 (XXV), 9 December 1970, preamble and § 7.
[1362] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/152, 20 December 1993, § 8.
[1363] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/207, 23 December 1994, § 9.

Conventions . . . and the Additional Protocols thereto . . ., [and] to protect all civilians from acts of reprisal and violence".[1364] The same appeal was reiterated in 1994.[1365]

1250. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN Commission on Human Rights noted "with deep concern that the civilian population is still the target of . . . acts of reprisal". It urged "all Afghan parties fully to respect accepted humanitarian rules, as set out in the [1949] Geneva Conventions . . . and the Additional Protocols thereto . . . to halt the use of weapons against the civilian population and to protect all civilians".[1366]

1251. In 1993, in a report on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted, with respect to Chad, that:

> Numerous killings were said to have taken place during counter-insurgency operations and reprisal attacks against persons perceived by government security forces as members or supporters of rebel groups because of their ethnic origin or place of residence.
>
> The Special Rapporteur received alarming reports about massive killings of civilians by security forces in the regions of Moyen-Chari and Logone Oriental during the first half of 1993. A number of these killings were said to have been committed in retaliation for earlier attacks on security forces by armed opposition groups.[1367]

In a subsequent report in 1994, the Special Rapporteur noted that:

> The Special Rapporteur continued to receive alarming reports of extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions of civilians by members of the Chadian army. According to the information received, the authorities did not take any steps to prevent such acts. On 26 August 1994, the Special Rapporteur sent an urgent appeal to the Government after receiving reports of the extrajudicial execution of more than 25 villagers in the Kaga district between 12 and 14 August 1994. The victims were said to have included at least two minors, Justin Helkom (15) and Raymond Ekoudjewa (16). According to the reports received, the killings were reprisal actions by the army after the death of five soldiers during armed confrontations between the security forces and the rebel Forces Armées pour la République Fédérale (Armed Forces for the Federal Republic, FARF).[1368]

1252. In 1994, in a report on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission stated with respect to Turkey that:

[1364] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/66, 10 March 1993, § 6.
[1365] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/84, 9 March 1994, § 8.
[1366] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/74, 8 March 1995, preamble and § 6.
[1367] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/7, 7 December 1993, §§ 190 and 192.
[1368] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/61, 14 December 1994, § 88.

The reports and allegations received by the Special Rapporteur indicate that violations of the right to life continued to occur during 1994 in the context of the armed conflict between government security forces and guerrillas of the Partiya Karkeren Kurdistan (Kurdish Workers' Party, PKK) in the south-eastern parts of Turkey . . .

The Special Rapporteur sent four urgent appeals to the Government. Fears had been expressed for the lives of [individuals], who were said to have been detained during a raid by the security forces at their village, allegedly in reprisal for the refusal of the villagers to participate in the village guard system for fear of reprisal attacks from the PKK.[1369]

The report also noted that, following the urgent appeals, "the Government [of Turkey] replied to the [Special Rapporteur], informing him that shots had been fired from within the village of Payamli against gendarmes performing a field operation in the vicinity of the village".[1370]

1253. In 1994, in a report on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated with respect to Mali that:

The Special Rapporteur transmitted to the Government allegations he had received according to which . . . civilians and members of the Tuareg ethnic group . . . were killed in April 1994 by members of the Malian armed forces, reportedly in reprisal for the killing on the previous day of two soldiers by former Tuareg fighters who had joined the army . . .

On 4 August 1994, the Government informed the Special Rapporteur that [s]ome of the former MFUA combatants, who had been integrated into the army in 1991, reportedly deserted and committed acts of violence against their former colleagues and civilians.[1371]

1254. In 1994, in a report on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that "the new Government [of Rwanda] pledges not only to refrain from taking measures or acts of reprisal but also to punish any persons engaging in such acts".[1372]

1255. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights deplored the fact that "in Rwanda, genocide and reprisals are dialectically linked: genocide seems inevitably to lead to reprisals . . . All the acts committed [violations of property rights, of the right to personal safety and of the right to life] taken together would appear to constitute reprisals by the victims of genocide".[1373]

[1369] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/61, 14 December 1994, §§ 308–309.

[1370] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/61, 14 December 1994, § 311.

[1371] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/61, 14 December 1994, §§ 213–214.

[1372] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Rwanda, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/12, 12 August 1994, § 30.

[1373] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Rwanda, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/71, 17 January 1995, §§ 29–34.

1256. In 1995, in a joint report on the situation in Colombia, the Special Rapporteurs of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Torture and on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions reported that:

> One of the most salient recent cases of human rights violations by members of the security forces was the killing of 10 civilians, mostly fishermen, from the village of Puerto Lleras by soldiers from the Artillery Group No. 19 Revéiz Pizarro of the Colombian Army on 3 January 1994. The massacre was said to have been carried out in reprisal for a guerrilla attack against a military base earlier on the same day, in which three soldiers had died.[1374]

1257. In 1997, in a report on the situation of human rights in Zaire (DRC), the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights reported that, in Lutabura, "FAZ, with the help of civilians, killed some 100 Banyamulengue as a reprisal for [a] massacre . . . in Epombo".[1375]

1258. In 1995, in a report concerning the conflict in Guatemala, MINUGUA recommended to the URNG that "it should also prevent any retaliatory attacks against civilian persons or property".[1376] In a subsequent report, MINUGUA urged the URNG "to refrain from attacks on civilian property, such as its destruction of installations on rural estates in retaliation against agricultural producers who refuse to pay the so-called 'war tax', and any other kind of reprisal".[1377] In two further reports, MINUGUA reiterated its denunciations of actions against civilian property or reprisals as violations of the commitment to end the suffering of the civilian population. These statements were made in the context of the collection of so-called "war taxes".[1378]

Other International Organisations

1259. No practice was found.

International Conferences

1260. At the CDDH, the ICRC suggested an amendment which contained two proposals on draft Article 6(3) (entitled "Fundamental guarantees"). Proposal I stated that "measures comparable with reprisals and violating the provisions of this Protocol against the persons referred to in paragraph 1 are prohibited". Proposal II stated that "countermeasures violating the provisions of this Protocol

[1374] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Torture and Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Joint report on the visit by the Special Rapporteurs to Colombia from 17 to 26 October 1994, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/111, 16 January 1995, § 59.

[1375] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Zaire, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/6, 28 January 1997, § 191.

[1376] MINUGUA, Director, First report, UN Doc. A/49/856, 1 March 1995, Annex, § 194.

[1377] MINUGUA, Director, Second report, UN Doc. A/49/929, 29 June 1995, Annex, § 198.

[1378] MINUGUA, Director, Third report, UN Doc. A/50/482, 12 October 1995, Annex, §§ 145 and 206; Fourth report, UN Doc. A/50/878, 24 February 1996, Annex, §§ 156 and 170(b).

and taken against the persons referred to in paragraph 1, even when intended to make the adverse Party respect his own obligations, are prohibited".[1379]

1261. At the CDDH, the ICRC submitted a suggested amendment to AP II containing a draft Article 10 bis provisionally entitled "Prohibition of reprisals", which read:

> Failure by a Party to the conflict to observe the provisions of this Protocol shall not entitle the adverse Party to take countermeasures infringing the provisions of this Protocol against persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take a part in hostilities, whether or not their liberty has been restricted, and against medical units and transports, even if the aim of such countermeasures is to make the adverse Party respect his own obligations.[1380]

This draft provision was rejected in the plenary session by 41 votes in favour, 20 against and 22 abstentions.[1381]

1262. At the CDDH, the report of the sub-group on reprisals of Working Group B of Committee I on draft AP II contained the following suggested provision: "The provisions of Parts II and III and of articles . . . shall not, in any circumstances or for any reason whatsoever, be violated, even in response to a violation of the provisions of the Protocol".[1382] Committee I of the CDDH subsequently adopted a draft Article 10 bis AP II in Part II entitled "Humane treatment of persons in the power of the Parties to the conflict". The provision read: "The provisions of Parts II and III and of Articles 26, 26 bis and 28 shall not, in any circumstances or for any reason whatsoever, be violated, even in response to a violation of the provisions of the Protocol".[1383]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1263. In a decision in the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) in 1995, the ICTY stated that:

> The emergence of international rules governing internal strife has occurred at two different levels: at the level of customary law and at that of treaty law. Two bodies of rules have thus crystallised, which are by no means conflicting or inconsistent, but instead mutually support and supplement each other. Indeed, the interplay between these two sets of rules is such that some treaty rules have gradually become part of customary law. This holds true for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions . . . but also applies to Article 19 of the Hague Convention for the Protection

[1379] ICRC, Suggested amendment to Article 6 draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/I/302, 23 April 1976, p. 19.
[1380] ICRC, Suggested amendment to Article 10 bis draft AP II submitted to the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IV, CDDH/I/302, 23 April 1976, p. 37.
[1381] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 109.
[1382] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/405/Rev. 1, Annex II (circulated as Working Group document CDDH/I/GT/95), 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 234.
[1383] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/405/Rev. 1, Annex IV, 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 283.

of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict of 14 May 1954, and . . . to the core of Additional Protocol II of 1977.[1384]

According to the ICTY, UN General Assembly Resolutions 2444 (XXIII) of 1968 and 2675 (XXV) of 1970 "were declaratory of the principles of customary international law regarding the protection of civilian populations and property in armed conflicts of any kind".[1385] As to the customary character of the provisions of AP II, the ICTY stated that "many provisions of this Protocol can now be regarded as declaratory of existing rules or as having crystallised emerging rules of customary law or else as having been strongly instrumental in their evolution as general principles".[1386]

1264. In the review of the indictment in the Martić case in 1996 in which the accused was held accountable for having knowingly and wilfully ordered the shelling of Zagreb in May 1995, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

> 16. . . . Although [AP II] does not specifically refer to reprisals against civilians, a prohibition against such reprisals must be inferred from its Article 4. Reprisals against civilians are contrary to the absolute and non-derogable prohibitions enumerated in this provision. Prohibited behaviour must remain so "at any time and in any place whatsoever". The prohibition of reprisals against civilians in non-international armed conflicts is strengthened by the inclusion of the prohibition of "collective punishments" in [Article 4(2)(b) AP II].
> 17. Therefore, the rule which states that reprisals against the civilian population as such, or individual civilians, are prohibited in all circumstances, even when confronted by wrongful behaviour of the other party, is an integral part of customary international law and must be respected in all armed conflicts.[1387]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1265. In 1980, the ICRC reminded an armed opposition group of its commitment to respect the fundamental rules of IHL, in particular that "nobody will be held responsible for acts he didn't commit", which according to the ICRC, "excludes from the outset every recourse to acts of reprisals".[1388]

1266. In a declaration issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross reminded the parties of their obligation to protect the life, dignity and human rights of combatants and civilians under their authority from all acts of violence or reprisals, on the basis of the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[1389]

[1384] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 98.
[1385] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 112.
[1386] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 117.
[1387] ICTY, Martić case, Review of the Indictment, 8 March 1996, §§ 16–17.
[1388] ICRC archive document.
[1389] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1o. de enero de 1994, 3 January 1994.

VI. Other Practice

1267. In 1990, the Committee on Justice and Human Rights of the Senate of the Philippines reported that members of the media viewed some military counterinsurgency operations as having been carried out as wanton reprisals, with little or no regard to the social and human costs. These views were expressed in the context of the internal situation.[1390]

1268. According to the Report on the Practice of the Philippines, Human Rights Advocates of Negroes, a Philippine NGO, reported in 1990 that reprisals were frequent in the conduct of counterinsurgency operations. An operation carried out in response to an attack on a military detachment had caused destruction of property and the evacuation and deaths of civilians.[1391]

1269. Kalshoven stated that:

> The question of whether retaliatory actions in the context of armed conflict constitute belligerent reprisals will ... depend on the status of the parties to such actions, that is on whether these can be regarded as a State or similar autonomous entity. This is already apparent in the event of civil war, where the concept of belligerent reprisals can only find application to the extent that the insurgents have succeeded in establishing themselves as an essentially autonomous party, for instance by bringing part of the territory under their effective control.[1392]

With regard to the taking of white hostages by an armed opposition group that occurred in the armed conflict in the Congo (DRC) (Stanleyville) in 1964, Kalshoven stated that:

> [The] episode involving measures on the part of a belligerent ... could at first sight be taken for belligerent reprisals ... The scope of the rebellion and the nature of the actions on both sides were such that the situation could without any doubt be classified as an internal armed conflict ... [The central Government] resorted to the employment of white mercenaries and of bombing aircraft manned by foreign pilots ... On the other hand, the insurgents (who likewise received outside support) took to holding as hostages the white residents whom they found in the areas under their control ... The rebels announced that they would hold all the whites as hostages so long as [the adversary] would not desist from the use of mercenaries.[1393]

However, Kalshoven, further developing the facts, concluded that:

> The taking of hostages, far from serving to enforce the law of war, in reality was designed to exert influence on the progress of the military operations ... Thus, the policy of keeping hostages as applied by the insurgents in Stanleyville lacked the characteristic feature of a belligerent reprisal: it was not so much a means to enforce [1390] Philippines, Senate, Report of the Committee on Justice and Human Rights, 1990, Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9.

[1391] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9, referring to Report of the Human Rights Advocates of Negroes, 1990.
[1392] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, p. 36.
[1393] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, pp. 305–306.

the law of war as to guarantee the insurgents a degree of safety and to further their policy objectives.[1394]

Therefore, Kalshoven considered that the actions taken were a violation of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[1395]

[1394] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, p. 311.
[1395] Frits Kalshoven, Belligerent Reprisals, A. W. Sijthof, Leyden, 1971, p. 315.

CHAPTER 42

RESPONSIBILITY AND REPARATION

A. Responsibility for Violations of International Humanitarian Law

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) provides that "a belligerent Party which violates the provisions of the [1907 Hague Regulations] shall . . . be responsible for all acts committed by persons forming part of its armed forces".

2. Articles 51 GC I, 52 GC II, 131 GC III and 148 GC IV provide that "no High Contracting Party shall be allowed to absolve itself or any other High Contracting Party of any liability incurred by itself or by another High Contracting Party in respect of [grave breaches of these Conventions]".

3. Article 91 AP I provides that "a Party to the conflict which violates the provisions of the Conventions or of this Protocol . . . shall be responsible for all acts committed by persons forming part of its armed forces". Article 91 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]

4. Article 38 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "no provision in this Protocol relating to individual criminal responsibility shall affect the responsibility of States under international law, including the duty to provide reparation".

Other Instruments

5. Article 5 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Responsibility of States", provides that "prosecution of an individual for a crime against the peace and security of mankind does not relieve a State of any responsibility under international law for an act or omission attributable to it".

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.46, 31 May 1977, p. 344.

6. Article 4 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Responsibility of States", provides that "the fact that the present Code provides for the responsibility of individuals for crimes against the peace and security of mankind is without prejudice to any question of the responsibility of States under international law".

7. Article 1 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Responsibility of a State for its internationally wrongful acts", provides that "every internationally wrongful act of a State entails the international responsibility of that State".

8. Article 2 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Elements of an internationally wrongful act of a State", provides that:

> There is an internationally wrongful act of a State when conduct consisting of an act or omission:
>
> a) Is attributable to the State under international law; and > b) Constitutes a breach of an international obligation of the State.

This "wrongful act of a State" can be the consequence of the conduct of any State organ (Article 4). The conduct is attributed to the State even if the organ is acting in exceeding its authority or contravening instructions (Article 7). Furthermore, attribution to the State can also be made in the case of the conduct of other entities empowered to exercise elements of the government authority (Article 5), of persons acting in fact under the instructions or, in case of absence or default of the official authorities, on behalf of the State (Articles 8 and 9), of organs placed at its disposal by another State (Article 6), or of the act of an insurrectional movement which becomes the new government of a State or which results in the formation of a new State (Article 10). Moreover, conduct which is not attributable to a State "shall nevertheless be considered an act of that State under international law if and to the extent that the State acknowledges and adopts the conduct in question as its own" (Article 11).

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

9. Argentina's Law of War Manual, referring to Articles 51 GC I, 52 GC II, 131 GC III and 148 GC IV, provides that "the contracting States cannot absolve themselves nor absolve any other contracting party of the liabilities incurred with respect to [grave breaches in the meaning of the Geneva Conventions]".[2] Referring to Article 91 AP I, the manual further provides that "the party which violates the Conventions or Protocol I shall . . . be responsible for all acts committed by the members of its armed forces".[3]

[2] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.04.
[3] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.10.

10. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "parties to the conflict are responsible for all acts committed by persons forming part of its armed forces".[4] It further states that "no state is allowed to absolve itself of any liability in respect to the Geneva Conventions".[5]

11. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that:

> As subjects of international law, the States answer to the international community for the violations or failures to act of their agents or civil servants when they have impunity. They are also subject to the political, economic and legal sanctions imposed on them by the international community.[6]

12. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Article 91 AP I and Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV), provides that "a party to a conflict which does not comply with the provisions of international humanitarian law . . . shall be responsible for all acts committed by persons forming part of its armed forces".[7]

13. The Military Manual of the Netherlands refers to Article 91 AP I and states that:

> A party to the conflict is responsible for all acts committed by persons who are members of their armed forces. The responsibility applies not only towards those who have suffered damage and towards other parties to the conflict, but also towards the public opinion. This responsibility can result in pressure to respect the accepted rules of humanitarian law of war.[8]

14. New Zealand's Military Manual, referring to Articles 51 GC I, 52 GC II, 131 GC III and 148 GC IV, states that "insofar as the liability of the State is concerned, it is important to note that the Geneva Conventions provide that no Contracting Party is able to absolve itself of liability for any grave breach of those Conventions".[9]

15. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "belligerent states are responsible for all acts committed by persons forming part of their armed forces".[10]

16. Russia's Military Manual notes that "IHL lays down: . . . the responsibility of States . . . as regards violations of the rules of IHL".[11]

17. Spain's LOAC Manual, referring to Article 91 AP I, provides that "the State is responsible for all acts committed by persons who are part of its Armed Forces".[12] In another provision, referring to Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) and Article 91 AP I, the manual states that a belligerent party "will be held responsible for the acts committed by persons who are part of its armed forces".[13]

[4] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 9.
[5] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 11.
[6] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 35.
[7] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1214.
[8] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-3.
[9] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1605(2).
[10] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 7.
[11] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 1.
[12] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.2.
[13] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.10.f.

18. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "violations of the laws and customs of war, commonly called war crimes, engage . . . the responsibility of the State to which the authors of the violation belong".[14]
19. The UK Military Manual reproduces Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV).[15]
20. The US Field Manual refers to Articles 51 GC I, 52 GC II, 131 GC III and 148 GC IV and states that "no High Contracting Party shall be allowed to absolve itself or any other High Contracting Party of any liability incurred by itself or by another High Contracting Party in respect of breaches referred to in the preceding Article [war crimes]".[16]
21. The US Air Force Pamphlet, in a provision stating the obligation of States to pay compensation for violations of IHL, states that:

> However, as a general rule, in the absence of some cause for fault such as inadequate supervision or training, no obligation for compensation arises on the part of a state for other violations of the law of armed conflict committed by individual members outside their general area of responsibility.[17]

22. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) establishes the responsibility of parties to conflicts for violations of the law of war regardless of whether the violations were carried out on instructions or with the knowledge of the government or supreme command.[18]

National Legislation
23. No practice was found.

National Case-law
24. In its judgement in the Reparation Payments case in 1963 relating to claims for compensation for slave labour during the Second World War, Germany's Federal Supreme Court held that no decision could be reached on the merits of the claim until there was a final reparations agreement between the plaintiff's government and Germany, as it found that the London Agreement on German External Debts of 27 February 1953 had postponed the question of indemnification of individuals to when the issue of reparations more generally had been settled.[19]
25. In the Distomo case in 2003, the German Federal Supreme Court stated that the responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts committed during hostilities "comprises liability for the acts of all persons belonging to the armed forces, and this not only in case these persons commit acts falling

[14] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 191.
[15] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 618.
[16] US, Field Manual (1956), § 503.
[17] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-3.
[18] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 19.
[19] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Reparation Payments case, Judgement, 26 February 1963.

within their sphere of competence, but also in case they act without or against orders".[20]

26. In the Eichmann case in 1961, Israel's District Court of Jerusalem stated that "it is true that under international law Germany bears not only moral, but also legal, responsibility for all the crimes that were committed as its own 'acts of State', including the crimes attributed to the accused".[21]

27. In its judgement in the Priebke case (Trial of First Instance) in 1996, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome held that Italy had been responsible for an attack in 1944 perpetrated against German soldiers by Italian partisans. It stated that although the partisans were not legitimate combatants, Italy had encouraged their actions during the war and had officially recognised them after the conflict. Accordingly, the Tribunal concluded, their actions could be ascribed to the State which was thus internationally responsible for the attack.[22]

28. In its judgement in the J. T. case in 1949 in which an individual had sued the State for repayment of money taken by the police during the arrest of the claimant during the occupation of the Netherlands by the German army, the District Court of The Hague held that the State of the Netherlands must repay the money to the plaintiff. It held that it was true that the State was not liable for all acts committed by the resistance movement (Binnenlandse Strijdkrachten) which had been organized with the consent of the government in exile during the Second World War, but since it was definitely established that the money had come into the hands of the police, restitution had to be made.[23]

Other National Practice

29. In 1992, during a debate in the UN General Assembly, Argentina recommended that "belligerents engaged in an armed conflict, whether international or non-international, should . . . use those means which were least apt to cause damage to the environment, damage for which they would then be responsible".[24]

30. In 1991, during a debate in the UN General Assembly on the environmental impact of the Gulf War, Austria stated that "there could be no doubt as to the illegality of the acts committed by Iraq, entailing international responsibility of that State".[25]

[20] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Distomo case, Judgement, 26 June 2003.
[21] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, § 28.
[22] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 1 August 1996.
[23] Netherlands, District Court of The Hague, J. T. case, Judgement, 13 April 1949.
[24] Argentina, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/47/SR.8, 1 October 1992, § 23.
[25] Austria, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/46/SR.19, 23 October 1991, § 5.

31. In 1983, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the representative of China stated that:

> In his delegation's view, such crimes could be committed by both individuals and States and the responsibility of either would vary only as to its character or extent. The 1954 draft Code did not exclude the responsibility of States . . . In addition, that type of crime could not be prevented unless the responsibility of States was established. The argument that it would be repetitive to attribute responsibility to States in the draft Code was not valid, because the Code dealt exclusively with offences against the peace and security of mankind and should be complete on that score.[26]

32. The Report on the Practice of Indonesia, referring to an interview with a senior officer of the armed forces, states that "in case of violations of international humanitarian law incurred by the State or by individuals compatible with the State, the Government of Indonesia will take over such responsibility".[27]

33. In 1991, during a debate in the UN General Assembly on the environmental impact of the Gulf War, Iran stated that "there were well-established rules of both customary and treaty law which held a party to a conflict responsible for unnecessary damage to the environment".[28]

34. In 1997, during a debate concerning UNIFIL in the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Israel stated that "Israel's action in providing medical assistance to injured members of UNIFIL had been a purely humanitarian gesture which should under no circumstances be interpreted as an admission of any responsibility" for Israel's attack on a UNIFIL compound at Qana and the costs resulting therefrom.[29]

35. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, "Israel acknowledges and supports the view that States bear a responsibility under international law, for all violations of the laws of war perpetrated by them or by individuals under their responsibility".[30]

36. At the CDDH, Mexico stated that "the State was responsible for all acts committed by its bodies and not only for acts committed by persons forming part of its armed forces".[31]

37. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict

[26] China, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/38/SR.52, 23 November 1983, § 25.
[27] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Interview with a senior officer of the armed forces, Chapter 6.2.
[28] Iran, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/46/SR.18, 22 October 1991, § 32.
[29] Israel, Statement before the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.5/51/SR.70, 6 June 1997, § 25.
[30] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 6.2.
[31] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.46, 31 May 1977, p. 344, § 23.

areas, Norway stated that "States need to hold States . . . accountable for their attacks on humanitarian workers operating in territory under their control".[32]

38. In 1993, in a debate in the UN Security Council on draft Resolution 824 on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Pakistan stated that:

> We believe that the Security Council must take immediate appropriate measures, including the authorization of the use of force under Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter, to ensure: . . . the institution of appropriate measures for reparations for the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Serbia and Montenegro; that Serbia and Montenegro is liable, under international law, for any direct loss or damage, including environmental damage, or injury to foreign Governments, nationals and corporations as a result of its aggression against the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina.[33]

39. At the First CCW Review Conference in 1995, the observer for Peru, with respect to certain conventional weapons including anti-personnel landmines, stated that "provisions were needed to determine the responsibility of States for injuries suffered by non-combatant victims and for environmental damage".[34]

40. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case in 1995, commenting on the UN Security Council's finding that Iraq was internationally responsible for environmental damage as a result of its invasion of Kuwait, the Solomon Islands observed that this finding "can only have been based on general international law, as it has evolved following the adoption" of the Additional Protocols, being as Iraq was not a party to the 1976 ENMOD Convention or to AP I.[35]

41. The Report on the Practice of Spain refers to a number of bilateral treaties concluded in the second part of the 19th century between Spain and South American republics which include clauses concerning responsibility in armed conflict. The report states that:

> All these treaties allow either Government of the States Parties to invoke the other Government's responsibility for damages suffered in the territory of the latter and caused by rebels in the case of insurrection, civil war, or sedition or by savage tribes or hordes, if the authorities of the country can be shown . . . to have been at fault or negligence.[36]

[32] Norway, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 10.

[33] Pakistan, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3208 (Provisional), 6 May 1993, p. 16.

[34] Peru, Statement at the First CCW Review Conference, Vienna, 25 September–13 October 1995, UN Doc. CCW/CONF.I/SR.5, 27 September 1995, § 40.

[35] Solomon Islands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 19 June 1995, § 4.92.

[36] Report on the Practice of Spain, 1998, Chapter 6.2, referring to Agreement renewing the suspended relations between Spain and Venezuela, signed in Santander on 12 August 1861, bases 1–6, the Treaty supplementing the treaty of peace and friendship (28 January 1885) between Spain and Ecuador, signed in Madrid on 23 May 1888, Article III, the Treaty supplementing the treaty of peace and friendship (30 January 1881) between Spain and Colombia, signed in Bogotá on 28 April 1894, Article IV and the Treaty supplementing the treaty of peace and friendship (14 August 1879) between Spain and Peru, signed in Lima on 16 July 1897, Article IV.

42. In France and Others v. Turkey before the ECiHR in 1983, Turkey argued that:

> For a State to be liable, a violation must . . . continue to exist after the exhaustion of domestic remedies, and so become an act of the State itself. If the State has set up effective machinery to prosecute offences committed by its officials, these offences cannot be imputed to it. It is not correct that incidents which do not amount to administrative practices should be imputed to the Turkish Government. The persons committing such acts are personally responsible.[37]

43. In 1991, in a report to submitted to the UN Security Council on operations in the Gulf War, the UK stated, with respect to the treatment of British POWs by Iraq, that "the Iraqi Ambassador was reminded of the responsibility of his Government . . . for any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[38]

44. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense referred to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV and stated that "in a separate article common to the four 1949 Geneva Conventions, no nation has the authority to absolve itself or any other nation party to those treaties of any liability incurred by the commission of a Grave Breach".[39] The report also noted that:

> On 15 October [1990], the [US] President warned Iraq of its liability for war crimes. The United States was successful in incorporating into [UN Security Council] Resolution 674 . . . language regarding Iraq's accountability for its war crimes, in particular its potential liability for Grave Breaches of the GC, and inviting States to collect relevant information regarding Iraqi Grave Breaches and provide it to the Security Council.[40]

45. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that "in principle, a state is responsible for any unlawful act of its armed forces in the course of an armed conflict, but not for private acts of members of its armed forces".[41]

46. In the Application of Genocide Convention case (Provisional Measures) in 1993 brought by Bosnia and Herzegovina against the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the latter, in its written observations on the request for the indication of provisional measures, requested the ICJ "'to establish the responsibility of the authorities' of Bosnia-Herzegovina for acts of genocide against the Serb people in Bosnia-Herzegovina".[42]

[37] Turkey, Arguments submitted to the ECiHR, France and Others v. Turkey, Decision on the admissibility of the applications, 6 December 1983, Facts II(6).
[38] UK, Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22117, 21 January 1991, p. 1.
[39] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 633.
[40] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 634.
[41] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.3.
[42] FRY, Written observations on the request for the indication of provisional measures submitted to the ICJ, Application of Genocide Convention case (Provisional Measures), Order, 8 April 1993, § 43.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

47. In a resolution adopted in 1990, the UN Security Council reminded Iraq that "under international law it is liable for any loss, damage, or injury arising in regard to Kuwait and third States and their nationals and corporations, as a result of the invasion and illegal occupation of Kuwait by Iraq."[43]

48. In a resolution adopted in March 1991, the UN Security Council, acting explicitly under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, demanded that:

> Iraq implement its acceptance of all twelve resolutions noted above and in particular that Iraq . . .
>
> (b) accept in principle its liability under international law for any loss, damage or injury arising in regard to Kuwait and third States and their nationals and corporations, as a result of the invasion and illegal occupation of Kuwait by Iraq.[44]

49. In Resolution 687 adopted in April 1991, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that:

> Iraq, without prejudice to its debts and obligations arising prior to 2 August 1990, which will be addressed through the normal mechanisms, is liable under international law for any direct loss, damage – including environmental damage and the depletion of natural resources – or injury to foreign Governments, nationals and corporations as a result of its unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait.[45]

50. In a resolution adopted in 1993 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that "States are to be held accountable for violations of human rights which their agents commit on their own territory or on the territory of another State".[46]

51. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution entitled "Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts", to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility were annexed. In the resolution, the UN General Assembly noted that "the subject of responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts is of major importance in the relations of States". In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[47]

52. In 2001, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General noted that:

[43] UN Security Council, Res. 674, 29 October 1990, § 8.
[44] UN Security Council, Res. 686, 2 March 1991, § 2(b).
[45] UN Security Council, Res. 687, 3 April 1991, § 16.
[46] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/153, 20 December 1993, § 12.
[47] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.

Armed groups have a direct responsibility, according to Article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 1949 and to customary international humanitarian law, to protect civilian populations in armed conflict. International instruments require not only Governments but also armed groups to behave responsibly in conflict situations, and to take measures to ensure the basic needs and protection of civilian populations. Where Governments do not have resources and capacities to do this unaided, it is incumbent on them to invoke the support of the international system.[48]

The Secretary-General recommended that "in its resolutions the Security Council should emphasize the direct responsibility of armed groups under international humanitarian law".[49]

53. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights, having described several cases of killing, abduction and looting committed by SPLA soldiers, referred to a report of Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS) noting that "responsibility for the attack clearly lies with SPLA/M and, as such, is a clear violation of the new ground rules". In his conclusions and recommendations, the Special Rapporteur also noted that:

Most of the reported gross violations and atrocities, especially killings and abduction of civilians, looting and hostage taking of relief workers, were committed during 1995 by dissident commanders, mainly those who had split from SSIA in previous years. SPLA bears responsibility for the violations and atrocities committed in 1995 by local commanders from its own ranks, although it has not been proved that they committed these actions on orders from the senior leadership, nor is it known whether they have been or will be pardoned by superiors.[50]

54. In 1996, in a report on a mission to North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences recommended, inter alia, that, at the national level:

The Government of Japan should:

(a) Acknowledge that the system of comfort stations set up by the Japanese Imperial Army during the Second World War was a violation of its obligations under international law and accept legal responsibility for that violation.[51]

55. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador stated that:

[48] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, § 7.

[49] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, Recommendation 9.

[50] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Sudan, Interim report, UN Doc. A/50/569, 16 October 1995, Annex, §§ 65–67 and 73.

[51] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences, Report on the mission to the North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1, 4 January 1996, § 137(a).

The State of El Salvador, through the activities of members of the armed forces and/or civilian officials, is responsible for having taken part in, encouraged and tolerated the operations of the death squads which illegally attacked members of the civilian population.[52]

56. In its Commentary on Article 5 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the ILC stated that "the State may thus remain responsible and be unable to exonerate itself from responsibility by invoking the prosecution or punishment of the individuals who committed the crime. It could be obliged to make reparation for injury caused by its agents."[53]

57. Article 14(3) of the 1996 version of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility of the ILC, provisionally adopted on first reading, stated that the fact that the conduct of an organ of an insurrectional movement was not to be considered an act of State "is without prejudice to the attribution of the conduct of the organ of the insurrectional movement to that movement in any case in which such attribution may be made under international law".[54] As to the subsequent deletion of this Article, the ILC's Special Rapporteur stated that:

Turning to the substance of the rules stated in the two articles, the first point to note in that article 14, paragraph 3 deals with the international responsibility of liberation movements which are, ex hypothesi, not States. It therefore falls outside the scope of the draft articles and should be omitted. The responsibility of such movements, for example, for breaches of international humanitarian law, can certainly be envisaged, but this can be dealt with in the commentary.[55]

58. In 2001, in its commentary on Article 7 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, the ILC stated that:

(7) The central issue to be addressed in determining the applicability of article 7 to unauthorized conduct of official bodies is whether the conduct was performed by the body in an official capacity or not. Cases where officials acted in their capacity as such, albeit unlawfully or contrary to instructions, must be distinguished from cases where the conduct is so removed from the scope of their official functions that it should be assimilated to that of private individuals, not attributable to the State. In the words of the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal, the question is whether the conduct has been "carried out by persons cloaked with governmental authority".

(8) The problem of drawing the line between unauthorized but still "official" conduct, on the one hand, and "private" conduct on the other, may be avoided if the conduct complained of is systematic or recurrent, such that the State knew or ought to have known of it and should have taken steps to prevent it. However, the distinction between the two situations still needs to be made

[52] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, p. 137.

[53] ILC, Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-third Session, Yearbook of the International Law Commission, 1991, Vol. II, Part 2, Commentary on Article 5, § 2.

[54] ILC, 1996 Draft Articles on State Responsibility, UN Doc. A/CN.4/L.524, 21 June 1996, p. 4.

[55] ILC, First report on State responsibility by the Special Rapporteur, Addendum, UN Doc. A/CN.4/490/Add.5, 22 July 1998, § 275.

> in some cases, for example when considering isolated instances of outrageous conduct on the part of persons who are officials. That distinction is reflected in the expression "if the organ, person or entity acts in that capacity" in article 7. This indicates that the conduct referred to comprises only the actions and omissions of organs purportedly or apparently carrying out their official functions, and not the private actions or omissions of individuals who happen to be organs or agents of the State. In short, the question is whether they were acting with apparent authority.[56]

In its Commentary on Article 8, the ILC further underlines that "in any event it is a matter for appreciation in each case whether particular conduct was or was not carried out under the control of a State, to such an extent that the conduct controlled should be attributed to it".[57]

Other International Organisations

59. No practice was found.

International Conferences

60. The Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in 2001 adopted a declaration stating that "the participating High Contracting Parties recall that according to art. 148 [GC IV] no High Contracting Party shall be allowed to absolve itself of any liability incurred by itself in respect to grave breaches".[58]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

61. In the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ, with respect to a possible responsibility of the US for the activities of the contras, stated that:

United States participation, even if preponderant and decisive, in the financing, organizing, training, supplying and equipping of the contras, the selection of its military or paramilitary targets, and the planning of the whole of its operations, is still insufficient in itself, on the basis of the evidence in the possession of the Court, for the purpose of attributing to the United States the acts committed by the contras in the course of their military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua. All the forms of United States participation mentioned above, and even the general control by the respondent State over a force with a high degree of dependency on it, would not in themselves mean, without further evidence, that the United States directed or enforced the perpetration of the acts contrary to human rights and humanitarian law alleged by the applicant State. Such acts could well be committed by members of the contras without the control of the United States. For this conduct to give rise to legal responsibility of the United States, it would in principle have to be proved that that State had effective control of the military or paramilitary operations in the course of which the alleged violations were committed.[59]

[56] ILC, Commentary on Article 7 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, Report of the International Law Commission, 53rd session, UN Doc. A/56/10, New York, 2001, p. 102.
[57] ILC, Commentary on Article 8 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, Report of the International Law Commission, 53rd Session, UN Doc. A/56/10, New York, 2001, p. 107.
[58] Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, Declaration, § 13.

The ICJ concluded that it did not consider that the assistance given by the US to the contras warranted the conclusion that these forces were subject to the US to such an extent that the acts they committed were imputable to the latter.[60]

62. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

Under current international humanitarian law, in addition to individual criminal liability, State responsibility may ensue as a result of State officials engaging in torture or failing to prevent torture or to punish torturers. If carried out as an extensive practice of State officials, torture amounts to a serious breach on a widespread scale of an international obligation of essential importance for safeguarding the human being, thus constituting a particularly grave wrongful act generating State responsibility.[61]

63. In its judgement on appeal in the Tadić case in 1999, the ICTY Appeals Chamber discussed the issue of State responsibility for the actions of irregular troops in great detail, not in order to reach any conclusion concerning the actual responsibility of any State, but in order to determine whether the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina was international and, therefore, whether GC IV applied. During its discussion on the topic, the Appeals Chamber had to determine the type of relationship that had to exist between the irregular troops and the State in question for the latter to be considered responsible for the acts of the former. The Appeals Chamber was of the view that:

137. . . . international rules do not always require the same degree of control over armed groups or private individuals for the purpose of determining whether an individual not having the status of a State official under internal legislation can be regarded as a de facto organ of the State. The extent of the requisite State control varies. Where the question at issue is whether a single private individual or a group that is not militarily organised has acted as a de facto State organ when performing a specific act, it is necessary to ascertain whether specific instructions concerning the commission of that particular act had been issued by that State to the individual or group in question; alternatively, it must be established whether the unlawful act had been publicly endorsed or approved ex post facto by the State at issue. By contrast, control by a State over subordinate armed forces or militias or paramilitary units may be of an overall character (and must comprise more than the mere provision of financial assistance or military equipment or training). This requirement, however, does not go so far as to include the issuing of specific orders by the State, or its direction of each individual operation. Under international law it is by no means necessary that the controlling authorities should plan all the operations of the units dependent on them, choose their targets, or give specific instructions concerning the conduct of military operations and any alleged violations of international humanitarian law. The control required by international law may be deemed to exist when a State (or, in the context of an armed conflict, the Party to the conflict) has a role in organising, coordinating or planning the military actions of the military group, in addition to financing, training and equipping or providing operational support to that group. Acts performed by the group or members thereof may be regarded as acts of de facto State organs regardless of any specific instruction by the controlling State concerning the commission of each of those acts.

[59] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 115.
[60] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 116.
[61] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 142.

138. Of course, if, as in Nicaragua, the controlling State is not the territorial State where the armed clashes occur or where at any rate the armed units perform their acts, more extensive and compelling evidence is required to show that the State is genuinely in control of the units or groups not merely by financing and equipping them, but also by generally directing or helping plan their actions.
139. The same substantial evidence is required when, although the State in question is the territorial State where armed clashes occur, the general situation is one of turmoil, civil strife and weakened State authority.
140. Where the controlling State in question is an adjacent State with territorial ambitions on the State where the conflict is taking place, and the controlling State is attempting to achieve its territorial enlargement through the armed forces which it controls, it may be easier to establish the threshold.
141. It should be added that international law does not provide only for a test of overall control applying to armed groups and that of specific instructions (or subsequent public approval), applying to single individuals or militarily unorganised groups. The Appeals Chamber holds the view that international law also embraces a third test. This test is the assimilation of individuals to State organs on account of their actual behaviour within the structure of a State (and regardless of any possible requirement of State instructions) ...
145. In the light of the above discussion, the following conclusion may be safely reached. In the case at issue, given that the Bosnian Serb armed forces constituted a "military organization", the control of the FRY authorities over these armed forces required by international law for considering the armed conflict to be international was overall control going beyond the mere financing and equipping of such forces and involving also participation in the planning and supervision of military operations. By contrast, international rules do not require that such control should extend to the issuance of specific orders or instructions relating to single military actions, whether or not such actions were contrary to international humanitarian law.[62] [emphasis in original]

Applying this test to the facts before it, the Appeals Chamber concluded that in 1992 the YPA exercised the requisite measure of control over the Bosnian Serb army. Such control manifested itself not only by financial, logistical and other assistance and support, but also, and more importantly, in terms of participation in the general direction, coordination and supervision of the activities of the army of the Republika Srpska ("VRS").[63]

64. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber, referring to the Tadić case (Judgement on Appeal), stated that:

[62] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement on Appeal, 15 July 1999, §§ 137–145.
[63] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement on Appeal, 15 July 1999, §§ 147–157.

95. Aside from the direct intervention by HV forces, the Trial Chamber observes that Croatia exercised indirect control over the HVO and HZHB.
96. . . . Some degree of control exercised by a Party to a conflict over the perpetrators of the breaches is needed for them to be held criminally responsible on the basis of Article 2 of the Statute. The question of determining the degree of control required then arises.
. . .
99. The Appeals Chamber clearly laid out the three control criteria which allow the acts of individuals or groups to be ascribed to a foreign State, circumstances which transform what at first sight is an internal armed conflict into an international one
. . .
100. The matter is one of possibly imputing the acts of the HVO to the Republic of Croatia which would then confer an international nature upon the conflict played out in the Lasva Valley. It is the third criterion which applies in this instance. This criterion allows the degree of State control required by international law to be determined in order to be able to ascribe to a foreign State the acts of armed forces, militia and paramilitary units (hereinafter "organised groups"). The Appeals Chamber characterised it as a criterion of overall control . . .
101. . . . The factors which permit the existence of overall control to be proved may vary depending on the circumstances.
102. In this instance, the direct intervention of the HV in Bosnia and in the CBOZ has already been demonstrated above. Mention may be made of several other indications of Croatia's involvement in the conflict which rebut the Defence argument that the HV did indeed direct HVO operations, but only between March and June 1992 before the HVO became organised and prior to the outbreak of the conflict in central Bosnia between the Croatian and Muslim forces. The Trial Chamber concurs that the involvement of the HV and Croatia may appear more clear-cut at the start of the period under consideration but deems that it persisted throughout the conflict.
103. This involvement does not seem to be the result only of the particular circumstances prevailing at the time . . .
. . .
112. Croatia was . . . directly involved in the control of the HVO forces which were created on 8 April by the HZHB presidency . . .
. . .
114. The Defence furthermore did not challenge the fact that the HVO shared personnel, often from BH, with the HV . . .
. . .
118. The Bosnian Croat leaders followed the directions given by Zagreb or, at least, co-ordinated their decisions with the Croatian government. Co-ordination was manifest at various levels . . .
119. . . . The evidence demonstrates that there were regular meetings with President Tudjman and that the Bosnian Croat leaders, appointed by Croatia or with its consent, continued to direct the HZHB and the HVO well after June 1992.
120. Apart from providing manpower, Croatia also lent substantial material assistance to the HVO in the form of financial and logistical support . . . Croatia supplied the HVO with large quantities of arms and materiel in 1992, 1993 and 1994 . . . Equipment was also supplied to the ABiH but this ceased in 1993 during the conflict between the HVO and the ABiH. HVO troops were trained in Croatia.
. . .

122. In the light of all the foregoing and, in particular, the Croatian territorial ambitions in respect of Bosnia-Herzegovina detailed above, the Trial Chamber finds that Croatia, and more specifically former President Tudjman, was hoping to partition Bosnia and exercised such a degree of control over the Bosnian Croats and especially the HVO that it is justified to speak of overall control. Contrary to what the Defence asserted, the Trial Chamber concluded that the close ties between Croatia and the Bosnian Croats did not cease with the establishment of the HVO.
123. Croatia's indirect intervention would therefore permit the conclusion that the conflict was international.[64]

65. In its judgement on appeal in the Aleksovski case in 2000, the ICTY Appeals Chamber, referring to the Tadić and Nicaragua cases, stated that:

137. In the Aleksovski case, the question was whether the HVO forces, while not being official agents of the Croatian government, could be said to be acting as de facto agents of the Croatian State. In seeking to answer this question, the Majority Opinion made the following reference to the decision of the Appeals Chamber in the Tadić Jurisdiction Decision:

> The Appeals Chamber in the Tadić Interlocutory Decision did not specify the requisite degree of intervention by a foreign State in the territory of another State to internationalise an armed conflict. However, it did provide some guidance on the matter by indicating that the clashes between the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Bosnian Serb forces should be considered as internal, unless a "direct involvement" of the JNA could be proved, in which case the conflict should be considered to be an international one.

Further indication of the majority's reasoning is garnered from the following paragraph:

> A State can act in international law directly through governmental authorities and officials, or indirectly through individuals or organisations who, while not being official agents of the government, receive from it some power or assignment to perform acts on its behalf such that they become de facto agents.

138. The phrase "receive from it some power or assignment to perform acts on its behalf such that they become de facto agents," does, in the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, indicate that the position of the majority was that some kind of instruction was required in order for the requisite relationship between the Bosnian Croats and the Croatian State to be established. This is what the Prosecution refers to as the "specific instructions" test.
139. The Majority Opinion then referred to the ICJ decision in Nicaragua in this way:

> According to the International Court of Justice ("the ICJ"), where the relationship of a rebel force to a foreign State is one of such dependence on the one side and control on the other that it would be appropriate to equate the rebel force, for legal purposes, with an organ of that State, > or as acting on behalf of that State, then in such a case the conflict can be seen to be an international one, even if it is prima facie internal and there is no direct involvement of the armed forces of the State.

[64] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, §§ 95–123.

It made further reference to the reliance placed by the majority Judgement of Judge Stephen and Judge Vohrah in the Tadić case (first instance), "on the high standard expounded by the ICJ in the Nicaragua case in the sense that the international responsibility of a State can arise only if control is exercised ("directed and enforced") with respect to specific military or paramilitary operations."

140. In dealing with the relationship between the HV and HVO forces, the majority commented on a particular aspect of the evidence of the expert witness:

> The expert witness presented an order from the HVO (not the HV) – this distinction is very important – to their soldiers to remove the HV insignias (November–December 1992) because of potential problems to Croatia. While there is a document dated May 1993 which allowed the transfer/promotion of soldiers from the HVO to the HV, this does not in itself prove the dependency of the HVO on the HV.

141. The Appeals Chamber makes two observations about this paragraph. First, the fact that the Majority Opinion goes out of its way to mention that the order came from the HVO, and not the HV, and that the distinction was very important, highlights the weight the Trial Chamber attached to an order or instruction of the controlling State as a prerequisite for the attribution of acts of members of a military group to a State. Secondly, to the extent that the Majority Opinion uses dependency as a criterion, it is not consistent with the decision in the Tadić Judgement.
142. Significantly, the Majority Opinion concludes by finding that "the Prosecution failed to discharge its burden of proving that, during the time-period and in the place of the indictment, the HVO was in fact acting under the overall control of the HV in carrying out the armed conflict against Bosnia and Herzegovina."
143. The Appeals Chamber finds that, notwithstanding the express reference to "overall control", the Aleksovski Judgement did not in fact apply the test of overall control. Instead, the passages cited show that the majority gave prominence to the need for specific instructions or orders as a prerequisite for attributing the acts of the HVO to the State of Croatia, a showing that is not required under the test of overall control.
144. The test set forth in the Tadić Judgement of "overall control" and what is required to meet it constitutes a different standard from the "specific instructions" test employed by the majority in Aleksovski, or the reference to "direct involvement" in the Tadić Jurisdiction Decision.
145. The "overall control" test calls for an assessment of all the elements of control taken as a whole, and a determination to be made on that basis as to whether there was the required degree of control. Bearing in mind that the Appeals Chamber in the Tadić Judgement arrived at this test against the background of the "effective control" test set out by the decision of the ICJ in Nicaragua, and the "specific instructions" test used by the Trial Chamber in Tadić, the Appeals Chamber considers it appropriate to say that the standard established by the "overall control" test is not as rigorous as those tests.

146. To the extent that it provides for greater protection of civilian victims of armed conflicts, this different and less rigorous standard is wholly consistent with the fundamental purpose of Geneva Convention IV, which is to ensure "protection of civilians to the maximum extent possible."[65]

66. In its judgement on appeal in the Delalić case in 2001, the ICTY Appeals Chamber, referring to the Tadić, Aleksovski and Nicaragua cases, stated that:

13. The Appeals Chamber saw the question of internationality as turning on the issue of whether the Bosnian Serb forces "could be considered as de iure or de facto organs of a foreign power, namely the FRY". The important question was "what degree of authority or control must be wielded by a foreign State over armed forces fighting on its behalf in order to render international an armed conflict which is prima facie internal". The Chamber considered, after a review of various cases including Nicaragua, that international law does not always require the same degree of control over armed groups or private individuals for the purpose of determining whether they can be regarded as a de facto organ of the State. The Appeals Chamber found that there were three different standards of control under which an entity could be considered de facto organ of the State, each differing according to the nature of the entity. Using this framework, the Appeals Chamber determined that the situation with which it was concerned fell into the second category it identified, which was that of the acts of armed forces or militias or paramilitary units.
14. The Appeals Chamber determined that the legal test which applies to this category was the "overall control" test:

> In order to attribute the acts of a military or paramilitary group to a State, it must be proved that the State wields overall control over the group, not only by equipping and financing the group, but also by co-ordinating or helping in the general planning of its military activity. [. . .] However, it is not necessary that, in addition, the State should also issue, either to the head or to members of the group, instructions for the commission of specific acts contrary to international law.

15. Overall control was defined as consisting of more than "the mere provision of financial assistance or military equipment or training". Further, the Appeals Chamber adopted a flexible definition of this test, which allows it to take into consideration the diversity of situations on the field in present-day conflicts:

> This requirement, however, does not go so far as to include the issuing of specific orders by the State, or its direction of each individual operation. Under international law it is by no means necessary that the controlling authorities should plan all the operations of the units dependent on them, choose their targets, or give specific instructions concerning the conduct of military operations and any alleged violations of international humanitarian law. The control required by international law may be deemed to exist when a State (or in the context of an armed conflict, the Party to the conflict) has a role in organising, coordinating or planning the military actions of the military group, in addition to financing, training and equipping or providing operational support to that group. Acts performed by the group or members thereof may be regarded as acts of de facto State organs regardless of any specific instruction by the controlling State concerning the commission of each of those acts.

[65] ICTY, Aleksovski case, Judgement on Appeal, 24 March 2000, §§ 137–146.

16. The Appeals Chamber in Tadić considered Nicaragua in depth, and based on two grounds, held that the "effective control" test enunciated by the ICJ was not persuasive.
17. Firstly, the Appeals Chamber found that the Nicaragua "effective control" test did not seem to be consonant with the "very logic of the entire system of international law on State responsibility", which is "not based on rigid and uniform criteria". In the Appeals Chamber's view, "the whole body of international law on State responsibility is based on a realistic concept of accountability, which disregards legal formalities". Thus, regardless of whether or not specific instructions were issued, the international responsibility of the State may be engaged.
18. Secondly, the Appeals Chamber considered that the Nicaragua test is at variance with judicial and State practice. Relying on a number of cases from claims tribunals, national and international courts, and State practice, the Chamber found that, although the "effective control" test was upheld by the practice in relation to individuals or unorganised groups of individuals acting on behalf of States, it was not the case in respect of military or paramilitary groups.
19. The Appeals Chamber found that the armed forces of the Republika Srpska were to be regarded as acting under the overall control of, and on behalf of, the FRY, sharing the same objectives and strategy, thereby rendering the armed conflict international.
20. The Appeals Chamber, after considering in depth the merits of the Nicaragua test, thus rejected the "effective control" test, in favour of the less strict "overall control" test. This may be indicative of a trend simply to rely on the international law on the use of force, jus ad bellum, when characterising the conflict. The situation in which a State, the FRY, resorted to the indirect use of force against another State, Bosnia and Herzegovina, by supporting one of the parties involved in the conflict, the Bosnian Serb forces, may indeed be also characterised as a proxy war of an international character. In this context, the "overall control" test is utilised to ascertain the foreign intervention, and consequently, to conclude that a conflict which was prima facie internal is internationalised.

...

21. Applying the principle enunciated in the Aleksovski Appeal Judgement, this Appeals Chamber is unable to conclude that the decision in the Tadić was arrived at on the basis of the application of a wrong legal principle, or arrived at per incuriam. After careful consideration of the arguments put forward by the appellants, this Appeals Chamber is unable to find cogent reasons in the interests of justice to depart from the law as identified in the Tadić Appeal Judgement. The "overall control" test set forth in the Tadić Appeal Judgement is thus the applicable criteria for determining the existence of an international armed conflict.[66] [emphasis in original]

[66] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement on Appeal, 20 February 200§, §§ 13–20 and 26.

67. In 1995, in Commission Nationale des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés v. Chad, the ACiHPR stated that:

> 21. The African Charter, unlike other human rights instruments, does not allow for states parties to derogate from their treaty obligations during emergency situations. Thus, even a civil war in Chad cannot be used as an excuse by the State violating or permitting violations of rights in the African Charter.
> 22. In the present case, Chad has failed to provide security and stability in the country, thereby allowing serious and massive violations of human rights. The national armed forces are participants in the civil war and there have been several instances in which the Government has failed to intervene to prevent the assassination and killing of specific individuals. Even where it cannot be proved that violations were committed by government agents, the government had a responsibility to secure the safety and the liberty of its citizens, and to conduct investigations into murders. Chad therefore is responsible for the violations of the African Charter.[67]

68. In 1993, in a decision concerning the imputability to Turkey of acts committed in the northern part of Cyprus, the ECiHR, with respect to the arrest of the applicants, held that:

> 96. As regards overall control of the arrest operation by Turkey, the Commission recalls that, in its decision on admissibility . . . it was held that the application of the [1950 ECHR] extends beyond national frontiers of the Contracting States and includes acts of State organs abroad. The term "jurisdiction" in Article 1 is not equivalent to or limited to the national territory . . . Authorized agents of a State, including armed forces, not only remain under its jurisdiction when abroad but also bring any other persons "within the jurisdiction" of that State to the extent that they exercise authority over such persons.
> 97. The Commission notes that the Turkish armed forces have entered Cyprus and that they operate under the direction of the Turkish Government and under established rules governing the structure and command of these armed forces. It follows that these armed forces are authorised agents of Turkey and that they bring any other persons in Cyprus "within the jurisdiction" of Turkey, in the sense of Article 1 of the [1950 ECHR], to the extent that they exercise control over such persons. Therefore, in so far as these armed forces, by their acts or omissions, affect such persons' rights or freedoms under the Convention, the responsibility of Turkey is engaged.[68]

However, in its decision as to the applicants' detention and the proceedings against them after their arrest, the Commission stated that:

> 169. The Commission considers that the factual situation is different as regards the subsequent detention of the applicants and the proceedings against them. The Commission has found no indication of control exercised by Turkish [67] ACiHPR, Commission Nationale des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés v. Chad, 2 October 1995, §§ 21–22.

[68] ECiHR, Chrysostomos and Papachrysostomou v. Turkey, Report, 8 July 1993, §§ 96–97; see also W. v. Ireland, Admissibility Decision, 28 February 1983, § 14.

authorities over the prison administration or the administration of justice by Turkish Cypriot authorities in the applicants' case . . .

170. The Commission, . . . finding no indication of direct involvement of Turkish authorities in the applicants' detention, and the proceedings against them, after their arrest . . ., sees no basis under the Convention for imputing these acts to Turkey.[69]

69. In 1988, in the Velásquez Rodríguez case, the IACtHR stated that:

176. The State is obligated to investigate every situation involving a violation of the rights protected by the Convention. If the State apparatus acts in such a way that the violation goes unpunished and the victim's full enjoyment of such rights is not restored as soon as possible, the State has failed to comply with its duty to ensure the free and full exercise of those rights to the persons within its jurisdiction. The same is true when the State allows private persons or groups to act freely and with impunity to the detriment of the rights recognized by the Convention.
177. In certain circumstances, it may be difficult to investigate acts that violate an individual's rights. The duty to investigate, like the duty to prevent, is not breached merely because the investigation does not produce a satisfactory result. Nevertheless, it must be undertaken in a serious manner and not as a mere formality preordained to be ineffective. An investigation must have an objective and be assumed by the State as its own legal duty, not as a step taken by private interests that depends upon the initiative of the victim or his family or upon their offer of proof, without an effective search for the truth by the government. This is true regardless of what agent is eventually found responsible for the violation. Where the acts of private parties that violate the Convention are not seriously investigated, those parties are aided in a sense by the government, thereby making the State responsible on the international plane.[70]

70. In its decision in the Case of the Riofrío massacre (Colombia) in 2001, the IACiHR stated that:

48. . . . It must be ascertained whether the acts of the individuals implicated in the incident in violating such fundamental rights as the rights to life and humane treatment are attributable to the State of Colombia and therefore call into question its responsibility in accordance with international law. In this regard, the Inter-American Court has noted that it is sufficient to show that the infringement of the rights recognized in the Convention has been supported or tolerated by the government.
49. First, it should be said that, as noted by the [IACiHR] in its Third Report on the Human Rights Situation in Colombia, the State has played a leading role in developing the paramilitary or self-defense groups, that it allowed them to act legitimately with the protection of the law during the 1970s and 1980s, and that it is generally responsible for their existence and for strengthening them.
50. These groups sponsored or accepted by branches of the armed forces were created mainly to combat armed groups of dissidents. As a result of their

[69] ECiHR, Chrysostomos and Papachrysostomou v. Turkey, Report, 8 July 1993, §§ 169–170. (The Council of Ministers agreed with the Commission's findings, Council of Europe, Council of Ministers, Resolution DH (95) 245, 19 October 1995.)
[70] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, §§ 176–177.

counterinsurgency purposes, the paramilitaries established links with the Colombian army that became stronger over a period of more than twenty years. Eventually, on May 25, 1989, the Supreme Court of Justice declared Decree 3398 unconstitutional, thereby removing all legal support for their ties to national defense. In the wake of this action, the State passed a number of laws to criminalize the activities of these groups and of those that supported them. Despite these measures, the State did little to dismantle the structure it had created and promoted, particularly in the case of groups that carried out counterinsurgency activities and, in fact, the ties remained in place at different levels, which in some instances requested or permitted paramilitary groups to carry out certain illegal acts on the understanding that they would not be investigated, prosecuted, or punished. The toleration of these groups by certain branches of the army has been denounced by agencies within the State itself.

51. As a result of this situation, the Commission has established, for the purposes of determining the international responsibility of the State in accordance with the American Convention, that in cases in which members of paramilitary groups and the army carry out joint operations with the knowledge of superior officers, the members of the paramilitary groups act as agents of the State.
52. In the present case, according to analysis of the facts mentioned above, there is evidence to show that agents of the State helped to coordinate the massacre, to carry it out, and, as discovered by domestic courts, to cover it up. Therefore, the only conclusion is that the State is liable for the violations of the American Convention resulting from the acts of commission or omission by its own agents and by private individuals involved in the execution of the victims.[71]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

71. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols notes that the responsibility of the State:

can be imputed not only for acts committed by a person or persons who form part of the armed forces . . . but also for possible omissions. As regards damages which may be caused by private individuals, i.e., by persons who are not part of the armed forces (nor of any other organ of the State), legal writings and case-law show that the responsibility of the State is involved if it has not taken such preventive or repressive measures as could reasonably be expected to have been taken in the circumstances. In other words, responsibility is incurred if the Party to the conflict has not acted with due diligence to prevent such acts from taking place, or to ensure their repression once they have taken place.[72]

72. In 1993, in a report submitted to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that:

[71] IACiHR, Case of the Riofrío massacre (Colombia), Report, 6 April 2001, §§ 48–52.
[72] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 3660–3661.

The treaties of international humanitarian law provide various mechanisms . . . for implementing their substantive provisions. Among these mechanisms it is worth mentioning the following:

(a) the international responsibility of States . . .

Article 1, common to the four Geneva Conventions and to Protocol I, stipulates that the contracting States are under an obligation "to respect and ensure respect for" those instruments. Beyond that, and on a more general level, a State is responsible for every act or omission attributable to it and amounting to a breach of an international obligation incumbent on it, including in the field of the international protection of the environment. States affected by such a breach are entitled to insist on the implementation of such rules of State responsibility, including cessation of the unlawful conduct, restitution and reparation.[73]

73. In a communication to the press issued in 1993 with respect to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC reminded "all the parties to the conflict that they bear full responsibility for all abuses [of IHL] committed by the forces on the territory under their control".[74]

74. In 1996, in a summary report submitted to a State, the ICRC accepted that the use by security forces of auxiliary armed groups was not in itself a contravention of IHL. It emphasised, however, that regular forces bore responsibility for acts committed by these groups. The ICRC asked the State in question "to assume full authority over these groups, in particular by adopting legal measures that clearly specify their subordination to the security forces".[75]

VI. Other Practice

75. In 1987, in the context of an internal armed conflict, an official of a local organisation recognised the problems regarding the tribal militia armed by the government. He admitted that the same rules of conduct should apply to all governmental forces, whether regular forces or militia, on the basis of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and that the government bore legal, moral and political responsibility each time it distributed arms to civilians to participate in the maintenance of law and order.[76]

76. In 1995, in its comments submitted to the UN Secretary-General on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, the IIHL stated that "it would be important to underline the responsibility for acts which cause suffering". It suggested that an article be inserted which could read: "Any de jure or de facto authority is responsible for the acts committed by their agents,

[73] ICRC, Report on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, UN Doc. A/48/269, 29 July 1993, §§ 45 and 47.

[74] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/16, Bosnia-Herzegovina: The ICRC appeals for humanity, 16 June 1993.

[75] ICRC archive document.

[76] ICRC archive document.

including acts which adversely affect the basic human rights of any person in emergency situations".[77]

B. Reparation

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

77. Article 21 of the 1955 Austrian State Treaty, which in its preamble considers that "on 13 March 1938, Hitlerite Germany annexed Austria by force and incorporated its territory in the German Reich", provides that "no reparation shall be exacted from Austria arising out of the existence of a state of war in Europe after 1 September 1939".

78. Article 6 of the 1956 Joint Declaration on Soviet-Japanese Relations stipulates that:

> The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics renounces all reparation claims against Japan. The USSR and Japan agree to renounce all claims by either State, its institutions or citizens, against the other State, its institutions or citizens, which have arisen as a result of the war since 9 August 1945.

79. Article 75 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "the Court shall establish principles relating to reparations to, or in respect of, victims" and that "nothing in this article shall be interpreted as prejudicing the rights of victims under national or international law."

80. Article 38 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "no provision in this Protocol relating to individual criminal responsibility shall affect the responsibility of States under international law, including the duty to provide reparation".

Other Instruments

81. The 1946 Paris Agreement on Reparation from Germany was concluded:

> in order to obtain an equitable distribution among [the signatory governments] of the total assets which . . . are or may be declared to be available as reparation from Germany . . . in order to establish an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency, and to settle an equitable procedure for the restitution of monetary gold.

82. Article 2(A) of Part I of the 1946 Paris Agreement on Reparation from Germany states that:

[77] IIHL, Comments on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards submitted to the UN Secretary-General, § 22, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General prepared pursuant to Commission resolution 1995/29, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/80, 28 November 1995, p. 11.

The Signatory Governments agree among themselves that their respective shares of reparation, as determined by the present Agreement, shall be regarded by each of them as covering all its claims and those of its nationals against the former German Government and its Agencies, of a governmental or private nature, arising out of the war (which are not otherwise provided for).

83. Article 8 of Part I of the 1946 Paris Agreement on Reparation from Germany contains provisions regarding the allocation of a reparation share to non-repatriable victims of German action. Article 8(I) of Part I provides that "nothing in this Article shall be considered to prejudice the claims which individual refugees may have against a future German Government, except to the amount of the benefits that such refugees may have received from the sources referred to . . . above".

84. Article 2 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that "States shall ensure that domestic law is consistent with international legal obligations by: . . . making available adequate, effective and prompt reparation".

85. Article 3 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

> The obligation to respect, ensure respect for and enforce international . . . humanitarian law includes, inter alia, a State's duty to:
>
> . . .
>
> (d) Afford appropriate remedies to victims; and
> (e) Provide for or facilitate reparation to victims.

86. Article 31 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility provides that:

> 1. The responsible State is under an obligation to make full reparation for the injury caused by the internationally wrongful act.
> 2. Injury includes any damage, whether material or moral, caused by the internationally wrongful act of a State.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

87. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines states that "if, in the course of legitimate security/police operations, private properties are damaged, measures shall be undertaken whenever practicable, utilizing available unit's manpower and equipment, to repair the damage caused as a matter of AFP/PNP Civic Action Policy".[78]

[78] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2(a)(4).

National Legislation
88. No practice was found.

National Case-law
89. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
90. In its views and comments on the 1997 Draft Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to Reparation for Victims of [Gross] Violations of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law, as they were then called, Croatia stated that:

It is clear that the right to claim reparation for violations of human rights and international humanitarian law should be given primarily to the direct victim; in cases where the direct victim is unable to claim or precluded from claiming reparation, such right should be enjoyed by the descendants of the direct victim, and subsidiarily to the persons closely connected with the direct victim.[79]

91. In 1995, in reply to a question from members of the Lower House of Parliament with respect to reparation payments to Greek victims of the German National Socialist regime, the German government stated that:

The . . . alleged claims of Greece with regard to Germany are claims for reparation . . . After 50 years have passed since the end of the war and [after] decades of peaceful, trustingly and fruitful co-operation of the Federal Republic of Germany with the international community of States, the issue of reparations has lost its legitimacy. Since the end of the Second World War, Germany has made reparations to a high degree, which, according to general public international law, the States concerned should use to compensate their nationals . . . Additionally, reparations [made] 50 years after the end of hostilities would constitute an exception without precedence in the practice of public international law.[80]

92. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, it is Kuwait's opinio juris that States that cause damage to the environment are under a duty to remedy such damage.[81]

93. In 2001, a draft concurrent resolution was put before the US Congress for it to call upon the government of Japan to "immediately pay reparations to the victims of [sexual enslavement of young women during colonial occupation of Asia and the Pacific Islands during the Second World War, known to the world as 'comfort women']".[82]

[79] Croatia, Views and Comments on the note and revised Draft Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to Remedy and Reparation for Victims of [Gross] Violations of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law, 19 August 1997, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/34, 22 December 1997, § 6.
[80] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Response by the federal government to a question from members of parliament, Payments in compensation to Greek victims of the National Socialist regime, BT-Drucksache 13/2878, 7 November 1995.
[81] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 4.4.
[82] US, House of Representatives, 107th Congress, 1st Session, Concurrent Resolution 195, HCON 195 IH, 24 July 2001.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

94. In a resolution adopted in 1993 concerning the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly recognized "the right of victims of 'ethnic cleansing' to receive just reparation for their losses" and urged all parties "to fulfil their agreements to this end".[83]

95. In a resolution adopted in 1994 concerning the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly recognized "the right of victims of ethnic cleansing to receive just reparation for their losses" and urged all parties "to fulfil their agreements to this end".[84]

96. In a resolution on Afghanistan adopted in 1996, the UN General Assembly urged the Afghan authorities "to provide efficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations of human rights and of accepted humanitarian rules".[85]

97. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution entitled "Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts", to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 31 entitled "Reparation", was annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[86]

98. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan to respect IHL and "to provide sufficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations and abuses of human rights and of accepted humanitarian rules".[87]

99. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended that "steps be taken to ensure full reparation for losses suffered as a consequence of aggression and religious and ethnic cleansing".[88]

Other International Organisations

100. No practice was found.

International Conferences

101. No practice was found.

[83] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/153, 20 December 1993, § 13.
[84] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 13.
[85] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/108, 12 December 1996, § 11.
[86] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[87] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, § 5(d); see also Res. 1996/75, 23 April 1996, § 10.
[88] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/17, 20 August 1993, § 8; see also Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, § 6.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

102. In the Chorzów Factory case (Merits) in 1928, the PCIJ ruled that:

It is a principle of international law, and even a general conception of law, that any breach of an engagement involves an obligation to make reparation . . . Reparation is the indispensable complement of a failure to apply a convention, and there is no necessity for this to be stated in the convention itself.[89]

103. In 2001, in the Case of the Riofrío massacre (Colombia), the IACiHR stated that:

48. Before turning to the analysis of the alleged violations of the standards of the American Convention, it must be ascertained whether the acts of the individuals implicated in the incident in violating such fundamental rights as the rights to life and humane treatment are attributable to the State of Colombia and therefore call into question its responsibility in accordance with international law. In this regard, the Inter-American Court has noted that it is sufficient to show that the infringement of the rights recognized in the Convention has been supported or tolerated by the government.
49. First, it should be said that, as noted by the IACHR in its Third Report on the Human Rights Situation in Colombia, the State has played a leading role in developing the paramilitary or self-defense groups, that it allowed them to act legitimately with the protection of the law during the 1970s and 1980s, and that it is generally responsible for their existence and for strengthening them.
50. These groups sponsored or accepted by branches of the armed forces were created mainly to combat armed groups of dissidents. As a result of their counterinsurgency purposes, the paramilitaries established links with the Colombian army that became stronger over a period of more than twenty years. Eventually, on May 25, 1989, the Supreme Court of Justice declared Decree 3398 unconstitutional, thereby removing all legal support for their ties to national defense. In the wake of this action, the State passed a number of laws to criminalize the activities of these groups and of those that supported them. Despite these measures, the State did little to dismantle the structure it had created and promoted, particularly in the case of groups that carried out counterinsurgency activities and, in fact, the ties remained in place at different levels, which in some instances requested or permitted paramilitary groups to carry out certain illegal acts on the understanding that they would not be investigated, prosecuted, or punished. The toleration of these groups by certain branches of the army has been denounced by agencies within the State itself.
51. As a result of this situation, the Commission has established, for the purposes of determining the international responsibility of the State in accordance with the American Convention, that in cases in which members of paramilitary groups and the army carry out joint operations with the knowledge of superior officers, the members of the paramilitary groups act as agents of the State.
52. In the present case, according to analysis of the facts mentioned above, there is evidence to show that agents of the State helped to coordinate the massacre, to carry it out, and, as discovered by domestic courts, to cover it up. Therefore, the only conclusion is that the State is liable for the violations of the American Convention resulting from the acts of commission or omission by its own agents and by private individuals involved in the execution of the victims.[90]

[89] PCIJ, Chorzów Factory case (Merits), Judgement, 13 September 1928, p. 29.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

104. In 1993, in a report submitted to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that:

Article 1, common to the four Geneva Conventions and to Protocol I, stipulates that the contracting States are under an obligation "to respect and ensure respect for" those instruments. Beyond that, and on a more general level, a State is responsible for every act or omission attributable to it and amounting to a breach of an international obligation incumbent on it, including in the field of the international protection of the environment. States affected by such a breach are entitled to insist on the implementation of such rules of State responsibility, including ... reparation.[91]

105. In 1993, in its report on the protection of war victims, the ICRC, referring to Article 91 AP I, stated that "this article confirms a rule which is today accepted as being part of customary law and was already stated, in almost identical terms, in Article 3 of the Hague Convention No. IV of 1907". Referring to Articles 51 GC I, 52 GC II, 131 GC IV and 148 GC IV, the ICRC further stated that "this provision ... also implies that, irrespective of the outcome of an armed conflict, no decision or agreement can dispense a State from the responsibility to make reparation for damages caused to the victims of breaches of international humanitarian law".[92] It recommended that:

The International Conference for the Protection of War Victims should make it clear that it wishes procedures to be set up to provide reparation for damage inflicted on the victims of violations of international humanitarian law ... so as to enable them to receive the benefits to which they are entitled.[93]

VI. Other Practice

106. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "under international law, a state that has violated a legal obligation to another state is required to terminate the violation and, ordinarily, to make

[90] IACiHR, Case of the Riofrío massacre (Colombia), Report, 6 April 2001, §§ 48–52.
[91] ICRC, Report on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, UN Doc. A/48/269, 29 July 1993, § 47.
[92] ICRC, Report on the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, June 1993, Section 4.3, IRRC, No. 292, 1993, pp. 391–445.
[93] ICRC, Report on the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, June 1993, Section 4.3, IRRC, No. 292, 1993, pp. 391–445.

reparation, including in appropriate circumstances restitution or compensation for loss or injury".[94]

107. The Restatement (Third) further provides that:

> A private person, whether natural or juridical, injured by a violation of an international obligation by a state, may bring a claim against that state or assert that violation as a defense
> (a) in a competent international forum when the state has consented to the jurisdiction of that forum with respect to such private claims;
> (b) in a court or other tribunal of that state pursuant to its law; or
> (c) in a court or other tribunal of the injured person's state of nationality or of a third state, pursuant to the law of such state, subject to limitations under international law.[95]

108. The Women's International War Crimes Tribunal 2000 for the Trial of Japanese Military Sexual Slavery recommended that the United Nations and all the states and people thereof "take all steps necessary to ensure that the government of Japan provides full reparations to the victims and survivors and those entitled to recover on account of the violations committed against them".[96]

Compensation

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

109. Article 41 of the 1899 HR provides that "a violation of the terms of the armistice by private individuals acting on their own initiative, only confers the right of demanding the punishment of the offenders, and, if necessary, indemnity for the losses sustained".

110. Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) provides that "a belligerent Party which violates the provisions of the [1907 HR] shall, if the case demands, be liable to pay compensation".

111. Article 41 of the 1907 HR provides that "a violation of the terms of the armistice by private persons acting on their own initiative only entitles the injured party to demand the punishment of the offenders or, if necessary, compensation for the losses sustained".

112. Article 5(5) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone who has been the victim of arrest or detention in contravention of the provisions of this article shall have an enforceable right to compensation".

[94] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 901.

[95] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 906.

[96] Women's International War Crimes Tribunal 2000 for the Trial of Japanese Military Sexual Slavery, The Prosecutors and the Peoples of the Asia-Pacific Region v. Emperor Hirohito et al. and the Government of Japan, Final Judgement, 4 December 2001, Recommendations, § 149(i).

113. Article 14(a) of the 1951 Peace Treaty for Japan provides that:

It is recognized that Japan should pay reparations to the Allied Powers for the damage and suffering caused by it during the war. Nevertheless it is also recognized that the resources of Japan are not presently sufficient, if it is to maintain a viable economy, to make complete reparation for all such damage and suffering and at the same time meet its other obligations . . .

Except as otherwise provided in the present Treaty, the Allied Powers waive all reparations claims of the Allied Powers, other claims of the Allied Powers and their nationals arising out of any actions taken by Japan and its nationals in the course of the prosecution of the war, and claims of the Allied Powers for direct military costs of occupation.

114. Under Article 16 of the 1951 Peace Treaty for Japan, Japan undertook, inter alia, to compensate former POWs, in the following terms:

As an expression of its desire to indemnify those members of the armed forces of the Allied Powers who suffered undue hardships while prisoners of war of Japan, Japan will transfer its assets and those of its nationals in countries which were neutral during the war, or which were at war with any of the Allied Powers or, at its option, the equivalent of such assets, to the International Committee of the Red Cross which shall liquidate such assets and distribute the resultant fund to appropriate national agencies for the benefit of former prisoners of war and their families on such basis as it may determine to be equitable.

115. The 1951 Yoshida-Stikker Protocol, concluded between the Netherlands and Japan with respect to Japan's occupation of the Dutch East Indies and the 1951 Peace Treaty for Japan, states that:

The Government of Japan does not consider that the Government of the Netherlands by signing the [1951 Peace Treaty for Japan] has itself expropriated the private claims of its nationals so that, as a consequence thereof, after the Treaty comes into force these claims would be non-existent.

116. Article 1(1) of Chapter Four ("Compensation for Victims of Nazi Persecution") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that:

The Federal Republic [of Germany] acknowledges the obligation to assure . . . adequate compensation to persons persecuted for their political convictions, race, faith or ideology, who thereby have suffered damage to life, limb, health, liberty, property, their possessions or economic prospects (excluding identifiable property subject to restitution). Furthermore, persons persecuted by reason of nationality, in disregard of human rights, who are now political refugees and no longer enjoy the protection of their former home country shall receive adequate compensation where permanent injury has been inflicted on their health.

117. Article 4(1) of Chapter Five ("External Restitution") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that:

If property to be restituted has, after identification in Germany, either been utilised or consumed in Germany before return to the claimant or been destroyed, stolen or otherwise disposed before receipt by the claimant Government or by an appropriate agency of one of the Three Powers for despatch to the claimant, the Federal Republic shall compensate claimants who would otherwise be entitled to restitution . . . or who, at the entry into force of the present Convention, have had their claims for restitution approved by one of the Three Powers.

118. Article 5 of Chapter Six ("Reparation") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that:

The Federal Republic [of Germany] shall ensure that the former owners of property seized pursuant to measures referred to in Articles 2 and 3 of this Chapter [i.e. of the Three Powers with regard to German external assets or other property for the purpose of reparation] shall be compensated.

119. The 1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and Israel provides that:

Whereas unspeakable criminal acts were perpetrated against the Jewish people during the National-Socialist regime of terror

And whereas by a declaration in the Bundestag on 27th September, 1951, the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany made known their determination, within the limits of their capacity, to make good the material damage caused by these acts,

And whereas the State of Israel has assumed the heavy burden of resettling so great a number of uprooted and destitute Jewish refugees from Germany and from territories formerly under German rule and has on this basis advanced a claim against the Federal Republic of Germany for global recompense for the cost of the integration of these refugees

Now therefore the State of Israel and the Federal Republic of Germany have agreed as follows: –

Article 1

(a) The Federal Republic of Germany shall, in view of the considerations hereinbefore recited, pay to the State of Israel the sum of 3,000 million Deutsche Mark.

(b) In addition, the Federal Republic of Germany shall, in compliance with the obligation undertaken in Article 1 of the [1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and the CJMC], pay to Israel for the benefit of the said [CJMC] the sum of 450 million Deutsche Mark . . .

(c) The provisions hereinafter contained in the present Agreement shall apply to the total sum of 3,450 million Deutsche Mark so arising . . .

Article 2

The Federal Republic of Germany will make available the amount referred to in Article 1, paragraph (c) of the present Agreement for the purchase . . . of such commodities and services as shall serve the purpose of expanding opportunities for the settlement and rehabilitation of Jewish refugees in Israel.

120. By Letter No. 1a of the 1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and Israel, which, according to Article 16(a)(ii) constitutes an integral part of the Agreement, the Israeli Minister for Foreign Affairs conveyed the following to the representatives of Germany:

1. Considering that the Federal Republic of Germany has in the Agreement signed today undertaken the obligation to pay recompense for the expenditure already incurred or to be incurred by the State of Israel in the resettlement of Jewish refugees, the claim of the State of Israel for such recompense shall, in so far as it has been put forward against the Federal Republic of Germany, be regarded by the Government of Israel as having been settled with the coming into force of the said Agreement. The State of Israel will advance no further claims against the Federal Republic of Germany arising out of or in connection with losses which have resulted from National-Socialist persecution.
2. The Government of Israel are here proceeding on the assumption that claims of Israel nationals under legislation in force in the Federal Republic of Germany on internal restitution, compensation, or other redress for National-Socialist wrongs, and the automatic accrual of rights to Israel nationals from any future legislation of this nature, will not be prejudiced by reason of the conclusion of the Agreement.

By Letter No. 1b of the 1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and Israel, which constitutes an integral part of the Agreement, the German Chancellor took note of the content of paragraph 1 of Letter No. 1a and confirmed, with regard to paragraph 2 of this Letter, that the assumption of the government of Israel was correct.

121. Article 26 of the 1955 Austrian State Treaty, which in its preamble considers that "on 13 March 1938, Hitlerite Germany annexed Austria by force and incorporated its territory in the German Reich", provides that:

1. In so far as such action has not already been taken, Austria undertakes that, in all cases where property, legal rights or interests in Austria have since 13 March 1938, been subject of forced transfer or measures of sequestration, confiscation or control on account of the racial origin or religion of the owner, the said property shall be returned and the said legal rights and interests shall be restored together with their accessories. Where return or restoration is impossible, compensation shall be granted for losses incurred by reason of such measures to the same extent as is, or may be, given to Austrian nationals generally in respect of war damage.
2. Austria agrees to take under its control all property, legal rights and interests in Austria of persons, organizations or communities which, individually or as members of groups, were the object of racial, religious or other Nazi measures of persecution where, in the case of persons, such property, rights and interests remain heirless or unclaimed for six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty, or where in the case of organizations and communities such organizations or communities have ceased to exist. Austria shall transfer such property, rights and interests to appropriate agencies or organizations to be designated by the Four Heads of Mission in Vienna by agreement with the Austrian Government to be used for the relief and rehabilitation of victims > of persecution by the Axis Powers, it being understood that these provisions do not require Austria to make payments in foreign exchange or other transfers to foreign countries which would constitute a burden on the Austrian economy.

Part IV ("Claims arising out of the War", Articles 21–24) and Part V ("Property, Rights and Interests", Articles 25–28) provide for detailed and comprehensive settlement of all property claims on a State-to-State level.

122. The 1956 Yoshida-Stikker Protocol between Japan and the Netherlands states that:

> Desiring to settle the problem concerning certain types of private claims of Netherlands nationals which the government of Japan might wish voluntarily to deal with, as referred to in the letters of 7th and 8th of September, 1951, exchanged between Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Kingdom of The Netherlands, Dirk U. Stikker, and Prime Minister of Japan, Shigeru Yoshida, Have agreed as follows:
> Article I. For the purpose of expressing sympathy and regret for the suffering inflicted during the Second World War by agencies of the Government of Japan upon Netherlands nationals, the Government of Japan shall voluntarily tender as a solatium the amount of Pounds Sterling equivalent to U.S. $ 10,000,000 to the Government of the Kingdom of The Netherlands on behalf of those Netherlands nationals.
> ...
> Article III. The Government of the Kingdom of The Netherlands confirms that neither itself nor any Netherlands nationals will raise against the Government of Japan any claim concerning the sufferings inflicted during the Second World War by agencies of the Government of Japan upon Netherlands nationals.

123. Article 1(1) of the 1959 Agreement concerning Payments on behalf of Norwegian Nationals Victimized by National Socialist Persecution, concluded between Germany and Norway, provides that:

> The Federal Republic of Germany shall pay the Kingdom of Norway 60 million Deutsche Mark on behalf of Norwegian nationals who were victimized by National Socialist persecution because of their race, beliefs or opinions and whose freedom or health was in consequence impaired, and also on behalf of the survivors of persons who died as a result of such persecution.

124. Article 63(1) of the 1969 ACHR states that:

> If the [IACtHR] finds that there has been a violation of a right or freedom protected by this Convention, the Court ... shall also rule, if appropriate, that the consequences of the measure or situation that constituted the breach of such right or freedom be remedied and that fair compensation be paid to the injured party.

125. Article 91 AP I provides that "a Party to the conflict which violates the provisions of the Conventions or of this Protocol shall, if the case demands, be liable to pay compensation". Article 91 AP I was adopted by consensus.[97]

[97] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.46, 31 May 1977, p. 344.

126. Upon ratification of AP I, South Korea declared that:

In relation to Article 91 of Protocol I, a party to the conflict which violates the provisions of the Conventions or of this Protocol shall take the responsibility for paying compensation to the party damaged from the acts of violation, whether the damaged party is a legal party to the conflict or not.[98]

127. Article 2 of the 1990 Implementation Agreement to the German Unification Treaty provides that:

The Federal Government is prepared, in continuation of the policy of the German Federal Republic, to enter into agreements with the Claims Conference [CJMC] for additional Fund arrangements in order to provide hardship payments to persecutees who thus far received no or only minimal compensation according to the legislative provisions of the German Federal Republic.

128. In 1995, Germany and the US concluded the US-Germany Agreement concerning Final Benefits to Certain US Nationals Who Were Victims of National Socialist Measures of Persecution (also known as the Princz Agreement), which provides that:

Article 1
This Agreement shall settle compensation claims by certain United States nationals who suffered loss of liberty or damage to body or health as a result of National Socialist measures of persecution conducted directly against them. This Agreement shall cover only the claims of persons who, at the time of their persecution, were already nationals of the United States of America and who have to date received no compensation from the Federal Republic of Germany. This Agreement shall, inter alia, not cover persons who were subjected to forced labor alone while not being detained in a concentration camp as victims of National Socialist measures of persecution.
Article 2
1. For the prompt settlement of known cases of compensation claims covered by Article 1, the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany shall pay to the Government of the United States of America three million Deutsche Mark . . .
2. For any possible future cases not known at the present moment, both Governments intend to negotiate two years after the entry into force of this Agreement, an additional lump sum payment based on the same criteria as set forth in Article 1 and derived on the same basis as the amount under paragraph 1.

Article 3
The distribution of the amounts . . . to the individual beneficiaries shall be left to the discretion of the Government of the United States of America.

129. In a diplomatic note relative to the 1995 US-Germany Agreement concerning Final Benefits to Certain US Nationals Who Were Victims of National Socialist Measures of Persecution, the government of Germany stated that "any payment by the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany under this Agreement will be only for the benefit of United States nationals who were victims of national socialist measures of persecution by reason of their race, their faith or their ideology". In its response, the US government acknowledged receipt of the diplomatic note.

[98] South Korea, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 15 January 1982, § 3.

130. Article 1(1) of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that "all refugees and displaced persons . . . shall have the right to have restored to them property of which they were deprived in the course of hostilities since 1991 and to be compensated for any property that cannot be restored to them".

131. By Article VII of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords, the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees in Bosnia and Herzegovina was established. According to Article XI, the mandate of the Commission was to:

> receive and decide any claims for real property in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where the property has not voluntarily been sold or otherwise transferred since April 1, 1992, and where the claimant does not now enjoy possession of that property. Claims may be for return of the property or for just compensation in lieu of return.

132. Article XII(2) and (6) of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that:

> Any person requesting compensation in lieu of return who is found by the Commission to be the lawful owner of that property shall be awarded just compensation as determined by the Commission.
>
> . . .
>
> In cases in which the claimant is awarded compensation in lieu of return of the property, the Commission may award a monetary grant or a compensation bond for the future purchase of real property. The Parties welcome the willingness of the international community assisting in the construction and financing of housing in Bosnia and Herzegovina to accept compensation bonds awarded by the Commission as payment, and to award persons holding such compensation bonds priority in obtaining that housing.

133. By Article 1 of the 1999 US-Chinese Agreement on the Settlement of Chinese Claims resulting from the Bombardment of the Chinese Embassy in Belgrade, the parties agreed that the US was to pay US$28 million to China. Article 2 provides that "the agreed amount . . . will constitute a full and final settlement of any and all claims for the property loss and damage suffered by the Chinese side as a result of the U.S. bombing of the Chinese Embassy in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia".

134. By Article 1 of the 1999 US-Chinese Memorandum of Understanding on the Settlement of US Claims resulting from the Bombardment of the Chinese Embassy in Belgrade, the parties agreed that China was to pay US$2.87 million to the US. Article 2 provides that "the agreed amount . . . will constitute a full and final settlement of any and all claims for the property loss and damage suffered by the U.S. side after the U.S. bombing of the Chinese Embassy in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia".

135. The 2000 Agreement on the Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and the Future", concluded between Germany and the US, aims to complement the creation of a foundation established under the German Law on the Creation of a Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and Future" (as amended) of 2000. Article 1(1) provides that:

The parties agree that the Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and the Future" covers, and that it would be in their interests for the Foundation to be the exclusive remedy and forum for the resolution of, all claims that have been or may be asserted against German companies arising from the National Socialist era and World War II.

136. Article 2(1) of the 2000 Agreement on the Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and the Future" provides that:

The United States shall, in all cases in which the United States is notified that a claim described in article 1 (1) has been asserted in a court in the United States, inform its courts through a Statement of Interest . . . that it would be in the foreign policy interests of the United States for the Foundation to be the exclusive remedy and forum for resolving such claims asserted against German companies . . . and that dismissal of such cases would be in its foreign policy interest.

137. Article 3 of the 2000 Agreement on the Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and the Future" provides that:

(2) This agreement shall not affect unilateral decisions or bilateral or multilateral agreements that dealt with the consequences of the National Socialist era and World War II.
(3) The United States will not raise any reparations claims against the Federal Republic of Germany.

138. In 2000, Austria and the US concluded the Austrian-US Executive Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund, which is intended "to complement the creation of the [Austrian Reconciliation] Fund". In the preamble, the two States recognize:

that Austria has, by adopting legislation approved by the Allied Forces or building on international agreements to which the United States is a party, and in close cooperation with victims' associations and interested governments, provided restitution and compensation to victims of National Socialist persecution, [and note] that, by means of the Austrian Fund for Reconciliation, Peace, and Cooperation ("Fund"), formed under Austrian federal law as an instrumentality of Austria and funded by contributions from Austria and Austrian companies, Austria and Austrian companies wish to respond to and acknowledge the moral responsibility for all claims involving or related to the use of slave or forced labor during the National Socialist era or World War II.

139. In 2000, Austria concluded bilateral agreements with six Central and Eastern European States in order to fulfil the conditions necessary for the coming into force of the Austrian Reconciliation Fund Law: the Austrian-Belarussian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund, the Austrian-Czech Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund, the Austrian-Hungarian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund, the Austrian-Polish Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund, the Austrian-Ukrainian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund, and the Austrian-Russian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund, all of which provided for cooperation between the respective States in the payment of compensation to former slave labourers and forced labourers by the Austrian Reconciliation Fund via national foundations which were to be established by the respective States.

140. Article 5 of the 2000 Peace Agreement between Eritrea and Ethiopia provides that:

> 1. Consistent with the 1998 OAU Framework Agreement on Eritrea and Ethiopia, in which the parties commit themselves to addressing the negative socio-economic impact of the crisis on the civilian population, including the impact on those persons who have been deported, a neutral Claims Commission shall be established. The mandate of the Commission is to decide through binding arbitration all claims for loss, damage or injury by one Government against the other, and by nationals (including both natural and juridical persons) of one party against the Government of the other party or entities owned or controlled by the other party that are (a) related to the conflict that was the subject of the Framework Agreement, the Modalities for its Implementation and the Cessation of Hostilities Agreement, and (b) result from violations of international humanitarian law, including the 1949 Geneva Conventions, or other violations of international law. The Commission shall not hear claims arising from the cost of military operations, preparing for military operations, or the use of force, except to the extent that such claims involve violations of international humanitarian law.

141. In the preamble to the 2001 Washington Agreement between France and the US Concerning Payments for Certain Losses Suffered during World War II, the parties recognize that "France, following the end of World War II, enacted legislation that provided restitution and compensation for victims of anti-Semitic persecution during World War II under the authority of the occupying German authorities or the Vichy Government". They also welcomed the various efforts of the French government to legislate with respect to compensation programmes for victims of the French occupation during Second World War, as well as the establishment of a fund of US$ 22.5 million, contributed by the banks, and another commitment of the banks to contribute 100 million Euro to the Foundation for the Memory of the Shoah.

142. Article 1(1) of the 2001 Washington Agreement between France and the US Concerning Payments for Certain Losses Suffered during World War II, the parties agreed that:

> The Commission [for the Compensation of Victims of Spoliation Resulting from Anti-Semitic Legislation in Force During the Occupation], the [Fund of US$22.5 million, contributed by the banks], and the [Foundation for the Memory of the Shoah] cover, and that it would be in the interest of all concerned for these entities to be the exclusive remedies and fora for the resolution of, any and all claims that have been or may be asserted against the Banks.

By Article 1(4), France agreed "to ensure that the Banks will promptly pay, in full, all claims approved by the [Commission for the Compensation of Victims of Spoliation Resulting from Anti-Semitic Legislation in Force During the Occupation]". In turn, by Article 2 of the Agreement, the US, with respect to pending and future cases concerning claims against one of the banks involved, committed itself to inform its courts through Statements of Interest that:

It would be in the foreign policy interests of the United States for the [Commission for the Compensation of Victims of Spoliation Resulting from Anti-Semitic Legislation in Force During the Occupation], the [Foundation for the Memory of the Shoah], and the [Fund of US$22.5 million, contributed by the banks] to be the exclusive remedies and fora for resolving such claims.

It added that "dismissal of such cases would be in its foreign policy interest".

143. Paragraph 1 of the 2001 Annex A to the Austrian-US Agreement concerning the Austrian General Settlement Fund, reflecting "key elements of the General Settlement Fund ('GSF') . . . and the additional measures for victims of National Socialism that form the basis for the Exchange of Notes between the United States and Austria", provides that:

Immediate Compensation for Survivors: The Austrian Government will make a US $150 million contribution to the National Fund, which will be distributed in its entirety on an expedited basis to all Holocaust survivors originating from or living in Austria . . . This amount will cover 1) apartment and small business leases; 2) household property; 3) personal valuables and effects. This amount will not cover potential claims against Dorotheum . . . or in rem claims for works of art. This amount will be credited against the final cap for the GSF.

144. Paragraph 2 of the 2001 Annex A to the Austrian-US Agreement concerning the Austrian General Settlement Fund provides that:

Establishment of a General Settlement Fund: The Austrian Federal Government will propose the necessary legislation to the National Council by April 30, 2001 to establish a GSF. Austria will undertake its best efforts to ensure that this legislation is passed by June 30, 2001. The legislation will enter into force once all contributions have been made available. The GSF will be a voluntary fund that will provide ex gratia payments to certain applicants. The GSF will include both a "claims-based" and an "equity-based" component. The GSF will be capped at US $210 million plus interest, at the Euribor rate, accruing to it beginning 30 days after all claims, pending as of June 30, 2001, against Austria and/or Austrian companies arising out of or related to the National Socialist era or World War II are dismissed with prejudice, and such interest shall continue to accrue on the funds available at any given time until the GSF has paid all approved claims. The US $210 million contribution by Austria and Austrian companies (including the Austrian insurance industry) + interest, under the terms described supra, will be in addition to the US $150 million referred to supra in para. 1. The distribution of payments by the GSF will be based on decisions of the independent Claims Committee.

145. Article 27(1) of the 2003 Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights on the Establishment of an African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights states that "if the Court finds that there has been violation of a human or peoples' right, it shall make appropriate orders to remedy the violation, including the payment of fair compensation or reparation."

Other Instruments

146. Article 24(5) of the 1923 Hague Rules of Air Warfare contains a provision requiring a belligerent State "to pay compensation for injuries to person or to property caused by the violation by any of its officers or forces of the provisions of this article [on aerial bombardment]".

147. Article 29 of the 1938 ILA Draft Convention for the Protection of Civilian Populations against New Engines of War provides that "any State committing a breach of this Convention is liable to pay compensation for all damage caused by such breach to a State injured thereby or any of its nationals".

148. Protocol No. 1 of the 1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and the CJMC, concluded at a meeting between the representatives of the FRG and the CJMC at which "the extension of the legislation existing in the Federal Republic of Germany for the redress of National-Socialist wrongs" was discussed and at which the representatives of both parties "agreed on a number of principles for the improvement of the existing legislation as well as on other measures", provides that:

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany declare that they will take as soon as possible all steps within their constitutional competence to ensure the carrying out of the following programme:

I. Compensation

1. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany is resolved to supplement and amend the existing compensation legislation by a Federal Supplementing and Coordinating Law (Bundesergänzungs- und rahmengesetz) so as to ensure that the legal position of the persecutees throughout the Federal territory be no less favourable than under the General Claims Law now in force in the US Zone.

...

3. Where residence and date-line requirements are applicable under compensation legislation, compensation payments for the deprivation of liberty shall be granted to persons who emigrated before the date-line and had their last German domicile or residence within the Federal territory.
4. Persecutees who were subject to compulsory labour and lived under conditions similar to incarceration shall be treated as if they had been deprived of liberty by reason of persecution.
5. A persecutee who, within the boundaries of the German Reich as of December 31, 1937, lived "underground" under conditions similar to incarceration or unworthy of human beings shall be treated as if he had been deprived of liberty by reason of persecution, in the meaning of that term under compensation legislation.

6. Where a persecutee died after March 8, 1945, his heirs (children, spouse or parents) shall be entitled to assert his claim for compensation for deprivation of liberty . . .

. . .

9. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany will provide compensation to persons who suffered losses as officials or employees of Jewish communities or public institutions within the boundaries of the German Reich as of December 31, 1937.

. . .

12. Persons who were persecuted because of their political convictions, race, faith or ideology and who settled in the Federal Republic or emigrated abroad from expulsion areas . . . shall receive compensation for deprivation of liberty and damage to health and limb . . . Compensation in accordance with Paragraph 1 shall also be paid to persecutees who emigrated abroad or settled in the Federal Republic during or after the time the general expulsion took place.

. . .

14. Persons who were persecuted for their political convictions, race, faith or ideology during the National-Socialist regime of terror and who are at present stateless or political refugees and who were deprived of liberty by National-Socialist terror acts shall receive appropriate compensation for deprivation of liberty and damage to health and limb.

149. Protocol No. 2 of the 1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and the CJMC provides that:

Whereas the National-Socialist regime of terror confiscated vast amounts of property and other assets from Jews in Germany and in territories formerly under German rule;

And whereas part of the material losses suffered by the persecutees of National-Socialism is being made good by means of internal German legislation in the fields of restitution and indemnification and whereas an extension of this internal German legislation, in particular in the field of indemnification, is intended;

And whereas considerable values, such as those spoliated in the occupied territories, cannot be returned, and that indemnification for many economic losses which have been suffered cannot be made because, as a result of the policy of extermination pursued by National-Socialism, claimants are no longer in existence;

And whereas [a] considerable number of Jewish persecutees of National-Socialism are needy as a result of their persecution . . .

And having regard to [the 1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and Israel] . . .

[Germany and the CJMC] therefore . . . concluded the following Agreement:

Article 1

In view of the considerations hereinbefore recited the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany hereby undertakes the obligation towards the [CJMC] to enter, in the Agreement with the State of Israel, into a contractual undertaking to pay the sum of 450 million Deutsche Mark to the State of Israel for the benefit of the [CJMC].

Article 2
The Federal Republic of Germany will discharge their obligation undertaken for the benefit of the [CJMC], in the [1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and Israel], by payments made to the State of Israel . . . The amounts so paid and transmitted by the State of Israel to the [CJMC] will be used for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of Jewish victims of National-Socialist persecution . . . Such amounts will, in principle, be used for the benefit of victims who at the time of the conclusion of the present Agreement were living outside Israel.

150. Article 19 of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that:

The victims of acts of enforced disappearance and their family shall obtain redress and shall have the right to adequate compensation, including the means for as complete a rehabilitation as possible. In the event of the death of the victim as a result of an act of enforced disappearance, their dependants shall also be entitled to compensation.

151. Article 3 of the 1993 CIS Agreement on the Protection of Victims of Armed Conflicts requires States to adopt national measures granting "social security and compensation for material losses to people afflicted by armed conflicts".
152. Article VIII of the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala provides that:

The Parties recognize that it is a humanitarian duty to compensate and/or assist victims of human rights violations. Said compensation and/or assistance shall be effected by means of government measures and programmes of a civilian and socio-economic nature addressed, as a matter of priority, to those whose need is greatest, given their economic and social position.

153. According to Article XI of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords which establishes the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees in Bosnia and Herzegovina,

The Commission shall receive and decide any claims for real property in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where the property has not voluntarily been sold or otherwise transferred since April 1, 1992, and where the claimant does not now enjoy possession of that property. Claims may be for return of the property or for just compensation in lieu of return.

154. Article 2(3) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines states that the right of the victims and their families to seek justice for violations of human rights includes "adequate compensation".
155. Article 23 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

Compensation should be provided for any economically assessable damage resulting from violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, such as:

(a) Physical or mental harm, including pain, suffering and emotional distress;
(b) Lost opportunities, including education;
(c) Material damages and loss of earnings, including loss of earning potential;
(d) Harm to reputation or dignity; and
(e) Costs required for legal or expert assistance, medicines and medical services, and psychological and social services.

156. Sections 2(2), (5) and (6) of UNMIK Regulation No. 2000/60 provide that:

2.2 Any person whose property right was lost between 23 March 1989 and 24 March 1999 as a result of discrimination has a right to restitution in accordance with the present regulation. Restitution may take the form of restoration of the property right (hereafter "restitution in kind") or compensation.
. . .
2.5 Any refugee or displaced person with a right to property has a right to return to the property, or to dispose of it in accordance with the law, subject to the present regulation.
2.6 Any person with a property right on 24 March 1999, who has lost possession of that property and has not voluntarily disposed of the property right, is entitled to an order from the Commission for repossession of the property. The Commission shall not receive claims for compensation for damage to or destruction of property.

157. Article 34 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Forms of reparation", provides that "full reparation for the injury caused by the internationally wrongful act shall take the form of restitution, compensation and satisfaction, either singly or in combination, in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter".

158. Article 36 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with compensation as a form of reparation, provides that:

1. The State responsible for an internationally wrongful act is under an obligation to compensate for the damage caused thereby, insofar as such damage is not made good by restitution.
2. The compensation shall cover any financially assessable damage including loss of profits insofar as it is established.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

159. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969), in a provision dealing with the violation of the terms of an armistice by an individual, refers to Article 41 of the 1907 HR and provides that "the violation of the terms of the armistice by private persons acting on their own initiative only entitles [the injured party] to demand the punishment of the offenders or, if necessary, compensation for the damages sustained".[99]

[99] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 6.013.

160. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989), referring to Article 91 AP I, provides that "the party which violates the Conventions or Protocol I shall, if the case demands, be liable to pay compensation".[100]

161. Canada's LOAC Manual, states that the means of securing observance of the LOAC "include protest and demand for compensation by a belligerent or neutral power".[101] It further provides that "a state which violates the LOAC shall, if the case demands, be liable to pay compensation".[102]

162. Colombia's Basic Military Manual, after mentioning the possibility of taking political, economic and legal sanctions against a State whose agents or civil servants have committed violations of international law, provides that "for the States and their governments, the sanctions entail high costs which represent compensations". After discussing the responsibility of individual members of the armed forces who have committed violations of international law, the manual states that "furthermore, apart from the individual sanctions, the nation can be sentenced, by its highest tribunals, to compensate for the damages and prejudices caused to individuals by arbitrary and illegal conduct of its authorities".[103]

163. Ecuador's Naval Manual, under a provision entitled "Observance of the law of armed conflict", states that "in the event of a clearly established violation of the law of armed conflict, the aggrieved nation may: . . . 2. Protest to the offending nation and demand that those responsible be punished and/or that compensation be paid."[104]

164. Germany's Military Manual, referring to Article 91 AP I and Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV), provides that "a party to a conflict which does not comply with the provisions of international humanitarian law shall be liable to pay compensation".[105]

165. South Korea's Military Law Manual provides that any party injured by a violation of IHL by the enemy can ask for remedies.[106]

166. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, under a provision stating the responsibility of States for violations of IHL committed by members of their armed forces, refers to Article 91 AP I and provides that "a party to a conflict may be obliged to pay compensation" for violations of IHL.[107]

167. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "the only remedy against a State for breaches of the law of armed conflict committed by its authority or by its personnel is by way of compensation".[108]

[100] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.10.
[101] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-1, § 3.
[102] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 9.
[103] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 36.
[104] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.
[105] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1214.
[106] South Korea, Military Law Manual (1996), pp. 89 and 90.
[107] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-3.
[108] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1605(1).

168. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "if the State contravenes the rules of the laws of War, it has to pay compensation".[109]

169. Spain's LOAC Manual, in a chapter dealing with the consequences of "incorrect behaviour" of members of the armed forces, notes that:

> In the event of non-compliance with the rules [of the LOAC], the State is liable insofar as it has the obligation to pay compensation in accordance with any resolutions condemning the acts in question or to adopt any other measures agreed on by the international community.[110]

The manual also states that "the State and ... international organizations may commit illicit acts. However, the responsibility which they incur is not of a criminal nature but compensatory, and is materialized in the obligation to pay an indemnification (art. 91 AP I)."[111] In a further provision entitled "Payment of compensation for war", the manual states that "the belligerent party which violates the rules of the LOAC can be obliged to compensate where appropriate".[112]

170. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "the belligerent State that is the victim of violations of the Convention can take the following measures: ... if need be it can demand compensation".[113]

171. The UK Military Manual, in a chapter dealing with "Means of securing legitimate warfare", quotes Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV).[114] In addition to other means of securing legitimate warfare, the manual lists "compensation" and refers to Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV).[115]

172. The US Field Manual, quoting Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV), states that:

> In the event of violation of the law of war, the injured party may legally resort to remedial action of the following types: ... Protest or demand for compensation ... Such communications may be sent through the protecting power, a humanitarian organization performing the duties of a protecting power, or a neutral state, or by parlementaire direct to the commander of the offending forces.[116]

173. The US Air Force Pamphlet, quoting Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) and Articles 29 GC I and 12 GC III, states that:

> Under international law, states which violate their obligations are responsible, in appropriate cases, for payment of monetary damages to compensate states for injuries suffered. This principle applies to law of armed conflict violations. State responsibility to compensate victims of violations is an important feature in [109] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 7.

[110] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.6.a.
[111] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.a.
[112] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.10.f.
[113] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 195(a).
[114] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 618.
[115] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 620.
[116] US, Field Manual (1956), § 495(b).

enforcement measures. Claims for compensation are frequently combined with protests about violations . . . Thus, the violater state's obligation to compensate for violations of the Hague Regulations applies regardless of whether the acts constituting violations were authorized by competent authorities of the violator state . . . However, as a general rule, in the absence of some cause for the fault such as inadequate supervision or training, no obligation for compensation arises on the part of the state for other violations of the law of armed conflict committed by individual members outside of their general area of responsibility.[117]

The Pamphlet further states that "Article 3 [of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV)] concerns a state's obligation to pay compensation for acts committed by its Armed Forces which violate the Hague Regulations. The 1949 Geneva Conventions contain a variety of such obligations."[118]

174. The US Naval Handbook, under a provision dealing with "Enforcement of the law of armed conflict", states that "in the event of a clearly established violation of the law of armed conflict, the aggrieved nation may: . . . 2. Protest to the offending nation and demand that those responsible be punished and/or that compensation be paid."[119] (emphasis in original)

175. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook, which contains a list of cases of demands for compensation involving US forces, states that "it is now generally established that the principle laid down in art. 3 [of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV)] is applicable to the violation of any rule regulating the conduct of hostilities and not merely to violations of the [1907] Hague Regulations".[120]

National Legislation

176. Argentina's Law on Compensation for Political Prisoners provides that:

Article 1 – Persons who, during a state of siege, were put at the disposal of the national executive power, by decree thereof, or civilians who were detained on the basis of orders issued by a military court – whether or not they have undertaken legal proceedings for damage or prejudice suffered – come within the purview of this law, provided they have not already received compensation in accordance with a prior legal ruling concerning the events in question.
Article 2 – In order to come within the purview of this law, the above-mentioned persons must fulfil one of the following conditions:

(a) They must have been put at the disposal of the national executive power prior to 10 December 1983.
(b) In the case of civilians, they must have been deprived of their freedom on the basis of orders issued by a military court, regardless of whether or not they were convicted by that court.[121]

[117] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-3.
[118] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(b).
[119] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.
[120] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.2, footnote 21.
[121] Argentina, Law on Compensation for Political Prisoners (1991), Articles 1–2.

177. Argentina's Law on Compensation for Enforced Disappearances provides that:

Article 1 – Persons who, at the time of the enactment of this law, are the victims of enforced disappearance, shall be entitled to receive, by proxy, special damages equal to the monthly salary of a level-A civil servant (coefficient 100), as provided by Decree No. 993/91.[122]

178. In 1995, by its National Fund Law, Austria established a national fund "for the provision of benefits to the victims of National Socialism".[123] The Law provides that:

The Fund shall render benefits to persons

(1) who were persecuted by the National Socialist regime for political reasons, for reasons of birth, religion, nationality, sexual orientation, because of physical or mental disability or on the basis of accusations of allegedly antisocial attitudes, or who in other ways fell victim to typically National Socialist injustice or left the country to escape such persecution,
...
(4) The Fund shall render one-time-only or recurrent financial benefits.[124]

In its 2001 amendment, the Law further provides that:

(1) Without prejudice to [previous contributions], the Federal Government shall contribute to the Fund an amount the total of which shall correspond to the equivalent in Schillings as of 24 October 2000 of 150 million US Dollars and be allocated [to the Fund]. This amount shall be accounted for by the Fund in a special account for benefits paid under Paragraph 2.
(2) This amount shall be used for benefits to be paid to victims of National Socialism ... as a final compensation for the following categories of losses of property:
a) apartment and small business leases;
b) household property;
c) personal valuables and effects.
The present Federal Law shall be without prejudice to the in rem return of works of art according to statutory provisions.
(3) Persons ... who were persecuted by the National Socialist regime on political grounds, on grounds of origin, religion, nationality, sexual orientation, or of physical or mental handicap, or who left the country to escape such persecution, and who themselves, or whose parents, suffered a loss of property in one of the categories mentioned in Paragraph 2 as a result of, or in connection with, events in the territory of the present-day Republic of Austria between 13 March 1938 and 9 May 1945 shall be entitled to such benefits. There is no legal right to benefits by the Fund.
...

[122] Argentina, Law on Compensation for Enforced Disappearances (1994), Article 1.
[123] Austria, National Fund Law as amended (1995), Article 1(1)(1).
[124] Austria, National Fund Law as amended (1995), Article 1(2).

(6) The amount mentioned in Paragraph 1 shall be distributed in equal parts among those entitled to benefits.[125]

179. In 2000, Austria adopted the Reconciliation Fund Law establishing a national fund, the goal of which was "to make a contribution toward reconciliation, peace, and cooperation through a voluntary gesture of the Republic of Austria to natural persons who were coerced into slave labor or forced labor by the National Socialist regime on the territory of the present day Republic of Austria".[126] The Law provides that "the Fund shall have moneys in the amount of 6 billion Austrian schillings to carry out its tasks".[127] It further provides that the amounts (one-time payments) are to be paid as follows:

1. 105,000 Austrian schillings to [slave labourers].
2. 35,000 Austrian schillings to [forced labourers] who had to perform forced labor in industry, business, construction, power companies and other commercial enterprises, public institutions, rail transportation or postal service.
3. 20,000 Austrian schillings to [forced labourers] who had to do forced labor exclusively in agriculture or forestry or in the form of personal services (housekeeping, hotel work, etc).
4. Children and minors [who were transported under the age of 12 with one or both parents into the territory of the present day Republic of Austria or who were born here during the mother's period of forced labor] are to receive the amount to which the parent is entitled or would be entitled . . .
5. A supplementary payment of 5,000 Austrian schillings may be made to women who during their time as forced labourers gave birth to children in maternity facilities for eastern workers or who were forced to undergo abortions.[128]

Under another provision, "if the eligible person has died on or after February 15, 2000, then the heirs . . . shall succeed".[129] The Law further provides that "payment of an award is made under the condition that the recipient make a declaration that with the receipt of an award under this federal law he renounces irrevocably any claim for slave labor or forced labor against the Republic of Austria or against Austrian business".[130] The Austrian Reconciliation Fund Law came into force on 27 November 2000 after the signing of bilateral agreements between Austria and six Central and Eastern European countries (Belarus, Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Russia, Ukraine), as well as the Executive Agreement with the US, and the securing of the financial resources for the Reconciliation Fund, in fulfilment of the requirements of the law.[131]

180. In 2001, Austria adopted the General Settlement Fund Law by which it established the General Settlement Fund, the purpose of which was "to comprehensively resolve open questions of compensation of victims of National [125] Austria, National Fund Law as amended (1995), Article 1(2b)(1), (2), (3) and (6).

[126] Austria, Reconciliation Fund Law as amended (2000), Section 1(2).
[127] Austria, Reconciliation Fund Law as amended (2000), Section 6(1).
[128] Austria, Reconciliation Fund Law as amended (2000), Section 3(1).
[129] Austria, Reconciliation Fund Law as amended (2000), Section 4(2).
[130] Austria, Reconciliation Fund Law as amended (2000), Section 5(1).
[131] Austria, Reconciliation Fund Law as amended (2000), Section 17.

Socialism for losses and damages as a result of or in connection with events having occurred on the territory of the present-day Republic of Austria during the National Socialist era". The Law provides that:

The Fund's purpose shall be to acknowledge, through voluntary payments, the moral responsibility for losses and damages inflicted upon Jewish citizens and other victims of National Socialism as a result of or in connection with the National Socialist Regime. The return of works of art shall be governed by the special legislation presently in force.[132]

The Law further provides that:

To carry out its tasks, the Fund shall be endowed with an amount of 210 million US Dollars. This amount shall be made available, at the latest, 30 days after all claims in the United States pending as of June 30, 2001 against Austria or Austrian companies arising out or related to the National Socialist era or World War II have been dismissed. Excepted therefrom are claims covered by the Reconciliation Fund . . . claims for the return of works of art, as well as claims in rem restitution against provinces or municipalities.[133]

In addition , the Law provides that:

(1) Persons (under the claims-based process also associations), who/which were persecuted by the National Socialist regime on political grounds or origin, religion, nationality, sexual orientation, or of physical or mental handicap or of accusations of so-called asociality, or who left the country to escape such persecution, and who suffered losses or damages as a result of or in connection with events having occurred on the territory of the present-day Republic of Austria during the National Socialist era shall be eligible to file an application.
(2) In addition . . . heirs of eligible claimants as defined in Paragraph 1 shall also be eligible to file an application. In case of a defunct association, an association which the Claims Committee regards as the legal successor shall be entitled to file an application as well.[134]

The Law expressly states that:

The payments shall be awarded as a final compensation for losses and damages as a result of or in connection with events having occured on the territory of the present-day Republic of Austria during the National Socialist era. There shall be no legal right to these payments.[135]

181. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that:

There is hereby established a fund, to be known as the Crimes Against Humanity Fund, into which shall be paid

[132] Austria, General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001), Article 1(1)(1) and (2).
[133] Austria, General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001), Article 1(2)(1).
[134] Austria, General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001), Article 1(6).
[135] Austria, General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001), Article 1(7).

(a) all money obtained through enforcement in Canada of orders of the International Criminal Court for reparation or forfeiture or orders of that Court imposing a fine;
(b) all money obtained in accordance with section 31; and
(c) any money otherwise received as a donation to the Crimes Against Humanity Fund.

The Attorney General of Canada may make payments out of the Crimes Against Humanity Fund, with or without a deduction for costs, to the International Criminal Court, the Trust Fund established under article 79 of the Rome Statute, victims of offences under this Act or of offences within the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court, and to the families of those victims, or otherwise as the Attorney General of Canada sees fit.[136]

The Act goes on to say that:

The Minister of Public Works and Government Services shall pay into the Crimes Against Humanity Fund
(a) the net proceeds received from the disposition of any property referred to in subsections 4(1) to (3) of the Seized Property Management Act that is forfeited to Her Majesty and disposed of by that Minister, if the property was derived as the result of the commission of an offence under this Act; and
(b) amounts paid or recovered as a fine imposed under subsection 462.37(3) of the Criminal Code in relation to proceedings for an offence under this Act.[137]

182. Since the end of Second World War, Germany has adopted several laws relative to the indemnification of victims of the war and the Holocaust, such as: the Law on the Equalization of Burdens as amended (1952); the Law for the Compensation of the Victims of National Socialist Persecution as amended (1953); the Federal Restitution Law as amended (1957) which provides for compensation in case restitution was not possible; the Law on the Reparation of Losses as amended (1969); the Law on the Settlement of Open Property Matters as amended (1990); and the Law on Indemnification of Victims of Nazism as amended (1994).[138]

183. In 2000, the German Bundestag (Lower House of Parliament), with the concurrence of the Bundesrat (Upper House of Parliament), adopted the Law on the Creation of a Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and Future", thereby establishing a foundation responsible for making payments to entitled claimants and setting maximum amounts to be awarded to different categories

[136] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 30.
[137] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 31.
[138] Germany, Law on the Equalization of Burdens as amended (1952); Law for the Compensation of the Victims of National Socialist Persecution as amended (1953); Federal Restitution Law as amended (1957); Law on the Reparation of Losses as amended (1969); Law on the Settlement of Open Property Matters as amended (1990); Law on Indemnification of Victims of Nazism as amended (1994).

of claimants.[139] The Law states that "the purpose of the Foundation is to make financial compensation available through partner organizations to former forced laborers and those affected by other injustices from the National Socialist period".[140] Eligible for compensation under this Law are the following persons:

1. persons who were held in a concentration camp . . . or in another place of confinement outside the territory of what is now the Republic of Austria or a ghetto under comparable conditions and were subjected to forced labor;
2. persons who were deported from their homelands into the territory of the German Reich within the borders of 1937 or to a German-occupied area, subjected to forced labor in a commercial enterprise or for public authorities there, and held under conditions other than those mentioned in Number 1, or were subjected to conditions resembling imprisonment or similar extremely harsh living conditions;
. . .
3. persons who suffered property loss as a consequence of racial persecution with essential, direct, and harm-causing collaboration of German businesses . . . The partner organizations may also award compensation from the funds provided to them . . . to those victims of National Socialist crimes who are not members of one of the groups mentioned in Sentence 1, Numbers 1 and 2, particularly forced laborers in agriculture . . . The funds provided for in Section 9, Paragraph 4, Sentence 2, Number 2 are intended to compensate property damage inflicted during the National Socialist regime with the essential, direct, and harm-causing participation of German enterprises, but not inflicted for reasons of National Socialist persecution. The funds referred to in Section 9, Paragraph 3, shall be awarded in cases of medical experiments or in the event of the death of or severe damage to the health of a child lodged in a home for children of forced laborers; in cases of other personal injuries they may be awarded.
. . .

(3) Eligibility cannot be based on prisoner-of-war status.[141]

184. Russia's Constitution provides that "the rights of persons who have sustained harm from crimes and abuses of power shall be protected by the law. The state shall guarantee the victims access to justice and compensation for damage" and that "everyone shall have the right to compensation by the state for the damage caused by unlawful actions (or inaction) of state organs, or their officials".[142] Other Russian legislation of relevance to the question of compensation for victims of violations of IHL are: the Law on Rehabilitation of Victims of Political Persecution as amended; the Law on Rehabilitation of the Repressed Nations; the Decree on the Law on Rehabilitation of the Repressed

[139] Germany, Law on the Creation of a Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and Future" as amended (2000).
[140] Germany, Law on the Creation of a Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and Future" as amended (2000), Section 2(1).
[141] Germany, Law on the Creation of a Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and Future" as amended (2000), Section 11.
[142] Russia, Constitution (1993), Articles 52 and 53.

Nations in Relation to the Cossacks; the Resolution on Compensation for Persons Having Suffered Nazi Persecution; the Resolution on Return of Property and Compensation for Victims of Political Persecution; and the Resolution on Compensation for Destruction of Property for Citizens Having Suffered from the Settling of the Crisis in Chechnya and Having Left Chechnya Irrevocably.[143]

185. Spain's Military Criminal Code provides that "the State is the civil authority with subsidiary liability for any offences that are committed by members of the armed forces in the line of duty and that are considered as such by the court".[144]

186. Spain's Penal Code provides that:

> The State, the autonomous community, the province, the island, the municipality or another public authority, depending on the case, has subsidiary liability for damage caused by a person who has committed a fraudulent or culpable act, provided that the person in question is a representative, agent or employee of said authority, or an official acting in the line of duty, that the damage caused was a direct consequence of running the public services entrusted to that person, and that there can be no duplication of the compensation awarded. The aforesaid is without prejudice to the liability associated with the normal or faulty functioning of such services, in keeping with the rules of administrative procedure.[145]

The Code also provides that "if the civil liability of a representative, agent or employee of a public authority, or of an official, is being examined in legal proceedings, a claim must be lodged simultaneously against the administration or public authority presumed to have subsidiary liability".[146]

187. Switzerland's Law on (State) Responsibility as amended provides that "the Confederation shall be liable for any damage unlawfully caused to a third party by an official in the exercise of his or her official duties, regardless of the fault committed by the official".[147] It further provides that:

> If the official has committed a fault resulting in death or bodily harm, the competent authority may, taking into consideration the special circumstances of the case, award the victim or the relatives of the victim adequate moral damages.
>
> Whoever suffers unlawful moral injury has the right, if the official has committed a fault, to be paid damages therefor, provided that this is justified by the gravity of the injury and that compensation has not otherwise been given by the official concerned.[148]

[143] Russia, Law on Rehabilitation of Victims of Political Persecution as amended (1991); Law on Rehabilitation of the Repressed Nations (1991); Decree on the Law on Rehabilitation of the Repressed Nations in Relation to the Cossacks (1992); Resolution on Compensation for Persons Having Suffered Nazi Persecution (1994); Resolution on Return of Property and Compensation for Victims of Political Persecution (1994); Resolution on Compensation for Destruction of Property for Citizens Having Suffered from the Settling of the Crisis in Chechnya and Having Left Chechnya Irrevocably (1997).

[144] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 48.

[145] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 121.

[146] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 121.

[147] Switzerland, Law on (State) Responsibility as amended (1958), Article 3(1).

[148] Switzerland, Law on (State) Responsibility as amended (1958), Article 6.

188. In 1988, the US passed the Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) containing a Statement of Congress to the effect that:

(a) With regard to individuals of Japanese ancestry
The Congress recognizes that, as described by the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, a grave injustice was done to both citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry by the evacuation, relocation, and internment of civilians during World War II . . . The excluded individuals of Japanese ancestry suffered enormous damages, both material and intangible, and there were incalculable losses in education and job training, all of which resulted in significant human suffering for which appropriate compensation has not been made . . .

(b) With respect to the Aleuts
The Congress recognizes that, as described by the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, the Aleut civilian residents of the Pribilof Islands and the Aleutian Islands west of Unimak Island were relocated during World War II to temporary camps in isolated regions of southeast Alaska where they remained, under United States control and in the care of the United States, until long after any potential danger to their home villages had passed. The United States failed to provide reasonable care for the Aleuts, and this resulted in widespread illness, disease, and death among the residents of the camps; and the United States further failed to protect Aleut personal and community property while such property was in its possession or under its control. The United States has not compensated the Aleuts adequately for the conversion or destruction of personal property, and the conversion or destruction of community property caused by the United States military occupation of Aleut villages during World War II. There is no remedy for injustices suffered by the Aleuts during World War II except an Act of Congress providing appropriate compensation for those losses which are attributable to the conduct of United States forces and other officials and employees of the United States.[149]

Title I ("United States Citizens of Japanese Ancestry and Resident Japanese Aliens", also known as "Civil Liberties Act") of the Law establishes the Civil Liberties Public Education Fund and, under a provision entitled "Restitution", provides that "the Attorney General shall, subject to the availability of funds appropriated to the Fund for such purpose, pay out of the Fund to each eligible individual the sum of $20,000, unless such individual refuses . . . to accept the payment".[150] Title II ("Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution") establishes the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution Fund and, under a provision entitled "Compensation for community losses", provides that "subject to the availability of funds appropriated to the Fund, the Secretary shall make payments from the Fund, in accordance with this section, as restitution for certain Aleut

[149] US, Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) (1988), Statement of the Congress, Section 1989a.

[150] US, Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) (1988), Title I, §§ 1989b-3(a) and 1989b-4(a)(1).

losses sustained in World War II".[151] Under a provision entitled "Individual compensation of eligible Aleuts", Title II further provides that "the Secretary shall, in accordance with this section, make per capita payments out of the Fund to eligible Aleuts. The Secretary shall pay, subject to the availability of funds appropriated to the Fund for such payments, to each eligible Aleut the sum of $12,000."[152] With respect to Attu Island, Title II also provides that:

The public lands on Attu Island, Alaska, within the National Wildlife Refuge System have been designated as wilderness . . . In order to make restitution for the loss of traditional Aleut lands and village properties on Attu Island, while preserving the present designation of Attu Island lands as part of the National Wilderness Preservation System, compensation to the Aleut people, in lieu of the conveyance of Attu Island, shall be provided.[153]

189. A provision of the California Code of Civil Procedure as amended dealing with compensation for slave and forced labour states that:

Any Second World War slave labor victim, or heir of a Second World War slave labor victim, Second World War forced labor victim, or heir of a Second World War forced labor victim, may bring an action to recover compensation for labor performed as a Second World War slave labor victim or Second World War forced labor victim from any entity or successor in interest thereof, for whom that labor was performed, either directly or through a subsidiary or affiliate.[154]

National Case-law

190. In 1952, the German Administrative Court of Appeal of Münster heard a claim for compensation for injuries suffered by a German national as a result of a road accident with a vehicle belonging to the occupying powers. The Court held that the liability of occupying powers for injuries caused by their personnel was strict and that:

The plaintiff's claim for damages derives not only from public municipal law but also from international law. By virtue of Article 3 of the [1907 Hague Convention (IV)] a State is liable for all acts committed by persons belonging to its armed forces. According to the wide wording of Article 3, which has been chosen in the interests of the protection of the civilian population, fault on the part of the person who has caused the damage is not a prerequisite of liability. It is therefore an undisputed principle of the doctrine of international law that Article 3 provides for the absolute liability of the Occupant in respect of acts committed by members of its armed forces. Within the framework of this absolute liability for which international law provides, a State is under a duty – according to the views of writers on international [151] US, Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) (1988), Title II, §§ 1989c-2(a) and 1989c-4(a).

[152] US, Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) (1988), Title II, § 1989c-5(a).
[153] US, Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) (1988), Title II, § 1989c-6(a).
[154] US, California Code of Civil Procedure as amended (1873), Section 354.6(b).

law which have, however, not yet been universally accepted – to pay compensation for "incorporeal" damage.[155]

191. In the Reparation Payments case in 1963 relating to claims for compensation for slave labour during Second World War, Germany's Federal Supreme Court stated that the claims were in the nature of reparations claims and that "with regard to the inextricable connection with the question of reparations under international public law . . . it is not possible to deny the right to compensation based on civil law from the outset".[156] However, the Court held that no decision could be reached on the merits of the claim until there was a final reparations agreement between the plaintiff's government and Germany, as it found that the London Agreement on German External Debts of 27 February 1953 had postponed the question of indemnification of individuals to when the issue of reparations more generally had been settled.[157]

192. In the Forced Labour case in 1996, Germany's Constitutional Court held obiter that there did not exist a rule of general international law preventing the payment of compensation to individuals for violations of international law. The Court added that it was therefore not prohibited for a State that has violated international law to allow individuals to bring claims for compensation for events during Second World War through its national courts.[158]

193. In the Distomo case in 2003 dealing with killings committed by German soldiers in Greece during the Second World War, Germany's Federal Supreme Court stated that, due to a concept of war as a "relationship from State to State" as it existed during the Second World War, a State which was responsible for crimes committed at that time was only liable to pay compensation vis-à-vis another State but not vis-à-vis the individual victims. According to the Court, international law conferred the right upon States to exercise diplomatic protection of their nationals, and the right to claim compensation was the right of the State. With reference to Articles 2 and 3 of the Hague Convention (IV) and declaring the 1907 HR as being directly applicable, it stated that this was true "at least for the period in question", i.e. for the time of the Second World War.[159]

194. A decision of the Court of First Instance of Leivadia in Greece in 1997 related to a claim for compensation against Germany brought by the prefecture of Voiotia and a number of individual claimants. The claims were based on acts – wilful murder and destruction of private property – committed by German occupation forces in June 1944. The Court rejected the German government's assertion of sovereign immunity on the ground that if a State acted in violation [155] Germany, Administrative Court of Appeal of Münster, Personal Injuries case, Judgement, 9 April 1952.

[156] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Reparation Payments case, Judgement, 26 February 1963.
[157] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Reparation Payments case, Judgement, 26 February 1963.
[158] Germany, Second Chamber of the Constitutional Court, Forced Labour case, Judgement, 13 May 1996.
[159] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Distomo case, Judgement, 26 June 2003.

of a rule of jus cogens, it lost its right to invoke sovereign immunity. As the Court had previously concluded that the rules of IHL relating to belligerent occupation protecting, inter alia, the right to life, family honour, property and religious convictions were part of jus cogens, it found that Germany could not claim sovereign immunity. Having rejected Germany's claim of immunity, the Court then determined that the suit was lawful under Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) and Article 46 of the 1907 HR. It also considered that, in the absence of a rule of international law prohibiting this, the claims could be made by the plaintiffs in their individual capacity and not necessarily by their State of nationality. It also held that the words "if the case demands" in Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) specifically underlined that material damage must have been caused as a result of the violations of the conventions. The Court then reviewed the claims, rejecting those which lacked sufficient evidence of the property destroyed or of its value, and made awards of compensation in other cases.[160] In May 2000, the Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decisions, basing its conclusion that Germany was not entitled to sovereign immunity both on a finding that there existed a customary "tort law" exception to the doctrine of sovereign immunity and that as the acts in question violated peremptory norms of international law, they did not attract immunity.[161] However, with regard to the same case, the Greek government refused to give its consent necessary for the execution of the judgement against Germany for reasons of State immunity.[162]

195. In the Shimoda case in 1963, the first case in which compensation was sought in Japan for violations of the laws of war, the plaintiffs, residents of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in 1945, brought proceedings against the Japanese government on the ground that, by signing the 1951 Peace Treaty with the Allies, it had waived their right to seek compensation from the US for its use of atomic bombs in violation of the laws of war. The plaintiffs argued, inter alia, that the government's waiver of their claims obliged the government to pay them compensation itself. The Tokyo District Court ruled that, even though the aerial bombardment was an illegal act of war, individuals could be considered the subjects of rights under international law only in so far as they had been recognised as such in specific instances, such as, for example, in cases of mixed arbitral tribunals. In light of this determination, the Court concluded that "there is in general no way open to an individual who suffers injuries from an act of hostilities contrary to international law to claim damages on the level of international law, except for the cases mentioned above". The Court went on to consider the question of whether the plaintiffs could seek redress before

[160] Greece, Court of First Instance of Leivadia, Prefecture of Voiotia case, Judgement, 30 October 1997.

[161] Greece, Supreme Court, Prefecture of Voiotia case, Judgement, 4 May 2000.

[162] Greece, Statement before the ECtHR, Kalogeropoulou and Others case, Decision on admissibility, 12 December 2002, A; see also Athens News Agency, Justice minister will not sign order to confiscate German properties in Athens, 15 September 2001.

the municipal courts of either of the belligerent parties and concluded that considerations of sovereign immunity precluded proceedings against the US either before Japanese or US courts.[163]

196. In the Siberian Detainees case in 1989, Japan's Tokyo District Court dismissed claims of former soldiers and civilian employees who had been detained and put into involuntary labour in Siberia for a long time after the end of Second World War. The claimants were seeking compensation for their labour from Japan as "power on which prisoners of war depend" on the basis of the Geneva Conventions and customary international law, but the Court dismissed the case for a lack of standing.[164] The judgement was upheld on appeal.[165]

197. In the Apology for the Kamishisuka Slaughter of Koreans case before Japan's Tokyo District Court in 1996, three Korean plaintiffs claimed compensation for the arrest and execution of their father and brother by the Japanese military police on charges of spying in August 1945. They argued that, as the employer of the military police, Japan was under a duty to provide compensation. The claim was based on the Japanese Civil Code and international law. The Court found that:

> Regarding the existence of international customary law as alleged by the plaintiffs, neither the general practice nor the conviction (opinio juris) that the state has a duty to pay damages to each individual when that state infringes its obligations under international human rights law or international humanitarian law can be said to exist. As international customary law as alleged by the plaintiffs cannot be determined, therefore, the plaintiffs' claim based on international law is also without grounds.[166]

The judgement was upheld on appeal in 1996, when the Tokyo High Court approved the statement of the lower court but limited its finding of the absence of a rule of customary law entitling individuals to compensation in the law as it was at the time of the incident. The Court emphasised that:

> When the incident occurred, there was no evidence of any general practice, nor the existence of opinio juris that when a State acts in violation of the obligation of international human rights law or international humanitarian law, that State has the responsibility of compensating for damages any individual who was a victim.
>
> Therefore, the international customary law against which the appellants claim did not exist at the time of the incident, and there are no grounds for the allegation of the appellants based upon international law.[167]

[163] Japan, Tokyo District Court, Shimoda case, Judgement, 7 December 1963.
[164] Japan, Tokyo District Court, Siberian Detainees case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 4 April 1989.
[165] Japan, Tokyo High Court, Siberian Detainees case, Judgement in Trial of Second Instance, 5 March 1993; Supreme Court, Siberian Detainees case, Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, 13 March 1997.
[166] Japan, Tokyo District Court, Apology for the Kamishisuka Slaughter of Koreans case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 27 July 1995.
[167] Japan, Tokyo High Court, Apology for the Kamishisuka Slaughter of Koreans case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 August 1996.

198. In 1998, Japan's Tokyo District Court considered three further cases in which groups of individuals sought compensation from the government of Japan for violations of IHL: the Ex-Allied Nationals Claims case, the Dutch Nationals Claims case and the Filippino "Comfort Women" Claims case. The first two cases dealt with claims of former POWs and civilian internees, the third with claims of Filippino women who were allegedly assaulted, confined and raped as "comfort women" during the Japanese occupation of the Philippines during Second World War. The cases were based principally on Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) and customary international law. The Court dismissed all three cases for lack of standing by the individuals. The Court reviewed the precise wording of Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) and concluded that it did not specify the methods for enforcing liability for violations nor provided that individuals had a right to claim compensation against a State in national courts. Having reached this conclusion on the basis of the language of Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV), the Court pointed out that international law only exceptionally recognised the right of individuals to enforce their rights under international law directly and that usually this had to be done by their State of nationality by means of diplomatic protection. The Court confirmed this conclusion by a review of the drafting history of Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) and of its application by other States, and concluded that Article 3 could not be interpreted so as to provide a right to individuals who had suffered damages because of violations of the laws of war to bring direct claims for compensation against the violating State in domestic courts.[168] In the Filippino "Comfort Women" case, the Court stated that:

> To summarize, according to the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms in their context, Article 3 of the Hague Convention cannot be understood as a clause that entitles individual victims to bring a claim for compensation directly against a wrongdoing State. Accordingly, it is impossible to recognize that the article is a codification of a rule of customary international law.

Having considered the reconfirmation of the principle of Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) since Second World War, the Court further stated that:

> Consequently, throughout its close examination of texts and the drafting process of Article 3 of the Hague Convention, the Court has been unable to recognize the alleged rule of customary international law that provides individual residents in an occupied territory the right to claim compensation directly against the occupying State for damages resulting from a violation of the Hague Regulations committed by members of the occupying forces.

[168] Japan, Tokyo District Court, Ex-Allied Nationals Claims case, Judgement, 26 November 1998; Dutch Nationals Claims case, Judgement, 30 November 1998; Filippino "Comfort Women" Claims case, Judgement, 9 October 1998.

In addition, throughout its careful survey of all records of the case, the Court was unable to find any rule of customary international law apart from Article 3 of the Hague Convention that provides the principle mentioned above.[169]

199. In the Zhang Baoheng and Others case in 2002, Japan's Fukuoka District Court awarded US$ 1.29 million to 15 Chinese men who had been forced to work in Japan during Second World War and who had filed a lawsuit against the Japanese government and a mining company for compensation and a public apology. The Court ruled that the company should be held liable, but not the Japanese government, finding that the company and the government "jointly committed an illegal act" but that the Constitution barred the Court from ordering the government to pay compensation.[170]

200. In the Ko Otsu Hei Incidents case in 1998, Japan's Yamaguchi Lower Court ordered the Japanese government to pay 300,000 yen each to three South Korean "comfort women" for their enforced prostitution during Second World War. It considered that the acts in question constituted severe violations of human rights and human dignity on the basis of the sex and race of the plaintiffs. As the Japanese government had been aware of the violations but had not adopted legislation to compensate the plaintiffs, it was at fault and in violation of the Constitution. The Court rejected the claim for an official apology from the Japanese government before the Japanese parliament and the UN General Assembly on the ground that it did not have jurisdiction to make such orders. Regarding the claims of Korean women who had worked as slave labourers in Japanese factories during the war, the Court found that, unlike the situation of the "comfort women", the suffering of the forced labourers was not so great when compared to the hardships suffered by members of the civilian population generally during the war as to have required the Japanese government to adopt legislation to compensate them. The Court added that the labourers' claim was within the scope of war reparation, responsibility for which was vested in the executive and the legislature and not the courts.[171] However, in March 2001, the Hiroshima High Court reversed the 1998 judgement and dismissed the claims for the reasons that the Japanese Constitution did not oblige the State to apologize or to legislate laws concerning the compensation as such. Referring to the State's obligation to compensate for its omission, which had been admitted at the trial of first instance, the Court stated that a decision on the modalities of post-war compensation was a policy decision within the discretionary power of the legislature. However, it stated that "considering the serious damage the applicants have suffered, we understand their dissatisfaction caused by the State's omission of legislation".[172]

[169] Japan, Tokyo District Court, Filippino "Comfort Women" Claims case, Judgement, 9 October 1998.
[170] Japan, Fukuoka District Court, Zhang Baoheng and Others case, Judgement, 26 April 2002.
[171] Japan, Yamaguchi Lower Court, Ko Otsu Hei Incidents case, Judgement, 27 April 1998.
[172] Japan, Hiroshima High Court, Ko Otsu Hei Incidents case, Judgement, 29 March 2001.

201. In the Khamzaev case in 2001, a Russian District Court rejected the claim of a private person against the Russian government for material and moral compensation for the damages sustained in the aerial bombardment of Urus-Martan in October 1999 by Russian aviation. During the trial, the government denied that bombings had taken place in the relevant part of the town. However, the representative of the Ministry of Finance of the Russian Federation declared that:

> We think that the damage was caused by the Federal armed forces. The house was destroyed. But, if the generals assert that they had not given the order to attack residential areas of Urus-Martan, then the pilot(s) exceeded the limits of the order. Hence, there are no grounds for compensation for damages from the State treasury.[173]

202. In its judgement in the Spring case in 2000 dealing with the claim of a Jewish Auschwitz survivor against the Swiss Confederation for 100,000 Swiss francs in compensation for having been handed over, in November 1943, to German troops by Swiss border guards, Switzerland's Federal Court referred to a possible right to compensation on the ground of Switzerland's Law on (State) Responsibility as amended. It stated, however, that, as a condition for the applicability of this law, the right to compensation would not have to be barred by statutes of limitation or by laches. The Federal Court, stating that the claimant based his right to compensation, inter alia, on the alleged illegal handing over to the German authorities which he had qualified as complicity in genocide, referred to Article 75(1) bis of the Swiss Penal Code and Article 56 bis of the Swiss Military Criminal Code. It stated that even under these provisions, which excluded the applicability of statutes of limitation to, inter alia, genocide and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions or other international agreements on the protection of victims of war if the offence was particularly serious given the circumstances, the alleged criminal acts were barred. The Federal Court also referred to the principle according to which statutes of limitation under penal law could also be applicable to the right under civil law. It further stated that the claim was also barred by statutes of limitation under (the applicable national) public law. Therefore, in the merits, the Federal Court dismissed the claim. Nevertheless, it awarded the claimant 100,000 Swiss francs in compensation for the procedural costs.[174]

203. In the Goldstar case in 1992, a US Court of Appeals rejected a claim brought against the US government by Panamanian nationals whose business establishments had been looted during the US intervention in Panama. The plaintiffs argued, inter alia, that Article 3 of 1907 Hague Convention (IV) provided them with a remedy which could be enforced before the US courts and that the US had waived its sovereign immunity under this self-executing provision. The Court rejected this argument, holding that the Hague Convention was not self-executing and stating that:

[173] Russia, Basmanny District Court, Khamzaev case, Judgement, 11 May 2001.
[174] Switzerland, Federal Court, Spring case, Judgement, 21 January 2000.

> International treaties are not presumed to be self-executing . . . Courts will only find a treaty to be self-executing if the document, as a whole, evidences an intent to provide a private right of action . . . The Hague Convention does not explicitly provide for a privately enforceable cause of action. Moreover, we find that a reasonable reading as a whole does not lead to the conclusion that the signatories intended to provide such a right.[175]

204. In the Princz case in 1992 in which the plaintiff had brought an action for damages against Germany based on his internment by the Nazi regime during Second World War, a US District Court affirmed its subject matter jurisdiction and rejected the claim of sovereign immunity by Germany. It held that Germany was stopped from relying on State immunity and that:

> Under the circumstances of this case, a nation that does not respect the civil and human rights of an American citizen is barred from invoking United States law [i.e. immunity under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976] to block the citizen in his effort to vindicate his rights. In such a case, Plaintiff has a right to have his claim heard by a U.S. court.[176]

However, in 1994, the decision of the District Court was overruled by the Court of Appeals which held that "none of the exceptions to sovereign immunity provided in the [Foreign States Immunity Act of 1976] applies to the facts alleged by [the plaintiff]". It therefore dismissed the claim for lack of jurisdiction.[177] In his dissenting opinion, one of the judges stated that he believed that "Germany's treatment of [the plaintiff] violated jus cogens norms of the law of nations, and that by engaging in such conduct, Germany implicitly waived its immunity from suit".[178]

205. In the Mochizuki case in 1998, a class action brought by Latin American nationals of Japanese ancestry who had been arrested in various Latin American countries during Second World War and who had been brought to the US and interned, and who were not entitled to benefit from the terms of the 1988 Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) because they were not US nationals, the US Court of Federal Claims preliminarily approved the settlement agreement entered by the parties shortly before which grants each member of the group of plaintiffs US$ 5,000 in

[175] US, Court of Appeals (Fourth Circuit), Goldstar case, Judgement, 16 June 1992.
[176] US, District Court for the District of Columbia, Princz case, Judgement, 23 December 1992.
[177] US, Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, Princz case, Judgement, 1 July 1994. This conclusion was based on the retrospective application of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. The Court also concluded that if the Act were considered not to apply retrospectively it would lack jurisdiction in any event because the type of claim in question was not within the post-Act jurisdiction of District Courts.
[178] US, Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, Princz case, Dissenting opinion of Judge Wald, 1 July 1994.

compensation to be paid by the US.[179] In its final order of 1999, the same Court stated that "the Settlement Agreement executed by the parties on June 10, 1998, is adjudged to be fair, reasonable, and adequate, and its terms are hereby approved".[180]

206. In July 1999, Barclays Bank, having been sued before a US District Court along with various other banks with branches, operations or predecessors in France during Second World War by families of Jewish customers in France who had lost their assets during the German occupation, agreed to the so-called Barclays French Bank Settlement which provided for the establishment of a US$ 3,612,500 fund to compensate the victims.[181] The US District Court approved the Settlement Agreement.[182]

207. In 2000, J. P. Morgan agreed to settle compensation claims by the so-called J. P. Morgan Settlement Agreement which provided for the establishment of a settlement fund of US$ 2,750,000 to compensate Jewish victims of the Holocaust who had seen their bank accounts seized during Second World War in France.[183] The Settlement Agreement was approved by the US District Court.[184]

208. In the Holocaust Victims Assets case in 2000, a US District Court approved a class-action Settlement Agreement between Holocaust victims and Swiss banks agreed in August 1998, finding it fair, reasonable and adequate. The Agreement set up a US $1.25 billion fund to be created in four annual instalments over three years. In addition, it released, with few exceptions, "the Swiss Confederation, the Swiss National Bank, all other Swiss banks, and other members of Swiss industry". In its final order and judgement of 2000, the District Court approved the Settlement Agreement.[185]

209. In the Comfort Women case in 2001 dealing with the claim of 15 Asian women seeking compensation from Japan for having been used, during Second World War, by Japanese military as so-called "comfort women", a US District Court dismissed the complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and, additionally, nonjusticiability on the ground of the political question doctrine.

[179] US, Court of Federal Claims, Mochizuki case, Settlement Agreement, 10 June 1998; Order Granting Preliminary Approval of Settlement Agreement, 11 June 1998, § 3.

[180] US, Court of Federal Claims, Mochizuki case, Opinion and Order, 25 January 1999, § 2.

[181] US, District Court of the Eastern District of New York, Barclays French Bank Settlement case, Settlement Agreement, 8 July 1999.

[182] US, District Court of the Eastern District of New York, Barclays French Bank Settlement case, Preliminary Order, 10 April 2000, and Supplemental Order, 4 June 2001; Notice of pendency of class action, proposed settlement of class action and settlement hearing, 4 June 2001.

[183] US, District Court of the Eastern District of New York, J. P. Morgan French Bank Settlement case, Settlement Agreement, 29 September 2000.

[184] US, District Court of the Eastern District of New York, J. P. Morgan French Bank Settlement case, Preliminary Order, 10 April 2000 and Supplemental Order, 4 June 2001; Notice of pendency of class action, proposed settlement of class action and settlement hearing, 4 June 2001.

[185] US, District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Holocaust Victims Assets case, Memorandum and Order, 26 July 2000; Final Order and Judgement approving the Settlement Agreement, 9 August 2000.

It stated, however, that "for [these] reasons, this court is unable to provide plaintiffs the redress they seek and surely deserve".[186]

Other National Practice

210. In 1988, the Canadian government concluded an agreement with the National Association of Japanese Canadians, the so-called Japanese-Canadian Redress Agreement, under which the government officially acknowledged that the forced removal and internment of Canadian nationals of Japanese descent during Second World War was unjust and violated human rights. The Agreement also provided that:

> As symbolic redress for those injustices, the Government offers:
> a) [CAN]$21,000 individual redress, subject to application by eligible persons of Japanese ancestry who, during this period, were subjected to internment, relocation, deportation, loss of property or otherwise deprived of the full enjoyment of fundamental rights and freedoms based solely on the fact that they were of Japanese ancestry; each payment would be made in a tax-free lump sum, as expeditiously as possible;
> b) [CAN]$12 million to the Japanese-Canadian community, through the National Association of Japanese Canadians, to undertake educational, social and cultural activities or programmes that contribute to the well-being of the community or that promote human rights;
> c) [CAN]$12 million, on behalf of Japanese Canadians and in commemoration of those who suffered these injustices, and matched by a further $12 million from the Government of Canada, for the creation of a Canadian Race Relations Foundation that will foster racial harmony and cross-cultural understanding and help to eliminate racism.
> . . .
> f) to provide, through contractual arrangements, up to [CAN]$3 million to the National Association of Japanese Canadians for their assistance, including community liaison, in administration of redress over the period of implementation.[187]

211. In 1991, during a debate in the UN General Assembly on the environmental impact of the Gulf War, Canada deduced the illegality of Iraq's conduct of war from the fact that "a mechanism had been put in place [by the relevant UN Security Council resolutions] to obtain compensation for the damage done and the clean-up involved".[188]

212. In 1991, in its official report on violation of human rights during the military regime, Chile's National Commission for Truth and Reconciliation recommended that reparations be paid by the State in respect of disappearances, [186] US, District Court of Columbia, Comfort Women case, Memorandum Opinion and Judgement, 4 October 2001.

[187] Canada, Prime Minister, Agreement between the Government of Canada and the National Association of Japanese Canadians (Japanese-Canadian Redress Agreement), 22 September 1988.

[188] Canada, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/46/SR.18, 22 October 1991, § 11.

and concluded that Chile should grant the families of disappeared persons a pension for life as material recompense.[189]

213. In its views and comments on the 1997 Draft Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to Reparation for Victims of [Gross] Violations of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law – as they were then called – Chile stated that "it seems appropriate to include in the set of basic principles and guidelines a specific provision establishing the State's immediate, direct liability for compensation, without prejudice to its right to attempt to recover from the offenders the amount paid".[190]

214. In 1955, the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs stated that:

> During the war in which Japanese militarists invaded China, millions of Chinese people were killed, Chinese public and private property worth billions of dollars was damaged, thousands of Chinese people were forcibly moved to Japan and were enslaved and killed. The Japanese Government should understand that the Chinese people have the right to ask the Japanese Government to compensate for all the damages suffered by the Chinese people.[191]

215. In 1979, a special committee set up by the government of El Salvador to investigate the whereabouts of missing persons recommended that action be taken to compensate the families of missing political prisoners whose deaths could be either confirmed or presumed. The Ministry of the Presidency consequently announced that the families would be compensated.[192]

216. In 1999, the French government created by a decree a "Commission for the Compensation of Victims of Spoliation Resulting from Anti-Semitic Legislation in Force During the Occupation" (also known as "Commission Drai").[193] Furthermore, in 2000, the French government established a special compensation programme for orphans whose parents were victims of anti-Semitic persecution.[194]

[189] Chile, National Commission for Truth and Reconciliation, Official Report on Violations of Human Rights During the Military Regime, International Commission of Jurists Review, No. 46/1991, p. 6.

[190] Chile, Views and Comments on the note and revised Draft Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to Remedy and Reparation for Victims of [Gross] Violations of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law, 7 October 1997, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/34, 22 December 1997, § 21.

[191] China, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Statement on the issue of so-called withdrawal of Japanese Nationals in China put forward by the Japanese Government, 16 August 1955, Documents on Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, World Knowledge Press, Beijing, Vol. 3, pp. 338–339.

[192] IACiHR, Annual Report 1979–1980, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.50 Doc. 13 rev.1, 2 October 1980, p. 138.

[193] France, First Minister and other ministries, Decree No. 99-778 Creating a Commission for the Compensation of Victims of Spoliation Resulting from the Anti-Semitic Legislation in force during the Occupation, 10 September 1999, Journal Officiel de la République française, No. 211, 11 September 1999, p. 13633.

[194] France, First Minister and other ministries, Decree No. 2000-657 Establishing a Special Compensation Program for Orphans whose Parents were Victims of Anti-Semitic Persecution, 13 July 2000, Journal Officiel de la République française, No. 162, 14 July 2000, p. 10838.

217. In 1951, the German Chancellor made a declaration before the German Bundestag (Lower House of Parliament), which was then endorsed by this body. The declaration stated that:

However, unspeakable crimes have been committed in the name of the German people, crimes that impose a duty to make moral and material amends, both as regards the individual damage that Jews have suffered and as regards Jewish property for which individual claimants no longer exist . . . The Federal Government is prepared to work with representatives of Jews and the State of Israel, which has received so many homeless Jewish refugees, to find a solution to the problem of making amends in a material sense.[195]

218. In 1995, the German government, in reply to a question from members of the Lower House of Parliament with regard to payments in reparation for Greek victims of the German National Socialist regime, stated that:

With regard to a concluding settlement of the claims of Greece resulting from National Socialist measures of persecution against Greek nationals who have suffered damages to their freedom and health, the Federal Republic of Germany has paid, on the basis of the treaty of 18 March 1960 "concerning obligations in favour of Greek nationals who were concerned by national socialist measures of persecution", DM 115 million.[196]

219. In 1995, the German government, in reply to a question from members of the Lower House of Parliament regarding the amount of payments made by the FRG in compensation to former East and West European inmates of concentration camps, stated that "including . . . payments in the field of reparations through the social insurance, the total amount of payments up to now are significantly more than DM100 billion".[197]

220. In 1996, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General, Iraq reported that "a number of United States warplanes dropped 10 heat flares in the Saddam Dam area of Ninawa Governorate in northern Iraq" and affirmed "the legally established right of the Republic of Iraq to seek compensation for the damage caused by these unwarranted actions by the United States, in accordance with the principle of international responsibility".[198]

221. In 1998, during a debate in the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly in which several States had referred to a resolution of the General Assembly

[195] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Declaration by the Federal Chancellor entitled "Germany is obliged to make moral and material amends", BT-Drucksache 6697, 27 September 1951.

[196] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Reply by the Government to a question on payments in compensation for victims of the National Socialist regime from Greece, BT-Drucksache 13/2878, 7 November 1995, p. 2.

[197] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Response by the federal government to a question from members of parliament on payments made by the Federal Republic of Germany in compensation to the US citizen and survivor of the concentration camp Mr Hugo Princz, BT-Drucksache 13/3190, 4 December 1995. p. 3.

[198] Iraq, Letter dated 14 August 1996 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/1996/657, 14 August 1996.

and stated that Israel was obliged to pay the costs resulting from its attack on the UNIFIL compound at Qana, Israel replied that "defensive military operations against terrorists who had shamelessly used a UNIFIL outpost as cover for their provocative attacks had been, and continued to be, justified and necessary".[199]

222. In an exchange of letters in 1951 between the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands, Dirk U. Stikker, and the Prime Minister of Japan, Shigeru Yoshida, with respect to Japan's occupation of the Dutch East Indies and the 1951 Peace Treaty for Japan it is stated that:

> The Government of Japan does not consider that the Government of the Netherlands by signing the [1951 Peace Treaty for Japan] has itself expropriated the private claims of its nationals so that, as a consequence thereof, after the Treaty comes into force these claims would be non-existent.[200]

223. In 1998, the South Korean government established a trust fund to provide compensation to 155 women used as sex slaves by the former Japanese Imperial Army. The South Korean government indicated that it planned to collect the value of the fund (5 million yen) as compensation from the Japanese government.[201]

224. In a memorandum issued in 1994 on "practical means to fully support international humanitarian law and apply its rules", the Kuwaiti Ministry of Justice stated that a belligerent was "responsible for the acts committed by its armed forces' personnel, and [obliged] to make up for these damages, and pay compensation for wrongful acts".[202]

225. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, Kuwait has demanded compensation for the damage to its environment during the Gulf War. The report further states that it is Kuwait's opinio juris that States which cause damage to the environment are under a duty to remedy such damage.[203]

226. In 1998, during a debate in the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Lebanon, speaking on behalf of the Group of Arab States, stated that:

> [The Group of Arab States] wished to convey their regret and displeasure at the fact that Israel had failed to meet its obligation, under paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 51/233, to pay the sum of US$ 1,773,618 to cover the costs resulting from its attack on the UNIFIL compound at Qana in 1996. The international community, [199] Israel, Statement before the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.5/52/SR.62, 18 May 1998, § 67.

[200] Japan and the Netherlands, Exchange of letters between the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands, Dirk U. Stikker, and the Prime Minister of Japan, Shigeru Yoshida, 6–7 September 1951.

[201] "Seoul to compensate 'comfort women', get refund from Tokyo", BBC News, 11 March 1998.

[202] Kuwait, Ministry of Justice, Memorandum concerning the discussion of practical means to fully support international humanitarian law and apply its rules, 5 June 1994.

[203] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 4.4.

as represented in the General Assembly, should compel Israel to pay the costs in question.[204]

227. At the CDDH, Mexico, with respect to Article 91 AP I, stated that "the article did not rule out the possibility of a State incurring liability, and consequently being required to pay compensation, if it had not taken steps to prevent its nationals from committing the offences covered by the Geneva Conventions, Protocol I and its domestic legislation".[205]

228. When in 1996 the question of whether victims of violations of IHL could seek compensation from Japan was raised in the Dutch parliament, the government of the Netherlands stated that it could not claim financial compensation from Japan for damage incurred during the occupation of the former Dutch East Indies because of the 1951 Peace Treaty for Japan and the 1956 Yoshida-Stikker Protocol. The government added that its position would be the same even in the event of an individual invoking the international law rules regulating compensation for damage caused by war.[206]

229. In 1998, the Norwegian Ministry of Justice drafted a White Paper for parliament with the conclusion that in addition to an official apology to Norwegian Jewry, the government should pay out 450 million Norwegian Kroner in settlement of anti-Jewish measures such as confiscation of Jewish property taken by the Nazi occupation authorities and the Quisling regime during Second World War. This amount reflected the share of the total loss that was confiscated by the Norwegian treasury during Second World War. On 11 March 1999, the White Paper was unanimously adopted by all political parties in parliament. The compensation was divided into two main categories: individual compensation, the fixed sum of 200,000 Norwegian Kroner (US$28,000) to be given to those persons in Norway who suffered from anti-Jewish measures during the war; and collective compensation of 250 million Norwegian Kroner (US$35 million) to be divided among Jewish communities in Norway. Under the White Paper, contributions were also to be made to establish a research centre for Holocaust studies and minority research in Norway.[207]

230. In 1970, during a debate in the Special Political Committee of the UN General Assembly on measures carried out by Israel in the occupied territories, Poland stated that:

[204] Lebanon, Statement on behalf of the Group of Arab States before the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.5/52/SR.62, 18 May 1998, § 63. This statement was endorsed by Saudi Arabia (§ 64), Indonesia (§ 66), and Egypt (§ 72).

[205] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.46, 31 May 1977, p. 344, § 23.

[206] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Reply by the Minister of Public Health to a question in parliament, 1996–1997 Session, Appendix, Doc. 1031, pp. 2107–2108.

[207] Norway, Ministry of Justice and the Police, White Paper No. 82 to the Storting, "Historical and moral settlement for the treatment in Norway of the economic liquidation of the Jewish minority during World War II", 26 June 1998, approved by The King in Council on 26 June 1998, Stortingsproposisjon No. 82 (1997–1998).

The destruction of houses and the confiscation of property, which were designed to demoralize the inhabitants of certain areas and to force them to abandon their homes, were in violation of the basic principles of international law and contrary to the provisions of article 46 of the [1907 HR] and article 53 of the fourth Geneva Convention. Since such acts were illegal, the Government of Israel was liable for full compensation for destroyed property.[208]

231. The Report on the Practice of Russia notes that a number of victims of the conflict in Chechnya have filed claims and "are entitled to get a reimbursement for their homes demolished by federal troops, i.e., for the lost property".[209]

232. In 1996, during the preparatory work in the Rwandan parliament on a law for the punishment of acts of genocide and crimes against humanity in 1996, the issue of the responsibility of the State and the duty to compensate victims was raised. The government spokesman declared that the Rwandan State recognised its responsibility and that a compensation scheme had been adopted.[210]

233. In its final report in 1997, the Commission of Inquiry into Involuntary Removal or Disappearance of Persons in the Western, Southern and Sabaragamuwa Provinces, established by the Sri Lankan government, recommended that:

(i) Expeditious payment of fair and adequate compensation be made to dependants of disappeared persons within a time-frame in all the districts. Such payment should cover dependants of employees of the public sector, corporations and other state-owned institutions. The idea of introducing a new tax similar to the Defence Levy may be considered in order to generate funds for this purpose.

(ii) A scheme to provide monetary assistance to affected families who had suffered loss and damage to property be initiated. A forum be created to receive complaints of successors of disappeared persons.

(iii) Legislative provision be made exempting whatever amount paid as compensation for being made the subject matter of a civil claim and seizure.[211]

234. In its final report in 1997, the Commission of Inquiry into Involuntary Removal or Disappearance of Persons in the Northern and Eastern Provinces, established by the Sri Lankan government, noted that:

The Commission has worked out a Compensation Scheme in accordance with the circular issued by the Ministry of Public Administration No. 21/88 of 13th July, 1988 and this is only a token of the concern of the Government for deprivation

[208] Poland, Statement before the Special Political Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/SPC/SR.748, 10 December 1970, § 9.

[209] Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, Chapter 6.2.

[210] Rwanda, Travaux préparatoires of the Parliamentary Committees on the organic law of 30 August 1996, Report of the meeting of 9 July 1996 (original in Kinyarwanda), p. 54, Report on the Practice of Rwanda, 1997, Chapter 6.2.

[211] Sri Lanka, Commission of Inquiry into Involuntary Removal or Disappearance of Persons in the Western, Southern and Sabaragamuwa Provinces, Final report, Sessional Paper No. V – 1997, September 1997, Chapter 14, Section I(1).

suffered by the affected families. Money in any quantity will not compensate the absence of the bread-winner, the love of the father, the duty of the son for the family. But money helps in some way to cushion the blow.[212]

235. In 1998, during a debate in the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Syria stated that:

Israel's financial obligations under General Assembly resolution 51/233 represented only a minute part of the consequences of the Israeli attack on the UNIFIL compound at Qana, and were nothing compared with the lives of the victims, namely the United Nations soldiers and the Lebanese civilians seeking protection at the compound. In accordance with the principles of international law, Israel . . . must be forced to comply with resolution 51/233 so as to avoid establishing a precedent.[213]

236. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 91 AP I to be part of customary international law.[214]

237. In 1991, during a debate in the House of Commons on the subject of compensation for Allied POWs in the hands of Japan during Second World War, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, referring to Articles 14 and 16 of the 1951 Peace Treaty for Japan, stated that:

The [1951 Peace Treaty for Japan] contained a specific provision for compensation for prisoners of war. We had insisted on that provision, which had not been included in the original treaty, because we thought it important that the treaty should recognise the cruel and barbaric treatment to which allied service men in the far east had been subjected . . . No one could dispute that the issue of compensation was crucial . . . From the disposal of Japanese property within its jurisdiction, the United Kingdom received just over £3 million. The United Kingdom's share of the £4.5 million that the Japanese Government placed at the disposal of the International Red Cross in accordance with article 16 of the treaty was just over £1.6 million.

It was agreed in a minute between the Japanese and the allied powers that the payment of the £4.5 million would be recognised as a full discharge by the Japanese Government of their obligations under article 16 of the peace treaty . . . I sympathise with my right hon. Friend's contention that the settlement was unsatisfactory but . . . the provisions of the treaty remove any possibility of the British Government claiming further compensation or reparations from the Japanese Government.[215]

238. In 1991, during a debate in the UN General Assembly on the environmental impact of the Gulf War, the US maintained that:

[212] Sri Lanka, Commission of Inquiry into Involuntary Removal or Disappearance of Persons in the Northern and Eastern Provinces, Final report, Sessional Paper No. VII – 1997, September 1997, Chapter 10, Section G.

[213] Syria, Statement before the Fifth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.5/52/SR.62, 18 May 1998, § 65.

[214] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 6.2.

[215] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, 6 June 1991, Hansard, Vol. 192, cols. 479–82.

Under Security Council resolution 687 (1991), Iraq was financially liable for the environmental damage it had caused. Thus, existing international law not only prohibited the type of acts committed by Iraq, but also provided important remedies to address and deter such acts, in particular with respect to . . . official financial liability.[216]

239. In 1996, the US, with regard to funding provided by the US Agency for International Development (USAID) for the construction of a new hospital and satisfactory compensation in favour of petitioners before the IACiHR who had allegedly suffered an US military aircraft attack on an asylum in Grenada, formally noted:

its long-standing position that its actions were entirely in conformance with the law of armed conflict, and that therefore the US had no legal liability for any damages claimed. For these reasons, the US categorically rejects as inaccurate and misleading the petitioners' statement as an alleged settlement of this case and compensation paid in this matter.[217]

240. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000 concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during Second World War, the US Congress expressed its sense that:

the Government of Japan should –

. . .

(2) immediately pay reparations to the victims of those crimes, including United States military and civilian prisoners of war, survivors of the "Rape of Nanjing" from December, 1937, until February, 1938, and the women who were forced into sexual slavery and known by the Japanese military as "comfort women".[218]

241. According to media reports, in October 1999, the President of Zimbabwe apologised for the atrocities committed by the Five Brigade army unit which killed an estimated 25,000 people in an opposition stronghold during the civil war in the early 1980s and announced that the government was ready to compensate the families of the victims.[219]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

242. In a resolution adopted in 1976 on South Africa's military activities against Angola, the UN Security Council called upon the government of South Africa

[216] US, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/46/SR.18, 22 October 1991, § 39.

[217] US, Note for the record of the IACiHR concerning Case 9213 (US), referred to in IACiHR, Report No. 3/96, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.91 Doc. 7, 1 March 1996, p. 201.

[218] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON. RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.

[219] "Zimbabwe – Mugabe offers compensation for 25,000 civil war killings", The Independent, 19 October 1999.

"to meet the just claims of the People's Republic of Angola for a full compensation for the damage and destruction inflicted on its State".[220]

243. In a resolution adopted in 1979 following an incursion into Zambia of troops from southern Rhodesia, the UN Security Council called for "the payment of full and adequate compensation to the Republic of Zambia by the responsible authorities for the damage to life and property resulting from the acts of aggression".[221]

244. In a resolution adopted in 1980, the UN Security Council, after recalling the applicability of GC IV "to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem" and, in particular, Article 27 thereof, condemned "the assassination attempts on the lives of the mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh" and called upon Israel "to provide the victims with adequate compensation for the damages suffered as a result of these crimes".[222]

245. In a resolution adopted in 1982 on South Africa's military actions against Lesotho, the UN Security Council demanded "the payment by South Africa of full and adequate compensation to the Kingdom of Lesotho for the damage to life and property resulting from [its] aggressive act".[223]

246. In a resolution adopted in 1985 on South Africa's military activities against Angola, the UN Security Council stated that Angola should be entirely and adequately compensated for the loss of human life and the material damages resulting from the acts of aggression of South Africa. It decided to appoint a Commission of Investigation comprised of three members of the Security Council to evaluate the damage resulting from the invasion of Angola by South African forces.[224]

247. In Resolution 687 adopted in 1991 in the context of the Iraqi invasion and occupation of Kuwait, the UN Security Council decided:

> to create a fund to pay compensation for claims [resulting from its liability "under international law for any direct loss, damage – including environmental damage and the depletion of natural resources – or injury to foreign Governments, nationals and corporations as a result of its unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait"] and to establish a commission that will administer the fund.[225]

248. By Resolution 692 adopted in 1991, the UN Security Council, "acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations", decided "to establish the Fund and Commission referred to in paragraph 18 of resolution 687 (1991) in accordance with Part I of the Secretary-General's report", i.e. the United [220] UN Security Council, Res. 387, 31 March 1976, § 4; see also Res. 475, 27 June 1980, § 6, Res. 546, 6 January 1984, § 7 and Res. 567, 20 June 1985, § 4.

[221] UN Security Council, Res. 455, 23 November 1979, § 5.
[222] UN Security Council, Res. 471, 5 June 1980, §§ 1 and 3.
[223] UN Security Council, Res. 527, 15 December 1982, § 2; see also Res. 572, 30 September 1985, § 4 and Res. 580, 30 December 1985, § 2.
[224] UN Security Council, Res. 571, 20 September 1985, §§ 6 and 7.
[225] UN Security Council, Res. 687, 3 April 1991, §§ 16 and 18.

Nations Compensation Fund and the United Nations Compensation Commission (UNCC).[226] Although the UNCC deals principally with losses arising from Iraq's unlawful use of force, it is also responsible for awarding compensation for violations of IHL suffered by individuals.[227]

249. In Resolution 827 of May 1993 establishing the ICTY, the UN Security Council decided that "the work of the International Tribunal shall be carried out without prejudice to the right of the victims to seek, through appropriate means, compensation for damages incurred as a result of violations of international humanitarian law".[228]

250. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN General Assembly condemned "the Israeli military attacks against the civilian population in Lebanon, especially against the United Nations base at Qana, which violate the rules of international humanitarian law pertaining to the protection of civilians" and stated that "Lebanon is entitled to appropriate redress for the destruction it has suffered and that Israel is responsible for such compensation".[229]

251. In a resolution adopted in 1997 concerning, inter alia, the attack by Israel against the UNIFIL compound in Qana, the UN General Assembly decided that "the total amount mentioned . . . above, namely 1,773,618 dollars [i.e. the amount to cover the costs resulting from the incident at the headquarters of the Force at Qana on 18 April 1996], shall be borne by Israel".[230]

252. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution entitled "Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts", to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 36 entitled "Compensation", were annexed. In the resolution, the General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[231]

253. In a resolution on Sudan adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights called:

> once more upon the Government of the Sudan to ensure a full and thorough investigation by the independent judicial inquiry commission of the killings of Sudanese employees of foreign relief organizations, to bring to justice those responsible for the killings and to provide just compensation to the families of the victims.[232]

[226] UN Security Council, Res. 692, 20 May 1991, preamble and § 3.
[227] See, e.g., UNCC, Governing Council, Decision 3: Personal injury and mental pain and anguish, 18 October 1991, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1991/3, 23 October 1991; Decision 11: Eligibility for compensation of members of the Allied Coalition Armed Forces, 26 June 1992, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1992/11, 26 June 1992.
[228] UN Security Council, Res. 827, 25 May 1993, § 7.
[229] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/22 C, 25 April 1996, §§ 3 and 7.
[230] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/233, 13 June 1997, §§ 7 and 8.
[231] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[232] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/77, 8 March 1995, § 17.

254. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation in Peru, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, after condemning the violations of human rights by the Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path) and the MRTA, and regretting the violations of human rights "by some members of the forces of law and order", urged the Peruvian authorities "to compensate the victims of such [human rights] violations".[233]

255. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights called "for the individuals implicated in the war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide in Rwanda who have already been identified to be punished in order to guarantee the victims or their heirs fair compensation in accordance with the principles of international law".[234]

256. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, including internal armed conflict, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights reiterated that "States must respect their international obligations to . . . compensate victims of human rights and humanitarian law violations".[235]

257. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights stated that it was:

> aware that the provision of the Hague Convention (IV) of 1907 Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land which states that States "shall be responsible for all acts committed by persons forming part of [their] armed forces" and "shall, if the case demands, be liable to pay compensation" for violations of the rules is part of customary international law.[236]

The Sub-Commission reiterated that "States must respect their international obligations to . . . compensate all victims of human rights and humanitarian law violations" and called upon States "to provide effective . . . compensation for unremedied violations in order to end the cycle of impunity with regard to sexual violence committed during armed conflicts".[237]

258. In 1998, in his report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

> Adherence to international humanitarian and human rights norms by all parties to a conflict must be insisted upon, and I intend to make this a priority in the work of the United Nations. In order to make warring parties more accountable for their actions, I recommend that combatants be held financially liable to their victims under international law where civilians are made the deliberate target of aggression. I further recommend that international legal machinery be developed

[233] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/23, 23 August 1993, §§ 2, 3 and 8.
[234] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/5, 18 August 1995, § 9.
[235] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/18, 21 August 1998, § 9.
[236] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/16, 26 August 1999, § 4.
[237] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/16, 26 August 1999, §§ 9 and 12.

to facilitate efforts to find, attach and seize the assets of transgressing parties and their leaders.[238]

259. In 1996, in a report on a mission to North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences recommended that:

137. The Government of Japan should:

...

(b) Pay compensation to individual victims of Japanese military sexual slavery according to principles outlined by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on the right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. A special administrative tribunal for this purpose should be set up with a limited time-frame since many of the victims are of a very advanced age.

...

139. The Governments of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Republic of Korea may consider requesting the International Court of Justice to help resolve the legal issues concerning Japanese responsibility and payment of compensation for the "comfort women".[239]

260. In 1998, in a report on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that:

108. ... Peace treaties must not seek to extinguish the rights of victims of human rights violations with respect to claims of compensation and other forms of legal redress unless appropriate administrative schemes for compensation and prosecution are incorporated into the substantive peace agreement ...
109. ... By incorporating an understanding of gender into the legal framework for responding to systematic rape and sexual slavery, the full range of the obligations and legal accountability of all parties to a conflict may be carefully articulated and concrete steps may be outlined to ensure adequate prevention, investigation and criminal and civil redress, including compensation of victims.
...
112. When the necessary elements exist to establish that sexual violence constitutes an international crime such as slavery, crimes against humanity, genocide, torture or war crimes, it must be charged, prosecuted and redressed as such. Concrete steps must be taken immediately, including in those countries currently experiencing

[238] UN Secretary-General, Report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, UN Doc. A/52/871-S/1998/318, 13 April 1998, § 50; see also Report on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict, UN Doc. S/1999/957, 8 September 1999, § 38.

[239] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences, Report on the mission to the North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1, 4 January 1996, §§ 137(b) and 139.

internal armed conflict or violence, to ensure that . . . (c) victims of such abuses receive full redress under both criminal and civil laws, including compensation where appropriate.[240]

261. The conclusions of UNEP's Working Group of Experts on Liability and Compensation for Environmental Damage Arising from Military Activities presented in a report in 1996 stressed, inter alia, that:

(19) thresholds of damage established under instruments relating to the laws of war should not be a defence against claims arising in relation to the illegal use of force . . .
(21) where compensation is due for damage caused by a wrongful act, the basis for that compensation under international law is reflected in the approach of the Permanent Court of International Justice in the Chorzów Factory (Indemnity) case . . .
(22) that approach relates to the standard of compensation but does not provide guidance as to how to value the damage which has occurred . . .
(26) the environmental as well as the economic costs of clean-up measures should be considered, in accordance with the basic requirement of mitigation or avoidance of damage . . .
(27) the basic aim of restoration should be to reinstate the ecologically significant functions of injured resources and the associated public uses and amenities supported by such functions.[241]

262. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador stated with respect to an incident which had occurred at El Junquillo that:

On 12 March 1981, soldiers and members of the Cacaopera military defence unit attacked the population, consisting solely of women, young children and old people. They killed the inhabitants and raped a number of women and little girls under the age of 12. They set fire to houses, cornfields and barns.

The Commission finds that: . . . the Government and the judiciary of El Salvador failed to conduct investigations into the incident. The State thus failed in its duty under international human rights law to . . . compensate the victims or their families.[242]

263. In its commentary on Article 36 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, the ILC stated that:

Restitution, despite its primacy as a legal principle, is frequently unavailable or inadequate . . . The role of compensation is to fill gaps so as to ensure full reparation for damage suffered. . . . As compared with satisfaction, the function of compensation is to address the actual losses incurred as a result of the internationally

[240] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, §§ 108–109 and 112.
[241] UNEP, Conclusions by the Working Group of Experts on Liability and Compensation for Environmental Damage Arising from Military Activities, UN Doc. UNEP/Env.Law/3/Inf.1, 15 October 1996, Liability and Compensation for Environmental Damage, Nairobi, 1998, §§ 87(19), (21), (22), (26) and (27).
[242] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, p. 67.

wrongful act . . . Monetary compensation is intended to offset, as far as may be, the damage suffered by the injured State as a result of the breach . . . Within the field of diplomatic protection, a good deal of guidance is available as to appropriate compensation standards and methods of valuation, especially as concerns personal injury and takings of, or damage to, tangible property. It is well-established that a State may seek compensation in respect of personal injuries suffered by its officials or nationals, over and above any direct injury it may itself have suffered in relation to the same event. Compensable personal injury encompasses not only associated material losses, such as loss of earnings and earning capacity, medical expenses and the like, but also non-material damage suffered by the individual (sometimes, though not universally, referred to as moral damage in national legal systems). Non-material damage is generally understood to encompass loss of loved ones, pain and suffering as well as the affront to sensibilities associated with an intrusion on the person, home or private life. No less than material injury sustained by the injured State, non-material damage is financially assessable and may be the subject of a claim of compensation, as stressed in the "Lusitania" case.[243]

Other International Organisations

264. In a resolution adopted in 1983 on missing persons in Argentina, the European Parliament insisted that "the good future relations of the Community with Argentina require that effective steps be taken by the Argentinean authorities to establish the fate of citizens of Member States who have disappeared and to provide financial compensation for them or their dependants".[244]

International Conferences

265. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on assistance to victims of torture in which it welcomed the efforts within the UN to "establish a Voluntary Fund for victims of torture . . . to extend humanitarian, legal and financial aid to individuals whose fundamental rights have been severely violated as a result of torture and to relatives of such victims" and urged governments to "consider responding favourably to requests for contributions to such a fund".[245]

266. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on assistance to victims of torture in which it urged "National Societies to take the initiative to give, either independently or in co-operation with their governments, humanitarian, legal, medical, psychological and social assistance to victims of torture in exile and, whenever possible, in their own countries".[246]

[243] ILC, Commentary on Article 36 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, Report of the International Law Commission, 53rd Session, UN Doc. A/56/10, New York, 2001, pp. 244–252.

[244] European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in Argentina, 13 October 1983, § 3.

[245] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. XV, §§ 1 and 2.

[246] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XI.

267. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on assistance to victims of torture in which it appealed to "governments in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for further contributions to the United Nations' Voluntary Fund for victims of torture".[247]

268. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference called on "all States to review procedures on compensation for damages caused to victims of violations of international humanitarian law and the payment of indemnities so as to allow the victims to derive real benefit from the assistance to which they are entitled".[248]

269. The Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993 reaffirmed that "States which violate international humanitarian law shall, if the case demands, be liable to pay compensation."[249]

270. The Hague Agenda for Peace and Justice for the Twenty-first Century, adopted by the Hague Appeal for Peace Conference in May 1999, addressed the issue of reparation to victims of armed conflict and concluded that:

> The Hague Appeal will demand that victims of armed conflict and human rights violations be made whole through the establishment of national, regional and international victim compensation funds and other reparation measures, which address the need of victims in a timely way.[250]

271. In the Final Declaration of the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002, the participants committed themselves to see that "any party to an armed conflict which violates International Humanitarian Law shall, if the case demands, be liable to pay compensation".[251]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

272. Decision 1 of the UNCC Governing Council in August 1991 stressed Iraq's responsibility for five particular causes of loss:

> (a) military operations or threat of military action by either side during the period 2 August 1990 to 2 March 1991, (b) departure from or inability to leave Iraq or Kuwait (or a decision not to return) during that period, (c) actions by officials, employees or agents of the Government of Iraq or its controlled entities during that

[247] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XII, § 1.
[248] 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Canberra, 13–18 September 1993, Resolution on Respect for International Humanitarian Law and Support for Humanitarian Action in Armed Conflicts, § 2(n).
[249] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § II(7), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, pp. 300–301.
[250] Hague Appeal for Peace Conference, The Hague Agenda for Peace and Justice for the Twenty-first Century, 12–15 May 1999, UN Doc. A/54/98, Point 17, p. 10.
[251] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niger, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, § 11.

period in connection with the invasion or occupation, (d) the breakdown of civil order in Kuwait or Iraq during that period, and (e) hostage-taking or other illegal detention.[252]

In a number of other decisions, the UNCC Governing Council admitted the following types of claims for compensation: (a) serious personal injury and mental pain and anguish; (b) business claims; (c) embargo losses; (d) contract losses; (e) losses involving tangible property; (f) losses relating to income-producing properties; and (g) claims by members of coalition forces.[253]

273. In Decision 7 of November 1991 and revised in March 1992, the UNCC Governing Council held that payments were in principle available with respect to any direct loss, damage, or injury to Governments or international organizations as a result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait. This will include any loss suffered as a result of: (a) military operations or threat of military action by either side during the period 2 August 1990 to 2 March 1991; ... (c) actions by officials, employees or agents of the Government of Iraq or its controlled entities during that period in connection with the invasion or occupation.[254]

With regard to environmental claims, the UNCC Governing Council decided that:

These payments are available with respect to direct environmental damage and the depletion of natural resources as a result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait: This will include losses or expenses resulting from: (a) abatement and prevention of environmental damage, including expenses directly relating to fighting oil fires and stemming the flow of oil in coastal and international waters; (b) reasonable measures already taken to clean and restore the environment or future measures which can be documented as reasonably necessary to clean and restore the environment; (c) reasonable monitoring and assessment of the environmental damage for the purposes of evaluating and abating the harm and restoring the environment; (d) reasonable monitoring of public health and performing medical screenings for the purposes of investigation and combating increased health risks

[252] UNCC, Governing Council, Decision 1: Criteria for expedited processing of urgent claims, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1991/1, 2 August 1991, § 18.

[253] UNCC, Governing Council, Decision 3: Personal injury and mental pain and anguish, 18 October 1991, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1991/3, 23 October 1991; Decision 4: Business losses of individuals eligible for consideration under the expedited procedures, 18 October 1991, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1991/4, 23 October 1991; Decision 7: Criteria for additional categories of claims, 18 November 1991 as revised on 16 March 1992, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1991/7/Rev.1, 17 March 1992; Decision 9: Propositions and conclusions on compensation for business losses: types of damages and their valuation, 6 March 1992, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1992/9, 6 March 1992; Decision 11: Eligibility for compensation of members of the Allied Coalition Armed Forces, 26 June 1992, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1992/11, 26 June 1992; Decision 15: Compensation for business losses resulting from Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait where the trade embargo and related measures were also a cause, 18 December 1992, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1992/15_*, 4 January 1993; J. R. Crook, "The United Nations Compensation Commission – A New Structure to Enforce State Responsibility", AJIL, Vol. 87, 1993, pp. 153–156.

[254] UNCC, Governing Council, Decision 7: Criteria for additional categories of claims, 18 November 1991, as revised on 16 March 1992, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1991/7/Rev.1, 17 March 1992, § 34.

as a result of environmental damage; and (e) depletion of or damage to natural resources.[255]

274. In Decision 11 of June 1992, the UNCC Governing Council provided that:

Members of the Allied Coalition Armed Forces are not eligible for compensation for loss or injury arising as a consequence of their involvement in Coalition military operations against Iraq, except if the following three conditions are met:

a. The compensation is awarded in accordance with the general criteria already adopted; and
b. They were prisoners of war as a consequence of their involvement in Coalition military operations against Iraq in response to its unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait; and
c. The loss or injury resulted from mistreatment in violation of international humanitarian law (including the Geneva Conventions of 1949).[256]

275. In 1994, the Panel of Commissioners appointed by the UNCC recommended in relation to claims from individuals who suffered serious personal injury or whose spouse, child or parent died as a direct result of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait that:

c) Claims submitted for detained persons
. . . Compensation, if any, would be awarded for claims for serious personal injury submitted by the detainee personally after his/her release, or for claims for death submitted by the family after it has been determined by the detainee's Government that the detainee is deceased.
d) Missing persons compensation be awarded where from the documentation submitted it could be presumed that the "missing" person is deceased. In instances where it could not conclude that the "missing" person is deceased, the Panel holds that compensation cannot be recommended at this stage and that a new claim can be submitted if the family ever receives confirmation of the death.[257]

276. The 1994 report and recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners concerning Part One of the Second Instalment of Claims for Serious Personal Injury or Death (Category "B" Claims) of the UNCC state that:

Among the claims for "serious personal injury" or "death" were those involving members of the Allied Coalition Armed Forces which in principle are not recommended for compensation by the Panel pursuant to Decision 11 of the Governing [255] UNCC, Governing Council, Decision 7: Criteria for additional categories of claims, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1991/7/Rev.1, 18 November 1991, as revised on 16 March 1992, 17 March 1992, § 35.

[256] UNCC, Governing Council, Decision 11: Eligibility for compensation of members of the Allied Coalition Armed Forces, 26 June 1992, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1992/11, 26 June 1992. (At its twentieth Session, in October 1998, the Governing Council extended the application of its Decision 11 to members of forces that were not part of the Allied Coalition Forces, UN Doc. S/AC.26/SR.81, 12 October 1998.)

[257] UNCC, Governing Council, Recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners concerning individual claims for serious personal injury or death (category "B" claims), 14 April 1994, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1994/1, 26 May 1994, § II(A)(2)(c) and (d).

Council. However, the Panel had before it claims by members of the Allied Coalition Armed Forces that fall within the exceptional conditions stated in the same decision. These members of the Allied Forces were taken prisoners of war during coalition military operations against Iraq and their claims contain extensive medical documentation explaining the torture and injuries that were inflicted upon them by Iraqi authorities during their captivity. Many of the personal statements attached to the claim forms explain that beatings were administered to members of the Allied Forces so as to coerce them into releasing information. The Panel accordingly recommends that these claims be awarded compensation.[258]

277. On 30 July 1993, Kuwait Oil Company filed with the UNCC the "Well Blowout Control Claim" (also known as "WBC Claim") in the amount of US$951,630,871 for costs it allegedly incurred in (a) the planning for the work anticipated on the return of the oil fields of Kuwait . . . (b) the work performed to extinguish the well-head fires that were burning upon the withdrawal of Iraqi forces from Kuwait; (c) the initial sealing of the wells to stop the flow of oil and gas; and (d) the making safe of the wellheads so that work on the reinstatement of production could be started.[259]

278. On 22 March 1995, the UNCC Governing Council appointed a Panel of Commissioners.[260] During the proceedings, regarding the categorisation of the claim (category "E" or category "F" claim), the Panel referred to Decision 7 of the Governing Council. It also noted that, in its view, "the categorization of a claim as an 'E' or 'F' claim does not necessarily entail substantive consequences in terms of the law applicable to such claim" and that UN Security Council Resolution 687 provided "for the compensability of, inter alia, 'environmental damage and the depletion of natural resources', without making any qualifications as to the legal subject or entity eligible to make such claims".[261] On the question of a direct link between actions taken by Iraq and damage incurred by Kuwait, the Panel of Commissioners found that "although part of the damage for which compensation is being sought in the WBC Claim may be a result of the Allied bombing, the bulk of the oil-well fires was directly caused by the explosives placed on the wellheads and detonated by Iraqi armed forces". Referring to Decision 7 of the Governing Council, it added that "Iraq is liable for any direct loss, damage or injury whether caused by its own or by the coalition armed forces. Iraq's contention that the Allied air raids broke the [258] UNCC, Report and Recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners concerning Part One of the Second Instalment of Claims for Serious Personal Injury of Death (Category "B" Claims), UN Doc. S/AC.26/1994/4, 15 December 1994, § 14.

[259] UNCC, Governing Council, UN Doc. S/AC.26/1996/5/Annex, Report and Recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners appointed to review the Well Blowout Control Claim (the "WBC Claim"), 18 December 1996, § 1.

[260] UNCC, Governing Council, Report and recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners appointed to review the Well Blowout Control Claim (the "WBC Claim"), UN Doc. S/AC.26/1996/5/Annex, 18 December 1996, § 9.

[261] UNCC, Governing Council, Report and recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners appointed to review the Well Blowout Control Claim (the "WBC Claim"), UN Doc. S/AC.26/1996/5/Annex, 18 December 1996, §§ 49 and 51.

chain of causation therefore cannot be upheld."[262] The Panel included in its recommendations that:

(a) the Claimant KUWAIT OIL COMPANY (the "Claimant") is to be paid the amount of US$ 610,048,547 as compensation for the costs incurred in the execution of the Well Blowout Control Exercise as a direct result of Iraq's invasion and occupation of Kuwait; . . . (c) the claim for the costs incurred in connection with the work performed by the Claimant's own firefighting team . . . is rejected; (d) the claim for the indirect costs incurred in fighting oil-well fires . . . is rejected.[263]

279. In December 1996, the UNCC Governing Council approved the recommendations of the Panel of Commissioners in the "WBC Claim" and decided "to approve the amount of the recommended award of US$610,048,547 . . . to Kuwait Oil Company on behalf of Kuwait's public oil sector as a whole".[264]

280. In its judgement in Akdivar and Others v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR stated that:

45. The applicants further submitted that the Court should confirm . . . that the government should (1) bear the costs of necessary repairs in [their village] to enable the applicants to continue their way of life there; and (2) remove any obstacle preventing the applicants from returning to their village.

    In their view, such confirmation was necessary to prevent future and continuing violations of the Convention, in particular the de facto expropriation of their property.

46. The government maintained that the restoration of rights is not feasible due to the emergency conditions prevailing in the region. However, resettlement will take place when the local inhabitants feel themselves to be safe from terrorist atrocities.

47. The Court recalls that a judgement in which it finds a breach imposes on the respondent State a legal obligation to put an end to such breach and make reparation for its consequences in such a way as to restore as far as possible the situation existing before the breach (restitutio in integrum). However, if restitutio in integrum is in practice impossible, the respondent States are free to choose the means whereby they will comply with a judgement in which the Court has found a breach, and the Court will not make consequential orders or declaratory statements in this regard.

The Court awarded damages for pecuniary and non-pecuniary losses but dismissed the remainder of the claim for just satisfaction.[265]

281. In 2003, in two partial awards dealing with claims brought by Eritrea and Ethiopia on behalf of their nationals respectively, the Eritrea-Ethiopia Claims

[262] UNCC, Governing Council, Report and recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners appointed to review the Well Blowout Control Claim (the "WBC Claim"), UN Doc. S/AC.26/1996/5/Annex, 18 December 1996, §§ 85 and 86.

[263] UNCC, Governing Council, Report and recommendations made by the Panel of Commissioners appointed to review the Well Blowout Control Claim (the "WBC Claim"), UN Doc. S/AC.26/1996/5/Annex, 18 December 1996, § 233.

[264] UNCC, Governing Council, Decision 40: Well Blowout Control Claim, 17 December 1996, UN Doc. S/AC.26/Dec.40, 18 December 1996, §§ 1 and 2.

[265] ECtHR, Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, Judgement, 1 April 1998, §§ 45–47.

Commission awarded compensation related to the treatment of former prisoners of war by the two governments.[266]

282. In 1983, in a report on the situation of human rights of a segment of the Nicaraguan population of Miskito origin, the IACiHR recommended that a conference should be held by representatives of the government of Nicaragua and persons representing the people of the Miskitos. For the agenda of the conference, the IACiHR suggested, inter alia, the "establishment of procedures and mechanisms to compensate the Miskito for the loss of their homes, crops, livestock or other belongings when they were evacuated from their villages".[267]

283. In 1983, a petition filed before the IACiHR alleged that an asylum in Grenada had been bombed by US military aircraft. Before a settlement could be reached with the US on the matter, the Commission declared the petition admissible, inter alia, given the "unwillingness of the US Government to compensate these victims subsequent to the expiration of the ad hoc compensation program".[268]

284. In a case concerning Colombia in 1992, the IACiHR concluded that the Colombian government had failed to comply with its obligation under the 1969 ACHR (right to life, right to humane treatment, right to personal liberty and judicial protection) and concluded that "Colombia must pay the victim's next-of-kin compensatory damages".[269]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

285. The ICRC Commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention states with respect to Article 148 GC IV that:

> As regards material compensation for breaches of the Convention, it is inconceivable, at least as the law stands today, that claimants should be able to bring a direct action for damages against the State in whose service the person committing the breach was working. Only a State can make such claims on another State, and they form part, in general, of what is called "war reparations". It would seem unjust for individuals to be punished while the State in whose name or on whose instructions they acted was released from all liability.[270]

286. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states that:

> Article 91 literally reproduces Article 3 of the Hague Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 1907, and does not abrogate it in any way, which means that it continues to be customary law for all nations.

[266] Eritrea-Ethiopia Claims Commission, Prisoners of War, Eritrea's Claim, Partial Award, 1 July 2003; Prisoners of War, Ethiopia's Claim, Partial Award, 1 July 2003.
[267] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights of a segment of the Nicaraguan population of Miskito origin, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.62 Doc. 10 rev. 3, 29 November 1983, Part Three, § B(3)(i).
[268] IACiHR, Case 9213 (US), Report on the admissibility of the petition, 22 September 1987.
[269] IACiHR, Case 10.581 (Colombia), Report, 25 September 1992, Conclusions, § 2.
[270] Jean S. Pictet (ed.), Commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1958, p. 603.

...
In fact [the principle contained in Articles 51 GC I, 52 GC II, 131 GC III and 148 GC IV] is the same principle as that contained in the present Article 91 and in Article 3 of Hague Convention IV of 1907. The purpose of this provision is specifically to prevent the vanquished from being compelled in an armistice agreement or peace treaty to renounce all compensation due for breaches committed by persons in the service of the victor.[271]

287. In 1993, in a report submitted to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that during expert meetings on the issue, a list of the most important matters to be discussed had been drawn up.[272] Under one of these specific issues ("When should damage to the environment be qualified as a 'grave breach'? State Responsibility and compensation"), it was stated that:

Any violation of either treaty-based or customary rules attributable to a State would create an obligation on the part of the offending State towards the State or States whose environment suffered damage.

According to article 3 of the Hague Convention IV of 1907 and to article 91 of Protocol I of 1977, a State violating an international obligation must be liable to pay compensation.[273]

288. In 1993, in a report on the protection of war victims, the ICRC, referring to Article 91 AP I, stated that "this article confirms a rule which is today accepted as being part of customary law and was already stated, in almost identical terms, in Article 3 of the Hague Convention No. IV of 1907". Referring to Articles 51 GC I, 52 GC II, 131 GC IV and 148 GC IV, the ICRC moreover stated that "this provision ... also implies that, irrespective of the outcome of an armed conflict, no decision or agreement can dispense a State from the responsibility to make reparation for damages caused to the victims of breaches of international humanitarian law or to pay compensation for those damages".[274] It recommend that:

The International Conference for the Protection of War Victims should make it clear that it wishes procedures to be set up to provide reparation for damage inflicted on the victims of violations of international humanitarian law and award compensation to them, so as to enable them to receive the benefits to which they are entitled.[275]

[271] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 3645 and 3649.

[272] ICRC, Report on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in UN Doc. A/48/269, Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, 29 July 1993, §§ 65–72.

[273] ICRC, Report on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in UN Doc. A/48/269, Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, 29 July 1993, §§ 86 and 87.

[274] ICRC, Report on the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, June 1993, Section 4.3, IRRC, No. 292, 1993, pp. 391–445.

[275] ICRC, Report on the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, June 1993, Section 4.3, IRRC, No. 292, 1993, pp. 391–445.

VI. Other Practice

289. In 1936, during the Spanish Civil War, in a note to the Portuguese Minister of Foreign Negotiations, the President of the Spanish Junta de Defensa Nacional, while denouncing and condemning certain acts of assassination, mistreatment and damage allegedly committed against his side and non-belligerent third parties by members of the adverse party (the "Red Forces Armed by the Government of Madrid"), expressed his intention to pay compensation to the victims of the alleged offences and to repair the damage caused.[276]

290. In a resolution on the application of the rules of IHL in hostilities in which UN forces are engaged, adopted at its Zagreb Session in 1971, the Institute of International Law stated that:

> Without prejudice to the individual or collective responsibility which derives from the very fact that the party opposing the United Nations Forces has committed aggression, that party shall make reparation for injuries caused in violation of the humanitarian rules of armed conflict. The United Nations is entitled to demand compliance with these rules for the benefit of its Forces and to claim damages for injuries suffered by its Forces in violation of these rules.[277]

291. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "under international law, a state that has violated a legal obligation to another state is required to terminate the violation and, ordinarily, to make reparation, including in appropriate circumstances restitution or compensation for loss or injury".[278]

292. The Restatement (Third) further provides that:

> A private person, whether natural or juridical, injured by a violation of an international obligation by a state, may bring a claim against that state or assert that violation as a defense
> (a) in a competent international forum when the state has consented to the jurisdiction of that forum with respect to such private claims;
> (b) in a court or other tribunal of that state pursuant to its law; or
> (c) in a court or other tribunal of the injured person's state of nationality or of a third state, pursuant to the law of such state, subject to limitations under international law.[279]

[276] Spain, Note from the President of the Spanish Junta de Defensa Nacional to the Portuguese Minister of Foreign Negotiations, concerning a supposed incursion into Portuguese territory of "Red forces armed by the Government of Madrid" resulting in the death of a commander of the "National" army, mistreatment of Spanish and Portuguese subjects, and damage to Portuguese property, Burgos, 17 September 1936, reprinted in Ministério dos Negócios Estrangeiros, Dez anos de política externa (1936–1947), A Nação portuguesa e a segunda Guerra Mundial, 1964, pp. 285–287.

[277] Institute of International Law, Zagreb Session, Resolution on Conditions of Application of Humanitarian Rules of Armed Conflict to Hostilities in which United Nations Forces May be Engaged, 3 September 1971, § 7.

[278] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 901.

[279] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 906.

293. In a joint statement in 1987, several factions involved in the conflict in Afghanistan declared that the USSR could not securely leave Afghanistan without paying war compensation.[280]

294. In 1992, in the context of the conflict in Georgia, Abkhazia denounced acts of pillage committed by Georgian troops and considered the leadership of the Republic of Georgia responsible for them. It further considered that Georgia was obliged to compensate the damage caused to the Republic of Abkhazia and to each victim in particular.[281]

295. The SPLM Human Rights Charter provides that "the victims of human rights abuses shall receive compensation. In the case of victims who have been killed, the compensation should go to their kin in accordance with the customary law of the victim."[282]

296. In an expert opinion on Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) prepared in the context of cases seeking compensation for individual victims before Japanese courts, Kalshoven asserted that the adoption of Article 91 AP I which, in his words, "contains a slightly modernised version of Article 3 [1907 Hague Convention IV]" at the CDDH without much discussion and without any dissent "reflected and indeed reaffirmed the general acceptance of the contents of the Article as established customary law".[283] In the same opinion, he added that:

> Although the first sentence of Article 3 does not state in so many words that individual persons, including persons resident in occupied territory, have a right to claim the compensation due under the Article, the drafting history of the Article leaves no room for doubt that this was precisely its purpose.[284]

297. An expert opinion prepared by Christopher Greenwood took into account military manuals (from the UK and Germany), which stated that the laws of war were binding not only upon governments but also upon every individual, and the position of the IMT, which insisted on punishing individuals responsible for violations of the laws of war, to state that:

> The international law of war thus clearly imposes duties upon individuals and subjects those who violate their obligations to criminal penalties. There is, therefore, no reason why the rights created by the international law of war should be confined [280] Afghan News, 15 August 1987, Vol. III, Nos. 15 and 16, pp. 8 and 9.

[281] Supreme Council of Abkhazia, Statement of the Press-Service of the Supreme Soviet of Abkhazia, No. 10-86, August 1992.

[282] SPLM, Human Rights Charter, May 1996, Article 10.

[283] Frits Kalshoven, Expert opinion, Article 3 of the Convention (IV) Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, signed at The Hague, 18 October 1907, reprinted in Hisakazu Fujita, Isomi Suzuki and Kantaro Nagano (eds.), War and the Rights of Individuals. Renaissance of Individual Compensation, Nippon Hyoron-sha Co., Tokyo, 1999, p. 37.

[284] Frits Kalshoven, Expert opinion, Article 3 of the Convention (IV) Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, signed at The Hague, 18 October 1907, reprinted in Hisakazu Fujita, Isomi Suzuki and Kantaro Nagano (eds.), War and the Rights of Individuals. Renaissance of Individual Compensation, Nippon Hyoron-sha Co., Tokyo, 1999, p. 38.

to states. To confine them in that way would create a wholly illogical asymmetry in the law for which there would be no justification.[285] [emphasis in original]

Referring to the debates on what became Article 3 of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV), which led to the conclusion that the "liability on the part of the State is additional to the criminal liability of the individual wrongdoer" and to Security Council Resolution 687 (1991) creating a Compensation Commission to hear claims for compensation in Kuwait after the Gulf War, Greenwood added:

It is my opinion, therefore, that Article 3 of the Hague Convention, the Hague Regulations and customary international law of war confer rights upon individuals, including rights to compensation, in the event of a violation, which the individual can assert against the State of the wrongdoer. The right exists under international law. While it is obviously a matter of Japanese law . . . whether the Japanese courts have jurisdiction to give effect to that right, for them to do so would clearly be in accordance with international law and would enable the Japanese State to comply with its obligations under international law.[286]

298. In the late 1990s, five European Insurance companies (Generali, Allianz, Axa, Winterthur Leben and Zurich) sued by Holocaust survivors in the US formed and funded, in co-operation with the United States National Association of Insurance Commissioners, representatives of Jewish organizations and the State of Israel, the International Commission on Holocaust Era Insurance Claims (ICHEIC) in order to settle the claims of Holocaust survivors and/or their heirs for non-payment of pre-Second-World War policies.[287] In this context, the Italian insurer Assicurazioni Generali, for example, agreed to pay US$100 million.[288]

299. In 1999, the French Banking Association (AFB), long accused of benefiting from unclaimed accounts confiscated or frozen by French banks during Second World War, announced compensation measures for survivors of the Holocaust and their heirs. Some 76,000 French Jews were sent to Nazi death camps in Second World War, and the banks are accused of making no effort to return the funds from their accounts since then.[289]

[285] Christopher Greenwood, Expert opinion, Rights to Compensation of Former Prisoners of War and Civilian Internees under Article 3 of Hague Convention No. IV 1907, reprinted in Hisakazu Fujita, Isomi Suzuki and Kantaro Nagano (eds.), War and the Rights of Individuals. Renaissance of Individual Compensation, Nippon Hyoron-sha Co., Tokyo, 1999, pp. 66–67, §§ 21, 22 and 23.

[286] Christopher Greenwood, Expert opinion, Rights to Compensation of Former Prisoners of War and Civilian Internees under Article 3 of Hague Convention No. IV 1907, reprinted in Hisakazu Fujita, Isomi Suzuki and Kantaro Nagano (eds.), War and the Rights of Individuals. Renaissance of Individual Compensation, Nippon Hyoron-sha Co., Tokyo, 1999, pp. 67 and 69, §§ 24 and 30.

[287] See, e.g., Michael J. Bazyler, "The Holocaust Restitution Movement in Comparative Perspective", Paper presented at the Association of Genocide Scholars, 4th Biennial Conference, Minneapolis, June 2001.

[288] "Payment for Past: Survivors May Finally Collect Claims", The Christian Science Monitor, 21 August 1998.

[289] "News in Brief", The Christian Science Monitor, 25 March 1999.

300. The Women's International War Crimes Tribunal 2000 for the Trial of Japanese Military Sexual Slavery stated in its first findings that:

In examining the government of Japan's obligation to provide reparations, we refer to the longstanding principle of international law that the state must provide a remedy for its international wrongs. The state's responsibility is to provide compensation, restitution, rehabilitation, satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition. Reparation includes any or all forms that are applicable to the situation and cover all injuries suffered by the victim . . .

Under international law, compensation must come from the government and must be adequate to the material harm, lost opportunities and emotional suffering of the victims, their families and close associates.[290]

The Women's International War Crimes Tribunal therefore recommended that:

The government of Japan . . . enact legislation and take all necessary and appropriate measures to compensate the victims and survivors and those entitled to recover as a result of the violations declared herein through the government and in amounts adequate to redress the harm and deter its future occurrence.[291]

Forms of reparation other than compensation

Note: For practice concerning investigation of enforced disappearance, see Chapter 32, section K.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

301. The 1946 Paris Agreement on Reparation from Germany was concluded:

in order to obtain an equitable distribution among [the signatory governments] of the total assets which . . . are or may be declared to be available as reparation from Germany . . . in order to establish an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency, and to settle an equitable procedure for the restitution of monetary gold.

302. The single Article of Part III of the 1946 Paris Agreement on Reparation from Germany, entitled "Restitution of monetary gold", provides that:

A. All the monetary gold found in Germany by the Allied Forces . . . shall be pooled for distribution as restitution among the countries participating in the pool in proportion to their respective losses of gold through looting or by wrongful removal to Germany.

[290] Women's International War Crimes Tribunal 2000 for the Trial of Japanese Military Sexual Slavery, The Prosecutors and the Peoples of the Asia-Pacific Region v. Emperor Hirohito et al. and the Government of Japan, Summary of Findings, 12 December 2000, § 32 and 35.

[291] Women's International War Crimes Tribunal 2000 for the Trial of Japanese Military Sexual Slavery, The Prosecutors and the Peoples of the Asia-Pacific Region v. Emperor Hirohito et al. and the Government of Japan, Summary of Findings, 12 December 2000, Preliminary Recommendations.

B. Without prejudice to claims by way of reparation for unrestored gold, the portion of monetary gold thus accruing to each country participating in the pool shall be accepted by that country in full satisfaction of all claims against Germany for restitution of monetary gold.
C. A proportional share of the gold shall be allocated to each country concerned which adheres to this arrangement for the restitution of monetary gold and which can establish that a definite amount of monetary gold belonging to it was looted by Germany or, at any time after 12 March 1938, was wrongfully removed into German territory.

303. Article 41 of the 1950 ECHR provides that:

If the [ECtHR] finds that there has been a violation of the Convention or the protocols thereto, and if the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made, the [ECtHR] shall, if necessary, afford just satisfaction to the injured party.

304. Article 2 of Chapter Three ("Internal Restitution") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that:

The Federal Republic [of Germany] hereby acknowledges the need for, and assumes the obligation to implement fully and by every means in its power, the legislation . . . and the programmes for restitution and re-allocation thereunder provided. The Federal Republic shall entrust a Federal Agency with ensuring the fulfilment of the obligation undertaken under this Article, paying due regard to the provisions of the [German] Basic Law.

305. Article 4 of Chapter Three ("Internal Restitution") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that:

1. The Federal Republic [of Germany] hereby undertakes
   (a) . . . to ensure the payment to restitutees of all judgments or awards which have been or hereafter shall be given or made against the former German Reich . . .
   (b) to assume forthwith, by appropriate arrangements with the City of Berlin, liability for the payment . . . of all judgments and awards against the former German Reich under the internal restitution legislation in the Western Sector of Berlin.
   . . .
3. The obligation of the Federal Republic to the Three Powers with respect to money judgments and awards under paragraph 1 of this Article shall be satisfied when such judgments and awards shall have been paid or shall, if the Federal Republic so requests, be considered to have been satisfied when the Federal Republic shall have paid a total of DM 1,500,000,000 thereon.

306. By Article 6 of Chapter Three ("Internal Restitution") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation, a "Supreme Restitution Court" was established.

307. Article 1, first paragraph, of Chapter Five ("External Restitution") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that:

Upon the entry into force of the present Convention, the Federal Republic [of Germany] shall establish, staff and equip an administrative agency which shall . . . search for, recover, and restitute jewellery, silverware and antique furniture . . . and cultural property, if such articles or cultural property were, during the occupation of any territory, removed therefrom by the forces or authorities of Germany or its Allies or their individual members (whether or not pursuant to orders) after acquisition by duress (with or without violence), by larceny, by requisitioning or by other forms of dispossession by force.

308. Paragraph 1 of Article 3 of Chapter Five ("External Restitution") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that:

Notwithstanding provisions of German law to the contrary, any person who, or whose predecessor in title, during the occupation of a territory, has been dispossessed of his property by larceny or by duress (with or without violence) by the forces or authorities of Germany or its Allies, or their individual members (whether or not pursuant to orders), shall have a claim against the present possessor of such property for its restitution.

309. Paragraph 1 of Article 3 of Chapter Six ("Reparation") of the 1952 Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation provides that "the Federal Republic [of Germany] shall in the future raise no objections against the measures which have been, or will be, carried out with regard to German external assets or other property, seized for the purpose of . . . restitution".

310. Paragraphs 1, 3 and 4 of the 1954 Hague Protocol provide that:

1. Each High Contracting Party undertakes to prevent the exportation, from a territory occupied by it during an armed conflict, of cultural property as defined in Article 1 of the [1954 Hague Convention].
. . .
3. Each High Contracting Party undertakes to return, at the close of hostilities, to the competent authorities of the territory previously occupied, cultural property which is in its territory, if such property has been exported in contravention of the principle laid down in the first paragraph. Such property shall never be retained as war reparations.
4. The High Contracting Party whose obligation it was to prevent the exportation of cultural property from the territory occupied by it, shall pay an indemnity to the holders in good faith of any cultural property which has to be returned in accordance with the preceding paragraph.

311. Article 26 of the 1955 Austrian State Treaty, which in its preamble considers that "on 13 March 1938, Hitlerite Germany annexed Austria by force and incorporated its territory in the German Reich", states that:

1. In so far as such action has not already been taken, Austria undertakes that, in all cases where property, legal rights or interests in Austria have since 13 March 1938, been subject of forced transfer or measures of sequestration, confiscation or control on account of the racial origin or religion of the owner, the said property shall be returned and the said legal rights and interests shall be restored together with their accessories . . .
2. Austria agrees to take under its control all property, legal rights and interests in Austria of persons, organizations or communities which, individually or as members of groups, were the object of racial, religious or other Nazi measures of persecution where, in the case of persons, such property, rights and interests remain heirless or unclaimed for six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty, or where in the case of organizations and communities such organizations or communities have ceased to exist. Austria shall transfer such property, rights and interests to appropriate agencies or organizations to be designated by the Four Heads of Mission in Vienna by agreement with the Austrian Government to be used for the relief and rehabilitation of victims of persecution by the Axis Powers.

Part IV ("Claims arising out of the War", Articles 21–24) and Part V ("Property, Rights and Interests", Articles 25–28) provide for more detailed and comprehensive settlement of all property claims on a State-to-State level.

312. Article 63(1) of the 1969 ACHR provides that:

> If the [IACtHR] finds that there has been a violation of a right or freedom protected by this Convention, the Court shall . . . also rule, if appropriate, that the consequences of the measure or situation that constituted the breach of such right or freedom be remedied and that fair compensation be paid to the injured party.

313. Article 75(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "the Court shall establish principles relating to reparations to, or in respect of, victims, including restitution . . . and rehabilitation".

314. Article 27(1) of the 2003 Protocol to the ACHPR on the Establishment of an African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights which was signed in 1998 provides that "if the Court finds that there has been violation of a human or peoples' right, it shall make appropriate orders to remedy the violation, including the payment of fair compensation or reparation".

Other Instruments

315. Protocol No. 1 of the 1952 Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and the CJMC, concluded at a meeting between the representatives of the FRG and the CJMC at which "the extension of the legislation existing in the Federal Republic of Germany for the redress of National-Socialist wrongs" was discussed and at which the representatives of both parties "agreed on a number of principles for the improvement of the existing legislation as well as on other measures", states that:

II. Restitution

1. The legislation now in force in the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany concerning restitution of identifiable property to victims of National-Socialist persecution shall remain in force without any restrictions . . .
2. The Federal Government will see to it that the Federal Republic of Germany accepts liability also for confiscation of household effects in transit which were seized by the German Reich in European ports outside of the Federal Republic, in so far as the household effects belonged to persecutees who emigrated from the territory of the Federal Republic.
3. The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany will see to it that payments shall be ensured to restitutees – private persons and successor organizations appointed pursuant to law – of all judgments or awards which have been or hereafter shall be given or made against the former German Reich under restitution legislation. The same shall apply to amicable settlements . . .

   In accordance with Article 4, paragraph 3 of Chapter Three of the Convention on the Settlement of Matters arising out of the War and the Occupation, the obligation of the Federal Republic of Germany shall be considered to have been satisfied when the judgments and awards shall have been paid or when the Federal Republic of Germany shall have paid a total of DM 1,500 million. Payments on the basis of amicable settlements shall be included in this sum.

316. Article 1(1) of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that "all refugees and displaced persons . . . shall have the right to have restored to them property of which they were deprived in the course of hostilities since 1991 and to be compensated for any property that cannot be restored to them".

317. By Article VII of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords, the Commission for Real Property Claims of Displaced Persons and Refugees in Bosnia and Herzegovina was established. According to Article XI, the mandate of the Commission was to:

> receive and decide any claims for real property in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where the property has not voluntarily been sold or otherwise transferred since April 1, 1992, and where the claimant does not now enjoy possession of that property. Claims may be for return of the property or for just compensation in lieu of return.

318. Article 2(3) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines states that the right of the victims and their families to seek justice for violations of human rights includes "adequate compensation or indemnification, restitution and rehabilitation".

319. In 1999, Section 2 of UNMIK Regulation No. 1999/23 established the Housing and Property Claims Commission in Kosovo. According to Section 2 of UNMIK Regulation No. 2000/60, the Commission is given the power to decide on claims for restitution, repossession and return to the property brought by certain categories of persons, among which persons who lost their property right as a result of discrimination and refugees or displaced persons.

320. Article 21 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

In accordance with their domestic law and international obligations, and taking account of individual circumstances, States should provide victims of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law the following forms of reparation: restitution, . . . rehabilitation, and satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition.

321. Article 22 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

Restitution should, whenever possible, restore the victim to the original situation before the violations of international human rights or humanitarian law occurred. Restitution includes: restoration of liberty, legal rights, social status, family life and citizenship; return to one's place of residence; and restoration of employment and return of property.

322. Article 25 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

Satisfaction and guarantees of non-repetition should include, where applicable, any or all of the following:

(a) Cessation of continuing violations;
(b) Verification of the facts and full and public disclosure of the truth to the extent that such disclosure does not cause further unnecessary harm or threaten the safety of the victim, witnesses, or others;
(c) The search for the bodies of those killed or disappeared and assistance in the identification and reburial of the bodies in accordance with the cultural practices of the families and communities;
(d) An official declaration or a judicial decision restoring the dignity, reputation and legal and social rights of the victim and of persons closely connected with the victim;
(e) Apology, including public acknowledgement of the facts and acceptance of responsibility;
(f) Judicial or administrative sanctions against persons responsible for the violations;
(g) Commemorations and tributes to the victims;
(h) Inclusion of an accurate account of the violations that occurred in international human rights and humanitarian law training and in educational material at all levels;
(i) Preventing the recurrence of violations.

323. Article 34 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, dealing with "Forms of reparation", provides that "full reparation for the injury caused by the internationally wrongful act shall take the form of restitution, compensation and satisfaction, either singly or in combination, in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter".

324. Article 35 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Restitution", provides that:

A State responsible for an internationally wrongful act is under an obligation to make restitution, that is, to re-establish the situation which existed before the wrongful act was committed, provided and to the extent that restitution:
a) Is not materially impossible;
b) Does not involve a burden out of all proportion to the benefit deriving from restitution instead of compensation.

325. Article 37 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Satisfaction", provides that:

1. The State responsible for an internationally wrongful act is under an obligation to give satisfaction for the injury caused by that act insofar as it cannot be made good by restitution or compensation.
2. Satisfaction may consist in an acknowledgement of the breach, an expression of regret, a formal apology or another appropriate modality.
3. Satisfaction shall not be out of proportion to the injury and may not take a form humiliating to the responsible State.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

326. Hungary's Military Manual, in a section entitled "Measures required after a conflict", requires the restoration of "normal conditions" and provides for the "return [of] ... objects" and the "return [of] cultural objects".[292] In a section entitled "After combat", the manual repeats the instruction to "restore normal conditions" and provides for the "return of civilian ... objects" and the "restitution of requisitioned objects".[293]

327. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines states that in the case of damage to private property in the course of legitimate security or police operations, "measures shall be undertaken whenever practicable ... to repair the damage caused".[294]

328. The US Field Manual, under the heading "Remedies of Injured Belligerent", provides that:

In the event of [a] violation of the law of war, the injured party may legally resort to remedial action of the following types:
a) Publication of the facts, with a view to influencing public opinion against the offending belligerent.
b) Protest ... and/or punishment of the individual offenders. Such communications may be sent through the protecting power, a humanitarian organization performing the duties of a protecting power, or a neutral state, or by parlementaire direct to the commander of the offending forces ...

[292] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 38. [293] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 80.
[294] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2(a.4).

c) Solicitation of the good offices, mediation, or intervention of neutral States for the purpose of making the enemy observe the law of war.
d) Punishment of captured offenders as war criminals.[295]

National Legislation

329. In 2001, Austria adopted the General Settlement Fund Law (which was later amended) which provides that "an Arbitration Panel for the examination of applications for in rem restitution of publicly-owned property shall be established with the fund".[296] The Law further provides that:

(1) Persons and associations who/which were persecuted by the National Socialist regime on political grounds, on grounds of origin, religion, sexual orientation, or of physical or mental handicap, or of accusations of so-called asociality, or who left the country to escape such persecution, and who suffered losses or damages as a result of or in connection with events having occurred on the territory of the present-day Republic of Austria during the National Socialist era shall be eligible to file an application.
(2) In addition . . . heirs of eligible claimants as defined in Paragraph 1 shall also be eligible to file an application. In case of a defunct association, an association which the Arbitration Panel regards as the legal successor shall be entitled to file an application as well.[297]

As to restitutable publicly-owned property, the Law provides that:

(1) For the purposes of in rem restitution, the notion of "publicly-owned property" shall cover . . . real estate (land) and buildings (superstructures) . . .
(2) For the purposes of in rem restitution to Jewish communal organizations, the notion "publicly-owned property" shall furthermore cover tangible movable property, particularly cultural and religious items.[298]

330. Since the end of the Second World War, Germany has adopted several laws related to reparation and restitution for victims of the war and the holocaust, for example the Federal Restitution Law as amended.[299]

331. In 1988, the US passed the Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended), the purpose of which was, inter alia, to:

(1) acknowledge the fundamental injustice of the evacuation, relocation, and internment of United States citizens and permanent resident aliens of Japanese ancestry during World War II;
(2) apologize on behalf of the people of the United States [for these acts];
(3) provide for a public education fund to finance efforts to inform the public about the internment of such individuals so as to prevent the recurrence of any similar event;

[295] US, Field Manual (1956), § 495.
[296] Austria, General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001), Article 1(23)(1).
[297] Austria, General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001), Article 1(27).
[298] Austria, General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001), Article 1(28).
[299] Germany, Federal Restitution Law as amended (1957).

(4) make restitution to those individuals of Japanese ancestry who were interned;
(5) make restitution to Aleut residents of the Pribilof Islands and the Aleutian Islands west of Unimark Island, in settlement of United States obligations in equity and at law, for –
  (A) injustices suffered and unreasonable hardships endured while those Aleut residents were under United States control during World War II;
  (B) personal property taken or destroyed by the United States forces during World War II;
  (C) community property, including community church property, taken or destroyed by United States forces during World War II; and
  (D) traditional village islands on Attu Island not rehabilitated after World War II for Aleut occupation or other productive use;
(6) discourage the occurrence of similar injustices and violations of civil liberties in the future; and
(7) make more credible and sincere any declaration of concern by the United States over violations of human rights committed by other nations.[300]

Title I of the Law, entitled "United States Citizens of Japanese Ancestry and Resident Japanese Aliens", provides that:

Each department and agency of the United States Government shall review with liberality, giving full consideration to the findings of the Commission and the statement of the Congress set forth in section 2(a) [section 1989a(a) of this Appendix], any application by an eligible individual for the restitution of any position, status, or entitlement lost in whole or in part because of any discriminatory act of the United States Government against such individual which was based upon the individual's Japanese ancestry and which occurred during the evacuation, relocation, and internment period.[301]

National Case-law

332. In its judgement in the J. T. case in 1949 in which an individual had sued the State for repayment of money taken by the police during the arrest of the claimant during the occupation of the Netherlands by the German army, the District Court of The Hague held that the State of the Netherlands must repay the money to the plaintiff. The Court held that it was true that the State was not liable for all acts committed by the resistance movement (Binnenlandse Strijdkrachten) which had been organized with the consent of the government in exile during Second World War, but since it was definitely established that the money had come into the hands of the police, restitution had to be made.[302]

[300] US, Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) (1988), Purposes, Section 1989.
[301] US, Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts (as amended) (1988), Title I, Section 1989b-2.
[302] Netherlands, District Court of The Hague, J. T. case, Judgement, 13 April 1949.

Other National Practice

333. In 1988, the Canadian government concluded an agreement with the National Association of Japanese Canadians, the so-called Japanese-Canadian Redress Agreement, the terms of which provided that:

> Despite perceived military necessities at the time, the forced removal and internment of Japanese Canadians during World War II and their deportation and expulsion following the war, was unjust. In retrospect, government policies of disenfranchisement, detention, confiscation and sale of private and community property, expulsion, deportation and restriction of movement, which continued after the war, were influenced by discriminatory attitudes. Japanese Canadians who were interned had their property liquidated and the proceeds of sale were used to pay for their own internment.
>
> . . .
>
> Therefore, the Government of Canada, on behalf of all Canadians, does hereby:
>
> 1) acknowledge that the treatment of Japanese Canadians during and after World War II was unjust and violated principles of human rights as they are understood today;
> 2) pledge to ensure, to the full extent that its powers allow, that such events will not happen again; and
> 3) recognize, with great respect, the fortitude and determination of Japanese Canadians who, despite great stress and hardship, retain their commitment and loyalty to Canada and contribute so richly to the development of the Canadian nation.[303]

334. In 1997, the French government, created by a decree a "Study Mission on the Spoliation of Jews in France" (also known as the "Mattéoli Mission") with the task of conducting a study of the various forms of spoliation visited upon the Jews of France during Second World War, and of the scope and effect of post-war restitution efforts.[304]

335. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, Kuwait insisted, before the UN, on the restitution by Iraq of the cultural objects that were taken from Kuwaiti institutions during the occupation, or that compensation be paid.[305]

336. In 1993, the Chief Cabinet Secretary of the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs stated, with respect to the recruitment and abuse during Second World War of the so-called "comfort women" by the Japanese military, that "the Government of Japan would like . . . to extend its sincere apologies and remorse to all those, irrespective of place of origin, who suffered immeasurable pain and incurable physical and psychological wounds as comfort women".[306]

[303] Canada, Prime Minister, Agreement between the Government of Canada and the National Association of Japanese Canadians (Japanese-Canadian Redress Agreement), 22 September 1988.

[304] France, First Minister, Decree regarding the Study Mission on the Spoliation of Jews during World War II in France, 25 March 1997, Journal Officiel de la République française, 26 March 1997, p. 4721.

[305] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 6.2.

[306] Japan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Statement by the Chief Cabinet Secretary on the result of the study on the issue of "comfort women", 4 August 1993.

337. In 1994, the Prime Minister of Japan stated that "on the issue of wartime 'comfort women' [recruited and abused by the Japanese military during Second World War], which seriously stained the honour and dignity of many women, I would like to . . . express my profound and sincere remorse and apologies".[307]

338. In 1995, the Chief Cabinet Secretary of the Japanese Ministry of Foreign Affairs made a statement to the effect that:

Based on our remorse for the past . . . the project of the "Asian Peace and Friendship Foundation for Women" will be undertaken as follows.

1. The following activities will be conducted for the former wartime comfort women, through the cooperation of the Japanese People and the Government:
   i. The Foundation will raise funds in the private sector as a means to enact the Japanese people's atonement for former wartime comfort women.
   ii. The Foundation will support those conducting medical and welfare projects and other similar projects which are of service to former wartime comfort women, through the use of government funding and other funds.
   iii. When these projects are implemented, the Government will express the nation's feelings of sincere remorse and apology to the former wartime comfort women.[308]

339. In 1995, the Prime Minister of Japan, with respect to the Asian Women's Fund established in July 1995 by the proponents from the legal, academic and NGO sectors in Japan with the support of the government of Japan to the benefit of the victims recruited and abused as "comfort women" by the Japanese military during Second World War, offered his "profound apology to all those who, as wartime comfort women, suffered emotional and physical wounds that can never be closed". The Prime Minister further stated that:

Established on this occasion and involving the cooperation of the Government and citizens of Japan, the "Asian Women's Fund" is an expression of atonement on the part of the Japanese people toward these women and supports medical, welfare, and other projects. As articulated in the proponents' Appeal, the Government will do its utmost to ensure that the goals of the Fund are achieved.[309]

340. In 1970, during a debate in the Special Political Committee of the UN General Assembly on measures carried out by Israel in the occupied territories, Poland stated that:

The destruction of houses and the confiscation of property, which were designed to demoralize the inhabitants of certain areas and to force them to abandon their homes, were in violation of the basic principles of international law and contrary to the provisions of article 46 of the [1907 HR] and article 53 of the fourth Geneva Convention. Since such acts were illegal, the Government of Israel was liable . . . for the restitution of confiscated property.[310]

[307] Japan, Statement by the Prime Minister on the "Peace, Friendship, and Exchange Initiative", 3 August 1994.
[308] Japan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Statement by the Chief Cabinet Secretary, 14 June 1995.
[309] Japan, Statement by the Prime Minister on the occasion of the establishment of the "Asian Women's Fund", July 1995.
[310] Poland, Statement before the Special Political Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/SPC/SR.748, 10 December 1970, § 9.

341. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000 concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during Second World War, the US Congress expressed its sense that "the Government of Japan should – (1) formally issue a clear and unambiguous apology for the atrocious war crimes committed by the Japanese military during World War II".[311]
342. In 2001, a draft concurrent resolution was put before the US Congress for it to call upon the government of Japan to "formally issue a clear and unambiguous apology for the sexual enslavement of young women during colonial occupation of Asia and the Pacific Islands during World War II, known to the world as 'comfort women'".[312]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
343. In a resolution adopted in 1976 on South Africa's military activities against Angola, the UN Security Council called upon the government of South Africa "to meet the just claims of the People's Republic of Angola . . . for the restoration of the equipment and materials which its invading forces seized".[313]
344. In a resolution adopted in 1980, the UN Security Council, recalling Articles 1 and 49 GC IV, called upon the government of Israel:

> to rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling the mayors of Hebron and Halhoul and the Sharia Judge of Hebron, and to facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinian leaders so that they can resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed.[314]

345. In Resolution 687 of 1991 on Iraq, the UN Security Council noted that "despite the progress being made in fulfilling the obligations of resolution 686 (1991), many Kuwaiti and third-State nationals are still not accounted for and property remains unreturned". It requested the UN Secretary-General "to report to the Council on the steps taken to facilitate the return of all Kuwaiti property seized by Iraq, including a list of any property that Kuwait claims has not been returned or which has not been returned intact".[315]
346. In a resolution on Liberia adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council condemned the looting of the equipment, supplies and personal property of members of ECOMOG, UNOMIL and international organisations and agencies delivering humanitarian assistance and called upon "the leaders of the factions to ensure the immediate return of looted property". It requested that the UN

[311] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON. RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.
[312] US, House of Representatives, 107th Congress, 1st Session, Concurrent Resolution 195, HCON 195 IH, 24 July 2001.
[313] UN Security Council, Res. 387, 31 March 1976, § 4.
[314] UN Security Council, Res. 469, 20 May 1980, § 2.
[315] UN Security Council, Res. 687, 8 April 1991, preamble and § 15.

Secretary-General provide "information on how much of the stolen property has been returned".[316]

347. In 2001, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution entitled "Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts", to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 34 ("Forms of reparation"), Article 35 ("Restitution") and Article 37 ("Satisfaction"), were annexed. In the resolution, the UN General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[317]

348. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all parties to the conflict to respect IHL and "to provide sufficient and effective remedies to the victims of grave violations and abuses of human rights and of accepted humanitarian rules and to bring the perpetrators to trial".[318]

349. In 1996, in a report on a mission to the North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences recommended, inter alia, that, at the national level:

> The Government of Japan should:
>
> (a) Acknowledge that the system of comfort stations set up by the Japanese Imperial Army during the Second World War was a violation of its obligations under international law and accept legal responsibility for that violation.
>
> . . .
>
> (d) Make a public apology in writing to individual women who have come forward and can be substantiated as women victims of Japanese military sexual slavery.[319]

350. In 2001, in its commentary on Article 33 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, the ILC stated that:

> When an obligation of reparation exists towards a State, reparation does not necessarily accrue to that State's benefit. For instance, a State's responsibility for the breach of an obligation under a treaty concerning the protection of human rights may exist towards all the other parties to the treaty, but the individuals concerned should be regarded as the ultimate beneficiaries and in that sense as the holders of the relevant rights.[320]

316 UN Security Council, Res. 1071, 30 August 1996, § 8.
317 UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
318 UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/70, 21 April 1998, § 5(d); see also Res. 1996/75, 23 April 1996, § 10.
319 UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences, Report on the mission to the North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1, 4 January 1996, § 137(a) and (d).
320 ILC, Commentary on Article 33 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, Report of the International Law Commission, 53rd Session, UN Doc. A/56/10, New York, 2001, p. 234.

351. In 2001, in its commentary on Article 35 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, the ILC noted that:

> (1) In accordance with article 34, restitution is the first of the forms of reparation available to a State injured by an internationally wrongful act. Restitution involves the re-establishment as far as possible of the situation which existed prior to the commission of the internationally wrongful act, to the extent that any changes that have occurred in that situation may be traced to that act. In its simplest form, this involves such conduct as the release of persons wrongly detained or the return of property wrongly seized. In other cases, restitution may be a more complex act . . .
> (3) Nonetheless, because restitution most closely conforms to the general principle that the responsible State is bound to wipe out the legal and material consequences of its wrongful act by re-establishing the situation that would exist if that act had not been committed, it comes first among the forms of reparation. The primacy of restitution was confirmed by the Permanent Court in the Factory at Chorzów case when it said that the responsible State was under "the obligation to restore the undertaking and, if this be not possible, to pay its value at the time of the indemnification, which value is designed to take the place of restitution which has become impossible" . . .
> (5) Restitution may take the form of material restoration or return of territory, persons or property, or the reversal of some juridical act, or some combination of them. Examples of material restitution include the release of detained individuals, the handing over to a State of an individual arrested in its territory, the handing over to a State of . . . other types of property, including documents, works of art . . .[321]

352. In 2001, in its commentary on Article 36 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, the ILC noted that:

> Satisfaction is concerned with non-material injury, specifically non-material injury to the State, on which a monetary value can be put only in a highly approximate and notional way . . . Satisfaction . . . is the remedy for those injuries, not financially assessable, which amount to an affront [of the State].[322]

353. In 2001, in its commentary to Article 37 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, the ILC stated that:

> Satisfaction . . . is not a standard form of reparation . . . It is only in those cases where [restitution or compensation] have not provided full reparation that satisfaction may be required . . . Satisfaction . . . is the remedy for those injuries, not financially assessable, which amount to an affront to the State . . . The appropriate form of satisfaction will depend on the circumstances and cannot be prescribed in advance.

[321] ILC, Commentary on Article 35 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, Report of the International Law Commission, 53rd Session, UN Doc. A/56/10, New York, 2001, pp. 238–240.
[322] ILC, Commentary on Article 36 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, Report of the International Law Commission, 53rd Session, UN Doc. A/56/10, New York, 2001, pp. 246 and 264.

Many possibilities exist, including due inquiry into the causes of an accident resulting in harm or injury . . . , disciplinary or penal action against the individuals whose conduct caused the intentionally wrongful act or the award of symbolic damages for non-pecuniary injury. Assurances or guarantees of non-repetition, which are dealt with in the Articles in the context of cessation, may also amount to a form of satisfaction.[323]

Other International Organisations

354. No practice was found.

International Conferences

355. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

356. In its judgement in Akdivar and Others v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR stated that:

> 45. The applicants further submitted that the Court should confirm . . . that the government should (1) bear the costs of necessary repairs in [their village] to enable the applicants to continue their way of life there; and (2) remove any obstacle preventing the applicants from returning to their village.
>
> In their view, such confirmation was necessary to prevent future and continuing violations of the Convention, in particular the de facto expropriation of their property.
>
> 46. The government maintained that the restoration of rights is not feasible due to the emergency conditions prevailing in the region. However, resettlement will take place when the local inhabitants feel themselves to be safe from terrorist atrocities.
>
> 47. The Court recalls that a judgement in which it finds a breach imposes on the respondent State a legal obligation to put an end to such breach and make reparation for its consequences in such a way as to restore as far as possible the situation existing before the breach (restitutio in integrum). However, if restitutio in integrum is in practice impossible, the respondent States are free to choose the means whereby they will comply with a judgement in which the Court has found a breach, and the Court will not make consequential orders or declaratory statements in this regard.

The Court awarded damages for pecuniary and non-pecuniary losses but dismissed the remainder of the claim for just satisfaction.[324]

357. In 2000, in Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero y Galdámez (El Salvador), the IACiHR stated that:

> 122. . . . The IACHR concludes that El Salvador has violated, to the prejudice of the victim's relatives, the right to judicial guarantees established in Article 8(1) of the

[323] ILC, Commentary on Article 37 of the Draft Articles on State Responsibility, Report of the International Law Commission, 53rd Session, UN Doc. A/56/10, New York, 2001, pp. 263–266.

[324] ECtHR, Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, Judgement, 1 April 1998, §§ 45–47.

American Convention and the right to judicial protection, set forth at Article 25 of the Convention. The Commission also concludes that the Salvadoran State, by virtue of the conduct of the authorities and institutions identified in this report, is responsible for failing to carry out its duty to investigate seriously and in good faith the violation of rights recognized by the American Convention; to identify the persons responsible for that violation, place them on trial, punish them, and make reparations for the human rights violations; and for failing in its duty to guarantee rights as established in Article 1(1)

...

147. For its part, the Human Rights Committee of the United Nations has established, on several occasions, and specifically with respect to violations of the right to life, that the victims' next-of-kin have a right to be compensated for those violations due, among other things, to the fact that they do not know the circumstances of the death and the persons responsible for the crime. The UN human rights organs have clarified and insisted that the duty to make reparations for damage is not satisfied merely by offering a sum of money to the victims' next-of-kin. First, an end must be brought to their uncertainty and ignorance, i.e. they must be given the complete and public knowledge of the truth.

148. The right that all persons and society have to know the full, complete, and public truth as to the events transpired, their specific circumstances, and who participated in them is part of the right to reparation for human rights violations, with respect to satisfaction and guarantees of non- repetition. The right of a society to have full knowledge of its past is not only a mode of reparation and clarification of what has happened, but is also aimed at preventing future violations.[325]

358. In 2001, in the case of the Street Children v. Guatemala, the IACtHR, referring to other judgements which it had rendered, stated that:

100. On many occasions, this Court has referred to the right of the next of kin of the victims to know what happened and the identity of the State agents responsible for the acts. "[W]henever there has been a human rights violation, the State has a duty to investigate the facts and punish those responsible, [...] and this obligation must be complied with seriously and not as a mere formality". Moreover, this Court has indicated that the State "is obliged to combat [impunity] by all available legal means, because [impunity] encourages the chronic repetition of human rights violations and the total defenselessness of the victims and their next of kin".

101. Accordingly, the Court reiterates that Guatemala is obliged to investigate the facts that generated the violations of the American Convention in the instant case, identify those responsible and punish them.[326]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

359. In 1993, in a report submitted to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that:

Article 1, common to the four Geneva Conventions and to Protocol I, stipulates that the contracting States are under an obligation "to respect and ensure respect for" those instruments. Beyond that, and on a more general level, a State is responsible for every act or omission attributable to it and amounting to a breach of an international obligation incumbent on it, including in the field of the international protection of the environment. States affected by such a breach are entitled to insist on the implementation of such rules of State responsibility, including cessation of the unlawful conduct [and] restitution.[327]

[325] IACiHR, Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero y Galdámez (El Salvador), Report, 13 April 2000, §§ 122 and 147–148.

[326] IACtHR, Street Children v. Guatemala, Judgement, 26 May 2001, §§ 100–101.

VI. Other Practice

360. In 1936, during the Spanish Civil War, in a note to the Portuguese Minister of Foreign Negotiations, the President of the Spanish Junta de Defensa Nacional, while denouncing and condemning certain acts of assassination, mistreatment and damage allegedly committed against his side and non-belligerent third parties by members of the adverse party (the "Red Forces Armed by the Government of Madrid"), apologised to the offended foreign government on the ground that the opposite side had not been able to enforce border security because it lacked the most elemental attributes of a territorial power. The President of the Spanish Junta de Defensa Nacional gave a guarantee to the Portuguese authorities that in no case would such acts be repeated and that the culprits would be prosecuted and punished. Moreover, he expressed his intention to repair the damage caused.[328]

361. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "under international law, a state that has violated a legal obligation to another state is required to terminate the violation and, ordinarily, to make reparation, including in appropriate circumstances restitution or compensation for loss or injury".[329]

362. The Restatement (Third) further provides that:

A private person, whether natural or juridical, injured by a violation of an international obligation by a state, may bring a claim against that state or assert that violation as a defense

(a) in a competent international forum when the state has consented to the jurisdiction of that forum with respect to such private claims;
(b) in a court or other tribunal of that state pursuant to its law; or

[327] ICRC, Report on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in UN Doc. A/48/269, Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, 29 July 1993, § 47.

[328] Spain, Note from the President of the Spanish Junta de Defensa Nacional to the Portuguese Minister of Foreign Negotiations concerning a supposed incursion into Portuguese territory of "Red forces armed by the Government of Madrid" resulting in the death of a commander of the "National" army, mistreatment of Spanish and Portuguese subjects, and damage to Portuguese property, Burgos, 17 September 1936, reprinted in Ministério dos Negócios Estrangeiros, Dez anos de política externa (1936–1947), A Nação portuguesa e a segunda Guerra Mundial, 1964, pp. 285–287.

[329] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 901.

(c) in a court or other tribunal of the injured person's state of nationality or of a third state, pursuant to the law of such state, subject to limitations under international law.[330]

363. It was reported that, in the period from the beginning of its operations in March 1996 to the end of February 1999, the Commission for Displaced Persons and Refugees, established by Article VII of the Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the 1995 Dayton Accords, had registered over 126,000 claims relating to almost 160,000 properties. It is expected that up to 500,000 claims may be submitted.[331]

364. The Women's International War Crimes Tribunal 2000 for the Trial of Japanese Military Sexual Slavery stated that "reparation includes any or all forms that are applicable to the situation and cover all injuries suffered by the victim".[332]

365. In 2001, a provincial arm of the ELN in Colombia publicly apologised for the death of three children and the destruction of civilian houses which resulted from an attack with explosives which members of the ELN had conducted against a police station in the district of San Francisco, Oriente Antioqueño (Industrial Area). The ELN, which itself defined the attack as an "action of war", expressed its deep and sincere condolences to all those who had been affected by the explosion and expressed its willingness to collaborate in the recuperation of the remaining objects.[333]

[330] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 906.

[331] Hans van Houtte, "Mass Property Claim Resolution in a Post-War Society: the Commission for Real Property Claims in Bosnia and Herzegovina", ICLQ, Vol. 48, 1999, p. 632.

[332] Women's International War Crimes Tribunal 2000 for the Trial of Japanese Military Sexual Slavery, The Prosecutors and the Peoples of the Asia-Pacific Region v. Emperor Hirohito et al. and the Government of Japan, Summary of Findings, 12 December 2000, § 32.

[333] ELN, Head Office, Area Industrial, Communiqué relative to the events of 9 August 2001.

CHAPTER 43

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY

A. Individual Responsibility

Individual criminal responsibility

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 227 of the 1919 Treaty of Versailles provides that:

The Allied and Associated Powers publicly arraign William II of Hohenzollern, formerly German Emperor, for a supreme offence against international morality and the sanctity of treaties.

A special tribunal will be constituted to try the accused.

2. Article 228 of the 1919 Treaty of Versailles provides that:

The German Government recognises the right of the Allied and Associated Powers to bring before military tribunals persons accused of having committed acts in violation of the laws and customs of war. Such persons shall, if found guilty, be sentenced to punishments laid down by law.

3. Article 1 of the 1945 London Agreement provided that the IMT (Nuremberg) be established "for the trial of war criminals . . . whether they be accused individually or in their capacity as members of organizations or groups or in both capacities".

4. Article 6 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that:

> The Tribunal . . . shall have the power to try and punish persons who, acting in the interests of the European Axis countries, whether as individuals or as members of organizations, committed any of the following crimes.
>
> The following acts, or any of them, are crimes coming within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility:
>
> (a) Crimes against peace: . . .
> (b) War crimes: . . .
> (c) Crimes against humanity: . . .
>
> Leaders, organizers, instigators and accomplices participating in the formulation or execution of a common plan or conspiracy to commit any of the foregoing crimes are responsible for all acts performed by any persons in execution of such plan.

5. Article 7 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that "the official position of defendants, whether as Heads of State or responsible officials in Government Departments, shall not be considered as freeing them from responsibility or mitigating punishment".

6. Article 1 of the 1948 Genocide Convention provides that "the Contracting Parties confirm that genocide, whether committed in time of peace or in time of war, is a crime under international law which they undertake to prevent and punish".

7. Article 49 GC I provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties undertake to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing, or ordering to be committed, any of the grave breaches of the present Convention defined in the following Article.
>
> Each High Contracting Party shall be under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches, and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts. It may also, if it prefers, and in accordance with the provisions of its own legislation, hand such persons over for trial to another High Contracting Party concerned, provided such High Contracting Party has made out a prima facie case.
>
> Each High Contracting Party shall take measures necessary for the suppression of all acts contrary to the provisions of the present Convention other than the grave breaches defined in the following Article.

Corresponding provisions are contained in Articles 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV. The grave breaches to which the obligations of paragraphs 1 and 2 apply are defined in Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV.

8. Article 28 of the 1954 Hague Convention requires States "to take, within the framework of their ordinary criminal jurisdiction, all necessary steps to prosecute and impose penal or disciplinary sanctions upon those persons, of whatever nationality, who commit . . . a breach of the present Convention".

9. Article 2(2) of the 1973 Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons provides that "each State Party shall make these crimes punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account their grave nature".
10. Article 85(1) AP I provides that "the provisions of the Conventions relating to the repression of breaches and grave breaches, supplemented by this Section, shall apply to the repression of breaches and grave breaches of this Protocol". Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1] The grave breaches of AP I are defined in Articles 11(4) and 85(3) and (4) AP I.
11. Article 4 of the 1977 OAU Convention against Mercenarism, entitled "Scope of criminal responsibility", states that "a mercenary is responsible both for the crime of mercenarism and all related offences, without prejudice to any other offences for which he may be prosecuted".
12. Article 4 of the 1984 Convention against Torture requires each State to "ensure that all acts of torture are offences under its criminal law" and to "make these offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account their grave nature".
13. Article 9 of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel provides that:

1. The intentional commission of:
   (a) A murder, kidnapping or other attack upon the person or liberty of any United Nations or associated personnel;
   (b) A violent attack upon the official premises, the private accommodation or the means of transportation of any United Nations or associated personnel likely to endanger his or her person or liberty;
   (c) A threat to commit any such attack with the objective of compelling a physical or juridical person to do or to refrain from doing any act;
   (d) An attempt to commit any such attack; and
   (e) An act constituting participation as an accomplice in any such attack, or in an attempt to commit such attack, or in organizing or ordering others to commit such attack, shall be made by each State Party a crime under its national law.
2. Each State Party shall make the crimes set out in paragraph 1 punishable by appropriate penalties which shall take into account their grave nature.

Article 2(2) underlines that:

this Convention shall not apply to a United Nations operation authorized by the Security Council as an enforcement action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations in which any of the personnel are engaged as combatants against organized armed forces and to which the law of international armed conflict applies.

14. Article 14 of the 1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW provides that:

1. Each High Contracting Party shall take all appropriate steps, including legislative and other measures, to prevent and suppress violations of this Protocol by persons or on territory under its jurisdiction or control.

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

2. The measures envisaged in paragraph 1 of this Article include appropriate measures to ensure the imposition of penal sanctions against persons who, in relation to an armed conflict and contrary to the provisions of this Protocol, wilfully kill or cause serious injury to civilians and to bring such persons to justice.

15. Article 9 of the 1997 Ottawa Convention provides that:

Each State Party shall take all appropriate legal, administrative and other measures, including the imposition of penal sanctions, to prevent and suppress any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention undertaken by persons or on territory under its jurisdiction or control.

16. Article 2(1) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that:

The perpetrators or other participants in a constituent element of the offence as defined in article 1 of this Convention shall be punished for a forced disappearance where they knew or ought to have known that the offence was about to be or was in the process of being committed. The perpetrator of and other participants in the following acts shall also be punished:

(a) Instigation, incitement or encouragement of the commission of the offence of forced disappearance;
(b) Conspiracy or collusion to commit an offence of forced disappearance;
(c) Attempt to commit an offence of forced disappearance; and
(d) Concealment of an offence of forced disappearance.

2. Nonfulfilment of the legal duty to act to prevent a forced disappearance shall also be punished.

17. Article 1 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides for the establishment of an International Criminal Court with "the power to exercise jurisdiction over persons for the most serious crimes of international concern".

18. Article 5(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides for the jurisdiction of the Court over the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and the crime of aggression.

19. Article 8(2)(c) and (e) of the 1998 ICC Statute gives the Court jurisdiction over violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and "other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts not of an international character".

20. Article 25 of the 1998 ICC Statute, entitled "individual criminal responsibility", provides that:

1. The Court shall have jurisdiction over natural persons pursuant to this Statute.
2. A person who commits a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court shall be individually responsible and liable for punishment in accordance with this Statute.

3. In accordance with this Statute, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court if that person:
   (a) Commits such a crime, whether as an individual, jointly with another or through another person, regardless of whether that other person is criminally responsible;
   (b) Orders, solicits or induces the commission of such a crime which in fact occurs or is attempted;
   (c) For the purpose of facilitating the commission of such a crime, aids, abets or otherwise assists in its commission or its attempted commission, including providing the means for its commission;
   (d) In any other way contributes to the commission or attempted commission of such a crime by a group of persons acting with a common purpose. Such contribution shall be intentional and shall either:
      (i) Be made with the aim of furthering the criminal activity or criminal purpose of the group, where such activity or purpose involves the commission of a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court; or
      (ii) Be made in the knowledge of the intention of the group to commit the crime;
   (e) In respect of the crime of genocide, directly and publicly incites others to commit genocide;
   (f) Attempts to commit such a crime by taking action that commences its execution by means of a substantial step, but the crime does not occur because of circumstances independent of the person's intentions. However, a person who abandons the effort to commit the crime or otherwise prevents the completion of the crime shall not be liable for punishment under this Statute for the attempt to commit that crime if that person completely and voluntarily gave up the criminal purpose.

21. Article 30(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "unless otherwise provided, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court only if the material elements are committed with intent and knowledge".
22. Article 15(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides a list of acts being considered as offences within the meaning of the Protocol. Article 15(2) provides that:

Each Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences set forth in this Article and to make such offences punishable by appropriate penalties. When doing so, Parties shall comply with general principles of law and international law, including the rules extending individual criminal responsibility to persons other than those who directly commit the act.

Article 22(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "this Protocol shall apply in the event of an armed conflict not of an international character, occurring within the territory of one of the Parties".
23. Article 4 of the 2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts provides that:

1. Armed groups that are distinct from the armed forces of a State should not, under any circumstances, recruit or use in hostilities persons under the age of 18 years.
2. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to prevent such recruitment and use, including the adoption of legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize such practices.

24. Article 1(1) of the 2002 Agreement on the Special Court for Sierra Leone, concluded pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1315 (2000), provides for the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone "to prosecute persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996".
25. Article 1(1) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "the Special Court shall . . . have the power to prosecute persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996".
26. Article 6 of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, entitled "Individual criminal responsibility", provides that:

1. A person who planned, instigated, . . . committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute [i.e. crimes against humanity, violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of AP II, and other serious violations of international humanitarian law] shall be individually responsible for the crime.
2. The official position of any accused persons, whether as Head of State or Government or as a responsible government official, shall not relieve such person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment.

Other Instruments
27. Article 44 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that:

All wanton violence committed against persons in the invaded country, all destruction of property not commanded by the authorized officer, all robbery, all pillage or sacking, even after taking a place by main force, all rape, wounding, maiming, or killing of such inhabitants, are prohibited under the penalty of death, or such other severe punishment as may seem adequate for the gravity of the offense.

28. Article 47 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that:

Crimes punishable by all penal codes, such as arson, murder, maiming, assaults, highway robbery, theft, burglary, fraud, forgery, and rape, if committed by an American soldier in a hostile country against its inhabitants, are not only punishable as at home, but in all cases in which death is not inflicted, the severer punishment shall be preferred.

29. Article 84 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "offenders against the laws of war are liable to the punishments specified in the penal law".
30. The 1919 Commission on Responsibility was mandated, inter alia, to investigate individual responsibility for breaches of the laws of war and to draft proposals for the establishment of a tribunal to try these offences. The Commission identified a non-exhaustive list of 30 categories of violations of the laws and customs of war.
31. In the 1943 Moscow Declaration, the UK, US and USSR, "speaking in the interest of the thirty-two United Nations", expressed their determination that:

> Those German officers and men and members of the Nazi party who have been responsible for or have taken a consenting part in the above atrocities, massacres and executions will be sent back to the countries in which their abominable deeds were done in order that they may be judged and punished . . . Thus, Germans who take part in . . . [such acts] will know they will be brought back to the scene of their crimes and judged on the spot by the peoples whom they have outraged.

32. Article II, Section 4(a) of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that "the official position of any person, whether as Head of State or as a responsible official in a Government Department, does not free him from responsibility for a crime or entitle him to mitigation of punishment".
33. Article 5 of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo), entitled "Jurisdiction over Persons and Offences", provides that:

> The Tribunal shall have the power to try and punish Far Eastern war criminals who as individuals or as members of organizations are charged with offences which include Crimes against Peace.
>
> The following acts, or any of them, are crimes coming within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility:
>
> (a) Crimes against Peace: . . .
> (b) Conventional War Crimes: Namely, violations of the laws or customs of war;
> (c) Crimes against Humanity.

34. Article 6 of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo), entitled "Responsibility of Accused", provides that:

> Neither the official position, at any time, of an accused, nor the fact that an accused acted pursuant to order of his government or of a superior shall, of itself, be sufficient to free such accused from responsibility for any crime with which he is charged, but such circumstances may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the Tribunal determines that justice so requires.

35. Principle I of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles provides that "any person who commits an act which constitutes a crime under international law is responsible therefor and liable to punishment".
36. Principle II of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles provides that "the fact that internal law does not impose a penalty for an act which constitutes a crime under international law does not relieve the person who committed the act from responsibility under international law".

37. Principle III of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles provides that "the fact that a person who committed an act which constitutes a crime under international law acted as Head of State or responsible Government official does not relieve him from responsibility under international law".

38. Principle VI of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles provides that:

> The crimes hereinafter set out are punishable as crimes under international law:
> (a) Crimes against peace: . . .
> (b) War crimes: . . .
> (c) Crimes against humanity.

39. Article 1 of the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "offences against the peace and security of mankind, as defined in this Code, are crimes under international law, for which the responsible individuals shall be punished".

40. Article 3 of the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "the fact that a person acted as Head of State or as responsible government official does not relieve him of responsibility for committing any of the offences defined in this Code".

41. Paragraph 11 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that:

> Each party undertakes, when it is officially informed of such an allegation made or forwarded by the ICRC, to open an enquiry promptly and pursue it conscientiously, and to take the necessary steps to put an end to the alleged violations or prevent their recurrence and to punish those responsible in accordance with the law in force.

42. Article 3 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that:

> 1. An individual who commits a crime against the peace and security of mankind is responsible therefor and is liable to punishment.
> 2. An individual who aids, abets or provides the means for the commission of a crime against the peace and security of mankind or conspires in or directly incites the commission of such a crime is responsible therefor and is liable to punishment.
> 3. An individual who commits an act constituting an attempt to commit a crime against the peace and security of mankind . . . is responsible therefor and is liable to punishment. Attempt means any commencement of execution of a crime that failed or was halted only because of circumstances independent of the perpetrator's intention.

43. Article 4 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "responsibility for a crime against the peace and security of mankind is not affected by any motives invoked by the accused which are not covered by the definition of the crime".

44. Article 13 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "the official position of an individual who commits a crime against the peace and security of mankind, and particularly the fact that he acts as head of State or Government, does not relieve him of criminal responsibility".

45. Article 3(i) of the 1992 London Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues provides that:

> In carrying out the Programme of Action, the parties to the conflict undertook to abide by the following provisions:
>
> i) all parties to the conflict are bound to comply with their obligations under International Humanitarian Law and in particular the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, and that persons who commit or order the commission of grave breaches are individually responsible.

46. Articles 2–5 of the 1993 ICTY Statute give the ICTY the power to prosecute grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (Article 2), violations of the laws or customs of war (Article 3), genocide (Article 4) and crimes against humanity (Article 5). Article 5 expressly states that the Tribunal has jurisdiction over such crimes "when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character".

47. Article 6 of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that the ICTY has jurisdiction over natural persons.

48. Article 7 of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that:

> 1. A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime.
> 2. The official position of any accused person, whether as Head of State or Government or as a responsible Government official, shall not relieve such person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment.

49. Article 20 of the 1994 ILC Draft Statute for an International Criminal Tribunal provides for the jurisdiction of an International Criminal Court with respect to the following crimes:

> (a) the crime of genocide;
> (b) the crime of aggression;
> (c) serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflict;
> (d) crimes against humanity;
> (e) crimes, established under or pursuant to the treaty provisions listed in the Annex, which, having regard to the conduct of the alleged, constitute exceptionally serious crimes of international concern.

50. The Annex to the 1994 ILC Draft Statute for an International Criminal Tribunal, entitled "Crimes pursuant to Treaties (see art. 20 (e))" refers, inter alia, to grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, AP I, the crimes defined by Article 2 of the 1973 Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, and the crime of torture made punishable by Article 4 of the 1984 Convention against Torture.

51. The 1994 ICTR Statute grants the Tribunal the power to prosecute persons accused of genocide (Article 2), crimes against humanity (Article 3), and serious violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of AP II (Article 4).

52. Article 5 of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that the ICTR shall have jurisdiction over natural persons.

53. Article 6 of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that:

1. A person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime.
2. The official position of any accused person, whether as Head of State or Government or as a responsible Government official, shall not relieve such person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment.

54. Section 20 of the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict provides that "in the event of breaches of rules of international humanitarian law protecting the environment, measures shall be taken to stop any such violation and to prevent further breaches . . . In serious cases, offenders shall be brought to justice."

55. Paragraph 30 of the 1994 CSCE Code of Conduct provides that "each participating State . . . will ensure that [armed forces personnel] are aware that they are individually accountable under national and international law for their actions".

56. Article 2 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Individual responsibility", provides that:

1. A crime against the peace and security of mankind entails individual responsibility.
   . . .
3. An individual shall be responsible for a crime set out in article 17, 18, 19 or 20 if that individual:
   (a) intentionally commits such a crime;
   . . .
   (d) knowingly aids, abets or otherwise assists, directly and substantially, in the commission of such a crime, including providing the means for its commission;
   (e) directly participates in planning or conspiring to commit such a crime which in fact occurs;

(f) directly and publicly incites another individual to commit such a crime which in fact occurs;
(g) attempts to commit such a crime by taking action commencing the execution of a crime which does not in fact occur because of circumstances independent of his intentions.

57. Article 7 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "the official position of an individual who commits a crime against the peace and security of mankind, even if he acted as head of State or Government, does not relieve him of criminal responsibility or mitigate punishment".

58. Article 16 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Crime of aggression", provides that "an individual who, as leader or organizer, actively participates in . . . the planning, preparation, initiation or waging of aggression committed by a State shall be responsible for a crime of aggression".

59. Section 4 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "in case of violations of international humanitarian law, members of the military personnel of a United Nations force are subject to prosecution in their national courts".

60. Section 1(1) and (2) of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 "on the establishment of panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences" establishes "panels of judges . . . within the District Court in Dili with exclusive jurisdiction to deal with serious criminal offences" and "panels within the Court of Appeal in Dili to hear and decide an appeal".

61. Section 1(3) of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 provides that:

[The panels of judges] . . . shall exercise jurisdiction in accordance with Section 10 of UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/11 and with the provisions of the present regulation with respect to the following serious criminal offences:
(a) Genocide;
(b) War Crimes;
(c) Crimes against Humanity;
(d) Murder;
(e) Sexual Offences; and
(f) Torture.

62. Section 14 of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 provides that:

14.1 The panels shall have jurisdiction over natural persons pursuant to the present regulation.
14.2 A person who commits a crime within the jurisdiction of the panels shall be individually responsible and liable for punishment in accordance with the present regulation.
14.3 In accordance with the present regulation, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the panels if that person:

(a) commits such a crime, whether as an individual, jointly with another or through another person, regardless of whether that other person is criminally responsible;
(b) orders, solicits or induces the commission of such a crime which in fact occurs or is attempted;
(c) for the purpose of facilitating the commission of such a crime, aids, abets or otherwise assists in its commission or its attempted commission, including providing the means for its commission;
(d) in any other way contributes to the commission or attempted commission of such a crime by a group of persons acting with a common purpose . . .
(e) in respect of the crime of genocide, directly and publicly incites others to commit genocide;
(f) attempts to commit such a crime by taking action that commences its execution by means of a substantial step, but the crime does not occur because of circumstances independent of the person's intentions. However, a person who abandons the effort to commit the crime or otherwise prevents the completion of the crime shall not be liable for punishment under the present regulation for the attempt to commit that crime if that person completely and voluntarily gave up the criminal purpose.

63. Article 58 of the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, entitled "Individual responsibility", states that "these articles are without prejudice to any question of the individual responsibility under international law of any person acting on behalf of a State".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

64. Argentina's Law of War Manual reiterates the provisions of the Geneva Conventions requiring States to take the necessary legislative measures to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing grave breaches.[2] It further notes that "offences under the laws of war do not constitute 'acts of war' and thus may be punished under the Military Penal Code or the Penal Code . . . All violations of the laws of war are offences which affect the international relations of the Nation and, as such, are subject to sanction."[3]

65. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "ADF members are open to prosecution for breaches of LOAC. Individual responsibility for compliance cannot be avoided and ignorance is not a justifiable excuse. ADF members will be held to account for any unlawful action that leads to a serious breach of LOAC."[4]

66. Australia's Defence Training Manual states that members of the ADF "are to be aware of the rules which, if violated, make an individual personally liable for breaches of LOAC".[5]

[2] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.02.
[3] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.05.
[4] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1306; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1207.
[5] Australia, Defence Training Manual (1994), § 8(d).

67. Benin's Military Manual provides that "the soldier shall know that respect for these rules [of the law of war] is a part of military discipline and that any violation will lead to disciplinary or criminal sanctions".[6]
68. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations provides that the violation of the rules of the law of war renders members of the armed forces war criminals, liable to prosecution under military jurisdiction.[7]
69. Canada's LOAC Manual states that "heads of state as well as members of the administration may be held personally and criminally responsible for illegalities committed in the performance of their official duties".[8] The manual further notes that "any person who planned, instigated, ... committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a war crime ... may be held criminally responsible for the crime".[9] It adds that "the official position of any accused person, whether as Head of State or as a responsible government official, does not relieve such person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment".[10]
70. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that "under the terms of Chapter IX of the First Geneva Convention relative to the repression of abuses and infractions, IHL establishes the principle of individual responsibility".[11]
71. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic tells soldiers: "If you violate any of the laws of war, you commit a crime and are subject to punishment under the ... laws and the Code of Military Justice".[12]
72. Ecuador's Naval Manual states that "acts constituting war crimes may be committed by the armed forces of a belligerent or by individuals belonging to the civilian population".[13]
73. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces provides that "nobody shall escape the law, when a violation of human rights has been committed".[14] It adds that "the committed violations shall not go unpunished".[15]
74. France's LOAC Manual states that "each individual is responsible for the violations of the law of armed conflict he has committed, whatever the circumstances".[16]
75. Germany's Military Manual provides that "each member of the armed forces who has violated the rules of international humanitarian law must be aware of the fact that he can be prosecuted according to penal or disciplinary provisions".[17] A commentary on the manual notes that:

[6] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 15.
[7] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 35.
[8] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 10.
[9] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-4, § 24.
[10] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-4, § 25.
[11] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 37.
[12] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 12.
[13] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5.
[14] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 16.
[15] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 17.
[16] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 113.
[17] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1207.

The Second Additional Protocol (AP II) does not mention grave breaches. Article 6 nevertheless regulates the prosecution and punishment of criminal offences connected with armed conflict. The AP II presumes application of domestic criminal law, whereby the domestic power of sentence is subordinate to the demands of the Protocol.[18]

76. Italy's IHL Manual states that individual criminal responsibility for those who commit a war crime is provided for under Italian law.[19]

77. The Military Manual of the Netherlands contains a provision entitled "Individual responsibility", which refers to the detailed provisions on the suppression and punishment of war crimes contained in the manual.[20]

78. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces provides that "nobody shall escape the law when a violation of human rights has been committed. There shall be no impunity when a violation of human rights has been committed."[21]

79. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "the conventions and protocols place specific obligations on individual members of the SANDF; breaches thereof may lead to personal liability".[22] It further states that "signatory States are required to treat as criminals under domestic law anyone who commits or orders a grave breach".[23]

80. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "each person is subject to personal responsibility for the acts he is committing in breach of the rules of armed conflicts and which are qualified as disciplinary offences, criminal offences or war crimes".[24]

81. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "individual servicemen also bear a responsibility for the observance of international humanitarian law".[25]

82. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "the violations of the laws and customs of war, commonly known as war crimes, engage the individual responsibility of those who committed them".[26]

83. Togo's Military Manual provides that "the soldier shall know that respect for these rules [of the law of war] is a part of military discipline and that any violation will lead to disciplinary or criminal sanctions".[27]

84. The UK LOAC Manual states that "although international law is aimed mainly at regulating the conduct of States and their Governments, individual combatants are required to comply with the law of armed conflict".[28]

[18] Rüdiger Wolfrum, "Enforcement of International Humanitarian Law", in Dieter Fleck (ed.), The Handbook of Humanitarian Law in Armed Conflicts, Oxford University Press, Oxford, 1995, p. 524.
[19] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 83.
[20] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-3.
[21] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), p. 21, see also p. 27.
[22] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 4.
[23] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 35.
[24] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.6.b.
[25] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 95.
[26] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 191.
[27] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 15.
[28] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 2, p. 7, § 7.

85. The US Field Manual states that:

Any person, whether a member of the armed forces or a civilian, who commits an act which constitutes a crime under international law is responsible therefor and liable to punishment. Such offences in connection with war comprise:
a. Crimes against peace.
b. Crimes against humanity.
c. War crimes.

Although this manual recognizes the criminal responsibility of individuals for those offences which may comprise any of the foregoing types of crimes, members of the armed forces will normally be concerned only with those offences constituting "war crimes".[29]

The manual also states that "conspiracy, direct incitement, and attempts to commit, as well as complicity in the commission of, crimes against peace, crimes against humanity, and war crimes are punishable".[30] After quoting the common articles of the Geneva Conventions on penal measures (Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV), the manual states that these provisions "are declaratory of the obligations of belligerents under customary international law to take measures for the punishment of war crimes committed by all persons, including members of a belligerent's own forces".[31] It adds that:

"Grave breaches" of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and other war crimes which are committed by enemy personnel or persons associated with the enemy are tried and punished by United States tribunals as violations of international law. If committed by persons subject to US military law, the "grave breaches" constitute acts punishable under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Moreover, most of the acts designated as "grave breaches" are, if committed within the United States, violations of domestic law over which the civil courts can exercise jurisdiction.[32]

86. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "combatants individually are responsible for following the law of armed conflict which obligates their nation".[33] It further states that "individual criminal responsibility is another mechanism to enforce the law of armed conflict".[34] The Pamphlet also contains a list of "acts [in addition to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949"] . . . representative of situations involving individual criminal responsibility".[35]

87. The US Soldier's Manual tells soldiers that "if you violate any of the laws of war, you commit a crime and are subject to punishment under US law, which includes the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ)".[36]

[29] US, Field Manual (1956), § 498. [30] US, Field Manual (1956), § 500.
[31] US, Field Manual (1956), § 506(b). [32] US, Field Manual (1956), § 506(c).
[33] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 1-4(d). [34] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-6.
[35] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-3(c). [36] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 26.

88. The US Naval Handbook provides that "acts constituting war crimes may be committed by the armed forces of a belligerent or by individuals belonging to the civilian population".[37]
89. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "parties to the conflict . . . are authorised and have the duty to invoke criminal responsibility" with respect to personnel of their own and enemy armed forces who commit violations of IHL.[38]

National Legislation
90. Numerous States have adopted instruments criminalising serious violations of IHL. This has been done in a number of ways. Because of their dualist approach to treaties, after ratifying the Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols, many States with a common-law tradition had to adopt implementing legislation, usually called Geneva Conventions Acts, to give national effect to these instruments and, in this implementing legislation, laid down the principle of criminal responsibility. Other States adopted provisions in their codes penalising the violations. Some States adopted specific legislation criminalising the violations.
91. Argentina's Penal Code provides that the penalty applied to the perpetrator of a crime shall also be applied to persons who cooperate with the perpetrator of the crime, which would not have taken place without such cooperation, and to those who "directly caused another person to commit the crime".[39]
92. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides for the introduction of the title "Offences against protected persons and objects in case of armed conflict" in the Code of Military Justice as amended.[40] This title provides for the punishment of specified prohibited acts "committed in the event of armed conflict".[41] As to this title's scope of application, the Draft Code states that:

[The present title applies to the following protected persons:]
1) The wounded, sick and shipwrecked and medical or religious personnel protected by [GC I and II or AP I];
2) Prisoners of war protected by [GC III or AP I];
3) The civilian population and [individual] civilian persons protected by [GC IV or AP I];
4) Persons hors de combat and the personnel of the protecting power and of its substitute, protected by [the Geneva Conventions or AP I];
5) Parlementaires and the persons accompanying them, protected by [the 1899 Hague Convention II];

[37] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[38] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 32.
[39] Argentina, Penal Code (1984), Article 45.
[40] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 287, introducing a new Title XVIII, Chapter I in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[41] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Articles 289–296, introducing new Articles 873–880 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).

6) Any other person [to which AP II] or any other international treaty to which Argentina is a party applies.[42]

The Draft Code further provides that:

A soldier who, at the occasion of an armed conflict, commits . . . any other violation or act contrary to the provisions of the international treaties to which Argentina is a party and relating to the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, the treatment of prisoners of war, the protection of civilian persons and the protection of cultural property in case of armed conflict, will be punished.[43]

93. In its Chapter 33 entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind", Armenia's Penal Code provides for the punishment of certain acts, committed during armed conflicts, which violate the laws and customs of war, including "Serious breaches of international humanitarian law during armed conflict", crimes against humanity and genocide.[44]

94. Australia's War Crimes Act as amended provides that:

A person who:
(a) on or after 1 September 1939 and on or before 8 May 1945; and
(b) whether as an individual or as a member of an organisation;

committed a war crime is guilty of an indictable offence against this Act.[45]

A "serious crime" constitutes a "war crime" when committed "in the course of hostilities in a war", "in the course of an occupation", "in pursuing a policy associated with the conduct of a war or with an occupation" or, "on behalf of, or in the interests of, a power conducting a war or engaged in an occupation". War itself is defined as "(a) a war, whether declared or not; (b) any other armed conflict between countries; or (c) a civil war or similar armed conflict (whether or not involving Australia or a country allied or associated with Australia) in so far as it occurred in Europe in the period beginning on 1 September 1939 and ending on 8 May 1945".[46]

95. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of Protocol I is guilty of an indictable offence".[47]

96. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act contains a list of acts qualified as "Genocide" (Sections 268.3–268.7), "Crimes against humanity"

[42] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 288, introducing a new Article 872 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[43] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 296, introducing a new Article 880 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[44] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Articles 383, 386–387 and 390–397.
[45] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Section 9(1).
[46] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Sections 5 and 7(1).
[47] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).

(Sections 268.8–268.23), "War crimes that are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions" (Sections 268.24–268.34), "Other serious war crimes that are committed in the course of an international armed conflict" (Sections 268.35–268.68), "War crimes that are serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and are committed in the course of an armed conflict that is not an international armed conflict" (Sections 268.69–268.76), "War crimes that are other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in an armed conflict that is not an international armed conflict" (Sections 268.77–268.94), "War crimes that are grave breaches of Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions" (Sections 268.95–268.101). The Act also includes the penalty to be imposed for each of these crimes.[48]

97. Under Austria's Penal Code, "not only the immediate perpetrator commits a crime, but also anybody who is instigating another to commit a crime, as well as anybody who makes any contribution to somebody else's criminal act".[49]

98. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War is applicable "in case Azerbaijan is a participant of intergovernmental armed conflict (war) or in case of internal armed conflict in its territory, between Azerbaijan Republic and two or more parties, even if one of these parties does not confirm the existence of such a conflict" and provides for the protection of civilian persons, POWs, the wounded and the sick as well as the missing and the dead. It states that "for the violation of the provisions of this law, accused persons are subject to disciplinary, administrative or criminal liability in accordance with the legislation of Azerbaijan Republic".[50]

99. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides for punishment, inter alia, in case of war crimes (Article 57). In the chapter entitled "War crimes", the Code contains further provisions criminalising: the use of "mercenaries" (Article 114); "violations of [the] laws and customs of war" (Article 115); "violations of the norms of international humanitarian law in time of armed conflict" (Article 116); "negligence or giving criminal orders in time of armed conflict" (Article 117); "pillage" (Article 118); and "abuse of protected signs" (Article 119).[51]

100. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act provides that:

> The following acts or any of them are crimes within the jurisdiction of a Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility, namely: –
> (a) Crimes against humanity . . .
> (b) Crimes against peace . . .
> (c) Genocide . . .
> (d) War Crimes . . .
> (e) violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

[48] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Sections 268.3–268.101.
[49] Austria, Penal Code (1974), Article 12.
[50] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 1 and 31.
[51] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 57 and 114–119.

(f) any other crimes under international law;
(g) attempt, abatement or conspiracy to commit any such crimes;
(h) complicity in or failure to prevent commission of any such crimes.[52]

101. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that:

(1) A grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 that would, if committed in Barbados, be an offence under any law of Barbados, constitutes an offence under that law when committed outside Barbados.
(2) A person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished.[53]

102. The Criminal Code of Belarus, in a chapter entitled "War crimes and other violations of the laws and customs of war", provides, inter alia, for the punishment of specified acts, such as "mercenary activities" (Article 133), "use of weapons of mass destruction" (Article 134), "violations of the laws and customs of war" (Article 135), "criminal offences against the norms of international humanitarian law during armed conflicts" (Article 136), or "abuse of signs protected by international treaties" (Article 138).[54]

103. Article 1 of Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides a list of punishable acts or omissions ("grave breaches") committed against persons protected by the Geneva Conventions and both AP I and AP II.[55] The 1993 law was amended in 1999 to expand the range of crimes to which it applied. Since then, the crime of genocide and crimes against humanity also constitute punishable crimes under this Law.[56]

104. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina contains provisions regarding the punishment of certain acts, some of them committed "in time of war or armed conflict", such as: "war crimes against civilians" (Article 154); "war crimes against the wounded and sick" (Article 155); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 156); "organizing a group and instigating the commission of genocide and war crimes" (Article 157); "unlawful killing or wounding of the enemy" (Article 158); "marauding" (Article 159); "using forbidden means of warfare" (Article 160); "violating the protection granted to bearers of flags of truce" (Article 161); "cruel treatment of the wounded, sick and prisoners of war" (Article 163); "destruction of cultural and historical monuments" (Article 164); and "misuse of international emblems" (Article 166).[57] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provisions.[58]

[52] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2).
[53] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(1) and (2).
[54] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 132–138.
[55] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3).
[56] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(1) and (2).
[57] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 154–161 and 163–166.
[58] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433–445.

105. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the scheduled conventions as is referred to in the following articles respectively of those conventions, that is to say [Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV] shall be guilty of an offence and [be punished].[59]

106. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of a list of specified acts entitled "Crimes against the laws and customs of waging war".[60]

107. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that:

Whosoever conceives, plans, plots, orders, instigates to commit, attempts to commit or commits one of the infringements aimed at in articles 2, 3 and 4 respectively of this law [i.e. genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes] is guilty of a crime of genocide, a crime against humanity [and/or] a war crime.[61]

War Crimes are defined as the grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, "other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable to international armed conflicts" "serious violations of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions" or "other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable to armed conflicts not of an international character".[62]

108. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that:

Any Suspect who planned, instigated, ordered, aided and abetted, or committed the crimes referred to in Articles 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of this law shall be individually responsible for the crime.

The position or rank of any Suspect shall not relieve such person of criminal responsibility or mitigate punishment.

The Articles referred to deal with "any of the crimes set forth in the 1956 Penal Code", such as: homicide, torture and religious persecution (Article 3); genocide (Article 4); crimes against humanity (Article 5); grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (Article 6); destruction of cultural property during armed conflict pursuant to the 1954 Hague Convention (Article 7); and crimes against internationally protected persons as set forth in the Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons (Article 8), all of these acts having been committed during the period from 1975 to 1979.[63]

109. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach referred

[59] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[60] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 410–415.
[61] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 5.
[62] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4.
[63] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 29.

to in Article 50 [GC I], Article 51 [GC II], Article 130 [GC III], Article 147 [GC IV] or Article 11 or 85 [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence and [is liable to punishment]".[64]

110. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act states that for offences within Canada, "every person is guilty of an indictable offence who commits (a) genocide; (b) a crime against humanity; or (c) a war crime".[65] It also states that "every person who, either before or after coming into force of this section, commits outside Canada (a) genocide, (b) a crime against humanity, or (c) a war crime is guilty of an indictable offence and may be prosecuted".[66] It further adds that "war crime means an act or omission committed during an armed conflict that... constitutes a war crime according to customary international law or conventional international law applicable to armed conflicts" and it specifies that the crimes described in Articles 6, 7 and 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law".[67]

111. Chile's Code of Military Justice, under the heading "Offences against international law", provides, inter alia, for the punishment of certain war crimes.[68]

112. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals contains a list of punishable offences such as war crimes.[69]

113. Colombia's Penal Code, under the heading "Crimes against persons and objects protected by international humanitarian law", contains a list of provisions concerning the punishment of specified crimes committed "in the event and during an armed conflict". The persons protected are: the civilians, the persons not taking part in the hostilities and the civilians in the power of the adverse party, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked placed hors de combat, the combatants who have laid down their arms, because of capture, surrender, or any similar reason, the persons considered as stateless or refugees before the beginning of the conflict, and the persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I and AP II.[70]

114. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended contains provisions for the punishment of a list of offences such as war crimes which are applicable "in time of war or in an area where a state of siege or a state of emergency has been proclaimed".[71]

115. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act provides for the punishment of the authors and perpetrators of acts such as:

[64] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[65] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 4(1).
[66] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 6.
[67] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 4(3) and (4).
[68] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Articles 261–264.
[69] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3.
[70] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Articles 135–164.
[71] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Articles 436, 455, 472 and 522–526.

a) grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions ...
b) other grave breaches of the laws and customs applicable to international armed conflicts in the scope established by international law;
c) grave breaches of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions ...
d) and other grave breaches recognized as applicable to armed conflicts which are not of an international character, within the scope established by international law.[72]

116. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands, referring to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III, 147 GC IV and Articles 11(4) and 85(2), (3) and (4) AP I, provides that "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an offence".[73]

117. Costa Rica's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of offences such as acts of genocide and "other punishable acts against human rights and international humanitarian law, provided for in the treaties adhered to by Costa Rica or in this Code".[74] Under another provision entitled "War crimes", it also provides for the punishment of:

Whoever, in the event of an armed conflict, commits or orders to be committed acts which can be qualified as grave breaches or war crimes, in conformity with the provisions of international treaties to which Costa Rica is a party, regarding the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, the treatment of prisoners of war, the protection of civilian persons and the protection of cultural property, [applicable] in cases of armed conflict, and under any other instrument of international humanitarian law.[75]

The Penal Code as amended further provides for the punishment of crimes against humanity.[76]

118. Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, in a chapter dealing with offences against the law of nations, provides for the punishment of certain acts committed "in time of war or occupation", such as "crimes against the civilian population (Article 138) and "crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 139). It further provides for the punishment of the illegal use of distinctive signs and emblems (Article 473).[77]

119. Croatia's Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Criminal offences against values protected by international law", provides for a list of punishable acts committed by "whoever" and some of them "during war, armed conflict (or occupation)", such as: "war crimes against the civilian population" (Article 158);

[72] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Articles 4, 5, 10 and 11.
[73] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[74] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 7.
[75] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 378.
[76] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 379.
[77] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Articles 138–139 and 473.

"war crimes against the wounded and sick" (Article 159); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 160); "unlawful killing and wounding of the enemy" (Article 161); "unlawful taking of the belongings of those killed or wounded on the battlefield" (Article 162); "forbidden means of combat" (Article 163); "injury of an intermediary" (Article 164); "brutal treatment of the wounded, sick and prisoners of war" (Article 165); "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" (Article 166); "destruction of cultural objects or of facilities containing cultural objects" (Article 167); and "misuse of international symbols" (Article 168).[78]

120. Cuba's Military Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Offences committed during combat actions", provides for the punishment of certain acts such as: "mistreatment of prisoners of war" (Article 42); "plundering" (Article 43); "violence against the population of the area of military activities" (Article 44); and "prohibited use of banners or symbols of the Red Cross" (Article 45).[79]

121. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act, referring to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV, provides that:

> Any person who, in spite of nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any serious violation or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of serious violations of the Geneva Conventions . . . shall be guilty of an offence and in case of conviction . . . be liable [to punishment].[80]

122. Cyprus's AP I Act provides that:

> Any person who, in spite of nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic any serious violation of the provisions of [AP I], or takes part or assists or incites another person in the commission of such a violation, shall be guilty of an offence and in case of conviction . . . be liable [to punishment].[81]

123. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended, under the heading "Crimes against humanity", provides for the punishment of certain offences such as: "genocide" (Article 259); "torture and other inhuman and cruel treatment" (Article 259a); "use of a forbidden weapon or an unpermitted form of combat" (Article 262); "wartime cruelty" (Article 263); "persecution of a population" (Article 263a); "plunder in a theatre of war" (Article 264); and "misuse of internationally recognised insignia and state insignia" (Article 265).[82]

124. The Code of Military Justice of the Dominican Republic provides for the punishment of a soldier who infringes certain rules of the LOAC, notably against prisoners of war, hospitals, temples or parlementaires.[83]

[78] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158–168.
[79] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Articles 42–45.
[80] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).
[81] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1).
[82] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 259–259(a) and 262–265.
[83] Dominican Republic, Code of Military Justice (1953), Article 201.

125. El Salvador's Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of various offences committed "in time of international or civil war", such as arson, destruction of property, plundering of inhabitants or acts of violence against persons (Article 68). It also provides for the punishment of other acts committed "in time of international war", including offences against prisoners of war, attacks on medical units, transports or personnel, abuse of the red cross, destruction of cultural property, offences against parlementaires (Article 69), despoliation of the wounded or prisoners (Article 70), despoliation of the dead (Article 71), and unnecessary requisition of buildings and objects (Article 72).[84]

126. El Salvador's Penal Code provides for the punishment of acts of "Genocide" (Article 361), "Violations of the laws and customs of war" committed "during an international or a civil war" (Article 362), "Violations of the duties of humanity" (Article 363), and "Enforced disappearance of persons" (Article 364).[85]

127. The Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador provide for the punishment of a list of crimes committed during an international or internal armed conflict.[86]

128. Estonia's Penal Code provides that the author of crimes against humanity (paragraph 89), genocide (paragraph 90), crimes against peace (paragraphs 91–93) or war crimes (paragraphs 94–109) shall be punished.[87] It further provides that:

> (1) Offences committed in times of war which are not provided for under this section [dealing with war crimes] are punishable on the basis of other provisions of the special part of this Code.
> (2) A person who has committed an offence provided for under this section shall be punished only for the commission of a war crime even if the offence comprises the necessary elements of other offences provided for in the special part of this Code.[88]

129. Ethiopia's Penal Code, under the heading "Offences against the law of nations", provides for a list of punishable acts committed by "whosoever" such as: "war crimes against the civilian population" (Article 282); "war crimes against wounded, sick or shipwrecked persons" (Article 283); "war crimes against prisoners and interned persons" (Article 284); "pillage, piracy and looting" (Article 285); "provocation and preparation [of the above-mentioned acts]" (Article 286); "dereliction of duty towards the enemy" (Article 287); "use of illegal means of combat" (Article 288); "maltreatment of, or dereliction of duty towards, wounded, sick or prisoners" (Article 291); "denial of justice" (Article 292); "hostile acts against international humanitarian organizations" (Article 293); "abuse of international emblems and insignia" (Article 294); and

[84] El Salvador, Code of Military Justice (1934), Articles 68–72.
[85] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Articles 361–364.
[86] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Title XIX.
[87] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), §§ 89–109.
[88] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 94.

"hostile acts against the bearer of a flag of truce" (Article 295). Some of these provisions specify that the acts concerned be committed "in time of war, armed conflict (or occupation)" and/or "in violation of the rules of public international law".[89] According to the Report on the Practice of Ethiopia, acts which constitute "war crimes in the context of [an] international armed conflict would also be crimes in the context of [an] internal armed conflict".[90]

130. In 1992, the transitional government of Ethiopia adopted the Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation which provides that:

> Whereas . . . it is essential that higher officials of the WPE and members of the security and armed forces who have been detained at the time the EPRDF assumed control of the Country and thereafter and who are suspected of having committed offences . . . must be brought to trial;
> . . .
> Whereas it is necessary to provide for the establishment of a Special Public Prosecutor's Office that shall conduct prompt investigation and bring to trial detainees as well as those persons who are responsible for having committed offences and are at large both within and without the Country;
> Now therefore . . . it is hereby proclaimed as follows:
> . . .
> The Special Public Prosecutor's Office . . . is hereby established.
> . . .
> The Office shall, in accordance with the law, have the power to conduct investigation and institute proceedings in respect of any person having committed or responsible for the commission of an offence by abusing his position in the party, the government or mass organization under the Dergue-WPE regime.[91]

131. Finland's Revised Penal Code contains a chapter entitled "War crimes and crimes against humanity" and therein provides for the punishment of individuals who commit acts listed under the chapter. In some of the provisions in this chapter the Revised Penal Code specifies that the acts be committed "in an act of war" (Section 1) or punishes "violations of human rights in a state of emergency", defined as violations of "the rules on the protection of the wounded, the sick or the distressed, the treatment of prisoners of war and the protection of the civilian population, which . . . are to be followed during war, armed conflict or occupation" (Section 4).[92]

132. France's Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes provides for the prosecution of certain persons having committed specific acts from the opening of hostilities.[93]

[89] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Articles 282–288 and 291–295.
[90] Report on the Practice of Ethiopia, 1998, Chapter 6.4.
[91] Ethiopia, Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation (1992), preamble and Articles 2(1) and 6.
[92] Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Sections 1–4.
[93] France, Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes (1944), Article 1.

133. France's Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of acts of pillage (Articles 427 and 428) and illegal use, in times of war, of "distinctive signs and emblems defined by international conventions" (Article 439).[94]
134. France's Penal Code provides for the punishment of a list of certain acts such as genocide and crimes against humanity and also provides for a special provision in case such crimes are committed "in times of war".[95]
135. France's Laws on Cooperation with the ICTY and with the ICTR provide for the punishment of authors and accomplices of serious violations of IHL.[96]
136. Georgia's Criminal Code, in a part entitled "Crimes against peace and security of mankind and international humanitarian law", provides a list of punishable offences such as: "genocide" (Article 407); "crimes against humanity" (Article 408); "mercenaries" (Article 410); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in armed conflict" (Article 411); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in international or internal armed conflict with the threat to health or causing bodily injury" (Article 412); and "other breaches of norms of international humanitarian law" (Article 413), the latter including "any other war crime provided for in the [1998 ICC Statute]".[97] For some of these offences, the Code specifies that the acts be committed "in an international or internal armed conflict".[98]
137. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides for the punishment of, inter alia, genocide (Article 1, paragraph 6), crimes against humanity (Article 1, paragraph 7) and war crimes, including "War crimes against persons" (Article 1, paragraph 8), "War crimes against property and other rights" (Article 1, paragraph 9), "War crimes against humanitarian operations and emblems" (Article 1, paragraph 10), "War crimes consisting in the use of prohibited methods of warfare" (Article 1, paragraph 11) and "War crimes consisting in employment of prohibited means of warfare" (Article 1, paragraph 12).[99] Some of these crimes must be punished when committed "in connection with an international armed conflict or with an armed conflict not of an international character", some others when committed "in connection with an international armed conflict".[100]
138. Guatemala's Penal Code provides for the punishment of certain war crimes, namely those committed against prisoners of war, the civilian population and certain objects.[101]

[94] France, Code of Military Justice (1982), Articles 427, 428 and 439.
[95] France, Penal Code (1994), Articles 211(1)–212(3).
[96] France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995), Article 2; Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1996), Article 2.
[97] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 407–408 and 410–413.
[98] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 411–412.
[99] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, §§ 6–12.
[100] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, §§ 8(1)–(2), 9(1), 10(1)–(2), 11(1)–(2) and 12 (international and non-international armed conflict); Article 1, §§ 8(3), 9(2) and 11(3) (international armed conflict).
[101] Guatemala, Penal Code (1973), Article 378.

139. Guinea's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of certain acts constitutive of violations of IHL, such as pillage, the despoliation of the dead, wounded, sick and shipwrecked in a zone of military operations and the use, in an area of military operations and in violation of the laws and customs of war, of distinctive insignia or emblems defined under international conventions.[102]
140. Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, under the title "Crimes against humanity", provides for the punishment of a list of certain acts including genocide and war crimes, such as "Violence against the civilian population" (Article 158), "War-time looting" (Article 159), "Wanton warfare" (Article 160), "Use of weapons prohibited by international treaty" (Article 160/A), "Battlefield looting" (Article 161), "Violence against a war emissary" (Article 163) and "Misuse of the red cross" (Article 164), some of them when committed "in an operational or occupied area" or "violating the rules of the international law of warfare".[103]
141. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions, he shall be punished".[104]
142. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

> Any person, whatever his or her nationality, who, whether in or outside the State, commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or Protocol I shall be guilty of an offence and on conviction on indictment [be liable to punishment].[105]

The Act also provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, in the State, commits, or aids, or abets or procures the commission in the State by any other person of any other minor breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of Protocol I or Protocol II shall be guilty of an offence.
> ...
> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, outside the State, commits, or aids, or abets or procures the commission outside the State by any other person of any other minor breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of Protocol I or Protocol II shall be guilty of an offence.
> Any person who is guilty of an offence under this section shall be liable [to punishment].[106]

143. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law provides that:

> A person who has committed one of the following offences –

[102] Guinea, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 569, 570 and 579.
[103] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Sections 155–165.
[104] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3.
[105] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3.
[106] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4.

(1) done, during the period of the Nazi régime, in an enemy country, an act constituting a crime against the Jewish people;
(2) done, during the period of the Nazi régime, in an enemy country, an act constituting a crime against humanity;
(3) done, during the period of the Second World War, in an enemy country, an act constituting a war crime, is liable to the death penalty.[107]

144. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of a list of various offences related to wartime activity.[108]
145. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, in a part entitled "War crimes", provides for the punishment of a series of offences "committed in time of armed conflicts".[109]
146. Kazakhstan's Penal Code, in a special part entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind", provides for the punishment of a list of acts such as: "the use of prohibited means and methods of warfare" in an armed conflict (Article 159); "genocide" (Article 160); "ecocide" (Article 161); "mercenaries" (Article 162); and "attacks against persons or organisations beneficiaries of an international protection" (Article 163).[110]
147. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the Conventions such as is referred to in the following Articles [i.e. Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV] is guilty of an offence and [shall be sentenced].[111]

148. Kyrgyzstan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of persons committing acts such as: "intentional destruction of historical and cultural monuments" (Article 172); "capture of hostages" (Article 224); "ecocide" (Article 374); the participation of mercenaries "in an armed conflict or in hostilities" (Article 375); and "attacks against persons or institutions under international protection" (Article 376).[112]
149. Latvia's Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and peace, war crimes and genocide", provides for the punishment of persons who commit certain offences such as "genocide" (Section 71), "war crimes" (Section 74), "pillage" (Section 76) and "destruction of cultural and national heritage" (Section 79).[113]

[107] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(a).
[108] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Articles 167–230.
[109] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41.
[110] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Articles 156–164.
[111] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3.
[112] Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 172, 224 and 374–376.
[113] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Sections 71–79.

150. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon provide for the punishment of persons committing acts listed under a new article 146 on war crimes. Referring to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I, this article should be incorporated under new section 7 entitled "Offences against persons and objects protected under the Geneva Conventions applicable in time of armed conflicts".[114]

151. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, in a chapter entitled "War crimes", contains a list of punishable offences. Some of these offences are to be punished when committed in "violation of humanitarian law in time of war, during an international armed conflict or occupation". Some others are to be punished when committed "in time of war, during an armed conflict or occupation".[115]

152. Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes provides for the prosecution and sentencing of non-nationals of Luxembourg who have committed war crimes, "if such infringements have been committed at the occasion or under the pretext of war and if they are not justified by the laws and customs of war".[116] It also provides for the prosecution, as co-authors or accomplices, of persons who, "without being superiors in rank of the principal authors, have aided those crimes or offences".[117]

153. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides for the punishment of perpetrators of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions as well as of persons who build, hold or transport instruments or other devices in the knowledge that they are intended to be used in the commission of a grave breach.[118] It also provides for the punishment of persons who, "without being superiors in rank of the principal authors, have aided those crimes or offences".[119]

154. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person of any such grave breach of any of the Conventions as is referred to in [Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV] shall without prejudice to his liability under any other written law be guilty of an offence and [be liable to imprisonment].[120]

155. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person

[114] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146.
[115] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 333–344.
[116] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 1.
[117] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 3.
[118] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Articles 1–3.
[119] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 5.
[120] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).

of any such grave breach of [Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV], shall be guilty of an offence and on conviction thereof [be punished].[121]

156. Mali's Penal Code provides for the punishment of the perpetrators of certain crimes such as "crimes against humanity" (Article 29), "genocide" (Article 30) and a list of "war crimes" covering the grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict (Article 31).[122]

157. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius provides that:

Any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions shall commit an offence . . . Any person who commits an offence against this section shall, on conviction, be liable [to punishment].[123]

158. Mexico's Penal Code as amended, under the heading "Offences against the duties of humanity", provides for the punishment of a number of offences committed against certain protected persons and objects.[124]

159. Mexico's Code of Military Justice, under the headings "Crimes against the laws of nations" and "Crimes committed in the exercise of military duties or in relation to them", provides for the punishment of perpetrators of a number of offences related to war operations.[125] Under a separate provision, the Code also provides that "those who immediately commit any act of murder, physical injury or damage to property outside the fighting will be held responsible".[126]

160. Moldova's Penal Code contains provisions which provide for the punishment of perpetrators of certain acts such as: "abusive use of the emblem and signs of the Red Cross and the Red Crescent" (Article 217); "violence against the civilian population in areas of military operations" (Article 268); "bad treatment of prisoners of war" (Article 269); and "illegal wearing and abusive use of signs of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in areas of military action" (Article 270).[127]

161. Moldova's Penal Code provides for the punishment of certain offences such as "genocide" (Article 135), "ecocide" (Article 136), "inhuman treatments" (Article 137), "violations of international humanitarian law" committed "during an armed conflict or hostilities" (Article 138), "mercenary activity . . . in an armed conflict or military hostilities" (Article 141), "use of prohibited means and methods of warfare . . . during an armed conflict" (Article 143), "unlawful use of the red cross signs" (Article 363), "pillage of the dead on the battlefield" (Article 389), "acts of violence against the civilian population in

[121] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[122] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Articles 29–31.
[123] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3.
[124] Mexico, Penal Code as amended (1931), Article 149.
[125] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Articles 208–215 and 324–337.
[126] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Article 222.
[127] Moldova, Penal Code (1961), Articles 217 and 268–270.

the area of military hostilities" (Article 390), "grave breaches of international humanitarian law . . . committed during international and internal armed conflicts" (Article 391) and "perfidious use of the red cross emblem as a protective sign during armed conflict" (Article 392).[128]

162. Mozambique's Military Criminal Law provides for the punishment of persons committing crimes listed thereunder, some of them when committed "in an armed confrontation [and in violation of] generally accepted international rules" or "in times of war" and/or "in the theatre of operations".[129]

163. The Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended of the Netherlands establishes provisions "concerning offences committed in the event of war and their prosecution", expressly stating that the term "war" shall include civil war.[130]

164. The International Crimes Act of the Netherlands provides for the punishment of: "anyone who commits any of the crimes defined in this Act outside the Netherlands, if the suspect is present in the Netherlands . . . [or] if the crime is committed against a Dutch national; [or] any Dutch national who commits any of the crimes defined in this Act outside the Netherlands." The crimes defined in the Act are genocide (Article 3), crimes against humanity (Article 4), war crimes committed in international armed conflicts (Article 5) or non-international armed conflicts (Article 6), and torture (Article 8). The Act also punishes "anyone who, in the case of an international or non-international armed conflict, commits a violation of the laws and customs of war other than as referred to in Articles 5 and 6".[131]

165. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[132]

166. New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act provides that "every person is liable on conviction on indictment to the penalty specified in subsection (3) who, in New Zealand or elsewhere, commits a war crime". The Act includes similar provisions with respect to genocide and crimes against humanity. War crimes, genocide and crimes against humanity are defined as the acts specified in the 1998 ICC Statute.[133]

167. Nicaragua's Military Penal Law provides for the punishment of persons who commit "mistreatment of prisoners of war (Article 80), "looting" (Article 81), "abuses at the occasion of military activities" (Article 82) and "unlawful use of the symbols of the Red Cross" (Article 83).[134]

168. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code, under the headings "Crimes against international humanitarian law" and "Specific crimes against the laws and [128] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Articles 135–138, 141, 143, 363 and 389–392.

[129] Mozambique, Military Criminal Law (1987), Articles 83–89.
[130] Netherlands, Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended (1952), preamble and Article 1(3).
[131] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 2(1) and 3–8.
[132] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[133] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Sections 9–11.
[134] Nicaragua, Military Penal Law (1980), Articles 80–83.

customs of war", provides for the punishment of certain offences. Article 47, which is subsidiary to the other articles dealing with violations of IHL, punishes any "military who, during an international or civil war commits serious violations of the international conventions ratified by Nicaragua".[135]

169. Nicaragua's Revised Penal Code provides for the punishment of "anyone who, during an international or a civil war, commits serious violations of the international conventions relating to the use of prohibited weapons, the treatment of prisoners and other norms related to war".[136]

170. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code, in a part entitled "Crimes against the international order", provides for the punishment of a list of offences, for most of which it is specifies that they be committed "at the occasion", "in times of" and/or "during" an international or internal armed conflict.[137]

171. Niger's Penal Code as amended, in a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and war crimes", provides for the punishment of a list of offences such as genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes defined as serious offences against the persons and objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, AP I and AP II.[138]

172. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if, whether in or outside the Federation, any person, whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva Conventions]... he shall, on conviction thereof, [be punished]".[139]

173. Norway's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of "anyone who uses a weapon or means of combat which is prohibited by any international agreement to which Norway has acceded, or who is accessory thereto". It also provides for the punishment of:

> anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in > a) the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 concerning the amelioration of the conditions of the wounded and sick in armed forces in the field, the amelioration of the conditions of wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of armed forces at sea, the treatment of prisoners of war, and the protection of civilian persons in time of war, > b) the two additional protocols to these conventions of 10 June 1977.[140]
>

174. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions is guilty of an offence".[141]

[135] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Articles 47–61.
[136] Nicaragua, Revised Penal Code (1997), Article 551.
[137] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Articles 444–472.
[138] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.1–208.8.
[139] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[140] Norway, Military Penal Code (1902), Articles 107–108.
[141] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).

175. Paraguay's Military Penal Code, under the heading "Provisions with regard to times of war", contains a list of offences for which it provides punishment.[142]

176. Paraguay's Penal Code provides for the punishment of offences such as "torture" (Article 309), "genocide" (Article 319) and a list of "war crimes" (Article 320), specifying with respect to "war crimes" that they be committed "in violation of international laws of war, armed conflict or military occupation".[143]

177. Peru's Code of Military Justice, in a part entitled "Violations of the law of nations", provides for the punishment of a list of offences, specifying that some of them be committed "in times of war".[144]

178. The War Crimes Trial Executive Order of the Philippines provides for the punishment of offenders having committed certain acts, including "violations of the laws and customs of war" and other more specified acts committed "before or during the war . . . whether or not in violation of the local laws".[145]

179. Poland's Penal Code, in a special part entitled "Offences against peace, humanity and war offences", provides for the punishment of certain acts, some of them when committed "during hostilities" or "in violation of international law", such as internationally prohibited acts against certain specific protected persons – including persons "who, during hostilities, enjoy international protection" – and objects, as well as the use of means or methods of combat prohibited by international law.[146]

180. Portugal's Penal Code, under the headings "War crimes against civilians" and "Destruction of monuments", provides for the punishment of certain offences committed "in times of war, of armed conflict or occupation".[147]

181. Romania's Law on the Punishment of War Criminals provides for the punishment of more precisely defined "criminals of war".[148]

182. Romania's Penal Code, in provisions entitled "[Unlawful] use of the emblem of the Red Cross" (Article 294), "Use of the emblem of the Red Cross during military operations" (Article 351), "Inhuman treatment" (Article 358) and "Destruction of objects and appropriation of property" (Article 359), provides for the punishment of offences listed thereunder, stating for some of those offences that they be committed "in times of war and in relation with military operations" or "in times of war".[149]

183. Russia's Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals states that:

[142] Paraguay, Military Penal Code (1980), Articles 282–296.
[143] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Articles 309 and 319–320.
[144] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Articles 91–96.
[145] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), § II(b)(2) and (3).
[146] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Articles 117–126.
[147] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Articles 241–242.
[148] Romania, Law on the Punishment of War Criminals (1945), Articles I and III.
[149] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Articles 294, 351 and 358–359.

The peoples of the Soviet Union that suffered losses during the war cannot let fascist barbarians go unpunished. The Soviet State has always proceeded from the universally recognised rules of international law that provide for the inevitable prosecution of Nazi criminals, no matter where and for how long they have been hiding from justice.[150]

It also provides that "Nazi criminals, guilty of most serious crimes against peace and humanity and war crimes, are subject to prosecution and punishment".[151]

184. Russia's Criminal Code provides that "persons who have committed crimes shall . . . be held criminally responsible".[152] In a chapter entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind" and under a provision entitled "Use of banned means and methods of warfare", the Code provides for the punishment of "cruel treatment of prisoners of war, deportation of the civilian population, plunder of the national property in the occupied territory and use in a military conflict of means and methods of warfare banned by [international treaties to which Russia is a party]".[153] The Code further provides for the punishment of offences such as genocide, ecocide, use of, and participation by, mercenaries in an armed conflict or hostilities and assaults on persons or institutions enjoying international protection.[154]

185. Rwanda's Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions aims:

to organize the putting on trial of persons prosecuted for having, between 1 October 1990 and 31 December 1994, committed acts qualified and punished by the Penal Code and which constitute:

a) . . . crimes of genocide or crimes against humanity as defined by the [1948 Genocide Convention], by the [1949 GC IV and the 1977 Additional Protocols], as well as in the [1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity].[155]

It further provides that:

Following acts of participation in offences in question in Article one of this organic law and committed between 1 October 1990 and 31 December 1994, the prosecuted person can be classified in one of the following categories:

Category 1:

a) The person whose criminal acts or criminal participation place among planners, organisers, incitators, supervisors of the crime of genocide or crime against humanity;
b) The person who, acting in a position of authority at the national, provincial or district level, within political parties, army, religious denominations or militia, has committed these offences or encouraged others to commit them;

[150] Russia, Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals (1965), preamble.
[151] Russia, Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals (1965).
[152] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 4.
[153] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 356.
[154] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Articles 357–360.
[155] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 1.

c) The well-known murderer who distinguished himself in the location where he lived or wherever he passed, because of zeal which has characterised him in killings or excessive wickedness with which they were carried out;
d) The person who has committed rape or acts of torture against person's sexual parts.
...

Category 2:
a) The person whose criminal acts or criminal participation place among authors, co-authors or accomplices of deliberate homicides or serious attacks against persons which caused death.
b) The person who, with intention of giving death, has caused injuries or committed other serious violence, but from which the victims have not died.

Category 3:
The person who has committed criminal acts or has become accomplice of serious attacks, without the intention of causing death to victims.
Category 4:
The person having committed offences against assets.[156]

The Law adds that:

The persons in the position of authority at the level of Sector or Cell at the time of genocide are classified in the category corresponding to offences they have committed, but their quality of leaders expose them to the most severe penalty for the defendants who are in the same category.[157]

Moreover, the Law provides that "for the implementation of this organic law, the accomplice is the person who will have, by any means, assisted to commit offences to persons referred to in Article 51 of this organic law".[158]

186. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions ... is guilty of an offence and ... shall on conviction [be punished].[159]

187. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [of the Geneva Conventions] shall be guilty of an offence under this Act and on conviction thereof ... [be punished].[160]

188. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended, under the heading "Crimes against humanity", provides for the punishment of certain offences such as: "genocide"

[156] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 51.
[157] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 52.
[158] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 53(1).
[159] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[160] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).

(Article 259); "torture and other inhuman and cruel treatment" (Article 259a); "use of a forbidden weapon or an unpermitted form of combat" (Article 262); "wartime cruelty" (Article 263); "persecution of a population" (Article 263a); "plunder in a theatre of war" (Article 264); and "misuse of internationally recognised insignia and state insignia" (Article 265).[161]

189. Slovenia's Penal Code, in a chapter entitled "Criminal offences against humanity and international law", provides for a list of punishable acts committed by "whoever" and some of them "during war, armed conflict (or occupation)", such as: "war crimes against the civilian population" (Article 374); "war crimes against the wounded and sick" (Article 375); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 376); "use of unlawful weapons" (Article 377); "unlawful killing and wounding of the enemy" (Article 379); "unlawful plundering on the battlefield" (Article 380); "infringement of the rights of parlementaires" (Article 381); "maltreatment of the sick and wounded, and of prisoners of war" (Article 382); "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" (Article 383); "destruction of cultural and historical monuments and natural sites" (Article 384); and "abuse of international symbols" (Article 386).[162]

190. Under Spain's Law on Judicial Power, Spanish criminal courts have jurisdiction over offences committed by Spanish nationals and aliens, on Spanish territory or outside it, which constitute genocide or any other offence that, according to international treaties or conventions, must be prosecuted in Spain.[163]

191. Spain's Military Criminal Code contains a part on "Crimes against the laws and customs of war" and provides for the punishment of soldiers committing acts listed thereunder.[164]

192. Spain's Penal Code contains chapters entitled "Genocide" and "Offences against protected persons and objects in the event of armed conflict" and provides for the punishment of offences listed thereunder. Protected persons in the meaning of the latter are those protected by the Geneva Conventions and both Additional Protocols, as well as those falling within the scope of "whatever other international treaty to which Spain is a party". The chapter contains several provisions regarding the punishment of certain acts "committed in the event of an armed conflict".[165]

193. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> A person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any person to commit,
>
> (a) a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions; or
> (b) a breach of common Article 3 of the [Geneva] Conventions
>
> is guilty of an indictable offence.[166]

[161] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 259–259(a) and 262–265.
[162] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 374–386.
[163] Spain, Law on Judicial Power (1985), Article 23(4).
[164] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Articles 69–78.
[165] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Articles 607–614.
[166] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Article 3(1).

It further provides that such a person "is liable to [punishment]".[167]

194. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of "a person guilty of a serious violation of a treaty or agreement with a foreign power or an infraction of a generally recognised principle or tenet relating to international humanitarian law concerning armed conflicts".[168]

195. Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended states that the provisions of its chapter dealing with "Offences committed against the law of nations in case of armed conflict" are "applicable in case of declared war and other armed conflicts between two or more States", and also provide for "the punishment of violations of international agreements if these agreements provide for a wider scope of application" (Article 108). The Code provides for the punishment of offences listed under this chapter, and especially – among other more specific offences – of "anyone who contravenes the prescriptions of international conventions relating to the conduct of hostilities, as well as to the protection of persons and objects, [and] anyone who violates other recognised laws and customs of war".[169] Other offences, such as pillage committed in time of war or marauding on the battlefield are also to be punished.[170]

196. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of: "illegal use of emblems and signs of the Red Cross and Red Crescent" (Article 333); "genocide" (Article 398); "biocide" (Article 399); "ecocide" (Article 400); "mercenarism" (Article 401); "attacks against persons and establishments under international protection" (Article 402); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in [an international or internal] armed conflict" (Article 403); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in international or internal armed conflict with the threat to health or causing bodily injury" (Article 404); and "other breaches of the norms of international humanitarian law" (Article 405).[171]

197. Thailand's Prisoners of War Act provides for the punishment of persons committing offences listed under the heading "Offences with respect to prisoners of war" and offences listed under the heading "Offences in the case of armed conflict not of an international character".[172]

198. Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act provides that:

> Any person who commits any of the crimes specified in Articles 6 [of the 1998 ICC Statute – genocide], 7 [of the 1998 ICC Statute – crimes against humanity] and 8 [of the 1998 ICC Statute – war crimes] outside Trinidad and Tobago, may be prosecuted and punished for that crime in Trinidad and Tobago as if the crime had been committed in Trinidad and Tobago.[173]

199. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

[167] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Article 4(1).
[168] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Chapter 22, § 6.
[169] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Articles 108–114.
[170] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Articles 139–140.
[171] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 333 and 398–405.
[172] Thailand, Prisoners of War Act (1955), Sections 12–19.
[173] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Part II, Section 5(2).

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . commits an offence and on conviction thereof [shall be punished].[174]

200. Ukraine's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of offenders having committed an act described in a list of punishable offences such as, inter alia: "looting" (Article 432); "violence against the civilian population in areas of war operations" (Article 433); "bad treatment of prisoners of war" (Article 434); "unlawful use or misuse of the Red Cross and Red Crescent symbols" (Article 435); "violations of the laws and customs of war", notably those provided for in international instruments to which Ukraine is a party (Article 438); "use of weapons of mass destruction" (Article 439); "ecocide" (Article 441); "genocide" (Article 442); "illegal use of the symbols of the red cross and red crescent" (Article 445); and "mercenarism" (Article 447).[175]

201. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions or [AP I] shall be guilty of an offence and on conviction on indictment [shall be punished].[176]

202. The UK UN Personnel Act provides that:

If a person commits, outside the United Kingdom, any act to or in relation to a UN worker which, if he had done it in any part of the United Kingdom, would have made him guilty of [murder, manslaughter, culpable homicide, rape, assault causing injury, kidnapping, abduction or false imprisonment], he shall in that part of the United Kingdom be guilty of that offence.[177]

This Act does not apply to any UN operation "which is authorised by the Security Council of the United Nations as an enforcement action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, . . . in which UN workers are engaged as combatants against organised armed forces, and . . . to which the law of international armed conflict applies".[178]

203. The UK War Crimes Act grants the UK courts jurisdiction over murder, manslaughter or culpable homicide committed in Germany or German-occupied territory during the Second World War, provided that the offence "constituted a violation of the laws and customs of war". The Act applies to a person who was, in 1990, a British citizen or resident in the UK, the Isle of Man or any of the Channel Islands, "irrespective of his nationality at the time of the alleged offence".[179]

[174] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[175] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Articles 432–447.
[176] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[177] UK, UN Personnel Act (1997), Section 1.
[178] UK, UN Personnel Act (1997), Section 4(3).
[179] UK, War Crimes Act (1991), Section 1.

204. The UK ICC Act includes as offences under domestic law the acts of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes as defined in the 1998 ICC Statute. Thus, it provides that "it is an offence against the law of England and Wales for a person to commit genocide, a crime against humanity or a war crime". There is a similar provision for Northern Ireland.[180]

205. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I established provisions for the punishment of the perpetrators of a list of specified offences and also of "all other offences against the laws or customs of war", to be pronounced by the military commissions.[181]

206. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II established provisions for the punishment of the perpetrators of a list of "violations of the laws and customs of war" and other specified acts committed "against any civilian population before or during the war", to be pronounced by the military commissions.[182]

207. The US War Crimes Act as amended provides that:

> (a) Offense. – Whoever, whether inside or outside the United States, commits a war crime . . . shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for life or any term of years, or both, and if death results to the victim, shall also be subject to the penalty of death.
> . . .
> (c) Definition. – As used in this section the term "war crime" means any conduct –
> (1) defined as a grave breach in any of the international conventions signed at Geneva 12 August 1949, or any protocol to such convention to which the United States is a party;
> (2) prohibited by Article 23, 25, 27, or 28 of the Annex to the Hague Convention IV, Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, signed 18 October 1907;
> (3) which constitutes a violation of common Article 3 of the international conventions signed at Geneva, 12 August 1949, or any protocol to such convention to which the United States is a party and which deals with non-international armed conflict; or
> (4) of a person who, in relation to an armed conflict and contrary to the provisions of the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices as amended at Geneva on 3 May 1996 (Protocol II as amended on 3 May 1996), when the United States is a party to such Protocol, willfully kills or causes serious injury to civilians.[183]

208. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended, under the heading "Crimes which affect the moral strength of the army and of the naval forces", lists a number of acts, such as the violation of the rule of humane treatment of POWs, [180] UK, ICC Act (2001), Part 5, Sections 50, 51 and 58.

[181] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.
[182] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945), Regulation 2(b) and (c).
[183] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441.

looting and attacks against certain specified objects, for which it provides punishment.[184]

209. Uzbekistan's Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind", provides for the punishment of, inter alia, "violations of laws and customs of war" (Article 152), "genocide" (Article 153) and the participation of "mercenaries" in "armed conflict or military actions" (Article 154).[185]

210. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu.[186]

211. Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, under a chapter dealing with "Crimes against international law", provides for the punishment of the offenders of a list of certain war crimes.[187]

212. Venezuela's Revised Penal Code provides for the punishment of Venezuelan nationals and foreigners who have committed certain acts "during a war between Venezuela and another nation" or who "violate the conventions or treaties [to which Venezuela is a party] in a way which entails the responsibility of the latter".[188]

213. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who commits, inter alia, one of the offences listed under the following headings: "Violation of policy concerning soldiers killed or wounded in combat" (Article 271); "Theft or destruction of war booty" (Article 272); "Harassment of civilians" (Article 273); "Exceeding military need in performance of a mission" (Article 274); "Mistreatment of a prisoner of war or of a soldier who has surrendered" (Article 275); "Crimes against humanity" committed in time of peace or in time of war (Article 278); "War crimes", such as "acts seriously breaching international norms contained in the treaties to which Vietnam is a party" (Article 279); and "Recruitment of mercenaries and service as a mercenary" (Article 280).[189]

214. Yemen's Military Criminal Code provides for the punishment of a list of offences such as war crimes committed in a "zone of military operations" (Article 20) or "during a war [and] against persons and objects protected under the international conventions to which the Republic of Yemen is a party" (Article 21).[190]

[184] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58.
[185] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Articles 152–154.
[186] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4.
[187] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474.
[188] Venezuela, Revised Penal Code (2000), Article 156.
[189] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Articles 271–280.
[190] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Articles 5 and 20–23.

215. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) provides for the punishment of "any person who commits a war crime, i.e., who during the war or the enemy occupation acted as an instigator or organiser, or who . . . assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of [one of the acts listed thereunder]".[191]

216. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY), in a chapter entitled "Criminal acts against humanity and international law", provides for a list of punishable acts committed by "any person" and some of them "during war, armed conflict (or occupation)", such as: "war crimes against civilians" (Article 142); "war crimes against the wounded and the ill" (Article 143); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 144); "unlawful killing and wounding of the enemy" (Article 146); "unlawful seizure of belongings from the killed and wounded in a theatre of war" (Article 147); "use of prohibited means of combat" (Article 148); "harming a parlementaires" (Article 149); "cruel treatment of the wounded, the ill and prisoners of war" (Article 150); "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" (Article 150-a); "destruction of cultural and historic monuments" (Article 151); and "misuse of international emblems" (Article 153).[192] A commentary on these Code's provisions emphasises that these crimes can be committed in time of war, armed conflict (or occupation).[193] The Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY) notes that the term "armed conflict" in this context should be interpreted as including internal conflicts.[194]

217. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [the Geneva Conventions or AP I] shall be guilty of an offence.
>
> A person guilty of an offence in terms of [the above] shall be liable [to punishment].[195]

National Case-law

218. In the Violations of IHL in Somalia and Rwanda case in 1997, a Belgian Military Court acquitted two Belgian soldiers accused of having injured and threatened, in 1993, the civilian population whilst performing duties as part of the UNOSOM II peacekeeping operation in Somalia. The Court came to the conclusion that the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols were not applicable to the armed conflict in Somalia and that, therefore, the civilian population could not be granted protection on this basis. The Court held that even common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions did not apply to the [191] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).

[192] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Articles 142–153.
[193] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Commentary to Articles 142–144, 146, 148–151 and 153.
[194] Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY), 1997, Chapter 6.4.
[195] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1) and (2).

situation, as the Somali militia did not have an organised military structure, a responsible leadership or exercise authority over a specific part of the territory. Consequently, the Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols (as amended) was also inapplicable. The Court further stated that the members of the UNOSOM II mission could not be considered as "combatants" since their primary task was not to fight against any of the factions, nor could they fall into the category of an "occupying force".[196]

219. In The Four from Butare case in 2001, a Belgian court found the accused individually responsible and guilty of war crimes during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda. The four Rwandans had been arrested under the Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols (as amended). They had been charged with violations of grave breaches of provisions of the Geneva Conventions and AP I, as well as violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Articles 1, 2 and 4 AP II.[197] In 2002, the judgement was confirmed by the Belgian Court of Cassation.[198]

220. In the Brocklebank case before the Canadian Court Martial Appeal Court in 1996 involving the question of criminal responsibility of a Canadian soldier serving on a peacekeeping mission in Somalia for having negligently performed a military duty, the Court of Appeal (majority) stated that:

> I see no basis in law for the inference that the [1949] Geneva Conventions or the relevant provisions of the [Unit Guide (1990)] impose on service members the obligation, not otherwise found in Canadian law, to take positive steps to prevent or arrest the mistreatment or abuse of prisoners in Canadian Forces custody by other members of the forces, particularly other members of superior rank. I do not wish to comment on the duty that a superior officer might have in similar circumstances, but assert that a military duty in the sense of [Section 124 of the National Defence Act (1985)], to protect civilian prisoners not under one's custody cannot be inferred from the broad wording of the relevant sections of the [Unit Guide (1990)] or of [GC IV]. I agree with the prosecution . . . that Canadian soldiers should conduct themselves when engaged in operations abroad in an accountable manner consistent with Canada's international obligations, the rule of law and simply humanity. There was evidence in this case to suggest that the respondent could readily have reported the misdeeds of his comrades. However, absent specific wording in the relevant international conventions and more specifically, the [Unit Guide (1990)], I simply cannot conclude that a member of the Canadian Forces has a penally enforceable obligation to intervene whenever he witnesses mistreatment of a prisoner who is not in his custody.
>
> . . .
>
> In closing, I would remark that . . . it remains open to the chief of defence staff to define in more explicit terms the standards of conduct expected of soldiers in respect of prisoners who are in Canadian Forces custody. It is open to the chief of defence staff to . . . impose a military duty on Canadian Forces members either to report or take reasonable steps to prevent or arrest the abuse of prisoners not in their charge . . . This might prove a useful undertaking.[199]

[196] Belgium, Military Court, Violations of IHL in Somalia and Rwanda case, Judgement, 17 December 1997.
[197] Belgium, Cour d'Assises de Bruxelles, The Four from Butare case, Judgement, 7–8 June 2001.
[198] Belgium, Court of Cassation, The Four from Butare case, Judgement, 9 January 2002.

221. In the Sarić case in 1994, the Danish High Court found a Bosnian Croat refugee guilty on numerous charges of war crimes committed in a Croat-run prison camp in Bosnia in 1993. The Court based its judgement namely on the grave breaches provisions in Articles 129 and 130 GC III and Articles 146 and 147 GC IV.[200] In 1995, Denmark's Supreme Court upheld his conviction.[201]
222. In the Mengistu and Others case in 1995 concerning the prosecution and trial of Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam and former members of the Derg for allegedly committing crimes against humanity and war crimes during the former regime between 1974 and 1991, the Special Prosecutor of Ethiopia, in a reply to the objection filed by counsels for the defendants, referred, inter alia, to the 1919 Treaty of Versailles, to the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) and Nuremberg trials and to the 1993 ICTY Statute. He stated that:

Whosoever commits an international criminal offence in a capacity as a Head of State or responsible government official shall always be accountable for his acts and the punishment shall always be aggravated. Heads of State and other higher responsible government officials in any form of government are all required and obliged to know international crimes thereunder . . . By the same token, they must also be equally responsible and severely punished whenever they are found guilty of the commission of these acts.[202]

The Special Prosecutor further noted that "it is also known that there is a Geneva Convention which regulates the protection of the right of life of a person in time of war by providing for an effective means of penalty".[203]
223. In the Javor case in 1994, a civil suit filed in France by Bosnian nationals alleging ill-treatment in a Serb-run detention camp, the Paris High Court found that it had jurisdiction over the claims of war crimes. In its consideration of the charge, the Court focused on the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[204] The Court of Appeal of Paris reversed this decision and held, inter alia, the absence of direct applicability of the Geneva Conventions.[205]

[199] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Brocklebank case, Judgement, 2 April 1996; see also Court Martial Appeal Court, Brown case, Judgement, 6 January 1995 and Boland case, Judgement, 16 May 1995; Seward case, Judgement, 16 May 1995.
[200] Denmark, High Court, Sarić case, Judgement, 25 November 1994.
[201] Denmark, Supreme Court, Sarić case, Judgement, 15 August 1995.
[202] Ethiopia, Special Prosecutor's Office, Mengistu and Others case, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995, § 1.6.
[203] Ethiopia, Special Prosecutor's Office, Mengistu and Others case, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995, § 1.13.
[204] France, Tribunal de Grande Instance de Paris, Javor case, Order establishing partial lack of jurisdiction and the admissibility of a civil suit, 6 May 1994.
[205] France, Court of Appeal of Paris, Javor case, Judgement, 24 November 1994.

224. In the Djajić case in 1997, Germany's Supreme Court of Bavaria tried a national of the former Yugoslavia. In its judgement, the Court referred to GC IV and the grave breaches regime. It considered the conflict to be an international conflict (in June 1992) and regarded the victims as "protected persons" in the meaning of Article 4 GC IV. The accused was found guilty of complicity in 14 counts of murder and 1 count of attempted murder.[206]

225. In the Jorgić case before Germany's Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf in 1997, the accused, a Bosnian Serb, was tried for acts committed in 1992 in Bosnia and Herzegovina which were punishable under the German Penal Code. The Court referred, inter alia, to Article 147 GC IV. It considered the conflict to be an international conflict in 1992, and the victims to be "protected persons" in the meaning of Article 4 GC IV. The accused was found guilty of complicity in genocide, in conjunction with murder, dangerous bodily harm and deprivation of liberty.[207] In 1999, the Federal Supreme Court upheld the conviction in the Jorgic case for the most part.[208] In 2000, the German Federal Constitutional Court confirmed that the accused could be tried by German courts and under German penal law.[209]

226. In the Kusljić case in 1999, Germany's Supreme Court of Bavaria a national of Bosnia and Herzegovina for crimes committed during 1992 in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The accused was sentenced to life imprisonment for, inter alia, genocide in conjunction with six counts of murder.[210] In 2001, the German Federal Supreme Court revised this judgement into a life sentence for, inter alia, six counts of murder. It considered the acts of the accused to be grave breaches in the meaning of Articles 146 and 147 GC IV.[211]

227. In the Sokolović case before Germany's Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf in 1999, a Bosnian Serb accused of acts committed in 1992 in Bosnia and Herzegovina was sentenced for complicity in genocide, deprivation of liberty and dangerous bodily injury.[212] In 2001, the Federal Supreme Court upheld this judgement and referred, inter alia, to Articles 146 and 147 GC IV and provisions of the German Penal Code. The situation in 1992 in Bosnia and Herzegovina was qualified as an international armed conflict and the victims were considered to be "protected persons" in the meaning of Article 4 GC IV.[213]

228. In its judgement in the Eichmann case in 1961, Israel's District Court of Jerusalem rejected arguments that the acts of which Eichmann was accused constituted acts of State for which Germany alone was responsible. The Court relied on the repudiation of the doctrine of act of State, stating that this had [206] Germany, Supreme Court of Bavaria, Djajić case, Judgement, 23 May 1997.

[207] Germany, Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf, Jorgić case, Judgement, 26 September 1997.
[208] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Jorgić case, Judgement, 30 April 1999.
[209] Germany, Federal Constitutional Court, Jorgić case, Decision, 12 December 2000.
[210] Germany, Supreme Court of Bavaria, Kusljić case, Judgement, 15 December 1999.
[211] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Kusljić case, Decision, 21 February 2001.
[212] Germany, Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf, Sokolović case, Judgement, 29 November 1999.
[213] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Sokolović case, Judgement, 21 February 2001.

been acknowledged by, inter alia, the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) and the Nuremberg judgements, by the US Military Tribunal's decision in the Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case, by UN General Assembly Resolution 96 (I) and by Article 4 of the 1948 Genocide Convention.[214] The Court quoted the US Supreme Court judgement in the Quirin case, stating that "the principle of international law which, under certain circumstances, protects the representatives of a State, cannot be applied to acts which are condemned as criminal by international law". It went on to state that:

> It is true that under international law Germany bears not only moral, but also legal, responsibility for all the crimes that were committed as its own "acts of State", including the crimes attributed to the accused. But that responsibility does not detract one iota from the personal responsibility of the accused for his acts.[215]

Referring to Article 4 of the 1948 Genocide Convention, the Court noted that:

> This Article affirms a principle recognized by all civilized nations . . . and inasmuch as Germany, also, has adhered to this Convention, it is possible that even according to Kelsen – who requires an international convention or the consent of the State concerned – there is no longer any basis for pleading "act of State". But the rejection of this plea does not depend on the affirmation of this principle by Germany, for the plea had already been invalidated by the law of nations. For these reasons we reject the plea of "act of State".[216]

229. In the Eichmann case in 1962, Israel's Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decision. In a part of the judgement dealing with the question of whether Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law of 1950 was in conformity with principles of international law, the Supreme Court held that "the crimes created by the Law and of which the appellant was convicted must be deemed today as having always borne the stamp of international crimes, banned by the law of nations and entailing individual criminal responsibility".[217] In the part of the judgement dealing with the character of international crimes, it went on to affirm its "view that the crimes in question must today be regarded as crimes which were also in the past banned by the law of nations and entailed individual criminal responsibility" and stated as to the "features which identify crimes that have long been recognized by customary international law" that:

> These include, among others, the following features: these crimes constitute acts which damage vital international interests; they impair the foundations and security of the international community; they violate the universal moral values and humanitarian principles that lie hidden in the criminal law systems adopted by civilized nations. The underlying principle in international law regarding such crimes

[214] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961.
[215] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, § 28.
[216] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, § 28.
[217] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 10.

is that the individual who has committed any of them and who, when doing so, may be presumed to have fully comprehended the heinous nature of this act, must account for his conduct.[218]

As to individual responsibility for war crimes "in the conventional sense", the Supreme Court held that:

It will be recalled that the reference here is to a group of acts committed by members of the armed forces of the enemy which are contrary to the "laws and customs of war". These acts are deemed to constitute in essence international crimes; they involve the violation of the provisions of customary international law which obtained before the Hague Conventions of 1907, the latter merely "declaring" the rules of warfare as dictated by recognized humanitarian principles. Those crimes entail individual criminal responsibility because they challenge the foundations of international society and affront the conscience of civilized nations. When a belligerent State punishes for such acts, it does so not only because persons who were its nationals – be they soldiers taken prisoner by the enemy or members of the civilian population – suffered bodily harm or material damage, but also, and principally, because they involve the perpetration of an international crime which all the nations of the world are interested in preventing.

...

The [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)], with all the principles embodied in it – including that of individual responsibility – must be seen as "the expression of international law existing at the time of its creation; and to that extent (the Charter) is itself a contribution to international law".

...

The outcome ... is that the crimes set out in the Law of 1950 ... must be seen today as acts that have always been forbidden by customary international law – acts which are of a "universal" criminal character and entail individual criminal responsibility.[219]

In another part of the judgement dealing with the submission of the defendant that his acts had constituted acts of State, the Supreme Court held that:

The contention of counsel for the appellant is ... that the acts done by his client for the realization of the "Final Solution" had their origin in Hitler's decision to put that plan into effect and consequently they were purely "Acts of State", responsibility for which does not rest on the appellant.

We utterly reject this contention, as did the District Court ... There is no basis for the doctrine when the matter pertains to acts prohibited by the law of nations, especially when they are international crimes of the class of "crimes against humanity" (in the wide sense). Of such odious acts it must be said that in point of international law they are completely outside the "sovereign" jurisdiction of the State that ordered or ratified their commission, and therefore those who participated in such acts must personally account for them and cannot shelter behind the official character of their task or mission, or behind the "Laws" of the State by virtue of which they purported to act. Their position may be compared with that of a person who, having committed an offence in the interests of a corporation which he represents, is not permitted to hide behind the collective responsibility of the corporation therefor. In other words, international law postulates that it is impossible for a State to sanction an act that violates its severe prohibitions, and from this follows the idea which forms the core of the concept of "international crime", that a person who was a party to such a crime must bear individual responsibility for it. If it were otherwise, the penal provisions of international law would be a mockery . . . Indeed, even before the Second World War the defence of "Act of State" was not regarded as an adequate defence to the charge of an offence against the "laws of war" (a "conventional" war crime) . . . The plea of "Act of State" is rejected.[220]

[218] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 11.
[219] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 11.

230. In the Priebke case in 1996, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome found a German soldier and former member of the "SS" guilty of multiple first-degree murder charges, acts which it qualified as war crimes, for his role and participation in the 1944 Ardeatine caves killings when 335 persons (both civilians and members of the armed forces) were killed in reprisal for the killing of 33 German soldiers. The Tribunal considered the reprisal to be disproportionate to the acts which had led to the reprisal, and Priebke was found responsible for having drawn up a list of the names of the victims to be killed, for having checked the identity of the victims being transferred to the place of the killings, and for having shot two of the victims himself. However, the Tribunal found that the accused could not be punished for reasons of statute of limitations.[221] On appeal, the judgement was annulled by the Supreme Court of Cassation and another trial ordered.[222]

231. In the Hass and Priebke case in 1997 dealing with the same events as in the Priebke case, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome found the accused guilty of multiple charges of aggravated murder for their respective roles in the reprisal killings. It sentenced the accused for war crimes to imprisonment.[223] In its relevant parts, the judgement was confirmed by the Military Appeals Court and the Supreme Court of Cassation, although the Courts settled on life imprisonment.[224]

232. In the Ercole case in 2000, Italy's Tribunal of Livorno tried and sentenced a former paratrooper to 18 months' suspended imprisonment for abusing his authority during his participation in a multinational peacekeeping operation in Somalia and, pending the outcome of connected civil proceedings, made him provisionally liable to the payment of 30,000,000 Italian lire to a Somali

[220] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 14.
[221] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 1 August 1996.
[222] Italy, Supreme Court of Cassation, Priebke case, Judgement Cancelling Verdict of First Instance, 15 October 1996.
[223] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 22 July 1997.
[224] Italy, Military Appeals Court, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 March 1998; Supreme Court of Cassation, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, 16 November 1998.

citizen who had been tortured.[225] However, in 2001, the Court of Appeals at Florence declared that a crime of abuse of authority was covered by statutory limitations.[226]

233. In the Grabež case in 1997, a person born in the former Yugoslavia was prosecuted by a Swiss Military Tribunal for violations of the laws and customs of war under the Swiss Military Criminal Code as amended on charges of beating and injuring civilian prisoners in the camps of Omarska and Keraterm in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Tribunal held that it had jurisdiction under Articles 108(2) and 109 of the Swiss Military Criminal Code as amended over violations of the laws and customs of war, grave breaches of GC III, GC IV and AP I and violations of AP II, but acquitted the accused for lack of sufficient evidence.[227]

234. In the Niyonteze case in 1999, a Swiss Military Tribunal convicted a Rwandan national and former burgomaster for, inter alia, grave breaches of IHL committed in Rwanda on the basis of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II. The defendant had been charged, in the context of the Rwandan genocide in 1994, with inciting the population to kill Tutsis and moderate Hutus and with exhorting refugees to go back to their homes, with the intention of having them killed and taking their property. The Tribunal sentenced the accused to life imprisonment.[228] In 2000, the Military Court of Appeals partially upheld the judgement, reducing the sentence to 14 years' imprisonment. It found that the defendant was guilty under Article 109 of the Swiss Penal Code relating to violations of the laws of war, common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II.[229] At the final instance, the Military Court of Cassation, partially dismissing the previous judgement, confirmed the findings on the guilt of the defendant.[230]

235. In the Auschwitz and Belsen case in 1945, the UK Military Tribunal at Lüneberg admitted that:

> There has not been universal agreement on the extent to which an individual can be held personally liable for breaches of such international agreements as the Hague Convention No. IV (Rules of Land Warfare) and the Geneva Prisoners of War Convention of 1929, according to the strict letter of which the responsibility for breach thereof lies on the State authority to which the perpetrator owes allegiance.

However, quoting the IMT's opinion on the enforcement of the 1907 Hague Convention (IV) personally against its violators, the Court went on to state that:

[225] Italy, Tribunal at Livorno, Ercole case, 13 April 2000.
[226] Italy, Court of Appeals at Florence, Ercole case, 22 February 2001.
[227] Switzerland, Military Tribunal at Lausanne, Grabež case, Judgement, 18 April 1997.
[228] Switzerland, Military Tribunal at Lausanne, Niyonteze case, Judgement, 30 April 1999.
[229] Switzerland, Military Court of Appeals, Niyonteze case, Judgement, 26 May 2000.
[230] Switzerland, Military Court of Cassation, Niyonteze case, Judgement, 27 April 2001.

The trend of opinion and the practice followed by the Courts, however, has been to make the individual responsible for his acts in breach of international conventions, and this trend was illustrated on a high level by the decision pronounced by the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, that certain accused had made themselves criminals by waging war in breach of the terms of an inter-governmental agreement renouncing war undertaken as an instrument of national policy, the Briand-Kellogg Pact.[231]

236. In the Essen Lynching case in 1945 dealing with the liability of two soldiers and several civilians for the alleged killing of unarmed POWs during the Second World War in violation of the laws and usages of war, the UK Military Court at Essen (Germany) found the accused guilty, stating with regard to the latter that every one of them had in one form or another taken part in the ill-treatment which eventually led to the death of the victims. With regard to one of the soldiers, a Captain in the German army who had not been physically involved in the killing but had allegedly given instructions that the POWs should be taken to a certain place and that he had given the order in a loud voice so that it could be heard by a crowd gathering nearby, the Court found that he was guilty of being concerned in the killing for his positive utterances.[232]

237. In the Quirin case in 1942, dealing with the trial, by a military commission, of German soldiers who had landed on US territory in 1942 and were charged, inter alia, with war crimes, the US Supreme Court, stating, however, that it was not "concerned with any question of the guilt or innocence of petitioners", held that:

> From the very beginning of its history this Court has recognized and applied the law of war as including that part of the law of nations which prescribes, for the conduct of war, the status, rights and duties of enemy nations as well as of enemy individuals. By the Articles of War . . . Congress has explicitly provided, so far as it may constitutionally do so, that military tribunals shall have jurisdiction to try offenders or offences against the law of war in appropriate cases.

In its ruling, the Supreme Court gave a list of cases in which individual offenders had been charged with offences against the law of war.[233]

238. In the Yamashita case in 1946, in which the US Supreme Court was called upon to decide whether the accused, the military governor and commanding general of Japan in the Philippines between 9 October 1944 and 2 September 1945, was responsible for the violations of IHL committed by the troops under his command, the accused was tried for his responsibility as a commander.[234] However, one of the judges, in his dissenting opinion, referred to US military law and stated that "from this the conclusion seems inescapable that the United [231] UK, Military Tribunal at Lüneberg, Auschwitz and Belsen case, Judgement, 17 September 1945.

[232] UK, Military Court at Essen, Essen Lynching case, Judgement, 21–22 December 1945.
[233] US, Supreme Court, Quirin case, Judgement, 31 July 1942.
[234] US, Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Judgement, 4 February 1946.

States recognizes individual criminal responsibility for violations of the laws of war only as to those who commit the offences or who order or direct their commission".[235]

239. In the Altstötter (the Justice Trial) case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg held that:

> As to the punishment of persons guilty of violating the laws and customs of war (war crimes in the narrow sense), it has always been recognised that tribunals may be established and punishment imposed by the State in whose hands the perpetrators fall
>
> ...
>
> It must be admitted that Germans were not the only ones who were guilty of committing war crimes; other violators of international law could, no doubt, be tried and punished by the State of which they were nationals, by the offended State if it can secure jurisdiction of the person, or by an International Tribunal if of competent authorised jurisdiction ...
>
> The very essence of the prosecution case is that the laws, the Hitlerian decrees and the draconic, corrupt, and perverted Nazi judicial system themselves constituted the substance of war crimes and crimes against humanity and that participation in the enactment and enforcement of them amounts to complicity in crime. We have pointed out that governmental participation is a material element of the crime against humanity. Only when official organs of sovereignty participated in atrocities and persecutions did those crimes assume international proportions. It can scarcely be said that governmental participation, the proof of which is necessary for conviction, can also be a defense to the charge.[236]

240. In its judgement in the Flick case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg noted that "it can no longer be successfully maintained that international law is concerned only with the actions of sovereign states and provides no punishment for individuals". The Tribunal also rejected the argument that the fact that the defendants were private individuals rather than public officials representing the State meant that they could not be criminally responsible for a violation of international law. Instead, it held that "international law ... binds every citizen just as does ordinary municipal law ... The application of international law to individuals is no novelty."[237]

241. In its judgements in the Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case and in the Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial) in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg reiterated the principle of individual responsibility.[238]

242. In its decision in the Karadžić case in 1995, the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit referred, inter alia, to the recognition, by the Executive Branch, of the liability of private persons for certain violations of customary [235] US, Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Dissenting Opinion of Mr Justice Murphy, 4 February 1946.

[236] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case, Judgement, 4 December 1947.

[237] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Flick case, Judgement, 22 December 1947.

[238] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case, Judgement, 27 August 1947–30 July 1948; Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial), Judgement, 30 December 1947–28 October 1948.

international law and the availability of the Alien Tort Claims Act to remedy such violations. It held that:

> We do not agree that the law of nations, as understood in the modern era, confines its reach to state action. Instead, we hold that certain forms of conduct violate the law of nations whether undertaken by those acting under the auspices of a state or only as private individuals . . . The liability of private individuals for committing war crimes has been recognized since World War I and was confirmed at Nuremberg after World War II.[239]

243. In the Ademi case in 2000, the Communal Court of Mitrovica in Kosovo (FRY) convicted the accused, a member of the local security force of Albanian origin, for "violating the Rules of International Law during the war conflict against the civilian population" in joint action with members of the armed forces.[240]

244. In the Trajković case before the District Court of Gnjilan in Kosovo (FRY) in 2001, a Kosovo Serb and former chief of police, was convicted, inter alia, for having participated in crimes committed against the civilian population in 1999, acts which the District Court found had to be qualified as war crimes under Article 142 of the Penal Code of the FRY, as well as crimes against humanity. The Court also found that the acts had been committed "in time of war".[241] However, on appeal, the Supreme Court of Kosovo overruled this judgement and ordered that the case be returned to the same court for retrial. The Supreme Court found, inter alia, that:

> The state of facts was erroneously established in relation to all charges as there is no direct or conclusive evidence that the accused acted personally or gave orders leading to the alleged crimes or that he should be held liable under command responsibility duties concerning the above-mentioned crimes . . . During the retrial, the court of first instance should therefore assess . . . the issue of the accused's personal responsibility for participation in the crimes alleged.[242]

245. In a written opinion in the Trajković case before the District Court of Gnjilan in Kosovo (FRY) in 2001, the International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo stated that:

> This Opinion has concluded that [the accused] was not properly found guilty of any of the crimes under individual liability (the direct giving of orders to commit the crimes, or committing them as a co-perpetrator, or under accomplice liability) . . . Individual responsibility subsumes command responsibility. Because of this "subsuming rule", we must first evaluate whether individual responsibility might attach, as a finding that a defendant is individually responsible for a war crime or crime against humanity will preclude the need to analyse his culpability under command responsibility. The rule is stated in the statute and decisions of the ICTY . . . As to any particular criminal act found to be a war crime or crime against [239] US, Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Karadžić case, Decision, 13 October 1995.

[240] SFRY (FRY), Communal Court of Mitrovica, Ademi case, Judgement, 30 August 2000.
[241] SFRY (FRY), District Court of Gnjilan, Trajković case, Judgement, 6 March 2001.
[242] SFRY (FRY), Supreme Court of Kosovo, Trajković case, Decision Act, 30 November 2001.

humanity sanctioned under international law, command responsibility can only attach where the accused cannot be found individually responsible for the crime. Therefore an individual responsibility analysis must precede and may preclude a command responsibility analysis. It is this Opinion that any liability for the war crimes enumerated by the Verdict must be through command responsibility, and not through individual responsibility.[243]

Other National Practice

246. In 1998, at the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court held in Rome, the Afghan Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs declared that:

Since the second World War in the framework of the United Nations we have been witnessing an unprecedented expansion in the international protection of Human Rights. This expansion could be ascribed to an ever-increasing sharing of fundamental values and expectation among nations. Consequently the World community now acknowledges the need to protect the individual from different varieties of human depredations by creating an International Permanent Criminal Court, which should prosecute and punish those who are escaping national jurisdiction under different circumstances.[244]

247. In 1994, in a report to UNESCO on measures to implement the 1954 Hague Convention, Australia noted that at the most elementary level of training provided for all members of the armed forces, it was emphasised that "individual officers and soldiers will be held accountable for any violations [of the rules of the LOAC]".[245]

248. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council regarding the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, Australia stated that:

Governments must also denounce – and denounce strongly – attacks against United Nations personnel and humanitarian workers and take all measures to bring perpetrators of violence to justice. Impunity, as so many of my colleagues have emphasized in this discussion, cannot be allowed.

...

The enforcement of international humanitarian law must also be strengthened in order to bring those responsible to justice and to send a clear message of the international community's intolerance of this violence.[246]

[243] SFRY (FRY), International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo, Trajković case, Opinion on Appeals of Convictions, 30 November 2001, Sections IV and IV(A).

[244] Afghanistan, Statement by the Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs at the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, Rome, 16 June 1998.

[245] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Report to UNESCO on Australian measures to implement the 1954 Hague Convention and associate regulations, 13 July 1994, § 1(b).

[246] Australia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, pp. 6 and 7.

249. In 1991, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the environmental impact of the Gulf War, Austria stated that "there could be no doubt as to the illegality of the acts committed by Iraq, entailing . . . personal criminal liability of those responsible for those acts".[247]

250. In 1998, at the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court held in Rome, the Chilean Under-Secretary of Justice declared that crimes such as genocide, war crimes, which he defined as crimes committed in international armed conflicts or conflicts of an internal character, and crimes against humanity should be included in the competence of the Court.[248]

251. According to the Report on the Practice of China, which refers to a statement made in 1955 by a representative of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in 1954, China remitted 410 Japanese military personnel who had committed various crimes during the Japanese invasion of China and the Chinese war of liberation. The report notes that this clearly indicates that the Chinese government does not make a distinction between international armed conflicts and internal armed conflicts, and that China "consistently holds that foreigners also shall take criminal responsibility for committing war crimes in internal armed conflicts".[249]

252. In 1983, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, China stated that "such crimes could be committed by both individuals and States and the responsibility of either would vary only as to its character or extent".[250]

253. In 1992, the Office of the Special Public Prosecutor (SPO) was established in Ethiopia after the fall of the regime of Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam in 1991. In a letter to the Assistant Secretary-General for Human Rights, Ethiopia explained that the SPO had "the power to conduct investigations and institute proceedings against those it suspects of committing crimes and/or abusing their positions of authority in the former [Mengistu] regime".[251]

254. In 1994, in a statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, the Chief Special Prosecutor of the Ethiopian Transitional Government stated

[247] Austria, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/46/SR.19, 23 October 1991, § 5.

[248] Chile, Statement by the Under-Secretary of Justice at the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, Rome, 16 June 1998.

[249] Report on the Practice of China, 1997, Chapters 6.3 and 6.5, referring to Statement by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the issue of the "so-called withdrawal of Japanese nationals in China put forward by the Japanese government", 16 August 1995, Documents on Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, World Knowledge Press, Beijing, Vol. 3, p. 338.

[250] China, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/38/SR.52, 23 November 1983, § 25.

[251] Ethiopia, Transitional government, Letter dated 28 January 1994 to the Assistant UN Secretary-General for Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/103, 3 February 1994, § 3.

that the SPO was established "to compile a list of all the abuses committed by the previous regime and to bring those responsible to justice".[252]

255. According to a statement made in 1997 by Ethiopia's Office of the Special Public Prosecutor (SPO), which is in charge of prosecuting persons who allegedly committed crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes between 1974 and 1991, since its establishment in 1992 by Proclamation 22/1992 of the transitional government of Ethiopia, a total of 5,198 persons had been charged by 1997, 54 of them with war crimes and most of the others with genocide, the defendants being classified into three major groups: policy- and decision-makers; field commanders; and the perpetrators of the crimes. The charges were based on Ethiopia's Penal Code.[253]

256. In 1993, the French Ministers of State and Foreign Affairs wrote a letter to the Chairman of the Committee of French Jurists entrusted to study the establishment of an international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, stating that:

> Unfortunately there is no longer any doubt that particularly serious crimes are being committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia that constitute war crimes, crimes against humanity or serious violations of certain international conventions.
>
> Such actions cannot go unpunished, and the absence of real penalties, in addition to being an affront to public conscience, could encourage the perpetrators of these crimes to pursue their regrettable course of action.[254]

257. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the unanimous vote on Resolution 827 (1993) establishing the ICTY, France stated that:

> In adopting resolution 827 (1993), the Security Council has just established an International Tribunal that will prosecute, judge and punish people from any community who have committed or continue to commit crimes in the territory of the former Yugoslavia . . .
>
> The expression "laws or customs of war" used in Article 3 of the [1993 ICTY Statute] covers specifically, in the opinion of France, all the obligations that flow from the humanitarian law agreements in force on the territory of the former Yugoslavia at the time when the offences were committed".[255]

258. In 1993, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the report of the ILC, France referred to the draft statute for an international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and stated that:

[252] Ethiopia, Transitional Government, Statement by the Chief Special Prosecutor before the UN Commission on Human Rights, 17 February 1994, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/SR.28, 22 January 1996, § 2.

[253] Ethiopia, Office of the Special Public Prosecutor, Statement of the Chief Special Public Prosecutor, Addis Ababa, 13 February 1997.

[254] France, Minister of State and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Letter dated 16 January 1993 to the Procurator-General of the Court of Cassation and Chairman of the Committee of French Jurists, annexed to Letter dated 10 February 1993 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/25266, 10 February 1993, p. 52.

[255] France, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217 (Provisional), 25 May 1993, pp. 10–11.

Although it was true that barbarity had always existed, it was no less true that impunity for the guilty was no longer acceptable. Therefore, the establishment of an international criminal jurisdiction, although it would not fully satisfy those with the most exacting consciences, was a step forward in achieving respect for the rule of law and a better lot for the victims of the conflicts.[256]

259. In 1993, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of responsibility for attacks on UN and associated personnel and measures to ensure that those responsible for such attacks were brought to justice, Germany, referring to a draft of the Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel which had been introduced by New Zealand, stated that:

[This draft convention] also established the personal responsibility of the perpetrators by making such acts crimes punishable under the national laws of States parties. That was especially important when the United Nations was operating in areas of the world where there was no effective authority to guarantee that the perpetrators were actually punished. The draft convention would fill a vacuum.[257]

260. According to a representative of the German Central Office for the Investigation of National-Socialist Atrocities at Ludwigsburg (Zentrale Stelle zur Aufklärung nationalsozialistischer Gewaltverbrechen), established by the judicial administrations of the German States in 1958, by September 1999, Germany had investigated the cases against more than 100,000 accused and suspected persons for crimes committed during the Nazi regime. In all, 7,225 of the proceedings were handed over to the public prosecution and about 6,500 individuals were convicted. The representative stated that "it is important that [even the elderly persons accused of having committed such crimes] must be held responsible for their deeds".[258]

261. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the unanimous vote on Resolution 827 (1993) establishing the ICTY, Hungary noted that:

This is the first time that the United Nations established an international criminal jurisdiction to prosecute persons who commit grave violations of international humanitarian law . . . We note . . . the importance of the fact that the jurisdiction of the [ICTY] covers the whole range of international humanitarian law and the entire duration of the conflict throughout the territory of former Yugoslavia.[259]

262. In 1996, during a debate in the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe on the report of the Committee on Migration, Refugees and Demography on refugees, displaced persons, and reconstruction in certain countries

[256] France, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/48/SR.18, 26 October 1993, § 35.
[257] Germany, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/48/SR.16, 21 October 1993, § 65.
[258] Willi Dressen, "Eine Behörde gegen das Vergessen", Die Welt, 2 September 1999.
[259] Hungary, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217 (Provisional), 25 May 1993, p. 20.

in the former Yugoslavia, Hungary declared that "those who committed war crimes or crimes against humankind should be prosecuted and held responsible for their acts before an international court, namely the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia".[260]

263. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the report of the UN Secretary-General on the situation in Burundi, Indonesia stated that:

> We would like to recall that all persons who committed or authorized the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for such violations and should be held accountable. Those responsible for crimes against humanity and, in this case, their fellow countrymen should be brought to justice.[261]

264. In 1950, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the ILC's work on the Nuremberg Principles, Israel declared that the principles in question "had become a constituent part not only of universal international law, but also of the law of the United Nations".[262]

265. In 1950, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the ILC's work on the Nuremberg Principles, and in reply to a statement by the UK "that the concept of the direct responsibility of the individual under international law without the interposition of the national State was 'convenient and picturesque' but unscientific", the Netherlands emphasised that it was apparent from the judgement of the 1945 IMT (Nuremberg) that "there were rules of international law which applied directly to individuals, without passing through the intermediary of national law, and that some obligations of international law transcended the obligations imposed by the national administration".[263]

266. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council regarding the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, and specifically with regard to the alleged shooting down of two UN aircraft in Angola in December 1998 and January 1999 respectively, New Zealand stated that:

> The premeditated destruction of those aircraft would be one of the most flagrant crimes against this Organization and its personnel ever recorded . . . It is essential that the perpetrators be brought to justice, however long it takes. There can be no impunity for crimes of such nature.[264]

[260] Hungary, Statement before the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, Ordinary Session (First part), 24 January 1996, Official Report of Debates, Vol. I, p. 181.

[261] Indonesia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3692, 28 August 1996, p. 21.

[262] Israel, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.236, 9 November 1950, § 55.

[263] Netherlands, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.236, 9 November 1950, § 24.

[264] New Zealand, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 9.

During the same debate, New Zealand stated, with regard to the "inclusion of deliberate attacks on personnel involved in a humanitarian situation or peacekeeping mission in the [1998 ICC Statute] as a war crime over which the International Criminal Court will have jurisdiction", that "we hope that the [International Criminal] Court . . . will contribute towards ending the impunity enjoyed by perpetrators of such attacks in the past".[265]

267. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council regarding the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, Norway stated that "States need to hold . . . non-State actors accountable for their attacks on humanitarian workers operating in territory under their control".[266]

268. In 1950, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the ILC's work on the Nuremberg Principles, Pakistan stated that:

> The Nürnberg principles, involving as they did the grave problems of war and peace, were of great importance and deep significance to international law. They proclaimed that . . . those who violated the laws [and] customs of war or committed inhuman acts against civilian populations thereby rendered themselves guilty of international crimes and liable to judgment and punishment.[267]

269. In 2001, in a statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, the Rwandan Minister of Justice stated that his government "was also committed to doing its utmost to prosecute and sentence those responsible for the genocide and other serious violations of human rights and international humanitarian law".[268]

270. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the report of the UN Secretary-General on the situation in Burundi, South Africa stated that:

> The international community can no longer allow acts of unbridled violence to continue with impunity. Those who commit serious violations of international humanitarian law should be made to realize that they are individually responsible for such violations and will be held accountable.[269]

271. In 1990, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, the UK stated that:

> Recent events in the Persian Gulf demonstrated all too clearly the relevance of the topic of the draft Code of crimes against the peace and security of mankind.

[265] New Zealand, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 9.
[266] Norway, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 10.
[267] Pakistan, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.236, 9 November 1950, § 38.
[268] Rwanda, Statement by the Minister of Justice before the UN Commission on Human Rights, 30 March 2001, UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/SR.25, 6 May 2002, § 73.
[269] South Africa, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3692, 28 August 1996, p. 12.

The catalogue of the international legal obligations which had been violated was endless. It must be clear that individuals were personally responsible for crimes of that nature, since the responsibility of the State, if there was such responsibility, was not in itself a sufficient response.[270]

272. In 1990, during a debate in the UN Security Council concerning the application of GC IV in Kuwait following its occupation by Iraq, the UK representative stated that:

I should also recall the terms of paragraph 13 of resolution 670 (1990), under which individuals are held individually responsible for grave breaches of the Geneva Convention. We should also hold personally responsible those involved in violations of the laws of armed conflict, including the prohibition against initiating the use of chemical or biological weapons contrary to the [1925 Gas Protocol], to which Iraq is a party.[271]

273. On 21 January 1991, in the context of the Gulf War, the UK Minister of Foreign Affairs summoned the Iraqi Ambassador to discuss Iraq's obligations under international law. According to a statement by an FCO spokesperson following the meeting, the UK Minister had "also reminded the Iraqi Ambassador of the personal liability of those individuals who broke the Conventions . . . He again reminded the Ambassador of the personal liability of those who authorised [the] use [of chemical and biological weapons]".[272]

274. In 1991, in a report submitted to the UN Security Council on operations in the Gulf War, the UK, with regard to the treatment of British POWs by Iraq, stated that "the Iraqi Ambassador was reminded of the responsibility of . . . individual Iraqis for any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[273]

275. In 1991, in a written reply to a question in the House of Commons, the UK Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated that "we have consistently stated that individuals bear personal responsibility for crimes under international law. This position is reflected in Security Council resolution 674."[274]

276. In 1991, during a debate in the House of Lords on the subject of peace and security in the Middle East, a UK government spokesperson stated that:

We have made it clear that anyone who breaks the provisions of the Geneva Conventions may be held liable, and that remains the case. That will not be a decision for the [UK] alone. Machinery already exists under the [Geneva Conventions Act as [270] UK, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/45/SR.35, 8 November 1990, § 27.

[271] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc., S/PV.2963, 29 November 1990, p. 82.
[272] UK, Statement by a FCO spokesperson, 21 January 1991, reprinted in BYIL, Vol. 62, 1991, p. 680.
[273] UK, Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22117, 21 January 1991, p. 1.
[274] UK, House of Commons, Reply to a written question by Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Hansard, 28 February 1991, Vol. 186, Written Answers, col. 583.

amended (1957)] for prosecuting grave breaches. The Kuwaiti Government intends to establish a commission to catalogue war crimes, which we welcome.[275]

277. In 1991, during a debate in the House of Commons on the subject of peace and security in the Middle East, the UK Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated that:

Anyone who breaks the provisions of the Geneva conventions may be held liable. Thus, individual Iraqis now bear personal responsibility for breaches of them. That position was reaffirmed in Security Council resolutions 670 and 674 . . . Machinery already exists under [the Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957)] for prosecuting grave breaches of them.[276]

278. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the establishment of the ICTY, the UK, with regard to "continued reports of massive breaches of international humanitarian law and human rights in Bosnia", declared that:

The perpetrators must be called to account, whoever is responsible, throughout the territory of the former Yugoslavia. Those who have perpetrated these shocking breaches of international humanitarian law should be left in no doubt that they will be held individually responsible for their actions.[277]

279. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the unanimous vote on Resolution 827 (1993) establishing the ICTY, the UK stated that:

It is essential that those who commit [violations of IHL in the former Yugoslavia] be in no doubt that they will be held individually responsible. It is essential that these atrocities be investigated and the perpetrators called to account, whoever and wherever they may be . . . Articles 2 to 5 of the draft [ICTY] statute describe the crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. The Statute does not, of course, create new law, but reflects existing international law in this field. In this connection, it would be our view that the reference to the laws or customs of war in Article 3 is broad enough to include applicable international conventions and that Article 5 covers acts committed in time of armed conflict.[278]

280. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on acts committed in Rwanda, the UK stated that:

[Resolution 935] of the UN Security Council sends a clear message to those responsible for grave violations of international humanitarian law, or acts of genocide, that they will be held individually responsible for those acts. The international community is determined that they be brought to justice; it is our duty to ensure that this is done.[279]

[275] UK, House of Lords, Statement by a government spokesperson, Hansard, 6 March 1991, Vol. 526, cols. 1484–1485.
[276] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Hansard, 28 March 1991, Vol. 188, col. 1100.
[277] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3175, 22 February 1993, p. 14.
[278] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217 (Provisional), 25 May 1993, p. 19.
[279] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3400, 1 July 1994, p. 8.

281. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council, the UK reiterated that the establishment of the ICTR "is a signal of the international community's determination that offenders must be brought to justice" and that "it is also a matter of the greatest importance to the British Government that the perpetrators of the genocide be brought to justice".[280]

282. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that:

> The Government of the United States reminds the Government of Iraq that under International Law, violations of the Geneva Conventions, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925, or related International Laws of armed conflict are war crimes, and individuals guilty of such violations may be subject to prosecution at any time, without any statute of limitations. This includes members of the Iraqi armed forces and civilian government officials.[281]

In another such diplomatic note a few days later, the US reiterated that "Iraqi individuals who are guilty of . . . war crimes . . . are personally liable and subject to prosecution at any time".[282]

283. In 1991, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the environmental impact of the Gulf War and the environmental damage caused, the US maintained that "existing international law not only prohibited the type of acts committed by Iraq, but also provided important remedies to address and deter such acts, in particular with respect to personal criminal liability".[283]

284. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the unanimous vote on Resolution 827 (1993) establishing the ICTY, the US stated that:

> Truth is the cornerstone of the rule of law, and it will point towards individuals, not peoples, as perpetrators of war crimes . . . And to those who committed [violations of IHL in the former Yugoslavia], we have a clear message: war criminals will be prosecuted and justice will be rendered.
>
> The crimes being committed . . . are not just isolated acts of drunken militiamen, but often are the systematic and orchestrated crimes of Government officials, military commanders, and disciplined artillerymen and foot soldiers. The men and women behind these crimes are individually responsible for the crimes of those they purport to control; the fact that their power is often self-proclaimed does not lessen their culpability.
>
> . . .

[280] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3453, 8 November 1994, p. 6; see also Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3605, 12 December 1995, p. 5.

[281] US, Department of State, Diplomatic note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, Annex I, p. 2.

[282] US, Department of State, Diplomatic note to Iraq, Washington, 21 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22130, 22 January 1991, p. 4.

[283] US, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/46/SR.18, 22 October 1991, § 39.

It is understood that the "laws or customs of war" referred to in Article 3 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] include all obligations under humanitarian law agreements in force in the territory of the former Yugoslavia at the time the acts were committed, including common article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, and the 1977 Additional Protocols to these Conventions.

...

With respect to paragraph 1 of Article 7, it is our understanding that individual liability arises in the case of a conspiracy to commit a crime referred to in Articles 2 through 5.[284]

285. In 1995, in its amicus curiae brief presented to the ICTY in the Tadić case on the issue of the Tribunal's jurisdiction, the US stated that:

We believe that the "grave breaches" provisions of Article 2 of the [1993 ICTY] Statute apply to armed conflicts of a non-international character as well as those of an international character ...

Insofar as Common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] prohibits certain acts with respect to "[p]ersons taking no active part in hostilities" in cases of armed conflict not of an international character, it is consistent with the ordinary meaning of the Geneva Conventions to treat such persons as persons protected by the Conventions ...

... Article 3 of the [1993 ICTY] Statute authorizes the prosecution of "persons violating the laws or customs of war. Such violations shall include, but not be limited to ..." a series of specific acts that would constitute such violations. This is only an exemplary and not an exhaustive list, and the language of Article 3 is otherwise broad enough to cover all relevant violations of the laws or customs of war, whether applicable in international or non-international armed conflict".[285]

286. The 1998 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program stated that "all reportable incidents committed by or against U.S. or enemy persons are promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and, where appropriate, remedied by corrective action". A "reportable incident" is defined as "a possible, suspected, or alleged violation of the law of war".[286]

287. In 1950, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the ILC's work on the Nuremberg Principles, the SFRY stated that "all civilized nations considered that the principles recognized in the Charter of the Nürnberg Tribunal were principles of positive international law which all States should respect".[287]

[284] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217 (Provisional), 25 May 1993, pp. 13–16.

[285] US, Amicus Curiae brief presented to the ICTY, Tadić case, Motion Hearing, 25 July 1995, pp. 35-37.

[286] US, Department of Defence Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Sections 3.2 and 4.3.

[287] SFRY, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.234, 6 November 1950, § 7.

288. In Order No. 985-1/91 issued in 1991, the YPA Chief of General Staff stated that "war crimes and other grave breaches of norms of law on warfare are serious criminal offences and call for criminal liability of all perpetrators".[288]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

289. In a resolution adopted in 1980, the UN Security Council, after recalling "the applicability of GC IV to the Arab territories occupied by Israel" and, in particular, Article 27 thereof, stated that it was:

deeply concerned that the Jewish settlers in the occupied Arab territories are allowed to carry arms thus enabling them to perpetrate crimes against the civilian Arab population,

1. condemns the assassination attempts on the lives of the mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh and calls for the immediate apprehension and prosecution of the perpetrators of these crimes.[289]

290. In a resolution adopted in 1990 in the context of the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, the UN Security Council stated that:

The Fourth Geneva Convention applies to Kuwait and ... as a High Contracting Party to the Convention Iraq is bound to comply fully with all its terms and, in particular, is liable under the Convention in respect of the grave breaches committed by it, as are individuals who commit ... grave breaches.[290]

291. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on violations of humanitarian law in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "persons who commit ... grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[291]

292. In a resolution adopted in 1992 establishing the Commission of Experts to examine and analyse evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council recalled that "persons who commit ... grave breaches of the Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[292]

293. In a resolution on Somalia adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "all violations of international humanitarian law occurring in Somalia, including in particular the deliberate impeding of the delivery

[288] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Legal Department, Order No. 985-1/91, 3 October 1991, § 2.
[289] UN Security Council, Res. 471, 5 June 1980, § 1.
[290] UN Security Council, Res. 670, 25 September 1990, § 13.
[291] UN Security Council, Res. 771, 13 August 1992, § 1.
[292] UN Security Council, Res. 780, 6 October 1992, preamble; see also Res. 764, 13 July 1992, § 10.

of food and medical supplies essential for the survival of the civilian population" and affirmed that "those who commit . . . such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[293]

294. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the establishment of the ICTY, the UN Security Council recalled that "persons who commit . . . grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches" and expressed itself "determined to put an end to such crimes and to take effective measures to bring to justice the persons who are responsible for [violations of international humanitarian law]".[294]

295. In a resolution on Somalia adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council reiterated its demand that "all Somali parties, including movements and factions, immediately cease and desist from all breaches of international humanitarian law" and reaffirmed that "those responsible for such acts be held individually accountable".[295]

296. In a resolution adopted in 1993 with respect to the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "those who commit or have committed [massive, organized and systematic detention and rape of women] will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[296]

297. By Resolution 827 of May 1993, the UN Security Council established the ICTY as an ad hoc international tribunal "for the sole purpose of prosecuting the persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law in the territory of the former Yugoslavia". To the same end, it decided to adopt the ICTY Statute.[297]

298. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council recalled "the principle of individual responsibility for the perpetration of war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law and its decision in resolution 827 (1993) to establish an International Tribunal".[298]

299. In a resolution adopted in 1994 with respect to the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reiterated that "any persons committing violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible".[299]

300. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council recalled a statement by its President in which it "inter alia, condemned all breaches of international humanitarian law in Rwanda, particularly those perpetrated against the civilian population and recalled that persons who instigate or participate in such acts are individually responsible". The Security Council also recalled that "all persons who commit or authorize the commission of [293] UN Security Council, Res. 794, 3 December 1992, § 5.

[294] UN Security Council, Res. 808, 22 February 1993, preamble.
[295] UN Security Council, Res. 814, 26 March 1993, § 13.
[296] UN Security Council, Res. 820, 17 April 1993, § 6.
[297] UN Security Council, Res. 827, 25 May 1993, § 2.
[298] UN Security Council, Res. 859, 24 August 1993, § 7.
[299] UN Security Council, Res. 913, 22 April 1994, preamble.

serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations and should be brought to justice".[300]

301. By Resolution 955 of November 1994, the UN Security Council established the ICTR as an ad hoc tribunal > for the sole purpose of prosecuting persons responsible for genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for genocide and other such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994.

To this end, the Security Council decided to adopt the ICTR Statute, annexed to the resolution.[301]

302. In a resolution adopted in 1995 concerning the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reiterated that "all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[302]

303. By Resolution 1012 of 1995, the UN Security Council established the International Commission of Inquiry in Burundi, inter alia, to recommend measures to bring to justice persons responsible for the assassination of the President of Burundi, the massacres and other related serious acts of violence which followed, to prevent any repetition of deeds similar to those investigated by the commission and, in general, to eradicate impunity. The Security Council recalled that "all persons who commit or authorize the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for these violations and should be held accountable".[303]

304. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "all violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia" and reiterated that "all those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[304]

305. In a resolution on Burundi adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council recalled that "all persons who commit or authorize the commission of serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for such violations and should be held accountable" and reaffirmed "the need to put an end to impunity for such acts and the climate that fosters them".[305]

306. In a resolution on Angola adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council stressed "the need for the Angolan parties to give greater attention to [300] UN Security Council, Res. 935, 1 July 1994, preamble.

[301] UN Security Council, Res. 955, 8 November 1994, § 1.
[302] UN Security Council, Res. 1009, 10 August 1995, § 4; see also Res. 1010, 10 August 1995, § 3.
[303] UN Security Council, Res. 1012, 28 August 1995, preamble and § 1.
[304] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, § 1.
[305] UN Security Council, Res. 1072, 30 August 1996, preamble.

preventing incidents of human rights abuse, investigating alleged human rights violations, and punishing those found guilty by due process of law".[306]

307. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "persons who commit . . . grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[307]

308. In a resolution on East Timor adopted in 1999, the UN Security Council expressed "its concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian and human rights law have been committed in East Timor" and stressed that "persons committing such violations bear individual responsibility". It also demanded that "those responsible for . . . acts [of violence in East Timor] be brought to justice".[308]

309. In the resolution establishing UNTAET in 1999 in the context of the situation in East Timor, the UN Security Council expressed "its concern at reports indicating that systematic, widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian and human rights law have been committed in East Timor" and stressed that "persons committing such violations bear individual responsibility". It also demanded that "those responsible for . . . violence [in East Timor] be brought to justice".[309]

310. By Resolution 1315 of 2000, the UN Security Council established the Special Court for Sierra Leone. In the resolution, it reaffirmed that "persons who commit or authorize serious violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and that the international community will exert every effort to bring those responsible to justice".[310] It also recommended that:

> The special court should have personal jurisdiction over persons who bear the greatest responsibility for the commission of the crimes referred to in paragraph 2 [notably crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law, as well as crimes under relevant Sierra Leonean law committed within the territory of Sierra Leone].[311]

311. In 1992, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council condemned attacks on the UNPROFOR position in Sarajevo and stated that "the members of the Council call upon all parties to ensure that those responsible for these intolerable acts are quickly called to account".[312]

312. In February 1993, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council declared that:

[306] UN Security Council, Res. 1087, 11 December 1996, preamble.
[307] UN Security Council, Res. 1193, 28 August 1998, § 12.
[308] UN Security Council, Res. 1264, 15 September 1999, preamble and § 1.
[309] UN Security Council, Res. 1272, 25 October 1999, preamble and § 16.
[310] UN Security Council, Res. 1315, 14 August 2000, preamble.
[311] UN Security Council, Res. 1315, 14 August 2000, § 3.
[312] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/24379, 4 August 1992.

The deliberate impeding of the delivery of food and humanitarian relief essential for the survival of the civilian population in Bosnia and Herzegovina constitutes a violation of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Council is committed to ensuring that individuals responsible for such acts are brought to justice.[313]

313. In March 1993, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "those guilty of crimes against international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible by the world community".[314]

314. In April 1993, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "those guilty of crimes against international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible by the world community".[315]

315. In April 1993, in a statement by its President following the death of persons detained by Bosnian Serb forces when the vehicle transporting them for work at the front was ambushed, the UN Security Council condemned all violations of GC III and IV and reaffirmed that "those who commit . . . such acts will be held personally responsible".[316]

316. In June 1993, in a statement by its President regarding the conflict in Angola, the UN Security Council strongly condemned an attack by UNITA on a train carrying civilians, qualifying it "as a clear violation of . . . international humanitarian law" and stressing that "those responsible must be held accountable".[317]

317. In October 1993, in a statement by its President following a reported "massacre of the civilian population . . . by troops of the Croatian Defence Council" and "accounts of attacks against UNPROFOR by armed persons bearing uniforms of the Bosnian Government forces, and of an attack to which an humanitarian convoy under the protection of UNPROFOR was subjected" in central Bosnia, the UN Security Council reiterated that "those responsible for such violations of international humanitarian law should be held accountable in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Council".[318]

318. In January 1994, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council condemned "the flagrant violations of international humanitarian law which have occurred for which it holds the perpetrators individually responsible".[319]

[313] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25334, 25 February 1993, p. 1.
[314] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25361, 3 March 1993, p. 1.
[315] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25520, 3 April 1993, p. 1.
[316] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25557, 8 April 1993.
[317] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25899, 8 June 1993.
[318] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/26661, 28 October 1993.
[319] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/1, 7 January 1994, p. 1.

319. In March 1994, in a statement by its President regarding the conflict in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council recalled that "those who violate international humanitarian law bear individual responsibility".[320]

320. In April 1994, in a statement by its President concerning the situation in Rwanda, the UN Security Council condemned the killing of "Government leaders, many civilians and at least ten Belgian peace-keepers as well as the reported kidnapping of others" and stated that the perpetrators of these "horrific attacks . . . must be held responsible".[321]

321. In August 1994, in a statement by its President concerning the situation in Rwanda, the UN Security Council stated that:

> The Council encourages the Government of Rwanda to cooperate with the United Nations, in particular with the Commission of Experts established by the Council in its resolution 935 (1994), in ensuring that those guilty of the atrocities committed in Rwanda, in particular the crime of genocide, are brought to justice through an appropriate mechanism or mechanisms which will ensure fair and impartial trials in accordance with international standards of justice.[322]

322. In September 1994, in a statement by its President regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council condemned "all violations of international humanitarian law in the conflict in the Republic in Bosnia and Herzegovina, for which those who commit them are personally responsible".[323]

323. In October 1994, in a statement by its President concerning the situation in Rwanda, the UN Security Council reaffirmed its view that "those responsible for serious breaches of international humanitarian law and acts of genocide must be brought to justice".[324]

324. In 1994, in a statement by its President concerning the situation in Burundi, the UN Security Council reaffirmed "the importance of bringing to justice those responsible for the coup of 21 October 1993 and subsequent inter-ethnic massacres and other violations of international humanitarian law".[325]

325. In July 1995, in a statement by its President regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed "its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law" and reiterated "to all concerned that those who have committed . . . such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[326]

326. In 1995, in a statement by its President regarding the situation in Croatia, the UN Security Council reminded "the parties of their responsibilities under [320] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/12, 23 March 1994.

[321] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/16, 7 April 1994.
[322] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/42, 10 August 1994.
[323] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/50, 2 September 1994.
[324] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/59, 14 October 1994, p. 2.
[325] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/60, 21 October 1994.
[326] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/33, 20 July 1995.

international humanitarian law" and reiterated that "those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[327]

327. In September 1995, in a statement by its President regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reiterated that "those who commit violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[328] The same message was conveyed by the Security Council in a subsequent statement by its President.[329]

328. In October 1995, in a statement by its President regarding the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "those who have committed ... violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible for them".[330]

329. In 1998, in a statement by its President concerning the situation in the DRC, the UN Security Council stated that it:

> recognizes the necessity to investigate further the massacres, other atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law and to prosecute those responsible. It deplores the delay in the administration of justice. The Council calls on the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to investigate without delay, in their respective countries, the allegations contained in the report of the Investigative Team and to bring to justice any persons found to have been involved in these or other massacres, atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law. The Council takes note of the stated willingness of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to try any of its nationals who are guilty of or were implicated in the alleged massacres ... Such action is of great importance in helping to bring an end to impunity and to foster lasting peace and stability in the region. It urges Member States to cooperate with the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda in the investigation and prosecution of these persons.[331]

The UN Security Council further expressed its > readiness to consider, as necessary in light of actions by the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda, additional steps to ensure that the perpetrators of the massacres, other atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law are brought to justice.[332]

330. In 1998, in a statement by its President concerning the situation in the DRC, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "all persons who

[327] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/38, 4 August 1995.
[328] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/43, 7 September 1995, p. 1.
[329] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/44, 7 September 1995, p. 2.
[330] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/52, 12 October 1995, p. 2.
[331] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/20, 13 July 1998, pp. 1–2.
[332] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/20, 13 July 1998, p. 2.

commit . . . grave breaches of the [Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols of 1977] are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[333]

331. In a resolution adopted in 1946, the UN General Assembly affirmed "the principles of international law recognized by the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and the judgment of the Tribunal". It also called upon the Committee on the Progressive Development of International Law and its Codification (a predecessor of the ILC) > to treat as a matter of primary importance plans for the formation, in the context of a general codification of offences against the peace and security of mankind, or of an International Criminal Code, of the principles recognized in the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and in the judgment of the Tribunal.[334]

332. By Resolution 177 (II) of 1947, the UN General Assembly established the ILC which was directed, inter alia, to "formulate the principles of international law recognized in the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and in the judgement of the Tribunal".[335] However, after the ILC had formulated the 1950 Nuremberg Principles, the General Assembly did not formally adopt them by a resolution.

333. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly stated that "persons against whom there is evidence that they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity shall be subject to trial and, if found guilty, to punishment, as a general rule in the countries in which they have committed those crimes".[336]

334. In a resolution adopted in 1981 regarding the conflict in the Near East, the UN General Assembly expressed "deep concern that Israel, the occupying Power, has failed so far to apprehend and prosecute the perpetrators of the assassination attempts" which had been carried out against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh. It referred to Article 27 GC IV.[337]

335. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN General Assembly urged the UN Security Council "to consider recommending the establishment of an ad hoc international war crimes tribunal to try and punish those who have committed war crimes in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina".[338]

336. In a resolution adopted in 1993 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly, "welcoming the establishment of

[333] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/26, 31 August 1998, pp. 1–2.
[334] UN General Assembly, Res. 95 (I), 11 December 1946.
[335] UN General Assembly, Res. 177 (II), 21 November 1947, § (a).
[336] UN General Assembly, Res. 3074 (XXVIII), 3 December 1973, § 5.
[337] UN General Assembly, Res. 36/147 G, 16 December 1981, preamble and § 1.
[338] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/121, 18 December 1992, § 10.

the [ICTY]", reaffirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity and other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations".[339]

337. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1993, the UN General Assembly, "welcoming the convening of the [ICTY] and the naming of its Chief Prosecutor", stated that it supported "the determination of the Security Council that all persons who perpetrate or authorize violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those breaches and that the international community shall exert every effort to bring them to justice".[340]

338. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN General Assembly, "welcoming the establishment of the [ICTY]", affirmed "individual responsibility for the perpetration of crimes against humanity and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in Bosnia and Herzegovina".[341]

339. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly noted that "all serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1 January 1991 are within the jurisdiction of the [ICTY], and that persons who commit such acts in the context of the existing conflict will be held accountable".[342]

340. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity or other violations of international law are individually responsible for those violations".[343]

341. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that:

> All persons who commit or authorize genocide or other grave violations of international humanitarian law or those who are responsible for grave violations of human rights are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and . . . the international community will exert every effort to bring those responsible to justice in accordance with international principles of due process.[344]

The General Assembly also welcomed the establishment of the ICTR.[345]

342. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on rape and abuse of women in areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity or other

[339] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/143, 20 December 1993, preamble and § 5.
[340] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/153, 20 December 1993, preamble and § 7.
[341] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/10, 3 November 1994, preamble and § 26.
[342] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 11.
[343] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/205, 23 December 1994, § 6.
[344] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/206, 23 December 1994, § 4; see also Res. 50/200, 22 December 1995, § 6 and Res. 51/114, 12 December 1996, § 4.
[345] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/206, 23 December 1994, § 5.

violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations".[346]

343. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1995, the UN General Assembly condemned "in the strongest terms all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law by the parties to the conflict" and stated that "persons who commit such acts will be held personally responsible and accountable".[347]

344. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN General Assembly urged "the Afghan authorities ... to bring perpetrators [of grave violations of human rights and of accepted humanitarian rules] to trial in accordance with internationally accepted standards".[348]

345. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity or other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations".[349]

346. In a resolution adopted in 2001 entitled "Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts", to which the 2001 ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility, and thus Article 58 concerning "Individual responsibility", was annexed, the UN General Assembly took note of the Draft Articles and commended them to the attention of governments "without prejudice to the question of their future adoption or other appropriate action".[350]

347. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights affirmed that:

> All persons who perpetrate or authorize violations of international humanitarian law, including the above-mentioned acts, are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and ... the international community will exert every effort to bring those responsible for such violations to justice in accordance with internationally recognized principles of due process.[351]

348. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that:

> All persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity and other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations, and ... those in positions of authority who have failed adequately to

[346] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/192, 22 December 1995, § 4.
[347] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 3.
[348] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/108, 12 December 1996, § 11.
[349] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/115, 12 December 1996, § 4.
[350] UN General Assembly, Res. 56/83, 12 December 2001, § 3 and Annex.
[351] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/7, 23 February 1993, § 18.

ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable along with the perpetrators.[352]

349. In a resolution adopted in 1994 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible and accountable".[353]

350. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that:

> All persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity and other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations, and that those in positions of authority who have failed adequately to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable together with the perpetrators.[354]

351. In a resolution adopted in 1995 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible and accountable".[355]

352. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "all persons who plan, commit or authorize [violations of human rights and IHL] will be held personally responsible and accountable" and called upon the government of Croatia "to pursue vigorously prosecutions against those suspected of past violations of international humanitarian law and human rights".[356]

353. In resolutions on Rwanda adopted in 1995 and 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the principle that "all persons who commit or authorize genocide or other grave violations of international humanitarian law and those who are responsible for grave violations of human rights are individually responsible and accountable for those violations".[357]

354. In a resolution on East Timor adopted in 1999, the UN Commission on Human Rights affirmed that:

> All persons who commit or authorize violations of human rights or international humanitarian law are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and . . . the international community will exert every effort to ensure that those [352] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/8, 23 February 1993, § 5.

[353] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 17.
[354] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/77, 9 March 1994, § 5.
[355] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/89, 8 March 1995, § 19.
[356] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, §§ 1 and 22.
[357] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/91, 8 March 1995, § 4; Res. 1996/76, 23 April 1996, § 4.

responsible are brought to justice, while affirming that the primary responsibility for bringing perpetrators to justice rests with national judicial systems.[358]

The Commission also called upon the government of Indonesia "to ensure, in cooperation with the Indonesian National Commission on Human Rights, that the persons responsible for acts of violence and flagrant and systematic violations of human rights are brought to justice". It requested the UN Secretary-General "to establish an international commission of inquiry . . . in order . . . to gather and compile systematically information on possible violations of human rights and acts which may constitute breaches of international humanitarian law committed in East Timor since the announcement in January 1999 of the vote".[359]

355. In a resolution on Sierra Leone adopted in 1999, the UN Commission on Human Rights reminded all factions and forces in Sierra Leone that "in any armed conflict, including an armed conflict not of an international character, the taking of hostages, wilful killing and torture or inhuman treatment of persons taking no active part in the hostilities constitute grave breaches of international humanitarian law".[360]

356. In a resolution on impunity adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights emphasised "the importance of taking all necessary and possible steps to hold accountable perpetrators, including their accomplices, of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law". It also recognised that "crimes such as genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture are violations of international law and that perpetrators of such crimes should be prosecuted . . . by States".[361]

357. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on punishment of the crime of genocide, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights affirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize the commission of genocide and related crimes are individually responsible for such actions".[362]

358. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the role of universal or extraterritorial competence in preventive action against impunity, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights stated that it believed that "the highest priority should be given, independently of the circumstances in which these violations were committed, to legal proceedings against all individuals responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity, including former heads of State or Government".[363]

359. In 1993, in his report on the draft Statute of the ICTY, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

[358] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/S-4/1, 27 September 1999, § 4.
[359] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/S-4/1, 27 September 1999, §§ 5(a) and 6.
[360] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/1, 6 April 1999, § 2.
[361] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/79, 25 April 2002, §§ 2 and 11.
[362] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/8, 20 August 1993, § 1.
[363] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2000/24, 18 August 2000, § 2.

53. An important element in relation to the competence ratione personae (personal jurisdiction) of the [ICTY] is the principle of individual criminal responsibility . . . The Security Council has reaffirmed in a number of resolutions that persons committing serious violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia are individually responsible for such violations.
54. The Secretary-General believes that all persons who participate in the planning, preparation or execution of serious violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia contribute to the commission of the violation and are, therefore, individually responsible.[364]

360. In 2001, in the recommendations in his report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General urged:

the Security Council and the General Assembly to provide, from the outset, reliable, sufficient and sustained funding for international efforts, whether existing or future international tribunals, arrangements established in the context of United Nations peace operations or initiatives undertaken in concert with individual Member States, to bring to justice perpetrators of grave violations of international humanitarian and human rights law.[365]

361. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council regarding the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, the UN Deputy Secretary-General stated, inter alia, that "the perpetrators of attacks against United Nations and humanitarian personnel must be brought to justice".[366]

362. In 1997, in his second report on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

In requesting the de facto authorities to take steps to punish the blunders and the massacres, the Special Rapporteur is seeking, not to single them out, but rather to encourage them to honour the commitments made earlier by the Burundi Government. As he said in his previous report to the General Assembly . . . the violence and the unrest which prevail in Burundi can be attributed to several actors or parties, first and foremost to the armed forces and the security forces, next, to the militias, which are related to them, and, lastly, to an armed opposition that itself comprises various groups. All these actors are responsible, although to varying degrees, for the grave violations of human rights and international humanitarian law which are being perpetrated.[367]

363. In 2000, in a report on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the Special Representative of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that, as at 30 November 1999, 2,406 of the 121,500 persons in detention had been tried in Rwanda before a special genocide court. Of these, 348 (14.4 per cent)

[364] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Paragraph 2 of Security Council Resolution 808 (1993), UN Doc. S/25704, 3 May 1993, §§ 53–54.
[365] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, Recommendation 1.
[366] UN Deputy Secretary-General, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 11.
[367] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Burundi, Second report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/12, 10 February 1997, § 11.

were condemned to death, 30.3 per cent were sentenced to life imprisonment, 34 per cent received jail terms of between 1 and 20 years, and 19 per cent were acquitted. The Special Representative also noted and applauded the introduction of a new system of community justice for genocide suspects known as gacaca.[368]

364. In 1998, in a report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur concluded that:

> Individual perpetrators of slavery, crimes against humanity, genocide, torture and war crimes – whether State or non-State actors – must be held responsible for their crimes at the international level, depending on the circumstances of the case and on the capacity and availability of forums to adjudicate fairly and dispense justice adequately.[369]

365. In 1999, in a report on the situation in East Timor, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights stated that:

> 4. It has become a widely accepted principle of contemporary international law and practice that wherever human rights are being grossly violated . . . the facts must be gathered with a view to shedding light on what has taken place and with a view to bringing those responsible to justice; and that the perpetrators of gross violations must be made accountable and justice rendered to the victims.
> . . .
> 48. The High Commissioner has urged the Indonesian authorities to cooperate in the establishment of an international commission of inquiry into the violations so that those responsible are brought to justice.[370]

366. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted that "there does not appear to be a customary international law applicable to internal armed conflicts which includes the concept of war crimes".[371] Referring to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, AP II and Article 19 of the 1954 Hague Convention, the Commission noted that these provisions did not use the terms "grave breaches" or "war crimes". It added that "the content of customary law applicable to internal armed conflict is debatable", and as a result, "in general, unless the parties to an internal armed conflict agree otherwise, the only offences committed in internal armed

[368] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Representative on the Situation of Human Rights in Rwanda, Report, UN Doc. A/55/269, 4 August 2000, §§ 144 and 156–176.

[369] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, § 113.

[370] UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Report on the situation of human rights in East Timor, UN Doc. E/CN.4/2000/44, 24 March 2000, §§ 4 and 48.

[371] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 42.

conflict for which universal jurisdiction exists are 'crimes against humanity' and genocide, which apply irrespective of the conflicts' classification".[372]

367. In 1994, in its preliminary report on grave violations of IHL in Rwanda, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994) strongly recommended that "the Security Council take all necessary and effective action to ensure that the individuals responsible for the serious violations of human rights in Rwanda during armed conflict . . . are brought to justice before an independent and impartial international criminal tribunal".[373]

368. In 1994, in its final report on grave violations of IHL in Rwanda, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994) noted that it had been informed by the Rwandan Minister of Defence that the government had detained 70 FPR soldiers and intended to try and punish them for private acts of revenge exacted against Hutus. The government emphasised that these acts were not only unauthorised, but subject to heavy military discipline and punishment. The Commission of Experts considered that "the armed conflict between 6 April and 15 July 1994 qualifies as a non-international armed conflict".[374]

369. In 1996, in its final report, the International Commission of Inquiry in Burundi stated with regard to the assassination of Burundi's President Ndadaye as well as that of the person constitutionally entitled to succeed him that "it is not in a position to identify the person that should be brought to justice for this crime".[375] It also stated that "evidence is sufficient to establish that acts of genocide . . . took place in Burundi", noting, however, that "with the evidence at hand, it is not in a position to identify by name the persons that should be brought to justice for the acts to which the conclusions refer".[376]

370. In a report in 1947, the UN Committee on the Progressive Development of International Law and its Codification concluded that the ILC should be established which would have to formulate the Nuremberg Principles within a Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind.[377]

371. The ILC Commentary on Principle I of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles notes that "the general rule underlying Principle I is that international law

[372] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 52.
[373] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994), Preliminary report, UN Doc. S/1994/1125, 4 October 1994, § 150.
[374] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/1405, 9 December 1994, §§ 99 and 108.
[375] International Commission of Inquiry in Burundi, Final report, UN Doc. S/1996/682, 22 August 1996, Annex, § 213.
[376] International Commission of Inquiry in Burundi, Final report, UN Doc. S/1996/682, 22 August 1996, Annex, § 487.
[377] UN Committee on the Progressive Development of International Law and its Codification, Report, UN Doc. A/332, 21 July 1947.

may impose duties on individuals directly without any interposition of internal law".[378]

372. The ILC Commentary on Principle II of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles notes that:

> This Principle is a corollary to Principle I. Once it is admitted that individuals are responsible for crimes under international law, it is obvious that they are not relieved from their international responsibility by the fact that their acts are not held to be crimes under the law of any particular country . . . The principle that a person who has committed an international crime is responsible therefor and liable to punishment under international law, independently of the provisions of internal law, implies what is commonly called the "supremacy" of international law over national law.[379]

Other International Organisations

373. In a resolution adopted in 1991, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called for a war crimes tribunal to be established to deal with crimes committed by the Iraqi authorities during the Gulf War.[380]

374. In a recommendation adopted in 1992, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called for the establishment of a permanent international court to try war criminals generally.[381]

375. In 1993 and 1995, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe welcomed the establishment of the ICTY, condemning all human rights violations committed during the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia and insisting that "the perpetrators of such offences be brought to justice".[382]

376. In a declaration adopted in 1991, the EC Ministers of Foreign Affairs expressed their determination that "those responsible for the unprecedented violence in Yugoslavia, with its ever-increasing loss of life, should be held accountable under international law for their actions".[383]

377. In 1994, in a statement contained in a EU Council decision related to a EU common position adopted on Rwanda, the Council of the EU stressed:

> the importance of bringing to justice those responsible for the grave violations of humanitarian law, including genocide. In this respect the European Union considers [378] ILC, Report of the International Law Commission Covering its Second Session, UN Doc. A/1316, 5 June–29 July 1950, § 99.

[379] ILC, Report of the International Law Commission Covering its Second Session, UN Doc. A/1316, 5 June–29 July 1950, §§ 100–102.

[380] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 954, 29 January 1991, § 11.

[381] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1189, 1 July 1992.

[382] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1218, 27 September 1993; Res. 1066, 27 September 1995, § 7.

[383] EC, Declaration on Yugoslavia, Haarzuilens, 6 October 1991, annexed to Letter dated 7 October 1991 from the Netherlands to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/46/533, 7 October 1991, Annex II.

the establishment of an international tribunal as an essential element to stop a tradition of impunity and to prevent future violations of human rights.[384]

378. In the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council demanded, with regard to the "Serb Aggression on the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina", that the UN Security Council bring to account "all those responsible for crimes committed against humanity, in accordance with the Geneva Conventions".[385]

379. In a resolution adopted in 1983, the Council of the League of Arab States invited the UN Secretary-General to send a fact-finding committee to investigate the occurrence in the territories occupied by Israel of "crimes which breach international charters, conventions and resolutions on the protection of civilian populations in times of occupation and to organize the trials of those who perpetrate such crimes against humanity".[386]

380. In a resolution on Liberia adopted in 1996, the OAU Council of Ministers warned the warring faction leaders that:

> Should the ECOWAS assessment of the Liberian peace process . . . turn out to be negative, the OAU will help sponsor a draft resolution in the UN Security Council for the imposition of severe sanctions on them including the possibility of the setting up of a war crime tribunal to try the leadership of the Liberian warring factions on the gross violation of the human rights of Liberians.[387]

International Conferences

381. In 1992, at the Helsinki Summit of Heads of State or Government, CSCE participating States recalled that "those who violate international humanitarian law are held personally accountable".[388]

382. In a decision adopted in 1993, the Ministerial Council of the CSCE stated that "the Ministers focused attention on the need for urgent action to enforce the strict observance of the norms of international humanitarian law, including the prosecution and punishment of those guilty of war crimes and other crimes against humanity".[389]

[384] EU, Council, Decision 94/697/CFSP concerning the common position adopted on the basis of Article J.2 of the Treaty of the European Union on the objectives and priorities of the European Union vis-à-vis Rwanda, 24 October 1994, Official Journal L 283, 29 October 1994, pp. 1–2, Article 1 and Annex.

[385] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, p. 9.

[386] League of Arab States, Council, Res. No. 4238, 31 March 1993, § 3.

[387] OAU, Council of Ministers, Sixty-Fourth Ordinary Session, Yaoundé, 1–5 July 1996, Res. 1650 (LXIV), § 12, reprinted in UN Doc. A/51/524, 18 October 1996, p. 15.

[388] CSCE, Helsinki Summit of Heads of State or Government, Helsinki, 9–10 July 1992, Helsinki Document 1992: The Challenges of Change, Decisions, Chapter VI: The Human Dimension, § 49.

[389] CSCE, Ministerial Council, Fourth Meeting: CSCE and the New Europe – Our Security is Indivisible, Rome, 30 November 1993–1 December 1993, Decisions, Chapter X: Declaration on Aggressive Nationalism, Racism, Chauvinism, Xenophobia and Anti-Semitism, § 4.

383. In the Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, the participants at the African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers in 1999 called upon all African States to bring to justice "those who continue to recruit or use children as soldiers".[390]

384. In the Final Declaration of the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002, the participants committed themselves to see "that individuals responsible for violations of [IHL] be brought to justice and punished".[391]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

385. In its judgement of 1946, the IMT (Nuremberg) asserted that the Charter which had established it, inasmuch as it provided for individual responsibility for crimes against the peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity, "is not an arbitrary exercise of power on the part of the victorious Nations, but in the view of the Tribunal . . . is the expression of international law existing at the time of its creation".[392] Still on the subject of individual responsibility, the Tribunal rejected arguments that international law was exclusively concerned with the actions of sovereign States and provided no punishment for individuals. The Tribunal held that it was long established that international law imposed duties and liabilities on individuals as well as on States and referred to a number of authorities which showed that individuals could be punished for violations of international law. It added that "crimes against international law are committed by men, not by abstract entities, and only by punishing individuals who commit such crimes can the provisions of international law be enforced".[393]

386. In its judgement in the Application of Genocide Convention case (Preliminary Objections) in 1996, the ICJ addressed the FRY's contention that the 1948 Genocide Convention was not applicable in internal conflicts. The Court referred to Article 1 of the Convention, which provides that "genocide, whether committed in time of peace or in time of armed war, is a crime under international law which [the Contracting Parties] undertake to prevent and punish". The ICJ determined that there was nothing in this provision "which would make the applicability of the Convention subject to the condition that the acts contemplated by it should have been committed within the framework of a particular type of conflict".[394]

[390] African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers, Maputo, 19–22 April 1999, Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, § 2.

[391] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, preamble and § 11.

[392] IMT (Nuremberg), Judgement, 1 October 1946, § 2.

[393] IMT (Nuremberg), Judgement, 1 October 1946, pp. 218, 222 and 223.

[394] ICJ, Application of Genocide Convention case (Preliminary Objections), Judgement, 11 July 1996, § 31.

387. In its judgement in the Akayesu case in 1998, the ICTR quoted Article 6(1) of the 1994 ICTR Statute and stated that:

> 472. ... Thus, in addition to responsibility as principal perpetrator, the Accused can be held responsible for the criminal acts of others where he plans with them, instigates them, ... or aids and abets them to commit those acts.
> 473. Thus, Article 6(1) covers various stages of the commission of a crime, ranging from its initial planning to its execution, through its organization. However, the principle of individual criminal responsibility as provided for in Article 6(1) implies that the planning or preparation of the crime actually leads to its commission. Indeed, the principle of individual criminal responsibility for an attempt to commit a crime obtained only in case of genocide. Conversely, this would mean that with respect to any other form of criminal participation and, in particular, those referred to in Article 6(1), the perpetrator would incur criminal responsibility only if the offence were completed.
> 474. Article 6(1) thus appears to be in accord with the Judgments of the Nuremberg Tribunal which held that persons other than those who committed the crime ... could incur individual criminal responsibility.[395]

Making a distinction between Article 6(1) and Article 6(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, the ICTR further stated that:

> 479. ... As can be seen, the forms of participation referred to in Article 6(1), cannot render their perpetrator criminally liable where he did not act knowingly, and even where he should have had such knowledge. This greatly differs from Article 6(3) ... which does not necessarily require that the superior acted knowingly to render him criminally liable ...
> 480. The first form of liability set forth in Article 6(1) is planning of a crime. Such planning is similar to the notion of complicity in Civil law, or conspiracy under Common law, as stipulated in Article 2(3) of the Statute. But the difference is that planning, unlike complicity or plotting, can be an act committed by one person. Planning can thus be defined as implying that one or several persons contemplate designing the commission of a crime at both the preparatory and execution phases.
> 481. The second form of liability is "incitation" (in the French version of the Statute) to commit a crime, reflected in the English version of Article 6(1) by the word instigated. In English, it seems the words incitement and instigation are synonymous. Furthermore, the word "instigated" or "instigation" is used to refer to incitation in several other instruments. However, in certain legal systems and, under Civil law, in particular, the two concepts are very different. Furthermore, and even assuming that the two words were synonymous, the question would be to know whether instigation under Article 6(1) must include the direct and public elements, required for incitement, particularly, incitement to commit genocide (Article 2(3)(c) of the Statute) which, in this instance, translates incitation into English as "incitement" and no longer "instigation". Some people are of that opinion. The Chamber also accepts this interpretation.

[395] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, §§ 472–474.

482. That said, the form of participation through instigation stipulated in Article 6(1) of the Statute, involves prompting another to commit an offence; but this is different from incitement in that it is punishable only where it leads to the actual commission of an offence desired by the instigator.[396] [emphasis in original]

The ICTR further added that:

611. For the purposes of an international criminal Tribunal which is trying individuals, it is not sufficient merely to affirm that Common Article 3 [of the Geneva Conventions] and parts of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II – which comprise the subject-matter jurisdiction of Article 4 of the Statute – form part of international customary law. Even if Article 6 of the Statute provides for individual criminal responsibility as pertains to Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute, it must also be shown that an individual committing serious violations of these customary norms incurs, as a matter of custom, individual criminal responsibility thereby. Otherwise, it might be argued that these instruments only state norms applicable to States and Parties to a conflict, and that they do not create crimes for which individuals may be tried.
612. As regards individual criminal responsibility for serious violations of Common Article 3, the ICTY has already affirmed this principle in the Tadić case. In the ICTY Appeals Chamber, the problem was posed thus:

"Even if customary international law includes certain basic principles applicable to both internal and international armed conflicts, Appellant argues that such provisions do not entail individual criminal responsibility when breaches are committed in internal armed conflicts; these provisions cannot, therefore, fall within the scope of the International Tribunal's jurisdiction."

613. Basing itself on rulings of the Nuremberg Tribunal, on "elements of international practice which show that States intend to criminalise serious breaches of customary rules and principles on internal conflicts", as well as on national legislation designed to implement the Geneva Conventions, the ICTY Appeals Chamber reached the conclusion:

"All of these factors confirm that customary international law imposes criminal liability for serious violations of common Article 3, as supplemented by other general principles and rules on protection of victims of internal armed conflict, and for breaching certain fundamental principles and rules regarding means and methods of combat in civil strife."

614. This was affirmed by the ICTY Trial Chamber when it rendered in the Tadić judgment.
615. The Chamber considers this finding of the ICTY Appeals Chamber convincing and dispositive of the issue, both with respect to serious violations of Common Article 3 and of Additional Protocol II.[397]

[396] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, §§ 479–482.
[397] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, §§ 611–615.

388. In its judgement in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case in 1999, the ICTR, quoting Article 6(1) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, stated that:

197. . . . If any of the modes of participation delineated in Article 6(1) can be shown, and the necessary actus reus and mens rea are evidenced, then that would suffice to adduce criminal responsibility under this Article.
198. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that . . . there is a further two stage test which must be satisfied in order to establish individual criminal responsibility under Article 6(1). This test required the demonstration of (i) participation, that is that the accused's conduct contributed to the commission of an illegal act, and (ii) knowledge or intent, that is awareness by the actor of his participation in a crime.
. . .
202. This jurisprudence extends naturally to give rise to responsibility when the accused failed to act in breach of a clear duty to act . . . Individual responsibility pursuant to Article 6(1) is based, in this instance, not on the duty to act, but from the encouragement and support that might be afforded to the principals of the crime from such an omission.[398]

389. In its judgement in the Rutaganda case in 1999, the ICTR stated that:

86. . . . In establishing the ICTY, the Secretary-General dealt with this issue by asserting that in the application of the principle of nullum crimen sine lege the International Tribunal should apply rules of international humanitarian law which are beyond any doubt part of customary law. However, in the case of this Tribunal, it was incumbent on the Chambers to decide whether or not the said principle had been adhered to, and whether individuals incurred individual criminal responsibility for violations of these international instruments.
87. In the Akayesu Judgement, the Chamber expressed its opinion that the "norms of Common Article 3 [of the Geneva Conventions] had acquired the status of customary law in that most States, by their domestic penal codes, have criminalized acts which, if committed during internal armed conflict, would constitute violations of Common Article 3". The finding of the Trial Chamber in this regard followed the precedents set by the ICTY, which established the customary nature of Common Article 3. Moreover, the Chamber in the Akayesu Judgement held that, although not all of Additional Protocol II could be said to be customary law, the guarantees contained in Article 4(2) (Fundamental Guarantees) thereof, which reaffirm and supplement Common Article 3, form part of existing international law. All of the norms reproduced in Article 4 of the Statute are covered by Article 4(2) of Additional Protocol II.
88. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber in the Akayesu Judgement concluded that violations of these norms would entail, as a matter of customary international law, individual responsibility for the perpetrator. It was also recalled that as Rwanda had become a party to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their 1977 Additional Protocols, on 5 May 1964 and 19 November 1984, respectively, these instruments were in any case in force in the territory of Rwanda in 1994, and formed part of Rwandan law. Thus, Rwandan nationals who violated these international instruments incorporated into national law, including those offences as incorporated in Article 4 of the Statute, could be tried before the Rwandan national courts.

[398] ICTR, Kayishema and Ruzindana case, Judgement, 21 May 1999, §§ 197–198 and 202.

89. In the Kayishema and Ruzindana Judgement, Trial Chamber II deemed it unnecessary to delve into the question as to whether the instruments incorporated in Article 4 of the Statute should be considered as customary international law. Rather the Trial Chamber found that the instruments were in force in the territory of Rwanda in 1994 and that persons could be prosecuted for breaches thereof on the basis that Rwanda had become a party to the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols. The offences enumerated in Article 4 of the Statute, said the Trial Chamber, also constituted offences under Rwandan law.
90. Thus it is clear that, at the time the crimes alleged in the Indictment were perpetrated, persons were bound to respect the guarantees provided for by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their 1977 Additional Protocols, as incorporated in Article 4 of the Statute. Violations thereof, as a matter of custom and convention, incurred individual responsibility, and could result in the prosecution of the authors of the offences.[399]

390. In its judgement in the Musema case in 2000, the ICTR stated that:

The Chamber therefore concludes that, at the time the crimes alleged in the Indictment were perpetrated, persons were bound to respect the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their 1977 Additional Protocols, as incorporated in Article 4 of the Statute. Violations thereof, as a matter of custom and convention, attracted individual criminal responsibility and could result in the prosecution of the authors of the offences.[400]

391. In the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) in 1995, the ICTY Appeals Chamber addressed the issue of whether the Tribunal had jurisdiction over violations committed in non-international armed conflicts. The Appeals Chamber concluded that Article 2 of the Statute which gave the Tribunal jurisdiction over grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions was limited to violations committed in international conflicts.[401] Despite this conclusion, the Appeals Chamber nevertheless referred to the agreement between the conflicting parties in Bosnia and Herzegovina of 1 October 1992, which provided for the prosecution and punishment of those responsible for grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and, noting that the agreement "was clearly concluded within a framework of an internal armed conflict", accepted that the agreement "could be taken as an important indication of the present trend to extend the grave breaches provisions to such category of conflicts".[402] Turning to Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute on violations of the laws or customs of war, the Appeals Chamber stated that "Article 3 is intended to cover all violations of international humanitarian law other than the 'grave breaches' of the four Geneva Conventions falling under Article 2 (or, for that matter, the violations covered

[399] ICTR, Rutaganda case, Judgement, 6 December 1999, §§ 86–90.
[400] ICTR, Musema case, Judgement, 27 January 2000, § 242.
[401] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 81.
[402] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 83.

by Articles 4 and 5, to the extent that Articles 3, 4 and 5 overlap)".[403] (emphasis in original) The Appeals Chamber then laid down a number of conditions that would have to be met for a violation of IHL to be subject to Article 3, the last of which was that "the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule".[404] Under a special heading entitled "Individual Criminal Responsibility in Internal Armed Conflict", the Appeals Chamber stated that:

128. . . . It is true that, for example, common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions contains no explicit reference to criminal liability for violation of its provisions. Faced with similar claims with respect to the various agreements and conventions that formed the basis of its jurisdiction, the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg concluded that a finding of individual criminal responsibility is not barred by the absence of treaty provisions on punishment of breaches . . .
129. Applying the [criteria set fourth by the IMT (Nuremberg)] to the violations at issue here, we have no doubt that they entail individual criminal responsibility, regardless of whether they are committed in internal or international armed conflicts. Principles and rules of humanitarian law reflect "elementary considerations of humanity" widely recognized as the mandatory minimum for conduct in armed conflicts of any kind. No one can doubt the gravity of the acts at issue, nor the interest of the international community in their prohibition.
130. Furthermore, many elements of international practice show that States intend to criminalize serious breaches of customary rules and principles on internal conflicts . . . During the Nigerian Civil War, both members of the Federal Army and rebels were brought before Nigerian courts and tried for violations of principles of international humanitarian law.[405]

Moreover, referring to, inter alia, military manuals of Germany, New Zealand, UK and US, as well as to certain provisions of the Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY), to Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, and to two UN Security Council resolutions on Somalia, the Appeals Chamber stated that:

134. All of these factors confirm that customary international law imposes criminal liability for serious violations of common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions], as supplemented by other general principles and rules on the protection of victims of internal armed conflict, and for breaching certain fundamental principles and rules regarding means and methods of combat in civil strife.
135. It should be added that, in so far as it applies to offences committed in the former Yugoslavia, the notion that serious violations of international humanitarian law governing internal armed conflicts entail individual criminal responsibility is also fully warranted from the point of view of substantive justice and equity . . . Such violations were punishable under the [SFRY (FRY) Penal Code as amended] . . . Nationals of the former Yugoslavia as well as, at present, those of Bosnia-Herzegovina were therefore aware, or should have been aware, that they were amenable to the jurisdiction of their national criminal courts in cases of violation of international humanitarian law.[406]

[403] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 87.
[404] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 94.
[405] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, §§ 128–130.

The Appeals Chamber further referred to the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina and to the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners and stated that:

As both Agreements referred to in the above paragraphs were clearly intended to apply in the context of an internal armed conflict, the conclusion is warranted that the conflicting parties in Bosnia-Herzegovina had clearly agreed at the level of treaty law to make punishable breaches of international humanitarian law occurring within the framework of that conflict.[407]

The Appeals Chamber concluded that:

in the light of the intent of the Security Council and the logical and systematic interpretation of Article 3 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] as well as customary international law, . . . , under Article 3, the International Tribunal has jurisdiction over the acts alleged in the indictment, regardless of whether they occurred within an internal or an international armed conflict.[408]

392. In a separate opinion in the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) in 1995, Judge Abi-Saab asserted that "a strong case can be made for the application of Article 2 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute], even when the incriminated act takes place in an internal conflict". With regard to the position under customary law, he added that:

A growing practice and opinio juris, both of States and international organisations, has established the principle of personal criminal responsibility for the acts figuring in the grave breaches articles as well as for the other serious violations of the jus in bello, even when they are committed in the course of an internal armed conflict.[409]

393. In the indictment in the Mrkšić case before the ICTY in 1996, the Prosecutor, with regard to the individual responsibility of the accused for the killing of 260 persons, stated that:

Each of the accused is individually responsible for the crimes alleged against him in this indictment pursuant to Article 7(1) of the Tribunal Statute. Individual criminal responsibility includes committing, planning, instigating, ordering or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of any crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 5 of the Tribunal Statute.[410]

394. In its sentencing judgement in the Erdemović case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of the "violation of the laws and customs

[406] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, §§ 131–135.
[407] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 136.
[408] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, Decision, 2 October 1995, § 137.
[409] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, Separate Opinion of Judge Abi-Saab, 2 October 1995, p. 5.
[410] ICTY, Mrkšić case, Review of the Indictment, 3 April 1996, § 24.

of war" to which the accused himself had pleaded guilty, stating, however, that "there is nothing to substantiate Defence Counsel's submission to Trial Chamber (which was not raised again before this Trial Chamber) that when the accused committed the killings, he 'lacked mental responsibility because he suffered a temporary mental disorder or, at best, his mental responsibility was significantly diminished also'".[411]

395. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber, referring to Article 7(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, held that "this recognition that individuals may be held criminally responsible for their participation in the commission of offences in any of several capacities is in clear conformity with general principles of criminal law".[412] The Trial Chamber further stated that:

> It is . . . the view of the Trial Chamber that, in order for there to be individual criminal responsibility for degrees of involvement in a crime under the Tribunal's jurisdiction which do not constitute a direct performance of the acts which make up the offence, a showing must be made of both a physical and a mental element. The requisite actus reus for such responsibility is constituted by an act of participation which in fact contributes to, or has an effect on, the commission of the crime. Hence, this participation must have "a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act". The corresponding intent, or mens rea, is indicated by the requirement that the act of participation be performed with knowledge that it will assist the principal in the commission of the criminal act. Thus, there must be "awareness of the act of participation coupled with a conscious decision to participate by planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or otherwise aiding and abetting in the commission of a crime".[413]

396. In the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of "violations of the laws and customs of war" (torture and outrages upon personal dignity, including rape) under Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute.[414] It stated that:

> Article 3 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] has a very broad scope. It covers any serious violation of a rule of customary international humanitarian law entailing, under international customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule. It is immaterial whether the breach occurs within the context of an international or internal armed conflict.[415]

As to the count of torture, the Trial Chamber held that:

> Both customary rules and treaty provisions applicable in times of armed conflict prohibit any act of torture. Those who engage in torture are personally accountable at the criminal level for such acts . . . Individuals are personally responsible,

[411] ICTY, Erdemović case, Sentencing Judgement bis, 5 March 1998, §§ 16 and 23.
[412] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 321.
[413] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 326.
[414] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, Chapter IX.
[415] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 132.

whatever their official position, even if they are heads of State or government ministers: Article 7(2) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute and article 6(2) of the [1994 ICTR Statute] . . . are indisputably declaratory of customary international law.[416]

Examining the count of "rape and other serious sexual assaults in international law", the Trial Chamber, referring to numerous instances of case-law, noted that:

In sum, the Trial Chamber holds the legal ingredients of aiding and abetting in international criminal law to be the following: the actus reus consists of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime. The mens rea required is the knowledge that these acts assist the commission of the offence. This notion of aiding and abetting is to be distinguished from the notion of common design, where the actus reus consists of participation in a joint criminal enterprise and the mens rea required is intent to participate.[417]

397. In its judgement in the Aleksovski case in 1999, the ICTY Trial Chamber noted that "the accused was held responsible under Article 7(1) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] not for the crimes that he allegedly committed himself but for those committed by others which he is said to have personally ordered, instigated or otherwise aided and abetted".[418] Referring to previous judgements of both the ICTR and the ICTY, it stated that:

> 62. The forms of participation recognised as sufficient in customary international law are not limited to physical assistance provided while the unlawful act is being committed . . . Participation may occur before, during or after the act is committed. It can, for example, consist of providing the means to commit the crime or promising to perform certain acts once the crime has been committed, that is, behaviour which may in fact clearly constitute instigation or abetment of the perpetrators of the crime . . .
> 63. Such participation need not be manifested through physical assistance. Moral support or encouragement expressed in words or even by the mere presence at the site of the crime have at times been considered sufficient to conclude that the accused participated.
> 64. Mere presence constitutes sufficient participation under some circumstances so long as it was proved that the presence had a significant effect on the commission of the crime by promoting it and that the person present had the required mens rea . . .
> 65. . . . An individual's position of authority is not sufficient to lead to the conclusion that his mere presence constitutes a sign of encouragement which had a significant effect on the perpetration of the crime. It must be noted in fact that the aforementioned cases did not establish an individual's responsibility on this basis alone. Admittedly, the presence of an individual with uncontested authority over the perpetrators of the unlawful act may, in some > circumstances, be interpreted as approval of that conduct. The aforementioned cases moreover took into account the accused's prior or concomitant behaviour or statements in order to interpret his presence as an act of abetting. Moreover, it can hardly be doubted that the presence of an individual with authority will frequently be perceived by the perpetrators of the criminal act as a sign of encouragement likely to have a significant or even decisive effect on promoting its commission. The mens rea may be deduced from the circumstances, and the position of authority constitutes one of the circumstances which can be considered when establishing that the person against whom the claim is directed knew that his presence would be interpreted by the perpetrator of the wrongful act as a sign of support or encouragement. An individual's authority must therefore be considered to be an important indicium as establishing that his mere presence constitutes an act of intentional participation under Article 7(1) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute. Nonetheless, responsibility is not automatic and merits consideration against the background of the factual circumstances.[419]

[416] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 140.
[417] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 249.
[418] ICTY, Aleksovski case, Judgement, 25 June 1999, § 59.

398. In its judgement in the Jelisić case in 1999, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "as a rule of customary international law, Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions is covered by Article 3 of the [1993 ICTY] Statute" and, besides considering acts of murder and cruel treatment, with regard to Article 3(e) of the 1993 ICTY Statute found that "the individual acts of plunder perpetrated by people motivated by greed might entail individual criminal responsibility on the part of its perpetrators".[420] It found the accused guilty on various counts of "violations of the laws and customs of war" and crimes against humanity.[421]
399. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated, with regard to Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, that:

> Violations of Article 3 of the [1993 ICTY] Statute which include violations of the [1907 HR] and those of Common Article 3 are by definition serious violations of international humanitarian law within the meaning of the Statute. They are thus likely to incur individual criminal responsibility in accordance with Article 7 of the Statute.
> ...
> The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that ... customary international law imposes criminal responsibility for serious violations of Common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions].[422]

Drawing a clear distinction between Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Trial Chamber noted that:

> Whilst Article 7(1) deals with the commander's participation in the commission of a crime, Article 7(3) enshrines the principle of command responsibility in the strict sense which entails the commander's individual criminal responsibility if he did

[419] ICTY, Aleksovski case, Judgement, 25 June 1999, §§ 62–65.
[420] ICTY, Jelisić case, Judgement, 14 December 1999, §§ 34 and 48.
[421] ICTY, Jelisić case, Judgement, 14 December 1999, § 138.
[422] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 176.

not prevent crimes from being committed by his subordinates or, where applicable, punish them.[423]

The Trial Chamber further stated that:

The Trial Chamber concurs with the views deriving from the Tribunal's case-law, that is, that individuals may be held responsible for their participation in the commission of offences under any of the heads of individual criminal responsibility in Article 7(1) of the Statute. This approach is consonant with the general principles of criminal law and customary international law.[424]

400. In its judgement in the Kordić and Čerkez case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

> 168. As to the argument that Additional Protocol I does not entail individual criminal responsibility, the Trial Chamber recalls a statement in the Tadić Jurisdiction Decision:
>
> Faced with similar claims with respect to the various agreements and conventions that formed the basis of its jurisdiction, the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg concluded that a finding of individual criminal responsibility is not barred by the absence of treaty provisions on punishment of breaches. . . . because, as the Nuremberg Tribunal concluded "[c]rimes against international law are committed by men, not by abstract entities, and only by punishing individuals who commit such crimes can the provisions of international law be enforced."
>
> The Appeals Chamber in that case had no difficulty in finding that customary law "imposes criminal liability for serious violations of Common Article 3" of the Geneva Conventions, an article that contains no reference to individual responsibility. This finding was reaffirmed by the Appeals Chamber in Čelebići [Delalić case].
>
> 169. By analogy, violations of Additional Protocol I incur individual criminal liability in the same way that violations of Common Article 3 give rise to individual criminal liability.[425]

The Trial Chamber further held that:

> 364. Article 7 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] is clearly intended to assign individual criminal responsibility at different levels, both subordinate and superior, for the commission of crimes listed in Articles 2 to 5 of the Statute. Article 7 gives effect to a general principle of criminal law that an individual is responsible for his acts and omissions. It provides that an individual may be held criminally responsible for the direct commission of a crime, whether as an individual or jointly, or through his omissions for the crimes of his subordinates when under an obligation to act.
>
> . . .

[423] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 261.
[424] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 264.
[425] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, §§ 168–169.

371. The Trial Chamber is of the view that in cases where the evidence presented demonstrates that a superior would not only have been informed of subordinates' crimes committed under his authority, but also exercised his powers to plan, instigate or otherwise aid and abet in the planning, preparation or execution of these crimes, the type of criminal responsibility incurred may be better characterised by Article 7(1). Where the omissions of an accused in a position of superior authority contribute (for instance by encouraging the perpetrator) to the commission of a crime by a subordinate, the conduct of the superior may constitute a basis for liability under Article 7(1).[426]

401. In its judgement in the Krstić case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

The facts pertaining to the commission of a crime may establish that the requirements for criminal responsibility under both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] are met. However, the Trial Chamber adheres to the belief that where a commander participates in the commission of a crime through his subordinates, by "planning", "instigating" or "ordering" the commission of the crime, any responsibility under Article 7(3) is subsumed under Article 7(1). The same applies to the commander who incurs criminal responsibility under the joint criminal enterprise doctrine through the physical acts of his subordinates.[427] [emphasis in original]

With regard to General Krstic's individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Trial Chamber stated, inter alia, that:

610. In light of these facts, the Trial Chamber is of the view that the issue of General Krstic's criminal responsibility for the crimes against the civilian population of Srebrenica occurring at Potocari is most appropriately determined under Article 7(1) by considering whether he participated, along with General Mladić and key members of the VRS Main Staff and the Drina Corps, in a joint criminal enterprise to forcibly "cleanse" the Srebrenica enclave of its Muslim population and to ensure that they left the territory otherwise occupied by Serbian forces.
611. According to the Appeals Chamber in the Tadić Appeal Judgement, for joint criminal enterprise liability to arise, three actus reus elements require proof:

(i) A plurality of persons;
(ii) The existence of a common plan, which amounts to or involves the commission of a crime provided for in the Statute; . . .
(iii) Participation of the accused in the execution of the common plan, otherwise formulated as the accused's "membership" in a particular joint criminal enterprise.[428]

402. In its judgement in the Kvočka case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber considered that:

participation in a crime under a theory of joint criminal enterprise liability is included within the scope of Article 7(1) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute . . .

[426] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, §§ 364 and 371.
[427] ICTY, Krstić case, Judgement, 2 August 2001, § 605.
[428] ICTY, Krstić case, Judgement, 2 August 2001, §§ 610–611.

It is possible to co-perpetrate and aid or abet a joint criminal enterprise, depending primarily on whether the level of participation rises to that of sharing the intent of the criminal enterprise. An aider or abettor of a joint criminal enterprise, whose acts originally assist or otherwise facilitate the criminal endeavor, may become so involved in its operations that he may graduate to the status of a co-perpetrator of that enterprise.[429]

With regard to individual criminal responsibility for a possible participation in a joint criminal enterprise, the Trial Chamber stated that:

308. The Trial Chamber considers that persons who work in a job or participate in a system in which crimes are committed on such a large scale and systematic basis incur individual criminal responsibility if they knowingly participate in the criminal endeavor, and their acts or omissions significantly assist or facilitate the commission of the crimes.
309. The Trial Chamber wishes to stress that this does not mean that anyone who works in a detention camp where conditions are abusive automatically becomes liable as a participant in a joint criminal enterprise. The participation in the enterprise must be significant. By significant, the Trial Chamber means an act or omission that makes an enterprise efficient or effective; e.g., a participation that enables the system to run more smoothly or without disruption. Physical or direct perpetration of a serious crime that advances the goal of the criminal enterprise would constitute a significant contribution. In general, participation would need to be assessed on a case by case basis, especially for low or mid level actors who do not physically perpetrate crimes. It may be that a person with significant authority or influence who knowingly fails to complain or protest automatically provides substantial assistance or support to criminal activity by their approving silence, particularly if present at the scene of criminal activity. In most situations, the aider or abettor or co-perpetrator would not be someone readily replaceable, such that any "body" could fill his place. He would typically hold a higher position in the hierarchy or have special training, skills, or talents. The Trial Chamber notes, however, that much of the post World War II caselaw discussed above did attribute criminal liability to mere drivers or ordinary soldiers made to stand guard while others performed an execution. In addition, many of the post war cases did not entail repeated participation in a system of criminality, as the accused typically participated on an isolated occasion only. Domestic laws too hold individuals accountable for directly or indirectly participating in a single joint criminal endeavor.
310. In situations of armed conflict or mass violence, it is all too easy for individuals to get caught up in the violence or hatred. During such violent periods, law abiding citizens commit crimes they would ordinarily never have committed. Nonetheless, the presence of mass violence or conflict cannot be used to shield or excuse persons who commit, assist or facilitate or otherwise participate in crimes from incurring liability. Whether the joint criminal enterprise is broadly defined, such as the Nazi persecution of millions of Jews, or it is limited to a specific time and location, such as the three month operation of Omarska camp, a participant in the criminal enterprise must make a substantial contribution to the enterprise's functioning or endeavors before he or she may be held criminally liable.
311. The Trial Chamber finds that during periods of war or mass violence, the threshold required to impute criminal responsibility to a mid or low level participant in a joint criminal enterprise as an aider and abettor or co-perpetrator of such an enterprise normally requires a more substantial level of participation than simply following orders to perform some low level function in the criminal endeavor on a single occasion. The level of participation attributed to the accused and whether that participation is deemed significant will depend on a variety of factors, including the size of the criminal enterprise, the functions performed, the position of the accused, the amount of time spent participating after acquiring knowledge of the criminality of the system, efforts made to prevent criminal activity or to impede the efficient functioning of the system, the seriousness and scope of the crimes committed and the efficiency, zealousness or gratuitous cruelty exhibited in performing the actor's function. It would also be important to examine any direct evidence of a shared intent or agreement with the criminal endeavor, such as repeated, continuous, or extensive participation in the system, verbal expressions, or physical perpetration of a crime. Perhaps the most important factor to examine is the role the accused played vis-à-vis the seriousness and scope of the crimes committed: even a lowly guard who pulls the switch to release poisonous gas into the gas chamber holding hundreds of victims would be more culpable than a supervising guard stationed at the perimeter of the camp who shoots a prisoner attempting to escape.

[429] ICTY, Kvočka case, Judgement, 2 November 2001, §§ 246 and 249.

312. In sum, an accused must have carried out acts that substantially assisted or significantly effected the furtherance of the goals of the enterprise, with the knowledge that his acts or omissions facilitated the crimes committed through the enterprise in order to be criminally liable as a participant in a joint criminal enterprise. The culpable participant would not need to know of each crime committed. Merely knowing that crimes are being committed within a system and knowingly participating in that system in a way that substantially assists or facilitates the commission of a crime or which allows the criminal enterprise to function effectively or efficiently would be enough to establish criminal liability. The aider or abettor or co-perpetrator of a joint criminal enterprise contributes to the commission of the crimes by playing a role that allows the system or enterprise to continue its functioning.[430]

403. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Uganda, the CRC recommended to the government of Uganda that:

Awareness of the duty to fully respect the rules of international humanitarian law, in the spirit of article 38 of the Convention, inter alia with regard to children, should be made known to the parties to the armed conflict in the northern part of the State party's territory, and that violations of the rules of international humanitarian law entail responsibility being attributed to the perpetrators.[431]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

404. In 1993, in a report submitted to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that:

[430] ICTY, Kvočka case, Judgement, 2 November 2001, §§ 308–312.
[431] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Uganda, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.80, 10 October 1997, § 34.

The treaties of international humanitarian law provide various mechanisms . . . for implementing their substantive provisions. Among these mechanisms it is worth mentioning the following: . . . (b) the principle of individual criminal responsibility . . . The principle of the individual criminal responsibility of the perpetrator of certain breaches of international law, including those bearing on the environment in times of armed conflict, as well as of the persons ordering the commission of such acts, is of critical importance. It is firmly rooted in both customary and treaty law, such as the [1907 HR] and the provisions of the Geneva Conventions relating to grave breaches.[432]

405. In 1995, at the 9th UN Congress on the Prevention of Crimes and the Treatment of Offenders, the ICRC expressed the view that "according to the terms of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I, international criminal responsibility for certain violations of humanitarian law . . . has been established only in respect of international armed conflict".[433]

406. In 1997, in its commentary on the definition of war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC, referring to the decision of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal), noted that "the emergence of opinio juris on a customary rule on criminal liability for violations of international humanitarian law committed in non-international armed conflicts has recently been recognised".[434]

407. In 1997, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the establishment of an international criminal court, the ICRC declared that:

> It was important to set up mechanisms to combat impunity for those responsible for violations of the laws . . . The establishment of an efficient, widely accepted court offering maximum guarantees of fair trial, free of any political pressure and designated to complement national justice systems would send a clear message to both the perpetrators of serious international crimes and their victims that immunity from prosecution would no longer be tolerated.

The ICRC added that the ICC "must have jurisdiction over war crimes committed in international and non-international conflicts alike" and that "the objective was clear: the atrocities must cease and those responsible for them must be held accountable".[435]

[432] ICRC, Report on the Protection of the Environment in Time of Armed Conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, UN Doc. A/48/269, 29 July 1993, §§ 45 and 48.

[433] ICRC, Statement at the 9th UN Congress on the Prevention of Crimes and Treatment of Offenders, UN Doc. A/CONF.169/NGO/ICRC/1, 30 April 1995, Topic IV, p. 4.

[434] ICRC, Commentary on the definition of war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, 1–12 December 1997, p. 24.

[435] ICRC, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, 24 October 1997, UN Doc. A/C.6/52/SR.15, 12 February 1998, §§ 12 and 15–16.

VI. Other Practice

408. In a resolution adopted at its Berlin Session in 1999, the Institute of International Law stated that:

> Any serious violation of international humanitarian law in armed conflicts in which non-State entities are parties entails the individual responsibility of the persons involved, regardless of their status or official position, in accordance with international instruments that entrust the repression of these acts to national or international jurisdictions.[436]

Individual civil liability

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

409. Article 75 of the 1998 ICC Statute, entitled "Reparations to victims", provides that:

> 1. The Court shall establish principles relating to reparations to, or in respect of, victims, including restitution, compensation and rehabilitation. On this basis, in its decision the Court may, either upon request or on its own motion in exceptional circumstances, determine the scope and extent of any damage, loss and injury to, or in respect of, victims and will state the principles on which it is acting.
> 2. The Court may make an order directly against a convicted person specifying appropriate reparations to, or in respect of, victims, including restitution, compensation and rehabilitation.
>
> Where appropriate, the Court may order that the award for reparations be made through the Trust Fund provided for in article 79.

The Trust Fund referred to was established for the benefit of victims of crimes within the Court's jurisdiction and will be financed, inter alia, by money or other property collected through fines or forfeiture which the Court might order to be transferred to the fund.

410. Chapter 4, Section III, Subsection 4 (Rules 94–99) of the 2000 ICC Rules of Procedure and Evidence contains detailed provisions concerning reparations to be made in favour of the victim(s). Rule 94 provides that victims of violations can lodge requests for compensation directly before the Court. Rule 95 grants the Court the power to proceed with regard to the award of compensation on its own motion. Rule 97, entitled "Assessment of reparations", provides that:

[436] Institute of International Law, Berlin Session, Resolution on the Application of International Humanitarian Law and Fundamental Human Rights in Armed Conflicts in which Non-State Entities are Parties, 25 August 1999, § VIII.

1. Taking into account the scope and extent of any damage, loss or injury, the Court may award reparations on an individualized basis or, where it deems it appropriate, on a collective basis or both.
2. At the request of victims or their legal representatives, or at the request of the convicted person, or on its own motion, the Court may appoint appropriate experts to assist it in determining the scope, extent of any damage, loss and injury to, or in respect of victims and to suggest various options concerning the appropriate types and modalities of reparations. The Court shall invite, as appropriate, victims or their legal representatives, the convicted person as well as interested persons and interested States to make observations on the reports of the experts.
3. In all cases, the Court shall respect the rights of victims and the convicted person.

Other Instruments

411. Article 24(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "in addition to imprisonment, the Trial Chambers may order the return of any property and proceeds acquired by criminal conduct, including by means of duress, to their rightful owners".

412. Article 23(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that "in addition to imprisonment, the Trial Chambers may order the return of any property and proceeds acquired by criminal conduct, including by means of duress, to their rightful owners".

413. Rule 105 of the 2000 ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence established procedures for the restoration of property:

> (A) After a judgement of conviction containing a specific finding . . . the Trial Chamber shall, at the request of the Prosecutor, or may, proprio motu, hold a special hearing to determine the matter of the restitution of the property or the proceeds thereof.
> . . .
> (D) Should the Trial Chamber be able to determine the rightful owner on the balance of probabilities, it shall order the restitution either of the property or the proceeds or make such other order as it may deem appropriate.
> (E) Should the Trial Chamber not be able to determine ownership, it shall notify the competent national authorities and request them so to determine.
> (F) Upon notice from the national authorities that an affirmative determination has been made, the Trial Chamber shall order the restitution either of the property or the proceeds or make such other order as it may deem appropriate.

414. Rule 106(B) of the 2000 ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that "pursuant to the relevant national legislation, a victim or persons claiming through the victim may bring an action in a national court or other competent body to obtain compensation".

415. Paragraph 17 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law provides that "in cases where the violation is not attributable to the State, the party responsible for the violation should provide reparation to the victim or to the State if the State has already provided reparation to the victim".

416. Paragraph 19 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law provides that:

> A State shall enforce its domestic judgements for reparation against private individuals or entities responsible for the violations. States shall endeavour to enforce valid foreign judgements for reparation against private individuals or entities responsible for the violations.

417. According to Section 49(1) of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/30, "independent from the commencement or completion of a criminal proceeding, an alleged victim may claim compensation for damages or losses suffered or inflicted by a suspected crime by filing a civil action before a competent court". Section 49(2) states that:

> As a part of its disposition of a criminal case in which the accused is convicted of an offense as to which there are victims, and notwithstanding any separate civil action which goes forward pursuant to Section 49.1 of the present regulation, the Court may include in its disposition an order that requires the accused to pay compensation or reparations to the victim in an amount determined by the Court. Any payment made by an accused to a victim in compliance with such an order shall be credited toward satisfaction of any civil judgment also rendered in the matter.

418. Rule 105 of the 2001 ICTR's Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that:

> (A) After a judgement of conviction containing a specific finding as provided in Rule 88 (B), the Trial Chamber shall, at the request of the Prosecutor, or may, at its own initiative, hold a special hearing to determine the matter of the restitution of the property or the proceeds thereof.
> ...
> (D) Should the Trial Chamber be able to determine the rightful owner on the balance of probabilities, it shall order the restitution either of the property or the proceeds or make such other order as it may deem appropriate.
> (E) Should the Trial Chamber not be able to determine ownership, it shall notify the competent national authorities and request them so to determine.
> (F) Upon notice from the national authorities that an affirmative determination has been made, the Trial Chamber shall order the restitution either of the property or the proceeds or make such other order as it may deem appropriate.

419. Rule 106(B) of the 2001 ICTR's Rules of Procedure and Evidence provides that "pursuant to the relevant national legislation, a victim or persons claiming through him may bring an action in a national court or other competent body to obtain compensation".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

420. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "the nation can exact from the public servant who caused the injury the amount of the injured party's indemnification".[437]

421. France's LOAC Teaching Note, in a part dealing with "grave breaches of the rules of the law of armed conflict", states that "each violation of the law of armed conflicts . . . gives a right to reparation at the civil level".[438]

422. France's LOAC Manual restates Article 1382 of the French Civil Code on civil liability and provides that "this implies that someone who has not been held criminally liable must nevertheless provide reparation for the damage caused".[439]

National Legislation

423. Some pieces of domestic legislation, apart from granting the victim of a criminal act the possibility of filing a claim for compensation before a civil court, provide for the possibility for the victim of obtaining compensation on the occasion of the criminal proceedings against the offender. Examples include France ("partie civile"), Germany and US.[440]

424. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that:

> Where a breach provided for in the present Act [i.e. genocide, crimes against humanity and a list of war crimes] falls under the competence of a military court, public prosecution shall be instituted through a summons issued by the Public Prosecutor's Office for the accused to appear before the trial court or through a complaint filed by any person claiming to have suffered injury as a result of the breach and bringing a suit for damages before the president of the judicial commission at the Conseil de Guerre [Court Martial] under the conditions provided for in Article 66 of the Code of Criminal Investigation.[441]

425. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes states that "persons aimed at in article 24 [i.e. victims, their heirs, their representatives, every individual person or legal entity who have been injured or who have a direct interest] may become a civil party [partie civile] according to the provisions of the criminal procedure code".[442]

[437] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 36.
[438] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[439] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 112.
[440] France, Code of Criminal Procedure (1994); Germany, Criminal Procedure Code as amended (1987); US, Victim and Witness Protection Act (1982).
[441] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 9(3).
[442] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 31.

426. France's Law on Cooperation with the ICTY, which allows French courts to try and punish individuals found in France and being accused of having committed the violations of IHL over which the ICTY has jurisdiction, provides that "any person claiming to have been injured by one of those offences can, by filing a complaint, bring indemnification proceedings ["partie civile"] in the conditions set forth in Article 85 ff. of the Code of Penal Procedure".[443] The same principle is set forth in the Law on Cooperation with the ICTR.[444]

427. Germany's Criminal Procedure Code as amended provides that:

> The aggrieved person or his heir may, in criminal proceedings, bring a property claim against the accused arising out of the criminal offence if the claim falls under the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts and is not yet pending before another court, in proceedings before the local court irrespective of the value of the matter in dispute.[445]

428. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches states that a civil action against the perpetrator of offences provided for in this law can only be undertaken before a civil court. However, it provides for the possibility for the (criminal) court to order the restitution of seized objects and exhibits to the entitled person if they are not to be confiscated.[446]

429. Russia's Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya provides that "persons covered by the law on the declaration of amnesty are not exempted from making reparations for the injuries caused by their unlawful acts".[447]

430. Rwanda's Law on the Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide and Crimes against Humanity provides that "the court having jurisdiction over the civil action shall rule on damages even where the accused has died during the course of the proceedings or has benefited from an amnesty".[448]

431. The UK Regulations for the Trial of War Criminals as amended provides that "in a case where the war crime consists wholly or partly of the taking, distribution or destruction of money or other property, the Court may as part of the sentence order the restitution of such money or other property".[449]

432. The US Victim and Witness Protection Act provides that:

> (a) (1)(A) The court, when sentencing a defendant convicted of an offense . . . may order, in addition to or, in the case of a misdemeanor, in lieu of any other penalty authorized by law, that the defendant make restitution to any victim

[443] France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995), Article 2.
[444] France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1996), Article 2.
[445] Germany, Criminal Procedure Code as amended (1987), § 403(1).
[446] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 14.
[447] Russia, Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya (1997), § 4.
[448] Rwanda, Law on the Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide and Crimes against Humanity (1996), Article 31.
[449] UK, Regulations for the Trial of War Criminals as amended (1945), Regulation 9.

of such offense, or if the victim is deceased, to the victim's estate. The court may also order, if agreed to by the parties in a plea agreement, restitution to persons other than the victim of the offense . . .

(3) The court may also order restitution in any criminal case to the extent agreed to by the parties in a plea agreement.[450]

For cases where restitution is impossible, impractical or inadequate, especially in the case of an offence resulting in bodily injury, the Act provides for the possibility of the paying of an amount of money.[451]

433. The US Alien Tort Claims Act provides that "the district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action by an alien for a tort only, committed in violation of the law of nations or a treaty of the United States".[452]

434. The US Torture Victim Protection Act, under a provision entitled "Establishment of civil action", states that:

(a) Liability. – An individual who, under actual or apparent authority, or color of law, of any foreign nation –
  (1) subjects an individual to torture shall, in a civil action, be liable for damages to that individual; or
  (2) subjects an individual to extrajudicial killing shall, in a civil action, be liable for damages to the individual's legal representative, or to any person who may be a claimant in an action for wrongful death.[453]

435. A provision of the California Code of Civil Procedure as amended dealing with compensation for slave and forced labour states that:

Any Second World War slave labor victim, or heir of a Second World War slave labor victim, Second World War forced labor victim, or heir of a Second World War forced labor victim, may bring an action to recover compensation for labor performed as a Second World War slave labor victim or Second World War forced labor victim from any entity or successor in interest thereof, for whom that labor was performed, either directly or through a subsidiary or affiliate.[454]

436. Yemen's Military Criminal Code requires individuals who have been found guilty of despoiling POWs or the sick, wounded or dead to return that which they took or its equivalent.[455]

National Case-law

437. In the Ercole case in 2000, Italy's Tribunal of Livorno tried and sentenced a former paratrooper to 18 months' suspended imprisonment for abusing his authority during his participation in a multinational peacekeeping operation in Somalia and, pending the outcome of connected civil proceedings, made him provisionally liable to the payment of 30,000,000 Italian lire to a Somali citizen

[450] US, Victim and Witness Protection Act (1982), Subsection (a)(1)(A) and (3)
[451] US, Victim and Witness Protection Act (1982), Subsection (b).
[452] US, Alien Tort Claims Act (1789).
[453] US, Torture Victim Protection Act (1991), Section 1350(2)(a)(1) and (2).
[454] US, California Code of Civil Procedure as amended (1873), Section 354.6(b).
[455] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 20.

who had been tortured.[456] In 2001, the Court of Appeals at Florence confirmed the judgement in this part.[457]

438. In the Karadžić case in 1995, a US Court of Appeals considered a civil action brought by Bosnian victims of atrocities and their representatives against Radovan Karadžić under, inter alia, the US Alien Tort Claims Act. This Act "creates federal court jurisdiction for suits alleging torts committed anywhere in the world against aliens in violation of the law of nations" (or US treaty). The Court, considering the responsibility of Karadžić for genocide, rape, forced prostitution, torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, summary executions and disappearances committed during the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, emphasised that individuals could be held responsible, both criminally, and, as in this case, civilly, for violations of international law. It further noted that "the liability of private individuals for committing war crimes has been recognized since World War I and was confirmed at Nuremberg after World War II, and remains today an important aspect of international law". It also stated that:

> The liability of private persons for certain violations of customary international law and the availability of the Alien Tort Act to remedy such violations was early recognized by the Executive Branch in an opinion of Attorney General Bradford . . . The Executive Branch has emphatically restated in this litigation its position that private persons may be found liable under the Alien Tort Act for acts of genocide, war crimes, and other violations of international humanitarian law.[458]

439. In a class action verdict in the Karadžić case before a US District Court in 2000, Radovan Karadžić was sentenced to pay US$ 265 million in compensatory damages and US$ 480 million in punitive damages to the claimants.[459] In another verdict, he was sentenced to US$ 407 million in compensatory damages and US$ 3.8 billion in punitive damages. As acts for which the damages were owed, the Court, in the latest verdict, listed, inter alia, rape and gang rape, forced pregnancy, sexual slavery, beating and other torture, genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity, assault and battery, and disappearance of relatives.[460]

440. The FIS case before a US District Court in 1998, in which a group of Algerian women sought compensation from a high-ranking official of the Islamic Salvation Front (FIS) for his participation in crimes against humanity, war crimes and various violations of human rights committed in Algeria, successfully relied upon the US Torture Victim Protection Act and the US Alien Tort Claims Act as a basis for the jurisdiction of US courts. With regard to the claim based on the Alien Tort Claims Act, the Court found that:

[456] Italy, Tribunal at Livorno, Ercole case, 13 April 2000.
[457] Italy, Court of Appeals at Florence, Ercole case, 22 February 2001.
[458] US, Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Karadžić case, Decision, 13 October 1995.
[459] US, District Court, Southern District of New York, Karadžić case, Judgement, 16 August 2000.
[460] US, District Court, Southern District of New York, Karadžić case, Judgement, 4 October 2000.

The alleged acts of the FIS are clearly in violation of international law as it stands today. Common Article 3 of the [1949] Geneva Conventions . . . applies to "armed conflicts not of an international character" and protects civilians not participating in the conflict by requiring that they be "treated humanely, without any adverse distinction founded on race, color, religion, faith, sex, birth or wealth, or any other similar criteria". It prohibits, among other things, "murder of all kinds, mutilation, cruel treatment and torture", kidnapping, and summary executions. The Karadžić court held that Common Article 3 applies to all parties to a conflict, not merely to official governments. This Court concludes that the acts of the FIS alleged by Plaintiffs are proscribed by international law against other state and private actors, as evidenced by Common Article 3. Accordingly plaintiffs have properly alleged subject matter jurisdiction under the ATCA.[461]

Other National Practice

441. At the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court in 1998, the Belgian Minister of Foreign Affairs stated that Belgium was in favour of inserting in the ICC Statute provisions that would permit the Court to rule on reparation claims.[462]

442. In 1993, the Committee of French Jurists set up by the French government to study the establishment of a criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia stated that:

It does not seem reasonable to admit civil actions before the [ICTY]. That would lead to a flood of claims, which the international court would not be in a position to process effectively. It seems preferable to proceed from the principle that it will be for the national courts to rule on claims for reparation by victims or their beneficiaries.[463]

443. At the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court in 1998, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs declared that "my country has also urged close cooperation with NGOs to ensure that the statute contains precise provisions concerning victim access at all stages of proceedings . . . and their right to reparation".[464]

444. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the adoption of the 1993 ICTY Statute, Morocco stated that "the [ICTY] should hand down deterrent sentences both for those who commit crimes and for their accomplices, and should not ignore appropriate compensation for victims and their families".[465]

[461] US, District Court for the District of Columbia, FIS case, Judgement, 2 February 1998.
[462] Belgium, Statement by the Minister of Foreign Affairs at the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, Rome, 17 June 1998.
[463] France, Committee of French Jurists, Report on the setting up of a criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. S/25266, 10 February 1993, § 100.
[464] France, Statement by the Minister of Foreign Affairs at the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, Rome, 17 June 1998.
[465] Morocco, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217, 25 May 1993, pp. 27–28.

445. In 1998, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the establishment of an international criminal court, the UK stated that it "took particular satisfaction" at two of the aspects of the 1998 ICC Statute. One of these aspects was that:

> The Statute of the Court gave the Court power, under article 75, to order the payment of reparations to victims. Accordingly, the Court would serve not just the interests of society in repressing crime, but also those of the victims of crime. The provision would also bolster the Court's role in deterrence.[466]

446. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the unanimous vote on Resolution 827 (1993) establishing the ICTY, the US stated that "with respect to Article 24 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute], it is our understanding that compensation to victims by a convicted person may be an appropriate part of decisions on sentencing, reduction of sentences, parole or commutation".[467]

447. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that "universal jurisdiction over war crimes applies not only to penal proceedings, but also to suits for damages against individual war criminals by or on behalf of their victims".[468]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

448. In Resolution 827 of May 1993 establishing the ICTY, the UN Security Council decided that "the work of the International Tribunal shall be carried out without prejudice to the right of the victims to seek, through appropriate means, compensation for damages incurred as a result of violations of international humanitarian law".[469]

449. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended that:

> steps be taken to ensure full reparation for losses suffered as a consequence of aggression and religious and ethnic cleansing . . . it being understood that those responsible for causing destruction and other losses shall be held personally responsible for the repayment of the losses incurred.[470]

450. In 1998, in a report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, the UN Secretary-General stated that "in order to make warring parties more accountable for their actions, I

[466] UK, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/53/SR.12, 19 December 1998, § 42.
[467] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217 (Provisional), 25 May 1993, p. 17.
[468] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.12.
[469] UN Security Council, Res. 827, 25 May 1993, § 7.
[470] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/17, 20 August 1993, § 8; see also Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, § 6.

recommend that combatants be held financially liable to their victims under international law where civilians are made the deliberate target of aggression".[471]
451. In 2000, in a report on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, which dealt, inter alia, with the gacaca trials instituted in Rwanda to try genocide suspects, the Special Representative of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that "those convicted of crimes against property will be expected to pay restitution for the damage they caused".[472]

Other International Organisations
452. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the European Parliament declared that it believed that the ICTY "should . . . consider acts of violence against women committed in former Yugoslavia and require those who committed them to provide economic assistance for the children born as a result of rape and pay compensation to the victims of such crimes".[473]

International Conferences
453. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

454. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

455. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

456. No practice was found.

B. Command Responsibility for Orders to Commit War Crimes

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
457. The second paragraphs of Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV provide that "each High Contracting Party shall be under the obligation

[471] UN Secretary-General, Report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa, UN Doc. A/52/871-S/1998/318, 13 April 1998, § 50; see also Report on the Protection of Civilians in Armed Conflict, UN Doc. S/1999/957, 8 September 1999, § 38.
[472] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Representative on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, Report, UN Doc. A/55/269, 4 August 2000, § 163.
[473] European Parliament, Resolution on Human Rights in the world and Community human rights policy for the years 1991/1992, 12 March 1993, §§ 7 and 8.

to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches, and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts".

458. Article 28 of the 1954 Hague Convention requires States "to take, within the framework of their ordinary criminal jurisdiction, all necessary steps to prosecute and impose penal or disciplinary sanctions upon those persons, of whatever nationality, who ... order to be committed a breach of the present Convention".

459. Article 9(1) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that "each State shall prohibit orders or instructions commanding, authorizing or encouraging a forced disappearance".

460. Article 25(3) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court if that person: ... (b) orders, solicits or induces the commission of such a crime which in fact occurs or is attempted".

461. Article 15 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention, which also contains a list of acts considered as offences within the meaning of the Protocol, provides that:

> Each Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences set forth in this Article and to make such offences punishable by appropriate penalties. When doing so, Parties shall comply with general principles of law and international law, including the rules extending individual criminal responsibility to persons other than those who directly commit the act.

462. Article 22(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "this Protocol shall apply in the event of an armed conflict not of an international character, occurring within the territory of one of the Parties".

463. Article 6 of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, entitled "Individual criminal responsibility", provides that:

> 1. A person who ... ordered ... the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute [i.e. crimes against humanity, violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of AP II, and other serious violations of international humanitarian law] shall be individually responsible for the crime.

Other Instruments

464. Paragraph 3 of the 1989 Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions provides that "Governments shall prohibit orders from superior officers or public authorities authorizing or inciting other persons to carry out any such extralegal, arbitrary or summary executions ... Training of law enforcement officials shall emphasize the above provisions."

465. Paragraph 26 of the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials provides that "in any case, responsibility also rests on the superiors who gave the unlawful orders [to use force and firearms resulting in the death or serious injury of a person]".
466. Article 3(i) of the 1992 London Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues provides that "in carrying out the Programme of Action, the parties to the conflict undertook to abide by the following provisions: . . . that persons who . . . order the commission of grave breaches [of IHL] are individually responsible".
467. Article 7(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "a person who . . . ordered, . . . or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime".
468. Article 6(1) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that a "person who . . . ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute, shall be individually responsible for the crime".
469. Paragraph 31 of the 1994 CSCE Code of Conduct provides that:

> The participating States will ensure that armed forces personnel vested with command authority exercise it in accordance with relevant national as well as international law and are made aware that they can be held individually accountable under those laws for the unlawful exercise of such authority and that orders contrary to national and international law must not be given.

470. Article 2(3) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that:

> An individual shall be responsible for a crime set out in article 17, 18, 19 or 20 [crime of genocide, crimes against humanity, crimes against United Nations and associated personnel, war crimes] if that individual:
>
> . . .
>
> (b) orders the commission of such a crime which in fact occurs or is attempted.

471. Article 16 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Crime of aggression", provides that "an individual who, as leader or organizer, . . . orders the planning, preparation, initiation or waging of aggression committed by a State shall be responsible for a crime of aggression".
472. Section 14(3) of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 provides that "in accordance with the present regulation, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the panels if that person: . . . (b) orders, solicits or induces the commission of such a crime which in fact occurs or is attempted".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

473. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that "the persons accused of having committed or ordered the commission of these [grave] violations, including those resulting from an omission rather than an action, must be searched for".[474]

474. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "specifically, a commander will be held accountable if an order is given to a subordinate to commit a breach of LOAC or knows that a breach is occurring and fails to intervene".[475]

475. Belgium's Disciplinary Regulations states that "superiors . . . are liable for the orders they give".[476]

476. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "the commander is personally responsible for the orders he gives. He looks after their execution and engages his responsibility for their consequences."[477] It adds that:

> The commander has the right and the duty to require absolute obedience from his subordinates. However, he can not require them to accomplish acts, the execution of which would engage their penal responsibility. These acts are the following: . . . acts contrary to the laws and customs of war.[478]

477. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

> Any person who . . . ordered . . . a war crime described in Sections 2 and 3 [crimes against peace, crimes against humanity, genocide, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, grave breaches of AP I, violations of the Hague Conventions and customary law] may be held criminally responsible for the crime.[479]

478. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "the issuance of a manifestly unlawful order is a crime in itself".[480] It also states that "the importance of leadership and discipline cannot be overstated. Good leaders do not issue manifestly unlawful commands. They give clear orders which will not be misunderstood."[481]

479. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations provides that in the exercise of his authority, "the commander . . . bears full responsibility for orders given and for their execution; this responsibility can not be relieved by the responsibility borne by his subordinates . . . He cannot order the commission of acts . . . which constitute crimes."[482]

474 Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.02.
475 Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1304; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1204.
476 Belgium, Disciplinary Regulations (1991), § 402(b).
477 Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 16.
478 Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 17.
479 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-4, § 24.
480 Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 5.
481 Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 6.
482 Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 20.

480. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that the commander "bears full responsibility for the orders given and for their execution, and is not relieved thereof by the responsibility borne by his subordinates".[483]
481. France's LOAC Manual provides that "each individual is responsible for the violations of the law of armed conflicts for which he/she has made himself/herself guilty, whatever the circumstances may be . . . The commanders are responsible . . . for the acts they commit [themselves] and for the orders they give."[484]
482. Germany's Military Manual provides that "superiors shall only issue orders which are in conformity with international law. A superior who issues an order contrary to international law exposes not only himself but also the subordinate obeying to the risk of being prosecuted."[485]
483. Italy's IHL Manual states that Italian law provides for individual criminal responsibility for those who order a war crime.[486]
484. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "a commander giving an order to commit a war crime or grave breach is equally guilty of that offence with the person actually committing it".[487]
485. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that commanders are responsible for war crimes committed by their subordinates "when the acts in question have been committed in pursuance of an order of the commander".[488]
486. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that "signatory States are required to treat as criminals under domestic law anyone who commits or orders a grave breach".[489] It further states that "an order to commit a war crime is an unlawful order . . . The person giving such an order would also be guilty of a war crime."[490]
487. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "the law of war provides that governments take all legislative measures necessary to determine the penal and disciplinary sanctions for the persons who commit or who give the order to commit violations of the laws and customs of war".[491]
488. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "if the execution of an order constitutes a crime, the commander or superior who has given this order is punishable as well as the author of the breach".[492]
489. The UK Military Manual states that the responsibility of military commanders for war crimes "arises directly when the acts in question have been committed in pursuance of an order of the commander concerned".[493]

[483] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 7; see also LOAC Manual (2001), p. 113.
[484] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 113.
[485] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 141.
[486] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 83.
[487] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1706(1).
[488] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 8.
[489] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 35.
[490] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 44.
[491] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.1.d.(6).
[492] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 199(1).
[493] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 631.

490. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "if a soldier carries out an illegal order, both he and the person giving that order are responsible".[494]
491. The US Field Manual provides that the responsibility of military commanders for war crimes "arises directly when the acts in question have been committed in pursuance of an order of the commander concerned".[495]
492. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "command responsibility for acts committed by subordinates arises when the specific wrongful acts in question are knowingly ordered or encouraged".[496]
493. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that "each individual is personally responsible – military personnel and civilians alike – if he commits such violation or orders its commission".[497] (emphasis in original)

National Legislation
494. Argentina's Decree on Trial before the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces, issued in connection with the situation in Argentina under the military juntas, states that:

> The existence of plans for orders renders the members of the military junta in office at the time, as well as the officers of the armed forces at the decision-making level, responsible in their capacity as indirect perpetrators for the criminal acts committed in compliance with the plans drawn up and overseen by the superiors (Article 514 of the Code of Military Justice) . . . [The] responsibility of these perpetrators does not exclude the responsibility that devolves upon the authors of the operative plan.[498]

Accordingly, the decree states that the members of the first three military juntas be examined by pre-trial proceedings before the Supreme Court of the Armed Forces.[499]
495. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides that:

> A soldier who, at the occasion of an armed conflict, . . . orders to be committed any other violation or act contrary to the provisions of the international treaties to which Argentina is a party and relating to the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, the treatment of prisoners of war, the protection of civilian persons and the protection of cultural property in case of armed conflict, will be punished.[500]

496. Under Armenia's Penal Code, giving, during an armed conflict, an "obviously criminal order, aimed at the commission of the crimes defined in Articles 387 [Application of prohibited methods of warfare] and 390 [Serious breaches

494 UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 10, p. 38, § 1.
495 US, Field Manual (1956), § 501.
496 US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(d).
497 SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 20.
498 Argentina, Decree on Trial before the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces (1983), preamble.
499 Argentina, Decree on Trial before the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces (1983), Article 1.
500 Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 296, introducing a new Article 880 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).

of international humanitarian law during armed conflict]" constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[501]

497. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code, in a provision entitled "Negligence or giving criminal orders in time of armed conflict", provides that:

> Wilfully giving a criminal order or instruction directed to the commission of the crimes considered in Articles 115–116 of this Code ["violations of [the] laws and customs of war" and "violations of the norms of international humanitarian law in time of armed conflict"] or declaring that no quarter will be given to the subordinate persons . . . will be punished.[502]

498. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act provides that:

> Any commander or superior officer who orders, permits, acquiesces or participates in the commission of any of the crimes specified in section 3 [crimes against humanity, crimes against peace, genocide, war crimes, the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" or any other crimes under international law] or is connected with any plans and activities involving the commission of such crimes . . . is guilty of such crimes.[503]

499. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that:

> If, in a situation of armed conflict, a superior or officer gives an order to his subordinate not to give quarter or any other order or instruction known to be criminal and which permits the commission of crimes set out in articles 134, 135 and 136 of this Code ["use of weapons of mass destruction", "violations of the laws and customs of war" and "criminal infringement of the norms of international humanitarian law during armed conflicts"] he is punishable.[504]

500. Belgium's Law on Discipline in the Armed Forces states that commanders are responsible for the orders they issue.[505]

501. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended, which applies to both international and non-international conflicts, provides that: "the following shall be punishable by the penalty provided for completed breaches: an order, even where it is not carried out, to commit one of the breaches listed in Article 1 [crime of genocide, crime against humanity and grave breaches]".[506]

502. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that "whosoever . . . orders [or] instigates to commit . . . one of the infringements aimed at in articles 2, 3 and 4 respectively of this law

[501] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 391(3).
[502] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 117(2).
[503] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 4(2).
[504] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 137(2).
[505] Belgium, Law on Discipline in the Armed Forces (1975), Article 11.
[506] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Articles 3(3) and 4.

[genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes] is guilty of a crime of genocide, a crime against humanity [and/or] a war crime".[507]

503. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial, in the provision dealing with individual responsibility, provides that "any Suspect who ... ordered ... the crimes referred to in Articles 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of this law shall be individually responsible for the crime". The articles referred to deal with "any of the crimes set forth in the 1956 Penal Code" such as: homicide, torture and religious persecution (Article 3); genocide (Article 4); crimes against humanity (Article 5); grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (Article 6); destruction of cultural property during armed conflict pursuant to the 1954 Hague Convention (Article 7); and crimes against internationally protected persons as set forth in the 1973 Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons (Article 8), all of these acts being committed during the period 1975–1979.[508]

504. Costa Rica's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of:

whoever, in the event of an armed conflict, ... orders to be committed acts which can be qualified as grave breaches or war crimes, in conformity with the provisions of international treaties to which Costa Rica is a party, regarding the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, the treatment of prisoners of war, the protection of civilian persons and the protection of cultural property, [applicable] in cases of armed conflict, and under any other instrument of international humanitarian law.[509]

505. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that:

In case of an offence under this Code committed on the express order of a person of higher rank whether administrative or military to a subordinate, the person who gave the order is responsible for the act performed by his subordinate and is liable to punishment so far as the subordinate's act did not exceed the order given.[510]

506. Germany's Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel provides that a superior "may give orders only for official purposes and only in observance of the rules of international public law ... He bears responsibility for his orders."[511]

507. Germany's Penal Code provides that "whoever commits the crime himself or through another shall be punished as a perpetrator". As regards incomplete crimes such as an illegal order given but not carried out by the subordinate, it also states that "an attempt to commit a serious criminal offence is always punishable".[512]

[507] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 5.
[508] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 29.
[509] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 378.
[510] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 69.
[511] Germany, Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel (1995), § 10(4) and (5).
[512] Germany, Penal Code (1998), §§ 23(1) and 25(1).

508. Under Iraq's Military Penal Code, a commander is criminally responsible for orders that contemplate the commission of a crime.[513]

509. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, in a part entitled "War crimes", states that "the person who orders war crimes to be committed . . . will be punished in the same way as the author [of the war crimes] himself".[514]

510. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, in a part dealing with the punishment for war crimes, provides that "the superior and the subordinate will both be held responsible in case of the perpetration of any of the infringements mentioned".[515]

511. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides for the punishment of an individual for ordering an act which is defined as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions, even if this order is not executed.[516]

512. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended provides that "anyone who orders . . . any act of murder, physical injury or damage to property outside the fighting will be held responsible".[517]

513. The Military Criminal Code as amended of the Netherlands provides that:

> (1) A soldier who intentionally gives an order to a subordinate to commit a crime will be punished as the author of that crime, if the order has been executed.
> (2) If the order as meant in paragraph (1) has not been executed, the superior is punished with imprisonment of maximum five years or a fine of the fourth category, but never with a more severe punishment than would apply to the attempt of the ordered crime, or, in case such attempt is not punishable, to the crime itself.[518]

The Report on the Practice of the Netherlands notes that this provision does not require that the order be manifestly criminal.[519]

514. The Military Discipline Act of the Netherlands provides that giving an illegal order is contrary to discipline.[520]

515. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code, in a part dealing with "crimes against the international order", which contains a list of punishable offences, most of them being committed "at the occasion", "in times of" and/or "during" an international or internal armed conflict, also provides for the punishment of "anyone who orders the commission of any of the crimes set out under this title".[521]

516. Under Russia's Criminal Code, superiors are responsible for their orders, their consequences and their conformity with current legislation.[522]

[513] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Articles 43 and 98.
[514] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 42.
[515] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 148.
[516] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Articles 1 and 4.
[517] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Article 222.
[518] Netherlands, Military Criminal Code as amended (1964), Article 150.
[519] Report on the Practice of Netherlands, 1997, Chapter 6.7.
[520] Netherlands, Military Discipline Act (1990), Article 28.
[521] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 472(1).
[522] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 332.

517. Under Switzerland's Criminal Code as amended, if the execution of an order is a punishable act, the superior who issued the order is punishable as the perpetrator of the act.[523]

518. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) provides for the punishment of "any person who commits a war crime, i.e., who during the war or the enemy occupation acted as an instigator or organiser, or who ordered, assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of [a war crime]".[524]

National Case-law

519. In its judgement in the Military Junta case in 1985, Argentina's Court of Appeal found that the responsibility of the accused stemmed from the orders they gave, in their capacity as commanders-in-chief of the various forces, both to seize the victims and to keep the clandestine system of detention in operation, rather than from the fact that they failed to put a halt to the illegal restrictions of freedom organised by other parties. It found that subordinates of the accused arrested a large number of people, detained them clandestinely in military barracks, held them in captivity under inhumane conditions, turned them over to the Executive Branch or physically eliminated them. These procedures were undertaken in accordance with plans approved and ordered by the military commanders. Since it was proven that the acts were committed by members of the armed and security forces, which were organised in a hierarchical and disciplinary fashion, the Court ruled out the possibility that such acts could have occurred without the express orders of the supervisors. Since the members of these forces never denounced acts they must have known about, such acts could only be explained by the fact that the members knew that the acts, though illegal, had been ordered by their superiors.[525]

520. In the Abbaye Ardenne case before a Canadian Military Court at Aurich, Germany, in 1945, the Judge Advocate considered that all circumstances had to be taken into account in order to determine if an officer was responsible for acts committed by his subordinates. He stated that "it is not necessary for you to be convinced that a particular or formal order was given but you must be satisfied, before you convict, that some words were uttered or some clear indication was given to the accused that prisoners were put to death".[526]

521. In the Seward case in 1996, the Canadian Court Martial Appeal Court considered an appeal with regard to the sentence imposed by a General Court Martial on the officer commanding the 2 Commando unit of the Canadian Airborne Regiment present in Somalia as part of Operation Deliverance. The accused had been charged, inter alia, for having "negligently performed a military duty [imposed on him] in that he, . . . by issuing an instruction to his [523] Switzerland, Criminal Code as amended (1927), Article 18.

[524] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).
[525] Argentina, National Court of Appeals, Military Junta case, Judgement, 9 December 1985.
[526] Canada, Military Court at Aurich, Abbaye Ardenne case, Judgement, 10–28 December 1945.

subordinates that prisoners could be abused, failed to properly exercise command over his subordinates, as it was his duty to do so". The Court stated that:

This count addressed a failure in command. The evidence . . . demonstrates that this failure resulted in, at best, confusion in 2 Commando and must be taken to have led ultimately to excesses by some of the respondent's subordinates. This not only contributed to the death [of a Somali prisoner in the custody of the Command], of which the respondent was acquitted of being a party, but also contributed to several members of the Canadian Armed Forces committing serious lapses of discipline and ultimately finding themselves facing serious charges. Some have gone to prison as a result. These matters all properly related to the charge, as particularized, that the respondent "failed to properly exercise command over his subordinates".[527]

The Court decided to increase the sentence from a "severe reprimand" to three months imprisonment with dismissal. The Court stated that this sentence was merited by:

the perilous circumstances in which this relatively senior officer deliberately pronounced what was an ambiguous, and a dangerously ambiguous, order. He not only pronounced it but essentially repeated it when questioned as to his meaning. While it was found that he had no direct personal connection with the beating and death of [the prisoner], . . . [the accused] was of a much superior rank as an officer and commander of the whole of 2 Commando. His education, training, and experience and his much greater responsibilities as commanding officer put him on a higher standard of care, a standard which he did not meet . . . What the evidence did show was the existence of a difficult situation for the maintenance of morale and discipline in which the giving of orders required particular care. Any sentence must provide a deterrent to such careless conduct by commanding officers which in the final analysis is a failure in meeting their responsibilities both to their troops and to Canada.[528]

522. In the Perišić and Others case in 1997, the District Court of Zadar in Croatia found the accused guilty of issuing orders . . . in 1991 . . . during the armed clashes between the former so-called Yugoslav Army and the armed forces of the Republic of Croatia (National Guard forces, members of the police forces) as the officers in the aforementioned Yugoslav Army, who were in a position to issue orders for combat, orders which violated the [1907 Hague Convention IV] and the annexed [1907 HR] (Article 25), Article 3 [GC IV] and Articles 13 and 14 [AP II] . . . [The accused] gave and transmitted the orders to the subordinate commanders . . . All the accused violated the rules of international law, and in a situation of armed conflict, gave orders for attacks . . . in a manner that cannot be explained by military necessity.[529]

523. In its judgement in the Dover Castle case in 1921, the German Reichsgericht held that:

[527] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Seward case, Judgement, 27 May 1996.
[528] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Seward case, Judgement, 27 May 1996.
[529] Croatia, District Court of Zadar, Perišić and Others case, Judgement, 24 April 1997.

It is a military principle that the subordinate is bound to obey the orders of his superiors. This duty of obedience is of considerable importance from the point of view of criminal law. Its consequence is that, when the execution of a service order involves an offence against the criminal law, the superior giving the order is alone responsible.[530]

524. In its judgement in the Dostler case in 1945, in which a German commander was accused of having ordered, in March 1944, the shooting of 15 American POWs in violation of the 1907 HR, the US Military Commission at Rome held that commanders were responsible for the orders they gave and therefore if the orders were unlawful they were responsible in law as those who carried out the orders.[531]

525. In its judgement in the Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial) in 1945, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg noted that the principles established in the Yamashita case were not entirely applicable, since many of the alleged war crimes were committed in accordance with the policies and orders of their superiors. Noting that field commanders were soldiers and not lawyers, and that they may "presume, in the absence of specific knowledge to the contrary, that the legality of such orders has been properly determined before their issuance", the Tribunal held that:

It is therefore considered that to find a field commander criminally responsible for the transmittal of such an order, he must have passed the order to the chain of command and the order must be one that is criminal upon its face, or one which is shown to have [been] known was criminal.[532]

526. In the Ford v. García case in 2000, a civil lawsuit dealing with acts of torture and extrajudicial killing committed in 1980 in El Salvador, the US Federal Court of Florida gave instructions to the jury as follows:

A commander may be held liable for torture and extrajudicial killing committed by troops under his command under two separate legal theories. The first applies when a commander takes a positive act, i.e., he orders torture and extrajudicial killing or actually participates in it.[533]

527. In the Trajković case before the District Court of Gnjilan in Kosovo (FRY) in 2001, a Kosovo Serb and former chief of police was convicted, inter alia, for having participated in crimes committed against the civilian population in 1999, acts which the District Court found had to be qualified as war crimes under Article 142 of the Penal Code of the FRY, as well as crimes against humanity. The Court also found that the acts had been committed "in time of war".[534]

[530] Germany, Reichsgericht, Dover Castle case, Judgement, 4 June 1921.
[531] US, Military Commission at Rome, Dostler case, Judgement, 8–12 October 1945.
[532] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb (High Command Trial) case, 30 December 1947–28 October 1948.
[533] US, Federal Court of Florida, Ford v. García case, Judgement, 3 November 2000.
[534] SFRY (FRY), District Court of Gnjilan, Trajković case, Judgement, 6 March 2001.

However, on appeal, the Supreme Court of Kosovo overruled this judgement and ordered that the case be returned to the same court for retrial. The Supreme Court found, inter alia, that:

The state of facts was erroneously established in relation to all charges as there is no direct or conclusive evidence that the accused acted personally or gave orders leading to the alleged crimes . . . During the retrial, the court of first instance should therefore assess . . . the issue of the accused's personal responsibility for participation in the crimes alleged.[535]

528. In a written opinion in the Trajković case before the District Court of Gnjilan in Kosovo (FRY) in 2001, the International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo stated that:

This Opinion has concluded that [the accused] was not properly found guilty of any of the crimes under individual liability (the direct giving of orders to commit the crimes . . .) . . . Individual responsibility subsumes command responsibility. Because of this "subsuming rule", we must first evaluate whether individual responsibility might attach, as a finding that a defendant is individually responsible for a war crime or crime against humanity will preclude the need to analyse his culpability under command responsibility. The rule is stated in the statute and decisions of the ICTY.[536]

Other National Practice

529. The Report on the Practice of Germany states that:

By giving a criminal order, the superior violates his obligations under the [Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel] . . . If the order is executed, the superior can be punished for having committed a war crime according to general rules on perpetration as stated in section 25 of the German Penal Code. If the order has not been followed the superior can be punished according to the concept of incomplete crimes . . . embodied in section 22 of the German Penal Code.[537]

530. According to the Report on the Practice of Pakistan, a decision of the Pakistani Federal Sharia Court "has placed a greater degree of responsibility on a Muslim commander for violations of humanitarian law after summing up various instructions of various Caliphs from Muslim history".[538]

531. In 1992, in a note verbale with respect to the implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Slovenia stated that:

Not only those who have directly committed the crimes ["crimes committed against humanity and international humanitarian law"], but also those who gave orders or were otherwise engaged, should be prosecuted as perpetrators. Such consistent approach of the United Nations Commission of Experts would also include

[535] SFRY (FRY), Supreme Court of Kosovo, Trajković case, Decision Act, 30 November 2001.
[536] SFRY (FRY), International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo, Trajković case, Opinion on Appeals of Convictions, 30 November 2001, Sections IV and IV(A).
[537] Report on the Practice of Germany, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[538] Report on the Practice of Pakistan, 1998, Chapter 6.2.

the question of the criminal responsibility of numerous high military officers and politicians; this would be in accordance with international criminal law and to date practice, especially the one applied in the Nuremberg trials, following the rule that also those who had given orders should be punished for the committed crimes.[539]

532. In 1991, a UK FCO spokesperson stated that the Minister of State, FCO, had summoned the Iraqi ambassador and had reminded him "of the personal liability of those who authorised [the] use [of chemical or biological weapons] and asked that Iraq would not use them".[540]

533. In 1993, in a "Non-Paper" discussing the 1993 ICTY Statute transmitted to the UN Legal Counsel, the UK FCO stated that "under the Geneva Conventions those who order the commission of a grave breach are as responsible for it as the actual perpetrators".[541]

534. In 1992, a report on Iraqi war crimes (Desert Shield/Desert Storm) prepared under the auspices of the US Secretary of the Army noted that "criminal responsibility for violations of the law of war rests with a commander, including the national leadership, who . . . orders or permits the offenses to be committed".[542]

535. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

> Criminal responsibility for violations of the law of war rests with a commander, including the national leadership, if he (or she):
> - Orders or permits the offence to be committed . . .
>
> The crimes committed against Kuwaiti civilians and property, and against third party nationals, are offences for which Saddam Hussein, officials of the Ba'ath Party, and his subordinates bear direct responsibility. However, the principal responsibility rests with Saddam Hussein. Saddam Hussein's C2 of Iraqi military and security forces appeared to be total and unequivocal. There is substantial evidence that each act alleged was taken as a result of his orders, or was taken with his knowledge and approval, or was an act which he should have known.[543]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

536. In a resolution adopted in 1990 in the context of the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, the UN Security Council stated that:

[539] Slovenia, Note verbale dated 5 November 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24789, 9 November 1992, p. 2.
[540] UK, Statement by a FCO spokesperson, 21 January 1991, reprinted in BYIL, Vol. 62, 1991, p. 680.
[541] UK, FCO, Non-Paper, Former Yugoslavia: War Crimes Implementation of Resolution 808, 22 March 1993, reprinted in BYIL, Vol. 64, 1993, p. 700.
[542] US, Secretary of the Army, Report on Iraqi war crimes (Desert Shield/Desert Storm), unclassified version, 8 January 1992, p. 13.
[543] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, pp. 633–634.

The Fourth Geneva Convention applies to Kuwait and . . . as a High Contracting Party to the Convention Iraq is bound to comply fully with all its terms and, in particular, is liable under the Convention in respect of the grave breaches committed by it, as are individuals who . . . order the commission of grave breaches.[544]

537. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on violations of humanitarian law in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "persons who . . . order the commission of grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[545]

538. In a resolution adopted in 1992 establishing the UN Commission of Experts to examine and analyse evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council recalled its Resolution 764 (1992) in which it had reaffirmed that "persons who . . . order the commission of grave breaches of the Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[546]

539. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council strongly condemned "all violations of international humanitarian law occurring in Somalia, including in particular the deliberate impeding of the delivery of food and medical supplies essential for the survival of the civilian population" and affirmed that "those who . . . order the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[547]

540. In a resolution adopted 1993 on the establishment of the ICTY, the UN Security Council recalled a previous resolution in which it had reaffirmed that "persons who . . . order the commission of grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches" and expressed its determination "to put an end to such crimes and to take effective measures to bring to justice the persons who are responsible for [violations of international humanitarian law]".[548]

541. In a resolution adopted in 1993 with respect to the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "those who . . . order or have ordered the commission of [massive, organized and systematic detention and rape of women] will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[549]

542. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "persons who . . . order the commission of grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[550]

[544] UN Security Council, Res. 670, 25 September 1990, § 13.
[545] UN Security Council, Res. 771, 13 August 1992, § 1.
[546] UN Security Council, Res. 780, 6 October 1992, preamble; see also Res. 764, 13 July 1992, § 10.
[547] UN Security Council, Res. 794, 3 December 1992, § 5.
[548] UN Security Council, Res. 808, 22 February 1993, preamble.
[549] UN Security Council, Res. 820, 17 April 1993, § 6.
[550] UN Security Council, Res. 1193, 28 August 1998, § 12.

543. In 1993, in a statement by its President following the death of persons detained by Bosnian Serb forces when the vehicle transporting them for work at the front was ambushed, the UN Security Council condemned all violations of GC III and IV and reaffirmed that "those who . . . order the commission of such acts will be held personally responsible".[551]

544. In July 1995, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed "its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law" and reiterated "to all concerned that those who have committed or ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts".[552]

545. In October 1995, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "those who have committed or have ordered the commission of violations of international humanitarian law will be held individually responsible for them".[553]

546. In 1998, in a statement by its President on the situation in the DRC, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that "all persons who . . . order the commission of grave breaches of the [Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols of 1977] are individually responsible in respect of such breaches".[554]

547. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1995, the UN General Assembly, reaffirming that persons who committed violations of IHL would be held personally responsible and accountable, pointed out that:

> The leadership in territories under the control of Serbs in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and formerly Serb-held areas of the Republic of Croatia, the commanders of Serb paramilitary forces and political and military leaders in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) bear primary responsibility for most of those violations [of human rights and IHL].[555]

548. In 1993, in his report on the draft Statute of the ICTY, the UN Secretary-General's stated that "a person in a position of superior authority should . . . be held individually responsible for giving the unlawful order to commit a crime under the [ICTY Statute]".[556]

549. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) recalled that it had addressed the issue of command responsibility in its first interim report as follows:

[551] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25557, 8 April 1993.
[552] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/33, 20 July 1995.
[553] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/52, 12 October 1995, p. 2.
[554] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/26, 31 August 1998, pp. 1–2.
[555] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 3.
[556] UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/25704, Report of the UN Secretary-General pursuant to Paragraph 2 of Security Council Resolution 808 (1993), 3 May 1993, § 56.

A person who gives the order to commit a war crime or crime against humanity is equally guilty of the offence with the person actually committing it. This principle, expressed already in the Geneva Conventions of 1949, applies to both the military superiors, whether of regular or irregular armed forces, and to civilian authorities.[557]

The Commission noted with satisfaction that Article 7 of the 1993 ICTY Statute used an essentially similar formulation.[558]

550. In 1994, in its final report on grave violations of IHL in Rwanda, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994) noted that "it is a well-established principle of international law that a person who orders a subordinate to commit a violation for which there is individual responsibility is as responsible as the individual that actually carries it out". It referred to the 1950 Nuremberg Principles, the 1948 Genocide Convention, Article 86 AP I and the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind.[559]

Other International Organisations

551. No practice was found.

International Conferences

552. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

553. In its judgement in the Akayesu case in 1998, the ICTR quoted Article 6(1) of the 1994 ICTR Statute and stated that:

472. . . . Thus, in addition to responsibility as principal perpetrator, the Accused can be held responsible for the criminal acts of others where he . . . orders them . . .
473. Thus, Article 6(1) covers various stages of the commission of a crime, ranging from its initial planning to its execution, through its organization. However, the principle of individual criminal responsibility as provided for in Article 6(1) implies that the planning or preparation of the crime actually leads to its commission. Indeed, the principle of individual criminal responsibility for an attempt to commit a crime obtained only in case of genocide. Conversely, this would mean that with respect to any other form of criminal participation and, in particular, those referred to in Article 6(1), the perpetrator would incur criminal responsibility only if the offence were completed.
474. Article 6(1) thus appears to be in accord with the Judgments of the Nuremberg Tribunal which held that persons other than those who committed the crime, especially those who ordered it, could incur individual criminal responsibility.

[557] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 55.
[558] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 56.
[559] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/1405, 9 December 1994, § 173.

...
483. By ordering the commission of one of the crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 4 of the [1994 ICTR] Statute, a person also incurs individual criminal responsibility. Ordering implies a superior-subordinate relationship between the person giving the order and the one executing it. In other words, the person in a position of authority uses it to convince another to commit an offence.[560] [emphasis in original]

554. In its judgement in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case in 1999, the ICTR, with regard to Article 6(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute and a possible responsibility thereunder of one of the accused, a former prefet, stated that:

Where it can be shown that the accused was the de jure or de facto superior and that pursuant to his orders the atrocities were committed, then the Chamber considers that this must suffice to found command responsibility . . . If the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused ordered the alleged atrocities then it becomes unnecessary to consider whether he tried to prevent; and irrelevant whether he tried to punish.[561]

555. In the indictment in the Mrkšić case before the ICTY in 1996, the Prosecutor stated, with respect to the responsibility of the accused for the killing of 260 persons, that:

Each of the accused is individually responsible for the crimes alleged against him in this indictment pursuant to Article 7(1) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute. Individual criminal responsibility includes committing, planning, instigating, ordering or otherwise aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of any crimes referred to in Articles 2 to 5 of the Tribunal Statute.[562]

556. In the review of the indictment in the Martić case in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

20. . . . The principle of criminal responsibility, restated in Article 7(1) of the [1993 ICTY Statute], covers the person who planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime. International law thus permits the prosecution of individuals who acted in an official capacity, as stated in Article 7(2) of the Statute.
21. The Tribunal has particularly valid grounds for exercising its jurisdiction over persons who, through their position of political or military authority, are able to order the commission of crimes falling within its competence ratione materiae or who knowingly refrain from preventing or punishing the perpetrators of such crimes . . . Since the criminal intent is formulated at a high level of the administrative hierarchy, the violation of the norm of international humanitarian law is part of a system of criminality specifically justifying the intervention of the Tribunal.[563]

[560] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, §§ 472–474 and 483.
[561] ICTR, Kayishema and Ruzindana case, Judgement, 21 May 1999, § 223.
[562] ICTY, Mrkšić case, Initial Indictment, 26 October 1995, § 23.
[563] ICTY, Martić case, Review of the Indictment, 8 March 1996, §§ 20–21.

557. In the review of the indictments in the Karadžić and Mladić case in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated, with respect to the accused's possible responsibility under Article 7(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, that:

According to the two indictments, the offences charged were committed by the military and police personnel obeying the orders of the Bosnian Serb administration. Both indictments indicate that the perpetrators were acting under the control, command and direction of Radovan KARADŽIĆ and Ratko MLADIĆ. All of the charges would therefore involve the individual criminal responsibility of those in superior authority . . .

The evidence and testimony tendered all concur in demonstrating that Radovan KARADŽIĆ and Ratko MLADIĆ would not only have been informed of the crimes allegedly committed under their authority, but also and, in particular, that they exercised their power in order to plan, instigate, order or otherwise aid and abet in the planning, preparation or execution of the said crimes.[564]

558. In the review of the indictment in the Rajić case in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that the accused "is charged with ordering" several grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and violations of the laws and customs of war. It also noted that "in the alternative, he is charged with . . . command responsibility" for the same acts. It further stated that "there is proof [the accused] knew about the attack and actually ordered it".[565] In addition, the Trial Chamber stated that:

Based on the evidence produced and the testimony heard, the Trial Chamber is satisfied that the Prosecutor has presented reasonable grounds for believing that, on 23 October 1993, the civilian village of Stupni Do was attacked by HVO forces who were acting with [the accused's] aid and assistance or on his orders. The attack appears to have been aimed at the civilian population of the village, many of whom were killed during it. The village, which had no military significance, was devastated and the civilian property in it was destroyed.[566]

559. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber, examining individual criminal responsibility under Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, stated that:

333. That military commanders and other persons occupying positions of superior authority may be held criminally responsible for the unlawful conduct of their subordinates is a well-established norm of customary and conventional international law. This criminal liability may arise . . . out of the positive acts of the superior (sometimes referred to as "direct" command responsibility) . . . Thus, a superior may be held criminally responsible . . . for ordering, instigating or planning criminal acts carried out by his subordinates . . .
334. . . . The criminal liability of a superior for positive acts follows from general principles of accomplice liability, as set out in the discussion of Article 7(1) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] above.[567]

[564] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Review of the Indictments, 11 July 1996, §§ 65 and 83.
[565] ICTY, Rajić case, Review of the Indictment, 13 September 1996, §§ 1 and 59.
[566] ICTY, Rajić case, Review of the Indictment, 13 September 1996, § 71.
[567] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 333.

560. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber, commenting upon a possible responsibility of the accused under Article 7(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute and referring to the judgement of the ICTR in the Akayesu case, stated that:

> It is not necessary that an order be given in writing or in any particular form. It can be explicit or implicit. The fact that an order was given can be proved through circumstantial evidence.
> ...
> The Trial Chamber agrees that an order does not need to be given by the superior directly to the person(s) who perform(s) the actus reus of the offence. Furthermore, what is important is the commander's mens rea, not that of the subordinate executing the order. Therefore, it is irrelevant whether the illegality of the order was apparent on its face.[568]

561. In its judgement in the Kordić and Čerkez case in 2000, the ICTY Trail Chamber II stated that:

> Article 7(1) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] is concerned with persons directly responsible for planning, instigating, ordering, committing, or aiding and abetting in the planning, preparation or execution of a crime. Thus, both the individual who himself carries out the unlawful conduct and his superior who is involved in the conduct not by physical participation, but for example by ordering or instigating it, are covered by Article 7(1). For instance, a superior who orders the killing of a civilian may be held responsible under Article 7(1), as might a political leader who plans that certain civilians or groups of civilians should be executed, and passes these instructions on to a military commander. The criminal responsibility of such superiors, either military or civilian, in these circumstances is personal or direct, as a result of their direct link to the physical commission of the crime. The criminal responsibility of a superior for such positive acts, except where the superior orders the crime in which case he may be more appropriately referred to as primarily responsible for its commission, may be regarded as "follow(ing) from general principles of accomplice liability".[569]

The ICTY Trial Chamber went on to say that:

> The Trial Chamber is of the view that no formal superior–subordinate relationship is required for a finding of "ordering" so long as it is demonstrated that the accused possessed the authority to order. The Trial Chamber agrees with the Blaškić finding that there is no requirement that an order be given in writing or in any particular form, and that the existence of an order may be proven through circumstantial evidence. In relation to ordering, the Blaškić Trial Chamber further held that the order "does not need to be given by the superior directly to the person(s) who perform(s) the actus reus of the offence. Furthermore, what is important is the commander's mens rea, not that of the subordinate executing the order.[570]

[568] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, §§ 281–282.
[569] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, § 367.
[570] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, § 388.

562. In its judgement in the Krstić case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

The facts pertaining to the commission of a crime may establish that the requirements for criminal responsibility under both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] are met. However, the Trial Chamber adheres to the belief that where a commander participates in the commission of a crime through his subordinates, by "planning", "instigating" or "ordering" the commission of the crime, any responsibility under Article 7(3) is subsumed under Article 7(1). The same applies to the commander who incurs criminal responsibility under the joint criminal enterprise doctrine through the physical acts of his subordinates.[571] [emphasis in original]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

563. In 1993, in a report submitted to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that:

The treaties of international humanitarian law provide various mechanisms . . . for implementing their substantive provisions. Among these mechanisms it is worth mentioning the following: . . . (b) the principle of individual criminal responsibility . . . The principle of the individual criminal responsibility of the perpetrator of certain breaches of international law, including those bearing on the environment in times of armed conflict, as well as of the persons ordering the commission of such acts, is of critical importance. It is firmly rooted in both customary and treaty law, such as the [1907 HR] and the provisions of the Geneva Conventions relating to grave breaches.[572]

VI. Other Practice

564. No practice was found.

C. Command Responsibility for Failure to Prevent, Repress or Report War Crimes

Prevention and repression of war crimes

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

565. Article 1(1) of the 1899 HR lays down as a condition which an armed force must fulfil in order to be accorded the rights of belligerents "to be commanded by a person responsible for his subordinates".

[571] ICTY, Krstić case, Judgement, 2 August 2001, § 605.

[572] ICRC, Report on the Protection of the Environment in Time of Armed Conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, UN Doc. A/48/269, 29 July 1993, §§ 45 and 48.

566. Article 1(1) of the 1907 HR lays down as a condition which an armed force must fulfil in order to be accorded the rights of belligerents "to be commanded by a person responsible for his subordinates".

567. Article 19 of the 1907 Hague Convention (X) provides that:

> The commanders-in-chief of the belligerent fleets must see that the above articles are properly carried out; they will have also to see to cases not covered thereby, in accordance with the instructions of their respective Governments and in conformity with the general principles of the present Convention.

568. Article 26 of the 1929 GC provides that:

> The Commanders-in-Chief of belligerent armies shall arrange the details for carrying out the preceding articles as well as for cases not provided for in accordance with the instructions of their respective Governments and in conformity with the general principles of the present Convention.

569. Article 86(2) AP I provides that:

> The fact that a breach of the Conventions or this Protocol was committed by a subordinate does not absolve his superiors from penal or disciplinary responsibility, as the case may be, if they knew, or had information which should have enabled them to conclude in the circumstances at the time, that he was committing or was going to commit such a breach and if they did not take all feasible measures within their power to prevent or repress the breach.

Article 86 AP I was adopted by consensus.[573]

570. Article 87 AP I provides that:

> 1. The High Contracting Parties and the Parties to the conflict shall require military commanders, with respect to members of the armed forces under their command and other persons under their control, to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress and report to competent authorities breaches of the Conventions and of this Protocol.
> ...
> 3. The High Contracting Parties and Parties to the conflict shall require any commander who is aware that subordinates or other persons under his control are going to commit or have committed a breach of the Conventions or of this Protocol, to initiate such steps as are necessary to prevent such violations of the Conventions or this Protocol, and, where appropriate, to initiate disciplinary or penal action against violators thereof.

Article 87 AP I was adopted by consensus.[574]

571. Upon ratification (or signature) of AP I, Italy, Canada, Germany, Netherlands, Spain and UK expressed their understanding of the term "feasible" used in AP I as being what is "practicable or practically possible". These statements are quoted in detail in Chapter 5, section A, and are not repeated here.

[573] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 307.
[574] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 307.

572. Article 76(2) of draft AP I (now Article 86(2)) submitted by the ICRC to the CDDH provided that:

The fact that a breach of the Conventions or of the present Protocol was committed by a subordinate does not absolve his superiors from penal responsibility if they knew or should have known that he was committing or would commit such a breach and if they did not take measures within their power to prevent or repress the breach.[575]

This proposal was subject to amendments and referred to Working Group A of Committee I.[576] Working Group A of Committee I adopted draft Article 76(2) AP I with the following wording:

The fact that a breach of the Conventions or of the present Protocol was committed by a subordinate does not absolve his superiors from penal or disciplinary responsibility as the case may be, if they knew or had the possibility of knowing in the circumstances at the time that he was committing or was going to commit such a breach and if they did not take all feasible measures within their power to prevent or repress the breach.[577]

573. Article 9(3) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that:

Forced disappearance committed by a subordinate shall not relieve his superiors of criminal responsibility if the latter failed to exercise the powers vested in them to prevent or halt the commission of the crime, if they were in possession of information that enabled them to know that the crime was being or was about to be committed.

574. Article 28 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

In addition to other grounds of criminal responsibility under this Statute for crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court:

(a) A military commander or person effectively acting as a military commander shall be criminally responsible for crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court committed by forces under his or her effective command and control, or effective authority and control as the case may be, as a result of his or her failure to exercise control properly over such forces, where:
  (i) That military commander or person either knew or, owing to the circumstances at the time, should have known that the forces were committing or about to commit such crimes; and
  (ii) That military commander or person failed to take all necessary and reasonable measures within his or her power to prevent or repress their commission or to submit the matter to the competent authorities for investigation and prosecution.

[575] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, Part Three, Draft Additional Protocols, June 1973, p. 25.
[576] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/234/Rev.1, 21 April–11 June 1976, p. 119, § 24.
[577] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/I/321/Rev.1, 21 April–11 June 1976, p. 153. (After the meetings some delegations informed the Chairman of Committee I that they wished to have the words "or had possibility of knowing" replaced by the words "or had information on the basis of which he should have concluded".)

(b) With respect to superior and subordinate relationships not described in paragraph (a), a superior shall be criminally responsible for crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court committed by subordinates under his or her effective authority and control, as a result of his or her failure to exercise control properly over such subordinates, where:
  (i) The superior either knew, or consciously disregarded information which clearly indicated, that the subordinates were committing or about to commit such crimes;
  (ii) The crimes concerned activities that were within the effective responsibility and control of the superior; and
  (iii) The superior failed to take all necessary and reasonable measures within his or her power to prevent or repress their commission or to submit the matter to the competent authorities for investigation and prosecution.

575. Article 15 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention, which also contains a list of the acts considered as offences within the meaning of the Protocol, provides that:

Each Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences set forth in this Article and to make such offences punishable by appropriate penalties. When doing so, Parties shall comply with general principles of law and international law, including the rules extending individual criminal responsibility to persons other than those who directly commit the act.

576. Article 22(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "this Protocol shall apply in the event of an armed conflict not of an international character, occurring within the territory of one of the Parties".

577. Article 6(3) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, dealing with "Individual criminal responsibility", provides that:

The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute [crimes against humanity, violations of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions and of AP II, and other serious violations of international humanitarian law] was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior had failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

Other Instruments

578. Article 22 of the 1954 Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities in Viet-Nam provides that "the Commanders of the Forces of the two parties shall ensure that persons under their respective commands who violate any provisions of the present Agreement are suitably punished".

579. Paragraph 24 of the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials provides that:

Governments and law enforcement agencies shall ensure that superior officers are held responsible if they know, or should have known, that law enforcement officials under their command are resorting, or have resorted, to the unlawful use of force and firearms, and they did not take all measures in their power to prevent, suppress or report such use.

580. Article 12 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Responsibility of the superior", provides that:

The fact that a crime against the peace and security of mankind was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superiors of criminal responsibility, if they knew or had information enabling them to conclude, in the circumstances at the time, that the subordinate was committing or was going to commit such a crime and if they did not take all feasible measures within their power to prevent or repress the crime.

581. Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that:

The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 5 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superior of criminal responsibility if he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

582. Article 6(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that:

The fact that any of the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his or her superior of criminal responsibility if he or she knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

583. Article 2(3) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Individual responsibility", provides that:

An individual shall be responsible for a crime set out in article 17, 18, 19 or 20 if that individual:

. . .

(c) fails to prevent or repress the commission of such a crime in the circumstances set out in article 6.

584. Article 6 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Responsibility of the superior", provides that:

The fact that a crime against the peace and security of mankind was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superiors of criminal responsibility, if they knew or had reason to know, in the circumstances at the time, that the subordinate was committing or was going to commit such a crime and if they did not take all necessary measures within their power to prevent or repress the crime.

585. Section 16 of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 provides that:

In addition to other grounds of criminal responsibility under the present regulation for serious criminal offences referred to in Sections 4 to 7 of the present regulation [i.e. genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture], the fact that any of the acts referred to in the said Sections 4 to 7 was committed by a subordinate does not relieve his superior of criminal responsibility if he knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

586. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that "military commanders must ensure the prevention of breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions and [AP I] and, when necessary, report them to the competent authority and repress them".[578] It further refers to Article 86 AP I and states that:

Breaches [of the Geneva Conventions or of AP I] committed by a subordinate do not absolve his superiors from penal or disciplinary responsibility, as the case may be, if they knew that the subordinate was committing or was going to commit the breach and if they did not take the measures within their power to prevent or repress the breach.[579]

587. Australia's Defence Force Manual refers to the "Yamashita principles" and states that:

The principles of this doctrine are that the commander will be held responsible if the commander:

a. knows subordinates are going to commit war crimes and does not prevent them,
b. knows subordinates have committed war crimes and does not punish them,
c. should know subordinates are going to commit war crimes and does not prevent them, or
d. should know subordinates have committed war crimes and does not punish them.[580]

The manual further states that "specifically, a commander will be held accountable if [he] knows that a breach is occurring and fails to intervene. A commander is also liable for prosecution if the commander fails to act to prevent a breach of LOAC of which the commander should have known."[581]

588. Belgium's Disciplinary Regulations states that "superiors may be criminally or disciplinarily liable if they knew or should have known that a

[578] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.02.
[579] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.07.
[580] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1303; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1203.
[581] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1304; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1204.

subordinate was committing or going to commit an offence and failed to take all measures to prevent, suppress or punish this offence".[582]

589. Benin's Military Manual provides that "each military commander is responsible for respect for the law of war in his sphere of command".[583] It adds that:

> In case of breach of the law of war, [the military commander] shall ensure that the breach ceases and that a disciplinary or criminal action is engaged. In any case, the responsibility of the military commander regarding violations committed by his subordinates is total if it is established that he has not taken any measure to prevent or repress these violations.[584]

590. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that "any act contrary to respect for the Law of War must be punished. Any commander who shows weakness or indulgence in that field shoulders the responsibility."[585]

591. Canada's LOAC Manual states that the "commanders may be held personally and criminally liable in respect of illegal acts committed by those under their command, especially if they knew or should have known that such acts were being committed or were likely to be committed".[586] It also states that "heads of state as well as members of the administration may be held personally and criminally responsible for illegalities committed . . . by persons under their authority if they knew, should have known or acquiesced in such behaviour".[587] The manual further states that:

> The fact that any such crime [i.e. a war crime] was committed by a subordinate does not relieve a superior of criminal responsibility if the superior knew or had reason to believe that the subordinate was about to commit a war crime, and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or to punish the crime.[588]

According to the manual:

> A commander who is aware that subordinates or other persons under his control are about to commit or have committed a breach of the LOAC is required to initiate such steps as are necessary to prevent violations of the LOAC and, where appropriate, to initiate disciplinary or penal action against these persons.[589]

The manual also states that:

> The fact that a subordinate committed a breach of the LOAC does not absolve superiors from penal or disciplinary responsibility. Superiors are guilty of an offence if they knew, or had information which should have enabled them to conclude, in [582] Belgium, Disciplinary Regulations (1991), § 404, see also § 402.

[583] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 14.
[584] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 15.
[585] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 25, § 121(1).
[586] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-1, § 7.
[587] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-2, § 10.
[588] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-4, § 27.
[589] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-7, § 51.

the circumstances ruling at the time, that the subordinate was committing or about to commit a breach of the LOAC, and they did not take all feasible measures within their power to prevent or repress the breach.[590]

592. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that "the commander makes sure that violations of the law of war cease and ensures that disciplinary action is taken".[591]

593. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "the commander shall ensure, by exerting his control, that violations of the law of war cease and that disciplinary or penal action is initiated when necessary".[592]

594. France's LOAC Manual provides that:

> Each individual is responsible for the violations of the law of armed conflicts for which he/she is guilty, whatever the circumstances may be... The commanders are responsible both for the acts they commit [themselves] and for the orders they give, as well as for the breaches which they allow their subordinates to perform, knowingly, for lack of control or for not having taken the necessary measures to oppose them.[593]

595. Hungary's Military Manual provides that it is the "responsibility of every commander [to] ensure knowledge of the law of war". It adds that "in cases of breaches [the commander] shall ensure that they cease and take disciplinary or penal action".[594]

596. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that "the commander makes sure that violations of the law of war cease and ensures that disciplinary action is taken".[595]

597. South Korea's Military Operations Law of War Compliance Regulation states that commanders of UNC/CFC are responsible for securing respect for the laws of war.[596]

598. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "the commander shall ensure that breaches of the law of war cease and that disciplinary or penal action is initiated".[597]

599. The Military Manual of the Netherlands refers to Article 86 AP I and states that "a superior is not automatically criminally liable for every criminal behaviour of his subordinates. He must have known about it or at least have had the necessary information about it and he must have neglected to do all in his power to prevent or suppress the criminal behaviour".[598] Referring to Article 87 AP I, it further states that:

[590] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-7, § 53.
[591] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 20.
[592] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 5.1.
[593] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 113.
[594] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 40.
[595] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 20.
[596] South Korea, Military Operations Law of War Compliance Regulation (1988), p. 230, § E.
[597] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-O, § 20.
[598] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-6.

Commanders are also obliged to take measures in order to prevent their subordinates from committing war crimes. They must take measures to stop the committing of war crimes . . . This can involve criminal or disciplinary proceedings against the acts committed, but also administrative measures (for example suspension or transfer).[599]

600. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that:

Commanders . . . are obliged to take measures to prevent that their subordinates commit war crimes. Every soldier has the duty to prevent the commission of war crimes, to stop them and to report them.[600]

601. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that:

The commander is personally liable in respect of illegal acts committed by those under his command if he knew or should have known that such acts were being committed or were likely to be committed, and it is part of his responsibility to ensure that the troops under his command are aware of their obligations.[601]

The manual further states that:

[The commander] is also liable to punishment if he knew or had information which should have enabled him to conclude, in the circumstances at the time, that a subordinate was committing or going to commit a breach of the law, and failed to take all feasible steps to prevent or repress that breach.[602]

602. Nigeria's Military Manual provides that "Article 87 [AP I] thereby enjoins the parties and the parties to the conflict to request Commanders of their troops under control to prevent, and where necessary, to suppress and to report to competent authorities breaches of the conventions and the Protocols".[603] The manual further states that commanders "should initiate such steps as are necessary to prevent any violations and, where appropriate, to initiate disciplinary or penal action against violators thereof".[604]

603. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that:

In some cases, commanders are responsible for war-crimes committed by their subordinates. For example, when soldiers commit acts of massacre against the civilian population of an occupied territory or against prisoners of war the responsibility for such acts may rest not only with the actual perpetrators but also with the commander. Such responsibility arises when the acts in question have been committed in pursuance of an order of the commander, when the act is done with the commander's knowledge or when the commander ought to have known about the act and failed to use all necessary means at his disposal to ensure compliance with the Laws of War.[605]

[599] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-7.
[600] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-44.
[601] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1603(2).
[602] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1706(1).
[603] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 30, § 3.
[604] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 30, § 3.
[605] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 8.

604. The Handbook on Discipline of the Philippines states that:

The immediate CO of errant military personnel is held accountable either as conduct unbecoming pursuant to AW 96, or as accessory after the fact in cases where he refuses to act, delays or otherwise aids or abets the wrong doing of his subordinates which is the subject of a valid complaint or duly issued warrant of arrest.[606]

605. The Code of Ethics of the Philippines provides that "commanders shall exercise their authority over their subordinates with prudence and shall accept responsibility for their actions".[607]

606. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines provides that:

a. Commanders shall be responsible for the conduct and behavior of AFP and PNP personnel under their control and supervision. They will be held accountable under pertinent provisions of the Articles of War in the case of military personnel and PNP Rules and Regulations and the Revised Penal Code for PNP personnel, or as accessory after the fact in cases where they refuse to act, delay or otherwise aid or abet the wrongdoing of their subordinate, the subject of a valid complaint or warrant of arrest.
b. Commanders shall ensure that all participants in security/police operations shall be briefed and de-briefed before and after every operation to insure proper behavior of personnel and understanding of their mission as well as to assess the over-all impact of the operation to AFP/PNP goals and objectives and whenever necessary immediately undertake corrective legal measures on any misconduct committed by AFP/PNP personnel.[608]

607. Russia's Military Manual provides that, during an armed conflict, a commander is obliged "to put an end to any violation of the rules of IHL; to prosecute persons having committed a violation of the rules of IHL".[609]

608. South Africa's Medical Services Military Manual refers to Article 87 AP I, providing that "commanders will prevent [and] suppress ... breaches of humanitarian law".[610]

609. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the commander must ensure that the violations cease and that disciplinary or penal action is taken".[611] It further imposes on commanding officers the obligation "not to order or tolerate breaches of the humanitarian rules of war".[612]

610. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that:

The fact that a breach of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] was committed by a subordinate does not absolve his superior from penal or disciplinary responsibility. This applies, however, only if the superiors knew, or had received intelligence enabling them to deduce, that the subordinate had committed or was about to commit 606 Philippines, Handbook on Discipline (1989), Part IV, p. 7.

607 Philippines, Code of Ethics (1991), Section 2.3.
608 Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 3(a)–(b).
609 Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 14(b).
610 South Africa, Medical Services Military Manual (undated), p. 5.
611 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.8.c.(1).
612 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.4.b.

such a breach, and if they had not taken all feasible steps in their power to prevent or punish the breach.

The Additional Protocol further clearly states that military commanders shall prevent breaches and if necessary punish and report such cases.[613]

611. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that commanders "are responsible to ensure that their troops respect the Conventions as well as for the punishment of possible breaches".[614]

612. Togo's Military Manual states that "each military commander is responsible for respect for the law of war in his sphere of command".[615] It adds that:

In case of breach of the law of war [the military commander] shall ensure that the breach ceases; that a disciplinary or criminal action is engaged. In any case, the responsibility of the military commander regarding violations committed by his subordinates is total if it is established that he has not taken any measure to prevent or repress these violations.[616]

613. The UK Military Manual provides that:

In some cases military commanders may be responsible for war crimes committed by subordinate members of the armed forces or other persons subject to their control. Thus, for example, when troops commit, or assist in the commission of, massacres and atrocities against the civilian inhabitants of occupied territory, or against prisoners of war, the responsibility may rest not only with the actual perpetrator but also with the commander.

...

The commander is also responsible, if he has actual knowledge or should have knowledge, through reports received by him or through other means, that troops or other persons subject to his control are about to commit or have committed a war crime and if he fails to use the means at his disposal to ensure compliance with the law of war.[617]

614. The US Field Manual states that:

In some cases, military commanders may be responsible for war crimes committed by subordinate members of the armed forces, or other persons subject to their control. Thus, for instance, when troops commit massacres and atrocities against the civilian population of occupied territory or against prisoners of war, the responsibility may rest not only with the actual perpetrators but also with the commander . . . The commander is also responsible if he has actual knowledge, or should have knowledge, through reports received by him or through other means, that troops or other persons subject to his control are about to commit or have committed a war crime and he fails to take the necessary and reasonable steps to insure compliance with the law of war or to punish violators thereof.[618]

[613] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 94.
[614] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 196(2).
[615] Togo, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 14.
[616] Togo, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 15.
[617] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 631.
[618] US, Field Manual (1956), § 501.

615. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that:

An important illustration of the mens rea requirement relates to a commander's responsibility to maintain discipline and preclude violations by members of his command ...

Command responsibility for acts committed by subordinates arises when the specific wrongful acts in question are knowingly ordered or encouraged. In addition, the Commander is responsible if he has the actual knowledge, or should have had knowledge through reports received by him or through other means, that combatants under his control have or are about to commit criminal violations, and he culpably fails to take reasonably necessary steps to ensure compliance with the law and punish violators thereof.[619]

616. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "an important illustration of the mens rea requirement relates to a commander's responsibility to maintain discipline and preclude violations by members of his command".[620]

617. The US Naval Handbook provides that:

Officers in command are not only responsible for ensuring that they conduct all combat operations in accordance with the law of armed conflict; they are also responsible for the proper performance of their subordinates. While a commander may delegate some or all of his authority, he cannot delegate responsibility for the conduct of the forces he commands. The fact that a commander did not order, authorize, or knowingly acquiesce in a violation of the law of armed conflict by a subordinate will not relieve him of responsibility for its occurrence if it is established that he failed to exercise properly his command authority or failed otherwise to take reasonable measures to discover and correct violations that may occur.[621]

The Handbook further states that "all members of the naval service have a duty to comply with the law of armed conflict and, to the utmost of their ability and authority, to prevent violations by others".[622]

618. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook states that:

A commander at any level is personally responsible for the criminal acts of warfare committed by a subordinate if the commander knew in advance of the breach about to be committed and had the ability to prevent it, but failed to take the appropriate action to do so. In determining the personal responsibility of the commander, the element of knowledge may be presumed if the commander had information which should have enabled him or her to conclude under the circumstances that such a breach was to be expected. Officers in command are also personally responsible for unlawful acts of warfare performed by subordinates when such acts are committed by order, authorization, or acquiescence of a superior. Those acts will each be determined objectively.[623]

The Annotated Supplement also states that:

[619] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(d). [620] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(d).
[621] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.3. [622] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.4.
[623] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.1.3, footnote 13.

Where U.S. personnel are involved, military personnel with supervisory authority have a duty to prevent criminal acts. Any person in the naval service who sees a criminal act about to be committed must act to prevent it to the utmost of his or her ability and to the extent of his or her authority . . . Possible actions include moral arguments to dissuade, threatening to report the criminal act, repeating orders of superiors, stating personal disagreement, and asking the senior individual on scene to intervene as a means of preventing the criminal act. In the event the criminal act directly and imminently endangers a person's life (including the life of another person lawfully under his or her custody), force may be used to the extent necessary to prevent the crime. However, the use of deadly force is rarely justified; it may be used only to protect life and only under conditions of extreme necessity as a last resort when lesser means are clearly inadequate to protect life.[624]

619. Uruguay's Disciplinary Regulations states that "no superior shall be absolved of his responsibility by his subordinates' omission or carelessness in matters that he must and can supervise himself".[625]

620. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that a superior who was aware of preparations for acts that would violate certain norms and did not prevent their occurrence or carry out appropriate disciplinary measures is personally responsible. A superior officer shall especially be responsible as an accomplice or instigator in case of repeated violations by subordinates.[626]

National Legislation

621. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides that a superior shall not be relieved of responsibility "if he knew or possessed information leading him to conclude, in the circumstances at the time, that a subordinate had committed, or was about to commit, an offence and did not take the feasible means at his disposal to prevent or repress the offence".[627]

622. Under Armenia's Penal Code, a commander or an official commits a crime against the peace and security of mankind if he knew, or had information which should have enabled him to conclude in the circumstances at the time, that his subordinate was committing or was going to commit an offence [the use of a prohibited method of warfare or a serious breach of international humanitarian law, as defined in Articles 387 and 390 of the Code] and if he did not take all feasible measures within his power to prevent or repress the offence.[628]

623. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code, in a provision entitled "Negligence or giving criminal orders in time of armed conflict", states that:

[624] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.1.4, footnote 14.
[625] Uruguay, Disciplinary Regulations (1980), Article 26.
[626] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 20.
[627] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 193, introducing a new Article 514 bis in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[628] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 391(1).

Failure to use in time of armed conflict all the opportunities by the commander or the person in charge in the framework of their responsibilities in order to prevent that persons under their command commit crimes considered in articles 115–116 of the present Code [i.e. "violations of [the] laws and customs of war" and "violations of the norms of international humanitarian law in time of armed conflict"] . . . will be punished.[629]

624. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act provides that:

The following acts or any of them are crimes within the jurisdiction of a Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility, namely: –

. . .

(h) . . . failure to prevent commission of any such crimes [i.e. crimes against humanity, crimes against peace, genocide, war crimes, "violations of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Convention of 1949" or any other crimes under international law].[630]

625. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act provides that:

Any commander or superior officer . . . who fails or omits to discharge his duty to maintain discipline, or to control or supervise the actions of the persons under his command or his subordinates, whereby such persons or subordinates or any of them commit any such crimes [crimes against humanity, crimes against peace, genocide, war crimes, "violations of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Convention of 1949" or any other crimes under international law], or who fails to take necessary measures to prevent the commission of such crimes, is guilty of such crimes.[631]

626. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that:

If, in a situation of armed conflict, a superior or officer intentionally does not take all the measures possible in his power in order to prevent or repress the commission by his subordinates of the crimes set out in articles 134, 135 and 136 of this Code [i.e. "use of weapons of mass destruction", "violations of the laws and customs of war" and "criminal infringement of the norms of international humanitarian law during armed conflicts"] he is punishable . . .[632]

627. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended, which applies to both international and non-international armed conflicts, provides that:

The following shall be punishable by the penalty provided for completed breaches:

. . .

– failure to act to the extent available to them by persons who had knowledge of the orders given to commit such a breach or of acts initiating the commission thereof and who were able to prevent or put an end to such breach.[633]

629 Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 117(1).
630 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2).
631 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 4(2).
632 Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 137(1).
633 Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Articles 3(3) and 4.

628. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial, in the provision dealing with individual responsibility, states that:

> The fact that any of the acts referred to in Articles 3 through 8 of this law was committed by a subordinate does not relieve the superior of personal criminal responsibility if the superior had effective command and control or authority and control over the subordinate, and the superior knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators.

The articles referred to deal with "any of the crimes set forth in the 1956 Penal Code" such as: homicide, torture and religious persecution (Article 3); genocide (Article 4); crimes against humanity (Article 5); grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (Article 6); destruction of cultural property during armed conflict pursuant to the 1954 Hague Convention (Article 7); and crimes against internationally protected persons as set forth in the 1973 Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons (Article 8), all of these acts being committed during the period 1975–1979.[634]

629. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that military commanders and "superiors" may commit indictable offences if they meet all of the following conditions: (a) fail to "exercise control properly over a person under their effective command and control" and as a result that person commits a war crime; (b) know or are "criminally negligent in failing to know, that the person is about to commit or is committing such an offence"; and (c) subsequently fail to take "as soon as practicable, all necessary and reasonable measures within their power to prevent or repress the commission of the offence, or the further commission of offences" or fail "to take, as soon as practicable, all necessary and reasonable measures within their power to submit the matter to the competent authorities for investigation and prosecution".[635]

630. Under Egypt's Military Criminal Code, commanders have the duty to investigate allegations of military offences.[636]

631. The Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador provide that:

> In the case in which a subordinate has committed any of the crimes set out in this title [i.e. title XIX on "Crimes against humanity" and therein genocide and war crimes], his superiors are not relieved from penal responsibility if they knew or had information that permitted them to conclude, in the circumstances of the time, that the subordinate was committing or was about to commit such crimes and did not take all possible measures which were at their disposal in order to prevent or repress the said act.[637]

[634] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 29.
[635] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 7(1) and (2).
[636] Egypt, Military Criminal Code (1966), Article 23.
[637] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Punibilidad de la comisión por acción y por omisión en delitos contra la humanidad".

632. Estonia's Penal Code provides that:

> Besides the author of one of the crimes set out in this chapter [i.e. crimes against humanity, crimes against peace and war crimes], the representative of the public administration or the military commander who has issued the order to commit such crime, with the consent of whom it has been committed or who has failed to prevent it although it was in his or her power to do so, shall also be punished.[638]

633. France's Code of Military Justice provides that "when a subordinate is tried as the chief actor in an offence . . . and his hierarchical superiors cannot be sought as co-actors, they are considered to be accessories in that they organized or tolerated the criminal acts of their subordinate".[639]

634. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code contains a provision entitled "Responsibility of military commanders and other superiors" which states that:

> (1) A military commander or civilian superior who omits to prevent his or her subordinate from committing an offence pursuant to this Law [inter alia, genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes] shall be punished in the same way as a perpetrator of the offence committed by that subordinate . . .
> (2) Any person effectively giving orders or exercising command and control in a unit shall be deemed equivalent to a military commander. Any person effectively exercising command and control in a civil organisation or in an enterprise shall be deemed equivalent to a civilian superior.[640]

The Law contains a further provision entitled "Violation of the duty of supervision" which states that:

> (1) A military commander who intentionally or negligently omits properly to supervise a subordinate under his or her command or under his or her effective control shall be punished for violation of the duty of supervision if the subordinate commits an offence pursuant to this Law, where the imminent commission of such an offence was discernible to the commander and he or she could have prevented it.
> (2) A civilian superior who intentionally or negligently omits properly to supervise a subordinate under his or her authority or under his or her effective control shall be punished for violation of the duty of supervision if the subordinate commits an offence pursuant to this Law, where the imminent commission of such an offence was discernible to the superior without more and he or she could have prevented it.
> (3) [Article 1, § 4(2)] shall apply mutatis mutandis.[641]

[638] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 88(1).
[639] France, Code of Military Justice (1982), Article 71.
[640] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1(4).
[641] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1(13).

635. Under Italy's Penal Code, a person who fails to prevent someone from committing an act that he or she had the duty to prevent may incur criminal responsibility.[642]

636. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, in a part entitled "War crimes", provides that "the person who orders war crimes to be committed or who is involved therein will be punished in the same way as the author [of the war crimes] himself".[643]

637. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, in a part dealing with the punishment for war crimes, provide that "the superior and the subordinate will both be held responsible in case of the perpetration of any of the infringements mentioned".[644]

638. Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes provides that:

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 66 and 67 of the Penal Code, the following may be charged, according to the circumstances, as co-authors or as accomplices in the crimes and offences set out in Article 1 of the present law [i.e. war crimes]: superiors in rank who have tolerated the criminal activities of their subordinates, and those who, without being superiors in rank of the principal authors, have aided those crimes or offences.[645]

639. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides that:

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 66 and 67 of the Penal Code, the following may be charged, according to the circumstances, as co-authors or as accomplices in the crimes set out in Articles 1 and 3 of the present law [i.e. grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and acts related thereto]: superiors in rank who have tolerated the criminal activities of their subordinates, and those who, without being superiors in rank of the principal authors, have aided those crimes.[646]

It further provides for the punishment of persons who, having knowledge of orders given with regard to the commission of crimes set out in Articles 1 and 3 [i.e. grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and acts related thereto] or of facts being at the beginning of the commission thereof, and who could have prevented the completion or could have terminated it, did not act within their scope of action.[647]

640. The Military Criminal Code as amended of the Netherlands provides that:

Art. 148. A soldier who intentionally allows a subordinate to commit a crime, or who witnesses a crime committed by a subordinate and intentionally omits to take measures, to the extent they are necessary and required from him, will be punished as an accomplice.

642 Italy, Penal Code (1930), Article 40.
643 Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 42.
644 Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 148.
645 Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 3.
646 Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 5.
647 Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 6.

Art. 149. A soldier who intentionally omits to take measures, to the extent they are necessary and required from him, [will be punished] when his subordinate commits, or plans to commit a crime, which he reasonably must have presumed.[648]

641. The International Crimes Act of the Netherlands provides that:

1. A superior shall be liable to the penalties prescribed for the offences referred to in [Article] 2 [genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture] if he:
   (a) intentionally permits the commission of such an offence by a subordinate;
   (b) intentionally fails to take measures, in so far as these are necessary and can be expected of him, if one of his subordinates has committed or intends to commit such an offence.
2. Anyone who culpably neglects to take measures, in so far as these are necessary and can be expected of him, where he has reasonable grounds for suspecting that a subordinate has committed or intends to commit such an offence, shall be liable to no more than two-thirds of the maximum of the principal sentences prescribed for the offences referred to in [Article] 2.[649]

642. Rwanda's Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions aims:

to organize the putting on trial of persons prosecuted for having, between 1 October 1990 and 31 December 1994, committed acts qualified and punished by the Penal Code and which constitute: a) . . . crimes of genocide or crimes against humanity as defined by the [1948 Genocide Convention], by the [1949 GC IV and the Additional Protocols], as well as in the [1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitation to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity].[650]

It provides that:

The fact that any of the acts aimed at by this organic law has been committed by a subordinate does not free his superior from his criminal responsibility if he knew or could know that his subordinate was getting ready to commit this act or had done it and that the superior has not taken necessary and reasonable measures to punish the authors or prevent that the mentioned act be not committed when he had means.[651]

643. Spain's Military Criminal Code imposes a prison sentence on any military officer who does not maintain due discipline in the forces under his command, who tolerates any abuse of authority or power in his subordinates, or who does not take the necessary steps to prevent a military offence among those listed under "Offences against the Laws and Customs of War".[652]

644. According to the Report on the Practice of Spain, Article 11 of Spain's Penal Code, which provides for responsibility by omission, would be [648] Netherlands, Military Criminal Code as amended (1964), Articles 148–149.

[649] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 9.
[650] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 1.
[651] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 53(2).
[652] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 137.

applicable in regard to the commander's duty to prevent breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[653]

645. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides that "if a crime against international law has been committed by a member of the armed forces, his lawful superior shall also be sentenced in so far as he was able to foresee the crime but failed to perform his duty to prevent it".[654]

646. Ukraine's Criminal Code provides for a fine or imprisonment for the "intentional non-stopping of a crime committed by a subordinate", as well as for the failure by a military service official, who is an investigation authority, of carrying out investigations against a subordinate for alleged crimes.[655]

647. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I, establishing provisions for the punishment of a list of more specific offences and also of "all other offences against the laws or customs of war", provided for the punishment of "participation in a common plan or conspiracy to accomplish any of [these acts]" and stated that "leaders, organizers, instigators, accessories and accomplices participating in the formulation or execution of any such common plan or conspiracy will be held responsible for all acts performed by any person in execution of that plan or conspiracy.[656]

648. Yemen's Military Criminal Code states that:

> In the case of the commission of any of the crimes set out under this chapter [i.e. war crimes], the commander . . . will be held responsible for the crime and will not be released from the punishment provided for, except if the acts have been committed against [his] choice, or without [his] knowledge, or if [he] did not have the possibility to prevent them.[657]

National Case-law

649. In the appeal in the Military Junta case in 1985, Argentina's Court of Appeal drew attention to the lack of investigations into and punishment of numerous proven acts, even though such acts had been the object of claims. Referring to the Geneva Conventions, the Court further pointed out that it was the responsibility of the commanders-in-chief of each party to ensure observance of the Conventions.[658]

650. In the Boland case in 1995 involving the beating and killing of a Somali detainee by two Canadian soldiers, a Canadian Court Martial Appeal Court, increasing the sentence upon the accused who had been the superior of the soldiers who directly committed the acts, stated that:

653 Report on the Practice of Spain, 1998, Chapter 6.7, referring to Penal Code (1995), Article 11.
654 Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Chapter 22, § 6.
655 Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 426.
656 US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.
657 Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 23.
658 Argentina, Court of Appeal, Military Junta case (Appeal), 9 December 1985.

In his own examination in chief [the accused] confirmed on several occasions that he had been negligent. The sad but unalterable fact is that negligence led to the death of a prisoner. Even taking the view of the evidence most favorable to the respondent, the panel was bound to conclude that [the accused] had strong reason to be concerned about the conduct of [his subordinates] in respect of a helpless prisoner. Even if the panel believed he did not see [one of the subordinates] strike the prisoner on the first occasion and even if it concluded that [the accused] disbelieved [the] statement [of one of the subordinates] that [the other subordinate] had struck the prisoner after he, [the accused], had left, [the accused] had admitted that he considered [one of the subordinates] to be a "weak" soldier who could surely not be counted on to resist the initiatives [of the other subordinate]. He admitted having seen [one of the subordinates] do life-threatening acts to the prisoner by covering his nose and pouring water on him. He had subsequently heard [one of the subordinates] speak of intending to burn the prisoners with cigarettes. He thus had good grounds for apprehension as to [the] conduct [of one of the subordinates]. There was also evidence from even some defence witnesses that [the] reputation [of one of the subordinates] was well known. Yet, it was clear that [the accused] had said at least once and probably twice in the presence of [one of the subordinates]: "I don't care what you do, just don't kill the guy". He gave no proper order to [one of the subordinates] as to safeguarding the prisoner and left him unsupervised. Nor was it in dispute that it was [the accused's] responsibility to take all reasonable steps to see that the prisoner was held in a proper manner. [The accused] failed in the duty, with grave consequences.

I see nothing in the instructions of the Judge Advocate, nor in the sentence, to indicate the General Court Martial had a proper regard to the fundamental public policy which underlies the duty of a senior non-commissioned officer to safeguard the person or life of a civilian who is a prisoner of Canadian Forces, particularly from apprehended brutality or torture at the hands of our own troops. That is this case . . . No one can dispute the difficult and sometimes hazardous circumstances under which Canadian Forces were operating in Somalia in general, nor the physical problems which [the accused] himself was experiencing at this time. Nevertheless these circumstances call for the exercise of greater rather than less discipline particularly on the part of those in command of others.[659]

651. In the Brocklebank case before the Canadian Court Martial Appeal Court in 1996 involving the question of criminal responsibility of a Canadian soldier serving on a peacekeeping mission in Somalia for having negligently performed a military duty, the majority of the Court of Appeal stated that:

The standard of care applicable to the charge of negligent performance of a military duty is that of the conduct expected of the reasonable person of the rank and in all the circumstances of the accused at the time and place the alleged offence occurred. In the context of a military operation, the standard of care will vary considerably in relation to the degree of responsibility exercised by the accused, the nature and purpose of the operation, and the exigencies of a particular situation. An emergency, or the heightened state of apprehension or urgency caused by the threats to the security of Canadian Armed Forces personnel or their material might mandate a more flexible standard than that expected in relatively non-threatening scenarios. Furthermore, in the military context, where discipline is the linchpin of the hierarchical command structure and insubordination attracts the harshest censure, a soldier cannot be held to the same exacting standard of care as a senior officer when faced with a situation where the discharge of his duty might bring him into direct conflict with the authority of a senior officer.

[659] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Boland case, Judgement, 16 May 1995.

...
In closing, I would remark that ... it remains open to the chief of defence staff to define in more explicit terms the standards of conduct expected of soldiers in respect of prisoners who are in Canadian Forces custody. It is open to the chief of defence staff to ... impose a military duty on Canadian Forces members either to report or take reasonable steps to prevent or arrest the abuse of prisoners not in their charge ... This might prove a useful undertaking.[660]

652. In its judgement in the Superior Orders case in 1953, the German Federal Supreme Court held that the superior giving an illegal order would be primarily responsible for it.[661]

653. In the Mengistu and Others case in 1995 concerning the prosecution and trial of Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam and former members of the Derg for allegedly committing crimes against humanity and war crimes during the former regime between 1974 and 1991, the Special Prosecutor of Ethiopia, in a reply to the objection filed by counsels for the defendants, referred, inter alia, to the 1919 Treaty of Versailles, to the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) and Nuremberg trials and to the 1993 ICTY Statute. He stated that:

Heads of State and other higher responsible government officials in any form of government are all required and obliged to know international crimes thereunder. They are also obliged to prevent the commission of these acts [i.e. of international crimes] and to ensure the observance of the international norms.[662]

654. In the indictment in the Abilio Soares case in 2002 dealing with events that occurred in East Timor in 1999 before the creation of the Ad Hoc Human Rights Tribunal for East Timor in Indonesia, the defendant, the former governor of East Timor, was charged with knowing about or deliberately ignoring information that obviously showed that his subordinates ... were committing or had just committed serious human rights abuses in the form of murder committed in a widespread or systematic fashion, and directed against pro-independence civilians. In this case, the defendant, as Governor and Head of Government in East Timor Province ... who was responsible for all aspects of social, political, economic, and cultural life as well as for upholding law and maintaining order, did not conduct or did not take any appropriate steps such as to coordinate with security forces in preventing or quelling the actions of his subordinates, nor did he turn them over to [660] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Brocklebank case, Judgement, 2 April 1996.

[661] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Superior Orders case, Judgement, 19 March 1953.
[662] Ethiopia, Special Prosecutor's Office, Mengistu and Others case, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995, § 1.6.

responsible authorities to be investigated, questioned, and prosecuted, which then resulted in attack against civilians.[663]

In its sentencing judgement, the Tribunal, assuming that "in East Timor there was an internal armed conflict so [that] the rules regarding war crimes as stipulated in common article 3 of the Geneva Conventions can be applied", stated that:

Having considered that according to Article 86 [AP I] a superior is obliged to make an effective reporting system to ensure that his/her subordinate is conducting his/her duties in accordance with the international humanitarian law rules, and if he/she knows that there is a potential violation, or if there is an actual violation that just had been committed by the subordinate, so the superior should be held responsible for gross violations of Human Rights that are committed by his/her subordinate, if:
- the superior knows that his/her subordinate has committed or is going to commit gross violations of human rights; or
- the superior had the information which enabled him/her to conclude that his/her subordinate has committed or was going to commit gross violations of human rights; or
- the superior did not take action under his/her authority to prevent the said gross violations of human rights.[664]

655. In its judgement in the Schintlholzer case in 1988, Italy's Military Tribunal at Verona, with regard to the accused's responsibility for the acts committed by soldiers under his command, stated that these acts were in conformity with:

systematic activity which cannot as such be explained as the unusual and unforeseeable outcome of spontaneous actions by the combatants, but only as the expression of acts which specifically comply with (and put into effect) orders issued by the Commander [the accused] of the combat unit.

It should therefore be considered that in this case the person of the Commander who has operational and not hierarchical responsibility is a necessary point of reference and reflects the ad hoc organizational structure of composite combat units which, like the "Schintlholzer" combat unit, appear to be formed, used and intended solely for the purpose of a single military operation. This is perfectly consistent with the conviction that evidence of the effective causal contribution which can be attributed to Schintlholzer, at least on the conceptual level, has been obtained, as regards the undoubted contribution of the accused to the decision as to how the distressing facts to which the case relates should be put into effect ...

It is ... hardly necessary to point out even in this connection that if it was ever possible to establish any collateral responsibility by known or unknown SS officials at an operating level, this would not in any way raise any questions about the responsibility of Schintlholzer, which has been proven at this level and in the context which has to be assessed here and now. Thus, as far as criminal intent is concerned, evidence of awareness of the unlawful nature of the conduct involved in the barbaric images described in the preliminary reconstruction of the facts would appear to have been acquired.[665]

[663] Indonesia, Ad Hoc Tribunal on Human Rights for East Timor, Abilio Soares case, Indictment, 19 February 2002.
[664] Indonesia, Ad Hoc Tribunal on Human Rights for East Timor, Abilio Soares case, Judgement, 14 August 2002.

656. In the Rauer case in 1946, the British Military Court at Wuppertal found that none of the accused, among which were Major Rauer and other commanding officers, could be tried for having given an order to kill POWs for lack of evidence. However, it tried the accused for being guilty of "being concerned in the killing of the prisoners".[666]

657. In its judgement in the Von Leeb (The High Command Trial) case in 1947/48 relative to the duty of commanders in occupied territory, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, under the heading "Responsibility of a Commanding Officer for Acts not Ordered by Him", stated that:

Criminality does not attach to every individual in [the] chain of command from that fact alone. There must be a personal dereliction. That can occur only where the act is directly traceable to [the commander] or where his failure to properly supervise his subordinates constitutes criminal negligence on his part. In the latter case, it must be a personal neglect amounting to a wanton, immoral disregard of the action of his subordinates amounting to acquiescence. Any other interpretation of International Law would go far beyond the basic principles of criminal law as known to civilized nations.[667]

However, the Tribunal also noted that:

It is the opinion of this Tribunal that a State can, as to certain matters, under International Law, limit the exercise of sovereign powers by a military commander in an occupied area, but we are also of the opinion that under International Law and accepted usages of civilized nations, that he has certain responsibilities which he cannot set aside or ignore by reason of activities of his own State within his area . . . The situation is somewhat analogous to the accepted principle of International Law that the army which captures the soldiers of its adversary has certain fixed responsibilities as to their care and treatment.[668]

658. In its judgement in the List (Hostages Trial) case in 1947/48, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that:

We have herein before pointed out that it is the duty of the commanding general in occupied territory to maintain peace and order, punish crimes and protect lives and property. This duty extends not only to inhabitants of the occupied territory but to his own troops and auxiliaries as well . . . The duty and responsibility for maintaining peace and order, and the prevention of crime rests upon the commanding general. He cannot ignore obvious facts and plead ignorance as a defence . . . Those responsible for such crimes [i.e. violations of the 1907 HR] by ordering or authorising

[665] Italy, Military Tribunal at Verona, Schintlholzer case, Judgement, 15 November 1988.
[666] UK, Military Court at Wuppertal, Rauer case, Judgement, 18 February 1946.
[667] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb (The High Command Trial) case, Judgement, 30 December 1947–28 October 1948.
[668] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb (The High Command Trial) case, Judgement, 30 December 1947–28 October 1948.

their commission, or by a failure to take effective steps to prevent their execution or recurrence, must be held to account if International Law is to be anything more than an ethical code, barren of any practical coercive deterrent.[669]

With regard to the accused, a high-ranking officer charged with murder and deportation of civilians, the Tribunal stated that:

Not once did he condemn such acts as unlawful. Not once did he call to account those responsible for these inhumane and barbarous acts. His failure to terminate these unlawful killings and to take adequate steps to prevent their recurrence constitutes a serious breach of duty and imposes criminal responsibility . . . [A] commanding general of occupied territory cannot escape responsibility by a claim of a want of authority. The authority is inherent in his position as commanding general of occupied territory. The primary responsibility for the prevention and punishment of crime lies with the commanding general, a responsibility from which he cannot escape by denying his authority over the perpetrators.[670]

659. In the Yamashita case in 1946 involving the trial of the military governor and commanding general of Japan in the Philippines between 9 October 1944 and 2 September 1945, the US Supreme Court was called upon to decide whether the accused could be held responsible for the violations of IHL committed by the troops under his command. The charge alleged that the accused, even though he did not commit or direct the commission of the acts, while commander of armed forces of Japan at war with the United States of America and its allies, unlawfully disregarded and failed to discharge his duty as commander to control the operations of the members of his command, permitting them to commit brutal atrocities and other high crimes against the people of the United States and of its allies and dependencies, particularly the Philippines; and he . . . thereby violated the laws of war.[671]

The Court, in upholding the finding of guilt by the Military Commission in Manila, emphasised that:

It is evident that the conduct of military operations by troops whose excesses are unrestrained by the orders or efforts of their commander would almost certainly result in violations which it is the purpose of the law of war to prevent. Its purpose to protect civilian populations and prisoners of war from brutality would largely be defeated if the commander of an invading army could with impunity neglect to take reasonable measures for their protection. Hence, the law of war presupposes that its violation is to be avoided through the control of the operations of war by commanders who are to some extent responsible for their subordinates.[672]

669 US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 8 July 1947–19 February 1948.
670 US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 8 July 1947–19 February 1948.
671 US, Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Judgement, 4 February 1946.
672 US, Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Judgement, 4 February 1946.

The Court based its decision on Article 1 of the 1907 HR, Article 19 of the 1907 Hague Convention (X), Article 26 of the 1929 GC and Article 43 of the 1907 HR and stated that:

These provisions plainly imposed on petitioner, who at the time specified was military governor of the Philippines, as well as commander of the Japanese forces, an affirmative duty to take such measures as were within his power and appropriate in the circumstances to protect prisoners of war and the civilian population.[673]

One of the judges, in his dissenting opinion, discussed the problem of finding upon a commander's guilt in the case where the troops of a commander commit war crimes while under heavily adverse battle conditions. The judge stated that:

There are numerous instances, especially with reference to the Philippines insurrection in 1900 and 1901, where commanding officers were found to have violated the laws of war by specifically ordering members of their command to commit atrocities and other war crimes . . . And in other cases officers have been held liable where they knew that a crime was to be committed, had the power to prevent it and failed to exercise that power . . . In no recorded instance, however, has the mere inability to control troops under fire or attack by superior forces been made the basis of a charge of violating the laws of war . . . No one denies that inaction or negligence may give rise to liability, civil or criminal. But it is quite another thing to say that the inability to control troops under highly competitive and disastrous battle conditions renders one guilty of a war crime in the absence of personal culpability. Had there been some element of knowledge or direct connection with the atrocities the problem would be entirely different . . . The only conclusion I can draw is that the charge made against the petitioner is clearly without precedent in international law or in the annals of recorded military history. This is not to say that enemy commanders may escape punishment for clear and unlawful failures to prevent atrocities. But that punishment should be based upon charges fairly drawn in light of established rules of international law and recognized concepts of justice.[674]

Another judge, in his dissenting opinion, referred to the first dissenting opinion and stated that he had "discussed the charge with respect to the substance of the crime. With his conclusions in this respect I agree." He further stressed that the findings on evidence did not suffice legal requirements:

There is no suggestion in the findings that petitioner personally participated in, was present at the occurrence of, or ordered any of these incidents . . . Nor is there any express finding that he knew of any one of the incidents in particular or of all taken together. The only inferential findings that he had knowledge, or that the commission so found, are in the statement that "crimes alleged to have been permitted by the accused in violation of the laws of war may be grouped into three categories" set out below. In the further statement that "the prosecution presented evidence to show that the crimes were so extensive and widespread, both as to time and area, that they must either have been wilfully permitted by the accused, or secretly ordered by" him; and in the conclusions of guilt and the sentence. Indeed, the commission's ultimate findings draw no express conclusion of knowledge, but state only two things: (1) the fact of widespread atrocities and crimes; (2) that petitioner "failed to provide effective control . . . as was required by the circumstances" . . . In the state of things petitioner has been convicted of a crime in which knowledge is an essential element.[675]

673 US, Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Judgement, 4 February 1946.
674 US, Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Murphy, 4 February 1946.

660. In its judgement in the Karadžić case in 1995, the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, recalling the judgement in the Yamashita case, stated that "international law imposes an affirmative duty on military commanders to take appropriate measures within their power to control troops under their command for the prevention of such atrocities [i.e. war crimes]".[676]

661. In the Ford v. García case in 2000, a civil lawsuit dealing with acts of torture and extrajudicial killing committed in 1980 in El Salvador, the US Federal Court of Florida gave instructions to the jury on the issue of the responsibility of commanders which read as follows:

A commander may be held liable for torture and extrajudicial killing committed by troops under his command under two separate legal theories. The first applies when a commander takes a positive act, i.e., he orders torture and extrajudicial killing or actually participates in it. The second legal theory applies when a commander fails to take appropriate action to control his troops. This is called the doctrine of command responsibility . . . The doctrine of command responsibility is founded on the principle that a military commander is obligated, under international law and United States law, to take appropriate measures within his power to control the troops under his command and prevent them from committing torture and extrajudicial killing . . .

To hold a specific defendant/commander liable under the doctrine of command responsibility, each plaintiff must prove all of the following elements by a preponderance of the evidence.

(1) That persons under defendant's effective command had committed, were committing, or were about to commit torture and extrajudicial killing, and
(2) The defendant knew, or owing to the circumstances at the time, should have known, that persons under his effective command had committed, were committing, or were about to commit torture and extrajudicial killing; and
(3) The defendant failed to take all necessary and reasonable measures within his power to prevent or repress the commission of torture and extrajudicial killing, or failed to investigate the events in an effort to punish the perpetrators.

"Effective command" means the commander has the legal authority and the practical ability to exert control over his troops. A commander cannot, however, be excused from his duties where his own actions cause or significantly contribute to the lack of effective control.

A commander may be relieved of the duty to investigate or to punish wrongdoers if a higher military or civilian authority establishes a mechanism to identify and punish the wrongdoers. In such a situation, the commander must do nothing to impede nor frustrate the investigation.

675 US, Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Rutledge, 4 February 1946.
676 US, Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Karadžić case, Judgement, 13 October 1995.

A commander may fulfil his duty to investigate and punish wrongdoers if he delegates this duty to a responsible subordinate. A commander has the right to assume that assignments entrusted to a responsible subordinate will be properly executed. On the other hand, the duty to investigate and punish will not be fulfilled if the commander knows or reasonably should know that the subordinate will not carry out his assignment in good faith, or if the commander impedes or frustrates the investigation.[677] [emphasis in original]

662. In the Trajković case in 2001, a Kosovo Serb and former chief of police was convicted, inter alia, of war crimes "against the civilian population and within a concerted plan aiming at systematic atrocities of which he had a complete knowledge". The Court based its judgement on Article 142 of the Penal Code of the SFRY (FRY) and noted that the acts had been committed "in time of war".[678] However, on appeal of the accused, the Supreme Court of Kosovo overruled this judgement and ordered that the case be returned to the same court for retrial. The Supreme Court found that:

The state of facts was erroneously established in relation to all charges as there is no direct or conclusive evidence that the accused acted personally or gave orders leading to the alleged crimes or that he should be held liable under command responsibility duties concerning the above-mentioned crimes . . . During the retrial, the court of first instance should therefore assess . . . the issue of the accused['s] personal responsibility [for] participation in the crimes alleged.[679]

In a written opinion concerning this case, the International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo stated that:

Trajković's war crimes conviction [at the District Court of Gnjilan] based upon murder was apparently through his command responsibility, since there was no credible evidence based on any factual basis that he gave direct orders to do, or personally participated in, these acts . . . Trajković could be found guilty of war crimes under international law through his command responsibility. [Furthermore,] Trajković could have been found guilty through the doctrine of command influence of violating international law for the "grave" injuries to . . . non-combatants . . . [Furthermore,] the trial court found Trajković guilty of a war crime for arson [as a direct result of the police and military attack on the village] committed against the home . . . and bus of . . . but again it must be implied that the liability was from command responsibility . . .

The issue of command responsibility must be dealt with alongside that of individual/personal responsibility ("The Subsuming Rule") . . . This Opinion assumes the court below relied on the command responsibility coming directly from being at the top of a hierarchy of police officers, even if the giving of orders to murder and shoot did not occur. This Opinion then concludes that as to his being responsible under the type of command responsibility – based on evidence of control over subordinates, knowledge of their crimes, and ability and failure to prevent or punish them – Momcilo Trajković may be liable under such command responsibility. His official position of authority over subordinate . . . policemen, buttressed by evidence of his actual authority over them and in the community in general; his possible knowledge of subordinates' crimes; and his obvious failure to prevent and punish them bolster a finding of command responsibility for the acts of policemen under him.[680]

[677] US, Federal Court of Florida, Ford v. García case, Judgement, 3 November 2000.
[678] SFRY (FRY), District Court of Gnjilan, Trajković case, Judgement, 6 March 2001.
[679] SFRY (FRY), Supreme Court of Kosovo, Trajković case, Decision Act, 30 November 2001.

The International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo further pointed out the relation between individual responsibility and command responsibility and set forth, in a detailed way, the "requirements for findings of some individual responsibility in the context of determining command responsibility".[681]

Other National Practice

663. At the CDDH, Argentina stated that "a superior, indeed, should always have knowledge of any breach committed by his subordinates, in order to repress it" and that "if a superior knew of preparations for an act liable to constitute a breach, he was obviously responsible".[682]

664. The Report on the Practice of Argentina notes that in the trial of the commanders which was brought to determine responsibility for the 1982 events in the Falkland/Malvinas Islands, the National Court for Criminal and Correctional Cases "emphasized that the powers accorded to the command by the Code of Military Justice to enhance organisation within the military, including the authority to decide when immediate punishment for crimes is necessary, are [optional] in nature".[683]

665. In 1984, in an assessment of the military implications of the Additional Protocols, Australia's Joint Military Operations and Plans Division, stated that Article 87(1) AP I:

imposes upon commanders the additional responsibility to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress and to report all breaches of the Geneva Conventions and its Protocols. This requires that the constraints imposed by the Protocols and the law of armed conflict generally are understood and reflected in the conduct of operations by every level of military authority.[684]

[680] SFRY (FRY), International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo, Trajković case, Opinion on Appeals of Convictions, 30 November 2001, Sections III(B)(2)(a), (b) and (c) and IV.

[681] SFRY (FRY), International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo, Trajković case, Opinion on Appeals of Convictions, 30 November 2001, Section IV.

[682] Argentina, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.50, 4 May 1976, §§ 56 and 57.

[683] Report on the Practice of Argentina, 1997, Chapter 6.7, referring to the action brought by Decree 2971/83 for Presumed Infractions, as stipulated by the Code of Military Justice and described in the legal proceedings and report by the Commission for the analysis and evaluation of the political responsibilities and military strategy of the armed conflict in the South Atlantic, National Court for Criminal and Correctional Cases in full session, 4 November 1988, Sheet 11.360.

[684] Australia, Joint Military Operations and Plans Division, Assessment of the Military Implications of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, Series No. AA-A1838/376, File No. AA-1710/10/3/1 Pt 2, September 1984, § 10.

666. A Belgian manual containing directives for commanders notes that military discipline "grants respect for human rights and especially for the obligations required by the Geneva Convention".[685]

667. The Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina states that "the superior officer is obliged to instigate proceedings for taking legal sanctions against the persons violating the rules of the international law of war".[686]

668. According to Ethiopia's Office of the Special Public Prosecutor (SPO), which is in charge of prosecuting persons who allegedly committed crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes between 1974 and 1991, since its establishment in 1992 by Proclamation 22/1992 of the transitional government of Ethiopia, by 1997 a total of 5,198 persons had been charged, of whom 2,433 were field commanders, "those who transmitted the orders of the [policy- and decision-makers] and also originated fresh orders of their own". The charges were based on Ethiopia's Penal Code.[687]

669. In 1997, the final report of the Italian Government Commission of Inquiry into the events in Somalia referred to a provision of the Italian Penal Code in recalling that an officer who failed to control dutifully his subordinates could be responsible not only under disciplinary law, but also under criminal law.[688]

670. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, under Jordanian law, "no sanctions are envisaged against a commander who neglects to give the necessary instruction or permits shortcomings in the required supervisions, if grave breaches occur in his area of command".[689]

671. At the CDDH, the Netherlands stated that:

> Recognition in written international law of individual responsibility of superiors who, without excuse, failed to do all in their power to prevent the commission of war crimes by their subordinates supplemented the principle contained in article 77 [of draft AP I], according to which subordinates were individually responsible for war crimes which they had committed, even when acting under superior orders.
> ...
> The principle set out in article 76 [of draft AP I] was not a new one. Although it did not appear in the Charter and the Judgement of the Nürnberg tribunal it had nevertheless played an important part in post-war jurisprudence.
> ...
> Nevertheless, it was difficult to specify the limits of responsibility in cases of failure to act, and the courts would reach their decision in each case only after taking into account all the relevant facts, even though the principle of individual responsibility was now recognized by a great number of States.[690]

685 Belgium, Etat-major Général, L'exercice du commandement. Directives pour un leadership moderne dans les forces armées, 1998, p. 41.
686 Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2000, Chapter 1.6.
687 Ethiopia, Office of the Special Public Prosecutor, Statement of the Chief Special Public Prosecutor, Addis Ababa, 13 February 1997.
688 Italy, Government Commission of Inquiry, Final report into the events in Somalia, 8 August 1997, p. 34.
689 Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 6.7.
690 Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.50, 4 May 1976, §§ 31–32 and 35.

672. In 1988, in a memorandum on "Respect for Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP" addressed to the AFP Chief of Staff, the Department of National Defence of the Philippines reiterated that:

The [Department of National Defence's] long standing directive to take the necessary bold steps to weed out and punish, as warranted by proper investigation, not only the military personnel who directly commit the acts complained, but also, with equal vigor, the commanders who countenance such abuse by way of summarily dropping the case, intimidating the complainant and his witnesses "cover-up" of the incidents, failure to report to superior authorities, and/or sheer inaction on the complaint. I would also like to re-stress the instruction that "the commanding officer of an erring military personnel shall be similarly held accountable either as conduct unbecoming an officer or as accessory after the fact in cases where he refuses to act, delays action or otherwise aids and abets the wrongdoing of his subordinate which is the subject of a valid complaint.[691]

673. The Guidelines on Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP, issued in 1989 by the Office of the Chief of Staff of the armed forces of the Philippines, provides that:

Commanders who are proven through due process to have countenanced human rights abuses by way of summarily dropping complaints, intimidating the complainant and/or witnesses, "cover-up" of the incidents, failure to report to superiors, and/or shows inaction on the complaint, shall be held accountable either as conduct unbecoming an officer or as accessory.

Commanders of Major Services, Area Commanders and AFPWSSUS shall devise a system which offers investigators and prosecutors convenient means of identifying and prosecuting personnel engaged in gun-for-hire or protection racket, extortion, condonation of vices, and other felonious activities designed to discredit the government in general and the AFP in particular.[692]

674. The Philippine press has reported several cases in which commanding officers were relieved of their duties or accused on the basis of command responsibility.[693]

[691] Philippines, Department of National Defence, Secretary, Memorandum to the AFP Chief of Staff on Respect for Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP, 1 December 1988.

[692] Philippines, Ministry of National Defence, Office of the Chief of Staff, Guidelines on Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP, 2 January 1989, § 2(1) and (2).

[693] Manila Bulletin, "Basilan Officer Relieved", 29 September 1995; Today, "Cotabato Folk Denounce Slay of Non-combatants", 20 March 1997; Today, "Prosecution of Army Brass Involved in Shelling Urged", 30 March 1997; Today, "Relieve Buldon Officers", 2 April 1997 (as a result of the CHR's investigation, a Vice Governor demanded the relief of military commanders responsible for the death of 11 civilians); Today, "Military Washes its Hands of Buldon Carnage: CHR Stung by AFP Rejection", 12 April 1997, p. 12. (The report on the incident by the Philippine Commission on Human Rights (CHR) blamed the military for the bombing of a school. The armed forces, however, rejected these findings. To finally resolve the issue, the CHR and the AFP agreed to form an independent body to conduct an investigation.)

675. In 1992, in a note verbale with respect to the implementation of Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Slovenia stated that:

Not only those who have directly committed the crimes [i.e. "crimes committed against humanity and international humanitarian law"], but also those who gave orders or were otherwise engaged, should be prosecuted as perpetrators. Such consistent approach of the United Nations Commission of Experts would also include the question of the criminal responsibility of numerous high military officers and politicians; this would be in accordance with international criminal law and to date practice, especially the one applied in the Nuremberg trials.[694]

676. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

Criminal responsibility for violations of the law of war rests with a commander, including the national leadership, if he (or she):

- Orders or permits the offence to be committed, or
- Knew or should have known of the offence(s), had the means to prevent or halt them, and failed to do all which he was capable of doing to prevent the offences or their recurrence.

...

The crimes committed against Kuwaiti civilians and property, and against third party nationals, are offences for which Saddam Hussein, officials of the Ba'ath Party, and his subordinates bear direct responsibility. However, the principal responsibility rests with Saddam Hussein. Saddam Hussein's C2 of Iraqi military and security forces appeared to be total and unequivocal. There is substantial evidence that each act alleged was taken as a result of his orders, or was taken with his knowledge and approval, or was an act which he should have known.[695]

677. In 1992, the US report on Iraqi war crimes (Desert Shield/Desert Storm), prepared under the auspices of the US Secretary of the Army, noted that "criminal responsibility for violations of the law of war rests with a commander, including the national leadership, who ... knew or should have known of the offences, had the means to prevent or halt them, and failed to do all which he or she was capable of doing to prevent the offences or their recurrence".[696]

678. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the unanimous vote on Resolution 827 (1993) establishing the ICTY, the US stated that:

With respect to paragraph 1 of Article 7 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute], it is our understanding that individual responsibility arises in the case of ... the failure of a [694] Slovenia, Note verbale dated 5 November 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24789, 9 November 1992, p. 2.

[695] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, pp. 633–634.

[696] US, Secretary of the Army, Report on Iraqi war crimes (Desert Shield/Desert Storm), unclassified version, 8 January 1992, p. 13.

superior – whether political or military – to take reasonable steps to prevent or punish [violations of IHL] by persons under his or her authority.[697]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

679. In 1995, in a statement by its President regarding the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed "its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law" and reiterated "to all concerned that those who have committed or ordered the commission of such acts will be held individually responsible in respect of such acts". It reminded "the military and political leaders of the Bosnian Serb party that this responsibility extends to any such acts committed by forces under their command".[698]

680. In a resolution adopted in 1993 with respect to the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly stated that "those in positions of authority who have failed adequately to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable together with the perpetrators".[699] In subsequent resolutions on the same subject adopted in 1995 and 1996, the UN General Assembly reiterated this view.[700]

681. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that:

> All persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity or other violations of international law are individually responsible for those violations and . . . those in positions of authority who have failed to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable, together with the perpetrators.[701]

682. In a resolution on civil defence forces adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights recommended that:

> whenever armed civil defence forces are created to protect the civilian population, Governments establish, where appropriate, minimum legal requirements for them, within the framework of domestic law, including the following:
>
> . . .
>
> (d) Commanders shall have clear responsibility for their activities;
>
> (e) Civil defence forces and their commanders shall be clearly accountable for their activities.[702]

[697] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217 (Provisional), 25 May 1993, p. 16.
[698] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/33, 20 July 1995.
[699] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/143, 20 December 1993, § 5.
[700] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/192, 22 December 1995, § 4; Res. 51/115, 12 December 1996, § 4.
[701] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/205, 23 December 1994, § 6.
[702] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/67, 9 March 1994, § 2.

683. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that:

All persons who perpetrate or authorize crimes against humanity and other violations of international humanitarian law are individually responsible for those violations, and . . . those in positions of authority who have failed adequately to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant international instruments are accountable together with the perpetrators.[703]

684. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on punishment of the crime of genocide, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights affirmed that:

All persons who perpetrate or authorize the commission of genocide and related crimes are individually responsible for such actions and . . . those in positions of authority who have failed adequately to ensure that persons under their control comply with the relevant principles of international law are accountable along with the perpetrators.[704]

685. In 1993, in his report on the draft Statute of the ICTY, the UN Secretary-General's stated that a person in a position of superior authority should also be held responsible for failure to prevent a crime or to deter the unlawful behaviour of his subordinates. This imputed responsibility or criminal negligence is engaged if the person in superior authority knew or had reason to know that his subordinates were about to commit crimes or had committed crimes and yet failed to take the necessary and reasonable steps to prevent or repress the commission of such crimes or to punish those who had committed them.[705]

686. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General noted, on the issue of the personal jurisdiction of the Court, that:

While those "most responsible" obviously include the political and military leadership, others in command authority down the chain of command may also be regarded "most responsible" judging by the severity of the crime or its massive scale. "Most responsible", therefore, denotes both a leadership or authority position of the accused, and a sense of the gravity, seriousness or massive scale of the crime.[706]

687. In 1997, in the recommendations of his second report on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the de facto authorities in Burundi:

[703] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/77, 9 March 1994, § 5.
[704] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/8, 20 August 1993, § 1.
[705] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Paragraph 2 of Security Council Resolution 808 (1993), UN Doc. S/25704, 3 May 1993, § 56.
[706] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 30.

to establish a firm chain of command within the army and the security forces, so that senior officers bear real responsibility for abusive acts committed by their subordinates. Military personnel, whether commissioned or noncommissioned officers, should be stripped of their rank when their involvement in such acts has been proved.[707]

688. In 1998, in her final report submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights concluded that:

Individual perpetrators of slavery, crimes against humanity, genocide, torture and war crimes – whether State or non-State actors – must be held responsible for their crimes at the international level, depending on the circumstances of the case and on the capacity and availability of forums to adjudicate fairly and dispense justice adequately. A strict application of the international legal standards for command responsibility, which apply to all authorities within a given chain of command, may prevent future sexual or gender violence in conflict situations and will serve the goals of protection, enforcement and deterrence.[708]

689. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) recalled that it had addressed the issue of command responsibility in its first interim report as follows:

Superiors are . . . individually responsible for a war crime or crime against humanity committed by a subordinate if they knew, or had information which should have enabled them to conclude, in the circumstances at the time, that the subordinate was committing or was going to commit such an act and they did not take all feasible measures within their power to prevent or repress the act.[709]

The Commission noted with satisfaction that Article 7 of the 1993 ICTY Statute used an essentially similar formulation.[710] It further stated that:

> 58. It is the view of the Commission that the mental element necessary when the commander has not given the offending order is (a) actual knowledge, (b) such serious personal dereliction on the part of the commander as to constitute wilful and wanton disregard of the possible consequences, or (c) an imputation of constructive knowledge, that is, despite pleas to the contrary, the commander, under the facts and circumstances of the particular case, must have known of the offences charged and acquiesced therein . . .

[707] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Burundi, Second report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/12, 10 February 1997, § 93.
[708] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, § 113.
[709] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 55.
[710] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 56.

59. The military commander is not absolutely responsible for all offences committed by his subordinates. Isolated offences may be committed of which he has no knowledge or control whatsoever . . . The arguments that a commander has a weak personality or that the troops assigned to him are uncontrollable are invalid. In particular, a military commander who is assigned command and control over armed combatant groups which have engaged in war crimes in the past should refrain from employing such groups in combat, until they clearly demonstrate their intention and capability to comply with the law in the future.
60. Lastly, a military commander has the duty to punish or discipline those under his command whom he knows or has reasonable grounds to know committed a violation.[711]

With respect to practices of "ethnic cleansing", sexual assault and rape during the conflict in the former Yugoslavia which, according to the Commission, would seem to have been carried out by some parties to the conflict "so systematically that they strongly appear to be the product of a policy", the Commission noted that:

313. . . . The consistent failure to prevent the commission of such crimes and the consistent failure to prosecute and punish the perpetrators of these crimes, clearly evidences the existence of a policy by omission. The consequence of this conclusion is that command responsibility can be established.
314. Knowledge of these grave breaches and violations of international humanitarian law can reasonably be inferred from consistent and repeated practices.[712]

690. In its 1993 report, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador examined a case involving the execution of ten detained persons. The Commission found that:

7. There is sufficient evidence that [the superiors] knew about the order to execute the detainees and did nothing to prevent their execution.
8. There is substantial evidence that the Honour Commission of the armed forces, the Commission for the Investigation of Criminal Acts and the judge of the Criminal Court of First Instance of the city of San Sebastián failed to take steps to determine the responsibility of [the superiors].[713]

Other International Organisations

691. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the OIC Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs stated that it held the Serb leaders, those in Belgrade as well as those in the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina, responsible for the atrocities committed by the Yugoslav

[711] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, §§ 58–59.
[712] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, §§ 313–314.
[713] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, p. 86.

National Army and Serb irregular forces against Muslims and Croats of Bosnia-Herzegovina . . . and recalls that they will be considered guilty of war crimes.[714]

International Conferences

692. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference called on "all States to remind military commanders that they are required . . . to make every effort to ensure that no violations [of IHL] are committed and, where necessary, to punish or report any violations to the authorities".[715]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

693. In the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT (Tokyo), with respect to responsibility for war crimes against prisoners, stated that:

Responsibility for the care of prisoners of war and of civilians internees (all of whom we will refer to as "prisoners") . . . is not limited to the duty of mere maintenance but extends to the prevention of mistreatment. In particular, acts of inhumanity to prisoners which are forbidden by the customary law of nations as well as by conventions are to be prevented by the Government having responsibility for the prisoners.

In the discharge of these duties to prisoners Governments must have resort to persons. Indeed the Governments responsible, in this sense, are those persons who direct and control the functions of Government. In this case and in the above regard we are concerned with the members of the Japanese Cabinet. The duty to prisoners is not a meaningless obligation cast upon a political abstraction. It is a specific duty to be performed in the first case by those persons who constitute the Government. In the multitude of duties and tasks involved in modern government there is of necessity an elaborate system of subdivision and delegation of duties. In the case of the duty of Governments to prisoners held by them in time of war those persons who constitute the Government have the principal and continuing responsibility for their prisoners, even though they delegate the duties of maintenance and protection to others.

In general, the responsibility for prisoners held by Japan may be stated to have rested upon:

(1) Members of the Government;
(2) Military or Naval Officers in command of formations having prisoners in their possession;
(3) Officials in those departments which were concerned with the well-being of prisoners;
(4) Officials, whether civilian, military, or naval, having direct and immediate control of prisoners.

It is the duty of all those on whom responsibility rests to secure proper treatment of prisoners and to prevent their ill-treatment by establishing and securing the [714] OIC, Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs, Fifth Extraordinary Session, 17–18 June 1992, Res. 1/5-EX, § 15.

[715] 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Canberra, 13–18 September 1993, Resolution on Respect for International Humanitarian Law and Support for Humanitarian Action in Armed Conflicts, § 2(e).

continuous and efficient working of a system appropriate for these purposes. Such persons fail in this duty and become responsible for ill-treatment of prisoners, if:

(1) They fail to establish such a system.
(2) If having established such a system, they fail to secure its continued and efficient working.

Each of such persons has a duty to ascertain that the system is working and if he neglects to do so he is responsible. He does not discharge his duty by merely instituting an appropriate system and thereafter neglecting to learn of its application. An Army Commander or a Minister of War, for example, must be at the same pains to ensure obedience to his orders in this respect as he would in respect of other orders he has issued on matters of the first importance.

Nevertheless, such persons are not responsible if a proper system and its continuous efficient functioning be provided for and conventional war crimes be committed unless:

(1) They had knowledge that such crimes were being committed, and having such knowledge they failed to take such steps as were within their power to prevent the commission of such crimes in the future, or
(2) They are at fault in having failed to acquire such knowledge.

If, such a person had, or should, but for negligence or supineness, have had such knowledge he is not excused for inaction if his Office required or permitted him to take any action to prevent such crimes. On the other hand it is not enough for the exculpation of a person, otherwise responsible, for him to show that he accepted assurances from others more directly associated with the control of the prisoners if having regard to the position of those others, to the frequency of reports of such crimes, or to any other circumstances he should have been put upon further inquiry as to whether those assurances were true or untrue. That crimes are notorious, numerous and widespread as to time and place are matters to be considered in imputing knowledge.

A member of a Cabinet which collectively, as one of the principal organs of the Government, is responsible for the care of prisoners is not absolved from responsibility if, having knowledge of the commission of the crimes . . . and omitting or failing to secure the taking of measures to prevent the commission of such crimes in the future, he elects to continue as a member of the Cabinet. This is the position even though the Department of which he has the charge is not directly concerned with the care of prisoners. A Cabinet member may resign. If he has knowledge of ill-treatment of prisoners, is powerless to prevent future ill-treatment, but elects to remain in the Cabinet thereby continuing to participate in its collective responsibility for protection of prisoners he willingly assumes responsibility for any ill-treatment in the future.

Army or Navy Commanders can, by order, secure proper treatment and prevent ill-treatment of prisoners. So can Ministers of War and of the Navy. If crimes are committed against prisoners under their control, of the likely occurrence of which they had, or should have had knowledge in advance, they are responsible for those crimes. If, for example, it be shown that within the units under his command conventional war crimes have been committed of which he knew or should have known, a commander who takes no adequate steps to prevent the occurrence of such crimes in the future will be responsible for such future crimes.[716]

[716] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter II(b).

In the part of the judgement dealing with "conventional war crimes (atrocities)", the IMT (Tokyo) stated that:

The Japanese Government condoned ill-treatment of prisoners of war and civilian internees by failing and neglecting to punish those guilty of ill-treating them or by prescribing trifling and inadequate penalties for the offence. [Various examples] are evidence that the War Ministry knew there was ill-treatment of prisoners. The trifling nature of the punishments imposed implies condonation. The Government actively concealed the ill-treatment to which prisoners of war and civilian internees were subjected by refusing visits by representatives of the Protecting Power designated by the Allies.[717]

694. In the case of the Major War Criminals before the IMT (Tokyo) in 1948, the then Japanese Foreign Minister, Koki Hirota, was held criminally responsible in relation to the so-called "Rape of Nanking" or "Nanking massacre" which had occurred in 1937/1938. The IMT stated that:

As Foreign Minister [Hirota] received reports of these atrocities immediately after the entry of Japanese forces into Nanking. According to the Defence evidence credence was given to these reports and the matter was taken up with the War Ministry. Assurances were accepted from the War Ministry that the atrocities would be stopped. After these assurances had been given reports of atrocities continued to come in for at least a month. The Tribunal is of the opinion that HIROTA was derelict in his duty in not insisting before the Cabinet that immediate action be taken to put an end to the atrocities, failing any other action open to him to bring about the same result. He was content to rely on assurances which he knew were not being implemented while hundreds of murders, violations of women, and other atrocities were being committed daily. His inaction amounted to criminal negligence.[718]

695. In the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT (Tokyo), in its verdict passed on a Japanese commander during the Second World War, Heitaro Kimura, stated that:

With knowledge of the extent of the atrocities committed by Japanese troops in all theatres of war, in August 1994 KIMURA took over command of the Burma Area Army. From the date of his arrival at his Rangoon Headquarters and later . . . the atrocities continued to be committed on an undiminished scale. He took no disciplinary measures or other steps to prevent the commission of atrocities by the troops under his command.

It has been urged in KIMURA's defence that when he arrived in Burma he issued orders to his troops to conduct themselves in a proper soldierly manner and to refrain from ill-treating prisoners. In view of the nature and extent of the ill-treatment of prisoners, in many cases on a large scale within a few miles of his headquarters, the Tribunal finds that KIMURA was negligent in his duty to enforce the Rules of [717] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter VIII.

[718] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter X (Verdicts).

War. The duty of an Army commander in such circumstances is not discharged by the mere issue of routine orders, if indeed such orders were issued. His duty is to take such steps and issue such orders as will prevent thereafter the commission of war crimes and to satisfy himself that such orders are being carried out. This he did not do. Thus he deliberately disregarded his legal duty to take adequate steps to prevent breaches of the laws of war.[719]

696. In the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT (Tokyo), in its verdict passed on a Japanese Prime Minister during the Second World War, Kuniaki Koiso, stated that:

When KOISO became Prime Minister in 1944 atrocities and other war crimes being committed by the Japanese troops in every theatre of war had become so notorious that it is improbable that a man in KOISO's position would not have been well-informed either by reason of their notoriety or from interdepartmental communications. The matter is put beyond doubt by the fact that in October 1944 the Foreign Minister reported to a meeting of the Supreme Council for the Direction of War, which KOISO attended, that according to recent information from enemy sources it was reported that the Japanese treatment of prisoners of war "left much to be desired". He further stated that this was a matter of importance from the point of view of Japan's international reputation and future relations. He asked that directions be issued to the competent authorities so that the matters might be fully discussed. Thereafter KOISO remained Prime Minister for six months during which the Japanese treatment of prisoners and internees showed no improvement whatever. This amounted to a deliberate disregard of duty.[720]

697. In the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT (Tokyo), in its verdict passed on the Japanese Commander-in-Chief of the Central China Area Army, Iwane Matsui during the "Rape of Nanking" or "Nanking massacres", stated that:

From his own observations and from the reports of his staff he must have been aware of what was happening. He admits he was told of some degree of misbehaviour of his Army . . . Daily reports of these atrocities were made to Japanese diplomatic representatives in Nanking who, in turn, reported them to Tokyo. The tribunal is satisfied that MATSUI knew what was happening. He did nothing, or nothing effective to abate these horrors. He did issue orders before the capture of the City enjoining propriety of conduct upon his troops and later he issued further orders to the same purport. These orders were of no effect as is now known, and as he must have known. It was pleaded on his behalf that at this time he was ill. His illness was not sufficient to prevent his conducting the military operations of his command nor to prevent his visiting the City for days while these atrocities were occurring. He was in command of the Army responsible for these happenings. He knew of them. He had the power, as he had the duty, to control his troops and to protect the unfortunate citizens of Nanking. He must be held criminally responsible for his failure to discharge his duty.[721]

[719] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter X (Verdicts).
[720] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter X (Verdicts).

698. In the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT (Tokyo), in its verdict passed on an officer of staff of the Japanese Commander-in-Chief of the Central China Area Army during the "Rape of Nanking" or "Nanking massacres", Akira Muto, stated that:

It was during [his period as an officer of staff of MATSUI] that shocking atrocities were committed by the Army of MATSUI in and about Nanking. We have no doubt that MUTO knew, as MATSUI knew, that these atrocities were being committed over a period of many weeks. His superior did take no adequate steps to stop them. MUTO is not responsible for this dreadful affair.

[Later] MUTO commanded the Second Imperial Guards Division in Northern Sumatra. During this period in the area occupied by his troops widespread atrocities were committed for which MUTO shares responsibility. Prisoners of war and civilian internees were starved, neglected, tortured and murdered and civilians were massacred.

[Later], MUTO became Chief-of-Staff to Yamashita in the Philippines . . . His position was now very different from that which he held during the so-called "Rape of Nanking". He was now in a position to influence policy. During his tenure of office as such Chief-of-Staff a campaign of massacre, torture and other atrocities was waged by the Japanese troops on the civilian population, and prisoners of war and civilian internees were starved, tortured and murdered. MUTO shares responsibility for these gross breaches of the Laws of War. We reject his defense that he knew nothing of these occurrences.[722]

699. In the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT (Tokyo), in its verdict passed on one of the Japanese Foreign Ministers during the Second World War, Mamoru Shigemitsu, stated that:

We do no injustice to SHIGEMITSU when we hold that the circumstances, as he knew them made him suspicious that the treatment of the prisoners was not as it should have been. Indeed a witness gave evidence for him to that effect. Thereupon he took no adequate steps to have the matter investigated, although he, as a member of the government, bore overhead responsibility for the welfare of the prisoners. He should have pressed the matter, if necessary to the point of resigning, in order to quit himself of a responsibility which he suspected was not being discharged.[723]

700. In the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT (Tokyo), in its verdict passed on one of the Japanese Prime Ministers during the Second World War, Hideki Tojo, stated, inter alia, that:

The barbarous treatment of prisoners and internees was well known to TOJO. He took no adequate steps to punish offenders and to prevent the commission of similar offences in the future. His attitude towards the Bataan Death March gives the key to his conduct towards these captives. He knew in 1942 something of the conditions of the march and that many prisoners had died as a result of these conditions. He did not call for a report on the incident. When in the Philippines in 1943 he made perfunctory inquiries about the march but took no action. No one was punished. His explanation is that the commander of a Japanese Army in the field is given a mission in the performance of which he is not subject to specific orders from Tokyo. Thus the head of the Government of Japan knowingly and wilfully refused to perform the duty which lay upon that Government of enforcing performance of the Laws of War.[724]

[721] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter X (Verdicts).
[722] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4-12 November 1948, Chapter X (Verdicts).
[723] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter X (Verdicts).

701. In the Toyoda case in 1949, an International Military Tribunal at Tokyo considered the essential elements of command responsibility to be:

1. That offenses, commonly recognized as atrocities, were committed by troops of his command;
2. The ordering of such atrocities.

In the absence of proof beyond reasonable doubt of the issuance of orders then the essential elements of command responsibility are:

1. As before, that atrocities were actually committed;
2. Notice of the commission thereof. This notice may be either:
   a. Actual, . . .
   b. Constructive . . .
3. Power of command. That is, the accused must be proved to have had actual authority over the offenders to issue orders to them not to commit illegal acts, and to punish offenders.
4. Failure to take such appropriate measures as are within his power to control the troops under his command and to prevent acts which are violations of the laws of war.
5. Failure to punish offenders.

In the simplest language, it may be said that this Tribunal believes the principle of command responsibility to be that, if this accused knew, or should by the exercise of ordinary diligence have learned, of the commission by his subordinates, immediate or otherwise, of the atrocities proved beyond a shadow of a doubt before this Tribunal or of the existence of a routine which would countenance such, and, by his failure to take any action to punish the perpetrators, permitted the atrocities to continue, he has failed in his performance of his duty as a commander and must be punished.[725]

702. In its judgement in the Akayesu case in 1998, the ICTR Trial Chamber stated that:

Article 6 (3) [of the 1994 ICTR Statute] . . . does not necessarily require that the superior acted knowingly to render him criminally liable; it suffices that he had reason to know that his subordinates were about to commit or had committed a crime and failed to take the necessary or reasonable measures to prevent such

[724] IMT (Tokyo), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 4–12 November 1948, Chapter X (Verdicts).
[725] International Military Tribunal at Tokyo, Toyoda case, Judgement, 6 September 1949.

acts or punish the perpetrators thereof. In a way, this is liability by omission or abstention.[726]

The Trial Chamber further stated that:

Article 6 (3) of the [1994 ICTR] Statute deals with the responsibility of the superior, or command responsibility. This principle, which derives from the principle of individual criminal responsibility as applied in the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials, was subsequently codified in Article 86 of the Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions of 8 June 1977.[727]

With regard to Article 6(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute and referring to the ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols, the judgement of the IMT (Tokyo) in the case of the Major War Criminals (verdict against the Japanese Foreign Minister Koki Hirota) and the dissenting opinion of one of the judges in the same case, the Trial Chamber held that:

488. There are varying views regarding the Mens rea required for command responsibility. According to one view it derives from a legal rule of strict liability, that is, the superior is criminally responsible for acts committed by his subordinate, without it being necessary to prove the criminal intent of the superior. Another view holds that negligence which is so serious as to be tantamount to consent or criminal intent, is a lesser requirement . . .
489. The Chamber holds that it is necessary to recall that criminal intent is the moral element required for any crime and that, where the objective is to ascertain the individual criminal responsibility of a person accused of crimes falling within the jurisdiction of the Chamber, such as genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of Article 3 Common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II thereto, it is certainly proper to ensure that there has been malicious intent, or, at least, ensure that negligence was so serious as to be tantamount to acquiescence or even malicious intent.
490. As to whether the form of individual criminal responsibility referred to Article 6 (3) of the Statute applies to persons in positions of both military and civilian authority, it should be noted that during the Tokyo trials, certain civilian authorities were convicted of war crimes under this principle . . .
491. The Chamber . . . finds that in the case of civilians, the application of the principle of individual criminal responsibility, enshrined in Article 6 (3), to civilians remains contentious. Against this background, the Chamber holds that it is appropriate to assess on a case by case basis the power of authority actually devolved upon the Accused in order to determine whether or not he had the power to take all necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the commission of the alleged crimes or to punish the perpetrators thereof.[728]

703. In its judgement in the Kayishema and Ruzindana case in 1999, the ICTR Trial Chamber stated that:

[726] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 479.
[727] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 486.
[728] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, §§ 488–491.

The question of responsibility arising from a duty to act, and any corresponding failure to execute such a duty is a question that is inextricably linked with the issue of command responsibility. This is because under Article 6(3) [of the 1994 ICTR Statute] a clear duty is imposed upon those in authority, with the requisite means at their disposal, to prevent or punish the commission of a crime.[729]

With regard to Article 6(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute and a possible responsibility thereunder of one of the accused, a former prefet, the Trial Chamber further stated that:

209. The principle of command responsibility is firmly established in international law, and its position as a principle of customary international law has recently been delineated by the ICTY in the [Judgement of 16 November 1998 in the Delalić case]. The clear recognition of this doctrine is now reflected in Article 28 of the [1998 ICC Statute].
210. The finding of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute does not prevent the Chamber from finding responsibility additionally, or in the alternative, under Article 6(3). The two forms of responsibility are not mutually exclusive . . .
Responsibility of a Non-Military Commander
. . .
216. . . . The Chamber accepts the submission made by the Prosecution that a civilian in a position of authority may be liable under the doctrine of command responsibility. The Chamber will turn, therefore, to consider in what instances a civilian can be considered a superior for the purposes of Article 6(3), and the requisite "degree of authority" necessary to establish individual criminal culpability pursuant to this doctrine of superior responsibility.
Concept of Superior: de Jure and de Facto Control
217. This superior–subordinate relationship lies at the heart of the concept of command responsibility. The basis under which he assumes responsibility is that, if he knew or had reason to know that a crime may or had been committed, then he must take all measures necessary to prevent the crime or punish the perpetrators. If he does not take such actions that are within his power then, accordingly, he is culpable for those crimes committed . . .
218. In order to "pierce the veils of formalism" therefore, the Chamber must be prepared to look beyond the de jure powers enjoyed by the accused and consider the de facto authority he exercised within Kibuye during April to July 1994. The position expounded by the ILC that an individual should only be responsible for those crimes that were within his legitimate legal powers to prevent, does not assist the Trial Chamber in tackling the "realities of any given situation". Therefore, in view of the chaotic situation that which prevailed in Rwanda in these pivotal months of 1994, the Chamber must be free to consider whether Kayishema had the requisite control over those committing the atrocities to establish individual criminal liability under Article 6(3), whether by de jure or de facto command.
. . .
222. Article 6 of this Tribunal's Statute is formulated in a broad manner. By including responsibility of all government officials, all superiors and all those acting pursuant to orders, it is clearly designed to ensure that those who are culpable for the commission of a crime under Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute cannot escape responsibility through legalistic formalities. Therefore, the Chamber is under a duty, pursuant to Article 6(3), to consider the responsibility of all individuals who exercised effective control, whether that control be de jure or de facto.

[729] ICTR, Kayishema and Ruzindana case, Judgement, 21 May 1999, § 202.

223. Where it can be shown that the accused was the de jure or de facto superior and that pursuant to his orders the atrocities were committed, then the Chamber considers that this must suffice to found command responsibility. The Chamber need only consider whether he knew or had reason to know and failed to prevent or punish the commission of the crimes if he did not in fact order them. If the Chamber is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused ordered the alleged atrocities then it becomes unnecessary to consider whether he tried to prevent; and irrelevant whether he tried to punish.
224. However, in all other circumstances, the Chamber must give full consideration to the elements of "knowledge" and "failure to prevent and punish" that are set out in Article 6(3) of the Statute.
Knowledge of Subordinates' Actions
225. The mens rea in Article 6(3) requires that for a superior to be held criminally responsible for the conduct of his subordinates he must have known, or had reason to know, of their criminal activities . . .
. . .
228. The Trial Chamber agrees with this view insofar that it does not demand a prima facie duty upon a non-military commander to be seized of every activity of all persons under his or her control. In light of the objective of Article 6(3) which is to ascertain the individual criminal responsibility for crimes as serious as genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of Common Article 3 to the Geneva Conventions and [AP II], the Chamber finds that the Prosecution must prove that the accused in this case either knew, or consciously disregarded information which clearly indicated or put him on notice that his subordinates had committed, or were about to commit acts in breach of Articles 2 to 4 of this Tribunal's Statute.
Effective Control: Failure to Prevent or Punish a Crime
229. The principle of command responsibility must only apply to those superiors who exercise effective control over their subordinates. This material ability to control the actions of subordinates is the touchstone of individual responsibility under Article 6(3) . . .
. . .
231. . . . The ability to prevent and punish a crime is a question that is inherently linked with the given factual situation. Thus, only in light of the findings which follow and an examination of the overall conditions in which Kayishema had to operate as Prefect, can the Chamber consider who were the subordinates to Kayishema from April to July 1994 and whether he exercised the requisite degree of control over them in order to conclude whether he is individually criminally responsible for the atrocities committed by them.[730]

704. In the indictment in the Mrkšić case before the ICTY in 1995, the Prosecutor stated, with respect to the responsibility of the accused for the killing of 260 persons, that:

[730] ICTR, Kayishema and Ruzindana case, Judgement, 21 May 1999, §§ 209–231.

Each of the accused is also or alternatively criminally responsible as a commander for the acts of his subordinates pursuant to Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute. Command criminal responsibility is the responsibility of a superior officer for the acts of his subordinate if he knew or had reason to know that his subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.[731]

705. In the review of the indictment in the Martić case in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

The Tribunal has particularly valid grounds for exercising its jurisdiction over persons who, through their position of political or military authority, are able to order the commission of crimes falling within its competence ratione materiae or who knowingly refrain from preventing or punishing the perpetrators of such crimes.[732]

706. In the review of the indictments in the Karadžić and Mladić case in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber found, in the light of the analysis of the institutional functions and the effective exercise of power by the two accused, that:

The conditions for the responsibility of superiors under Article 7(3) of the Statute, that is those constituting criminal negligence of superiors, have unquestionably been fulfilled:

- the Bosnian Serb military and police forces committing the offences alleged were under the control, command and direction of Radovan KARADŽIĆ and Ratko MLADIĆ during the whole period covered in the indictment;
- through their position in the Bosnian Serb Administration, Radovan KARADŽIĆ and Ratko MLADIĆ knew or had reasons to know that their subordinates committed or were about to commit the offences in question;
- lastly, it has established that Radovan KARADŽIĆ and Ratko MLADIĆ failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.[733]

707. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

333. Military commanders and other persons occupying positions of superior authority may be held criminally responsible for the unlawful conduct of their subordinates is a well-established norm of customary and conventional international law. This criminal liability may arise either out of the positive acts of the superior (sometimes referred to as "direct" command responsibility) or from his culpable omissions ("indirect" command responsibility or command responsibility strictu sensu). Thus, a superior may be held criminally responsible . . . also for failing to take measures to prevent or repress the unlawful conduct of his subordinates.
334. The distinct legal character of the two types of superior responsibility must be noted. While the criminal liability of a superior for positive acts follows from general principles of accomplice liability, as set out in the discussion of Article 7(1) above, the criminal responsibility of superiors for failing to take measures to prevent or repress the unlawful conduct of their subordinates is best understood when seen against the principle that criminal responsibility for omissions is incurred only where there exists a legal obligation to act. As is most clearly evidenced in the case of military commanders by article 87 [AP I], international law imposes an affirmative duty on superiors to prevent persons under their control from committing violations of international humanitarian law, and it is ultimately this duty that provides the basis for, and defines the contours of, the imputed criminal responsibility under Article 7(3) of the Statute.

[731] ICTY, Mrkšić case, Initial Indictment, 26 October 1995, § 24.
[732] ICTY, Martić case, Review of the Indictment, 8 March 1996, § 21.
[733] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Review of the Indictments, 11 July 1996, §§ 81–82.

335. Although historically not without recognition in domestic military law, it is often suggested that the roots of the modern doctrine of command responsibility may be found in the Hague Conventions of 1907 . . .

. . .

340. In the period following the Second World War until the present time, the doctrine of command responsibility has not been applied by any international judicial organ. Nonetheless, there can be no doubt that the concept of the individual criminal responsibility of superiors for failure to act is today firmly placed within the corpus of international humanitarian law. Through the adoption of Additional Protocol I, the principle has now been codified and given a clear expression in international conventional law. Thus, article 87 [AP I] gives expression to the duty of commanders to control the acts of their subordinates and to prevent or, where necessary, to repress violations of the Geneva Conventions or the Protocol. The concomitant principle under which a superior may be held criminally responsible for the crimes committed by his subordinates where the superior has failed to properly exercise this duty is formulated in article 86 [AP I]. A survey of the travaux préparatoires of these provisions reveals that, while their inclusion was not uncontested during the drafting of the Protocol, a number of delegations clearly expressed the view that the principles expressed therein were in conformity with pre-existing law . . .

. . .

343. On the basis of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber concludes that the principle of individual criminal responsibility of superiors for failure to prevent or repress the crimes committed by subordinates forms part of customary international law.[734]

As to the elements of individual criminal responsibility of commanders under Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Trial Chamber stated that:

From the text of Article 7(3) it is thus possible to identify the essential elements of command responsibility for failure to act as follows:

(i) the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship;
(ii) the superior knew or had reason to know that the criminal act was about to be or had been committed; and
(iii) the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the criminal act or punish the perpetrator thereof.[735]

Affirming the responsibility of non-military superiors under Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Trial Chamber noted that:

[734] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 333–335, 340 and 343.
[735] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 346.

357. This interpretation of the scope of Article 7(3) is in accordance with the customary law doctrine of command responsibility . . .
. . .
363. Thus, it must be concluded that the applicability of the principle of superior responsibility in Article 7(3) extends not only to military commanders but also to individuals in non-military positions of superior authority.[736]

Turning to "the concept of superior", the Trial Chamber stated that:

370. While the matter is, thus, not undisputed, it is the Trial Chamber's opinion that a position of command is indeed a necessary precondition for the imposition of command responsibility. However, this statement must be qualified by the recognition that the existence of such a position cannot be determined by reference to formal status alone. Instead, the factor that determines liability for this type of criminal responsibility is the actual possession, or non-possession, of powers of control over the actions of subordinates. Accordingly, formal designation as a commander should not be considered to be a necessary prerequisite for command responsibility to attach, as such responsibility may be imposed by virtue of a person's de facto, as well as de jure, position as a commander.
371. . . . It is clear that the term "superior" is sufficiently broad to encompass a position of authority based on the existence of de facto powers of control . . .
. . .
377. While it is, therefore, the Trial Chamber's conclusion that a superior, whether military or civilian, may be held liable under the principle of superior responsibility on the basis of his de facto position of authority, the fundamental considerations underlying the imposition of such responsibility must be borne in mind. The doctrine of command responsibility is ultimately predicated upon the power of the superior to control the acts of his subordinates. A duty is placed upon the superior to exercise this power so as to prevent and repress the crimes committed by his subordinates, and a failure by him to do so in a diligent manner is sanctioned by the imposition of individual criminal responsibility in accordance with the doctrine. It follows that there is a threshold at which persons cease to possess the necessary powers of control over the actual perpetrators of offences and, accordingly, cannot properly be considered their "superiors" within the meaning of Article 7(3) of the Statute . . . [However,] great care must be taken lest an injustice be committed in holding individuals responsible for the acts of others in situations where the link of control is absent or too remote.
378. Accordingly, it is the Trial Chamber's view that, in order for the principle of superior responsibility to be applicable, it is necessary that the superior have effective control over the persons committing the underlying violations of international humanitarian law, in the sense of having the material ability to prevent and punish the commission of these offences. With the caveat that such authority can have a de facto as well as a de jure character, the Trial Chamber accordingly shares the view expressed by the International Law Commission that the doctrine of superior responsibility extends to civilian superiors only to the extent that they exercise a degree of control over their subordinates which is similar to that of military commanders.[737]

[736] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 357 and 363.
[737] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 370–371 and 377–378.

Discussing the mental element necessary for the establishment of criminal responsibility of commanders, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

383. The doctrine of superior responsibility does not establish a standard of strict liability for superiors for failing to prevent or punish the crimes committed by their subordinates. Instead, Article 7(3) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] provides that a superior may be held responsible only where he knew or had reason to know that his subordinates were about to or had committed the acts referred to under Articles 2 to 5 of the Statute. A construction of this provision in light of the content of the doctrine under customary law leads the Trial Chamber to conclude that a superior may possess the mens rea required to incur criminal liability where: (1) he had actual knowledge, established through direct or circumstantial evidence, that his subordinates were committing or about to commit crimes referred to under Article 2 to 5 of the Statute, or (2) where he had in his possession information of a nature, which at the least, would put him on notice of the risk of such offences by indicating the need for additional investigation in order to ascertain whether such crimes were committed or were about to be committed by his subordinates.
...
393. An interpretation of the terms of [Article 86 AP I] in accordance with their ordinary meaning thus leads to the conclusion, confirmed by the travaux préparatoires, that a superior can be held criminally responsible only if some specific information was in fact available to him which would provide notice of offences committed by his subordinates. This information need not be such that it by itself was sufficient to compel the conclusion of the existence of such crimes. It is sufficient that the superior was put on further inquiry by the information, or, in other words, that it indicated the need for additional investigation in order to ascertain whether offences were being committed or about to be committed by his subordinates. This standard, which must be considered to reflect the position of customary law at the time of the offences alleged in the Indictment, is accordingly controlling for the construction of the mens rea standard established in Article 7(3).[738]

With regard to the "necessary and reasonable measures" to be taken by a commander, the Trial Chamber stated that:

394. The legal duty which rests upon all individuals in positions of superior authority requires them to take all necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the commission of offences by their subordinates or, if such crimes have been committed, to punish the perpetrators thereof. It is the view of the Trial Chamber that any evaluation of the action taken by a superior to determine whether this duty has been met is so inextricably linked to the facts of each particular situation that any attempt to formulate a general standard in abstracto would not be meaningful.
395. It must, however, be recognised that international law cannot oblige a superior to perform the impossible. Hence, a superior may only be held criminally responsible for failing to take such measures that are within his powers. The question then arises of what actions are to be considered to be within the superior's powers in this sense. As the corollary to the standard adopted by the Trial Chamber with respect to the concept of superior, we conclude that a superior should be held responsible for failing to take such measures that are within his material possibility. The Trial Chamber accordingly does not adopt the position taken by the ILC on this point, and finds that the lack of formal legal competence to take the necessary measures to prevent or repress the crime in question does not necessarily preclude the criminal responsibility of the superior.[739]

[738] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 383 and 393.

708. In its judgement in the Aleksovski case in 1999, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

> 67. The doctrine of superior responsibility makes a superior responsible not for his acts sanctioned by Article 7(1) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute but for his failure to act. A superior is held responsible for the acts of his subordinates if he did not prevent the perpetration of the crimes of his subordinates or punish them for the crimes.
> 68. The responsibility for failure to act, sometimes known as "indirect superior responsibility" is provided for in Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute . . .
> 69. Article 7 makes clear that superior responsibility may be invoked if three concurrent elements are proved:
> (i) a superior–subordinate relationship between the person against whom the claim is directed and the perpetrators of the offence;
> (ii) the superior knew or had reason to know that a crime was about to be committed or had been committed;
> (iii) the superior did not take all the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the crime or to punish the perpetrator or perpetrators thereof.
> 70. The three constituent elements which are evident from the wording of Article 7(3) clearly draw from Article 86, paragraph 2, of [AP I] and Article 6 of the [1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind]. They are repeated in Article 28 of the [1998 ICC Statute].
> . . .
> 72. . . . Superior responsibility covered in Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute must not be seen as responsibility for the act of another person. Superior responsibility derives directly from the failure of the person against whom the complaint is directed to honour an obligation . . . Within the meaning of Article 7(3), a person is obliged to act only if it has been established that he was a superior of the perpetrators of the offence and also knew or had reasons to know that a crime was about to be committed or had been committed. Should such be the case, the person against whom the claim is directed is obliged to take all the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the crime or to punish the perpetrator or perpetrators thereof.
> a) The superior-subordinate relationship
> . . .
> 75. . . . The generic term "superior" in Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute can be interpreted only to mean that superior responsibility is not limited to military commanders but may apply to the civilian authorities as well.
> 76. Superior responsibility is thus not reserved for official authorities. Any person acting de facto as a superior may be held responsible under Article 7(3). The decisive criterion in determining who is a superior according to customary international law is not only the accused's formal legal status but also his ability, as demonstrated by his duties and competence, to exercise control . . .

[739] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 394–395.

78. . . . Hierarchical power constitutes the very foundation of responsibility under the terms of Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute. In order to entail his responsibility under Article 7(3), whatever his status, the accused must first have superior authority . . . In the opinion of the Trial Chamber, a civilian must be characterised as a superior pursuant to Article 7(3) if he has the ability de jure or de facto to issue orders to prevent an offence and to sanction the perpetrators thereof. A civilian's sanctioning power must however be interpreted broadly. It should be stated that the doctrine of superior responsibility was originally intended only for the military authorities. Although the power to sanction is the indissociable corollary of the power to issue orders within the military hierarchy, it does not apply to the civilian authorities. It cannot be expected that a civilian authority will have disciplinary power over his subordinate equivalent to that of the military authorities in an analogous command position. To require a civilian authority to have sanctioning powers similar to those of a member of the military would so limit the scope of the doctrine of superior authority that it would hardly be applicable to civilian authorities. The Trial Chamber therefore considers that the superior's ability de jure or de facto to impose sanctions is not essential. The possibility of transmitting reports to the appropriate authorities suffices once the civilian authority, through its position in the hierarchy, is expected to report whenever crimes are committed, and that, in the light of this position, the likelihood that those reports will trigger an investigation or initiate disciplinary or even criminal measures is extant.

b) The superior knew or had reason to know that a crime was about to be committed or had been committed

. . .

80. . . . Admittedly, as regards "indirect" responsibility, the Trial Chamber is reluctant to consider that a "presumption" of knowledge about a superior exists which would somehow automatically entail his guilt whenever a crime was allegedly committed. The Trial Chamber deems however that an individual's superior position per se is a significant indicium that he had knowledge of the crimes committed by his subordinates. The weight to be given to that indicium however depends inter alia on the geographical and temporal circumstances. This means that the more physically distant the commission of the acts was, the more difficult it will be, in the absence of other indicia, to establish that the superior had knowledge of them. Conversely, the commission of a crime in the immediate proximity of the place where the superior ordinarily carried out his duties would suffice to establish a significant indicium that he had knowledge of the crime, a fortiori if the crimes were repeatedly committed.

(c) Necessary and reasonable measures

81. The [ICRC] Commentary on Additional Protocol I and the [1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind] limit the notion of "necessary and reasonable measures" to the measures which the superior can actually take . . . Such a material possibility must not be considered abstractly but must be evaluated on a case by case basis depending on the circumstances.[740]

[740] ICTY, Aleksovski case, Judgement, 25 June 1999, §§ 67–81.

709. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber drew a clear distinction between Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, noting that:

> Whilst Article 7(1) deals with the commander's participation in the commission of a crime, Article 7(3) enshrines the principle of command responsibility in the strict sense which entails the commander's individual criminal responsibility if he did not prevent crimes from being committed by his subordinates or, where applicable, punish them.[741]

With regard to Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Trial Chamber first held that "the principle of command responsibility strictu sensu forms part of customary international law".[742] It went on to say that:

> 294. . . . For a conviction under Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute in the present case, proof is required that:
> (1) there existed a superior–subordinate relationship between the commander (the accused) and the perpetrator of the crime;
> (2) the accused knew or had reason to know that the crime was about to be or had been committed; and
> (3) the accused failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the crime or punish the perpetrator thereof.
>
> . . .
> 300. . . . This principle [that in order for Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute to apply, the accused must be in a position of command] is not limited to individuals formally designated commander but also encompasses both de facto and de jure command . . .
> 301. . . . A commander may incur criminal responsibility for crimes committed by persons who are not formally his (direct) subordinates, insofar as he exercises effective control over them.
> 302. . . . The commander need not have any legal authority to prevent or punish acts of his subordinates. What counts is his material ability, which instead of issuing orders or taking disciplinary action may entail, for instance, submitting reports to the competent authorities in order for proper measures to be taken.[743]

As regards the mens rea ("knew or had reason to know") of the accused, the Trial Chamber agreed that knowledge "may be proved through either direct or circumstantial evidence". With regard to circumstantial evidence, the Trial Chamber held that > in determining whether in fact a superior must have had the requisite knowledge it may consider inter alia the following indicia enumerated by the Commission of Experts in its Final Report: the number, type and scope of the illegal acts; the time during which the illegal acts occurred; the number and type of troops involved; the logistics involved, if any; the geographical location of the acts; the widespread occurrence of the acts; the speed of the operations; the modus operandi of similar

[741] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 261.
[742] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 290.
[743] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, §§ 294 and 300–302.

illegal acts; the officers and staff involved; and the location of the commander at the time.[744]

Referring to numerous instances of case-law and quoting a writer's opinion, the Trial Chamber stated that:

322. From this analysis of jurisprudence, the Trial Chamber concludes that after World War II, a standard was established according to which a commander may be liable for crimes by his subordinates if "he failed to exercise the means available to him to learn of the offence and, under the circumstances, he should have known and such failure to know constitutes criminal dereliction".
...
324. The Trial Chamber now turns to codification at the international level, namely the adoption of Additional Protocol I in 1977. The pertinent question is this: was customary international law altered with the adoption of Additional Protocol I, in the sense that a commander can be held accountable for failure to act in response to crimes by his subordinates only if some specific information was in fact available to him which would provide notice of such offences? Based on the following analysis, the Trial Chamber is of the view that this is not so.
...
328. In the Trial Chamber's view, the words "had information" in Article 86(2) [AP I] must be interpreted broadly...
329.... Given the essential responsibilities of military commanders under international humanitarian law, the Trial Chamber holds,... in the words of the [ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols], that "their role obliges them to be constantly informed of the way in which their subordinates carry out the tasks entrusted them, and to take the necessary measures for this purpose".
...
332.... In conclusion, the Trial Chamber finds that if a commander has exercised due diligence in the fulfilment of his duties yet lacks knowledge that crimes are about to be or have been committed, such lack of knowledge cannot be held against him. However, taking into account his particular position of command and the circumstances prevailing at the time, such ignorance cannot be a defence where the absence of knowledge is the result of negligence in the discharge of his duties: this commander had reason to know within the meaning of the [1993 ICTY] Statute.[745]

With regard to "necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish", the Trail Chamber held that:

335. The Trial Chamber has already characterised a "superior" as a person exercising "effective control" over his subordinates. In other words, the Trial Chamber holds that where a person has the material ability to prevent or punish crimes committed by others, that person must be considered a superior. Accordingly, it is a commander's degree of effective control, his material ability, which will guide the Trial Chamber in determining whether he reasonably took the measures required either to prevent the crime or to punish the perpetrator. As stated above in the discussion of the definition of "superior", this implies that, under some circumstances, a commander may discharge his obligation to prevent or punish by reporting the matter to the competent authorities.

[744] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 307.
[745] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, §§ 322, 324, 328–329 and 332.

336. Lastly, the Trial Chamber stresses that the obligation to "prevent or punish" does not provide the accused with two alternative and equally satisfying options. Obviously, where the accused knew or had reason to know that subordinates were about to commit crimes and failed to prevent them, he cannot make up for the failure to act by punishing the subordinates afterwards.[746]

With respect to the concurrent application of Article 7(1) and 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Trial Chamber stated that:

337. It would be illogical to hold a commander criminally responsible for planning, instigating or ordering the commission of crimes and, at the same time, reproach him for not preventing or punishing them. However, as submitted by the Prosecution, the failure to punish past crimes, which entails the commander's responsibility under Article 7(3), may, pursuant to Article 7(1) and subject to the fulfilment of the respective mens rea and actus reus requirements, also be the basis for his liability for either aiding and abetting or instigating the commission of further crimes.
. . .
339. As stated earlier in this Judgement, in the case of instigation, proof is required of a causal connection between the instigation, which may entail an omission, and the perpetration of the act. In the scenario under discussion, this means it must be proved that the subordinates would not have committed the subsequent crimes if the commander had not failed to punish the earlier ones. However, with respect to the Defence's submission that under Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute proof is required that the commander's omission caused the commission of the crime by the subordinate, the Trial Chamber is of the view that such a causal link may be considered inherent in the requirement that the superior failed to prevent the crimes which were committed by the subordinate.[747] [emphasis in original]

710. In its judgement on appeal in the Delalić case in 2001, the ICTY Appeals Chamber upheld the interpretation of Article 7(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute given by the Trial Chamber to the standard "had reason to know" and stated that:

A superior will be criminally responsible through the principles of superior responsibility only if information was available to him which would have put him on notice of offences committed by subordinates. This is consistent with the customary law standard of mens rea as existing at the time of the offences charged in the indictment.[748]

711. In its judgement in the Kunarac case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber, under the heading "Command responsibility under Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute", stated that:

395. . . . The following three conditions must be met before a commander can be held responsible for the acts of his or her subordinates:

[746] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, §§ 335–336.
[747] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, §§ 337 and 339.
[748] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement of Appeal, 20 February 2001, § 241.

(i) the existence of a superior–subordinate relationship;
(ii) the superior knew or had reason to know that the criminal act was about to be or had been committed; and
(iii) the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the criminal act or punish the perpetrator thereof.

396. Because of the findings of the Trial Chamber, it need only deal with the first of those elements. A superior-subordinate relationship must exist for the recognition of this kind of responsibility. However, such a relationship cannot be determined by reference to formal status alone. Accordingly, formal designation as a commander is not necessary for establishing command responsibility, as such responsibility may be recognised by virtue of a person's de facto, as well as de jure, position as a commander. What must be established is that the superior had effective control over subordinates. That means that he must have had the material ability to exercise his powers to prevent and punish the commission of the subordinates' offences.
397. The relationship between the commander and his subordinates need not have been formalized; a tacit or implicit understanding between them as to their positioning vis-à-vis one another is sufficient. The giving of orders or the exercise of powers generally attached to a military command are strong indications that an individual is indeed a commander. But these are not the sole relevant factors.
...
399. Both those permanently under an individual's command and those who are so only temporarily or on an ad hoc basis can be regarded as being under the effective control of that particular individual. The temporary nature of a military unit is not, in itself, sufficient to exclude a relationship of subordination between the members of a unit and its commander. To be held liable for the acts of men who operated under him on an ad hoc or temporary basis, it must be shown that, at the time when the acts charged in the Indictment were committed, these persons were under the effective control of that particular individual.[749] [emphasis in original]

712. In its judgement in the Kordić and Čerkez case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

Article 7 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] is clearly intended to assign individual criminal responsibility at different levels, both subordinate and superior, for the commission of crimes listed in Articles 2 to 5 of the Statute. Article 7 gives effect to a general principle of criminal law that an individual is responsible for his acts and omissions. It provides that an individual may be held criminally responsible for the direct commission of a crime, whether as an individual or jointly, or through his omissions for the crimes of his subordinates when under an obligation to act. Article 7(3) of the Statute sets forth the principle governing the responsibility of superiors commonly referred to as "command responsibility".[750]

The Trial Chamber also noted that:

369. The type of responsibility provided for in Article 7(3) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] may be described as "indirect" as it does not stem from a "direct" involvement by the superior in the commission of a crime but rather from his omission to prevent or punish such offence, i.e., of his failure to act in spite of knowledge. This responsibility arises only where the superior is under a legal obligation to act . . . The duty that rests on military commanders properly to supervise their subordinates is for instance expressed in Article 87 of Additional Protocol I, entitled "Duty of commanders", which imposes an affirmative duty on them to prevent persons under their control from committing violations of international humanitarian law, and to punish the perpetrators if violations occur. Liability under Article 7(3) is based on an omission as opposed to positive conduct. It should be emphasised that the doctrine of command responsibility does not hold a superior responsible merely because he is in a position of authority as, for a superior to be held liable, it is necessary to prove that he "knew or had reason to know" of the offences and failed to act to prevent or punish their occurrence. Superior responsibility, which is a type of imputed responsibility, is therefore not a form of strict liability.

[749] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, §§ 395–399.
[750] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, § 364.

. . .

371. The Trial Chamber is of the view that in cases where the evidence presented demonstrates that a superior would not only have been informed of subordinates' crimes committed under his authority, but also exercised his powers to plan, instigate or otherwise aid and abet in the planning, preparation or execution of these crimes, the type of criminal responsibility incurred may be better characterised by Article 7(1) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute]. Where the omissions of an accused in a position of superior authority contribute (for instance by encouraging the perpetrator) to the commission of a crime by a subordinate, the conduct of the superior may constitute a basis for liability under Article 7(1).[751]

713. In its judgement in the Krstić case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

604. According to the case law, the following three conditions must be met before a person can be held responsible for the acts of another person under Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute:

- The existence of a superior–subordinate relationship;
- The superior knew or had reason to know that the criminal act was about to be or had been committed; and
- The superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the criminal act or punish the perpetrator thereof.

605. The facts pertaining to the commission of a crime may establish that the requirements for criminal responsibility under both Article 7(1) and Article 7(3) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] are met. However, the Trial Chamber adheres to the belief that where a commander participates in the commission of a crime through his subordinates, by "planning", "instigating" or "ordering" the commission of the crime, any responsibility under Article 7(3) is subsumed under Article 7(1). The same applies to the commander who incurs criminal responsibility under the joint criminal enterprise doctrine through the physical acts of his subordinates.[752] [emphasis in original]

As to General Krstic's possible individual criminal responsibility, the Trial Chamber stated, inter alia, that:

[751] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, §§ 369 and 371.
[752] ICTY, Krstić case, Judgement, 2 August 2001, §§ 604–605.

647. The evidence also satisfies the three-pronged test established by the jurisprudence for General Krstic to incur command responsibility under Article 7(3) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] for the participation of Drina Corps personnel in the killing campaign.
648. First, General Krstic exercised effective control over Drina Corps troops involved in the killings. Second, in terms of mens rea, not only was General Krstic fully aware of the ongoing killing campaign and of its impact on the survival of the Bosnian Muslim group at Srebrenica, as well as the fact that it was related to a widespread or systematic attack against Srebrenica's Bosnian Muslim civilian population, but the Drina Corps (and Main Staff) officers and troops involved in conducting the executions had to have been aware of the genocidal objectives. Third, General Krstic failed to prevent his Drina Corps subordinates from participating in the crimes or to punish them thereafter.[753]

714. In its judgement in the Kvočka case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber considered that:

313. Article 7(3) of the [1993 ICTY] Statute imposes liability upon a superior for the criminal acts of his subordinates if the superior had reason to know that the subordinate was about to commit a crime and failed to prevent it or, knowing that a crime had been committed, failed to take steps to punish the subordinate for the crime. Fulfilling the first obligation does not preclude incurring liability for failing to fulfil the second. The superior is also responsible if he or she fails to halt or suppress crimes that are being committed if the superior knew or had reason to know of their commission.
314. The caselaw of the Tribunal establishes that three elements must be proved before a person may be held responsible as a superior for the crimes committed by subordinates: (1) the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and perpetrator(s) of the underlying offence; (2) knowledge of the superior that his or her subordinate had committed, was committing, or was about to commit, a crime; and (3) failure of the superior to prevent or halt the commission of the crime and to punish the perpetrators.[754]

Referring to the judgement of the ICTY Appeals Chamber in the Delalić case, the Trial Chamber further stated that:

315. . . . This Judgement [i.e. the judgement of the Appeals Chamber in the Delalić case] accepted that a civilian leader may incur responsibility in the same way as a military commander, provided that the civilian has effective control over subordinates. Effective control necessarily involves "the power or authority in either a de jure or a de facto form to prevent a subordinate's crime or to punish the perpetrators of the crime after the crime is committed." Effective control means "the material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct, however that control is exercised." The requirement that control must be effective makes clear that de jure authority alone is insufficient. The Prosecution must show that the superior had the ability to prevent, halt, or punish the crime.
316. The superior does not have to be the person who dispenses the punishment, but he must take an important step in the disciplinary process . . .

[753] ICTY, Krstić case, Judgement, 2 August 2001, §§ 647–648.
[754] ICTY, Kvočka case, Judgement, 2 November 2001, §§ 313–314.

317. Action is required on the part of the superior from the point at which he "knew or had reason to know" of the crimes committed or about to be committed by subordinates. The [judgement of the Appeals Chamber in the Delalić case] found that Article 7(3) [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] does not impose a duty upon a superior to go out of his way to obtain information about crimes committed by subordinates, unless he is in some way put on notice that criminal activity is afoot.
318. The [judgement of the Appeals Chamber in the Delalić case] upheld the Trial Chamber's interpretation of "had reason to know", concluding that the superior is responsible if information was available which would have put the superior on notice of crimes committed by subordinates. The information available to the superior may be written or oral. It need not be explicit or specific, but it must be information – or the absence of information – that would suggest the need to inquire further. Information that would make a superior suspicious that crimes might be committed includes past behavior of subordinates or a history of mistreatment: "For instance, a military commander who has received information that some of the soldiers under his command have a violent or unstable character, or have been drinking prior to being sent on a mission, may be considered as having the required knowledge." Similarly, if a superior has prior knowledge that women detained by male guards in detention facilities are likely to be subjected to sexual violence, that would put him on sufficient notice that extra measures are demanded in order to prevent such crimes.[755]

715. In the amended indictment in the Hadžihasanović and Others case before the ICTY in 2002, the Prosecutor stated with respect to one of the accused that:

> 58. [The accused] is also criminally responsible in relation to those crimes [i.e. violations of the laws or customs of war] that were committed by troops of the ABiH . . . Brigade prior to his assignment . . . as the substitute for [the then commanding officer]. [He] knew or had reason to know about these crimes. After he assumed command, he was under the duty to punish the perpetrators.
> . . .
> 60. [The accused] knew or had reason to know that ABiH forces under their command and control were about to commit such acts [i.e. violations of the laws or customs of war] or had done so, in the following villages on or about the dates indicated, and they failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.[756]

716. In its decision on a joint challenge to jurisdiction in the Hadžihasanović and Others case in 2002, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "the doctrine of command responsibility already in – and since – 1991 was applicable in the context of an internal armed conflict under customary international law. Article 7(3) [of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia] constitutes a declaration of existing law under customary international law and does not constitute new law."[757]

[755] ICTY, Kvočka case, Judgement, 2 November 2001, §§ 315–318.
[756] ICTY, Hadžihasanović and Others case, Amended Indictment, 11 January 2002, §§ 58 and 60, see also §§ 61, 65 and 66.
[757] ICTY, Hadžihasanović and Others case, Decision on Joint Challenge to Jurisdiction, 12 November 2002, § 179.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

717. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

The commander of all forces engaged in a military operation has the general responsibility for ensuring respect for the law of war.
...
Respect for the law of war is a matter of order and discipline.
As with order and discipline, the law of war must be respected and enforced in all circumstances.
...
The commander himself must ensure that:
...
b) the necessary measures are taken to prevent violations of the law of war.

The commander himself must ensure that his subordinates respect the law of war.
The commander must ensure that in case of a breach of the law of war:
a) the breach ceases;
b) disciplinary or penal action is taken.

The commander's responsibility extends to breaches of the law of war resulting from a failure to act when under a duty to do so.[758]

Delegates also teach that:

Every commander who is aware that subordinates or other persons under his control/command are going to commit or have committed a breach of the law of war, shall initiate:
a) the necessary steps to prevent such a breach; and/or
b) disciplinary or penal action against the authors of the breach.[759]

718. In a press release issued in 1992 in the context of the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh, the ICRC stated that "it is the responsibility of the region's political leaders and military commanders to ensure ... respect [for the red cross and red crescent emblem] and prevent misuse of the emblem".[760]

VI. Other Practice

719. In 1990, an armed opposition group undertook to refrain from torturing prisoners and stressed that commanders responsible for such actions had been sanctioned.[761]

[758] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 263 and 269–273.
[759] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 781.
[760] ICRC, Press Release No. 1670, Nagorno-Karabakh: ICRC calls for respect for humanitarian law, 12 March 1992.
[761] ICRC archive document.

720. In 1993, in a communication on violations of IHL in Somalia during UNOSOM operations, MSF stated that the UN Security Council, the UN military commander and the commanders of the various national contingents are to be held responsible for an attack by UNOSOM II troops on the MSF compound in Somalia.[762]

Reporting of war crimes

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

721. Article 87(1) AP I provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties and the Parties to the conflict shall require military commanders, with respect to members of the armed forces under their command and other persons under their control, to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress and report to competent authorities breaches of the Conventions and of this Protocol.

Article 87 AP I was adopted by consensus.[763]

722. Article 9(2) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that "law enforcement officials who have reason to believe that a forced disappearance has occurred or is about to occur shall communicate the matter to their superior authorities and, when necessary, to competent authorities or organs with reviewing or remedial power".

Other Instruments

723. Section 20 of the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict provides that:

> In the event of breaches of rules of international humanitarian law protecting the environment, measures shall be taken to stop any such violation and to prevent further breaches. Military commanders are required to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress and to report to competent authorities breaches of these rules.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

724. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that "military commanders must ensure the prevention of breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions and [AP I] and, when necessary, report them to the competent authority and repress them".[764]

725. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that:

[762] MSF, Communication on the violations of humanitarian law in Somalia during UNOSOM operations, 20 July 1993, Part II.
[763] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 307.
[764] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.02.

ADF members are obliged to report LOAC breaches to their superior commanders and, where available, ADF legal advisers. Commanders must ensure that processes for reporting LOAC breaches are detailed in standing operating procedures. ADF members who receive reports about alleged breaches are responsible for ensuring that the suspected breach is properly recorded, documented, investigated and any relevant evidence preserved.[765]

726. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that:

Each ADF member is also responsible for ensuring that breaches are properly reported and documented. Reporting of LOAC breaches, whether committed by the enemy or ADF members, should be made to superiors. Commanders must ensure that processes for reporting LOAC breaches are detailed in standard operating procedures.[766]

727. Benin's Military Manual instructs soldiers to "prevent any breach of these instructions. Report to your superior any violation [of IHL] of which your are aware. Any breach of the laws of war is punishable."[767]

728. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "commanders are responsible, with respect to members of the armed forces under their command and other persons under their control, to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress and to report to competent authorities, breaches of the LOAC".[768]

729. Canada's Code of Conduct contains the rule: "Report and take appropriate steps to stop breaches of the Law of Armed Conflict and these rules. Disobedience of the Law of Armed Conflict is a crime."[769] It goes on to say that "it is also of the utmost importance that any breach of the Code of Conduct or other provision of the Law of Armed Conflict be reported without delay. A failure to comply with the Code of Conduct represents a failure in the 'habit of obedience', the cornerstone of discipline."[770] It adds that:

If a CF member believes that the Law of Armed Conflict or these rules are being breached, the member must take the appropriate steps to stop the illegal action. If the CF member is not in a position to stop the breach, then the member shall report to the nearest military authority who can take appropriate action. It is recognized that it may sometimes be difficult to report a breach, for example when a junior believes a breach has been committed by a higher ranking member. However, there is always a way to report a breach. The member can report to his or her superiors in the chain of command, the military police, a chaplain, a legal officer or any other person in authority. If a breach of the Law of Armed Conflict or these rules has already occurred, the member shall report that breach. The old adage "bad news doesn't get better with time" definitely applies to these types of breaches. Any attempt to cover up a breach of the Law of Armed Conflict or these rules is in itself

[765] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1301.
[766] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1307; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1208.
[767] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 19.
[768] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-7, § 49.
[769] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11.
[770] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 1.

an offence under the Code of Service Discipline. Experience has shown that isolated breaches committed by a few members of the force, even a momentary lapse in one's duty, could dishonour the country and adversely affect the accomplishment of the overall mission.

...

It is essential that any alleged breaches of these rules and the Law of Armed Conflict be investigated rapidly in as impartial a manner as possible. An impartial investigation will not only assist in bringing violators to justice, thereby maintaining discipline, but will also provide the best opportunity to clear anyone who has not acted improperly. In most cases that investigation will be carried out by the military police or National Investigation Service.[771]

730. Colombia's Instructors' Manual states that to prevent violations of human rights, it is necessary "to report to the superior any irregularity which may constitute a violation of Human Rights [and] to report violations of Human Rights to the superior".[772]

731. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic tells soldiers that:

You must report crimes immediately through your chain of command. If the crime involves your immediate superiors, report to their superior. You may also report violations of the laws of war to the inspector general, provost marshal, chaplain or judge advocate. In any case, the law requires that you report actual or suspected violations immediately so that evidence will not be misplaced or disappear.[773]

732. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces provides that "all violations must be reported to the immediate superior".[774]

733. Germany's Military Manual states that the superior "is obliged to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress or to report to competent authorities breaches of international law".[775] It further states that:

When a disciplinary superior learns about incidents substantiating suspicion that international humanitarian law has been violated, he shall clear up the facts and consider as to whether disciplinary measures are to be taken. If the disciplinary offence constitutes a criminal offence, he shall refer the case to the appropriate criminal prosecution authority when criminal prosecution seems to be indicated.[776]

734. The Military Manual of the Netherlands, referring to Article 87 AP I, states that:

Commanders... must take measures to stop the committing of war crimes and report them for action to the competent authorities. This can involve criminal or disciplinary proceedings against the acts committed, but also administrative measures (for example suspension or transfer).[777]

[771] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, §§ 2–3.
[772] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 13.
[773] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 12.
[774] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 16.
[775] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 138. [776] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1213.
[777] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-7.

735. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands stipulates that:

> Every soldier has the duty to prevent the commission of war crimes, to stop them and to report them. The report shall be made to the Royal Military Police. In addition, report should be made to the commander.[778]

736. Nigeria's Military Manual provides that "Article 87 [AP I] thereby enjoins the parties and the parties to the conflict to request Commanders of their troops under control to prevent, and where necessary, to suppress and to report to competent authorities breaches of the conventions and the Protocols".[779]

737. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces provides that "all alleged violations must immediately be reported to the superior".[780]

738. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines, providing a list of the most basic principles of behaviour for soldiers, states that a soldier must "endeavour to prevent any breach of the above rules. Report any violations to your superior."[781]

739. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "all soldiers must be aware of their responsibility to report war crimes which are breaches of the LOAC. Normally the report should be made to the next superior in the chain of command. A report may also be made to the Military Police, a Legal Officer or a Chaplain."[782]

740. South Africa's Medical Services Military Manual refers to Article 87 AP I, providing that "commanders will ... report breaches of humanitarian law".[783]

741. Sweden's IHL Manual refers to AP I and provides that "military commanders shall prevent breaches and if necessary punish and report such cases ... Naturally, it is also very important that both commanders and men discover and report transgressions committed by units of the adversary."[784]

742. Togo's Military Manual instructs soldiers to "prevent any breach of these instructions. Report to your superior any violation [of IHL] of which your are aware. Any breach of the laws of war is punishable."[785]

743. The US Soldier's Manual tells soldiers that:

> You must report crimes immediately though your chain of command. If the crime involves your immediate superiors, report to their superior. You may also report violations of the laws of war to the inspector general, provost marshal, chaplain, or judge advocate. In any case, the law requires that you report actual or suspected violations immediately so that evidence will not be misplaced or disappear.[786]

744. The US Naval Handbook states that:

[778] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-44.
[779] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 30, § 3.
[780] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), p. 21.
[781] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 12.
[782] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 43.
[783] South Africa, Medical Services Military Manual (undated), p. 5.
[784] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 94.
[785] Togo, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 19.
[786] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 27, see also p. 25.

It is the responsibility of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps to ensure that:

...

3. alleged violations of the law of armed conflict, whether committed by or against United States or enemy personnel, are promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and where appropriate, remedied by corrective actions.[787]

The manual further states that "all members of the naval service ... have an affirmative obligation to report promptly violations of which they become aware."[788]

National Legislation

745. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code contains a provision entitled "Omission to report a crime" which provides that:

(1) A military commander or a civilian superior who omits immediately to draw the attention of the agency responsible for the investigation or prosecution of any offence pursuant to this Law [inter alia, genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes], to such an offence committed by a subordinate, shall be punished ...
(2) [Article 1(4)(2)] shall apply mutatis mutandis.[789]

746. India's Army Act provides that it is an offence for a commander "receiving a complaint that any one under his command has beaten or otherwise maltreated or oppressed any person ... [to] fail to have due reparation made to the injured person or to report the case to the proper authority".[790]

National Case-law

747. In the Brocklebank case before the Canadian Court Martial Appeal Court in 1996 involving the question of criminal responsibility of a Canadian soldier serving on a peacekeeping mission in Somalia for having negligently performed a military duty, the Court of Appeal (majority) stated that:

I agree with the prosecution ... that Canadian soldiers should conduct themselves when engaged in operations abroad in an accountable manner consistent with Canada's international obligations, the rule of law and simply humanity. There was evidence in this case to suggest that the respondent could readily have reported the misdeeds of his comrades. However, absent specific wording in the relevant international conventions and more specifically, the [Unit Guide (1990)], I simply cannot conclude that a member of the Canadian Forces has a penally enforceable obligation to intervene whenever he witnesses mistreatment of a prisoner who is not in his custody.

...

[787] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.2.
[788] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.4.
[789] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1(14).
[790] India, Army Act (1950), Section 64(a).

In closing, I would remark that . . . it remains open to the chief of defence staff to define in more explicit terms the standards of conduct expected of soldiers in respect of prisoners who are in Canadian Forces custody. It is open to the chief of defence staff to . . . impose a military duty on Canadian Forces members either to report or take reasonable steps to prevent or arrest the abuse of prisoners not in their charge . . . This might prove a useful undertaking.[791]

Other National Practice

748. In 1984, in an assessment of the military implications of the Additional Protocols, Australia's Joint Military Operations and Plans Division, stated that Article 87(1) AP I:

imposes upon commanders the additional responsibility to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress and to report all breaches of the Geneva Conventions and its Protocols. This requires that the constraints imposed by the Protocols and the law of armed conflict generally are understood and reflected in the conduct of operations by every level of military authority.[792]

749. The Guidelines on Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP, issued in 1989 by the Office of the Chief of Staff of the armed forces of the Philippines, provides that:

Commanders who are proven through due process to have countenanced human rights abuses by way of summarily dropping complaints, intimidating the complainant and/or witnesses, "cover-up" of the incidents, failure to report to superiors, and/or shows inaction on the complaint, shall be held accountable either as conduct unbecoming an officer or as accessory.[793]

750. The 1979 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program stated that:

It is the policy of the Department of Defense to ensure that:
. . .
3. Alleged violations of the law of war, whether committed by or against U.S. or enemy personnel, are promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and, where appropriate, remedied by corrective action.
4. Violations of the law of war alleged to have been committed by or against allied military or civilian personnel shall be reported through appropriate command channels for ultimate transmission to appropriate agencies of allied governments.[794]

[791] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Brocklebank case, Judgement, 2 April 1996.
[792] Australia, Joint Military Operations and Plans Division, Assessment of the Military Implications of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, Series No. AA-A1838/376, File No. AA-1710/10/3/1 Pt 2, September 1984, § 10.
[793] Philippines, Ministry of National Defence, Office of the Chief of Staff, Guidelines on Human Rights and Improvement of Discipline in the AFP, 2 January 1989, § 2(1) and (2).
[794] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, Section C(3) and (4).

751. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

[Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77] is the foundation for the US military law of war program. It contains four policies:

...

- Alleged violations of the law of war, whether committed by or against US or enemy personnel, ... [will/shall be] promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and, where appropriate, remedied by corrective action.
- Violations of the law of war alleged to have been committed by or against allied military or civilian personnel shall be reported through appropriate military command channels for ultimate transmission to appropriate agencies of allied governments.

...

Army Chief of Staff Regulation 11-2 assigns to the Army Judge Advocate General (JAG) responsibility for investigating, collecting, collating, evaluating, and reporting in connection with war crimes alleged to have been committed against US personnel.[795]

752. The 1998 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program stated that:

It is DoD policy to ensure that:

...

4.3. All reportable incidents committed by or against U.S. or enemy persons are promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and, when appropriate, remedied by corrective action.

4.4. All reportable incidents committed by or against allied persons, or by or against other persons during a conflict to which the U.S. is not a party, are reported through command channels for ultimate transmission to appropriate U.S. Agencies, allied governments, or other appropriate authorities.[796]

A "reportable incident" is defined as "a possible, suspected, or alleged violation of the law of war".[797] As to responsibilities, the Directive provides that:

The Secretaries of the Military Departments shall develop internal policies and procedures consistent with this Directive in support of the DoD Law of War Program to: ... [p]rovide for the prompt reporting and investigation of reportable incidents committed by or against members of their respective Military Departments, or persons accompanying them.[798]

The Directive further states that the Commanders of the Combatant Commands shall "issue directives to ensure that reportable incidents involving

[795] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 633.

[796] US, Department of Defence Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 4(4)(3) and (4)(4).

[797] US, Department of Defence Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 3(2).

[798] US, Department of Defence Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(5)(3).

U.S. or enemy persons are reported promptly to appropriate authorities, are thoroughly investigated, and the results of such investigations are promptly forwarded to the applicable Military Department or other appropriate authorities".[799] Under a provision entitled "Reports of incidents", the Directive states that:

All military and civilian personnel assigned to or accompanying a DoD Component shall report reportable incidents through their chain of command. Such reports . . . may also be made through other channels, such as the military police, a judge advocate, or an Inspector General. Reports that are made to officials other than those specified in this subsection shall, nonetheless, be accepted and immediately forwarded through the recipient's chain of command.[800]

753. In Order No. 985-1/91 issued in 1991, the YPA Chief of General Staff stated that "command structures and units have the duty to inform immediately their commanding officers on any violation of international law of warfare. Any information in this regard that may appear should be forwarded to the General Staff in regular reports."[801]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

754. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) recalled that it had addressed the issue of command responsibility in its first interim report as follows: "Military commanders are under a special obligation, with respect to members of the armed forces under their command or other persons under their control, to prevent and, where necessary, to suppress such acts and to report them to competent authorities."[802] The Commission noted with satisfaction that Article 7 of the 1993 ICTY Statute used an essentially similar formulation.[803]

Other International Organisations

755. No practice was found.

[799] US, Department of Defence Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(8)(4).
[800] US, Department of Defence Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 6(1).
[801] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Legal Department, Order No. 985-1/91, 3 October 1991, § 4.
[802] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 55.
[803] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 56.

International Conferences
756. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

757. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

> 335. . . . Where a person has the material ability to prevent or punish crimes committed by others, that person must be considered a superior. Accordingly, it is a commander's degree of effective control, his material ability, which will guide the Trial Chamber in determining whether he reasonably took the measures required either to prevent the crime or to punish the perpetrator . . . This implies that, under some circumstances, a commander may discharge his obligation to prevent or punish by reporting the matter to the competent authorities.[804]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

758. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

759. No practice was found.

D. Obedience to Superior Orders

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
760. Article 77(1) of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC to the CDDH provided that "no person shall be punished for refusing to obey an order of his government or of a superior which, if carried out, would constitute a grave breach of the provisions of the Conventions or of the present Protocol".[805] This proposal was subject to amendments and referred to Working Group A of Committee I where it was adopted by 38 votes in favour, 22 against and 15 abstentions.[806] The approved text provided that "the High Contracting Parties undertake to ensure that their internal law penalizing disobedience to orders shall not apply to orders that would constitute grave breaches of the Conventions and this Protocol".[807] Eventually, however, it was deleted in the plenary, because it

[804] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 335.
[805] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, Part Three, Draft Additional Protocols, June 1973, p. 25.
[806] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/234/Rev.1, 21 April–11 June 1976, p. 120, §§ 26–27; Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/405/Rev. 1, 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 188, § 38, and p. 262; Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.65, 9 June 1976, p. 332, § 30.
[807] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/405/Rev. 1, 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 262.

failed to obtain the necessary two-thirds majority (36 in favour, 25 against and 25 abstentions).[808]

761. Article VIII of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons provides that "all persons who receive [orders or instructions that stipulate, authorize, or encourage forced disappearance] have the right and duty not to obey them". However, Article XV excludes its application in international armed conflicts governed by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.

762. Article 9(1) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that "no order or instruction of any public authority – civilian, military or other – may be invoked to justify a forced disappearance. Any person receiving such an order or instruction shall have the right and duty not to obey it".

Other Instruments

763. Paragraph 3 of the 1989 Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions provides that:

> Governments shall prohibit orders from superior officers or public authorities authorizing or inciting other persons to carry out any such extralegal, arbitrary or summary executions. All persons shall have the right and the duty to defy such orders. Training of law enforcement officials shall emphasize the above provisions.

764. Paragraph 25 of the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials provides that:

> Governments and law enforcement agencies shall ensure that no criminal or disciplinary sanction is imposed on law enforcement officials who, in compliance with the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and these basic principles, refuse to carry out an order to use force and firearms, or who report such use by other officials.

765. Article 6(1) of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance stresses that "no order or instruction from any public authority, civilian, military or other, may be invoked to justify an enforced disappearance. Any person receiving such an order or instruction shall have the right and duty not to obey it."

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

766. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "if an order is ambiguous, clarification should be sought. If clarification is unavailable, any action taken must comply with LOAC."[809]

[808] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 308.
[809] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1306; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1207.

767. Belgium's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "soldiers must loyally execute . . . orders given by their superiors in the interest of the service".[810] However, it adds that "an order must not be executed if this execution can manifestly lead to the perpetration of a crime or an offence".[811]

768. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "the subordinate loyally executes orders he receives". It also states that "the subordinate is responsible for the execution of the order received. He is liable to penal and/or disciplinary sanctions for refusing to obey when he wrongly invokes a motive of any sort."[812]

769. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "obedience is the first duty of the subordinate and he shall loyally execute the orders he receives".[813] However, the manual also states that:

The subordinate [is released from] his penal responsibility when he obeys orders of his superior . . .

If the order is manifestly illegal or stipulates the commission of an illegal act [in the meaning of Article 17 of the Disciplinary Regulations which provides for criminal responsibility, inter alia, for acts in violation of the laws and customs of war], the subordinate engages his penal responsibility . . .

The subordinate who believes he is being confronted with an illegal order has the duty to communicate his objections to the authority which gives them . . . If the order is maintained . . . concerning acts contrary to the laws and customs of war, the subordinate has the absolute right not to execute the order.[814]

770. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that "it is forbidden for a soldier to obey orders constituting a crime".[815]

771. Canada's Code of Conduct tells soldiers that:

Orders must be followed. Military effectiveness depends on the prompt obedience to orders. Virtually all orders you will receive from your superiors will be lawful, straightforward and require little clarification. What happens, however, if you receive an order that you believe to be questionable? Your first step of course must be to seek clarification. Then, if after doing so the order still appears to be questionable, in accordance with military custom you should still obey and execute the order – unless – the order is manifestly unlawful.[816]

The Code of Conduct further states that:

It is recognized that the lower you are in rank, the more difficult it will be to question orders. However, every member of the CF has an obligation to disobey a manifestly unlawful order regardless of rank or position. A manifestly unlawful order is one which shocks the conscience of every reasonable, right-thinking person.

[810] Belgium, Disciplinary Regulations (1991), § 304(a), see also § 403(d).
[811] Belgium, Disciplinary Regulations (1991), § 304(b).
[812] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 20(3) and (4).
[813] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 19.
[814] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 21.
[815] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 26, § 121(3).
[816] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 4.

For example, mistreating someone who has surrendered or beating a detainee is manifestly unlawful.[817]

772. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "obedience is the first duty of the subordinate. He loyally executes orders he receives." However, it adds that "the subordinate must not execute an order to commit an act manifestly . . . contrary to the customs of war and to the international conventions".[818]

773. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic tells soldiers that although "you are responsible for promptly obeying all legal orders issued by your leader . . . you are obligated to disobey an order to commit a crime".[819]

774. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces instructs members of military forces to "execute orders as far as possible in the scope of the law. If orders are a crime against human rights, do not execute them because they violate the law".[820]

775. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that members of the military "have the duty to obey lawful orders".[821] It further provides that "the subordinate shall not carry out an order to do something that is manifestly unlawful or contrary to the customs of war, the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts, or duly ratified or approved international treaties".[822]

776. Germany's Military Manual provides that:

According to German law an order is not binding if:
- it violates the human dignity of the third party concerned or the recipient of the order;
- it is not of any use for service; or
- in a definite situation, the soldier cannot reasonably be expected to execute it.

Orders which are not binding need not be executed by the soldier.[823]

The manual further stresses that "moreover, it is expressly prohibited to obey orders whose execution would be a crime" and that "punishment for disobedience or refusal to obey shall be impossible if the order is not binding (§ 22 of the Military Penal Code)".[824]

777. Italy's IHL Manual states that:

Concerning the norm and the consequent disciplinary rule, "the soldier who is requested to obey an order which manifestly violates State institutions or an order whose execution would anyway constitute a manifest crime, is under the obligation not to execute that order and inform his superiors as soon as possible.[825]

[817] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 5.
[818] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 21.
[819] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 12.
[820] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 11.
[821] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 6.
[822] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 8(3).
[823] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 142.
[824] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 143 and 145.
[825] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 83.

778. According to the Military Handbook of the Netherlands, an order issued in time of war that would lead to a war crime if complied with should be refused. It explains that soldiers have a duty to refuse to obey an order if they know or if it is manifest, given the facts known to them, that it constitutes a war crime.[826]

779. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "one such obligation, and the one which clearly sets a member of a military force apart from his civilian counterparts, is the obligation to obey lawful commands of a superior officer".[827] It adds, however, that, "if a command is unlawful and is obeyed, the person who obeys it could find himself charged with a criminal offence or a war crime".[828] The manual also states that:

> If it is obvious that an order is unlawful, then it should not be obeyed. Orders which are obviously unlawful are extremely rare. An order to torture or kill prisoners of war or innocent civilians or to loot civilian property would be obviously unlawful. This kind of order should never be obeyed and it should never be assumed that it will provide a defence if a charge results from its obedience.[829]

The manual further points out that:

> If . . . an unclear order is received, and especially if one of the possible meanings of the order appears to be unlawful, then clarification should be sought immediately. Blind obedience, in such cases, is not what is required. In . . . cases of unclear orders, blind obedience could lead to unfortunate and perhaps unforeseen results. In our example, both the sergeant and the superior whom we infer meant to convey nothing in any way illegal, could find themselves the subject of serious charges, simply because an unclear order was not clarified or questioned.[830]

780. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces provides that, if they believe an order violates human rights, members of the armed and police forces are required to seek more justifications for its execution.[831]

781. The Code of Ethics of the Philippines provides that "every officer and soldier shall obey the lawful orders of his immediate superior. Anyone who shall refuse or fail to carry out a lawful order from the military chain of command shall be subject to military discipline."[832]

782. Rwanda's Disciplinary Regulations provides that a subordinate may not execute a manifestly unlawful order.[833]

783. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that:

> Every soldier has a duty to obey lawful orders of superiors. Failure to do so is a serious offence. However, an order to commit a war crime is an unlawful order. A

[826] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-45.
[827] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Annex C, § C14(1).
[828] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Annex C, § C14(2).
[829] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Annex C, § C14(4).
[830] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Annex C, § C14(5).
[831] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), p. 13.
[832] Philippines, Code of Ethics (1991), Section 2.3, pp. 16–17.
[833] Rwanda, Disciplinary Regulations (undated), Article 15.

person who commits a war crime pursuant to an order is guilty of a war crime if that person knew or should have known that the order was unlawful.[834]

The manual further recalls that "the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, 1996, provides that 'no member of any security service may obey a manifestly illegal order' [Section 199(6)]".[835]

784. South Africa's Medical Services Military Manual provides that "when an order is manifestly illegal the subordinate has the duty to refuse to obey".[836]

785. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "military personnel are required to obey lawful commands but must not obey unlawful commands".[837] It further states that "illegal orders are not to be given nor carried out".[838]

786. The US Field Manual states that "members of the armed forces are bound to obey only lawful orders".[839]

787. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "members of the armed forces are bound to obey only lawful orders".[840]

788. The US Soldier's Manual tells the soldier that "although you are responsible for promptly obeying all legal orders issued by your leader, you are obligated to disobey an order to commit a crime".[841]

789. The US Naval Handbook provides that:

> Members of the naval service, like military members of all nations, must obey readily and strictly all lawful orders issued by a superior. Under both international law and U.S. law, an order to commit an obviously criminal act, such as the wanton killing of a noncombatant or the torture of a prisoner, is an unlawful order and will not relieve a subordinate of his responsibility to comply with the law of armed conflict.[842] [emphasis in original]

790. Uruguay's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "no subordinate shall hesitate to challenge the orders of his commanding officer when he deems it necessary".[843]

National Legislation

791. Argentina's Code of Military Justice as amended applies disciplinary sanctions to military personnel who refuse to obey a military order given by a superior (insubordination). Similarly, it defines the crime of disobedience, which includes actions by military personnel who, while not ostensibly or expressly refusing to obey, fail without any just cause to carry out a military order. It adds

[834] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 44.
[835] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 44.
[836] South Africa, Medical Services Military Manual (undated), p. 5.
[837] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 10, p. 38, § 1.
[838] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Annex A, p. 46, § 2.
[839] US, Field Manual (1956), § 509(b).
[840] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-4(d).
[841] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 26.
[842] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.4.
[843] Uruguay, Disciplinary Regulations (1980), Article 40.

that no excuse shall justify disobedience or the failure to carry out a military order.[844]

792. Under Armenia's Penal Code, failing to carry out in time of war a "properly given legitimate order" is a punishable offence.[845] However, "refusal to execute an obviously illegal order or instruction is an exemption from criminal liability".[846]

793. Under Australia's Defence Force Discipline Act, disobedience to a "lawful command" is a punishable military offence.[847]

794. Austria's Military Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment, in principle, of the non-execution of orders.[848] However, it also provides that a soldier is not punishable if he/she does not execute an order which consists in the commission of a punishable offence.[849]

795. Under the Criminal Code of Belarus, the failure to execute an order is a punishable offence.[850]

796. Belgium's Law on Discipline in the Armed Forces provides that "soldiers must faithfully execute the orders given to them by their superiors in the interest of service. However, an order must not be executed if its execution could clearly result in the perpetration of a crime or an offence".[851]

797. Under Brazil's Military Penal Code, disobedience to a lawful order is a punishable offence.[852]

798. Chile's Code of Military Justice provides that:

> All military personnel are obliged to obey an operational order given them by a superior in the exercise of his legitimate powers . . . The right to demand that the acts of a superior yield to the statutes or regulations does not exempt the subordinate from obedience nor does it suspend the fulfilment of an operational order.[853]

The Code further provides that:

> Where the order is clearly conducive to the perpetration of an offence, then the subordinate may suspend the performance of the said order and, in urgent cases, modify it, immediately reporting this to the superior . . . If the superior insists on maintaining the order, it shall be carried out under the terms of the previous article.[854]

[844] Argentina, Code of Military Justice as amended (1951), Articles 667, 674 and 675.
[845] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 356(1) and (3).
[846] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 47(3).
[847] Australia, Defence Force Discipline Act (1982), Section 27.
[848] Austria, Military Penal Code as amended (1970), Articles 12–16.
[849] Austria, Military Penal Code as amended (1970), Articles 17.
[850] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 439.
[851] Belgium, Law on Discipline in the Armed Forces (1975), Article 11(2).
[852] Brazil, Military Penal Code (1969), Article 163.
[853] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 334.
[854] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 335.

799. Under Croatian law, soldiers have the duty to obey orders, unless an order would lead to a war crime or any other serious crime. Members of the armed forces are required to report unlawful orders they may have received.[855]
800. Under Cuba's Military Criminal Code, disobedience or failure to obey an order is a punishable offence, but if the order is regarded as an excessive requirement, the court may apply special mitigation of the sanction.[856]
801. Under Egypt's Military Criminal Code, failure to execute orders is punishable if the order in question is "legal". However, it also provides for the punishment of persons who do not obey "military orders".[857]
802. El Salvador's Law on the Armed Forces provides that "the duty to obey is limited to those orders that do not transgress statutory or regulatory provisions in force".[858]
803. Germany's Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel stipulates that it is not to be regarded as disobedience if the subordinate does not carry out an order which would violate human dignity.[859] It also provides that "an order may not be complied with if, by that, a criminal act would be committed".[860]
804. Under India's Army Act and under other laws applicable to coast guards and border police forces, disobedience to a lawful order is an offence.[861]
805. Under Jordan's Military Criminal Code, disobedience to a lawful order is a punishable offence.[862]
806. Under Kenya's Armed Forces Act, disobedience to a lawful command is an offence.[863]
807. Malaysia's Armed Forces Act provides that:

> Every person subject to service law under this Act who in such manner as to show wilful defiance of authority disobeys any lawful command of his superior officer shall on conviction by court-martial be liable [to punishment].
>
> Every person subject to service law under this Act who, whether wilfully or through neglect, disobeys any lawful command of his superior officer shall on conviction by court-martial be liable [to punishment].[864]

However, in a footnote related to the foregoing provision, the Act states with respect to "lawful command" that "the command must not be contrary to Malaysian or international law . . . If a command is manifestly illegal the person

[855] Croatia, Code of Criminal Procedure (1993), Article 190; Law on Military Service (1995), Article 27(1); Criminal Code (1997), Article 388.
[856] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Article 5.
[857] Egypt, Military Criminal Code (1966), Articles 151, 152 and 153.
[858] El Salvador, Law on the Armed Forces (1998), Article 25.
[859] Germany, Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel (1995), § 11(1).
[860] Germany, Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel (1995), § 11(2)(1).
[861] India, Army Act (1950), Section 41; Coast Guards Act (1978), Section 20; Indo-Tibetan Border Police Force Act (1992), Section 23.
[862] Jordan, Military Criminal Code (1952), Article 17.
[863] Kenya, Armed Forces Act (1968), Article 28.
[864] Malaysia, Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 50.

to whom it is given would be justified in questioning and even refusing to execute it."[865]

808. Nigeria's Army Act and Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended provide that military personnel have the duty to obey lawful orders.[866]

809. Under Pakistan's Army Act, a soldier is liable to punishment if he disobeys a "lawful command".[867]

810. Pakistan's Frontier Corps Ordinance provides for the punishment of "every member of the Frontier Corps who –... while on active service –... disobeys the lawful command of his superior officer".[868]

811. Under Peru's Code of Military Justice, refusal or failure to execute a military order in wartime constitutes a punishable offence. Failure to carry out an order in the course of duty without justifiable cause constitutes disobedience.[869]

812. Poland's Penal Code provides that "a soldier who does not execute or refuses to execute an order or executed an order in a way inconsistent with its contents, shall be punished".[870] However, it also states that:

1. A soldier who refuses to execute an order consisting in committing an offence or does not execute it, does not commit an offence described in Art. 343.
2. In case of the execution of an order mentioned in § 1 in a way inconsistent with its contents in order to diminish the harmfulness of the acts, the court may apply an extraordinary mitigation of punishment or desist from inflicting it.[871]

813. Under Russia's Criminal Code, failure to execute an order is a punishable offence.[872]

814. South Africa's Code of Military Discipline as amended, in a provision entitled "Disobeying lawful commands or orders", provides that "any person who in wilful defiance of authority disobeys any lawful command given personally by his superior officer in execution of his duty, whether orally, in writing or by signal, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction".[873]

815. South Africa's Constitution provides that "no member of any security service [i.e. defence force, police force and intelligence services] may obey a manifestly illegal order".[874]

816. Spain's Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces provides that "where an order would entail the execution of acts which are manifestly contrary to the [865] Malaysia, Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 50, footnote 4.

[866] Nigeria, Army Act (1960), Section 40; Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended (1993), Sections 56 and 57.
[867] Pakistan, Army Act (1952), Section 33.
[868] Pakistan, Frontier Corps Ordinance (1959), Section 8(e)(i).
[869] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Articles 78(24), 158, 159, 161, 162 and 172.
[870] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 343(1).
[871] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 344.
[872] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 332.
[873] South Africa, Code of Military Discipline as amended (1957), § 19(1).
[874] South Africa, Constitution (1996) Section 199(1) and (6).

laws and customs of war or constitute a crime . . . no soldier is bound to obey it".[875]

817. Spain's Penal Code provides that criminal liability is not incurred by authorities or public employees who do not comply with an order constituting a clear, manifest and definite breach of a precept of law or any other general provision.[876]

818. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides that "non-execution of a knowingly unlawful order or instruction excludes criminal responsibility".[877]

819. Uruguay's Organisational Law of Armed Forces states that military status imposes a fundamental "duty of obedience, respect, and subordination to the superior at all times and in all places, in accordance with the laws and regulations in force".[878]

National Case-law

820. In the Sergeant W. case in 1966, Belgium's Court-Martial of Brussels sentenced a sub-officer to three years' imprisonment for the wilful killing of a civilian. The accused, who at the time of the event was chasing rebels, was serving in the Congolese army within the framework of military technical co-operation between Congo (DRC) and Belgium. The Court held that, the accused's interpretation of the order he had received, i.e. to kill an unarmed person in his power, was manifestly unlawful; the accused therefore had a duty to disobey this order.[879]

821. In his dissenting opinion in the Finta case before the Canadian Supreme Court in 1994, one of the judges recognised that "military orders can and must be obeyed unless they are manifestly unlawful". He added that an order was manifestly unlawful when it "offends the conscience of every reasonable, right thinking person; it must be an order which is obviously and flagrantly wrong. The order cannot be in a grey area or be merely questionable; rather it must patently and obviously be wrong."[880]

822. In its judgement in the Guzmán and Others case in 1974, Chile's Santiago Council of War stated that:

> The provisions of Article 335 of the Code of Military Justice [which provides for the right to disobey an unlawful order] require that: a) an order be received from a hierarchical superior; b) that this order be related to the military service; and c) that the subordinate has explained the illegality of the order to the superior, and that the latter has insisted on the order's performance.[881]

[875] Spain, Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces (1978), Article 34.
[876] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 410.2.
[877] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 45(3).
[878] Uruguay, Organisational Law of Armed Forces (1974), Article 61.
[879] Belgium, Court-Martial of Brussels, Sergeant W. case, Judgement, 18 May 1966.
[880] Canada, Supreme Court, Finta case, Dissenting opinion of one of the judges, 24 March 1994.
[881] Chile, Santiago Council of War (FACH), Guzmán and Others case, Judgement, 30 July 1974.

823. In a case relating to conscientious objection in 1992, the Colombian Constitutional Court considered that a superior's order that would consist of occasioning death outside combat would clearly lead to a violation of human rights and of the Constitution. As such it should be disobeyed.[882] In another case in 1995, in which the Court was examining the constitutionality of a military regulation that provided that a subaltern was obliged to obey a superior's order that he/she thought unlawful, if the order was confirmed in writing, the Court took the same approach.[883]

824. In its judgement in the Dover Castle case in 1921, Germany's Reichsgericht held that "it is a military principle that the subordinate is bound to obey the orders of his superiors".[884]

825. In the Ofer, Malinki and Others case in 1958, Israel's District Military Court for the Central Judicial District ruled that "the rule is that a soldier must obey every order (subject to the exception) given him by his commander while fulfilling his duty . . . The exception is that he need not execute an order that is manifestly illegal." As to the term "manifestly illegal", the Court went on to explain that:

> The identifying mark of a "manifestly unlawful" order must wave like a black flag above the order given, as a warning saying: "forbidden". It is not formal unlawfulness, hidden or halfhidden, not unlawfulness that is detectable only by legal experts, that is the important issue here, but an overt and salient violation of the law, a certain and obvious unlawfulness that stems from the order itself, the criminal character of the order itself or of the acts it demands to be committed, an unlawfulness that pierces the eye and agitates the heart, if the eye be not blind nor the heart closed or corrupt. That is the degree of "manifest" illegality required in order to annul the soldier's duty to obey and render him criminally responsible for his actions.[885]

The Military Court of Appeal adopted these words and added that the legislator's solution to the problem of conflict between law and obedience is, as it were, a golden mean between giving complete preference to one of those factors over the other, because it recognised > the impossibility of reconciling these two values through purely formal law, and therefore foregoes the attempt to resolve the problem by these means alone; it bursts out of the confines, as it were, of the purely judicial categories, calling for help on the sense of lawfulness that lies deep within the conscience of every human being as such, even if he is not expert in the law.[886]

[882] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. T-409, Judgement, 8 June 1992.
[883] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-578, Judgement, 4 December 1995.
[884] Germany, Reichsgericht, Dover Castle case, Judgement, 4 June 1921.
[885] Israel, District Military Court for the Central Judicial District, Ofer, Malinki and Others case, Judgement, 13 October 1958.
[886] Israel, Military Court of Appeal, Ofer, Malinki and Others case, Judgement, 3 April 1959.

826. In its judgement in the Hass and Priebke case in 1997, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome stated that the duty to disobey an openly criminal order was independent from the fact that the subordinate could or could not prevent the event. The Tribunal further stated that "it is evident, indeed, that a member of the armed forces must not obey an unlawful order given to him even if he is aware that other persons may be willing to carry it out".[887] In its relevant parts, this judgement was confirmed by the Military Appeals Court and the Supreme Court of Cassation.[888]

827. In its judgement in the Zühlke case in 1948, a Special Court in Amsterdam (Netherlands), with regard to the accused's plea of superior orders, stated that:

The Court rejects this plea. Indeed . . . there was no need for him in the given circumstances to carry out such orders. An order to commit actions forbidden by international law may not be carried out, and a mistaken idea as to the validity or existence of such prohibitive provisions does not carry with it exclusion from penal liability. The detention in prison of persons who were incarcerated on the ground of their origin, or the ill-treatment and humiliation of prisoners, does not belong to the sphere of military subordination. The accused, who was not only a prison warder by occupation but had also been trained as a non-commissioned officer, must have known this.[889]

828. In its judgement in the Margen case in 1950, the Supreme Court of the Philippines held that "obedience to an order of a superior gives rise to exemption from criminal liability only when the order is for some lawful purpose . . . [In this case] the order was illegal, and appellant was not bound to obey it."[890]

829. In the Calley case in 1973, the US Army Court of Military Appeals approved the following instructions given to the panel by the trial judge in a case where the accused invoked an order to kill unresisting detainees:

A determination that an order is illegal does not, of itself, assign criminal responsibility to the person following the order for acts done in compliance with it. Soldiers are taught to follow orders, and special attention is given to obedience of orders on the battlefield. Military effectiveness depends upon obedience to orders. On the other hand, the obedience of a soldier is not the obedience of an automaton. A soldier is a reasoning agent, obliged to respond, not as a machine, but as a person. The law takes these factors into account in assessing criminal responsibility for acts done in compliance with illegal orders.[891]

The Court cited a writer's opinion to the effect that:

For the inferior to assume to determine the question of the lawfulness of an order given him by a superior would of itself, as a general rule, amount to insubordination,

[887] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 22 July 1997.
[888] Italy, Military Appeals Court, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 March 1998; Supreme Court of Cassation, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, 16 November 1998.
[889] Netherlands, Special Court in Amsterdam, Zühlke case, Judgement, 3 August 1948.
[890] Philippines, Supreme Court, Margen case, Judgement, 30 March 1950.
[891] US, Army Court of Military Appeals, Calley case, Judgement, 21 December 1973.

and such an assumption carried into practice would subvert military discipline. Where the order is apparently regular and lawful on its face, he is not to go behind it to satisfy himself that his superior has proceeded with authority, but is to obey it according to its terms, the only exceptions recognized to the rule of obedience being cases of orders so manifestly beyond the legal power or discretion of the commander as to admit of no rational doubt of their unlawfulness . . .

Except in such instances of palpable illegality, which must be of rare occurrence, the inferior should presume that the order was lawful and authorized and obey it accordingly, and in obeying it can scarcely fail to be held justified by a military court.[892] [emphasis in original]

Other National Practice

830. According to a statement by Argentina's Chief of Staff of the Army in 1995, nobody is obliged to carry out an order which is unethical or which contravenes military laws and regulations.[893]

831. At the CDDH, Australia stated that it "supported the objectives sought in the ICRC text of article 77 [of draft AP I]. Since the article should relate solely to grave breaches, paragraph 1 could be approved without reservation."[894]

832. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, "Chile adheres to the principle of reasoned obedience".[895]

833. The Report on the Practice of Cuba states that:

> In practice, there is no record of military personnel giving orders violating international humanitarian law, but in accordance with the interpretation of [Article 25(3) of the Penal Code providing for mitigation in case of excessive order], obeying an illegal order is comparable with excessive requirement to obey, and the possibility of not obeying can therefore be envisaged.[896]

834. The Report on the Practice of Egypt, referring to an explanatory memorandum relative to Article 15 of Egypt's Military Criminal Code which provides for the punishment of not executing legal orders, notes "the fact that the order of a superior should be a 'legal one'". The report further states that "clearly, this may open the door for a defence of non-execution of an order to commit a violation of IHL".[897]

835. The Report on the Practice of India, referring to provisions of the Army Act, Coast Guard Act and Indo-Tibetan Boarder Police Force Act, states that it is "possible to deduce from these provisions a right to disobey unlawful orders given by superior officials/authorities because the relevant provisions

[892] US, Army Court of Military Appeals, Calley case, Judgement, 21 December 1973, referring to Col. William Winthrop, Military Law and Precedents, pp. 296–297, 2nd edition 1920 (reprint).

[893] Argentina, Chief of Staff of the Army, Statement of 25 April 1995, Revista de la Escuela Superior de Guerra, July–September 1995, p. V; see also Chief of Staff of the Army, Statement of 29 May 1995, Revista de la Escuela Superior de Guerra, April–June 1995, p. I.

[894] Australia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.51, 5 May 1976, p. 128, § 26.

[895] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Chapter 6.8.

[896] Report on the Practice of Cuba, 1998, Chapter 6.8.

[897] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 6.8.

very clearly provide that a person is not supposed to wilfully defy 'lawful' orders or commands given by the superiors".[898]

836. At the CDDH, Israel stated that it had voted in favour of Article 77 of draft AP I and that:

> The article is a reflection of existing customary international law clearly enunciated in the Nürnberg principles and embodied in [Israeli law].
>
> We regret that Article 77 was not adopted... and wish to state that the rule [initially providing, inter alia, that "no person shall be punished for refusing to obey an order of his government or of a superior which, if carried out, would constitute a grave breach of the provisions of the Conventions or of the present Protocol"] continues to be governed by customary international law.[899]

837. The Report on the Practice of Israel states that:

> Under general Israeli law and IDF internal regulations, there exists a differentiation between an "unlawful order" and a "manifestly unlawful order". Based on the understanding that clarity of command is a required element in any military organization, all IDF soldiers are required to comply with "unlawful orders"... As regards "manifestly unlawful orders"... IDF soldiers are required by law to refuse any such order.[900]

838. On the basis of the decisions of the Military Tribunal of Rome in the Priebke case and in the Hass and Priebke case, the Report on the Practice of Italy concludes that "the opinio juris of Italy is that a soldier has the duty to disobey an order to commit a violation of international humanitarian law".[901]

839. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, Article 17 of the Military Criminal Code of Jordan, which provides for the imposition of a penalty upon a subordinate who disobeys a lawful order, "means that if a subordinate knows that the order given by a superior would result in a breach of the law he must disobey it".[902]

840. In an article published in a military review, a member of the Kuwaiti armed forces stated that:

> If a soldier receives an illegal order, he should draw the attention of his commander to the illegality of the same. If the commander insists on his opinion, the soldier should abide by the order and implement it, unless the illegality is clear, and the order forms a crime, e.g. if the military commander orders to forge papers, embezzle funds, murder a human being or torture him. Here the duty of obedience is turned into the duty of refusal.[903]

[898] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[899] Israel, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 336.
[900] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[901] Report on the Practice of Italy, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[902] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[903] Fellah Awad Al-Anzi, "The accomplishment of duties and the execution of military orders, their limits and constraints", Homat Al-Watan, No. 149, p. 61.

841. According to the Report on the Practice of Kuwait, under Kuwait's military laws, soldiers take the oath to obey rightful orders.[904]

842. The Report on the Practice of Pakistan states that:

> Although the text of the oath [for soldiers] merely refers to obedience to "all commands", still it is to be understood that the text of the oath . . . cannot be read beyond the provisions of [section 33 of the Army Act (1952) which provides that a soldier is liable to punishment if he disobeys a "lawful command"]. It is to be noted that although there is no provision explicitly stating that unlawful command should be disobeyed, still the section 33 can be interpreted to mean that there will be no punishment under the Army Act if the soldier has disobeyed the command which is illegal . . . Thus the opinio juris and the practice in Pakistan is that unlawful command can be refused.[905]

843. The Report on the Practice of the Philippines, referring to a provision of the Revised Penal Code which provides that "any person who acts in obedience to an order issued by a superior for some lawful purpose" does not incur any criminal liability, states that "however, if the order is obviously illegal, the person has the duty to disobey it".[906]

844. According to the Report on the Practice of Russia, "no document of the CIS countries [contains] a provision that a superior's order can be omitted if it would mean a violation of the rules of IHL". However, the report also notes that "the right of a subordinate to disobey a superior's order violating the rules of IHL can be inferred from the provision that a violation of the rules of IHL is considered to be a war crime and is prosecuted as a penal offence".[907]

845. The Report on the Practice of Spain states that "since the subordinate is not protected [from penal responsibility under the Military Criminal Code] by the defence of hierarchical obedience, he is bound to disobey any order manifestly contrary to the laws and customs of war, a phrase that covers breaches of international humanitarian law".[908]

846. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that the law of war obliges all persons not to commit war crimes. The duty to obey the law of war prevails over the duty to obey a manifestly unlawful order.[909]

847. During a debate in Committee I of the CDDH, Uruguay, although criticising Article 77 of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC, stated that it "supported the principles underlying Article 77, which undoubtedly had its place in the section of draft Protocol I dealing with the repression of breaches".[910]

[904] Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[905] Report on the Practice of Pakistan, 1998, Chapter 6.8.
[906] Report on the Practice of Philippines, 1997, Chapter 6.9, referring to Revised Penal Code (1930), Article 11(6).
[907] Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[908] Report on the Practice of Spain, 1998, Chapter 6.8.
[909] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[910] Uruguay, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.52, 6 May 1976, p. 144, § 45.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
848. In 1997, in the recommendations of his second report on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that "the members of the armed forces should know that they have the right to refuse to carry out orders that will result in slaughter".[911]

Other International Organisations
849. No practice was found.

International Conferences
850. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

851. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

852. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

853. The SPLM Human Rights Charter provides that "all persons have the right and duty to refuse to carry out orders that would involve them abusing the above principles, without fear of punishment".[912]
854. The Penal and Disciplinary Laws of the SPLM/A state that:

> The following offences shall be punishable under this Law and shall pertain only to members of the Sudan People's Liberation Army and its affiliated organizations.
> ...
> d) Disobedience of Lawful Orders from a Superior.[913]

E. Defence of Superior Orders

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
855. Article 8 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that "the fact that the Defendant acted pursuant to order of his Government or of a superior

[911] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Burundi, Second report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/12, 10 February 1997, § 93.
[912] SPLM, Human Rights Charter, May 1996, § 11.
[913] SPLM/A, Penal and Disciplinary Laws, 4 July 1984, Section 26(d).

shall not free him from responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the Tribunal determines that justice so requires".

856. Article 77(2) of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC to the CDDH provided that "the fact of having acted pursuant to an order of his government or of a superior does not absolve an accused person from penal responsibility if it be established that, in the circumstances at the time, he should have reasonably known that he was committing a grave breach of the Conventions or of the present Protocol and that he had the possibility of refusing to obey the order".[914] This proposal was subject to amendments and referred to Working Group A of Committee I where it was adopted by 38 votes in favour, 22 against and 15 abstentions.[915] The approved text provided that:

> The mere fact of having acted pursuant to an order of an authority or a superior does not absolve an accused person from penal responsibility, if it be established that in the circumstances at the time he knew or should have known that he was committing a grave breach of the Conventions or of this Protocol. It may, however, be taken into account in mitigation of punishment.[916]

Eventually, however, the whole Article was deleted in the plenary, because it failed to obtain the necessary two-thirds majority (36 in favour, 25 against and 25 abstentions).[917]

857. Article 2 of the 1984 Convention against Torture provides that "an order from a superior officer or a public authority may not be invoked as a justification of torture".

858. Article VIII of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons provides that "the defense of due obedience to superior orders or instructions that stipulate, authorize, or encourage forced disappearance shall not be admitted". However, Article XV excludes its application in international armed conflicts governed by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.

859. Article 9(1) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that "no order or instruction of any public authority – civilian, military or other – may be invoked to justify a forced disappearance".

860. Article 33 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> 1. The fact that a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court has been committed by a person pursuant to an order of a Government or of a superior, whether military or civilian, shall not relieve that person of criminal responsibility unless:
>   (a) The person was under a legal obligation to obey orders of the Government or the superior in question;

[914] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, Part Three, Draft Additional Protocols, June 1973, p. 25.
[915] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/234/Rev.1, 21 April–11 June 1976, p. 120, §§ 26–27; Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/405/Rev. 1, 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 188, § 38, and p. 262; Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.65, 9 June 1976, p. 332, § 30.
[916] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. X, CDDH/405/Rev. 1, 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 262.
[917] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 308.

(b) The person did not know that the order was unlawful; and
(c) The order was not manifestly unlawful.

2. For the purposes of this article, orders to commit genocide or crimes against humanity are manifestly unlawful.

861. Article 6(4) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, dealing with "Individual criminal responsibility", provides that "the fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a Government or of a superior shall not relieve him or her of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the Special Court determines that justice so requires".

Other Instruments

862. Article II, Section 4(b), of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that "the fact that any person acted pursuant to the order of his Government or of a superior does not free him from responsibility for a crime, but may be considered in mitigation".

863. Article 6 of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo), entitled "Responsibility of Accused", provides that:

> Neither the official position, at any time, of an accused, nor the fact that an accused acted pursuant to order of his government or of a superior shall, of itself, be sufficient to free such accused from responsibility for any crime with which he is charged, but such circumstances may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the Tribunal determines that justice so requires.

864. Principle IV of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles provides that "the fact that a person acted pursuant to order of his Government or of a superior does not relieve him from responsibility under international law, provided a moral choice was in fact possible to him".

865. Article 4 of the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "the fact that a person charged with an offence defined in this Code acted pursuant to an order of his Government or of a superior does not relieve him of responsibility in international law if, in the circumstances at the time, it was possible for him not to comply with that order".

866. Article 5 of the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials provides that:

> No law enforcement official may invoke superior orders or exceptional circumstances such as a state of war or a threat of war, a threat to national security, internal political instability or any other public emergency as a justification of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

867. Paragraph 26 of the 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials provides that "obedience to superior orders shall be no defence if law enforcement officials knew that an order to use force and firearms resulting in the death or serious injury of a person was manifestly unlawful and had a reasonable opportunity to refuse to follow it".

868. Article 11 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Order of a Government or a superior", provides that "the fact that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind acted pursuant to an order of a Government or a superior does not relieve him of criminal responsibility if, in the circumstances at the time, it was possible for him not to comply with that order".

869. Article 7(4) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "the fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a Government or of a superior shall not relieve him of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the International Tribunal determines that justice so requires".

870. Article 6(4) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that "the fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a Government or of a superior shall not relieve him or her of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the International Tribunal for Rwanda determines that justice so requires".

871. Paragraph 31 of the 1994 CSCE Code of Conduct states that "the responsibility of superiors does not exempt subordinates from any of their individual responsibilities".

872. Article 5 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Order of a Government or a superior", provides that "the fact that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind acted pursuant to an order of a Government or a superior does not relieve him of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if justice so requires".

873. Section 21 of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 provides that "the fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a Government or of a superior shall not relieve him of criminal responsibility, but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if a panel determines that justice so requires".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

874. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that:

> ADF members are open to prosecution for breaches of LOAC. Individual responsibility for compliance cannot be avoided and ignorance is not a justifiable excuse. ADF members will be held to account for any unlawful action that leads to a serious breach of LOAC. If such acts are committed, compliance with unlawful orders of a superior officer is not a justifiable excuse.[918]

[918] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1306; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1207.

875. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "the subordinate is relieved from his penal responsibility when he obeys his commander's orders and in conformity with the provisions of Article 83-1 of the Penal Code".[919] It adds, however, that "if the order is manifestly illegal . . . the subordinate engages his penal responsibility according to the provisions of Articles 82-b and 83-2 of the Penal Code".[920] The manual further states that "if the subordinate is constrained by force or physical threat, he shall be totally relieved of his penal responsibility".[921]

876. Canada's LOAC Manual, referring to the Finta case, provides that "the fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a Government or a superior does not relieve this person of criminal responsibility . . . However, in some cases the fact that an accused acted pursuant to a superior order may be considered in mitigation of punishment."[922] The manual further states that "it is no defence to a war crime that the act was committed in compliance with an order".[923] It adds that "an act . . . performed in compliance with an order which is manifestly unlawful to a reasonable soldier given the circumstances prevailing at the time does not constitute a defence and cannot be pleaded in mitigation of punishment".[924]

877. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "it must be remembered that if you are charged for carrying out a manifestly unlawful order, it will not be a defence to say that you were only following orders. This is why leaders have an obligation to provide clear lawful commands."[925] It adds that "disciplined personnel do not commit war crimes or breach the Law of Armed Conflict. They understand the nature of a lawful command and are always conscious that they must carry out their orders in a manner consistent with the law and the goal of the overall mission."[926]

878. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that "under the terms of Chapter IX of the First Geneva Convention relative to the repression of abuses and infractions, IHL establishes the principle of individual responsibility, that is to say, that acting pursuant to superior orders does not relieve the person of his responsibility for the grave breaches he may commit".[927]

879. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic tells soldiers that "even if you had orders to commit the act, it is no defence if it was a manifestly criminal act".[928]

[919] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 21(I).
[920] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 21(II).
[921] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 21(III).
[922] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-4, § 28.
[923] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-5, § 33.
[924] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-5, § 34.
[925] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 5.
[926] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 6.
[927] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 37.
[928] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 12.

880. France's LOAC Manual states that "each individual is responsible for the violations of the law of armed conflicts for which he/she has made himself/herself guilty, whatever the circumstances may be, and even if he/she acted in execution of an order emanating from a superior".[929]
881. Germany's Military Manual provides that "a plea of superior orders shall not be acknowledged if the subordinate realized or, according to the circumstances known to him, obviously could have realized that the action ordered was a crime (§ 5 of the Military Penal Code)".[930]
882. South Korea's Operational Law Manual states that the fact that a soldier obeyed an unlawful order cannot relieve him of responsibility.[931]
883. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "it is no defence to a war crimes charge that the act was committed in compliance with an order".[932] It further states that:

> An act which is performed in compliance with an unlawful order which, to a reasonable member of the armed forces in the circumstances prevailing at the time of the order, is obviously, palpably or manifestly unlawful, does not constitute a defence to a war crimes charge: nor can it be pleaded in mitigation of punishment.[933]

The manual then states that "if the order involves the commission of an act which is unlawful, though not manifestly so, the fact that it was committed in compliance with an order may be taken into consideration for the purpose of mitigation of punishment".[934] It adds that:

> If it is obvious that an order is unlawful, then it should not be obeyed. Orders which are obviously unlawful are extremely rare. An order to torture or kill prisoners of war or innocent civilians or to loot civilian property would be obviously unlawful. This kind of order should never be obeyed and it should never be assumed that it will provide a defence if a charge results from its obedience.[935]

In one of its annexes, the manual also states that "if a command is unlawful and is obeyed, the person who obeys it could find himself charged with a criminal offence or a war crime".[936]
884. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "obedience to an order of a government or of a superior, whether military or civil, or to a municipal law or regulation, affords no defence to a charge of committing a war-crime but may be considered in mitigation of punishment".[937]

[929] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 113.
[930] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 144.
[931] South Korea, Operational Law Manual (1996), p. 189, § 3.
[932] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1710(1).
[933] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1710(2).
[934] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1710(3).
[935] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Annex C, § C14(4).
[936] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), Annex C, § C14(2).
[937] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 9.

885. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces provides that "the execution of a manifestly illegal order is no exemption from penal responsibility".[938]

886. South Africa's LOAC Manual, referring to the South African Constitution (1996), provides that "a person who commits a war crime pursuant to an order is guilty of a war crime if that person knew or should have known that the order was unlawful".[939]

887. South Africa's Medical Services Military Manual provides that "when an order is manifestly illegal the subordinate has the duty to refuse to obey. The order will not be a ground of justification in such a case, it will not justify his/her acts."[940]

888. Sweden's IHL Manual recalls that "according to the so-called Nuremberg principles, the fact that a person has acted upon the orders of a government or a superior shall not free him from liability in international law, provided that he had a genuine possibility of avoiding the act in question".[941]

889. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "the subordinate or inferior is also punishable if he realised while executing the order that he was participating in the perpetration of a crime. The fact that the subordinate or inferior acted pursuant to an order can constitute a mitigating circumstance."[942]

890. The UK Military Manual states that "obedience to the order of a government or of a superior, whether military or civil, or to a national law or regulation, affords no defence to a charge of committing a war crime but may be considered in mitigation of punishment".[943]

891. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "there is no defence of 'superior orders'. If a soldier carries out an illegal order, both he and the person giving that order are responsible."[944]

892. The US Field Manual provides that:

> The fact that the law of war has been violated pursuant to an order of a superior authority, whether military or civil, does not deprive the act in question of its character of a war crime, nor does it constitute a defense in the trial of an accused individual, unless he did not know and could not reasonably have been expected to know that the act ordered was unlawful. In all cases where the order is held not to constitute a defense to an allegation of war crime, the fact that the individual was acting pursuant to orders may be considered in mitigation of punishment.[945]

893. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that:

[938] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), p. 13.
[939] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 44.
[940] South Africa, Medical Services Military Manual (undated), p. 5.
[941] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 95.
[942] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 199(2).
[943] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 627.
[944] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 10, p. 38, § 1.
[945] US, Field Manual (1956), § 509(a).

The fact that an act was committed pursuant to military orders is an acceptable defense only if the accused did not know or could not reasonably have been expected to know that the act ordered was unlawful . . . Nevertheless, in all cases, the fact that an individual was acting pursuant to orders may be considered a mitigating factor in determining punishment.[946]

The manual gives the example of the Manual for Courts-Martial, which states that:

An order requiring the performance of a military duty may be inferred to be legal. An act performed manifestly beyond the scope of authority, or pursuant to an order that a man of ordinary sense and understanding would know to be illegal, or in a wanton manner discharge of a lawful duty, is not excusable.[947]

894. The US Soldier's Manual tells soldiers that:

Even if you had orders to commit the act, you are personally responsible. Orders are not a defense.
. . .
Soldiers who kill captives or detainees cannot excuse themselves from the acts by claiming that an order to "take care of" a captive or detainee was understood to mean "execution". Common sense and the laws of war will help you recognize what is clearly criminal.[948]

895. The US Naval Handbook states that:

Under both international law and US law, an order to commit an obviously criminal act, such as the wanton killing of a noncombatant or the torture of a prisoner, is an unlawful order and will not relieve a subordinate of his responsibility to comply with the law of armed conflict. Only if the unlawfulness of an order is not known by the individual, and he could not reasonably be expected under the circumstances to recognize the order as unlawful, will the defense of obedience of an order protect a subordinate from the consequences of violation of the law of armed conflict.[949] [emphasis in original]

The manual further states that:

The fact that a person committed a war crime under orders of his military or civilian superior does not relieve him from responsibility under international law. It may be considered in mitigation of punishment. To establish responsibility, the person must know (or have reason to know) that an act he is ordered to perform is unlawful under international law. Such an order must be manifestly illegal. The standard is whether under the same or similar circumstances a person of ordinary sense and understanding would know the order to be unlawful. If the person knows the act is unlawful and only does it under duress, this circumstance may be taken into consideration either by way of defense or in mitigation of punishment.[950]

[946] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-4(d). [947] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-4(d).
[948] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 26. [949] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.1.4.
[950] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.5.1.

896. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook states that "under both international law and U.S. law, an order to commit an obviously criminal act . . . is an unlawful order and will not relieve the subordinate of his responsibility to comply with the law of armed conflict". It specifies that "the order may be direct or indirect, explicit or implied".[951]

897. Under the YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY), a member of the armed forces is responsible if he commits a violation of the laws of war in execution of a superior order if he knew that such order involved the commission of a criminal act.[952]

National Legislation

898. Under Albania's Military Penal Code, a person is not relieved from personal criminal responsibility if the act was committed pursuant to a manifestly unlawful order.[953]

899. Under Argentina's Code of Military Justice as amended, in the event that a crime is committed through the execution of a military order, only the superior officer who gave the order shall be held responsible for the crime, and the subordinate shall only be considered an accomplice to the crime if the order is carried out to excess.[954]

900. Argentina's Decree on Trial before the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces, issued in connection with the trial of the military junta, stated that:

> The existence of plans for orders renders the members of the military junta in office at the time, as well as the officers of the armed forces at the decision-making level, responsible in their capacity as indirect perpetrators for the criminal acts committed in compliance with the plans drawn up and overseen by the superiors (Article 514 of the Code of Military Justice). The text of this rule mitigates the responsibility of the subordinates, in particular because in many cases the subordinates may well have failed to understand the moral and legal significance of their acts owing to the psychological tactics used and the coercive context in which they found themselves.[955]

901. Australia's War Crimes Act as amended provides that:

> The fact that, in doing an act alleged to be an offence against this Act, a person acted under orders of his or her government or of a superior is not a defence in a proceeding for the offence, but may, if the person is convicted of the offence, be taken into account in determining the proper sentence.[956]

[951] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 6.1.4, footnote 16.
[952] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 22.
[953] Albania, Military Penal Code (1995), Article 21.
[954] Argentina, Code of Military Justice as amended (1951), Article 514.
[955] Argentina, Decree on Trial before the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces (1983), preamble.
[956] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Section 16.

902. Austria's Military Penal Code as amended provides that a soldier is responsible for punishable acts even if he committed them in execution of an order.[957]

903. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act, which provides for individual responsibility for, inter alia, crimes against humanity, crimes against peace, genocide, war crimes, "violations of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Convention of 1949", as well as "any other crimes under international law", states that "the fact that [the] accused acted pursuant to his domestic law or to order of his Government or of a superior shall not free him from responsibility but may be considered in mitigation of punishment if the Tribunal deems that justice so requires".[958]

904. Under the Criminal Code of Belarus, a person who intentionally commits an offence pursuant to an order that he/she knows to be illegal is criminally responsible.[959]

905. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that:

> The fact that the defendant acted on the order of his/her government or a superior shall not absolve him/her from responsibility where, in the prevailing circumstances, the order could clearly result in the commission of a crime of genocide or of a crime against humanity . . . or a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions . . . and their Additional Protocol I.[960]

906. Under Brazil's Military Penal Code, obedience to a manifestly unlawful order is not a valid defence.[961]

907. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial, in the provision dealing with individual responsibility, states that "the fact that a Suspect acted pursuant to an order of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea or of a superior shall not relieve the Suspect of individual criminal responsibility".[962]

908. Chile's Code of Military Justice provides that a subordinate who receives an illegal order and who does not follow a special procedure of questioning it before performing it, will receive mitigation of punishment.[963] It also gives as a general rule, except the case mentioned above, that the commission of a criminal act in complying with the order of a superior in rank can be taken into account in mitigation of punishment.[964]

909. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act states that:

[957] Austria, Military Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 3(1).
[958] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Sections 3(2) and 5(2).
[959] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 40.
[960] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 5(2).
[961] Brazil, Military Penal Code (1969), Article 38.
[962] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 29.
[963] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Articles 214(2) and 335.
[964] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 211.

The author or accomplice of a crime hereunder cannot be exonerated of his/her responsibility only because he/she has executed an act . . . ordered by the legal authority. However, the court will take these circumstances into consideration when determining the punishment and its duration.[965]

910. Egypt's Penal Code provides that a public officer is not liable for acts committed pursuant to the order of a superior if he/she could reasonably believe that the order was lawful and if he has made necessary investigations and assured himself of the legitimacy of the order.[966]

911. Egypt's Military Criminal Code, which is silent on the defence of superior orders, provides that in case of silence, general rules should be applied.[967]

912. Estonia's Penal Code provides that "the fact that the offence provided for in the present chapter [i.e. crimes against humanity, crimes against peace and war crimes] was committed pursuant to the order of a representative of public administration or of a military commander shall not preclude the punishment of the author of the crime".[968]

913. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that:

The subordinate who has carried out an order to commit an offence . . . shall be liable to punishment if he was aware of the illegal nature of the order or knew that the order was given without authority or knew the criminal nature of the act ordered, such as in cases of homicide, arson or any other grave offence against persons or property, essential public interests or international law.

The Court may, without restriction, reduce the penalty when the person who performed the act ordered was moved by a sense of duty dictated by discipline or obedience; the Court shall take into account the compelling nature of the duty.

The Court may impose no punishment where, having regard to all the circumstances and in particular to the stringent exigencies of State or military discipline, the person concerned could not discuss the order received and act otherwise than he did.[969]

914. France's Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes provided that:

Laws, decrees and regulations emanating from the enemy authority, orders or authorizations given by this authority or by authorities depending thereupon or having depended thereupon cannot be invoked as justifying facts in the meaning of the [Penal Code], but only, if ever, as attenuating circumstances or as absolutory excuses.[970]

915. France's Penal Code provides that a person who executes an act pursuant to a command by a legitimate authority shall not be criminally responsible,

[965] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 13.
[966] Egypt, Penal Code (1937), Article 63.
[967] Egypt, Military Criminal Code (1966), Article 10.
[968] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 88(2).
[969] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 70.
[970] France, Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes (1944), Article 3.

provided the act was not manifestly illegal.[971] However, in the chapter dealing with crimes against humanity, the Code provides that:

The author of or accomplice to a crime . . . cannot be released from his/her responsibility for the sole reason of having committed an act . . . ordered by the legitimate authority. However, [the court] will take into account such circumstance when determining the punishment.[972]

916. Under Germany's Military Penal Code as amended, a person acting pursuant to an order of a superior is not relieved of criminal responsibility if he/she realised or, according to the circumstances known to him, should have realised that the order was a crime. The court can mitigate punishment if, taking circumstances into account, the personal liability of the subordinate is limited.[973]

917. Germany's Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel stipulates that:

An order may not be complied with if, by that, a criminal act would be committed. If the subordinate nevertheless complies with the order, he/she is guilty only if he/she realises or if, under the circumstances known to him/her, it is obvious to him/her, that, by that, a criminal act would be committed.[974]

918. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides that:

Whoever commits an offence [consisting of a war crime, a violation of the duty of supervision or the omission to report a crime] in execution of a military order or of an order comparable in its actual binding effect shall have acted without guilt in so far as the perpetrator does not realise that the order is unlawful and in so far as it is also not manifestly unlawful.[975]

919. Under Iraq's Military Penal Code, a person remains criminally responsible if he/she knew the order he/she received aims at committing a crime.[976]

920. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law excludes certain defences otherwise existing under the Israeli Criminal Code of the time, inter alia, for cases dealing with crimes against the Jewish people, war crimes and crimes against humanity.[977] However, it also states that:

In determining the punishment of a person convicted of an offence under this Law, the court may take into account, as grounds for mitigating the punishment, the following circumstances:

(a) that the person committed the offence under conditions which, but for section 8, would have exempted him from criminal responsibility or constituted a reason for pardoning the offence, and that he did his best to reduce the gravity of the consequences of the offence;

[971] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 122-4.
[972] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 213-4.
[973] Germany, Military Penal Code as amended (1957), Section 5.
[974] Germany, Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel (1995), § 11(2).
[975] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1(3).
[976] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Articles 43 and 98.
[977] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 8, excluding the applicability of Articles 16–19 of the Israeli Criminal Code of the time.

(b) that the offence was committed with intent to avert, and was indeed calculated to avert, consequences more serious than those which resulted from the offence;

however, in the case of an offence under section 1 [a crime against the Jewish people, a crime against humanity or a war crime], the court shall not impose on the offender a lighter punishment than imprisonment for a term of ten years.[978]

921. Israel's Penal Law as amended states that:

(a) A person is not criminally responsible for an act or omission done or made either –
  (1) in execution of the law or
  (2) in obedience to the order of a competent authority, which he is bound by law to obey, unless the order is manifestly unlawful.
(b) Whether an order is manifestly unlawful is a question of law.[979]

922. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, in a part dealing with the punishment for war crimes, provide that "the superior and the subordinate will both be held responsible in case of the perpetration of any of the infringements mentioned".[980]

923. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides that "the fact that the accused has acted under the order of his Government or of a superior in rank does not relieve him of his responsibility if, under the circumstances at the time, he should have realised the criminal character of the order and had the possibility not to comply with it".[981]

924. Article 42 of the Penal Code as amended of the Netherlands provides that a person performing an act in execution of a legal requirement shall not be liable to punishment. Article 43 provides that a person shall not be liable to punishment "for acts committed in performance of an official order issued by an authorised authority" and that "an official order that has been given without authority does not relieve from punishment, unless the subordinate believes in good faith that the order is authorized and obedience to the order is inherent to his or her subordinate position".[982]

925. The International Crimes Act of the Netherlands provides that:

1. The fact that a crime as defined in this Act [genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes, torture] was committed pursuant to a regulation issued by the legal power of a State or pursuant to an order of a superior does not make that act lawful.
2. A subordinate who commits a crime referred to in this Act in pursuance of an order by a superior shall not be criminally responsible if the order was believed by the subordinate in good faith to have been given lawfully and the execution of the order came within the scope of his competence as a subordinate.

[978] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Sections 10 and 11.
[979] Israel, Penal Law as amended (1977), Section 24.
[980] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 148.
[981] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 8.
[982] Netherlands, Penal Code as amended (1881), Articles 42 and 43.

3. For the purposes of subsection 2, an order to commit genocide or a crime against humanity is deemed to be manifestly unlawful.[983]

According to this Act, "superior" means: "(i) a military commander, or a person effectively acting as such, who has effective command or authority over or exercises effective control over one or more subordinates; (ii) a person who exercises effective authority, in a civilian capacity, over or exercises effective control over one or more subordinates".[984]

926. Niger's Penal Code as amended, under a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and war crimes" providing for the punishment of a list of offences such as genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes in the meaning of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and both Additional Protocols, provides that:

The author or accomplice of one of the crimes set out in this chapter cannot be exonerated from his or her responsibility for the only reason that he or she committed an act stipulated or authorised by legal provisions or an act ordered by the legal authority. However, the court shall take these circumstances into consideration at the determination of the punishment.[985]

927. Under Peru's Code of Military Justice, obedience to a superior's order is a valid defence, if the order is not manifestly unlawful.[986]

928. The Revised Penal Code of the Philippines, in a provision entitled "Justifying circumstances", states that "the following do not incur any criminal liability: . . . any person who acts in obedience to an order issued by a superior for some lawful purpose".[987]

929. Poland's Penal Code provides that "a member of the armed forces who commits a prohibited act in carrying out an order does not commit an offence unless, while carrying out the order, he commits an offence intentionally".[988]

930. Rwanda's Penal Code provides, as a general rule, that an illegal act done in pursuance of the law or of a superior's order does not entail liability. The Code further provides, however, that the execution of a manifestly illegal order does not relieve the subordinate of responsibility.[989]

931. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that:

A subordinate shall not be punished if he commits a criminal offence by order or command of a superior issued in the course of military service, unless he has committed a war crime or any other grave criminal offence or if he knew that the carrying out of the order or command constituted a criminal offence.[990]

[983] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 11.
[984] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 1(1)(b).
[985] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.6.
[986] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Article 19(7).
[987] Philippines, Revised Penal Code (1930), Article 11(6).
[988] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 318.
[989] Rwanda, Penal Code (1977), Articles 70 and 229.
[990] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 283.

932. Spain's Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces provides that "where an order would entail the execution of acts which are manifestly contrary to the laws and customs of war or constitute a crime . . . no soldier is bound to obey it; in any case, he must assume serious responsibility for his act or omission".[991]
933. Spain's Military Criminal Code states that obeying any order involving the commission of acts manifestly contrary to the laws or customs of war does not constitute an exonerating or mitigating circumstance.[992]
934. Spain's Law on Security Forces provides that under no circumstances may a defence of due obedience be applied to orders involving the execution of acts that manifestly constitute offences or are contrary to Spain's Constitution or laws.[993]
935. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides that "an act committed by a person on the order of someone to whom he owes obedience shall not result in his being liable to punishment, if in view of the nature of obedience due, the nature of the act and the circumstances in general, it was his duty to obey the order".[994]
936. Under Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended, a subordinate who participates in the commission of a punishable offence while carrying out a superior's order is not relieved of responsibility if he/she knew that the act was a punishable offence. However, the judge may mitigate or exempt from punishment.[995]
937. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides that:

It does not constitute a crime . . . if a person acts in execution of an order or an instruction which was obligatory for him/her and which was duly made.
A person who committed a wilful crime in executing an unlawful order or instruction shall be criminally liable on general grounds.[996]

938. Uruguay's Penal Code as amended, in a provision referring to compliance with the law, provides that "anyone who performs an act, ordered or permitted by law, on account of his public functions, his profession, [or] his authority . . . shall be exempt from liability".[997] It further provides that:

Anyone performing an act out of due obedience shall not be liable for it.
A determination of due obedience requires the following:
a) The order comes from an authority.
b) Said authority is competent to issue it.
c) The agent has the obligation to carry it out.

[991] Spain, Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces (1978), Article 34.
[992] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 21.
[993] Spain, Law on Security Forces (1986), Article 5.1(d).
[994] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Chapter 24, § 8.
[995] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Article 18(2).
[996] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 45(1)–(2).
[997] Uruguay, Penal Code as amended (1933), Article 28.

The agent's error as to the existence of this requirement shall be determined by the judge, taking into account his position in the administrative hierarchy, his level of education, and the seriousness of the act.[998]

939. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended states that "when a soldier commits an offence in the course of duty on orders from a superior, the conditions specified in Article 29 of the ordinary Penal Code [as amended] are presumed to apply in the absence of proof of the contrary".[999]

940. Yemen's Military Criminal Code states that:

In the case of the commission of any of the crimes set out under this chapter [i.e. war crimes], the . . . the subordinate will be held responsible for the crime and will not be released from the punishment provided for, except if the acts have been committed against [his] choice, or without [his] knowledge, or if [he] did not have the possibility to prevent them.[1000]

941. Under the provision of the Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) entitled "Responsibility for criminal acts committed under superior orders", the commission of a war crime is treated as an exception to the general rule that a subordinate will not be punished for a criminal act committed under superior order in execution of official duties, if he/she knew that such an act was a crime.[1001]

National Case-law

942. In its judgement in the Military Junta case in 1985, Argentina's National Court of Appeals held that the legal rule that exempted subordinates from responsibility for the crimes they committed on military orders was none other than the application of the "duty to obey" principle (Article 514, Code of Military Justice, according to which only the superior bears criminal responsibility in the event that a crime is committed through the execution of an order, supra). It found that the unlawful orders had been given by the accused for the purpose of carrying out military acts to combat terrorist subversion, an activity that was part of the functions they performed. Under the terms of Article 11 of Law 23.049, which provides a genuine interpretation of the text contained in Article 514, the subordinate shall be held responsible for the crime committed if he had decision-making powers, knew the order was illegal, or if the order involved committing atrocities or aberrant acts. The Court found that, owing to their position in the chain of command, some individuals knew of the unlawfulness of the system, and that others had committed atrocities. It also stated that some subordinates would not be covered by the defence of duty to obey, and that they [998] Uruguay, Penal Code as amended (1933), Article 29.

[999] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 17.
[1000] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 23.
[1001] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 239.

were responsible for the acts committed, together with those who had given the orders.[1002]

943. In the Military Junta case in 1986, Argentina's Supreme Court found, however, that, where a crime is committed through its execution, the relevant regulation (Article 514 of the Code of Military Justice) transferred responsibility for the crime to the superior, on the principle that responsibility lay in the allocation of duties for the purpose of ensuring discipline. This was not a transfer of the capacity of the perpetrator, but a transfer of penal responsibility for the purpose of imposing discipline. Consequently, the Court found that in peacetime only Article 514 of the Code of Military Justice applied within the framework of military orders, and that the object of the trial was the unlawful acts committed outside the scope of military operations, and that therefore the rules of the Penal Code (Article 45) should apply. According to the Court, those who gave the orders and made the material means available participated as necessary collaborators and not as perpetrators under the terms of Article 45 of the Penal Code, since the subordinates had ample opportunity to determine the fate of the detainees. The Court questioned the degree of "subjugation" to which, according to the Court of Appeals, those executing the acts were subjected. It distinguished perpetrators or co-perpetrators "who took part in the execution of the act" from other types of involvement entailing cooperation, aid or assistance. For this reason, the Court modified the Court of Appeals' designation of the perpetrators' commanders, referring to them instead as "participating as necessary collaborators".[1003]

944. In its judgement in the Leopold case in 1967, in which the accused was convicted of the murder of several POWs in Poland during the Second World War, Austria's Supreme Court held that under the principles laid down in the Nuremberg judgement, obedience to an order of a superior neither justified an offence nor in general excused it. Only "absolute coercion" could constitute such an excuse.[1004]

945. In the Sergeant W. case in 1966, Belgium's Court-Martial of Brussels sentenced a sub-officer to three years' imprisonment for the wilful killing of a civilian. The accused, who at the time of the event was chasing rebels, was serving in the Congolese army within the framework of military technical co-operation between Congo (DRC) and Belgium. He invoked the defence of superior orders. The Court held that, the accused's interpretation of the order he had received, i.e. to kill an unarmed person in his power, was manifestly unlawful; the accused therefore had a duty to disobey this order.[1005]

946. In its judgement in the V.C. case in 1983, in which the accused, a mercenary in Katanga (Congo/DRC), was ordered to kill a wounded person, Belgium's

[1002] Argentina, National Court of Appeals, Military Junta case, Judgement, 9 December 1985.
[1003] Argentina, Supreme Court, Military Junta case, Judgement, 30 December 1986.
[1004] Austria, Supreme Court, Leopold case, Judgement, 10 May 1967.
[1005] Belgium, Court-Martial of Brussels, Sergeant W. case, Judgement, 18 May 1966.

Court of Cassation held that there was no general principle of law that allowed the killing of a wounded person because he was "mortally wounded". An order to kill a wounded person for that sole reason was manifestly criminal. Consequently, the justification of a superior's order could not be raised.[1006]

947. In its judgement in the Kalid case in 1995, a Belgian Military Court, with respect to the requirements for relying on a superior's order as grounds for justification, stated that in accordance with domestic and international law, to be able to claim a superior's order as grounds for justification:

(a) the cited order must be given beforehand, and its implementation must correspond to the purpose of that order,
(b) the cited order must be issued by a legitimate superior acting within the limits of his authority,
(c) the order issued must be legitimate, i.e., in conformity with the law and regulations;

. . . in connection with this last point, it may generally be assumed that a soldier of the lowest rank may base his actions on the assumption that the order was legitimate.[1007]

948. In the Halilović case in 1998, the Doboj District Court (Republika Srpska of Bosnia and Herzegovina) upheld a Municipal Court decision to sentence Ferid Halilović, a member of the Croatian Defence Council (HVO), to 15 years' imprisonment for war crimes committed in 1992 against the civilian population during his time as a prison guard at detention centres in Odzak, Novi Grad and Bosanski Brod where mainly Serb civilians were held. In its findings concerning mitigating circumstances, the District Court noted that "one also has to keep in mind that the accused was working in camps as a guard, so he did some forbidden acts at orders of superiors and especially at orders of the camp warden".[1008]

949. In its judgement on appeal in the Finta case in 1994, Canada's Supreme Court recognised that:

The defence of obedience to superior orders and the peace officer defence are available to members of the military or police forces in prosecutions for war crimes and crimes against humanity. Those defences are subject to the manifest illegality test: the defences are not available where the orders in question were manifestly unlawful. Even where the orders were manifestly unlawful, the defence of obedience to superior orders and the peace officer defence will be available in those circumstances where the accused had no moral choice as to whether to follow the orders. There can be no moral choice where there was such an air of compulsion and threat to the accused that he or she had no alternative but to obey the orders.[1009]

[1006] Belgium, Court of Cassation (Second Chamber), V.C. case, Judgement, 12 January 1983.
[1007] Belgium, Military Court, Kalid case, Judgement, 24 May 1995.
[1008] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Modrića Municipal Court, Halilović case, Decision, 23 October 1997; Doboj District Court, Halilović case, Decision, 10 August 1998.
[1009] Canada, Supreme Court, Finta case, Judgement on Appeal, 24 March 1994.

950. In his dissenting opinion in the Finta case in 1994, one of the judges referred to the judgement in the case of the Major War Criminals rendered by the IMT (Nuremberg) which relied on Article 8 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) to quote a part of the judgement according to which "the true test, which is found in varying degrees in the criminal law of most nations, is not the existence of the order, but whether moral choice was in fact possible". The judge added that:

The element of moral choice was, I believe, added to the superior orders defence for those cases where, although it can readily be established that the orders were manifestly illegal and that the subordinate was aware of their illegality, nonetheless, due to the circumstances such as compulsion, there was no choice for the accused but to comply with the orders. In those circumstances the accused would not have the requisite culpable intent.[1010]

951. In the Brocklebank case before the Canadian Court Martial Appeal Court in 1996 dealing with the criminal responsibility of a Canadian soldier serving on a peacekeeping mission in Somalia for the torture and death of a Somali prisoner, one of the judges, in her dissenting opinion, stated that "if the accused had been ordered to assist in abusing the prisoner, it would have been a manifestly unlawful order with the result that there was no evidentiary foundation for the defence of obedience to superior orders".[1011]

952. In its judgement in the Guzmán and Others case in 1974, Chile's Santiago Council of War stated that:

The provisions of Article 335 of the Code of Military Justice [which provides that, under certain circumstances, a soldier disobeying an unlawful order is not punishable] require that: a) an order be received from a hierarchical superior; b) that this order be related to the military service; and c) that the subordinate has explained the illegality of the order to the superior, and that the latter has insisted on the order's performance. Where this last formality is lacking, or where the subordinate has exceeded the requirements of the order in executing it, this shall be considered as mitigating.[1012]

953. In its judgement in the Dover Castle case in 1921, Germany's Reichsgericht held that:

It is a military principle that the subordinate is bound to obey the orders of his superiors. This duty of obedience is of considerable importance from the point of view of criminal law. Its consequence is that, when the execution of a service order involves an offence against the criminal law, the superior giving the order is alone responsible.[1013]

[1010] Canada, Supreme Court, Finta case, Dissenting opinion of one of the judges, 24 March 1994.
[1011] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Brocklebank case, Judgement, Dissenting opinion of Judge Weiler, 2 April 1996.
[1012] Chile, Santiago Council of War, Guzmán and Others case, Judgement, 30 July 1974.
[1013] Germany, Reichsgericht, Dover Castle case, Judgement, 4 June 1921.

The Court further held that the punishment of a subordinate, who had acted in conformity with his orders, could, under German military criminal law at the time, arise (1) if he had exceeded the order given to him, (2) he was aware that his superior's orders directed action which involved a civil or military crime or misdemeanour. In the relevant case, the Court did not consider that either of these elements was present and the accused, the commander of a submarine from which a British hospital ship had been torpedoed, was acquitted.[1014]

954. In the Llandovery Castle case in 1921, in which a British hospital ship had been torpedoed and destroyed and her lifeboats fired on, Germany's Reichsgericht rejected the plea of superior orders forwarded by two of the accused. It stated that the accused should be deemed to have had knowledge of the unlawful character of the order they carried out and stated that the defence could not be brought forward "if such an order is universally known to everybody, including also the accused, to be without any doubt whatever against the law . . . In the present case it was perfectly clear to the accused that killing defenceless people in the lifeboats could be nothing but a breach of law".[1015]

955. In its judgement in the Subordinate's Responsibility case in 1986, Germany's Federal Supreme Court held that a subordinate who had recognised an order as unlawful would not be relieved from his responsibility even if his superior was ignorant of the illegality of the order.[1016]

956. In its judgement in the Ofer, Malinki and Others case in 1958, Israel's District Military Court for the Central Judicial District stated that:

> The rule is that obedience to an officer's order, which by law a soldier is bound to obey, constitutes justification for the act, that is, exempts him from criminal responsibility. The exemption is that a manifestly illegal order does not constitute justification for the soldier's actions; a soldier need not . . . obey a manifestly illegal order, and if he does obey it, he must bear . . . criminal responsibility for his actions.[1017]

957. In its judgement in the Ofer, Malinki and Others case in 1959, Israel's Military Court of Appeal adopted these words and added that:

> These provisions are aimed at encouraging the moral and human conscience of our soldiers. A reasonable soldier can distinguish a manifestly illegal order on the face of it, without requiring legal counsel and without perusing the law books. These provisions impose moral and legal responsibility on every soldier, irrespective of rank.[1018]

[1014] Germany, Reichsgericht, Dover Castle case, Judgement, 4 June 1921.
[1015] Germany, Reichsgericht, Llandovery Castle case, Judgement, 16 July 1921.
[1016] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Subordinate's Responsibility case, Judgement, 22 January 1986.
[1017] Israel, District Military Court for the Central Judicial District, Ofer, Malinki and Others case, Judgement, 13 October 1958.
[1018] Israel, Military Court of Appeal, Ofer, Malinki and Others case, Judgement, 3 April 1959.

958. In its judgement in the Eichmann case in 1962, Israel's Supreme Court, in response to the accused's defence that it was "the oath of allegiance taken by [him] on joining the S.S. organization and the compelling force of Hitler's order to destroy the Jews completely which guided him in acting as he did", pointed to the distinction to be made between the defence of "obedience to superior orders" and "act of State" and stated that:

The defence that the act was done in obedience to superior orders means ex hypothesi that the person who performed it had no alternative – either under the law or under the regulations of the disciplinary body (army etc.) of which he was a member – but to carry out the order he received from his superior . . . [This] makes it clear that the "superior orders" doctrine cannot, by its very nature, serve the appellant because, when we come to analyze the facts, it will be found that within the framework of the order to carry out the "Final Solution" the appellant acted independently and even exceeded the duties imposed on him through the service channels of the official chain of command . . .

The problem whether it is desirable to sanction this defence depends on the answer to the question whether, and to what extent, the mental state of the accused at the time of the offence ought to be taken into consideration – the fact that he did not then know that the order he carried out was contrary to the law. The via media solution provided by the general criminal law of this country . . . is that such defence is admissible where there was obedience to an order not manifestly unlawful . . . However, in Section 8 of the Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law the legislature has provided that the defence of "superior orders" – and the same is true of the defences of "constraint" and "necessity" – shall not apply with respect to the offences covered by the Law, while in Section 11 it has provided that it is permissible, in certain circumstances, to take it into account as a factor in mitigation of sentence. We certainly agree with the District Court that even if it had to decide the case on the basis of the provisions of the general criminal law, it would also have had to reject that defence not only because the order for physical extermination was manifestly unlawful (and all the other orders to persecute the Jews were equally contrary to the "basic ideas of law and justice"), but also because the appellant was fully conscious at the same time that he was a party to the perpetration of the most grave and horrible crimes.[1019]

As to the conformity of the relevant provision of Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law of 1950 with principles of international law, the Supreme Court ruled that:

Our first answer to this question is that until the Second World War there was no agreed rule in the law of nations which recognized the defence of "superior orders", not even with regard to the charge of committing an act contrary to "the laws of war" . . . There was . . . no departure from the provisions of international law – and this will be our second answer to the above question – when Article 8 of the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] provided . . . that the fact that the accused acted pursuant to an order of a superior shall not free him from responsibility but that the Tribunal may take it into consideration in mitigation of punishment, should it find that justice so requires. It must be understood that this express provision was designed to defeat in advance any attempt by the Nazi criminals so to resort to the plea of respondeat superior as to reduce it to an absurdity, in view of the Fuehrerprinzip which dominated Nazi Germany and in the last analysis made it possible to identify Hitler alone as the source of the satanic orders in consequence of which the frightful Nazi crimes, including that of the "Final Solution", were committed.[1020]

[1019] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962.

Referring to the judgement of the IMT (Nuremberg) in the case of the Major War Criminals, the Supreme Court went on to state that:

It was there observed that the true test was not whether a superior order existed but "whether moral choice was in fact possible". In other words, the mere plea of obedience to the order of a superior – as distinct from the plea that he could not avoid committing the crime because he had no "moral choice" to pursue any other course – will not avail the accused . . . As stated, the applicability of these defences as relieving from responsibility in respect of the offences the subject of the Law of 1950 has been excluded by Section 11 thereof. But even had the Law permitted the accused to rely on the defence that in carrying out the order to commit the crime he was acting in circumstances of "constraint" or "necessity", he would still not succeed unless the following two facts were provided (1) that the danger to his life was imminent; (2) that he carried out the criminal assignment out of a desire to save his own life and because he found no other possibility of doing so . . . Neither of the said conditions has been met in this case.[1021]

959. In its judgement in the Schintlholzer case in 1988, Italy's Military Tribunal at Verona stated that:

It is not possible to assert that [the accused's] responsibility should be zero by simply transferring it to Schintlholzer's superiors, such as the SS Major Rudolf Thyrolf or other officers in the hierarchy of the command chain, which if followed back would reach to the senior officer of the Joint Bolzano Command . . .

It is therefore hardly necessary to point out even in this connection that if it was ever possible to establish any collateral responsibility by known or unknown SS officials at an operating level, this would not in any way raise any questions about the responsibility of Schintlholzer, which has been proven at this level and in the context which has to be assessed here and now.

Thus, as far as criminal intent is concerned, evidence of awareness of the unlawful nature of the conduct involved in the barbaric images described in the preliminary reconstruction of the facts would appear to have been acquired.

Taking this together with the considerations just described concerning the possibility of collateral responsibility, it should be added that this awareness, and therefore awareness of the manifestly criminal nature of the massacre of non-combatants, cannot in fact be denied or justified through appeal to the orders of a superior. But this should in any event likewise be pursued if particulars emerge.

However, as things stand, the only order of which there is any trace in the documents relating to this case is the order for war against the partisans from the

[1020] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962.
[1021] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962.

German Military Command in Bolzano, which in fact has nothing to do with the inhuman activities then engaged in by the "Schintlholzer" combat unit.[1022]

960. In its judgement in the Priebke case in 1996, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome stated that a subordinate who commits a crime acting on the basis of superior orders could not invoke it as a defence, except in the case of a real impending danger of losing his life. However, the Tribunal recalled that "the threat of exemplary and immediate punishment by death: in such a case, he could have stepped back from his refusal and participated in the execution only to save his own life relying upon the excuse of state of necessity which is foreseen in all legal systems". Nevertheless, the Tribunal considered that superior orders could be considered in mitigation of punishment, pursuant to a provision of the 1930 Military Criminal Code. However, the Tribunal found that the accused could not be punished for reasons of statute of limitations.[1023] On appeal, this judgement was annulled by the Supreme Court of Cassation and another trial ordered.[1024]

961. In its judgement in the Zühlke case in 1948, a Special Court in Amsterdam (Netherlands), with regard to Article 8 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg), stated that:

> The accused has pleaded that official orders were given him by his superiors. The chief Prosecutor does not consider this plea to be admissible, himself referring to Art. 8 of the [1945 IMT] Charter whereby an official order was declared to be non-exculpatory. This provision, however, . . . has no direct application in the present case, but could apply indirectly if it were to be regarded as a rule concerning a special instance of an express general rule of international criminal law. It is the opinion of the Court that this is not so, and it cannot be understood why the exonerating effect of an official order, which is recognised in one form or another in practically all national legislations, should not be valid in the sphere of international criminal law. It must be assumed that its operation has been excluded with regard to the "major" criminals, because they were considered a priori to have wanted to take part in the criminal system of Germany and were, therefore, made individually responsible for the crimes they committed in this system. Consequently the accused has ground for his plea.[1025]

However, in the case in question, the Court found that the plea of superior orders could not exonerate the accused from the charges. It based its findings on the opinion that subordinates were under an obligation not to carry out orders relating to "acts forbidden by international law" and that ignorance of the relevant rules did not "carry with it exclusion from penal liability" of the subordinates.[1026]

[1022] Italy, Military Tribunal at Verona, Schintlholzer case, Judgement, 15 November 1988.
[1023] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 1 August 1996.
[1024] Italy, Supreme Court of Cassation, Priebke case, Judgement in Trial of Second Instance, 15 October 1996.
[1025] Netherlands, Special Court in Amsterdam, Zühlke case, Judgement, 3 August 1948.
[1026] Netherlands, Special Court in Amsterdam, Zühlke case, Judgement, 3 August 1948.

962. In its judgement in the Zühlke case in 1948, the Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands stated that:

> If during the Second World War the doctrine "Befehl ist Befehl" (orders are orders) was sometimes carried out by the German forces to the extreme of its logical consequences for obviously criminal purposes, no longer compatible with the human dignity of the subordinates, there is no legal basis to do so, and an appeal to duress on the part of the subordinate concerned can at the most be admitted if actual requirements concerning such duress were present. The [appellant's] plea of duress . . . is rejected on the sufficient grounds that it does not appear that any pressure was brought to bear upon him.[1027]

963. In the Nwaoga case before Nigeria's Supreme Court in 1972, the appellant and two officers of the rebel Biafran army disguised in civilian clothes went to a town under the control of federal troops and killed an unarmed person. The appellant was convicted of murder. With respect to the plea of superior orders, the Court quoted with approval another judgement, stating that:

> It was held that a soldier is responsible by military and civil law and it is monstrous to suppose that a soldier could be protected when the order is grossly and manifestly illegal. Of course, there is the other proposition that a soldier is only bound to obey lawful orders and is responsible if he obeys an order not strictly lawful.
> . . .
> In the case before me that order to eliminate the deceased was given by an officer of an illegal regime, his orders therefore are necessarily unlawful and obedience to them involves a violation of the law and the defence of superior orders is untenable.[1028]

The Court, however, chose to base its decision on the fact that the accused committed an offence under the Criminal Code, and was liable like any civilian would be, whether or not he was acting under orders. It held that, in the circumstances (operation in disguise, not in the rebel army uniform but in plain clothes, appearing to be members of the peaceful private population), he was liable to punishment since the "deliberate and intentional killing of an unarmed person living peacefully inside the Federal territory . . . is a crime against humanity, and even if committed during a civil war is in violation of the domestic law of the country, and must be punished".[1029]

964. In its judgement in the Margen case in 1950, the Supreme Court of the Philippines held that "obedience to an order of a superior gives rise to exemption from criminal liability only when the order is for some lawful purpose".[1030]

965. In the Werner case in 1947, a South African Court of Appeal rejected a plea of superior orders in a case in which the accused, himself a prisoner of war, was convicted for the murder of another prisoner. It held that "[the German [1027] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Zühlke case, Judgement, 6 December 1948.

[1028] Nigeria, Supreme Court, Nwaoga case, Judgement, 3 March 1972.
[1029] Nigeria, Supreme Court, Nwaoga case, Judgement, 3 March 1972.
[1030] Philippines, Supreme Court, Margen case, Judgement, 30 March 1950.

officer] had no authority to give orders, and the appellants were under no duty to obey them, even if those orders had not been so obviously illegal that they should have known them to be illegal".[1031]

966. In the Auschwitz and Belsen case in 1945, the British Military Court at Lüneberg rejected the defence of superior orders. It referred to Article 8 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) and quoted a comment of the IMT, which stated that "the true test, which is found in varying degrees in the criminal law of most nations, is not the existence of the order, but whether moral choice was in fact possible".[1032]

967. In the Krupp case in 1947/48, in which Alfried Krupp and eleven others were charged with having employed POWs, forced labour and inmates of concentration camps in the German war industry, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, in response to the argument of the defence that the accused had acted according to the Reich policies and to an order requiring certain production quota and that, if they had refused to do so, they would have suffered dire consequences, stated that:

> The real defense in this case . . . is that of necessity . . . Under the rule of necessity, the contemplated compulsion must actually operate upon the will of the accused to the extent he is thereby compelled to do what otherwise he would not have done . . . Here we are not dealing with necessity brought about by circumstances independent of human agencies or by circumstances due to accident or misadventure. On the contrary, the alleged compulsion relied upon is said to have been exclusively due to the certainty of loss or injury at the hands of an individual or individuals if their orders were not obeyed. In such cases, if, in the execution of the illegal act, the will of the accused be not thereby overpowered but instead coincides with the will of those from whom the alleged compulsion emanates, there is no necessity justifying the illegal act.[1033]

968. In its judgement in the Krauch (I.G. Farben Trial) case in 1947/48 in which leading German industrials were charged with employment of POWs, forced labour and concentration camp inmates in illegal work and under inhuman conditions, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that:

> The IMT recognized that while an order emanating from a superior officer or from the government is not, of itself, a justification for the violation of an international law (though it may be considered in mitigation), nevertheless, such an order is a complete defense where it is given under such circumstances as to afford the one receiving it no other moral choice than to comply therewith. As applied to the facts here, we do not think there can be much uncertainty as to what the words "moral choice" mean.[1034]

[1031] South Africa, Appeal Division, Werner case, Judgement, 20 May 1947.
[1032] UK, Military Court at Lüneberg, Auschwitz and Belsen case, Judgement, 17 November 1945.
[1033] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krupp case, Judgement, 17 November 1947–30 June 1948.
[1034] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krauch (I.G. Farben Trial) case, Judgement, 14 August 1947–29 July 1948.

969. In its judgement in the Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial) in 1947/48, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, dealing with the plea of superior orders, stated that:

> International Common Law must be superior to and, where it conflicts with, take precedence over National Law or directives issued by any national governmental authority. A directive to violate International Criminal Common Law is therefore void and can afford no protection to one who violates such law in reliance on such a directive . . . The defendants in this case who received obviously criminal orders were placed in a difficult position but servile compliance with orders clearly criminal for fear of some disadvantage or punishment not immediately threatened cannot be recognized as a defence. To establish the defence of coercion or necessity in the face of danger there must be a showing of circumstances such that a reasonable man would apprehend that he was in such imminent physical peril as to deprive him of freedom to choose the right and refrain from the wrong. No such situation has been shown in this case.[1035]

However, turning to the specific problem of responsibility for passing on illegal orders, the Tribunal held that even a commander can be by-passed by a superior command and that in this case he "has the right to presume, in the absence of specific knowledge to the contrary, that the legality of such orders has been properly determined before their issuance". It further stated that: "it is therefore considered that to find a field commander criminally responsible for the transmittal of such an order, he must have passed the order to the chain of command and the order must be one that is criminal upon its face, or one which he is shown to have known was criminal".[1036]

970. In its judgement in the Hadamar Sanatorium case in 1945, the US Military Commission in Wiesbaden applied to the relationship of civilian employees to their superiors the doctrine that individuals who violate the laws and customs of war are criminally liable in spite of their acting under a superior order, if the order was illegal.[1037]

971. In the Griffen case in 1968, a US Army Board of Review approved the decision of the trial law officer who refused to give an instruction to the panel on the defence of obedience of orders, considering that an order to kill an unarmed and unresisting prisoner was "so palpably illegal on its face" that this defence was not an issue.[1038]

972. In the Calley case in 1973, the US Army Court of Military Appeals approved the following instructions given to the panel by the trial judge in a case where the accused invoked an order to kill unresisting detainees:

[1035] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial), 30 December 1947–28 October 1948.
[1036] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial), Judgement, 30 December 1947–28 October 1948.
[1037] US, Military Commission in Wiesbaden, Hadamar Sanatorium case, Judgement, 8–15 October 1945.
[1038] US, Army Board of Review, Griffen case, Judgement, 2 July 1968.

The acts of a subordinate done in compliance with an unlawful order given him by his superior are excused and impose no criminal liability upon him unless the superior's order is one which a man of ordinary sense and understanding would, under the circumstances, know to be unlawful, or if the order in question is actually known to the accused to be unlawful.[1039] [emphasis in original]

Citing a writer's opinion, the Court stated that:

For the inferior to assume to determine the question of the lawfulness of an order given him by a superior would of itself, as a general rule, amount to insubordination, and such an assumption carried into practice would subvert military discipline. Where the order is apparently regular and lawful on its face, he is not to go behind it to satisfy himself that his superior has proceeded with authority, but is to obey it according to its terms, the only exceptions recognized to the rule of obedience being cases of orders so manifestly beyond the legal power or discretion of the commander as to admit of no rational doubt of their unlawfulness . . .

Except in such instances of palpable illegality, which must be of rare occurrence, the inferior should presume that the order was lawful and authorized and obey it accordingly, and in obeying it can scarcely fail to be held justified by a military court.[1040] [emphasis in original]

973. In his dissenting opinion in the Calley case in 1973, one of the judges stated that:

My impression is that the weight of authority . . . supports a more liberal approach to the defense of superior orders. Under this approach, superior orders should constitute a defense except "in a plain case of excess of authority, where at first blush it is apparent and palpable to the commonest understanding that the order is illegal".

While this test is phrased in language that now seems "somewhat archaic and ungrammatical", the test recognizes that the essential ingredient of discipline in any armed force is obedience to orders and that this obedience is so important it should not be penalized unless the order would be recognized as illegal, not by what some hypothetical reasonable soldier would have known, but also by "those persons at the lowest end of the scale of intelligence and experience in service". This is the real purpose in permitting superior orders to be a defense, and it ought not to be restricted by the concept of a fictional reasonable man so that, regardless of his personal characteristics, an accused judged after the fact may find himself punished for either obedience or disobedience, depending on whether the evidence will support the finding of simple negligence on his part . . .

Because the original case language is archaic and somewhat ungrammatical, I would rephrase it to require that the military jury be instructed that, despite his asserted defense of superior orders, an accused may be held criminally accountable for his acts, allegedly committed pursuant to such orders, if the court members are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt (1) that almost every member of the armed forces would have immediately recognized that the order was unlawful, and (2) that [1039] US, Army Court of Military Appeals, Calley case, Judgement, 21 December 1973.

[1040] US, Army Court of Military Appeals, Calley case, Judgement, 21 December 1973, referring to Col. William Winthrop, Military Law and Precedents, pp. 296–297, 2nd edition 1920 (reprint).

the accused should have recognized the order's illegality as a consequence of his age, grade, intelligence, experience, and training.[1041]

Other National Practice

974. At the CDDH, with respect to Article 77 of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC, Argentina explained its negative vote by referring to a great difficulty rooted in the determination of the degree of scrutiny of the orders required from the subordinate, which also varied according to his hierarchical rank.[1042] However, in the debates in Committee I of the CDDH, Argentina had stated that "on the whole, [it] supported the ICRC text of article 77, which retained [the principle of due obedience]" and that it "accepted what might be termed 'the human function of due obedience', in other words that in case of the flagrant breach of a fundamental humanitarian principle exoneration on account of due obedience did not apply".[1043]

975. At the CDDH, Australia submitted an amendment concerning Article 77 of draft AP I which read: "In paragraph 2 delete the words 'and that he had the possibility of refusing to obey the order'".[1044] Later at the CDDH, Australia stated that it "supported the objectives sought in the ICRC text of article 77 [of draft AP I]".[1045] With respect to its amendment submitted in 1975, it also stated that in this text "there was no provision which would give immunity to a soldier if he had had no opportunity of refusing to obey an order".[1046]

976. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Belgian Senate in the context of the adoption of the Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols in 1991, which excludes the defence of superior orders in cases "where, in the prevailing circumstances, the order could clearly result in the commission of a crime of genocide or of a crime against humanity . . . or a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions . . . and their Additional Protocol I", it is stated that the words "if he had the option of not obeying" were omitted since this would necessarily be deduced from general principles of penal law regarding compulsion.[1047]

[1041] US, Army Court of Military Appeals, Calley case, Dissenting opinion of Judge Darden, 21 December 1973.

[1042] Argentina, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 329.

[1043] Argentina, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.52, 6 May 1976, pp. 141–142, §§ 31 and 33.

[1044] Australia, Amendment submitted to the CDDH concerning Article 77 of draft AP I, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/255, 24 March 1975, p. 331.

[1045] Australia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.51, 5 May 1976, p. 128, § 26.

[1046] Australia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.51, 5 May 1976, p. 128, § 28.

[1047] Belgium, Senate, Explanatory Memorandum, Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, 1990–1991 Session, Doc. 1317-1, 30 April 1991, p. 15.

977. At the CDDH, Canada, which voted against the deletion of Article 77 of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC, in its explanation of vote stated that:

> We agree that under customary international law an accused is unable to plead as a defence that the criminal act with which he was charged was in compliance with superior orders that had been given to him. While denying this avenue of defence, the Canadian delegation is aware that compliance with an order to commit an act which the accused knew or should have known was clearly unlawful may be taken into consideration by way of mitigation of punishment.
> ...
> While we would have liked to see Article 77 adopted as part of the Protocol, we can console ourselves with the knowledge that the article was in fact broadly in accordance with existing international law, which continues to operate in so far as breaches of the Conventions and the Protocol are concerned.[1048]

978. In 1997, in reply to a report of the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Torture, the Colombian government referred to its decision to present to Congress the reform of the military criminal justice system beginning in March 1997. As to the defence of obedience to superior orders, it stated that it "could only be invoked when the act was the result of a legitimate order and did not infringe fundamental rights".[1049]

979. According to the Report on the Practice of Croatia, "the position of the Croatian criminal law is that the superior order is not a valid defence against violations of international humanitarian law nor any other crime in general. To be found guilty for the offence it is not required that [the] subordinate ... knows that he has the right to disobey 'unlawful' order[s], but that he has to know that an act committed constitutes a crime or that the criminal character of the act must be obvious from the circumstances".[1050]

980. In 1994, in a statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, the Chief Special Prosecutor of the Ethiopian Transitional Government stated that "the Ethiopian Government ... was aware that democracy could not allow criminals to go unpunished on the pretext that they had acted on government orders".[1051]

981. According to the Report on the Practice of India, in cases where armed force is used, "the police action or action of the armed forces will be questioned before a court of law. During such proceedings the person charged will not be

[1048] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, pp. 330–331.

[1049] Colombia, Reply of the government to a report of the Special Rapporteur on Torture of the UN Commission on Human Rights, referred to in UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Torture, Fifth report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/38, 24 December 1997, § 66.

[1050] Report on the Practice of Croatia, 1997, Chapter 6.9.

[1051] Ethiopia, Transitional Government, Chief Special Prosecutor, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, 17 February 1994, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/SR.28, 22 January 1996, § 3.

[held] liable if it is established that he obeyed the superior orders which were lawful".[1052] However, the report states that:

In view of the right and duty to disobey illegal superior orders . . . it is possible to suggest that the defence of superior orders will not be available in cases where lawfulness of police and military action is challenged as violative of humanitarian standards. The defence will be available only when the superior orders were lawful.[1053]

982. At the CDDH, Iran stated that it was opposed to the insertion of Article 77 of draft AP I.[1054]

983. In 1950, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Israel, with respect to the interpretation of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg), stated that:

There did not, however, appear to be any justification for asserting that the fact of having acted under orders might lessen the responsibility of the defendant, instead of considering that factor as having a bearing only on the punishment, or in omitting any reference in principle IV [of the Nuremberg Principles] to the authority of the Court to mitigate punishment.[1055]

984. During a debate in Committee I of the CDDH, Israel stated that it "favoured the inclusion of Article 77 of draft Protocol I" and that:

Although refusal to obey an order might strike against military discipline, the choice was one between, on the one hand, carrying out a manifestly illegal order – in other words perpetrating a violation of humanitarian law – and, on the other hand, respect for military discipline. But since it was a question of grave breaches, any violation of humanitarian law was far more dangerous in its effects than a possible failure to observe military discipline. Article 77 reflected fairly faithfully international criminal law as defined by the international military tribunals at the end of the Second World War.[1056]

985. At the CDDH, Israel stated that it had voted in favour of Article 77 of draft AP I and that:

The article is a reflection of existing customary international law clearly enunciated in the Nürnberg principles and embodied in [Israeli law].

We regret that Article 77 was not adopted . . . and wish to state that the rule continues to be governed by customary international law.[1057]

[1052] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 6.8.
[1053] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 6.9.
[1054] Iran, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 307, § 3.
[1055] Israel, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.236, 9 November 1950, § 60.
[1056] Israel, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.52, 6 May 1976, p. 143, § 40.
[1057] Israel, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 336.

986. In 1994, in its first periodical report to the UN Committee against Torture, Israel stated that:

Regarding article 2(3) of the [1984 Convention against Torture], we refer to section 24(1)(a) of the Penal Law, 5737-1977 which allows the defence of acting under superior orders only where the orders are lawful. Where an order is manifestly illegal, as would be the case with an order to commit acts of torture, acting under such order would clearly not constitute a defence for a person accused of committing such acts. On this, we would refer to the decision of the Supreme Court, sitting as High Court of Justice (27.12.89) to make absolute decree against the chief Military Advocate, the chief of the General Staff and others, requiring them to commit an army officer for trial before a court martial for committing acts of torture against residents of certain Arab villages in Samaria (administered territories) during the course of putting down the Arab uprising (intifada) at its inception in January 1988. According to the findings of an investigation instituted at the request of the International Red Cross, the residents had been bound and severely beaten by orders of the said army officer. The court characterized such acts as repugnant to civilized standards of behaviour and rejected the plea that they were carried out as a result of the "uncertainty" that prevailed as to orders for quelling the intifada. (High Court case No. 425/89 Piskei Din (Supreme Court Judgements), vol. 43, Part IV, p. 718).[1058]

987. In an article published in a military review, a member of the Kuwaiti armed forces stated that if a soldier received a clearly illegal order, he had the duty to disobey it, otherwise, the soldier will be subject to penal and civil responsibility for his solidarity with the commander, unless the violation of the law is unclear, to the extent that the commanded is deceived by the same. Then, only the commander will be questioned. If the inferior knows the crime in advance, he shall be totally responsible. He would not be exempted unless it was indicated that he was in a state of moral obligation by a leader, or in case of necessity or force majeure.[1059]

988. At the CDDH, Mexico stated that it would abstain from the vote on Article 77 of draft AP I "because it considered that Article 77 should apply not merely to grave breaches, but to all breaches".[1060]

989. In 1982, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, Mongolia stated that:

In considering and improving the text of the 1954 draft, the International Law Commission should seek to eliminate the ambiguities in some provisions and to reflect more fully the principles of the [IMT] Charters and judgements of the Nürnberg and Tokyo Tribunals. In that connection, the wording of [article 4] of the draft Code

[1058] Israel, Initial report of 25 January 1994 submitted to the CAT under Article 19 of the 1984 Convention against Torture, UN Doc. CAT/C/16/Add.4, 4 February 1994, § 9.

[1059] Fellah Awad Al-Anzi, "The accomplishment of duties and the execution of military orders, their limits and constraints", Homat Al-Watan, No. 149, p. 61.

[1060] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 308, § 7.

should be brought into line with that of [article 8] of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal.[1061]

990. According to the Report on the Practice of the Netherlands, Article 10 of the Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended, Article 3 of the Genocide Convention Act and Article 3 of the Torture Convention Act (which have been repealed by the International Crimes Act) at first glance seem to provide that acting on superior orders can neither serve as a justification nor as an excuse. However, the report states that this certainly was not parliament's intention. Parliament only intended to provide that superior orders as such cannot justify a violation of the laws and customs of armed conflict, genocide or torture, thereby acknowledging the possibility of having complied with superior orders serving as an excuse. The report further states that, pursuant to Article 10(1) of the Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended, violations of the laws and customs of armed conflict would have to be judged according to the general principles of criminal law, including the defences of compulsion and necessity.[1062]

991. At the CDDH, Norway considered that "the rejection of Article 77 [of draft AP I] did not weaken the validity of the Nürnberg principles and of the rules of international law".[1063]

992. At the CDDH, Poland expressed its regret that Article 77 of draft AP I had not been adopted and stated that "despite the rejection of the article, the Nürnberg principles remained important norms of international law".[1064]

993. In 1982, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, Poland stated that:

> [Its] delegation had serious objections to article 4 of the 1954 draft, and in particular to the words "if, in the circumstances at the time, it was possible for him not to comply with that order". That formulation was a fundamental departure from the principle of article 8 of the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] which stated that action taken pursuant to an order of a Government or of a superior did not free an individual from responsibility, but could be considered in mitigation of punishment if the Tribunal determined that justice so required.[1065]

994. The Report on the Practice of Rwanda, referring to a paper drafted by a military writer, states that during the training of Rwandan military officers it is taught that "most of the countries support the effective application of the [1061] Mongolia, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/37/SR.54, 24 November 1982, § 19.

[1062] Report on the Practice of the Netherlands, 1997, Chapter 6.9.
[1063] Norway, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 309, § 13.
[1064] Poland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 309, § 12.
[1065] Poland, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/37/SR.52, 22 November 1982, § 6.

system of manifestly illegal orders according to which a subordinate cannot be justified in executing a manifestly illegal order".[1066]

995. At the CDDH, Spain stated with respect to Article 77(2) of draft AP I that:

Responsibility exists when the circumstances in which the penal offence takes place do not prevent the realization that the order received implies the commission of a grave offence, although the fact must be considered, as an attenuating circumstance, that it is rationally impossible to disobey orders received. For that reason the principle affirmed in paragraph 2 is a valid one.[1067]

996. At the CDDH, Switzerland proposed an amendment concerning Article 77 of draft AP I which aimed at deleting the Article.[1068]

997. At the CDDH, Syria submitted the following amendment concerning Article 77 draft AP I submitted by the ICRC:

Amend Article 77 as follows:

. . .

2. The fact of having acted pursuant to an order does not absolve an accused from penal responsibility if it be established that, in the circumstances at the time, he should have reasonably known that he was committing a grave breach of the Conventions or of the present Protocol and that he had the possibility of not carrying out the order.[1069]

Later at the CDDH, Syria stated that it had voted against Article 77 of draft AP I "because it contravened international law". It added that:

The article rules on a matter of discipline between the individual concerned and the Government or authority to which he was subordinate, a matter which came under exclusive competence of the internal laws of States. Moreover, Article 77 was based on the rather dubious hypothesis that any subordinate would be able, in delicate circumstances, to distinguish between a legal and an illegal act and to make a valid appreciation of the legality of the order received. That hypothesis was pure fiction, for it was rarely that subordinates were acquainted with the legal nuances of often very lengthy texts, while any elementary knowledge that they might have of them would not enable them to make a valid judgement. In addition, Article 77 might well give rise to abuses under the screen of humanitarian law. It entailed incitement to disobedience or orders, which ran counter to the military codes of most States.[1070]

998. At the CDDH, Sudan stated that it had voted against Article 77 of draft AP I because of the provisions contained in its paragraph 1, but that "if the [1066] Report on the Practice of Rwanda, 1997, Chapter 6.9, referring to 2 Lt. C. Bizimungu, Synthèse de l'exposé sur la justice militaire, E.S.M., 12–13 November 1996, pp. 11–12.

[1067] Spain, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 338.

[1068] Switzerland, Amendment submitted to the CDDH concerning Article 77 of draft AP I, CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/303, 27 April 1976, p. 331.

[1069] Syria, Amendment submitted to the CDDH concerning Article 77 of draft AP I, CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/74, 20 March 1974, p. 331.

[1070] Syria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, pp. 308–309, § 9.

article had been put to the vote paragraph by paragraph, [Sudan] would have voted . . . in favour of paragraph 2".[1071]

999. At the CDDH, the UK, which opposed Article 77 of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC, stated that it:

could not accept that there ought to be one system of law which related to grave breaches of the Conventions and Protocols, while other breaches, including breaches of customary law and of other Conventions, were subjected to an entirely different system. That state of affairs would clearly lead only to confusion in an area where it was vital to have simply rules which could be readily understood by soldiers.

. . .

Much the best would be the omission of the article, leaving the situation to be regulated by the existing rules of international law concerning superior orders.[1072]

1000. In 1991, during a debate in the House of Commons, the UK Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated that:

Anyone who breaks the provisions of the Geneva conventions may be held liable. Thus, individual Iraqis now bear personal responsibility for breaches of them. That position was reaffirmed in Security Council resolutions 670 and 674. The superior orders defence will not be accepted as an excuse. Machinery already exists under [the Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957)] for prosecuting grave breaches of them.[1073]

1001. In 1993, in a "Non-Paper" discussing the 1993 ICTY Statute and transmitted to the UN Legal Counsel, the UK FCO stated that:

We do not believe one should depart from the principle in Article 8 of the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] . . . A similar provision is found in Article 2(3) of the [1984 Convention against Torture]. These provisions are preferable to that in Article 11 of the [1991 ILC] draft Code of Crimes [against the Peace and Security of Mankind]. Under that an individual would not be relieved of criminal responsibility if "in the circumstances at the time, it was possible for him not to comply with an order of a superior". This language, drawn from the 1954 Draft Code [of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind] would seem to make a large inroad into the Nuremberg rule and go against the general trend internationally towards the expansion of individual responsibility.[1074]

1002. At the CDDH, the US submitted an amendment relative to Article 77 of draft AP I which read:

[1071] Sudan, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 339.

[1072] UK, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, pp. 307–308, §§ 4 and 6.

[1073] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Hansard, 28 March 1991, Vol. 188, col. 1100.

[1074] UK, FCO, Non-Paper, Former Yugoslavia: War Crimes Implementation of Resolution 808, 22 March 1993, reprinted in BYIL, Vol. 64, 1993, p. 701.

Delete the word "grave" from paragraph 1.
Amend paragraph 2 to read:

> "The fact of having acted pursuant to an order of his government or of a superior does not absolve an accused person from responsibility if it be established that, in the circumstances at the time, he knew or should have known that he was committing a breach of the Conventions or of the present Protocol. The fact that the individual was acting pursuant to orders may, however, be taken into account in mitigation of punishment."[1075]

1003. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the unanimous vote on Resolution 827 (1993) establishing the ICTY, the US stated that under Article 7 of the 1993 ICTY Statute "it is, of course, a defence that the accused was acting pursuant to orders where he or she did not know the orders were unlawful and a person of ordinary sense and understanding would not have known the orders to be unlawful".[1076]

1004. During a debate in Committee I of the CDDH, Uruguay, although criticising Article 77 of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC, stated that it "supported the principles underlying Article 77, which undoubtedly had its place in the section of draft Protocol I dealing with the repression of breaches".[1077]

1005. A commentary relative to the Military Penal Code (as amended) of Uruguay states that:

> Article 29 exempts from liability anyone who executes an act of due obedience. The defence of due obedience is allowable for military personnel only under the following conditions: The illicit act must be the result of an order; the order must correspond to an act committed in the course of duty; it must have been issued by one who is competent to give it; and the subordinate must have a legal obligation to carry it out. It is considered that in the military system the subordinate must be fully protected when acting in accordance with due obedience, because in this way discipline is asserted and the prestige of the superior's authority is strengthened ... One of the problems [is], if the rule functions, when the order is clearly unlawful; in other words, if the subordinate agent of the offence has the obligation to analyse the order and determine its lawfulness or unlawfulness ... The solution adopted by our law code therefore establishes a priori the presumption that all the elements required to absolve the agent of liability on grounds of due obedience are present, without prejudice to the judge's authority to analyse the evidence in the light of the subordinate's personal characteristics, the seriousness and appropriateness of the act, and whether it was carried out in peacetime or wartime, and, on the basis of this analysis, to decide whether liability may properly be transferred completely from the agent to the superior, or whether, on the contrary, there has been certain unlawful conduct on the agent's part that would make him partially [1075] US, Amendment submitted to the CDDH concerning Article 77 of draft AP I, CDDH, Official Records, Vol. III, CDDH/I/308, 27 April 1976, p. 332.

[1076] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217 (Provisional), 25 May 1993, p. 16.
[1077] Uruguay, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.52, 6 May 1976, p. 144, § 45.

liable, or whether the order was twisted and the agent's exoneration from liability is therefore unjustified.[1078]

1006. At the CDDH, Yemen, which voted against Article 77 of draft AP I submitted by the ICRC, in its explanation of vote stated that "in the article there is a certain imbalance between international humanitarian law and the internal law on which all military discipline is based. That principle is confirmed by the constitutional regulations of all countries and by the principles of international law."[1079]

1007. In 1950, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, the SFRY delegation commented on Principle IV of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles to the effect that:

> It felt that the [ILC] had departed here from the charter and judgement of Nürnberg. According to those instruments, the fact that a person who committed a criminal act had acted pursuant to an order of his government or of a superior, did not relieve him from responsibility but in exceptional cases might be considered in mitigation of punishment. If this position was supplemented by the criterion of "possible moral choice", the number of cases in which the court could acquit the guilty would be increased. Moreover, the courts might consider that the very fact that a person was in a subordinate position limited the moral choice possible to him. It was to be feared that the modification of the principle would give rise to ambiguity, and prejudice in application. Apart from that, the Yugoslav delegation fully understood the feelings of the members of the [ILC] which made them want to avoid having the penalty automatically applied to subordinates and to place the responsibility upon superiors. Even though the question was left to discretion of the court, it could give rise to abuse.[1080]

1008. The Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe states that "the defence of superior orders is recognized in Zimbabwean criminal law and would be applicable even where breaches of international humanitarian law are concerned but only if the orders given are not manifestly illegal".[1081]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1009. In 1993, in his report to the UN Security Council on the draft Statute of the ICTY, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

> Acting upon an order of a Government or a superior cannot relieve the perpetrator of the crime of his criminal responsibility and should not be a defence. Obedience to [1078] Néstor J. Bolentini, Commentary and Annotations on the Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Bibilioteca General Artigas, Vol. 57, Centro Militar, 1979, Article 17, pp. 25–26.

[1079] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, pp. 330–331.
[1080] SFRY, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.234 (1950), 6 November 1950, § 14.
[1081] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 6.9.

superior orders may, however, be considered a mitigating factor, should the [ICTY] determine that justice so requires. For example, the [ICTY] may consider the factor of superior orders in connection with other defences such as coercion or lack of moral choice.[1082]

1010. In 1997, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Torture recommended to the government of Colombia that a reform of the Code of Military Justice should include, inter alia, the "elimination of the principle of obedience to superior orders in connection with executions, torture and enforced disappearances".[1083]

1011. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) recalled that it had made the following statement in its first interim report:

A subordinate who has carried out an order of a superior or acted under government instructions and thereby has committed a war crime or a crime against humanity, may raise the so-called defence of superior orders, claiming that he cannot be held criminally liable for an act he was ordered to commit. The Commission notes that the applicable treaties unfortunately are silent on the matter. The Commission's interpretation of the customary international law, particularly as stated in the Nuremberg principles, is that the fact that a person acted pursuant to an order of his Government or of a superior does not relieve him from responsibility under international law, provided a moral choice was in fact available to him.[1084]

The Commission noted with satisfaction that Article 7(4) of the 1993 ICTY Statute had adopted an essentially similar approach on this subject.[1085] With regard to the "type, range and duration of the violations" committed during the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the Commission further noted that:

[They] indicate that the absolute defence of obedience to superior orders is invalid and unfounded . . . This is particularly evident in view of the loose command and control structure where unlawful orders could have been disobeyed without individuals risking personal harm. Indeed, some did. A moral choice usually existed.[1086]

1012. In 1994, in its final report on grave violations of IHL in Rwanda, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution

[1082] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Paragraph 2 of Security Council Resolution 808 (1993), UN Doc. S/25704, 3 May 1993, § 57.
[1083] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Torture, Fifth report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/38, 24 December 1997, § 65.
[1084] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 61.
[1085] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 62.
[1086] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, § 318.

935 (1994), referring to Article 8 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg), noted that "since the inception of the Nuremberg Charter it has been recognized that the existence of superior orders does not provide an individual with an exculpatory defence. Nevertheless, the existence of superior orders may be taken into account with respect to mitigation of punishment."[1087]

1013. In its Commentary on Article 11 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the ILC referred to the decisions of the military tribunals after the Second World War and stated that:

> It is . . . recognized that, if a superior order is also to entail the responsibility of the subordinate, he must have had a choice in the matter and a genuine possibility of not carrying out the order. Such circumstances would not exist in cases of irresistible moral or physical coercion, state of necessity and obvious and acceptable error.[1088]

1014. In its commentary on Article 5 of the 1996 Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the ILC, referring to various international instruments and judgements, noted that:

> (3) Article 5 addresses the criminal responsibility of a subordinate who commits a crime while acting pursuant to an order of a Government or a superior . . . The culpability and the indispensable role of the subordinate who actually commits the criminal act cannot be ignored. Otherwise the legal force and effect of the prohibition of crimes under international law would be substantially weakened by the absence of any responsibility or punishment on the part of the actual perpetrators of the heinous crimes and thus of any deterrence on the part of the potential perpetrators thereof.
>
> (4) The plea of superior orders is most frequently claimed as a defence by subordinates who are charged with the type of criminal conduct covered by the Code. Since the Second World War the fact that a subordinate acted pursuant to an order of a Government or a superior has been consistently rejected as a basis for relieving a subordinate of responsibility for a crime under international law . . .
>
> (5) Notwithstanding the absence of any defence based on superior orders, the fact that a subordinate committed a crime while acting pursuant to an order of his superior was recognized as a possible mitigation factor which could result in a less severe punishment in the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg] and the subsequent legal instruments . . . The mere existence of superior orders will not automatically result in the imposition of a lesser penalty. A subordinate is subject to a lesser punishment only when a superior order in fact lessens the degree of his culpability . . . A subordinate who unwillingly commits a crime pursuant to an order of a superior because of the fear of serious consequences for himself of his family resulting from a failure to carry out that order does

[1087] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/1405, 9 December 1994, § 175.

[1088] ILC, Commentary on Article 11 of the 1991 Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, included in Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its Forty-third Session, UN Doc. A/CN.4/SER.A/1991/Add.1 (Part 2), 1991, §§ 2 and 3.

not incur the same degree of culpability as a subordinate who willingly participates in the commission of a crime . . .

(6) Article 5 reaffirms the principle of individual criminal responsibility under which a subordinate is held accountable for a crime against the peace and security of mankind notwithstanding the fact that he committed such a crime while acting under the orders of a Government or a superior.[1089]

Other International Organisations

1015. No practice was found.

International Conferences

1016. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1017. In its judgement in the case of the Major War Criminals in 1946, the defence of superior orders was dismissed by the IMT (Nuremberg), which stated that:

The provisions of this Article [i.e. Article 8 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] are in conformity with the law of all nations. That a soldier was ordered to kill or torture in violation of the international law of war has never been recognised as a defence to such acts of brutality, though, as the Charter here provides, the order may be urged in mitigation of the punishment. The true test, which is found in varying degrees in the criminal law of most nations, is not the existence of the order, but whether moral choice was in fact possible.[1090]

1018. In the Erdemović case in 1997, the ICTY Appeals Chamber found that "duress does not afford a complete defence to a soldier charged with a crime against humanity and/or a war crime involving the killing of innocent human beings".[1091]

1019. In their joint separate opinion in the Erdemović case in 1997, Judge McDonald and Judge Vohrah stated that:

Superior orders and duress are conceptually distinct and separate issues and often the same factual circumstances engage both notions, particularly in armed conflict situations. We subscribe to the view that obedience to superior orders does not amount to a defence per se but is a factual element which may be taken into consideration in conjunction with other circumstances of the case in assessing whether the defences of duress or mistake of fact are made out.[1092]

[1089] ILC, Commentary on Article 5 of the 1996 Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, included in Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its Forty-eighth Session, UN Doc. A/CN.4/SER.A/1996/Add.1 (Part 2), §§ 3–6.

[1090] IMT (Nuremberg), Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 1 October 1946.

[1091] ICTY, Erdemović case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 October 1997, Part IV, Disposition, § 4.

[1092] ICTY, Erdemović case, Judgement on Appeal, Joint Separate Opinion of Judge McDonald and Judge Vohrah, 7 October 1997, § 34.

1020. In its judgement in the Erdemović case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber accepted that "the accused committed the offence in question [i.e. a violation of the laws and customs of war] under threat of death". However, it sentenced the accused for "the violation of the laws and customs of war" to which the accused himself had pleaded guilty.[1093] It applied the ruling of the Appeals Chamber in the same case and stated that:

> Duress may be taken into account only by way of mitigation . . . The evidence reveals the extremity of the situation faced by the accused. The Trial Chamber finds that there was a real risk that the accused would have been killed had he disobeyed the order. He voiced his feelings, but realised that he had no choice in the matter: he had to kill or be killed.[1094]

1021. In 1994, in its concluding observations, the Committee against Torture, reacting against the recommendation of the Landau Commission that "psychological forms of pressure be used predominantly and that only 'moderate physical pressure' be sanctioned in limited cases where the degree of anticipated danger is considerable" considered that "it is a matter of deep concern that Israeli law pertaining to the defences of 'superior orders' and 'necessity' are in clear breach of that country's obligations under Article 2 of the [1984 Convention against Torture]".[1095]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1022. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

1023. No practice was found.

[1093] ICTY, Erdemović case, Sentencing Judgement bis, 5 March 1998, §§ 16 and 23.
[1094] ICTY, Erdemović case, Sentencing Judgement bis, 5 March 1998, § 17.
[1095] UN Committee against Torture, Report, UN Doc. A/49/44, 24 April 1994, § 167.

CHAPTER 44

WAR CRIMES

A. Definition of War Crimes

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 6(b) of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) established jurisdiction of the IMT (Nuremberg) over, inter alia, "war crimes: namely, violations of the laws or customs of war".

2. Article 85(5) AP I provides that grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of the Protocol "shall be regarded as war crimes". Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]

3. Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

For the purpose of this Statute, "war crimes" means:

(a) Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, namely, any of the following acts against persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention: . . .

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

(b) Other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict, within the established framework of international law, namely, any of the following acts: . . .

(c) In the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, serious violations of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, namely, any of the following acts committed against persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention or any other cause: . . .

. . .

(e) Other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts not of an international character, within the established framework of international law, namely, any of the following acts: . . .

4. Article 30(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "unless otherwise provided, a person shall be criminally responsible and liable for punishment for a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court only if the material elements are committed with intent and knowledge".

5. Article 1(1) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that:

> The Special Court shall, except as provided in subparagraph (2), have the power to prosecute persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996, including those leaders who, in committing such crimes, have threatened the establishment of and implementation of the peace process in Sierra Leone.

Other Instruments

6. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution. At the end of the list, it is stated that "the Commission desires to draw attention to the fact that the offences enumerated . . . are not regarded as complete and exhaustive; to these such additions can from time to time be made as may seem necessary".

7. Article II of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 defines war crimes as:

> atrocities or offences against persons or property constituting violations of the laws or customs of war, including but not limited to, murder, ill treatment or deportation to slave labour or any other purpose of civilian population from occupied territory, murder or ill treatment of prisoners of war or persons on the seas, killing of hostages, plunder of public or private property, wanton destruction of cities, towns or villages, or devastation not justified by military necessity.

8. Article 5(b) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) gave the Tribunal jurisdiction over, inter alia, "Conventional War Crimes: Namely, violations of the laws or customs of war".

9. Article 2(12) of the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind states that "the following acts are offences against the peace and security of mankind: . . . acts in violation of the laws and customs of war".

10. Article 22(2) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "for the purposes of this Code, an exceptionally serious war crime is an exceptionally serious violation of principles and rules of international law applicable in armed conflict".

11. Article 1 of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "the [ICTY] shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute".

12. Article 2 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, entitled "Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949", provides that the Tribunal "shall have the power to prosecute persons committing or ordering to be committed grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, namely the following acts against persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention: . . ."

13. Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, entitled "Violations of the laws or customs of war", provides that the Tribunal "shall have the power to prosecute persons violating the laws or customs of war".

14. Article 1 of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that:

> The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994, in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

15. Article 4 of the 1994 ICTR Statute, entitled "Violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II", provides that the Tribunal "shall have the power to prosecute persons committing or ordering to be committed serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions . . . and of Additional Protocol II thereto".

16. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. Section 6(1) provides that:

> For the purposes of the present regulation, "war crimes" means:
>
> (a) Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, namely, any of the following acts against persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention: . . .
> (b) Other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict, within the established framework of international law, namely, any of the following acts: . . .
> (c) In the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, serious violations of Article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August

1949, namely, any of the following acts committed against persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention or any other cause: . . .

. . .

(e) Other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts not of an international character, within the established framework of international law, namely, any of the following acts: . . .

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

17. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that "grave breaches are considered as war crimes" and provides a list of grave breaches.[2]

18. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "war crimes are illegal actions relating to the inception or conduct of armed conflict. They may be viewed as any violation of LOAC (either customary or treaty law which is committed by any person)."[3] The manual adds that "war crimes which are directed against protected persons or facilities under the Geneva Conventions or the Additional Protocols fall within two main categories. The more serious violations are termed grave breaches and the less serious are simple breaches."[4]

19. Belgium's Law of War Manual defines as a war crime "any violation of the laws of war . . . or of the laws of the belligerents, during or on the occasion of war". However, it criticises this definition, saying that "it includes not only crimes against peace and against humanity . . . and violations of the laws of war as such . . . but also violations of the internal legislation of the adversary" which, according to the manual, do not necessarily merit being considered as war crimes.[5] It states, therefore, that "it would be preferable to restrict the term 'war crime' to violations that cause outrage to the public conscience owing to their 'brutality', their 'inhuman character' or the wilful refusal to recognise rights of property having no connection with military necessity".[6] Under the heading "Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions", the manual lists a number of war crimes which are clearly defined and listed as "grave breaches" in the Conventions. It refers to Articles 50–51 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV, as well as to Articles 11, 85 and 86 AP I.[7]

20. Canada's LOAC Manual explains that:

Broadly speaking, "war crimes" include all violations of International Law in relation to an armed conflict for which individuals may be prosecuted and punished, including crimes against peace, crimes against humanity and genocide. In the narrow, technical sense "war crimes" are violations of the laws and customs of war.[8]

[2] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[3] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1312; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1302.
[4] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1314; see also Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1304.
[5] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 54.
[6] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[7] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[8] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-1, § 2.

The manual further states that:

The term "war crime" in its narrower meaning is a technical expression for a violation of the laws or customs of war. This includes:

a. grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions or Additional Protocols to the Geneva Conventions;
b. violations of the Hague Conventions; and
c. violations of the customs of war.[9]

At the end of the section dealing with "War crimes in the narrow sense", which lists "Grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions", "Grave breaches of Additional Protocol I" and "Violations of [the] Hague Conventions and customary law", the manual also states that "the fact that a particular act is not listed here as a war crime does not preclude its being treated as a war crime if it is a violation of the laws and customs of war (LOAC)".[10] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual notes that "when AP II was adopted, States refused to make violations of its provisions criminal offences".[11] It adds that "today, however, many provisions of AP II are nevertheless recognized under customary International Law as prohibitions that entail individual criminal responsibility when breaches are committed during internal armed conflicts"[12] and that "violations of many provisions of AP II committed by individual members of a party to an internal conflict are thus criminal offences under International Law".[13]

21. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "grave breaches of IHL committed by the parties to the conflict constitute war crimes or crimes against humanity".[14]

22. Croatia's LOAC Compendium, in a provision entitled "Grave Breaches (War Crimes)", contains a list of punishable acts ("among others").[15]

23. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that:

War crimes are defined as those acts which violate the law of armed conflict, that is, the rules established by customary and conventional international law regulating the conduct of warfare, and which have been generally recognized as war crimes. Acts constituting war crimes may be committed by the armed forces of a belligerent or by individuals belonging to the civilian population.[16]

24. France's LOAC Summary Note gives a detailed list of war crimes and provides that "grave breaches of the law of war are war crimes".[17]

[9] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-2, § 8.
[10] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-4, § 22.
[11] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-5, § 42.
[12] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-5, § 43.
[13] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-5, § 44.
[14] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 31.
[15] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 56.
[16] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5.
[17] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.

25. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that "every grave breach of the rules of the law of armed conflicts represents a war crime."[18]
26. France's LOAC Manual, under the heading "War crimes", cites, inter alia, Article 212(1) of the French Penal Code (which provides for life imprisonment for such acts as deportation, enslavement, massive and systematic summary executions, abductions of persons followed by their disappearance, torture and inhuman acts) and Article 75 AP I. It also refers to Articles 41 and 56 of the 1907 HR, Articles 3, 49 and 50 GC I, Articles 3, 50 and 51 GC II, Articles 3, 80–88, 105–108, 129 and 130 GC III, Articles 3, 146 and 147 GC IV and Articles 11, 75 and 85 AP I. The manual further states that:

> Article 8 of the [1998 ICC Statute] defines as war crimes "grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, [committed] against persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention" and "grave breaches of the laws and customs of war in an international or non-international armed conflict".[19]

27. Germany's Military Manual provides a list of grave breaches ("in particular") of IHL.[20]
28. Hungary's Military Manual, in a provision entitled "Grave Breaches (War Crimes)", contains a list of punishable acts ("among others").[21]
29. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "the violation of the laws and customs of war is termed a 'war crime'".[22]
30. Italy's IHL Manual does not define war crimes as such, but includes a non-exhaustive list of acts that are considered war crimes and/or grave breaches under national and international law.[23] In the section on "Grave breaches of the international Conventions and the Protocols additional thereto", the manual lists, inter alia, "the violation of fundamental guarantees of respect and protection of the person".[24]
31. South Korea's Military Regulation 187 contains a list of war crimes.[25]
32. According to the Military Manual of the Netherlands, a war crime is a violation of the rules of the law of war. The manual uses the term "war crime" both in a broad and in a narrow sense. It explains that war crimes in the broad sense include violations of the laws and customs of war, crimes against peace and crimes against humanity. In the narrow sense, they are defined as violations of the laws and customs of war. As to the difference between war crimes and crimes against humanity, the manual states that crimes against humanity can also be committed outside the context of armed conflict and can be directed against one's own population. Furthermore, the manual recalls that the Geneva

[18] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[19] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 44–46.
[20] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209. [21] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 90.
[22] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 64.
[23] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 84. [24] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 85.
[25] South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), Article 4.2.

Conventions and AP I provide for the distinction between (ordinary) breaches and grave breaches. As to the latter, it states that they must be subject to criminal sanction. According to the manual, grave breaches of treaty law are violations of the most fundamental rules of IHL. In addition, there are ordinary breaches. These concern acts which constitute grave breaches but which lack the intent of the actor or cases in which neither death nor serious bodily injuries are caused. As other examples of such ordinary breaches, the manual lists cases of appropriation of property of POWs, insulting internees and unnecessary damaging of civilian objects. According to the manual, war crimes can also take place by negligence. Lastly, the manual refers to Article 86 AP I, noting the duty to repress grave breaches and to take measures necessary to suppress all other breaches which result from a failure to act when under a duty to do so.[26]

33. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

> The term "war crime" is the generic expression for large and small violations of the laws of warfare, whether committed by members of the armed forces or by civilians. It includes "grave breaches". These are war crimes which are also major violations of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 or of AP I. "War crimes", in the broadest sense, include crimes against peace and crimes against humanity of the type prosecuted before the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg following World War II.[27]

The manual further provides a long list of "grave breaches" and other war crimes.[28] It also states that "the fact that a particular act is not listed in this Manual as a war crime or grave breach does not preclude its being treated as a war crime if it is in breach of any rule of the customary or treaty law of armed conflict".[29] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that:

> Although breaches of AP II would amount to war crimes if committed in international armed conflict, both the governmental and rebel authority should treat them as breaches of the national criminal law, since the law concerning war crimes relates to international armed conflicts.[30]

34. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War states that:

> "War crime" is the technical term for violation of the Laws of war. It includes plotting, incitement or attempt to commit such crimes, as well as participation in the execution of these crimes. Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are considered as serious war crimes when committed against [a number of protected persons and objects listed within the provision].[31]

[26] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. IX-3/IX-6.
[27] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1701(1).
[28] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1702, 1703 and 1704.
[29] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1704(6).
[30] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1824(1).
[31] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6.

35. According to South Africa's LOAC Manual, "any breach of the law of armed conflict is considered a war crime".[32] Referring to AP I, the manual further distinguishes between two separate categories of grave breaches and states that "the first category relates to combat activities and medical experimentation. It requires both willfulness and the death or serious injury to body or health is caused. The second category requires only willfulness."[33] The manual then lists certain acts defined as "grave breaches", stating however, that grave breaches are "not limited" to those listed.[34] Lastly, the manual expressly states that "grave breaches of the law of war are regarded as war crimes".[35]

36. Spain's LOAC Manual contains a list of grave breaches which it considers to be "typified as war crimes". It also states that "grave breaches are considered war crimes" and then sets out a list of acts considered to be grave breaches.[36]

37. Sweden's IHL Manual, in a provision dealing with penal responsibility for violations of IHL, states that:

> The Conventions distinguish between grave breaches and other transgressions. A grave breach in the meaning of the conventions exists where the breach has been directed at persons or property protected by the conventions and has also included any of certain specially listed acts.[37]

38. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "violations of the laws and customs of war, commonly called war crimes, engage the individual responsibility of the persons who committed them as well as the responsibility of the States to which the perpetrators of the violation are nationals".[38] The manual then provides a list of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of AP I.[39]

39. The UK Military Manual states that:

> The term "war crime" is the technical expression for violations of the law of warfare, whether committed by members of the armed forces or by civilians. It has also been customary to describe as war crimes such acts as espionage and so-called war treason which, although not prohibited by international law, are properly liable to punishment by the belligerent against which they are directed. However, the accuracy of the description of such acts as war crimes is doubtful.[40]

The manual identifies a number of offences as war crimes, some of which are listed as grave breaches and some of which, under the heading "Other war crimes", it describes as "examples of punishable violations of the laws of war, or war crimes".[41] Under the same heading, it adds that "similarly, all other [32] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 35. [33] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 36.

[34] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), §§ 37 and 38.
[35] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 41.
[36] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 9.2.a.(2) and 11.8.b.(1).
[37] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 93.
[38] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 191.
[39] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 192 and 193.
[40] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 624.
[41] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 625 and 626.

violations of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions not amounting to 'grave breaches' are also war crimes".[42]

40. The US Field Manual provides that "the term 'war crime' is the technical expression for a violation of the law of war by any person or persons, military or civilian. Every violation of the law of war is a war crime."[43] It then states that "conspiracy, direct incitement, and attempts to commit, as well as complicity in the commission of, ... war crimes are punishable".[44] The manual further provides a list of "Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 as War Crimes"[45] and a list of "Other Types of War Crimes" which it describes as being "representative of violations of the law of war ("war crimes)".[46]

41. The US Air Force Pamphlet emphasises the importance of criminal intent as an element of any war crime.[47]

42. The US Instructor's Guide provides that "under the Geneva Conventions the most serious offenses are called grave breaches of the law of war".[48]

43. The US Naval Handbook provides that:

> War crimes are defined as those acts which violate the law of armed conflict, that is, the rules established by customary and conventional international law regulating the conduct of warfare, and which have been generally recognized as war crimes. Acts constituting war crimes may be committed by the armed forces of a belligerent or by individuals belonging to the civilian population.[49]

The Handbook then provides a list of acts which it characterizes as "representative war crimes".[50]

National Legislation

44. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice, after listing various more precisely defined violations of the LOAC, provides that it is an offence > in the event of an armed conflict, to commit or order to commit any other breaches or acts contrary to the provisions of international treaties to which [Argentina] is a party, with regard to the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick or shipwrecked, the treatment owed to prisoners of war, the protection of the civilian population and of cultural objects.[51]

45. Australia's War Crimes Act considers that:

> Unless the contrary intention appears, ...
> "war crime" means –
> (a) a violation of the laws and usages of war; or > (b) any war crime within the instrument of appointment of the Board of Inquiry [set up to investigate war crimes committed by enemy subjects]

[42] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626.
[43] US, Field Manual (1956), § 499; see also Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-183.
[44] US, Field Manual (1956), § 500.
[45] US, Field Manual (1956), § 502.
[46] US, Field Manual (1956), § 504.
[47] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(c).
[48] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 13.
[49] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[50] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[51] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 296, introducing a new Article 880 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).

committed in any place whatsoever, whether within or beyond Australia, during any war.[52]

46. Australia's War Crimes Act as amended, under the heading "War crimes", states that:

(1) A serious crime is a war crime if it was committed:
  (a) in the course of hostilities in a war;
  (b) in the course of an occupation;
  (c) in pursuing a policy associated with the conduct of a war or with an occupation; or
  (d) on behalf of, or in the interests of, a power conducting a war or engaged in an occupation.
(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), a serious crime was not committed:
  (a) in the course of hostilities in a war; or
  (b) in the course of an occupation;
  merely because the serious crime had with the hostilities or occupation a connection (whether in time, in time and place, or otherwise) that was only incidental or remote.
(3) A serious crime is a war crime if it was:
  (a) committed:
    (i) in the course of political, racial or religious persecution; or
    (ii) with intent to destroy in whole or in part a national, ethnic, racial or religious group, as such; and
  (b) committed in the territory of a country when the country was involved in a war or when territory of the country was subject to an occupation.
(4) Two or more serious crimes together constitute a war crime if:
  (a) they are of the same or a similar character;
  (b) they form, or are part of, a single transaction or event; and
  (c) each of them is also a war crime by virtue of either or both of subsections (1) and (3).[53]

47. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides for punishment, inter alia, in case of war crimes (Article 57) and contains provisions criminalising: the use of "mercenaries" (Article 114); "violations of [the] laws and customs of war" (Article 115); "violations of the norms of international humanitarian law in time of armed conflict" (Article 116); "negligence or giving criminal orders in time of armed conflict" (Article 117); "pillage" (Article 118); and "abuse of protected signs" (Article 119). In a remark relating to the part entitled "War crimes", the Code states that "any of [the] acts considered in the present part and committed with regard to [the] planning, preparation, beginning or conduct of hostilities during either international or internal armed conflict, are considered as war crimes".[54]

48. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act, under a norm providing for the punishment of prohibited acts, lists "war crimes: namely, violation of laws or customs of war which include, but are not limited to . . . [a list of [52] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3.

[53] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Section 7.
[54] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 57 and 114–119 and remark 1 relating to Part 17.

offences]". The Act also provides for the punishment of the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" and "any other crimes under international law".[55]

49. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended states that:

The grave breaches listed below which cause injury or damage, by act or omission, to persons or objects protected by the Conventions signed at Geneva on 12 August 1949 and approved by the Act of 3 September 1952, and by Protocols I and II additional to those Conventions adopted at Geneva on 8 June 1977 and approved by the Act of 16 April 1986, shall – without prejudice to the criminal provisions applicable to other breaches of the Conventions referred to in the present Act and without prejudice to criminal provisions applicable to breaches committed out of negligence – constitute crimes under international law and be punishable in accordance with the provisions of the present Act.[56]

50. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that:

As war crimes are considered:

A. Grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions . . . which means any of the acts listed hereafter if they aim at persons or objects protected by the provisions of the Geneva Conventions . . .
B. Other grave breaches of the laws and customs applicable to international armed conflicts within the framework established by international law . . .
C. In case of armed conflict which is not of an international nature, the grave breaches of common article 3 of the four Geneva Conventions, which means any of the acts listed hereunder committed against persons who do not directly participate in the hostilities, including the members of the armed forces who have laid down their weapons and persons who have been placed hors de combat because of sickness, wounds, detention or any other reason . . .
D. Other grave breaches of the laws and customs applicable to armed conflicts which are not of an international nature within the framework established by international law.[57]

51. Canada's Criminal Code states that:

"War crime" means an act or omission that is committed during an international armed conflict, whether or not it constitutes a contravention of the law in force at the time and in the place of its commission, and that, at that time and in that place, constitutes a contravention of the customary international law or conventional international law applicable in international armed conflicts.[58]

52. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act defines a war crime as:

[55] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(d), (e) and (f).
[56] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3).
[57] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4.
[58] Canada, Criminal Code (1985), Article 3.76.

an act or omission committed during an armed conflict that, at the time and in the place of its commission, constitutes a war crime according to customary international law or conventional international law applicable to armed conflicts, whether or not it constitutes a contravention of the law in force at the time and in the place of its commission.[59]

53. Chile's Code of Military Justice, under the heading "Treason, espionage and offences against the sovereignty and external security of the State", provides a list of certain crimes directed against specific protected persons and objects, including misuse of the red cross flag and emblem in times of war.[60]

54. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals contains a list of offences regarded as war crimes and provides for the punishment of "other acts violating the law or usages of war, or acts whose cruelty or destructiveness exceeds their military necessity, forcing people to do things beyond their obligation, or acts hampering the exercise of legal rights".[61]

55. According to the DRC Code of Military Justice as amended, war crimes are "all offences against the laws of the Republic which are not justified by the laws and customs of war".[62]

56. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act states that:

By "war crimes" is meant:

a) grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949;
b) other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict, within the established framework of international law;
c) serious violations of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949;
d) other serious violations recognised as being applicable to armed conflicts not representing an international character, within the established framework of international law.[63]

57. Estonia's Penal Code states that:

(1) Offences committed in times of war which are not provided for under this section [dealing with war crimes] are punishable on the basis of other provisions of the special part of this Code.
(2) A person who has committed an offence provided for under this section shall be punished only for the commission of a war crime even if the offence comprises the necessary elements of other offences provided for in the special part of this Code.[64]

[59] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Sections 4 and 6.
[60] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Articles 261–264.
[61] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3.
[62] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 502.
[63] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[64] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 94.

58. According to the Report on the Practice of Ethiopia, acts which, in the meaning of Ethiopia's Penal Code, constitute "war crimes in the context of [an] international armed conflict would also be crimes in the context of [an] internal armed conflict".[65]

59. Finland's Revised Penal Code provides that:

A person who in an act of war

1) uses a prohibited means of warfare or weapon;
2) abuses an international symbol designated for the protection of the wounded or the sick; or
3) otherwise violates the provisions of an international agreement on warfare binding on Finland or the generally acknowledged and established rules and customs of war under public international law shall be sentenced for a war crime.[66] [emphasis in original]

60. France's Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes, relating to offences committed during the Second World War, provided for the prosecution of:

Enemy nationals or non-French agents . . . guilty of crimes or offences committed since the opening of hostilities either in France or in a territory under French authority, either against a French national or a person protected by France, a soldier serving or having served under the French flag, a stateless person residing on French territory . . . or a refugee on French territory, or to the prejudice of the property of any of these persons mentioned above and of any French legal entity, provided that these offences, even if committed at the occasion or under the pretext of the state of war, are not justified by the laws and customs of war.[67]

61. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law defines war crimes as:

murder, ill-treatment or deportation to forced labour or for any other purpose of the civilian population of or in occupied territory; murder or ill-treatment of prisoners of war or persons on the seas; killing of hostages; plunder of public or private property; wanton destruction of cities, towns or villages; and devastation not justified by military necessity.[68]

62. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code contains a list of acts which it considers to be "war crimes" and which are committed "in times of armed conflict", emphasizing that "the provisions of [the part on war crimes] will apply to civilians who commit any war crime".[69]

63. Latvia's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of "the committing of war crimes, that is, of violating provisions and customs regarding the conduct

[65] Report on the Practice of Ethiopia, 1998, Chapter 6.4.
[66] Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Section 1.
[67] France, Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes (1944), Article 1.
[68] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b).
[69] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Articles 41 and 44.

of war forbidden by international agreements binding upon the Republic of Latvia".[70]

64. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon provides a list of punishable acts, some of which it describes as "grave breaches committed against protected persons or protected objects . . . considered to be war crimes" (Article 146(1)–(8)). Other offences in the list "are considered to be war crimes when committed wilfully and causing death or serious injury to body or health" (Article 146(9)–(14)) or "considered to be war crimes when committed wilfully and in violation of the [Geneva] Conventions or [AP I]" (Article 146(15–20)).[71]

65. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches criminalises and identifies as "international law crimes" the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[72]

66. Moldova's Penal Code, at the end of a list of punishable acts related to armed conflict, states that:

> The provisions of Articles 389–391 [entitled "Pillage of the dead on the battlefield" (Article 389), "Acts of violence against the civilian population in the area of military hostilities" (Article 390) and "Grave breach of international humanitarian law committed during armed conflict" (Article 391)] also apply to the civilian population.[73]

67. The Extraordinary Penal Law Decree as amended of the Netherlands, relating to offences committed during the Second World War, provided that:

> He who during the time of the . . . war and while in the forces or service of the enemy state is guilty of a war crime or any crime against humanity as defined in Article 6 under (b) or (c) of the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] shall, if such crime contains at the same time the elements of an act punishable according to Netherlands Law, receive the punishment prescribed for such act.
>
> If such crime does not at the same time contain the elements of an act punishable according to the Netherlands law, the perpetrator shall receive the punishment prescribed by Netherlands law for the act with which it shows the greatest similarity.[74]

68. The Decree Instituting the Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes of the Netherlands, relating to offences committed during the Second World War, stated that "under war crimes shall be understood . . . facts which constitute crimes considered as such according to Dutch law and which are forbidden by the laws and customs of war and have been committed during the present war by other than Dutchmen or Dutch subjects".[75]

[70] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Section 74.
[71] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(1)–(8), (9)–(14) and (15)–(20).
[72] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1.
[73] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 393.
[74] Netherlands, Extraordinary Penal Law Decree as amended (1943), Article 27-a.
[75] Netherlands, Decree Instituting the Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes (1945).

69. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands states that "under war crimes are understood acts which constitute a violation of the laws and usages of war committed in time of war by subjects of an enemy power or by foreigners in the service of the enemy".[76]

70. New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act defines war crimes as grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, other serious violations of the laws and customs of war applicable in international armed conflict, serious violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflict not of an international character.[77]

71. Nicaragua's Revised Penal Code provides that a person who during an international war or civil war commits serious violations of international treaties on the use of weapons, the treatment of prisoners or other rules of war, shall be guilty of an offence against the international order.[78]

72. Norway's Act on the Punishment of Foreign War Criminals provided that acts forbidden by Norwegian criminal law which had been committed against Norwegian nationals or interests or in Norway during the Second World War and were in violation of the laws and customs of war could be tried according to Norwegian law.[79]

73. Spain's Penal Code, after listing "crimes against protected persons and objects in the event of an armed conflict", provides that it is an offence > in the event of an armed conflict, to commit or order to commit any other breaches or acts contrary to the provisions of international treaties to which [Spain] is a party, with regard to the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick or shipwrecked, the treatment owed to prisoners of war, the protection of the civilian population and of cultural objects.[80]

74. The UK Regulations for the Trial of War Criminals as amended states that "'war crime' means a violation of the laws and usages of war committed during any war in which His Majesty has been or may be engaged at any time since the 2nd September, 1939".[81]

75. The US War Crimes Act as amended provides that:

> As used in this section the term "war crime" means any conduct –
> (1) defined as a grave breach in any of the [1949 Geneva Conventions], or any protocol to such convention to which the United States is a party;
> (2) prohibited by Article 23, 25, 27, or 28 of the [1907 HR];
> (3) which constitutes a violation of common Article 3 of the [1949 Geneva Conventions], or any protocol to such convention to which the United States is a party and which deals with non-international armed conflict; or [76] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.

[77] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11.
[78] Nicaragua, Revised Penal Code (1997), Article 551.
[79] Norway, Act on the Punishment of Foreign War Criminals (1946).
[80] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 614.
[81] UK, Regulations for the Trial of War Criminals as amended (1945), Regulation 1.

(4) of a person who, in relation to an armed conflict and contrary to the provisions of the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices as amended at Geneva on 3 May 1996 (Protocol II as amended on 3 May 1996), when the United States is a party to such Protocol, willfully kills or causes serious injury to civilians.[82]

National Case-law

76. In its judgement in the Enigster case in 1952, Israel's District Court of Tel Aviv held with respect to the Israeli Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law that "at all events the victims of a war crime must be nationals of an occupied territory, while this is not necessary in the case of a crime against humanity which may be committed against any civilian population". However, it also stated that "true, it is possible to find a man guilty of a war crime even though he is of the population of occupied territory and possesses the same national character as his victims, if his actions show that he identified himself with the Occupant".[83]

77. In the Pilz case in 1949, the Special Criminal Chamber of the District Court of The Hague (Netherlands) and, on appeal in 1950, the Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands agreed that the 1907 HR had not been violated, since the object of the 1907 HR, and in particular of Article 46, was to protect the inhabitants of an enemy-occupied country and not members of the occupying forces. With respect to the 1929 GC, the Special Court of Cassation stated that the 1929 GC only protected members of an army against acts by members of the opposing army. Therefore, the acts of a German military doctor with respect to an escaping member of the German army did not constitute war crimes, but were crimes in the domestic sphere of German military law and jurisdiction.[84]

78. In a number of post-Second World War decisions, UK and US courts held that war crimes could be committed by civilians. The cases included prosecutions against the staff of a State sanatorium for the extermination of civilians deported from occupied territories; officials of companies which supplied the gas used for the extermination of concentration camp detainees; and high-ranking officials in private corporations for, inter alia, deportation of the civilian populations of occupied territories to slave labour and plunder of public and private property in occupied territories. For example, in the Flick case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that:

Acts adjudged criminal when done by an officer of the government are criminal also when done by a private individual. The guilt differs only in magnitude, not in quality. The offender in either case is charged with personal wrong and punishment

[82] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[83] Israel, District Court of Tel Aviv, Enigster case, Judgement, 4 January 1952.
[84] Netherlands, District Court of The Hague (Special Criminal Chamber), Pilz case, Judgement, 21 December 1949; Special Court of Cassation, Pilz case, Judgement, 5 July 1950.

falls on the offender in propria persona. The application of international law to individuals is not a novelty.[85]

79. In its judgement in the Leo Handel case in 1985, a US District Court held that:

"War crimes" refers to criminal actions taken against the soldiers or civilians of another country rather than against the defendant's fellow citizens. This limitation on the meaning of "war crimes" is reflected in the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] annexed to the Agreement for the Establishment of an International Military Tribunal.[86] [emphasis in original]

However, the Court also stated that "by contrast, crimes against humanity include 'murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation, and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population'".[87] (emphasis in original)

80. In a written opinion in the Trajković case in 2001, the International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo (FRY) referred to Articles 146 and 147 GC IV and stated that:

The cited provisions of Geneva Convention IV establish that, in general, a person commits a crime of war only if:
(1) during armed conflict, whether or not international,
(2) he commits a prohibited act against a protected person or population.

. . . ICTY jurisprudence makes explicit the third element, a nexus between the armed conflict and the prohibited act.[88]

Other National Practice

81. In 1973, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, the representative of Belgium stated that "with regard to the definition of the concept of war crimes and crimes against humanity, his Government based its position on the Charter of the International Military Tribunal, Nuremberg, and the body of judicial practice to which it had given rise".[89]

82. In an explanatory memorandum submitted in 1992 to the Belgian Senate in the context of the adoption of the Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, it

[85] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Flick case, Judgement of 22 December 1947; see also US, Military Commission in Wiesbaden, Hadamar Sanatorium case, Judgement, 8–15 October 1945, US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krupp case, Judgement, 17 December 1947–30 June 1948, US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case, Judgement, 14 August 1947–29 July 1948 and UK, Military Court at Hamburg, Zyklon B case, Judgement, 1–8 March 1946.

[86] US, District Court, Central District, California, Leo Handel case, Judgement, 31 January 1985.

[87] US, District Court, Central District, California, Leo Handel case, Judgement, 31 January 1985.

[88] SFRY (FRY), International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo, Trajković case, Opinion on Appeals of Convictions, 30 November 2001, Section II(D).

[89] Belgium, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.2022, 9 November 1973, § 40.

was stated that the law reserved the application of other criminal provisions applicable to other breaches of the conventions to which it referred. It further stated that, because of this reservation, "the repression of all violations of the laws and customs of war is covered by 'ordinary' national penal law" insofar as the violations correspond to offences punishable under national (penal) law.[90] An early draft of this law was amended in order to include acts committed in the context of non-international conflicts that corresponded to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I. Among the reasons for the inclusion of acts committed in the context of non-international conflicts, members of the Senate who submitted the amendment mentioned, inter alia, that international law did not prohibit such criminalisation. The amendment was ultimately supported by the Belgian government, which noted that although the proposals "go further than required by the Conventions and Protocols, they remain within the scope of the – admittedly extensive – application of an international instrument ratified by Belgium".[91]

83. The Report on the Practice of Belgium notes that the Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols shows that Belgium believes that the grave breaches aimed at by the Geneva Conventions and AP I are also war crimes when committed in a non-international armed conflict. It further states that the above-mentioned reservation, as well as Belgian practice in the aftermath of the Second World War, when courts, lacking specific legislation in this regard, applied national law to "war crimes", show that it is Belgium's opinio juris that the term "war crime" can be a broader one than the technical term of "grave breach" in the meaning of the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[92]

84. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, the provisions of Chile's Code of Military Justice dealing with certain offences directed against protected persons and objects define what the national law "considers to be crimes of war". The report further states that:

> This definition predates the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and is fundamentally based on the Law of The Hague that originated in the Peace Conferences of 1899 and 1907 . . . The definitions laid down by the Code of Military Justice are understood to form part of customary international law.[93]

[90] Belgium, Senate, Explanatory Memorandum, Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, 1990–1991 Session, Doc. 1317-1, 30 April 1991, p. 6.

[91] Belgium, Senate, Complementary report submitted on behalf of the Commission of Justice, Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, 1991–1992 Extraordinary Session, Doc. 481-5, 22 December 1992, pp. 2 ff.

[92] Report on the Practice of Belgium, 1997, Chapter. 6.5.

[93] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Chapter 6.5.

85. In 1998, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the establishment of an international criminal court, China stated that:

As far as war crimes are concerned, China has doubts about the inclusion of war crimes in domestic armed conflicts in the Court's jurisdiction, because provisions in international law concerning war crimes in such conflicts are still incomplete . . . The definition of war crimes in domestic armed conflicts in the present [Rome] Statute has far exceeded not only customary international law but also the provisions of [AP II].[94]

86. In 1950, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the Nuremberg Principles established by the ILC, France stated that:

The offences listed by the [IMT (Nuremberg)] were based on already existing principles of international law; they were principles "recognized" by the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)], as was stated in the General Assembly resolution, and not principles "laid down" by that charter.

. . . The list of war crimes in article 6(b) of the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] was based on the definitions of traditional international law contained in the Hague Conventions of 1907, the Treaty of Versailles of 1919 and the Geneva Conventions of 1929. Thus, the concept of war crimes as it was recognized in the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] had already existed in 1939.[95]

87. In a speech before the French National Consultative Commission on Human Rights in 1998, the Director of the Legal Department of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs noted with regard to the definition of war crimes to be included in the 1998 ICC Statute that the provisions in the "war crimes" section covered what the French referred to as the laws of war, namely the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols. He added that it was agreed that in practice the Statute would reflect existing law.[96]

88. In 1998, the French National Consultative Commission on Human Rights recommended that:

As regards the definition of war crimes, endorsement must be made [in the 1998 ICC Statute] of the grave breaches of international humanitarian law committed in international as well as in internal armed conflicts, as defined by the Geneva Conventions and their two additional Protocols.[97]

89. In 1998, at the UN Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs declared that "some States are entirely opposed to the idea that the definition

[94] China, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/53/SR.9, 21 October 1998, § 36.

[95] France, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.236, 9 November 1950, §§ 9–10.

[96] France, National Consultative Commission on Human Rights, Statement by the Director of the Legal Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 22 April 1998, p. 3.

[97] France, National Consultative Commission on Human Rights, Opinion on the establishment of an international criminal court, 14 May 1998, § 3.

of war crimes may apply to internal conflicts. But accepting this restriction would be a retrograde step. Here in Rome we must find a workable solution to this problem."[98]

90. In 1993, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Germany stated that:

> Articles 22 and 26 of the draft statute [for an international criminal court] contained criteria for jurisdiction. First, the court would have jurisdiction over the crimes defined in international treaties as set forth in article 22 [containing a list of crimes including, inter alia, genocide, grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I, apartheid and related crimes, crimes against internationally protected persons and hostage-taking and related crimes]. The treaties listed in article 22 covered most of the crimes which called for international prosecution. It was somewhat surprising, however, that the crime of torture as defined in article 1 of the [1984 Convention against Torture] was not included in the list. Second, the court would be competent to try crimes under general international law as stipulated in Article 26(2)(a) of the draft statute [providing for the possibility of special acceptance of jurisdiction by States in respect of other international crimes not covered by Article 22]. The German Government shared the Working Group's concern that the prosecution of certain crimes which were outlawed by international customary law but not covered by article 22 might be excluded from the jurisdiction of the Court. However, the principle nullum crimen sine lege required clarity and precision in the definition of crimes in the statute.[99]

91. The Report on the Practice of Iran notes that, with regard to the Iran–Iraq war, Iran used the terms "violating international law" and "crimes" interchangeably when referring to acts committed in violation of IHL.[100]

92. The Report on the Practice of South Korea refers to the list of war crimes provided for in the Military Regulation 187 and states that "other acts not illustrated here can be classified as war crimes. This means that definitions of war crimes in the Geneva Conventions become customary."[101]

93. The Report on the Practice of the Netherlands, referring to an interview with a legal advisor of the Ministry of Justice of the Netherlands, states that:

> Section 8 of the Criminal Law in Wartime Act [as amended, according to which "violations of the laws and customs of war" are offences] cannot be construed as a definition of war crimes. A violation [of IHL other than a grave breach] has to be as severe as is required for a grave breach in order to be a war crime. The Ministry of Justice does not make a distinction between international and internal armed conflicts regarding the grave breaches regime.[102]

[98] France, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Statement at the Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, Rome, 17 June 1998.

[99] Germany, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/48/SR.19, 27 October 1993, § 4.

[100] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 6.5.

[101] Report on the Practice of South Korea, 1997, Chapter 6.5.

[102] Report on the Practice of the Netherlands, 1997, Interview with a legal advisor at the Ministry of Justice, 18 March 1997, Chapter 6.5.

94. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq, the US reminded Iraq that "under International Law, violations of the Geneva Conventions, the Geneva [Gas] Protocol of 1925, or related International Laws of armed conflict are war crimes".[103]
95. In 1993, during a debate in the UN Security Council following the adoption of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the US stated that:

> It is understood that the "laws and customs of war" referred to in Article 3 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute which aims at the prosecution of "violations of the laws and customs of war] include all obligations under humanitarian law agreements in force in the territory of the former Yugoslavia at the time the acts were committed, including common article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, and the 1977 Additional Protocols to these Conventions.[104]

96. According to the Report on US Practice, the US considers any violation of the law of war a war crime, provided the accused had the requisite criminal intent at the time of his or her participation in the violation. The report adds that conspiracy to violate the laws of war, inciting violations and aiding and abetting violations of the laws of war are also punishable as war crimes.[105]
97. In an order issued in 1991, the YPA Chief of General Staff stated that "war crimes and other grave breaches of norms of law on warfare are serious criminal offences".[106]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

98. In resolutions adopted in 1982 and 1983, the UN Commission on Human Rights declared that "Israel's continuous grave breaches of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War . . . and of the Additional Protocols . . . are war crimes".[107]
99. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted that "there does not appear to be a customary international law applicable to internal armed conflicts which includes the concept of war crimes". Referring to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, AP II and

[103] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, Annex I, p. 2.
[104] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3217, 25 May 1993, p. 15.
[105] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.6.
[106] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Legal Department, Order No. 985-1/91, 3 October 1991, § 2.
[107] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1982/1, 11 February 1982, § 3; Res. 1983/1, 15 February 1983, § 3.

Article 19 of the 1954 Hague Convention, the Commission noted that these provisions did not use the terms "grave breaches" or "war crimes". It added that "the content of customary law applicable to internal armed conflict is debatable", and as a result, "in general, unless the parties to an internal armed conflict agree otherwise, the only offences committed in internal armed conflict for which universal jurisdiction exists are 'crimes against humanity' and genocide, which apply irrespective of the conflicts' classification".[108]

100. In 1993, the ILC Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court commented with regard to Article 22 of the draft statute that "subparagraph (b) of article 22 [which includes grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I in the list of crimes defined by treaties] does not include [AP II] because this protocol contains no provision concerning grave breaches".[109]

Other International Organisations

101. No practice was found.

International Conferences

102. In the working paper on war crimes submitted by the ICRC in 1997 to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court contains lists of "Grave breaches of international humanitarian law applicable in international armed conflicts", "Other serious violations of international law applicable in international armed conflicts" and "Serious violations of international humanitarian law applicable in non-international armed conflicts".[110]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

103. In its judgement in the Akayesu case in 1998, the ICTR stated that:

For the purposes of an international criminal Tribunal which is trying individuals, it is not sufficient merely to affirm that Common Article 3 [of the Geneva Conventions] and parts of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II – which comprise the subject-matter jurisdiction of Article 4 of the [1994 ICTR] Statute – form part of international customary law. Even if Article 6 of the Statute provides for individual criminal responsibility as pertains to Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Statute, it must also be shown that an individual committing serious violations of these customary norms incurs, as a matter of custom, individual criminal responsibility thereby.

[108] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, §§ 42 and 52.

[109] ILC, Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court, Report, Yearbook of the International Law Commission, 1993, Vol. II, Part Two, UN Doc. A/CN.4/SER.A/1993/Add.1 (Part 2), Commentary on Article 22, § 3, p. 107.

[110] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, §§ 1–3.

Otherwise, it might be argued that these instruments only state norms applicable to States and Parties to a conflict, and that they do not create crimes for which individuals may be tried.[111]

104. In its judgement in the Rutaganda case in 1999, the ICTR stated that:

Furthermore, the Trial Chamber in the Akayesu Judgement concluded that violations of these norms would entail, as a matter of customary international law, individual responsibility for the perpetrator. It was also recalled that as Rwanda had become a party to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their 1977 Additional Protocols, on 5 May 1964 and 19 November 1984, respectively, these instruments were in any case in force in the territory of Rwanda in 1994, and formed part of Rwandan law. Thus, Rwandan nationals who violated these international instruments incorporated into national law, including those offences as incorporated in Article 4 of the Statute, could be tried before the Rwandan national courts.[112]

105. In its judgement in the Musema case in 2000, the ICTR stated that:

The Chamber therefore concludes that, at the time the crimes alleged in the Indictment were perpetrated, persons were bound to respect the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their 1977 Additional Protocols, as incorporated in Article 4 of the [1994 ICTR] Statute. Violations thereof, as a matter of custom and convention, attracted individual criminal responsibility and could result in the prosecution of the authors of the offences.[113]

106. In its decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal in the Tadić case in 1995, the ICTY Appeals Chamber, with regard to the expression of the "violations of the laws and customs of war" aimed at in Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, stated that:

A literal interpretation of Article 3 shows that: (i) it refers to a broad category of offences, namely all "violations of the laws or customs of war"; and (ii) the enumeration of some of these violations provided in Article 3 is merely illustrative, not exhaustive.

. . .

Indeed, Article 3, before enumerating the violations, provides that they "shall include but not be limited to" the list of offences. Considering this list in the general context of the Secretary-General's discussion of the [1907 HR] and international humanitarian law, we conclude that this list may be construed to include other infringements of international humanitarian law. The only limitation is that such infringements must not be already covered by Article 2 (lest this latter provision should become superfluous). Article 3 may be taken to cover all violations of international humanitarian law other than the "grave breaches" of the four Geneva Conventions falling under Article 2 (or, for that matter, the violations covered by Articles 4 and 5, to the extent that Articles 3, 4 and 5 overlap).[114] [emphasis in original]

[111] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 611.
[112] ICTR, Rutaganda case, Judgement, 6 December 1999, § 88.
[113] ICTR, Musema case, Judgement, 27 January 2000, § 242.
[114] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 87.

The ICTY Appeals Chamber further stated that:

The Appeals Chamber deems it fitting to specify the conditions to be fulfilled for Article 3 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute relative to "violations of the laws and customs of war"] to become applicable. The following requirements must be met for an offence to be subject to prosecution before the International Tribunal under Article 3:

(i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
(ii) the rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met . . .
(iii) the violation must be "serious", that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim. Thus, for instance, the fact of a combatant simply appropriating a loaf of bread in an occupied village would not amount to a "serious violation of international humanitarian law" although it may be regarded as falling foul of the basic principle laid down in Article 46, paragraph 1, of the Hague Regulations (and the corresponding rule of customary international law) whereby "private property must be respected" by any army occupying an enemy territory;
(iv) the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.

It follows that it does not matter whether the "serious violation" has occurred within the context of an international or an internal armed conflict, as long as the requirements set out above are met.[115]

107. In its judgement in the Tadić case in 1997, the ICTY Trial Chamber, with regard to the expression of the "violations of the laws and customs of war" aimed at in Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, stated that:

610. According to the Appeals Chamber [Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal)], the conditions that must be satisfied to fulfil the requirements of Article 3 of the Statute are:

(i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
(ii) the rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met;
(iii) the violation must be "serious", that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim . . . ; and
(iv) the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.

Those requirements apply to any and all laws or customs of war which Article 3 covers.

611. In relation to requirements (i) and (ii), it is sufficient to note that the Appeals Chamber has held, on the basis of the Nicaragua case, that Common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] satisfies these requirements as part of customary international humanitarian law.

[115] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 94.

612. While, for some laws or customs of war, requirement (iii) may be of particular relevance, each of the prohibitions in Common Article 3: against murder; the taking of hostages; outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment; and the passing of sentences and the carrying-out of executions without previous judgment pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilised peoples, constitute, as the Court put it, "elementary considerations of humanity", the breach of which may be considered to be a "breach of a rule protecting important values" and which "must involve grave consequences for the victim". Although it may be possible that a violation of some of the prohibitions of Common Article 3 may be so minor as to not involve "grave consequences for the victim", each of the violations with which the accused has been charged clearly does involve such consequences.
613. Finally, in relation to the fourth requirement, namely that the rule of customary international humanitarian law imposes individual criminal responsibility, the Appeals Chamber held in the Appeals Chamber Decision that > customary international law imposes criminal liability for serious violations of common Article 3, as supplemented by other general principles and rules on the protection of victims of internal armed conflict, and for breaching certain fundamental principles and rules regarding means and methods of combat in civil strife.

Consequently, this Trial Chamber has the competence to hear and determine the charges against the accused under Article 3 of the Statute relating to violations of the customary international humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts, as found in Common Article 3.[116]

108. In the judgement on appeal in the Tadić case in 1999, the ICTY Appeals Chamber stated with respect to violations committed "against the persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Conventions" that:

Article 4(1) of Geneva Convention IV (protection of civilians), applicable to the case at issue, defines "protected persons" – hence possible victims of grave breaches – as those "in the hands of a Party to the conflict or Occupying Power of which they are not nationals". In other words, subject to the provisions of Article 4(2), the Convention intends to protect civilians (in enemy territory, occupied territory or the combat zone) who do not have the nationality of the belligerent in whose hands they find themselves, or who are stateless persons. In addition, as is apparent from the preparatory work, the Convention also intends to protect those civilians in occupied territory who, while having the nationality of the Party to the conflict in whose hands they find themselves, are refugees and thus no longer owe allegiance to this Party and no longer enjoy its diplomatic protection.[117]

109. In the judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber, as regards Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, referred to the decision in the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) and stated that:

[116] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement, 7 May 1997, §§ 610–613.
[117] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement on Appeal, 15 July 1999, § 164.

279. The Appeals Chamber, in its discussion of Article 3, proceeded further to enunciate four requirements that must be satisfied in order for an offence to be considered as within the scope of this Article. These requirements are the following:

(i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
(ii) the rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met (. . .);
(iii) the violation must be "serious", that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim. (. . .);
(iv) the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.

280. This Trial Chamber finds no reason to depart from the position taken by the Appeals Chamber on this matter . . .[118]

110. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber, referring to the Tadić case, stated that:

As interpreted by the Appeals Chamber in the Tadić Jurisdiction Decision, Article 3 [of the 1993 ICTY Statute] has a very broad scope. It covers any serious violation of a rule of customary international humanitarian law entailing, under international customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule. It is immaterial whether the breach occurs within the context of an international or internal armed conflict.[119]

111. In the judgement on appeal in the Delalić case in 2001, the ICTY Appeals Chamber, as regards Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, referred to the decision in the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) and stated that:

131. . . . The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the [UN] Secretary-General's Report and the statements made by State representatives in the [UN] Security Council at the time of the adoption of the Statute . . . clearly support a conclusion that the list of offences listed in Article 3 was meant to cover violations of all of the laws or customs of war, understood broadly, in addition to those mentioned in the Article by way of example . . .
. . .
133. . . . The Appeals Chamber thus confirms the view expressed in the [Tadić case, Judgement on Appeal] that the expression "laws and customs of war" has evolved to encompass violations of Geneva law at the time the alleged offences were committed, and that consequently, Article 3 of the Statute may be interpreted as intending the incorporation of Geneva law rules.[120] [emphasis in original]

112. In its judgement in the Blažkić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber, referring to the Tadić case, stated that:

175. The Prosecution contended that the provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907 constitute international customary rules which were restated in Article 6(b) of the Nuremberg Statute. Violations of these provisions incur the individual criminal responsibility of the person violating the rule. Conversely, the Defence did not acknowledge that violations of the laws or customs of war within the meaning of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions had ever been upheld to impose criminal sanctions upon individuals.

[118] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 279–280.
[119] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 132.
[120] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement on Appeal, 2 February 2001, §§ 131 and 133.

176. The Trial Chamber recalls that violations of Article 3 of the Statute which include violations of the Regulations of The Hague and those of Common Article 3 are by definition serious violations of international humanitarian law within the meaning of the Statute. They are thus likely to incur individual criminal responsibility in accordance with Article 7 of the Statute. The Trial Chamber observes moreover that the provisions of the criminal code of the SFRY, adopted by Bosnia-Herzegovina in April 1992, provide that war crimes committed during internal or international conflicts incur individual criminal responsibility. The Trial Chamber is of the opinion that, as was concluded in the Tadić Appeal Decision, customary international law imposes criminal responsibility for serious violations of Common Article 3.[121]

113. In the judgement in the Kunarac case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber, as regards Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, referred to the decision in the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) and stated that:

The Appeals Chamber in the Jurisdiction Decision further identified four requirements specific to Article 3:

(i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law; (ii) the rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met [. . .]; (iii) the violation must be "serious", that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values , and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim. [. . .]; (iv) the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.[122]

114. In the judgement in the Kvočka case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber, as regards Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, stated that:

For a successful prosecution under Article 3:

(i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
(ii) the rule must be customary in nature, or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met;
(iii) the violation must be serious, that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim;
(iv) the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.[123]

[121] ICTY, Blažkić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, §§ 175–176.
[122] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, § 403.
[123] ICTY, Kvočka case, Judgement, 2 November 2001, § 123.

115. In the judgement in the Krnojelac case in 2002, the ICTY Trial Chamber, with regard to the expression of the "violations of the laws and customs of war" aimed at in Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, stated that:

> In addition, four requirements specific to Article 3 must be satisfied, namely,
>
> (i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a Rule of international humanitarian law; (ii) the Rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met [. . .]; (iii) the violation must be "serious", that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a Rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim. [. . .]; (iv) the violation of the Rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.[124]

116. In the judgement in the Vasiljević case in 2002, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

> In addition, there are four conditions which must be fulfilled before an offence may be prosecuted under Article 3 of the Statute:
>
> (i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
> (ii) the rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met;
> (iii) the violation must be serious, that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim; and
> (iv) the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.[125]

117. In the judgement in the Naletilić case in 2003, the ICTY Trial Chamber, as regards Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, stated that:

> In view of the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, the Chamber must be satisfied of four additional requirements:
>
> (i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
> (ii) the rule must be customary in nature, or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met;
> (iii) the violation must be serious, that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim;
> (iv) the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.[126]

118. In the judgement in the Stakić case in 2003, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

[124] ICTY, Krnojelac case, Judgement, 15 March 2002, § 52.
[125] ICTY, Vasiljević case, Judgement, 29 November 2002, § 26.
[126] ICTY, Naletilić case, Judgement, 31 March 2003, § 226.

As argued by the parties, in addition to the requirements common to Articles 3 and 5 of the Statute, four additional requirements specific to Article 3 must be satisfied in respect of the crime of murder as a violation of the laws or customs of war:

> The violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
> The rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met [. . .];
> The violation must be "serious", that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim [. . .];
> The violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual responsibility of the person breaching the rule.[127]

119. In the judgement in the Galić case in 2003, the ICTY Trial Chamber, as regards Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, referred to the decision in the Tadić case (Interlocutory Appeal) and stated that:

According to the same Appeals Chamber Decision, for criminal conduct to fall within the scope of Article 3 of the Statute, the following four conditions ("the Tadić conditions") must be satisfied:

(i) the violation must constitute an infringement of a rule of international humanitarian law;
(ii) the rule must be customary in nature or, if it belongs to treaty law, the required conditions must be met;
(iii) the violation must be "serious", that is to say, it must constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim; and
(iv) the violation must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.

The Tadić conditions limit the jurisdiction of the Tribunal to violations of the laws or customs of war that are at once recognized as criminally punishable and are "serious" enough to be dealt with by the Tribunal.[128]

120. In its judgement in the Kordić and Čerkez case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber, referring to the Tadić case, stated that:

168. As to the argument that Additional Protocol I does not entail individual criminal responsibility, the Trial Chamber recalls a statement in the Tadić Jurisdiction Decision:

> Faced with similar claims with respect to the various agreements and conventions that formed the basis of its jurisdiction, the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg concluded that a finding of individual criminal responsibility is not barred by the absence of treaty provisions on punishment of breaches . . . because, as the Nuremberg Tribunal concluded "[c]rimes against international law are committed by men, not by abstract entities, and only by punishing individuals who commit such crimes can the provisions of international law be enforced."

[127] ICTY, Stakić case, Judgement, 31 July 2003, § 580.
[128] ICTY, Galić case, Judgement, 5 December 2003, § 11.

The Appeals Chamber in that case had no difficulty in finding that customary law "imposes criminal liability for serious violations of Common Article 3" of the Geneva Conventions, an article that contains no reference to individual responsibility. This finding was reaffirmed by the Appeals Chamber in [Delalić].
169. By analogy, violations of Additional Protocol I incur individual criminal liability in the same way that violations of Common Article 3 give rise to individual criminal liability.[129]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

121. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "grave breaches of the law of war are regarded as war crimes. They shall be repressed by penal sanctions." Delegates also teach that "other breaches of the law of war shall be repressed by disciplinary or penal sanctions".[130]
122. The ICRC Commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention states that "the Geneva Conventions form part of what are generally called the laws and customs of war, violations of which are commonly called 'war crimes'".[131]

VI. Other Practice

123. No practice was found.

B. Jurisdiction over War Crimes

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
124. Article VI of the 1948 Genocide Convention provides that:

Persons charged with genocide or any of the other acts enumerated in Article III shall be tried by a competent tribunal of the State in the territory of which the act was committed, or by such international penal tribunal as may have jurisdiction with respect to those Contracting Parties which shall have accepted its jurisdiction.

125. Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV provide that:

The High Contracting Parties undertake to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing, or odering to be committed, any of the grave breaches of the present Convention defined in the following Article.

[129] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, §§ 168–169.
[130] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 775 and 780.
[131] Jean S. Pictet (ed.), Commentary on the Fourth Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1958, p. 583.

Each High Contracting Party shall be under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed [grave breaches of 1949 Geneva Conventions], and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts. It may also, if it prefers, and in accordance with the provisions of its own legislation, hand such persons over for trial to another High Contracting Party concerned, provided such High Contracting Party has made out a prima facie case.

126. Article 28 of the 1954 Hague Convention provides that:

The High Contracting Parties undertake to take, within the framework of their ordinary criminal jurisdiction, all necessary steps to prosecute and impose penal or disciplinary sanctions upon those persons, of whatever nationality, who commit or order to be committed a breach of the present Convention.

127. Article 85(1) AP I incorporates the provisions set forth in the second paragraph of Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV by reference. Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[132]

128. Article 5 of the 1984 Convention against Torture provides that:

Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in article 4 in the following cases:

(a) When the offences are committed in any territory under its jurisdiction or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State;
(b) When the alleged offender is a national of that State;
(c) When the victim is a national of that State if that State considers it appropriate.

Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over such offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in any territory under its jurisdiction and it does not extradite him pursuant to article 8 to any of the States mentioned in paragraph 1 of this article.[133]

129. Article 10 of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel provides that:

1. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the crimes set out in article 9 [Crimes against United Nations and associated personnel] in the following cases:
   (a) When the crime is committed in the territory of that State or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State;
   (b) When the alleged offender is a national of that State.
2. A State Party may also establish its jurisdiction over any such crime when it is committed:
   (a) By a stateless person whose habitual residence is in that State; or
   (b) With respect to a national of that State; or
   (c) In an attempt to compel that State to do or to abstain from doing any act.

...

[132] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

[133] Similar requirements to prosecute or extradite are also found in Article IV of the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and numerous conventions for the prevention of terrorism.

4. Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the crimes set out in article 9 [Crimes against United Nations and associated personnel] in cases where the alleged offender is present in its territory and it does not extradite such person pursuant to article 15 [Extradition of alleged offenders] to any of the States Parties which have established their jurisdiction in accordance with paragraph 1 or 2.

130. Article IV of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons provides that:

The acts constituting the forced disappearance of persons shall be considered offenses in every State Party. Consequently, each State Party shall take measures to establish its jurisdiction over such cases in the following instances:

a. When the forced disappearance of persons or any act constituting such offense was committed within its jurisdiction;
b. When the accused is a national of that state;
c. When the victim is a national of that state and that state sees fit to do so.

Every State Party shall, moreover, take the necessary measures to establish its jurisdiction over the crime described in this Convention when the alleged criminal is within its territory and it does not proceed to extradite him.

131. Article 15(2) of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons states that:

This Convention shall not apply to the international armed conflicts governed by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Protocols, concerning protection of wounded, sick, and shipwrecked members of the armed forces; and prisoners of war and civilians in time of war.

132. Article 14 of the 1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW provides that:

(1) Each High Contracting Party shall take all appropriate steps, including legislative and other measures, to prevent and suppress violations of this Protocol by persons on territory under its jurisdiction and control.
(2) The measures envisaged in paragraph 1 of this Article include appropriate measures to ensure the imposition of penal sanctions against persons who, in relation to an armed conflict and contrary to the provisions of this Protocol, wilfully kill or cause serious injury to civilians and to bring such persons to justice.

133. Article 9 of the 1997 Ottawa Convention provides that:

Each State Party shall take all appropriate legal, administrative and other measures, including the imposition of penal sanctions, to prevent and suppress any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention undertaken by persons on territory under its jurisdiction or control.

134. The preamble to the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

Affirming that the most serious crimes of concern to the international community as a whole must not go unpunished and that their effective prosecution must be ensured by taking measures at the national level and by enhancing international co-operation,

...

Recalling that it is the duty of every State to exercise its criminal jurisdiction over those responsible for international crimes.

135. Article 12 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

1. A State which becomes a Party to this Statute thereby accepts the jurisdiction of the Court with respect to the crimes referred to in article 5.
2. In the case of article 13, paragraph (a) or (c), the Court may exercise its jurisdiction if one or more of the following States are Parties to this Statute or have accepted the jurisdiction of the Court in accordance with paragraph 3:
   (a) The State on the territory of which the conduct in question occurred or, if the crime was committed on board a vessel or aircraft, the State of registration of that vessel or aircraft;
   (b) The State of which the person accused of the crime is a national.
3. If the acceptance of a State which is not a Party to this Statute is required under paragraph 2, that State may, by declaration lodged with the Registrar, accept the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court with respect to the crime in question. The accepting State shall cooperate with the Court without any delay or exception in accordance with Part 9.

136. Article 13 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

The Court may exercise its jurisdiction with respect to a crime referred to in article 5 in accordance with the provisions of this Statute if:

(a) A situation in which one or more of such crimes appears to have been committed is referred to the Prosecutor by a State Party in accordance with article 14;
(b) A situation in which one or more of such crimes appears to have been committed is referred to the Prosecutor by the Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations; or
(c) The Prosecutor has initiated an investigation in respect of such a crime in accordance with article 15.

137. Upon signature of the 1998 ICC Statute, Egypt declared that "no war criminal shall escape justice or escape prosecution in other legal jurisdictions".[134]

138. Article 15(2) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention concerning "Serious violations of this Protocol", which, according to its Article 22(1), also applies to armed conflicts not of an international character, provides that:

Each Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences set forth in this Article [serious violations of the Protocol] and to make such offences punishable by appropriate penalties. When doing so, Parties shall comply with general principles of law and international law, including the rules extending individual criminal responsibility to persons other than those who directly commit the act.

[134] Egypt, Declarations made upon signature of the ICC Statute, 26 December 2000, § 5.

139. Article 16(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention concerning "Jurisdiction" provides that:

Without prejudice to paragraph 2, each Party shall take the necessary legislative measures to establish its jurisdiction over offences set forth in Article 15 in the following cases:
(a) when such an offence is committed in the territory of that State;
(b) when the alleged offender is a national of that State;
(c) in the case of offences set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs (a) to (c), when the alleged offender is present in its territory.

Other Instruments

140. Article 8 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Establishment of jurisdiction", provides that:

Without prejudice to the jurisdiction of an international criminal court, each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the crimes set out in articles 17, 18, 19 and 20 [i.e. genocide, crimes against humanity, crimes against UN and associated personnel and war crimes], irrespective of where or by whom those crimes were committed. Jurisdiction over the crime set out in article 16 [i.e. crime of aggression] shall rest with an international criminal court. However, a State referred to in article 16 is not precluded from trying its nationals for the crime set out in that article.

141. Section 4 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "in cases of violations of international humanitarian law, members of the military personnel of a United Nations force are subject to prosecution in their national courts".

142. Article 5 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

[To fulfil their duty to prosecute persons alleged to have committed violations of international human rights and international humanitarian law norms that constitute crimes under international law, to punish perpetrators adjudged to have committed these violations, and to cooperate with and assist States and appropriate international judicial organs in the investigation and prosecution of these violations under Article 4 of the same instrument], States shall incorporate within their domestic law appropriate provisions providing for universal jurisdiction over crimes under international law and appropriate legislation to facilitate extradition or surrender of offenders to other States and to international judicial bodies and to provide judicial assistance and other forms of cooperation in the pursuit of international justice, including assistance to and protection of victims and witnesses.

143. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and torture. Section 2 provides that:

2.1 With regard to the serious criminal offences listed under Section [10(1)(a), (b), (c) and (f)] of UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/11 [i.e. genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and torture] . . . the panels shall have universal jurisdiction.
2.2 For purposes of the present regulation, "universal jurisdiction" means jurisdiction irrespective of whether:
(a) the serious criminal offence at issue was committed within the territory of East Timor;
(b) the serious criminal offence was committed by an East Timorese citizen; or
(c) the victim of the serious criminal offence was an East Timorese citizen.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

144. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that:

War crimes jurisdiction is universal. This means that any nation may prosecute any person who is suspected of committing a major war crime and no statute of limitations applies for such prosecutions. Trial of a suspected war criminal may take place at any time that the individual is located or evidence of a war crimes commission is unearthed. Australia has vested its war crime jurisdiction in the State Supreme Courts . . .

Where there is widespread evidence of war crimes having been committed, the international community may elect to establish a world forum or war crimes tribunal to conduct trials. The Nuremberg and Tokyo war crimes tribunals conducted after WW II are examples of this approach.[135]

145. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that:

The States signatory to the [1949 Geneva] Conventions undertook to take a series of measures to promote respect thereof.

These measures can be summarised as follows:

. . .

3) search for, identification of and prosecution by the national courts of the authors of grave breaches, regardless of their nationality, or delivery (extradition) of those authors to the State asking for them, within the limits of the legislation in force.[136]

146. Canada's LOAC Manual states that:

If a breach [of GC III] amounts to a grave breach all persons responsible therefor, or having ordered such acts, shall, regardless of their nationality, be liable to be tried by any party to [GC III]. They may also be handed over by the latter for trial by any other party to [GC III] able to prosecute effectively.[137]

[135] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), §§ 1307–1308.
[136] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[137] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-6, § 52.

The manual further provides that:

The Criminal Code of Canada contains several provisions that allow Canadian courts to assume jurisdiction over and try alleged war criminals in a wide variety of circumstances.

. . . Any state into whose hands a person who has allegedly committed a grave breach falls is entitled to institute criminal proceedings, even though that state was neutral during the conflict in which the offence was alleged to have been committed.[138]

147. Ecuador's Naval Manual states that "international law . . . provides that belligerent States have the right to punish enemy armed forces personnel and enemy civilians who fall under their control for such offences".[139]

148. France's LOAC Teaching Note, in a part dealing with "grave breaches of the rules of the law of armed conflict", states that:

On the criminal level, persons charged with [grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] may be prosecuted before French judicial courts, but also before foreign courts or international criminal courts having jurisdiction over war crimes: today this means the International Criminal Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda for the crimes committed solely on the occasion of these two conflicts; tomorrow, this will mean . . . the International Criminal Court which will have jurisdiction over all war crimes and crimes against humanity in case of the failure of national tribunals.[140]

149. South Korea's Operational Law Manual states that not only international tribunals but also national military courts or military committees have jurisdiction to try persons accused of committing war crimes. It adds that war crimes which are not punishable under national law remain punishable under the laws of war.[141]

150. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that:

Each country is competent to prosecute and try war crimes, irrespective of the nationality of the perpetrator, or of the country where the war crime was committed or against whose interest it was committed. The rules on extradition of persons suspected of having committed, or ordered the commission of, a war crime are closely connected to the principle of universality . . .

The Criminal Law in Wartime Act [as amended] has not entirely incorporated the principle of universality as foreseen in the law of war treaties. It requires that the Netherlands be involved in an armed conflict (Article 1). A Dutch judge is not competent in case the Netherlands is neutral or not a party to the conflict.[142]

151. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "hostile persons who have committed a war crime and fall into the hands of [our] own troops must be tried".[143]

[138] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), pp. 16-5/16-6, §§ 37–38.
[139] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5.
[140] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[141] South Korea, Operational Law Manual (1996), p. 193, § 4.
[142] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. IX-8 and IX-9.
[143] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-45.

152. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

The [1949 Geneva] Conventions make one further departure of significance. For the first time they provide in treaty form a clear obligation upon States to punish what the Conventions describe as "grave breaches", even if those States are not parties to the conflict, the offenders and the victims not their nationals, and even though the offences were committed outside the territorial jurisdiction of the State concerned. In other words, the Conventions have introduced the concept of universal jurisdiction in so far as grave breaches are concerned, and if the State in question is unwilling to try an offender found within its territory, it is obliged to hand him over for trial to any party to the Convention making out a prima facie case.[144]

The manual also provides that:

Any State into whose hands a person who has allegedly committed a grave breach falls is entitled to institute criminal proceedings, even though the holding State was neutral during the conflict in which the offence was alleged to have been committed. Since 1945, it has been generally accepted that if the holding State is unwilling to institute its own proceedings, it may if it wishes hand the offender over to a claimant State on presentation of prima facie evidence that the alleged offender has committed the offence in question.[145]

In addition, the manual states that:

According to customary international law, war crimes, including grave breaches, may be tried by a military tribunal including officers of forces of States other than that establishing the tribunal, provided those forces may claim to be particularly affected or interested in the trial in question . . .

Such interest would arise if the accused is a member of an allied force, if the victims of the offence are nationals of the State of such force, or if the offence had been committed in the territory of such a State.[146]

153. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "signatory States [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] are required to treat as criminals under domestic law anyone who commits or orders a grave breach [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions]".[147]

154. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "States have the obligation to search for persons accused of having committed, or having ordered to be committed, grave breaches, being obliged to make them appear before their own tribunals, regardless of their nationality".[148]

155. Sweden's IHL Manual states that:

Each state is obliged to search for persons accused of committing or ordering a grave breach and shall bring them, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts. A permitted alternative is to hand over the wanted person to another contracting

[144] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 117.5.
[145] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1711.1.
[146] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1714.1, including footnote 85.
[147] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 35.
[148] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1).

party, provided that this state has an interest in punishing the breach and has made out a prima facie case.[149]

156. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that:

1. Violations of the laws and customs of war must be punished. The guilty persons may be brought either before the courts of their own country or before the courts of the injured State, or before an international tribunal.
2. Each Contracting Party is also bound to search for and prosecute in its own courts persons who have committed grave breaches of the provisions of the law of nations in time of war.[150]

157. The UK Military Manual states that:

Those who commit [acts of marauding], whether civilians who have never been lawful combatants, or persons who have belonged to a military unit, an organised resistance movement or a levée en masse, and have deserted and so ceased to be lawful combatants, are liable to be punished as war criminals. They may be tried and sentenced by the courts of either belligerents.[151]

The manual also provides that:

Charges of war crimes are subject to the jurisdiction of military courts, whether national or international, or of such other courts as the belligerent concerned may determine. With regard to the trial of civilians for "grave breaches" of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions which include the most serious war crimes, jurisdiction can only be conferred upon the ordinary courts of the Power concerned or upon the courts set up by the Occupant. Prisoners of war charged with "grave breaches" and of all other war crimes must be tried by the same courts and in the same manner as in the case of crimes committed whilst in captivity. The courts, whether military or civil, of neutral States may also exercise jurisdiction in respect of war crimes. This jurisdiction is independent of any agreement made between neutral and belligerent States. War crimes are crimes ex jure gentium and are thus triable by the courts of all States . . . British military courts have jurisdictions outside the United Kingdom over war crimes committed not only by members of the enemy armed forces but also by enemy civilians and other persons of any nationality, including those of British nationality or the nationals of allied or neutral States. It is not necessary that the victim of the war crime be a British subject.[152]

The manual further emphasises that "parties [to the 1949 Geneva Conventions] are also bound . . . regardless of their nationality, to bring [persons alleged to have committed grave breaches] to trial in their own courts".[153]

158. The UK LOAC Manual states that "UK courts are entitled to deal with certain violations of the [1949] Geneva Conventions (wherever occurring) under the Geneva Conventions Act 1957".[154]

[149] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 93.
[150] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 198(1) and (2).
[151] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 636.
[152] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 637.
[153] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 639.
[154] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 2, p. 5, § 2(a).

159. The US Field Manual provides that "war crimes are within the jurisdiction of general courts-martial ... military commissions, provost courts, military government courts, and other military tribunals ... of the United States, as well as of international tribunals".[155] The manual adds that:

Each High Contracting Party [to the 1949 Geneva Conventions] shall be under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, ... grave breaches [of the said Conventions] and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts ...

[These] principles ... are declaratory of the obligations of belligerents under customary international law to take measures for the punishment of war crimes committed by all persons, including members of a belligerent's own armed forces ...

The jurisdiction of United States military tribunals in connection with war crimes is not limited to offenses committed against nationals of the United States but extends also to all offenses of this nature committed against nationals of allies and of cobelligerents and stateless persons ...

The United States normally punishes war crimes as such only if they are committed by enemy nationals or by persons serving the interests of the enemy State. Violations of the law of war committed by persons subject to the military law of the United States will usually constitute violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice and, if so, will be prosecuted under that Code. Violations of the law of war committed within the United States by other persons will usually constitute violations of federal or state criminal law and preferably will be prosecuted under such law ... Commanding officers of United States troops must insure that war crimes committed by members of their forces against enemy personnel are promptly and adequately punished.[156]

160. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that:

Domestic tribunals have the competence and, under the grave breaches articles of the [1949] Geneva Conventions, the strict obligation to punish certain violations ... Ad hoc international tribunals, such as those established in Germany and Japan following World War II, did punish individuals for their personal actions violating the law of armed conflict. However, the importance of criminal responsibility ... primarily relates to a state's own efforts to enforce the law of armed conflict with respect to its own armed forces.[157] [emphasis in original]

It further states that:

Within the [1949] Geneva Conventions system, state responsibility to repress breaches is stressed, and no provision is made for international tribunals within the Conventions ...

In the United States, jurisdiction is not limited to offenses against US nationals but extends to offenses against victims of other nationalities. Violations by adversary personnel, when appropriate, are tried as offenses against international law which forms part of the law of the United States. In occupied territories, trials are usually held under occupation law. Trials of such personnel have been held in regular military courts, military commissions, provost courts, military government

[155] US, Field Manual (1956), § 505(d).
[156] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 506(a) and (b) and 507(a) and (b).
[157] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-6.

courts, and other military tribunals of the United States, as well as in international tribunals.[158]

161. The US Naval Handbook provides that:

3.11.1 . . . International law generally recognizes five bases for the exercise of criminal jurisdiction: (a) territorial, (b) nationality, (c) passive personality, (d) protective, and (e) universal. It is important to note that international law governs the rights and obligations between nations. While individuals may benefit from the application of that body of law, its alleged violation cannot usually be raised by an individual defendant to defeat a criminal prosecution.
3.11.1.1 Territorial Principle. This principle recognizes the right of a nation to proscribe conduct within its territorial borders, including its internal waters, archipelagic waters, and territorial sea.
3.11.1.1.1 Objective Territorial Principle. This variant of the territorial principle recognizes that a nation may apply its laws to acts committed beyond its territory which have their effect in the territory of that nation . . .
3.11.1.2 Nationality Principle. This principle is based on the concept that a nation has jurisdiction over objects and persons having the nationality of that nation . . . Under the nationality principle a nation may apply its laws to its nationals wherever they may be . . . As a matter of international comity and respect for foreign sovereignty, the United States refrains from exercising that jurisdiction in foreign territory.
3.11.1.3 Passive Personality Principle. Under this principle, jurisdiction is based on the nationality of the victim, irrespective of where the crime occurred or the nationality of the offender . . .
3.11.1.4 Protective Principle. This principle recognizes the right of a nation to prosecute acts which have a significant adverse impact on its national security or governmental functions . . .
3.11.1.5 Universal Principle. This principle recognizes that certain offenses are so heinous and so widely condemned that any nation may apprehend, prosecute and punish that offender on behalf of the world community regardless of the nationality of the offender or victim. Piracy and the slave trade have historically fit these criteria. More recently, genocide, certain war crimes, hostage taking, and aircraft hijacking have been added to the list of such universal crimes.[159]

The Handbook also states that "international law also provides that belligerents have the right to punish enemy armed forces personnel and enemy civilians who fall under their control for [war crimes]".[160] It further states that:

Except for war crimes trials conducted by the Allies after World War II, the majority of prosecutions for violations of the law of armed conflict have been trials of one's own forces for breaches of military discipline. Violations of the law of armed conflict committed by persons subject to the military law of the United States will usually constitute violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice and, if so, will be prosecuted under that Code.

[158] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 15-3(a) and 15-4(a).
[159] US, Naval Handbook (1995), §§ 3.11.1–3.11.1.5.
[160] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.

Although jurisdiction extends to enemy personnel, trials have almost exclusively been against unlawful combatants, such as persons who take part in combat operations without distinguishing themselves clearly from the civilian population during battle or those acting without state sanction for private ends.

In the United States, its territories and possessions, jurisdiction is not limited to offenses against U.S. nationals, but extends to offenses against persons of other nationalities. Violations by enemy nationals may be tried as offenses against international law, which forms part of the law of the United States. In occupied territories, trials are usually held under occupation law. Trials of such personnel have been held in military courts, military commissions, provost courts, military government courts, and other military tribunals.[161]

162. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "the parties to a conflict have a duty . . . to call to account and punish perpetrators [of violations of the laws of war], regardless of their nationality".[162] It adds that:

Persons who commit a war crime or other serious violations of the laws of war shall be brought to justice before their own national courts or, if they fall into enemy hands, before its courts. The perpetrators of such criminal acts may also be brought to justice before an international court if such court is established.[163]

National Legislation

163. Argentina's Code of Military Justice as amended provides that:

When operational troops are on enemy territory, all the inhabitants of the occupied zone are subject to the jurisdiction of the military tribunals, no matter which ordinary crime or offence they are accused of, except if the military authority provides that they are to be prosecuted by the ordinary courts of the occupied zone.[164]

164. Armenia's Penal Code provides that:

Foreign citizens and stateless persons not permanently residing in the Republic of Armenia, who have committed a crime outside the territory of the Republic of Armenia, are subject to criminal liability under the Penal Code of the Republic of Armenia, if they have committed:

(1) such crimes which are provided for in an international treaty of the Republic of Armenia . . .[165]

165. Australia's War Crimes Act as amended gives the Australian courts jurisdiction over persons accused of certain "serious crimes" and "war crimes" committed either within or outside Australia during the Second World War. However, it states that "a person shall not be charged with an offence against this Act unless he or she is: (a) an Australian citizen; or (b) a resident of Australia or of an external Territory".[166]

[161] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.3.
[162] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 18.
[163] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 20.
[164] Argentina, Code of Military Justice as amended (1951), Article 111.
[165] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 15(3).
[166] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Sections 6, 7 and 11.

166. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I committed "in Australia or elsewhere", states that "this section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship".[167]

167. Austria's Penal Code provides that:

The following crimes committed abroad are punished under Austrian criminal law irrespective of the criminal law of the scene of the crime:

. . .

(6) other punishable acts which Austria is under an obligation to punish even when they have been committed abroad, irrespective of the criminal law of the scene of the crime.[168]

168. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that:

12.1. Citizens of the Azerbaijan Republic and stateless persons who permanently reside on the territory of Azerbaijan shall be held criminally responsible under the present Code for an act (action or inaction) committed outside the territory of the Azerbaijan Republic, if this act is considered as a crime by the legislation of the Azerbaijan Republic, as well as by the legislation of the foreign state where the crime was committed and if they have not been tried in a foreign State for this crime.
12.2. Foreigners and stateless persons might be held criminally responsible under the present Code in case of the commission of a crime outside the territory of the Azerbaijan Republic against the citizens of the Azerbaijan Republic, against the interests (advantages) of the Azerbaijan Republic, as well as in cases covered by international treaties to which the Azerbaijan Republic is a party and if they have not been tried in a foreign State for this crime.
12.3. Foreigners and stateless persons who have committed crimes against peace and humanity, war crimes, terrorism, hijacking an aircraft, taking hostages, torture, marine piracy, . . . directing attacks against the persons of international organizations who enjoy international protection, crimes related to radioactive materials, other crimes punishment of which results from the international treaties to which the Azerbaijan Republic is a party, regardless of where the crime was committed, shall be held criminally responsible and punished under the present Code.
12.4. Servicemen of military units of the Armed Forces of the Azerbaijan Republic, being members of the peacekeeping military units, shall be held criminally responsible under the present Code for the crimes committed outside the territory of the Azerbaijan Republic, if not provided for otherwise by the international treaties to which the Azerbaijan Republic is a party.[169]

169. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act provides that:

A Tribunal shall have power to try and punish any person irrespective of his nationality who, being a member of any armed, defence or auxiliary forces commits or has committed in the territory of Bangladesh, whether before or after the commencement of this act, any of the following crimes [crimes against humanity, crimes against peace, genocide, war crimes, "violations of any humanitarian rules

[167] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(3).
[168] Austria, Penal Code (1974), Article 64.
[169] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 12(1)–(4).

applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" or "any other crimes under international law"].[170]

170. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[171]

171. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides for universal jurisdiction for the crime of genocide, crimes against humanity, the use of prohibited means and methods of warfare, violations of the laws and customs of war and grave breaches of IHL, which are included in the special section of the Code, as well as for offences under treaties to which Belarus is a party.[172]

172. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended, which provides for the punishment of genocide (Article 1(1)), crimes against humanity (Article 1(2)) and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols (Article 1(3)), states that "the Belgian courts shall be competent to deal with breaches provided for in the present Act, irrespective of where such breaches have been committed".[173]

173. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina punishes several war crimes and provides that:

> (1) Criminal legislation of the Federation applies to a foreigner who has committed a criminal offence against the Federation or its citizens in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina or abroad, when the offence in question is some other than the one referred to under Article 131 of this Code, provided that he/she is found on the territory of the Federation or has been extradited.
> (2) Criminal legislation of the Federation applies to a foreigner who commits a criminal offence abroad against another country or a foreigner, for which the law of that country prescribes imprisonment for a term of five years or a heavier penalty, provided the perpetrator is found on the territory of the Federation.[174]

The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[175]

174. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> In the case of an offence under this section [i.e. a grave breach in the meaning of Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC and 147 GC IV] committed outside Botswana, a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in Botswana as if the offence had been committed in that place.[176]

[170] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[171] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[172] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 6.
[173] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 7.
[174] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 133 and 154–166.
[175] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 123 and 433–445.
[176] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(2).

175. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended, which contains a section on "Crimes against the Laws and Customs of Waging War" (Articles 410–415), provides that:

(1) the Penal Code shall also apply to foreign citizens who have committed abroad crimes against peace and humanity, whereby the interests of another state or foreign citizens have been affected . . .
(2) the Penal Code shall also apply to other crimes committed by foreign citizens abroad, where this is stipulated in an international agreement, to which the Republic of Bulgaria is a party.[177]

176. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I, provides that:

Where a person is alleged to have committed an offence [in the meaning of Article 50 GC I, Article 51 GC II, Article 130 GC III, Article 147 GC IV or Articles 11 or 85 AP I], proceedings in respect of that offence may, whether or not the person is in Canada, be commenced in any territorial division in Canada and that person may be tried and punished in respect of that offence in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that territorial division.

For greater certainty, any legal requirements that the accused appear at and be present during proceedings and any exceptions to those requirements apply to proceedings commenced in any territorial division pursuant to [the above].[178]

177. Canada's Criminal Code provides that:

Every person who . . . commits an act or omission outside Canada that constitutes a war crime or a crime against humanity and that, if committed in Canada, would constitute an offence against the laws of Canada in force at the time of the act or omission shall be deemed to commit that act or omission in Canada at the time if,

(a) at the time of the act or omission,
  (i) that person is a Canadian citizen or is employed by Canada in a civilian or military capacity,
  (ii) that person is a citizen of, or is employed in a civilian or military capacity by, a state that is engaged in an armed conflict against Canada, or
  (iii) the victim of the act or omission is a Canadian citizen or a citizen of a state that is allied with Canada in an armed conflict; or
(b) at the time of the act or omission, Canada could, in conformity with international law, exercise jurisdiction over the persons with respect to the act or omission on the basis of the person's presence in Canada and, subsequent to the time of the act or omission, the person is present in Canada.[179]

178. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that any person who has committed genocide, war crimes or crimes against humanity within or outside Canada may be prosecuted for such offences if:

[177] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 6(1)–(2).
[178] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(2) and (3).
[179] Canada, Criminal Code (1985), Article 3.71.

(a) at the time the offence is alleged to have been committed,
  (i) the person was a Canadian citizen or was employed by Canada in a civilian or military capacity,
  (ii) the person was a citizen of a state that was engaged in an armed conflict against Canada, or was employed in a civilian or military capacity by such a state,
  (iii) the victim of the alleged offence was a Canadian citizen, or
  (iv) the victim of the alleged offence was a citizen of a state that was allied with Canada in an armed conflict; or
(b) after the time the offence is alleged to have been committed, the person is present in Canada.[180]

179. Chile's Code of Military Justice provides that:

The Military Courts of the Republic have jurisdiction over Chileans and foreigners in order to pass judgement on all matters of military jurisdiction which might arise within the national territory. They also have jurisdiction to try the same matters when they arise outside national territory in the following cases:

1. When they occur within a territory which is militarily occupied by the Chilean armed forces;
2. When they concern offences by soldiers in the course of duty or when undertaking military assignments;
3. When they concern offences against the sovereignty of the State and its external or internal security.[181]

180. Colombia's Penal Code, which criminalises a number of war crimes under the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols, provides that:

The Colombian Penal Code shall apply to: . . .
any foreigner who has committed an offence outside Colombia against a foreigner, as long as the following conditions are met:
(a) that he is present on Colombian territory;
(b) that the crime is punishable in Colombia by a minimum prison sentence of not less than three years;
(c) that the crime is not a political offence; and
(d) that if extradition has been requested, it has not been granted by the Colombian Government.[182]

181. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands, referring to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV as well as to Articles 11(4) and 85(2), (3) and (4) AP I, provides that:

(1) Any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an offence.
. . .
(3) This section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship.[183]

[180] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 8(a)–(b).
[181] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 3.
[182] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Articles 16(6)(a)–(d) and 135–164.
[183] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1) and (3).

182. Costa Rica's Penal Code as amended provides that:

Regardless of the regulations in force in the place where the punishable act is committed and of the nationality of the perpetrator, punishment under Costa Rican law shall be applicable to . . . anyone who commits other punishable acts against human rights covered by treaties signed by Costa Rica or by this Code.[184]

183. Côte d'Ivoire's Code of Military Penal Procedure extends the jurisdiction of military courts to:

crimes and offences not justified by the laws and customs of war committed by foreign nationals and their agents during hostilities and anywhere in the territory of the Republic or zone of military operations, and directed against or to the prejudice of Ivorian nationals, soldiers serving under the national flag, stateless persons or refugees.[185]

184. Cuba's Penal Code grants Cuban courts jurisdiction over, inter alia, crimes against humanity, human dignity or collective health or prosecutable under international treaties regardless of the nationality of the accused or the place where the crimes were committed as long as the acts in question also constitute crimes where they were committed.[186]

185. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act, referring to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV, provides for the prosecution and punishment of "any person who, in spite of nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any serious violation . . . of the [1949] Geneva Conventions". It states that:

In case an offence provided by this Article has been committed outside the Republic, a person may be prosecuted, charged with the offence, be tried and punished anywhere within the territory of the Republic, as if the offence had been committed in this territory; for all purposes relative or relevant to the trial or punishment, the offence is considered being committed in this territory.[187]

186. Cyprus's AP I Act states with respect to "any serious violation of the provisions of the [AP I]" that:

In case an offence provided by this Article has been committed outside the Republic, a person may be prosecuted, charged with the offence, be tried and punished anywhere within the territory of the Republic as if the offence had been committed in this territory; for all purposes relevant to the trial or punishment, the offence is considered being committed in this territory.[188]

187. Denmark's Penal Code provides that:

The following acts committed outside of the territory of the Danish state shall also come within Danish criminal jurisdiction, irrespective of the nationality of the perpetrator:

[184] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 7.
[185] Côte d'Ivoire, Code of Military Penal Procedure (1974), Article 11(1).
[186] Cuba, Penal Code (1987), Article 5(3).
[187] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1) and (2).
[188] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1) and (2).

...

5) where the act is covered by an international convention in pursuance of which Denmark is under an obligation to start judicial proceedings;
6) where transfer of the accused for legal proceedings in another country is rejected, and the act, provided it is committed within the territory recognized by international law as belonging to a foreign state, is punishable according to the law of this state, and provided that according to Danish law the act is punishable with a sentence more severe than one year of imprisonment.[189]

188. Ecuador's Code of Criminal Procedure provides that the following persons fall under the jurisdiction of Ecuador: "Ecuadorians or foreign nationals who commit offences against international law or offences under international conventions or treaties which are in force, provided that such persons have not been prosecuted in another State".[190]

189. El Salvador's Penal Code provides that:

Criminal legislation shall also apply to offences committed by anyone whosoever in a place not subject to Salvadoran jurisdiction, provided that they affect property internationally protected by specific agreements or rules of international law or seriously undermine universally recognised human rights.[191]

190. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides with respect to a range of war crimes that:

Any person who has committed in a foreign country:

(a) an offence against international law or an international offence specified in Ethiopian legislation, or an international treaty or a convention to which Ethiopia has adhered;

...

shall be liable to trial in Ethiopia in accordance with the provisions of this Code and subject to the general conditions mentioned hereinafter... unless he has been prosecuted in the foreign country.[192]

191. Finland's Revised Penal Code, providing for the punishment of "war crimes", "aggravated war crimes" and "petty war crimes",[193] states that:

Finnish law shall apply to an offence committed outside of Finland where the punishability of the act, regardless of the law of the place of commission, is based on an international agreement binding on Finland or on another statute or regulation internationally binding on Finland (international offence).[194]

192. Under France's Code of Military Justice, military tribunals have jurisdiction over acts committed by enemy nationals or any agents in the service of the administration or interests of the enemy on territory under French jurisdiction, or acts committed abroad against French nationals or refugees or stateless persons residing on French territory.[195]

189 Denmark, Penal Code (1978), Article 8(5) and (6).
190 Ecuador, Code of Criminal Procedure (2000), Article 18(6).
191 El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 10.
192 Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 17(a).
193 Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Sections 1–3.
194 Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Section 7.
195 France, Code of Military Justice (1982), Article 70.

193. France's Penal Code provides that:

French criminal law is applicable to any felony committed by a French national outside the territory of the Republic. It is applicable to misdemeanours committed by French nationals outside the territory of the Republic if the conduct is punishable by the legislation of the country where it has been committed. This present article applies even though the accused acquired French nationality subsequent to the conduct imputed to him or her.[196]

194. France's Code of Criminal Procedure provides that:

The authors of and accomplices in offences committed outside the territory of the Republic may be prosecuted and tried in French courts when, pursuant to the provisions of the Criminal Code, Book 1, or of another legislative instrument, French law is applicable or when an international convention gives French courts jurisdiction to deal with the matter.[197]

The Code adds that "pursuant to the international conventions referred to below, any person who renders himself guilty outside the territory of the Republic of any of the offences enumerated in those articles may, if in France, be prosecuted and tried by French courts".[198] The provisions that follow give jurisdiction over persons who violate certain specific treaties.[199]

195. France's Law on Cooperation with the ICTY provides that:

The authors of or accessories to the offences mentioned in Article 1 [serious violations of IHL] can be prosecuted and tried by the French courts, in application of French law, if they are found in France. These provisions apply to attempted offences whenever such attempts are punishable . . . The international tribunal shall be informed of any ongoing proceedings relating to facts that may be of its competence.[200]

France's Law on Cooperation with the ICTR includes a similar provision for the acts of genocide and serious violations of IHL committed in Rwanda.[201]

196. Germany's Criminal Procedure Code as amended, as foreseen by the Law Introducing the International Crimes Code, states with regard to acts committed outside the territorial field of application of this law that:

> (1) . . . The public prosecution office may dispense with prosecuting an offence punishable pursuant to [Article 1] paragraphs 6 to 14 of the [Law Introducing the International Crimes Code] [namely genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes], if the accused is not present in Germany and such presence is not to be anticipated. If . . . the accused is a German, this shall however apply only where the offence is being prosecuted before an international court or by a state on whose territory the offence was committed or whose national was harmed by the offence.

196 France, Penal Code (1994), Article 113(6).
197 France, Code of Criminal Procedure (1994), Article 689.
198 France, Code of Criminal Procedure (1994), Article 689(1).
199 France, Code of Criminal Procedure (1994), Article 689(2)–(7).
200 France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995), Article 2.
201 France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1996), Article 2.

(2) ... The public prosecution office can, in particular, dispense with prosecuting an offence punishable pursuant to [Article 1] paragraphs 6 to 14 of the [Law Introducing the International Crimes Code], if
1. there is no suspicion of a German having committed such offence,
2. such offence was not committed against a German,
3. no suspect in respect of such offence is residing in Germany and such residence is not to be anticipated, and
4. the offence is being prosecuted before an international court or by a state on whose territory the offence was committed, whose national is suspected of its commission or whose national was harmed by the offence.

The same shall apply if a foreigner accused of an offence committed abroad is residing in Germany but the requirements pursuant to the first sentence, numbers 2 and 4, have been fulfilled and transfer to an international court or extradition to the prosecuting state is permissible and intended.[202]

197. Under Germany's Penal Code, German courts have jurisdiction to try persons accused of war crimes, even if committed on the territory of a foreign State, because of an international treaty binding on Germany.[203] Under the Code, German criminal law also applies to the crime of genocide when committed abroad.[204]

198. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides that "this Law shall apply to all criminal offences against international law designated under this Law, to serious criminal offences designated therein even when the offence was committed abroad and bears no relation to Germany".[205]

199. Guatemala's Penal Code provides that Guatemalan criminal law applies to "any offence which, by virtue of a treaty or convention, is punishable in Guatemala, even if the offence is not committed in Guatemalan territory".[206] The Code includes several war crimes as crimes under national law.[207]

200. Guatemala's Code of Criminal Procedure provides that courts and other authorities responsible for trials must fulfil the obligations imposed on them by international treaties in the matter of respect for human rights.[208]

201. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "when an offence under this chapter [i.e. a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions] is committed by any person outside India, he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within India at which he may be found".[209]

202. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I committed by "any person, whatever his or her nationality" and "whether in or outside the State". It further provides for jurisdiction of Irish courts over "minor breaches"

[202] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 3(5); Criminal Procedure Code as amended (1987), § 153(f).
[203] Germany, Penal Code (1998), § 6(9).
[204] Germany, Penal Code (1998), § 6(1).
[205] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1(1).
[206] Guatemala, Penal Code (1973), Article 5(5).
[207] Guatemala, Penal Code (1973), Article 378.
[208] Guatemala, Code of Criminal Procedure (1992), Article 16.
[209] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 4.

of the Geneva Conventions and both Additional Protocols if committed by "any person, whatever his nationality . . . in the State" or by "any citizen of Ireland . . . outside the State".[210]

203. Israel's Penal Law as amended, under Section 16 entitled "Offences against the Law of Nations", states that:

a) The penal laws of Israel shall apply in respect of external offences for the committing of which the State of Israel has undertaken, in multilateral international treaties open to accession, to penalise; this will also apply even where the person committing the offence is not an Israeli citizen or resident, and irrespective of the place of committing of the offence.
b) The qualifications specified in Section 14(b)(2) and (3), and (c), shall also apply in respect of the applicability of the penal laws of Israel under this Section.[211]

Section 14 of the Law states that:

(b) . . . (2) A qualification for penal liability under the laws of that State [i.e. another State] does not apply; (3) The person has not yet been acquitted of that offence in that State or, having been convicted, he has not served the sentence imposed on him in respect of that offence. (c) No penalty more grave than what could have been imposed under the laws of the State where the offence was committed shall be imposed in respect of the offence.[212]

204. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions committed "whether within or outside Kenya" by "any person, whatever his nationality", states that:

Where an offence under this section is committed outside Kenya, a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in Kenya, as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[213]

205. Kyrgyzstan's Criminal Code, in an article concerning "Action of Criminal Law with Regard to Persons who have Committed a Crime outside the Borders of the Kyrgyz Republic", provides that:

(1) Citizens of the Kyrgyz Republic, as well as stateless persons permanently residing in the Kyrgyz Republic, shall be liable under the present Code if they have not been punished by the judgement of a court of a foreign state.
(2) Citizens of the Kyrgyz Republic who have committed a crime within the territory of another state can not be extradited to this state.
(3) Foreigners and stateless persons who have committed a crime outside the borders of the Kyrgyz Republic and who are within its territory can be extradited to a foreign state to be tried or to serve their sentence in accordance with an international treaty.[214]

[210] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Sections 3 and 4.
[211] Israel, Penal Law as amended (1977), Section 16.
[212] Israel, Penal Law as amended (1977), Section 14.
[213] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(2).
[214] Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 6.

206. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, in a part dealing with the punishment of war crimes, provide that "the Lebanese tribunals have jurisdiction for the war crimes provided for in this law, regardless of the nationality of the author and the place where they have been committed".[215]

207. Luxembourg's Code of Criminal Investigation provides that:

> Every foreigner who outside the territory of the Grand-Duché is responsible, whether as a principal or an accomplice, for the following:
>
> ...
>
> (2) in wartime, abduction of minors; attacks on modesty or rape; prostitution or corruption of youth; murder or intentional bodily injury; attacks on individual liberty committed against a Luxembourg national or a national of an allied country,
>
> can be prosecuted and tried according to the provisions of Luxembourg laws if he is found either in the Grand-Duché, an enemy country or if the government obtains his extradition.[216]

208. Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes provides for the prosecution of non-Luxembourg nationals having committed war crimes "if such infringements have been committed at the occasion or under the pretext of war and if they are not justified by the laws and customs of war, these agents either being found within the Grand-Duché or on enemy territory, or the Government having obtained their extradition".[217]

209. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides that "any individual who has committed an offence under this law outside the territory of the Grand-Duché can be prosecuted in the Grand-Duché even though he may not be present there".[218]

210. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions by "any person, whatever his nationality", states that:

> Where an offence under this section is committed without Malawi a person may be proceeded against, tried and punished therefor in any place in Malawi as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[219]

211. Malaysia Geneva Conventions Act, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions by "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality", states that:

> In the case of an offence under this section committed outside the Federation, a person may be proceeded against, charged, tried and punished therefor in any place

[215] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 150.
[216] Luxembourg, Code of Criminal Investigation (1944), Article 7.
[217] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 1.
[218] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 10.
[219] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1) and (2).

in the Federation as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[220]

212. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions committed "in Mauritius or elsewhere" and states that "this section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship".[221]

213. Mexico's Penal Code as amended provides that offences committed in a foreign territory and against foreigners or Mexicans by a Mexican national, or by a foreigner against Mexican nationals, shall be prosecuted in Mexico provided that the following conditions are met:

I. the accused is in the territory of the Republic;
II. the case was not finally judged in the country where the offence took place; and
III. the offence of which he is accused is an offence in the country where it took place and in the Republic.[222]

214. The Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended of the Netherlands stipulates that Dutch criminal law shall apply:

(1) to any person who commits an offence described in Articles 4–7 outside the Kingdom but within Europe, if that offence is committed against or in connection with a Dutch citizen or a Dutch legal entity or if any Dutch interest is or may be adversely affected thereby;
(2) to any person who commits an offence described in Articles 131-134 bis, 189 and 416-417 bis of the Penal Code outside the Kingdom but within Europe, if the offence in those Articles is an offence within the meaning of (1) above;
(3) to a Dutch citizen who commits an offence described in Article 1 outside the Kingdom but within Europe.[223]

215. The International Crimes Act of the Netherlands provides that:

1. Without prejudice to the relevant provisions of the [Penal Code as amended] and the [Military Criminal Law as amended], Dutch criminal law shall apply to:
   (a) anyone who commits any of the crimes defined in this Act [genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture] outside the Netherlands, if the suspect is present in the Netherlands;
   (b) anyone who commits any of the crimes defined in this Act outside the Netherlands, if the crime is committed against a Dutch national;
   (c) a Dutch national who commits any of the crimes defined in this Act outside the Netherlands.
   . . .
3. Prosecution on the basis of subsection 1 (c) may also take place if the suspect becomes a Dutch national only after committing the crime.[224]

[220] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1) and (2).
[221] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3.
[222] Mexico, Penal Code as amended (1931), Article 4.
[223] Netherlands, Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended (1952), Article 3.
[224] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 2.

216. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I committed by "any person . . . in New Zealand or elsewhere", states that "this section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship".[225]

217. New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act provides that:

(1) Proceedings may be brought for an offence
  (a) against section 9 [genocide] or section 10 [crimes against humanity], if the act constituting the offence charged is alleged to have occurred
    (i) on or after the commencement of this section; or
    (ii) on or after the applicable date but before the commencement of this section; and would have been an offence under the law of New Zealand in force at the time the act occurred, had it occurred in New Zealand; and
  (b) against section 11 [war crimes], if the act constituting the offence charged is alleged to have occurred on or after the commencement of this section; and
  (c) against section 9 or section 10 or section 11 regardless of
    (i) the nationality or citizenship of the person accused; or
    (ii) whether or not any act forming part of the offence occurred in New Zealand; or
    (iii) whether or not the person accused was in New Zealand at the time that the act constituting the offence occurred or at the time a decision was made to charge the person with an offence.[226]

218. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides that:

Nicaraguan Penal Law shall be applicable to Nicaraguan nationals and foreigners who have committed within the national territory the following crimes: . . . other crimes which, under international treaties and conventions, must be prosecuted in Nicaragua in accordance with constitutional provisions.[227]

219. Niger's Penal Code as amended, under a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and war crimes" in which it provides for the punishment of a list of offences such as genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes in the meaning of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and both AP I and AP II, states that:

The courts of Niger have jurisdiction over the crimes set out in this chapter, regardless of the place where these might have been committed. For the crimes committed abroad by a national of Niger against a foreigner, the action of the foreigner or his family or the official notice of the authority of the State where the crime has been committed are not required.[228]

220. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions "whether in or outside the

[225] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1)–(3).
[226] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Part 2, Section 8(1).
[227] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 16(p).
[228] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.8.

Federation" and committed by "any person, whatever his nationality", states that:

A person may be proceeded against, tried and sentenced in the Federal territory of Lagos for an offence under this section committed outside the Federation as if the offence had been committed in Lagos, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in Lagos.[229]

221. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act, which provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions "in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere", states that "this section [on the "punishment of offenders against the Geneva Conventions"] applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship".[230]

222. Paraguay's Penal Code, in the section on "Acts against universally protected interests committed in a foreign country", provides that "Paraguayan penal law shall also be applied to the following acts committed in a foreign country: . . . other acts that according to an international treaty the Paraguayan State is obliged to prosecute, even if they were committed in a foreign country".[231]

223. Poland's Penal Code includes a special section on "Offences against peace and humanity, and war crimes" and provides that:

Notwithstanding regulations in force in the place of commission of the offence, the Polish penal law shall be applied to a Polish citizen or an alien, with respect to whom no decision on extradition has been taken, in the case of the commission abroad of an offence which the Republic of Poland is obligated to prosecute under international agreements.[232]

224. Russia's Criminal Code provides that:

1. Nationals of the Russian Federation and stateless persons permanently residing in the Russian Federation who have committed a crime outside the borders of the Russian Federation shall incur criminal responsibility under the present Code if the act they have committed is recognised as a crime in the state where it has been committed and if these persons have not been convicted in a foreign state. When convicting such persons the punishment cannot exceed the highest limit of the sanction specified in the law of the foreign state where the crime has been committed.
2. Members of the armed units of the Russian Federation located outside the borders of the Russian Federation for crimes committed within the territory of a foreign state shall incur criminal responsibility under the present Code if not provided for otherwise by an international treaty to which the Russian Federation is a party.

[229] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1) and (2).
[230] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).
[231] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 8(1).
[232] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Chapter XVIII, Article 113.

3. Foreigners and stateless persons who are not permanent residents of the Russian Federation who have committed a crime outside the borders of the Russian Federation shall incur criminal responsibility under the present Code in cases when the crime was directed against the interests of the Russian Federation and in cases provided for by an international treaty to which the Russian Federation is a party if they have not been convicted in a foreign state and if criminal proceedings against them are instituted within the territory of the Russian Federation.[233]

225. Rwanda's Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions was enacted:

to organize the putting on trial of persons prosecuted for having, between October 1, 1990 and December 31, 1994, committed acts qualified and punished by the penal code and which constitute . . . crimes of genocide or crimes against humanity as defined by the [1948 Genocide Convention], by [GC IV and the Additional Protocols], as well as in the [1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitation to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity].[234]

It states that:

Jurisdictions called on to try, by virtue of this law, offences of genocide and massacres, may try public actions filed against persons who have neither had address nor residence in Rwanda or who are outside Rwanda, when there is conclusive evidence or serious guilt clues, whether or not they have previously been cross-examined.[235]

226. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles, which provides for the prosecution of "any person, whatever his nationality" having committed any grave breach under the Geneva Conventions "whether in or outside Seychelles", provides that:

Where an offence under this section is committed outside Seychelles, a person may be proceeded against, charged, tried and punished therefor in any place in Seychelles, as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, deemed to have been committed in that place.[236]

227. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] shall be guilty of an offence under this Act and on conviction thereof . . . [be punished].

In the case of an offence under this section committed outside Singapore, a person may be proceeded against, charged, tried and punished therefor in any place in Singapore as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for the purposes incidental to or consequential on the trail or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[237]

[233] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 12(1)–(3).
[234] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 1(a).
[235] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 93.
[236] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1) and (2).
[237] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1) and (2).

228. Slovenia's Penal Code criminalises genocide and war crimes broadly defined and applies to Slovenian nationals who have committed offences abroad; to non-nationals who have committed offences against Slovenian nationals abroad: and to non-nationals who have committed a criminal offence against a third country or any of its citizens abroad.[238]

229. Under Spain's Law on Judicial Power, Spanish criminal courts have jurisdiction over offences committed by Spanish nationals and foreigners, whether on Spanish territory or abroad, in particular genocide or other offences which according to international treaties or conventions, must be prosecuted in Spain.[239]

230. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

A person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any person to commit,
(a) a grave breach of any of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions; or
(b) a breach of common Article 3 of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions

is guilty of an indictable offence.[240]

231. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides that:

Crimes committed outside the Realm shall be adjudged according to Swedish law and by a Swedish court where the crime has been committed:
1. by a Swedish citizen or an alien domiciled in Sweden,
2. by an alien not domiciled in Sweden who, after having committed the crime, has become a Swedish citizen or has acquired domicile in the Realm or who is a Danish, Finnish, Icelandic, or Norwegian citizen and is present in the Realm, or
3. by any other alien, who is present in the Realm, and the crime under Swedish Law can result in imprisonment for more than six months.[241]

The Code further provides that:

Even in cases other than those listed in Section 2, crimes committed outside the Realm shall be adjudged according to Swedish Law and by a Swedish court: . . . if the crime is . . . a crime against international law, unlawful dealings with chemical weapons, unlawful dealings with mines or false or careless statement before an international court.[242]

Moreover, the Code provides that:

A person guilty of a serious violation of a treaty or agreement with a foreign power or an infraction of a generally recognised principle or tenet relating to international humanitarian law concerning armed conflicts shall be sentenced for a crime against international law to imprisonment.[243]

[238] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 122 and 123.
[239] Spain, Law on Judicial Power (1985), Article 23(4).
[240] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Article 3(1).
[241] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Chapter 2, § 2.
[242] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Chapter 2, § 3(6).
[243] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Chapter 22, § 6.

232. Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended gives Swiss military tribunals jurisdiction over violations of IHL, regardless of the international or non-international character of an armed conflict, whether the crime has been committed on Swiss territory or abroad, whether the perpetrator or the victim is of Swiss nationality or of a foreign nationality and whether the perpetrator had military or civil status, even if there exists no link to the Swiss legal system other than the presence of the accused on Swiss territory.[244]

233. Switzerland's Penal Code as amended is applicable also with regard to acts committed abroad which the State is obliged to prosecute by an international treaty, provided that the act is also punishable in the State where it was committed and that the author of the crime is found on the territory of Switzerland and not extradited to another State.[245]

234. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for jurisdiction over stateless permanent residents who commit crimes under Tajikistan law outside the country and over foreigners and stateless persons not resident in Tajikistan who commit crimes under the Code when the crime is prohibited by norms of international law or treaties.[246] The Code provides that several war crimes are crimes under national law.[247]

235. Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act provides that:

> Any person who commits any of the crimes specified in Articles 6 [of the 1998 ICC Statute – genocide], 7 [of the 1998 ICC Statute – crimes against humanity] and 8 [of the 1998 ICC Statute – war crimes] outside Trinidad and Tobago, may be prosecuted and punished for that crime in Trinidad and Tobago as if the crime had been committed in Trinidad and Tobago.[248]

236. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions . . . commits an offence and on conviction thereof [shall be punished].
>
> Where an offence under this section is committed without Uganda a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in Uganda as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[249]

237. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of a grave breach of any of the [1949 Geneva] conventions or the first protocol

[244] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Articles 2(1) and (9), 6, 9, 108 and 109.
[245] Switzerland, Penal Code as amended (1937), Article 6 bis.
[246] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 15.
[247] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 397–405.
[248] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Part II, Section 5(2).
[249] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1) and (2).

shall be guilty of an offence and on conviction on indictment [shall be punished]. In the case of an offence under this section committed outside the United Kingdom, a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in the United Kingdom as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[250]

238. The UK UN Personnel Act provides that "a person is guilty of an offence under, or by virtue of, section 1 [attacks on UN workers], 2 [attacks in connection with premises and vehicles] or 3 [threats of attacks on UN workers] regardless of his nationality".[251]

239. The UK War Crimes Act states that:

(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, proceedings for murder, manslaughter or culpable homicide may be brought against a person in the United Kingdom irrespective of his nationality at the time of the alleged offence if that offence –
  a) was committed during the period beginning with 1 September 1939 and ending with 5 June 1945 in a place which at the time was part of Germany or under German occupation; and
  b) constituted a violation of the laws and customs of war.
(2) No proceedings shall by virtue of this section be brought against any person unless he was on 8 March 1990, or has subsequently become, a British citizen or resident of the United Kingdom.[252]

240. The UK ICC Act includes as offences under domestic law the acts of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes as defined in the 1998 ICC Statute.[253] Thus it provides that:

(1) It is an offence against the law of England and Wales for a person to commit genocide, a crime against humanity or a war crime.
(2) This section applies to acts committed
  (a) in England or Wales, or
  (b) outside the United Kingdom by a United Kingdom national, a United Kingdom resident or a person subject to UK service jurisdiction.[254]

There is a similar provision for Northern Ireland without the reference to "a person subject to UK service jurisdiction".[255]

241. The US Convention on Genocide Implementation Act includes the following conditions as a required circumstance for the alleged offences:

(1) the offense is committed within the United States; or
(2) the alleged offender is a national of the United States (as defined in section 101 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101)).[256]

[250] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1) and (2).
[251] UK, UN Personnel Act (1997), Section 5(3).
[252] UK, War Crimes Act (1991), Articles 1 and 2.
[253] UK, ICC Act (2001), Part 5, Section 50.
[254] UK, ICC Act (2001), Part 5, Section 51.
[255] UK, ICC Act (2001), Part 5, Section 58.
[256] US, Convention on Genocide Implementation Act (1987), Section 1091(d).

242. The US Convention against Torture Implementation Act, which provides for the punishment of acts of torture committed outside the US, provides that:

There is jurisdiction over [acts of torture] if –

(1) the alleged offender is a national of the United States; or
(2) the alleged offender is present in the United States, irrespective of the nationality of the victim or alleged offender.[257]

243. The US War Crimes Act as amended provides that:

(a) Offense. – Whoever, whether inside or outside the United States, commits a war crime, in any of the circumstances described in subsection (b), shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for life or any term of years, or both, and if death results to the victim, shall also be subject to the penalty of death.
(b) Circumstances. – The circumstances referred to in subsection (a) are that the person committing such war crime or the victim of such war crime is a member of the Armed Forces of the United States or a national of the United States (as defined in section 101 of the Immigration and Nationality Act).[258]

244. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any grave breach of any of the [1949] Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu.

Where a person has committed an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of [the above], the offence is within the competence of and may be tried and punished by the court having jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Vanuatu.[259]

245. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [the Geneva Conventions or AP I] shall be guilty of an offence.

...Where an offence in terms of this section has been committed outside Zimbabwe, the person concerned may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefore in any place in Zimbabwe as if the offence had been committed in that place and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[260]

National Case-law

246. In his legal opinion in the Schwammberger case before the Cámara Federal de la Plata in 1989, the Attorney-General of Argentina stated that:

States that have endured and suffered genocide have the right by means of their laws to assess the extent of the crimes and to punish in their courts of law those accused [257] US, Convention against Torture Implementation Act (1994), Section 2340A(b).

[258] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(a) and (b).
[259] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Sections 4 and 5.
[260] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1) and (3).

of participating in such aberrant and cruel behaviour. Neither time, nor borders, nor the laws of any given country shall prevent the just advance of punitive law in the face of such repugnant acts, which are so deeply debasing for mankind and which undermine civilised coexistence.[261]

247. In the Polyukhovich case before Australia's High Court in 1991 in which the accused was charged with crimes committed during the Second World War, certain judges addressed the question of the customary law obligation to prosecute and extradite persons accused of war crimes committed during the Second World War. Judge Brennan considered that:

As the material drawn from international agreements and UNGA resolutions acknowledges, international law recognizes a State to have universal jurisdiction to try suspected war criminals whether or not that State is under an obligation to do so and whether or not there is any international concern that the State should do so.[262]

Judge Toohey held that the "universality of jurisdiction is in fact a permissive doctrine".[263] He also discussed the relationship between war crimes and universal jurisdiction and held that "the question whether the crimes existed as such at that time is basic. If such conduct amounted, then, to customary international crimes, their very nature leads to the conclusion that they were the subject of universal jurisdiction."[264]

248. In its judgement in the Cvjetković case in 1994, Austria's Supreme Court held that the Austrian courts were entitled to exercise jurisdiction over the accused under Article 6 of the 1948 Genocide Convention.[265]

249. In The Four from Butare case in 2001, a Belgian Court found four Rwandans guilty of war crimes during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda. The accused were arrested under the Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended and charged with grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I, as well as violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Articles 1, 2 and 4 AP II.[266] The judgement was confirmed by the Belgian Court of Cassation in 2002.[267]

250. In the Finta case in 1989, in which the accused was prosecuted for war crimes and crimes against humanity committed during the Second World War, Canada's High Court of Justice rejected the defence's arguments that the law on [261] Argentina, Cámara Federal de la Plata, Schwammberger case, Legal opinion of the Attorney-General, 30 August 1989, Point V.

[262] Australia, High Court, Polyukhovich case, Legal Reasoning of Judge Brennan, 14 August 1991, § 33.
[263] Australia, High Court, Polyukhovich case, Legal Reasoning of Judge Toohey, 14 August 1991, § 27.
[264] Australia, High Court, Polyukhovich case, Legal Reasoning of Judge Toohey, 14 August 1991, § 35.
[265] Austria, Supreme Court, Cvjetković case, Judgement, 13 July 1994.
[266] Belgium, Cour d'Assises de Bruxelles, The Four from Butare case, Judgement, 7–8 June 2001.
[267] Belgium, Court of Cassation, The Four from Butare case, Judgement, 9 January 2002.

which the prosecution was based was unlawful inasmuch as it gave the courts extraterritorial jurisdiction. The Court held that one of the bases of jurisdiction which it considered were applicable to the case in question was the "'universal principle' of jurisdiction". The Court went on to explain that "this principle recognizes that with respect to certain types of international crimes a country has the right to prosecute an offender irrespective of the fact that the offence was not committed on its territory".[268] In its judgement in 1994, the Supreme Court, with reference to the relevant provision of the Canadian Criminal Code, stated that:

> Canadian courts have jurisdiction to try individuals living in Canada for crimes which they allegedly committed on foreign soil only when the conditions specified [enumerated within the judgement] are satisfied. The most important of those requirements, for the purposes of the present case, is that the alleged crime must constitute a war crime or a crime against humanity.
> ...
> The war crimes and crimes against humanity provision stands as an exception to the general rule regarding the territorial ambit of criminal law. Parliament intended to extend the arm of Canada's criminal law in order to be in a position to prosecute these extraterritorial acts if the alleged perpetrators were discovered here.[269]

In their dissenting opinion, three of the judges stated that:

> Extraterritorial prosecution is thus a practical necessity in the case of war crimes and crimes against humanity. Not only is the state where the crime took place unlikely to prosecute; following the cessation of hostilities or other conditions that fostered their commission, there also is a tendency for the individuals who perpetrated them to scatter to the four corners of the earth. Thus, war criminals would be able to elude punishment simply by fleeing the jurisdiction where the crime was committed. The international community has rightly rejected this prospect.[270]

251. In the Sarić case in 1994, Denmark's High Court tried a Bosnian Muslim refugee arrested in Denmark on charges of torture of POWs in violation of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The accused was convicted and sentenced to eight years' imprisonment.[271] Jurisdiction was based on the grave breaches provisions of Articles 129 and 130 GC III and Articles 146 and 147 GC IV in conjunction with Article 8(5) of the Danish Penal Code which provides Danish Courts with jurisdiction to try perpetrators of certain crimes when Denmark is bound by a treaty to do so. The verdict was confirmed by the Supreme Court in 1995.[272]

252. In the Javor case before Frances's Tribunal de Grande Instance of Paris in 1994 and relative to events in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the investigating [268] Canada, High Court of Justice, Finta case, Judgement, 10 July 1989.

[269] Canada, Supreme Court, Finta case, Judgement, 24 March 1994.
[270] Canada, Supreme Court, Finta case, Dissenting opinion of judges La Forest, L'Heureux-Dubé and McLachlim, 24 March 1994.
[271] Denmark, High Court, Sarić case, Judgement, 25 November 1994.
[272] Denmark, Supreme Court, Sarić case, Judgement, 15 August 1995.

magistrate at first instance considered that the principles of international co-operation regarding the search and punishment of war criminals referred to in UN General Assembly Resolution 3074 (1973) were binding and were directly applicable in French national law. The investigating magistrate had also considered that he had jurisdiction on the basis of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1984 UN Convention against Torture.[273] The Court of Appeal of Paris reversed the decision and held that the investigating magistrate had wrongly considered that the principles of international cooperation provided in UN General Assembly Resolution 3074 were legally binding as a treaty.[274] In 1996, the Court of Cassation confirmed the absence of direct applicability of the jurisdictional provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The Court also rejected the jurisdiction in respect to torture because the accused was not on French territory at the time of the alleged acts.[275]

253. In the Munyeshyaka case in 1996, France's Court of Appeal of Nîmes considered a case concerning a Rwandan priest accused of an alleged role in the 1994 massacres in Kigali and held that there was no basis in French law for universal jurisdiction in respect to the imputed crime of genocide.[276] In 1998, the Court of Cassation reversed the judgement and found that jurisdiction was established on the basis of the Law on Cooperation with the ICTR of 1996, which allowed perpetrators of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, violations of the laws and customs of war, genocide and crimes against humanity who were present in France to be prosecuted in France by the application of French law. The Court added that the relevant bases in French law could be found in Article 689 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (torture) and Article 211 of the Penal Code (genocide).[277]

254. In the Djajić case in 1997, Germany's Supreme Court of Bavaria based its jurisdiction on Article 6(9) of the German Penal Code, which extended the jurisdiction of German courts to acts committed abroad by non-nationals if this was provided for in an international treaty binding upon Germany. The Court referred to GC IV and the grave breaches regime. It stated that Article 6(9) of the Penal Code contained an additional implicit requirement of a link to Germany. This necessary link with Germany, so as not to infringe the principle of non-intervention, was found in the fact that the accused had established his domicile in Germany and had lived in Germany for some time. The Court added that the prosecution of war criminals was "in the interest of the international community as a whole", and not only in the particular interest of Germany. It further noted that "Article 146 [GC IV], in its paragraph 2, obliges

[273] France, Tribunal de Grande Instance of Paris, Javor case, Order establishing partial lack of jurisdiction and the admissibility of civil suit, 6 May 1994.
[274] France, Court of Appeal of Paris, Javor case, Judgement, 24 November 1994.
[275] France, Court of Cassation, Javor case, Judgement, 26 March 1996.
[276] France, Court of Appeal of Nîmes, Munyeshyaka case, Judgement, 20 March 1996.
[277] France, Court of Cassation, Munyeshyaka case, Judgement, 6 January 1998.

each State party to the Convention 'to search for persons alleged to have committed . . . such grave breaches'. It had to 'bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts'."[278]

255. In the Jorgić case in 1997, Germany's Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf based its jurisdiction on Article 6(1) and (9) of the German Penal Code, which provided for the prosecution by German authorities of genocide and other acts for which there is a compulsory prosecution under the terms of an international treaty. The Court stated that GC IV was a "basis for criminal prosecution" and held that the fact that the accused had lived for many years in Germany, was married to a German citizen and was voluntarily coming back to Germany met the requirement of a "specific link" with Germany. The Court considered the conflict to be an international conflict and the victims to be "protected persons" in the meaning of Article 4 GC IV. It stated that Article VI of the 1948 Genocide Convention, "according to today's predominant international opinion, does not contain a prohibition of [applying] the principle of universal jurisdiction to genocide". According to the Court, its jurisdiction would also result from Article 9(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute. Moreover, the Court referred to Article 146, second paragraph, GC IV under which, as the Court confirmed, the States party to GC IV "have engaged to bring persons who are alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches, before their own courts, regardless of their nationality". The accused was found guilty of complicity in genocide, in conjunction with dangerous bodily harm, deprivation of liberty and murder.[279] In 1999, the Federal Supreme Court of Germany upheld the conviction for the most part and confirmed that the relevant provision of the German Penal Code establishing jurisdiction for genocide was in conformity with the 1948 Genocide Convention. The Court agreed with the initial judgement in that there was a sufficient link with Germany.[280] In its decision in 2000, the Federal Constitutional Court stated that:

A norm of international customary law prohibiting the extension of German competence to legislate in criminal matters . . . was at variance with Art. VI of the [1948] Genocide Convention. With regard to the principle of non-interference recognized in international customary and international treaty law (Art. 2(1) of the United Nations Charter), the Federal Constitutional Court required that jurisdiction over events occurring in the territory of another State and therefore outside German territorial sovereignty be predicated on a meaningful link . . . Whether such a link exists depends on the subject matter. In criminal law, a meaningful link is constituted not only by the principles of territoriality, protection, active and passive personality, and criminal representation, but also by the principle of universal jurisdiction . . . The principle of universal jurisdiction applies to conduct deemed to constitute a threat to protected interests of the international community. It therefore differs from the principle of criminal representation, codified in Article 7, para. 2(2) of the German Penal Code, in that the conduct does not need to be punishable by the law of the place where it occurred and no failure to extradite is required.[281]

[278] Germany, Supreme Court of Bavaria, Djajić case, Judgement, 23 May 1997.
[279] Germany, Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf, Jorgić case, Judgement, 26 September 1997.
[280] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Jorgić case, Judgement, 30 April 1999.

256. In the Sokolović case in 1999, Germany's Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf held that, according to Article 6(9) of the German Penal Code and in connection with the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, German domestic courts had jurisdiction over grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions committed during the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.[282] In its judgement in 2000, the Federal Supreme Court agreed with the qualification of "international armed conflict" given to the 1992 situation in the former Yugoslavia and upheld the initial judgement against the accused, stating that "a duty to prosecute arises from [GC IV] at least when an international armed conflict takes place and when the criminal offences fulfil the requirements of a 'grave breach' in the meaning of Article 147 of [GC IV]".[283] Referring to the requirement of a specific link to Germany which had been established in the judgement at first instance, the Court noted that the Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf had correctly found such link to be established. However, it stated that:

> [The Supreme Court] is nevertheless inclined not to require such additional link, in any case with regard to [Article 6 para. 9 of the German Penal Code]... Indeed, the prosecution and punishment in accordance with German penal law by the Federal Republic of Germany, acting in fulfilment of an internationally binding obligation accepted under agreement between States, of an act committed abroad by a foreigner against foreigners, can hardly be said to be an infringement of the principle of non-interference.[284]

257. In the Kusljić case in 1999, Germany's Supreme Court of Bavaria tried a Bosnian national for crimes committed in 1992 in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The accused was sentenced to life imprisonment for, inter alia, genocide in conjunction with six counts of murder. The Court found that a specific link to Germany, necessary for the prosecution under German penal law of acts committed abroad by a non-German actor and against non-German victims, was established.[285] In its revising decision in 2001, the Federal Supreme Court stated that the accused – the specific intentional element to commit genocide not being established – could however be convicted for homicide in six cases committed in 1992 in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Referring to its judgement of the same day in the Sokolović case, the Court ruled that German courts, on the ground of Article 6(9) of the German Penal Code, had jurisdiction over grave breaches in the meaning of Articles 146 and 147 GC IV.[286]

[281] Germany, Federal Constitutional Court, Jorgić case, Decision, 12 December 2000.
[282] Germany, Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf, Sokolović case, Judgement, 29 November 1999.
[283] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Sokolović case, Judgement, 21 February 2000.
[284] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Sokolović case, Judgement, 21 February 2000.
[285] Germany, Supreme Court of Bavaria, Kusljić case, Judgement, 15 December 1999.
[286] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Kusljić case, Decision, 21 February 2001.

258. In its judgement in the Eichmann case in 1961, Israel's District Court of Jerusalem stated with respect to the acts for which Eichmann was accused that:

The abhorrent crimes defined in this Law [Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law of 1950] are not crimes under Israel law alone. These crimes, which struck at the whole of mankind and shocked the conscience of nations, are grave offences against the law of nations itself (delicta juris gentium). Therefore, so far from international law negating or limiting the jurisdiction of countries with respect to such crimes, international law is, in the absence of an International Court, in need of the judicial and legislative organs of every country to give effect to its criminal interdictions and to bring the criminals to trial. The jurisdiction to try crimes under international law is universal.

...

In view of the repeated affirmation by the United Nations in the resolution of the General Assembly of 1946 and in the Convention of 1948, and also in view of the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice, there is no doubt that genocide has been recognized as a crime under international law in the full legal meaning of this term, ex tunc; that is to say, the crimes of genocide which were committed against the Jewish people and other peoples during the period of the Hitler régime were crimes under international law. It follows, therefore, in accordance with the accepted principles of international law, that the jurisdiction to try such crimes is universal.[287] [emphasis in original]

With respect to Article 6 of the 1948 Genocide Convention, the Court noted that:

It is clear that Article 6 [of the 1948 Genocide Convention], like all other articles which determine the conventional obligations of the contracting parties, is intended for cases of genocide which will occur in the future after the ratification of the treaty or the adherence thereto by the State or States concerned... It is certain that it [the obligation arising from Article 6 of the 1948 Genocide Convention] constitutes no part of the principles of customary international law, which are also binding outside the conventional application of the Convention.

Moreover, even with regard to the conventional application of the Convention, it is not to be assumed that Article 6 is designed to limit the jurisdiction of countries to crimes of genocide by the principle of territoriality.[288]

...

In the [1948 Genocide Convention] the Members of the United Nations... contented themselves with the determination of territorial jurisdiction as a compulsory minimum... But there is nothing... to lead us to deduce any rule against the principle of universal jurisdiction with respect to the crime in question. It is clear that the reference in Article 6 to territorial jurisdiction... is not exhaustive. Every sovereign State may exercise its existing powers within the limits of customary international law.[289] [emphasis in original]

[287] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, §§ 12 and 19.

[288] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, §§ 22 and 23.

[289] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, § 25.

With respect to the provisions of Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV, the Court stated that:

Here the principle of "universality of jurisdiction with respect to war crimes" is laid down as the obligatory jurisdiction of the High Contracting Parties, from which none of them may withdraw and which none of them may waive (as expressly stated in the [1949 Geneva Conventions]). That obligation is binding not only on the belligerents, but also on the neutral parties to the [1949 Geneva] Conventions.[290]

Moreover, with respect to the protective principle and a specific territorial link, the Court affirmed the existence of a "linking point" in the case in question, stating that "indeed, this crime ['the killing of millions of Jews with intent to exterminate the Jewish people'] very deeply concerns the 'vital interests' of the State of Israel, and under the 'protective principle' this State has the right to punish the criminals".[291]

259. In the Eichmann case in 1962, Israel's Supreme Court, dealing with the question of the conformity of Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law of 1950 with principles of international law and States' criminal jurisdiction over acts committed by foreign nationals abroad, quoted parts of the judgement of the PCIJ in the Lotus case and stated that:

This argument [of the defendant] is to the effect that the enactment of a criminal law applicable to an act committed in a foreign country by a national conflicts with the principle of territorial sovereignty. But here too we must hold that there is no such rule in customary international law, and that to this day it has not obtained general international agreement. Evidence of this is to be found in the Judgement of the [PCIJ] in the Lotus case . . .

Our principal object [is] to make it clear . . . that under international law no prohibition whatsoever falls upon the enactment of the Law of 1950 either because it created ex post facto offences or because such offences are of an extra-territorial character . . . The two propositions on which we propose to rely will . . . be as follows:

(1) The crimes created by the Law and of which the appellant was convicted must be deemed today as having always borne the stamp of international crimes, banned by the law of nations and entailing individual responsibility.
(2) It is the peculiarly universal character of these crimes that vests in every State the authority to try and punish anyone who participated in their commission.[292] [emphasis in original]

Under a part of the judgement dealing with universal jurisdiction, the Supreme Court further stated that:

One of the principles whereby States assume, in one degree or another, the power to try and punish a person for an offence is the principle of universality. Its meaning is substantially that such power is vested in every State regardless of the fact that the offence was committed outside its territory by a person who did not belong to it, provided he is in its custody when brought to trial . . . But while general agreement exists as to [the offence of piracy], the question of the scope of its application is in dispute.

[290] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, § 24.
[291] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961, § 35.
[292] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, §§ 9 and 10.

. . .

There is full justification for applying here the principle of universal jurisdiction, since the international character of "crimes against humanity" (in the wide meaning of the term) dealt with in this case is no longer in doubt, while the unprecedented extent of their injurious and murderous effects is not to be disputed at the present time. In other words, the basic reason for which international law recognizes the right of each State to exercise such jurisdiction in piracy offences – notwithstanding the fact that its own sovereignty does not extend to the scene of the commission of the offence (the high seas) and the offender is a national of another State or is stateless – applies with even greater force to the above-mentioned crimes.

. . .

The truth is – and this further supports our conclusion – that the application of this principle has for some time been moving beyond the international crime of piracy. We have in mind its application to conventional war crimes as well . . . Whenever a "belligerent" country tries and punishes a member of the armed forces of the enemy for an act contrary to "the laws and customs of war", it does so because the matter involves an international crime in the prevention of which the countries of the whole world have an interest.[293]

Referring to a writer's opinion concerning the Zyklon B case decided by the British Military Court at Hamburg in 1946, and another British Military Court's decision in a case where a member of the Japanese army had been tried for unlawfully killing American POWs in what was then French Indo-China, the Supreme Court stated that:

Although the fact that the victims of the crimes in these cases were nationals of countries in alliance with the prosecuting State derogates in some degree from the universal character of the jurisdiction exercised, nevertheless, on the other hand, the cases indicate that substantial strides were made towards extending the use of the said principle . . . Moreover, according to [a writer's] opinion, even a neutral country has jurisdiction to try a person for a war crime.[294]

The Supreme Court also discussed "the limitation upon the exercise of universal jurisdiction imposed by most of those who support this principle, namely, that the State which has apprehended the offender must first offer to extradite him to the State in which the offence was committed", as well as the contention of the appellant that Israel was obliged to offer his extradition to Germany as his country of national origin, and stated that:

The requirement of making an offer to extradite the offender to the State of his national origin is supported neither by international law nor by the practice of States . . . The idea behind the above-mentioned limitation is not that the requirement to offer the offender to the State in which the offence was committed was designed to prevent the violation of its territorial sovereignty. Its basis is rather a purely practical one. Normally, the great majority of the witnesses and the greater part of the evidence are concentrated in that State and it is therefore the most convenient place (forum conveniens) for the conduct of the trial . . . It is clear . . . that it is the State of Israel – not the State of Germany – that must be regarded as the forum conveniens for the conduct of the trial . . . It follows that the aut dedere rule cannot assist the appellant in the circumstances of this case.[295]

[293] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 12.
[294] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 12.

Referring to Article VI of the 1948 Genocide Convention, the Supreme Court held that:

Article 6 imposes upon the parties contractual obligations with future effect, that is to say, obligations which bind them to prosecute for crimes of genocide which may be committed within their territories in the future. This obligation, however, has nothing to do with the universal power vested in every State to prosecute for crimes of this type committed in the past – a power which is based on customary international law.[296] [emphasis in original]

The Supreme Court concluded that:

We sum up our views on this subject as follows: Not only are all the crimes attributed to the Appellant of an international character, but they are crimes whose evil and murderous effects were so widespread as to shake the stability of the international community to its very foundations. The State of Israel, therefore, was entitled, pursuant to the principle of universal jurisdiction, and acting in the capacity of guardian of international law and agents for its enforcement, to try the Appellant. This being the case, it is immaterial that the State of Israel did not exist at the time the offences were committed.

In regard to the crimes directed against the Jews the District Court found additional support for its jurisdiction in the connecting link between the State of Israel and the Jewish people – including that between the State of Israel and the Jewish victims of the holocaust – and the National Home in Palestine, as is explained in its judgement. It therefore upheld its criminal and penal jurisdiction by virtue also of the "protective" principle and the principle of "passive personality". It should be made clear that we fully agree with every word said by the Court on this subject.[297]

260. In the Cavallo extradition case in 2001, on the request of a Spanish judge, a Mexican court decided to allow the extradition of Ricardo Miguel Cavallo, a former Argentinean military officer, charged with genocide and acts of terrorism during the 1976–1983 "dirty war" in Argentina and based its decision on, inter alia, the principle of universal jurisdiction.[298]

261. In 2001, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Mexico issued a directive concerning the Cavallo extradition case stating that:

Based on Article 28, part XI, of the Federal Public Administration Law and in conformity with articles 30 of the International Law of Extradition, and articles 1, 9,

[295] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 12.
[296] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 12.
[297] Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962, § 12.
[298] Mexico, Federal Court of the First Circuit, Cavallo case, Decision, 11 January 2001.

14 and 25 of the Treaty of Extradition and Mutual Assistance on Criminal Matters between the United Mexican States and the Kingdom of Spain, it is resolved . . . to grant the extradition of the individual in question, Ricardo Miguel Cavallo, known as Miguel Angel Cavallo, requested by the government of Spain through its embassy in Mexico, to face charges of genocide.[299]

262. In the Ahlbrecht case in 1947, the Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands quashed the conviction of the accused imposed by the Lower Court on the ground that the latter lacked jurisdiction over war crimes alleged to have been committed by members of the enemy forces.[300] The Court reviewed the practice relating to trials of war criminals since the end of the First World War, including the relevant provisions of the Treaty of Versailles, the Declarations of St. James and Moscow and the Charters of the International Military Tribunals and concluded that it could no longer be said that the Netherlands lacked jurisdiction over enemy war criminals. It added, however, that it did not follow from this conclusion that in the actual state of legislation in the Netherlands any particular court would automatically have jurisdiction over enemy war criminals. For this, the Court considered, something more was required, such as a directly applicable international convention or national legislation conferring the jurisdiction which the State possessed under international law upon a municipal court. In the absence of such measures, no local courts had the necessary jurisdiction. As a result of the Special Court of Cassation's decision, an amendment was made to the Extraordinary Penal Law Decree which criminalised war crimes and crimes against humanity as defined in the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) committed during the Second World War regardless of the nationality of the offender, the victim or the place where the crime was perpetrated.[301]

263. The jurisdiction given to the courts of the Netherlands by the above-mentioned amendment formed the basis of the decision of the Special Court of Cassation in the Rohrig and Others case in 1950.[302] Here the Court rejected the arguments of the accused that the amendment limited the jurisdiction of the courts to crimes committed on the territory of the Netherlands. The Court also upheld the validity of the amendment on the ground that:

There was a rule of customary international law by which those who violate the rules of war can be punished by those into whose hands they have fallen (the so called theory of detention). This rule has the same universality as that applied internationally in the rule which treats pirates as enemies of mankind.[303]

264. In the Knesević case in 1997 involving a Bosnian Serb accused of having committed war crimes (murder, deportation to a concentration camp,

[299] Mexico, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Communication No. 021/01, The Ministry of Foreign Affairs grants Spain's Request to extradite Ricardo Miguel Cavallo, Directive of 2 February 2001, § 2.
[300] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Ahlbrecht case, Judgement, 17 February 1947.
[301] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Ahlbrecht case, Judgement, 17 February 1947.
[302] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Rohrig and Others case, Judgement, 15 May 1950.
[303] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Rohrig and Others case, Judgement, 15 May 1950.

attempted rape) in the territory of the former Yugoslavia (Bosnia and Herzegovina), the Supreme Court of the Netherlands acknowledged universal criminal jurisdiction irrespective of whether the Netherlands was involved in the conflict. The Court referred to the explanatory memorandum submitted to the Dutch parliament in the context of the adoption of the Criminal Law in Wartime Act, which interpreted Article 3 of the Act so as to give the Dutch courts competence to try war crimes (including grave breaches and violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions), regardless of where or by whom they had been committed.[304]

265. In its judgement in the Kuroda case in 1949, the Supreme Court of the Philippines held that the government had the power to grant the jurisdiction to prosecute Japanese citizens accused of war crimes committed in the Philippines during the Second World War, since "the rules and regulations of the Hague and [the 1949] Geneva Conventions form part and were wholly based on the principles of international law".[305]

266. In the Hissène Habré case in 2000, Senegal's Dakar Regional Court indicted Chad's exiled former president on charges of torture and crimes against humanity, and placed him under house arrest.[306] In 2001, however, the Court of Cassation confirmed the ruling of the Dakar Court of Appeal that Habré could not be tried in Senegal for crimes allegedly committed in Chad. It stated that Senegalese courts lacked jurisdiction to prosecute and try aliens present on the territory of Senegal who had allegedly committed acts of torture outside Senegal. The decision was based on the absence of any legislative measure establishing such jurisdiction over torture-related offences, as required by Article 5(2) of the 1984 Convention against Torture, to which Senegal was a party.[307]

267. In the Grabež case in 1997, a person born in the former Yugoslavia was prosecuted by Switzerland's Military Tribunal at Lausanne for violations of the laws and customs of war under the Swiss Military Criminal Code as amended on charges of beating and injuring civilian prisoners in the camps of Omarska and Keraterm in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Tribunal held that it had jurisdiction under Articles 108(2) and 109 of the Military Criminal Code as amended over violations of the laws and customs of war, grave breaches of GC III, GC IV and AP I and violations of AP II, but acquitted the accused for lack of sufficient evidence.[308]

268. In the Musema case in 1997, Switzerland agreed to surrender to the ICTR an accused of Rwandan nationality, arrested in Switzerland in 1995 for violations of the laws of war in Rwanda. The decision was taken, inter alia, pursuant [304] Netherlands, Supreme Court, Knesević case, Judgement, 11 November 1997.

[305] Philippines, Supreme Court, Kuroda case, Judgement, 26 March 1949.
[306] Senegal, Dakar Regional Court, Hissène Habré case, Indictment, 3 February 2000.
[307] Senegal, Dakar Court of Appeal Hissène Habré case, Judgement on Appeal, 4 July 2000; Court of Cassation (First Chamber for Criminal Matters), Hissène Habré case, Judgement, 20 March 2001.
[308] Switzerland, Military Tribunal at Lausanne, Grabež case, Judgement, 18 April 1997.

to Article 109 of the Swiss Military Criminal Code as amended providing for the punishment of war crimes.[309]

269. In the Niyonteze case in 1999, Switzerland's Military Tribunal at Lausanne found a Rwandan citizen guilty of murder, incitement to murder and crime by omission in the context of the conflict in Rwanda in 1994. The Tribunal based its decision on Articles 2(9), 108(2) and 109 of the Swiss Military Penal Code as amended. However, the Tribunal refused to consider charges of genocide and crimes against humanity on the grounds that these crimes were not recognised as being subject to universal jurisdiction under Swiss law.[310] In its judgement in 2000, the Military Court of Appeals stated that:

> According to Article 2 § 9 of the Military Penal Code, civilians are subjected to the military criminal law if they are found guilty of violations of public international law during an armed conflict. (Articles 108 to 114 Military Penal Code)
>
> Switzerland adopted Article 2 § 9 of the Military Penal Code in order to meet its international obligations and to allow the application of international law. In this specific context, even if Switzerland is not in a state of war or in a danger of imminent war, it engaged in prosecuting individuals, regardless of their nationality, who are found [outside Switzerland] guilty of grave breaches of the [1949] Geneva Conventions.[311]

In its relevant parts, the Military Court of Cassation confirmed the judgement of the Military Court of Appeals.[312]

270. In the Pinochet extradition case in 1999 before the UK House of Lords, Lord Millett stated that:

> In my opinion, crimes prohibited by international law attract universal jurisdiction under customary international law if two criteria are satisfied. First, they must be contrary to a peremptory norm of international law so as to infringe a jus cogens. Secondly, they must be so serious and on such a scale that they can justly be regarded as an attack on the international legal order. Isolated offences, even if committed by public officials, would not satisfy these criteria.
>
> . . .
>
> In my opinion, the systematic use of torture on a large scale and as an instrument of state policy had joined piracy, war crimes and crimes against peace as an international crime of universal jurisdiction well before 1984.[313]

Lord Phillips of Worth Matravers stated that:

> It is still an open question whether international law recognises universal jurisdiction in respect of international crimes – that is the right, under international law, of the courts of any state to prosecute for such crimes wherever they occur. In relation to war crimes, such a jurisdiction has been asserted by the State of Israel,

[309] Switzerland, Federal Court, Musema case, Judgement, 28 April 1997.
[310] Switzerland, Military Tribunal at Lausanne, Niyonteze case, Judgement, 30 April 1999.
[311] Switzerland, Military Court of Appeals (Geneva), Niyonteze case, Judgement, 26 May 2000.
[312] Switzerland, Military Court of Cassation (Yverdon-les-Bains), Niyonteze case, Judgement, 27 April 2001.
[313] UK, House of Lords, Pinochet extradition case, Opinion of Lord Millett, 24 March 1999.

notably in the prosecution of Adolf Eichmann, but this assertion of jurisdiction does not reflect any general state practice in relation to international crimes. Rather, states have tended to agree, or attempt to agree, on the creation of international tribunals to try international crimes. They have however, on occasion, agreed by conventions, that their national courts should enjoy jurisdiction to prosecute for a particular category of international crime wherever occurring.[314]

271. In the Sawoniuk case in 1999, a person was sentenced to life imprisonment at the Old Bailey in London for having murdered in 1942 two Jews in what is now Belarus. The sentence was laid down by virtue of the UK War Crimes Act of 1991.[315] In 2000, this judgement was confirmed by the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division), which stated, however, that:

The criminal jurisdiction of the English court is, generally speaking, territorial. Until enactment of the War Crimes Act 1991 the appellant could not be tried here for an offence of murder or manslaughter committed in Belorussia since he has never been a British subject and the exception made by section 9 of the Offences against the Person Act 1861 to the ordinary rule of territoriality was confined to offences of murder or manslaughter committed outside the United Kingdom by British subjects. It remains the law that the appellant could not be tried here for acts of violence committed in Belorussia if not causing death.[316]

272. In its judgement in the Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that:

As to the punishment of persons guilty of violating the laws and customs of war (war crimes in the narrow sense), it has always been recognised that tribunals may be established and punishment imposed by the State in whose hands the perpetrators fall. Those rules of international law were recognised as paramount, and jurisdiction to enforce them by the injured belligerent government, whether within the territorial boundaries of the State or in occupied territory, has been unquestioned . . . However, enforcement of international law has been traditionally subject to practical limitations. Within territorial boundaries of a State having a recognised, functioning government presently in the exercise of sovereign power throughout its territory, a violator of the rules of international law could be punished only by the authority of the officials of that State. The law is universal, but such a State reserves unto itself the exclusive power within its boundaries to apply or withhold sanctions.

Thus, notwithstanding the paramount authority of the substantive rules of common international law the doctrines of national sovereignty have been preserved through the control of enforcement machinery. It must be admitted that Germans were not the only ones who were guilty of committing war crimes; other violators of international law could, no doubt, be tried and punished by the State of which they were nationals, by the offended State if it can secure jurisdiction of the person, or by an International Tribunal if of competent authorised jurisdiction.

[314] UK, House of Lords, Pinochet extradition case, Opinion of Lord Phillips of Worth Matravers, 24 March 1999.
[315] UK, Old Bailey (London), Sawoniuk case, Judgement, 1 April 1999.
[316] UK, Supreme Court of Judicature, Court of Appeal (Criminal Division), Sawoniuk case, Judgement on Appeal, 10 February 2000.

Applying these principles, it appears that the power to punish violators of international law in Germany is not solely dependent on the enactment of rules of substantive penal law applicable only in Germany. Nor is the apparent immunity from prosecution of criminals in other States based on the absence there of the rules of international law which we enforce here. Only by giving consideration to the extraordinary and temporary situation in Germany can the procedure here be harmonised with established principles of national sovereignty. In Germany an international body (the Control Council) has assumed and exercised the power to establish judicial machinery for the punishment of those who have violated the rules of common international law, a power which no international authority without consent could assume or exercise within a State having a national government presently in the exercise of its sovereign powers.[317]

273. In the Demjanjuk case in 1985, a US Court of Appeals recognised Israel's right to try a person accused of war crimes on the basis of universal jurisdiction and rejected an appeal to overturn an extradition order. The Court held that:

The universality principle is based on the assumption that some crimes are so universally condemned that the perpetrators are the enemies of all people. Therefore, any nation which has custody of the perpetrators may punish them according to its law applicable to such offences . . . Israel or any other nation . . . may undertake to vindicate the interest of all nations by seeking to punish the perpetrators of such crimes.[318]

Other National Practice

274. In its oral pleadings before the ICJ in the Arrest Warrant case in 2000, Belgium addressed the issues of compatibility of its law containing the principle of universality with international law as well as universal jurisdiction as such and stated that:

Article 7 of the Law enshrines the universal jurisdiction of the Belgian courts. They may deal with the offences referred to in the Law irrespective of the nationality of the perpetrator or where the offence was committed.

. . .

This jurisdiction is entirely consistent with the second paragraph of the Article common to the four 1949 Geneva Conventions (Articles 49, 50, 129 and 146 respectively) . . . The jurisdiction that the State must therefore exercise is a universal jurisdiction, which can today be regarded as generally accepted, as it is found in a number of international criminal law conventions.[319]

In later pleadings in the same case, Belgium stated that in its contention, "the permissive rules concerning the exercise of universal jurisdiction . . . in circumstances in which serious violations of international humanitarian law

[317] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case, Judgement, 4 December 1947.
[318] US, Court of Appeals, Demjanjuk case, Judgement, 31 October 1985.
[319] Belgium, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 21 November 2000, Verbatim Record CR 2000/33, § I.A (7).

are alleged, permit Belgium to take the course that it has followed".[320] Referring to Articles 49, 50, 129 and 146 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, Belgium further stated that these provisions contained the obligation of States to prosecute the authors of crimes defined by the Conventions, regardless of their nationality and of the place of the crime, as long as they were present on the territory of the State exercising its jurisdiction. According to Belgium, such an obligation also existed as regards crimes against humanity, resulting from customary and treaty law.[321]

275. According to the Report on the Practice of Belgium, it is the opinio juris of Belgium that it has the right to consider "grave breaches" committed also in the context of non-international conflicts as punishable under Belgian penal law, regardless of the nationality of the alleged perpetrator or the victim or of the place where the act was committed, on the basis of universal jurisdiction.[322]

276. In a report in 1987, the Canadian Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals ("Commission Deschênes") held that "neither conventional international law nor customary international law stricto sensu could support the prosecution of [Second World War] war criminals in Canada".[323] The Commission added that:

> Prosecution of war criminals can, however, be launched on the basis of customary international law lato sensu inasmuch as war crimes are violations of the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations, which article 11(g) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms has enshrined in the Constitution of Canada.[324]

277. In 1987, in parliamentary debates on the proposed amendment to Canada's Criminal Code, the Canadian Minister of Justice referred to changes already made in legislation in order to bring Canada in line with its international obligations and stated that "these amendments have also recognized the increasing acceptance in international law of the principle of according universal jurisdiction to the national courts in respect of internationally acknowledged offences".[325]

278. In 2000, in its application instituting proceedings in the Arrest Warrant case before the ICJ, the DRC requested that the ICJ "declare that (Belgium) shall annul the international arrest warrant".[326] The latter had been issued in absentia by a Belgian judge against the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the DRC on the basis of Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the [320] Belgium, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 17 October 2001, Verbatim Record CR 2001/8, p. 50.

[321] Belgium, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 18 October 2001, Verbatim Record CR 2001/9, § 10(6).
[322] Report on the Practice of Belgium, 1997, Chapter 6.4.
[323] Canada, Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals, Report, 1987, p. 132, § 20.
[324] Canada, Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals, Report, 1987, p. 132, § 21.
[325] Canada, Minister of Justice, Statement in the House of Commons, 12 March 1987, Parliamentary Debates, Vol. VII, 1987, pp. 8265–8266.
[326] DRC, Application instituting proceedings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 17 October 2000, § II, p. 3.

Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended. In its application, the DRC criticised the fact that, under the terms of the arrest warrant, "the investigating judge claims jurisdiction in respect of offences purportedly committed on the territory of the DRC by a national of that State, without any allegation that the victims were of Belgian nationality or that these acts constituted violations of the security or dignity of the Kingdom of Belgium".[327] It further stated that the arrest warrant constituted a "violation of the principle that a State may not exercise [its authority] on the territory of another State and of the principle of sovereign equality among all Members of the United Nations".[328] The DRC further stated that:

> The universal jurisdiction ... contravenes the international jurisprudence established by the judgement of the Permanent Court of International Justice (PCIJ) in the Lotus case ... According to the judgement, this principle means that a State may not exercise its authority on the territory of another State. This rule is now corroborated by Article 2, § 1 of the Charter of the United Nations ... The only instances in which general international law allows, exceptionally, that a State may prosecute acts committed on the territory of another State by a foreigner are, first, cases involving violation of the security or dignity of the first State and, second, cases involving serious offences committed against its nationals.[329]

In its oral pleadings, the DRC further stated that "universal jurisdiction – in so far as domestic courts have such jurisdiction – can apply only if the person prosecuted is present on the territory of the prosecuting State. This is a well-established principle."[330] In later pleadings, the DRC made the point that:

> The real test of the concept of universal jurisdiction is the genuine universalization of the prosecution of crime. Further, that is precisely the meaning intended by those who drafted Article 146 [GC IV]. The idea was not that a single State should take responsibility for prosecuting and trying all international crimes. It was that all States should fulfil their obligation to search for, each on its own territory, the guilty parties, so that there is no territory left where they can escape judgment for their crimes ... Yes, States do have an obligation of universal jurisdiction, which arises in response to another obligation, that of contributing to the suppression of international crimes. Naturally, however, there must be identifiable grounds for the latter obligation ... We shall merely say that Article 146 [GC IV] imposes a clear obligation on all States both to enact appropriate legislation and to search for persons having committed grave breaches of the said Conventions ... The DRC takes note of the fact that Belgium does not claim that it indicted the DRC's Minister for Foreign Affairs when he was not present in the territory of Belgium as a result of an obligation on Belgium to do so. It is evident that the obligation of States to extend [327] DRC, Application instituting proceedings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 17 October 2000, § III(A), p. 5.

[328] DRC, Application instituting proceedings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 17 October 2000, § IV(A), p. 7.
[329] DRC, Application instituting proceedings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 17 October 2000, § IV(A)(1), p. 7–9.
[330] DRC, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 22 November 2000, Verbatim Record CR 2000/34, § 1.4.

their universal jurisdiction to encompass the punishment of some international crimes does not go so far as to include such an eventuality. Neither legislation nor practice provides grounds for such an extension. Article 146 [GC IV] without being fully explicit, would appear to confirm our view . . . It is therefore indeed the logic of international law which prevents the obligation on a State to establish its universal jurisdiction for the punishment of international crimes from being extended to encompass an obligation to exercise jurisdiction in all cases, including those in which the suspect is not present in its territory . . . Belgium agrees with the Democratic Republic of the Congo that in the present case universal jurisdiction is a freedom, not an obligation.[331]

In its final oral pleadings, the DRC stated that:

When it comes to the international scope of domestic jurisdictions in criminal matters for acts committed abroad by foreigners, in particular in cases of international crimes, their competencies will necessarily run against the sovereignty of another State; such procedure must have a conventional or customary foundation authorising its action . . . [and that] the extension of such a competence to the hypothesis that the person concerned is not in the territory lacks a confirmed legal basis.[332]

279. According to the Report on the Practice of Cuba, under Cuban law, criminal jurisdiction generally extends to offences committed by Cuban nationals abroad.[333]

280. In 1999, in its initial report to the CAT, the government of El Salvador, explained the reasons for universal jurisdiction over persons responsible for human rights violations and stated that:

El Salvador accepts the general interest of the international community in seeking and prosecuting criminal offenders who commit acts against property protected internationally by specific agreements or rules of international law or acts seriously undermining universally recognized human rights. It therefore considers it permissible to seek this type of criminal within the national territory, thereby avoiding the difficulties which would ensue were El Salvador to become a country of asylum for criminals from other countries, and to prosecute offences against internationally recognized human rights, as occur in cases of torture when they are committed elsewhere.[334]

281. In 1973, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the protection of human rights in times of armed conflict, the FRG declared that "the principle of universal jurisdiction should be reaffirmed

[331] DRC, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 16 October 2001, Verbatim Record CR 2001/6.
[332] DRC, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, 19 October 2001, Verbatim Record CR 2001/10 (unofficial translation).
[333] Report on the Practice of Cuba, 1998, Chapter 6.4.
[334] El Salvador, Initial Report to CAT of 5 July 1999, UN Doc. CAT/C/37/Add.4, 12 October 1999, § 151.

in cases of grave breaches of the international rules applicable in armed conflicts".[335]

282. In an explanatory memorandum on ratification of the 1984 Convention against Torture presented during the 1986–1987 Session of the Dutch parliament, the Ministers of Justice and of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands declared that the mere fact that very severe offences that caused indignation and anxiety were involved could not in themselves justify the application of the principle of universal jurisdiction to such offences. Repression of these violations should be left to the States that had a tie with the person or the place where the crime was committed. If not, a tendency to interfere could emerge and criminal law was not considered to be the most suitable instrument to resolve political conflicts.[336]

283. In 1999, in its third periodic report to the CAT, the Netherlands referred to its Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended and to the 1997 ruling of the Supreme Court of the Netherlands in the Knesevic case, and stated that:

> Anyone in the Netherlands who is suspected of war crimes can be prosecuted [there]. A special National War Criminals Investigation Team – the NOVO – has been set up to target not only crimes under the Criminal Law in Wartime Act, but other crimes against humanity as well, such as torture.[337]

284. In 2001, during a meeting of the UN Commission on Human Rights, Senegal, in exercise of its right to reply, stated with regard to the Hissène Habré case that:

> Mr. Habré, who was in Senegal as a refugee, had been arrested and charged on 3 February 2000. He had been released, however, and the prosecution had not been pursued because it was found that the Senegalese courts were not competent to deal with the matter. The acts with which Mr. Habré was charged had been committed abroad and [the relevant provision of Senegalese criminal law] did not apply when an act was committed by a foreigner abroad, except where certain conditions were fulfilled. In the case in question, none of those conditions was fulfilled . . . The case in question did not . . . fall under article 5, paragraph 1, of [the 1984 Convention against Torture]. The [1968] Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity . . . was inapplicable to Senegal, which had not ratified it. The Indictment Division had withdrawn the prosecution on the basis of [the relevant provisions of Senegalese criminal law] according to which the national courts were not competent. That judgement had been confirmed by the Court of Cassation.[338]

[335] FRG, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/28/SR.1452, 3 December 1973, § 43.

[336] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory memorandum by the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Foreign Affairs on the ratification of the 1984 Convention against Torture, 1986–1987 Session, Doc. 20 042, No. 3, pp. 5 and 6.

[337] Netherlands, Third periodic report to the CAT, 27 December 1999, UN Doc. CAT/C/44/Add.8, 5 January 2000, § 15.

[338] Senegal, Statement of 6 April 2001 before the UN Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/SR.43, 17 April 2001, §§ 78–79.

285. In 1990, during a debate in the House of Commons on the subject of Cambodia, the UK Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated that:

Under the auspices of the United Nations, a tribunal could be established [to try the Khmer Rouge]... Alternatively, Pol Pot and others could be brought to trial under the genocide convention, but the only courts with jurisdiction under that convention would be the Cambodian courts.[339]

286. In 1991, during a debate in the House of Commons on the prosecution of crimes committed during the Gulf War, the UK Minister of State, Home Office, stated that "all the states involved in the Gulf conflict are parties to the Geneva convention of 1949. We took that convention into our own law in 1957. So we have a wide jurisdiction over war crimes committed anywhere in the world after 1957 under international law."[340]

287. In 1991, during a debate in the House of Commons on the Middle East, the UK Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated that:

Anyone who breaks the provisions of the Geneva conventions may be held liable... Machinery already exists under [the Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957)] for prosecuting grave breaches of them. The three avenues are: first, a trial before Iraqi courts; secondly, extradition for trial before courts of another party to the conventions, including other Arab states; and thirdly, the possibility of special international tribunals.[341]

288. In 1993, in a written reply to a question in the House of Commons on the subject of the possibility of a war crimes tribunal or special genocide commission to investigate the actions of the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia, the UK Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated that:

In the absence of an international tribunal with jurisdiction to try Pol Pot and the Khmer Rouge for genocide, Pol Pot and his associates would have to be brought before a competent Cambodian court. It is therefore for the new Cambodian Government to decide whether to bring them to trial.[342]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

289. In a resolution adopted in 1946 on extradition and punishment of war criminals, the UN General Assembly recommended that:

[339] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Hansard, 26 October 1990, Vol. 178, col. 690.

[340] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Minister of State, Home Office, Hansard, 18 March 1991, Vol. 188, col. 112.

[341] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Hansard, 28 March 1991, Vol. 188, col. 1100.

[342] UK, House of Commons, Reply to a question by the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, Hansard, 5 May 1993, Vol. 224, Written Answers, cols. 138–139.

Members of the United Nations forthwith take all the necessary measures to cause the arrest of those war criminals who have been responsible for of have taken a consenting part in [war crimes], and to cause them to be sent back to the countries in which their abominable deeds were done, in order that they may be judged and punished according to the laws of those countries.[343]

The General Assembly called upon:

the governments of States which are not Members of the United Nations also to take all necessary measures for the apprehension of such criminals in their respective territories with a view to their immediate removal to the countries in which the crimes were committed for the purpose of trial and punishment according to the laws of those countries.[344]

290. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly called upon:

all States to take measures, in accordance with recognized principles of international law, to arrest such persons and extradite them to the countries where they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity, so that they can be brought to trail and punished in accordance with the laws of those countries.[345]

291. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly proclaimed that "persons against whom there is evidence that they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity shall be subject to trial and, if found guilty, to punishment, as a general rule in the countries in which they have committed those crimes".[346]

292. In a resolution adopted in 1996 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed its concern over the:

continuing unauthorized arrests by all parties of persons suspected of serious violations of international humanitarian law, despite the parties' agreement in Rome on 18 February 1996 that such arrests would be made only after the [ICTY] had reviewed and approved orders of arrest as consistent with international legal standards.[347]

293. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN Commission on Human Rights reminded all factions and forces in Sierra Leone that:

In any armed conflict, including an armed conflict not of an international character, the taking of hostages, wilful killing and torture or inhuman treatment of persons taking no active part in the hostilities constitute grave breaches of international [343] UN General Assembly, Res. 3 (I), 13 February 1946.

[344] UN General Assembly, Res. 3 (I), 13 February 1946.
[345] UN General Assembly, Res. 2712 (XXV), 15 December 1970, § 2.
[346] UN General Assembly, Res. 3074 (XXVIII), 3 December 1973, § 5.
[347] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 6.

humanitarian law, and that all countries are under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches and to bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before their own courts.[348]

294. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1995, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights deplored the fact that the efforts of the international community were still inadequate, "whereas the duty of trying those responsible for the genocide and war crimes does not devolve solely on the Government of Rwanda".[349]

295. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1996, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights urged all States in whose territory there were persons allegedly responsible for acts of genocide to arrest those persons so that they could be tried by their own competent courts or extradited at the request of the ICTR or the Rwandan authorities.[350]

296. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the role of universal or extraterritorial competence in preventive action against impunity, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recalled "the principle of universal jurisdiction for crimes against humanity and for war crimes as recognized in international law and practice".[351]

297. In 1999, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General recommended that the UN Security Council urge member States:

> to adopt national legislation for the prosecution of individuals responsible for genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. Member States should initiate prosecution of persons under their authority or on their territory for grave breaches of international humanitarian law on the basis of the principle of universal jurisdiction and report thereon to the Security Council.[352]

298. In 2001, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General pointed out that "a growing number of States have started to apply the principle of universal jurisdiction".[353]

299. In 1998, in the conclusions and recommendations of his report on the question of the human rights of all persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment, in particular, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Torture stated that:

> 229. . . . In respect of the crimes under consideration, such as torture, universal jurisdiction is applicable, that is, jurisdiction exercised on the basis simply of custody.

[348] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/1, 6 April 1999, § 2.
[349] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/5, 18 August 1995, § 3.
[350] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/3, 19 August 1996, § 6.
[351] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2000/24, 18 August 2000, preamble.
[352] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/1999/957, 8 September 1999, § 6.
[353] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, § 12.

230. As regards grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and acts of torture committed in a State party to the [1984 Convention against Torture], States are required to bring to justice any perpetrators they find within their jurisdiction, regardless of their nationality or that of their victim(s) or of where they committed the crime, if they do not extradite them to another country wishing to exercise jurisdiction.
231. In respect of other pertinent crimes under international law, States are in any event permitted to exercise such jurisdiction . . .
232. The Special Rapporteur, therefore, urges all States to review their legislation with a view to ensuring that they can exercise criminal jurisdiction over any person in their hands suspected of torture or, indeed, of any crime falling within the notions of war crimes or crimes against humanity as understood above.[354]

300. In 1996, in a presentation to the sessional Working Group of the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights on the Administration of Justice and the Question of Compensation, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on the (then still draft) Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law stated that "the notion of and term 'universal jurisdiction' contained in principle 5 related to crimes under international law, namely crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. Relevant instruments provided for universal jurisdiction."[355]
301. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) stated that:

> 42. . . . In general, unless the parties to an internal armed conflict agree otherwise, the only offences committed in internal armed conflict for which universal jurisdiction exists are "crimes against humanity" and genocide, which apply irrespective of the conflict's classification.
> . . .
> 45. "Grave breaches" are specified major violations of international humanitarian law which may be punished by any State on the basis of universal jurisdiction. Grave breaches are listed in article 50 [GC I], article 51 [GC II], article 130 [GC III], and article 147 [GC IV]. Grave breaches are also listed in articles 11, paragraph 4, and 85 [AP I].[356]

Other International Organisations

302. In a resolution on enforced disappearances adopted in 1984, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called on the governments of member

[354] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Torture, Fifth report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/38, 24 December 1997, §§ 229–232.
[355] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Sessional Working Group on the Administration of Justice and the Question of Compensation, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/16, 13 August 1996, § 28.
[356] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/674, 27 May 1994, §§ 42 and 45.

States to support the preparation and adoption by the UN of a declaration on enforced disappearances setting forth the following principle: "persons responsible for enforced disappearance may be prosecuted not only in the country in which the offence was committed, but in any country in which they have been arrested".[357]

303. In a recommendation adopted in 1999 concerning respect for IHL in Europe, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stated that:

> 6. ... No international tribunal can take the place of states in meeting their obligation to ensure the proper enforcement of international humanitarian law in regard to persons committing violations of that law, ordering others to commit them or condoning these actions, wherever they take place and irrespective of the nationality of their author.[358]

International Conferences

304. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

305. In its decision in the Arrest Warrant case in 2002, the ICJ did not rule on the issue of universal jurisdiction as such in the operative part of the judgement because of the final form of the DRC's submissions and because Belgium had referred to the non ultra petita principle.[359] However, in various separate and dissenting opinions and declarations, judges of the Court expressed their own opinion on the matter. As far as universal jurisdiction in absentia for war crimes and crimes against humanity was concerned, except for the question of possible immunities, five of the judges giving a separate or dissenting opinion thereby clearly expressed themselves in favour of the right of States to prosecute persons even if they were not present on their territory.[360] Four others took the view that a right of States to exercise such a universal jurisdiction without any territorial link did not (yet) exist.[361] In his separate opinion, President Guillaume stated that "universal jurisdiction in absentia is unknown to international conventional law" and that the same would be true for international customary law.[362] In his declaration, Judge Ranjeva stated that, even if the text of the judgement left the question open, it did not seem to him

[357] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 828, 26 September 1984, § 13.
[358] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1427, 23 September 1999, § 6.
[359] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, § 43.
[360] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Separate opinion of Judge Koroma, §§ 7 and 9; Joint and separate opinion of Judges Higgins, Kooijmans and Buergenthal, §§ 52 and 61; Dissenting opinion of Judge ad hoc Van den Wyngaert, § 51.
[361] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Separate opinion of President Guillaume, §§ 9 and 12; Declaration of Judge Ranjeva, §§ 5 and 9; Separate opinion of Judge Rezek, § 6; Separate opinion of Judge ad hoc Bula-Bula, § 74.
[362] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Separate opinion of President Guillaume, §§ 9 and 12.

that the law permitted the exercise of universal jurisdiction in the absence of a territorial or personal active or passive connection. However, he also stated that "without any doubt, the evolution in the contemporary world of political ideas and conditions were favourable to the weakening of the territorial approach to the jurisdiction and to the emergence of a more functional approach in the meaning of serving a superior common goal".[363] In his separate opinion, Judge Rezek stated that universal jurisdiction without any territorial link was not authorised by today's international law. He stated that there would be no customary law "in formation" deriving from the isolated action of one State.[364] Judge ad hoc Bula-Bula, while stating that the principle of so-called universal jurisdiction could not seriously be contested in the terms of the relevant provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, was of the same opinion and furthermore found that Article 129, second paragraph, GC III did not envisage jurisdiction in absentia.[365] In his dissenting opinion, Judge Oda stated that:

> It is one fundamental principle that a State cannot exercise its jurisdiction outside its territory. However, the past few decades have seen a gradual widening in the scope of the jurisdiction to prescribe law . . . The scope of extraterritorial criminal jurisdiction has been expanded over the past few decades . . . Belgium is known for taking the lead in this field and its [Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993)] may well be at the forefront of a trend. There is some national case law and some treaty-made law evidencing such a trend.

He stated, however, that "the law is not sufficiently developed".[366] In their joint separate opinion, Judges Higgins, Kooijmans and Buergenthal stated that:

> There are . . . certain indications that a universal criminal jurisdiction for certain international crimes is clearly not regarded as unlawful. The duty to prosecute under those treaties which contain the aut dedere aut prosequi provisions opens the door to a jurisdiction based on the heinous nature of the crime rather than on links of territoriality or nationality (whether as perpetrator or victim). The 1949 Geneva Conventions lend support to this possibility, and are widely regarded as today reflecting customary international law.[367]

These judges also found that the ICJ judgement in the Lotus case supported the lawfulness of the exercise of universal jurisdiction in absentia. However, they found that it was necessary that "universal criminal jurisdiction be exercised only over those crimes regarded as the most heinous by the international [363] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Declaration of Judge Ranjeva, §§ 2, 5 and 9.

[364] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Separate opinion of Judge Rezek, § 6.
[365] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Separate opinion of Judge ad hoc Bula-Bula, §§ 74 and 75.
[366] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Dissenting opinion of Judge Oda, §§ 12 and 13.
[367] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Joint separate opinion of Judges Higgins, Kooijmans and Buergenthal, § 46.

community". Besides piracy, "war crimes . . . may be added to the list".[368] In addition, the judges considered that crimes against humanity as defined in the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind fell within this "small category [of acts] in respect of which an exercise of universal jurisdiction is not precluded under international law".[369] Judge Koroma, in his separate opinion, stated that "the judgement implies that while Belgium can initiate criminal proceedings in its jurisdiction against anyone", it would have to abide by the rules on immunities. He further stated that "in my considered opinion, today, together with piracy, universal jurisdiction is available for certain crimes, such as war crimes and crimes against humanity, including the slave trade and genocide".[370] Judge ad hoc Van den Wyngaert stated in her dissenting opinion that "it follows from the 'Lotus' case that a State has the right to provide extraterritorial jurisdiction on its territory unless there is a prohibition under international law". She stated that neither conventional nor customary law prohibited the exercise of universal jurisdiction in absentia and concluded that:

International law clearly permits universal jurisdiction for war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . For crimes against humanity, there is no clear treaty provision on the subject but it is accepted that, at least in the case of genocide, States are entitled to assert extraterritorial jurisdiction. In the case of war crimes, however, there is specific conventional international law in support of the proposition that States are entitled to assert jurisdiction over acts committed abroad: the relevant provision is Article 146 [GC IV], which lays down the principle aut dedere aut judicare for war crimes committed against civilians.[371] [emphasis in original]

306. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

Furthermore, at the individual level, that is, that of criminal liability, it would seem that one of the consequences of the jus cogens character bestowed by the international community upon the prohibition of torture is that every State is entitled to investigate, prosecute and punish or extradite individuals accused of torture, who are present in a territory under its jurisdiction. Indeed, it would be inconsistent on the one hand to prohibit torture to such an extent as to restrict the normally unfettered treaty-making power of sovereign States, and on the other hand bar States from prosecuting and punishing those torturers who have engaged in this odious practice abroad. This legal basis for States' universal jurisdiction over torture bears out and strengthens the legal foundation for such jurisdiction found by other

[368] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Joint separate opinion of Judges Higgins, Kooijmans and Buergenthal, §§ 49 and 60–61.
[369] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Joint separate opinion of Judges Higgins, Kooijmans and Buergenthal, § 65.
[370] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Separate opinion of Judge Koroma, §§ 7 and 9.
[371] ICJ, Arrest Warrant case, Judgement, 14 February 2002, Dissenting opinion of Judge ad hoc Van den Wyngaert, §§ 51–59.

courts in the inherently universal character of the crime. It has been held that international crimes being universally condemned wherever they occur, every State has the right to prosecute and punish the authors of such crimes.[372]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

307. In 1997, in a statement before the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC stated that:

Under the existing principle of universal jurisdiction, any State has the right to prosecute persons alleged to have committed war crimes and no consent is required from any other States. This principle simply reaffirms the fundamental notion that war criminals are not immune from prosecution; those responsible for the commission of war crimes are accountable for their acts and must be brought to justice.[373]

VI. Other Practice

308. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that:

A state has jurisdiction to define and prescribe punishment for certain offenses recognized by the community of nations as of universal concern, such as piracy, slave trade, attacks on or hijacking of aircraft, genocide, war crimes, and perhaps certain acts of terrorism, even where none of the bases of jurisdiction indicated in § 402 [Bases of Jurisdiction to Prescribe] is present.[374]

309. In 1993, in a memorandum on the war crimes tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, Human Rights Watch considered that the establishment of the Ad Hoc International Tribunal solely on the basis of the UN Security Council's mandate and not on universal jurisdiction would undermine the recognition of the Tribunal in the future.[375]

310. The Hague Agenda for Peace and Justice for the 21st Century, adopted at the Hague Appeal for Peace Conference in 1999, states that:

15. . . . It is now generally recognized that war crimes, crimes against the peace and violations of universally recognized human rights principles are matters of global rather than merely national concern . . . Civil society and domestic courts must do their part, as those of Spain are endeavoring to do in the case

[372] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 156.
[373] ICRC, Statement before the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 4–15 August 1997.
[374] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 404.
[375] Human Rights Watch, Memorandum on the War Crimes Tribunal for Former Yugoslavia, New York, 26 April 1993, pp. 5 and 6.

of Pinochet. The Hague Appeal will call upon national legislative and judicial systems worldwide to incorporate the principle of universal jurisdiction for such crimes as well as torts into their laws in order to ensure that serious violations of human rights, especially against children, are not treated with impunity.

. . .

20. Recent trends in national and regional litigation and prosecution make it possible for victims of gross human rights and humanitarian law violations to hold abusers accountable. This right exists in some domestic courts and regional tribunals, including the European and Inter-American Courts of Human Rights, and has led to litigation against members of the private sector, such as mercenaries and arms manufacturing and other corporations. The Hague Appeal for Peace will advocate for the extension of this right throughout the international legal order.[376]

311. In 2000, in a report entitled "The Pinochet Precedent. How Victims Can Pursue Human Rights Criminals Abroad", Human Rights Watch identified the crimes in respect of which international law recognised universal jurisdiction. In its discussion of war crimes, the report stated that:

Serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict, even if not considered "grave breaches" of the [1949] Geneva Conventions, probably also give rise to universal jurisdiction, allowing but not always requiring a state to prosecute those responsible . . . In recent years, the concept of war crimes has been extended to internal conflicts as well, giving third states the right (but not necessarily the duty) to exercise universal jurisdiction.[377]

312. In a resolution adopted at its Berlin Session in 1999, the Institute of International Law stated that:

The competent authorities of a State on the territory of which is found a person against whom is alleged a serious violation of international humanitarian law committed in a non-international armed conflict are entitled to prosecute and try such a person before their courts; they are urged to do so.[378]

313. In 2000, in its Final Report on the Exercise of Universal Jurisdiction in Respect of Gross Human Rights Offences, the ILA's Committee on International Human Rights Law and Practice stated that:

Parties to the Geneva Conventions are required to enact legislation to enable them to try persons alleged to have committed such offences, regardless of their nationality, to search for and prosecute such offenders and to assist each other in criminal [376] Hague Appeal for Peace Conference, Hague Agenda for Peace and Justice for the 21st Century, May 1999, Points 15 and 20.

[377] Human Rights Watch, The Pinochet Precedent: How Victims Can Pursue Human Rights Criminals Abroad, New York, March 2000, p. 7.

[378] Institute of International Law, Berlin Session, Resolution on the Application of International Humanitarian Law and Fundamental Human Rights in Armed Conflicts in which Non-State Entities are Parties, 25 August 1999, § VIII.

proceedings in connection with these offences. The exercise of universal jurisdiction is not permissive but clearly mandatory . . . [Serious violations of Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts not of an international character] have traditionally not been considered as criminal offences that are subject to universal jurisdiction. However, there is increasing support for the view that this position is no longer tenable. The atrocities committed during the armed conflicts in the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda have obviously contributed to this shift . . . It is difficult to see why domestic courts would not have the competence to try these same offences on the basis of universal jurisdiction . . . It is fair to assume . . . that [Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute] will also be regarded as an authoritative pronouncement on the violations of the law of war that qualify as war crimes under customary international law. A corollary then is that these offences are covered by the principle of universal jurisdiction.[379]

314. The Princeton Principles on Universal Jurisdiction, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Princeton Project on Universal Jurisdiction at Princeton University in 2001, states that:

1. For purposes of these Principles, universal jurisdiction is criminal jurisdiction based solely on the nature of the crime, without regard to where the crime was committed, the nationality of the alleged or convicted perpetrator, the nationality of the victim, or any other connection to the state exercising such jurisdiction.
2. Universal jurisdiction may be exercised by a competent and ordinary judicial body of any state in order to try a person duly accused of committing serious crimes under international law as specified in Principle 2(1), provided the person is present before such judicial body.
3. A state may rely on universal jurisdiction as a basis for seeking the extradition of a person accused or convicted of committing a serious crime under international law as specified in Principle 2(1) provided that it has established a prima facie case of the person's guilt and that the person sought to be extradited will be tried or the punishment carried out in accordance with international norms and standards on the protection of human rights in the context of criminal proceedings.
4. In exercising universal jurisdiction or in relying upon universal jurisdiction as a basis for seeking extradition, a state and its judicial organs shall observe international due process norms including but not limited to those involving the rights of the accused and victims, the fairness of the proceedings, and the independence and impartiality of the judiciary (hereinafter referred to as "international due process norms").
5. A state shall exercise universal jurisdiction in good faith and in accordance with its rights and obligations under international law.[380]

[379] ILA, Committee on International Human Rights Law and Practice, Final Report on the Exercise of Universal Jurisdiction in Respect of Gross Human Rights Offences, Report of the 69th Conference, London, 25–29 July 2000, pp. 408–409.

[380] Princeton Principles on Universal Jurisdiction, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Princeton Project on Universal Jurisdiction, Princeton University, 27 January 2001, Principle 1.

C. Prosecution of War Crimes

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

315. Article 6 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that:

The Tribunal established by the Agreement referred to in Article 1 hereof for the trial and punishment of the major war criminals of the European Axis countries shall have the power to try and punish persons who, acting in the interests of the European Axis countries, whether as individuals or as members of organizations, committed any of the following crimes.

316. Article VI of the 1948 Genocide Convention provides that:

Persons charged with genocide or any of the other acts enumerated in article III shall be tried by a competent tribunal of the State in the territory of which the act was committed, or by such international penal tribunal as may have jurisdiction with respect to those Contracting Parties which shall have accepted its jurisdiction.

317. Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV provide that:

The High Contracting Parties undertake to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing, or ordering to be committed, any of the grave breaches of the present Convention defined in [Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV].

Each High Contracting Party shall be under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches, and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts. It may also, if it prefers, and in accordance with the provisions of its own legislation, hand such persons over for trial to another High Contracting Party concerned, provided such High Contracting Party has made out a prima facie case. Each High Contracting Party shall take measures necessary for the suppression of all acts contrary to the provisions of the present Convention other than the grave breaches defined in [Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV].

318. Article 28 of the 1954 Hague Convention provides that:

The High Contracting Parties undertake to take, within the framework of their ordinary criminal jurisdiction, all necessary steps to prosecute and impose penal or disciplinary sanctions upon those persons, of whatever nationality, who commit or order to be committed a breach of the present Convention.

319. Article 85(1) AP I provides that "the provisions of the Conventions relating to the repression of breaches and grave breaches, supplemented by this Section, shall apply to the repression of breaches and grave breaches of this Protocol". The grave breaches of AP I are defined in Articles 11(4), 85(3) and 85(4) AP I. Articles 11 and 85 AP I were adopted by consensus.[381]

[381] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 69; Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

320. Article 8(1) of the 1979 International Convention against the Taking of Hostages provides that:

The State Party in the territory of which the alleged offender is found shall, if it does not extradite him, be obliged, without exception whatsoever and whether or not the offence was committed in its territory, to submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with the laws of that State. Those authorities shall take their decision in the same manner as in the case of any ordinary offence of a grave nature under the law of that State.

However, Article 12 of the Convention states that:

In so far as the [1949] Geneva Conventions . . . or the Additional Protocols to those Conventions are applicable to a particular act of hostage-taking, and in so far as States Parties to this Convention are bound under those conventions to prosecute or hand over the hostage-taker, the present Convention shall not apply to an act of hostage-taking committed in the course of armed conflicts as defined in the [1949] Geneva Conventions . . . and the Protocols thereto, including armed conflicts mentioned in [Article 1(4) AP I], in which peoples are fighting against colonial domination and alien occupation and against racist regimes in the exercise of their right of self-determination.

321. Article 5 of the 1984 Convention against Torture provides that:

Each State Party shall take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over the offences referred to in article 4 in the following cases:
(a) When the offences are committed in any territory under its jurisdiction or on board a ship or aircraft registered in that State;
(b) When the alleged offender is a national of that State;
(c) When the victim is a national of that State if that State considers it appropriate.

Each State Party shall likewise take such measures as may be necessary to establish its jurisdiction over such offences in cases where the alleged offender is present in any territory under its jurisdiction and it does not extradite him pursuant to article 8 to any of the States mentioned in paragraph 1 of this article.[382]

322. Article 7 of the 1984 Convention against Torture emphasises States' duty to prosecute or extradite alleged offenders, stating that:

The State Party in the territory under whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in article 4 is found shall in the cases contemplated in article 5, if it does not extradite him, submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution.

[382] Similar requirements to prosecute or extradite are also found in: 1970 Hague Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, Article 4; 1971 Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, Article 7; 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, Article 22(2)(a)(iv); 1971 OAS Convention to Prevent and Punish Acts of Terrorism, Article 5; 1972 Protocol Amending the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, Article 14; 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, Article V; 1973 Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, Article 7; 1977 European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism, Article 7; 1979 Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, Article 9; 1988 Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, Article 10; 1989 UN Mercenary Convention, Article 12.

323. Article 7(1) of the 1993 CWC provides that:

Each State Party shall, in accordance with its constitutional processes, adopt the necessary measures to implement its obligations under this Convention. In particular, it shall:

(a) Prohibit natural and legal persons anywhere on its territory or in any other place under its jurisdiction as recognized by international law from undertaking any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention, including enacting penal legislation with respect to such activity;
(b) Not permit in any place under its control any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention; and
(c) Extend its penal legislation enacted under subparagraph (a) to any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention undertaken anywhere by natural persons, possessing its nationality, in conformity with international law.

324. Article 9(2) of the 1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel provides that "each State Party shall make the crimes set out in paragraph 1 [of Article 9] punishable by appropriate penalties which shall take into account their grave nature".

325. Article IV of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons provides that:

The acts constituting the forced disappearance of persons shall be considered offenses in every State Party. Consequently, each State Party shall take measures to establish its jurisdiction over such cases in the following instances:

a. When the forced disappearance of persons or any act constituting such offense was committed within its jurisdiction;
b. When the accused is a national of that state;
c. When the victim is a national of that state and that state sees fit to do so.

Every State Party shall, moreover, take the necessary measures to establish its jurisdiction over the crime described in this Convention when the alleged criminal is within its territory and it does not proceed to extradite him.

However, Article XV excludes the application of the Convention in international armed conflicts governed by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.

326. Article 14 of the 1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW provides that:

1. Each High Contracting Party shall take all appropriate steps, including legislative and other measures, to prevent and suppress violations of this Protocol by persons or on territory under its jurisdiction and control.
2. The measures envisaged in paragraph 1 of this Article include appropriate measures to ensure the imposition of penal sanctions against persons who, in relation to an armed conflict and contrary to the provisions of this Protocol, wilfully kill or cause serious injury to civilians and to bring such persons to justice.

327. Article 9 of the 1997 Ottawa Convention provides that:

Each State Party shall take all appropriate legal, administrative and other measures, including the imposition of penal sanctions, to prevent and suppress any activity prohibited to a State Party under this Convention undertaken by persons or on territory under its jurisdiction or control.

328. The preamble to the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

Affirming that the most serious crimes of concern to the international community as a whole must not go unpunished and that their effective prosecution must be ensured by taking measures at the national level and by enhancing international co-operation,

. . .

Recalling that it is the duty of every State to exercise its criminal jurisdiction over those responsible for international crimes.

329. Article 12 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

1. A State which becomes a Party to this Statute thereby accepts the jurisdiction of the Court with respect to the crimes referred to in article 5.
2. In the case of article 13, paragraph (a) or (c), the Court may exercise its jurisdiction if one or more of the following States are Parties to this Statute or have accepted the jurisdiction of the Court in accordance with paragraph 3:
   (a) The State on the territory of which the conduct in question occurred or, if the crime was committed on board a vessel or aircraft, the State of registration of that vessel or aircraft;
   (b) The State of which the person accused of the crime is a national.
3. If the acceptance of a State which is not a Party to this Statute is required under paragraph 2, that State may, by declaration lodged with the Registrar, accept the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court with respect to the crime in question. The accepting State shall cooperate with the Court without any delay or exception in accordance with Part 9.

330. Article 13 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

The Court may exercise its jurisdiction with respect to a crime referred to in article 5 in accordance with the provisions of this Statute if:

(a) A situation in which one or more of such crimes appears to have been committed is referred to the Prosecutor by a State Party in accordance with article 14;
(b) A situation in which one or more of such crimes appears to have been committed is referred to the Prosecutor by the Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations; or
(c) The Prosecutor has initiated an investigation in respect of such a crime in accordance with article 15.

331. Article 15(2) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention concerning "Serious violations of this Protocol" provides that:

Each Party shall adopt such measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences under its domestic law the offences set forth in this Article [i.e. serious violations of the Protocol] and to make such offences punishable by appropriate penalties. When doing so, Parties shall comply with general principles of law and international law, including the rules extending individual criminal responsibility to persons other than those who directly commit the act.

332. Article 16(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention concerning "Jurisdiction" provides that:

Without prejudice to paragraph 2, each Party shall take the necessary legislative measures to establish its jurisdiction over offences set forth in Article 15 in the following cases:

(a) when such an offence is committed in the territory of that State;
(b) when the alleged offender is a national of that State;
(c) in the case of offences set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs (a) to (c), when the alleged offender is present in its territory.

333. Article 17(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention concerning "Prosecution" provides that:

The Party in whose territory the alleged offender of an offence set forth in Article 15 subparagraphs 1(a) to (c) is found to be present shall, if it does not extradite that person, submit, without exception whatsoever and without undue delay, the case to its competent authorities, for the purpose of prosecution, through proceedings in accordance with its domestic law or with, if applicable, the relevant rules of international law.

334. Article 21 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention concerning "Measures regarding other violations" provides that:

Each Party shall adopt such legislative, administrative or disciplinary measures as may be necessary to suppress the following acts when committed intentionally:

(a) any use of cultural property in violation of the Convention or this Protocol;
(b) any illicit export, other removal or transfer of ownership of cultural property from occupied territory in violation of the Convention or this Protocol.

335. Article 22(1) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "this Protocol shall apply in the event of an armed conflict not of an international character, occurring within the territory of one of the Parties".

336. Article 1 of the 2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts provides that "States Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that members of their armed forces who have not attained the age of 18 years do not take a direct part in hostilities".

337. Article 4(1) and (2) of the 2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts provides that:

1. Armed groups that are distinct from the armed forces of a State should not, under any circumstances, recruit or use in hostilities persons under the age of 18 years.

2. States Parties shall take all feasible measures to prevent such recruitment and use, including the adoption of legal measures necessary to prohibit and criminalize such practices.

338. Article 6(1) of the 2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts provides that "each State Party shall take all necessary legal, administrative and other measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions of the present Protocol within its jurisdiction".

Other Instruments

339. Article 19 of the 1956 New Delhi Draft Rules provides that:

All States or Parties concerned are under the obligation to search for and bring to trial any person having committed, or ordered to be committed, an infringement of the present rules, unless they prefer to hand the person over for trial to another State or Party concerned with the case.

340. Paragraph 18 of the 1989 Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions provides that:

Governments shall ensure that persons identified by the investigation as having participated in extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions in any territory under their jurisdiction are brought to justice. Governments shall either bring such persons to justice or cooperate to extradite any such persons to other countries wishing to exercise jurisdiction. This principle shall apply irrespectively of who and where the perpetrators or the victims are, their nationalities or where the offence was committed.

341. Article 6(1) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, dealing with the "Obligation to try or extradite", provides that "a State in whose territory an individual alleged to have committed a crime against the peace and security of mankind is present shall either try or extradite him".

342. Article 10 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "the Parties . . . shall repress any misuse of the [red cross] emblem and attacks on persons or property under its protection".

343. Article 11 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that:

Each party undertakes, when it is officially informed of [an allegation of violations of IHL] made or forwarded by the ICRC, to open an inquiry promptly and pursue it conscientiously, and to take the necessary steps to put an end to the alleged violations or prevent their recurrence and to punish those responsible in accordance with the law in force.

344. Article 3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "the Parties . . . shall repress any misuse of the [red cross] emblem or attacks on persons or property under its protection".
345. Article 5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that:

> Each party undertakes, when it is informed, in particular by the ICRC, of an allegation of violations of international humanitarian law, to open an enquiry promptly and pursue it conscientiously, and to take the necessary steps to put an end to the alleged violations or prevent their recurrence and to punish those responsible in accordance with the law in force.

346. Article 1 of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "the International Tribunal shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute".
347. Article III(1) of the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala provides that "the Parties agree on the need for a firm action against impunity. The Government shall not sponsor the adoption of legislative or any other type of measures designed to prevent the prosecution and punishment of persons responsible for human rights violations". Article III(3) provides that "no special law or exclusive jurisdiction may be invoked to uphold impunity in respect of human rights violations".
348. Paragraph 20 of the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict provides that "in the event of breaches of rules of international humanitarian law protecting the environment, measures shall be taken to stop any such violation and to prevent further breaches".
349. Article 1 of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that:

> The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994, in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

350. Article 9 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Obligation to extradite or prosecute", provides that:

> Without prejudice to the jurisdiction of an international criminal court, the State Party in the territory of which an individual alleged to have committed a crime set out in articles 17, 18, 19 or 20 [crime of genocide, crimes against humanity, crimes against United Nations and associated personnel, war crimes] is found shall extradite or prosecute that individual.

351. Section 4 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that "in cases of violations of international humanitarian law, members of the military personnel of a United Nations force are subject to prosecution in their national courts".

352. Article 3 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

> The obligation to respect, ensure respect for and enforce international human rights and humanitarian law includes, inter alia, a State's duty to:
> (a) Take appropriate legal and administrative measures to prevent violations;
> (b) Investigate violations and, where appropriate, take action against the violator in accordance with domestic and international law;
> (c) Provide victims with equal and effective access to justice irrespective of who may be the ultimate bearer of responsibility for the violation;
> (d) Afford appropriate remedies to victims; and
> (e) Provide for or facilitate reparation to victims.

353. Article 4 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that "violations of international ... humanitarian law norms that constitute crimes under international law carry the duty to prosecute persons alleged to have committed these violations, to punish the perpetrators adjudged to have committed these violations".

354. Paragraph 52 of the 2000 Cairo Plan of Action urges States "to implement international humanitarian law in full, in particular by adopting national legislation to tackle the culture of impunity and to bring to justice the perpetrators of war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

355. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that:

> In the [Geneva] Conventions and [AP I], it is provided that the governments shall take such legislative measures as may be necessary to determine adequate penal sanctions to be applied to persons committing or ordering the commission of any of the grave breaches; the persons accused of having committed, or of having ordered to commit, those breaches ... shall be searched for.
> ... It is also possible to hand the author of the violations over to an international tribunal, in case such a tribunal has been established.[383]

The manual also provides that:

> At the request of one of the parties to the conflict, an enquiry shall be instituted, in a manner to be decided between the interested parties, concerning any alleged violation of the [Geneva] Conventions. If an agreement is not reached as to the procedure of investigation, the parties shall agree to elect an arbitrator who shall decide the procedure to be followed.

[383] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.02.

If a violation is established, the parties to the conflict must put an end to it and repress it with the least possible delay.[384]

In addition, the manual states that "the contracting parties and the parties to the conflict shall repress grave breaches and adopt the measures necessary to ensure that any violation of the Conventions or of Protocol I cease".[385]

356. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that:

Nations are required to search out, prosecute, and if necessary, extradite individuals who are suspected of breaches of LOAC. Other war crimes may be so serious as to warrant or justify instituting criminal prosecutions. In some cases serious war crimes will result in a formal war crimes trial.[386]

The manual further states that:

Notwithstanding the practical difficulties that may be experienced in bringing enemy war criminals to trial, ADF members should not underestimate the resolve of the Australian Government to vigorously prosecute war criminals. Given Australia's demonstrated support for human rights, ADF members can expect that appropriate action will be taken should they violate LOAC. An international fact-finding commission has been established to investigate LOAC breaches. Australia has accepted the operation of this commission.[387]

357. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials, following the Second World War, ... only confirmed what had happened after the First World War, i.e., prosecution of foreigners before national tribunals for violations of the law of war".[388] It adds that "the application of the criminal law of war remains in the hands of national communities ... Since the Second World War, national tribunals have ... judged members of their own armed forces for 'war crimes' or other punishable acts which cannot be justified by the situation of war."[389] The manual further states that:

The States signatory to the [Geneva] Conventions undertook to take a series of measures to promote respect thereof.

These measures can be summarized as follows:

...

2) criminalisation of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions ...
3) search for, identification of and prosecution by the national courts of the authors of grave breaches, regardless of their nationality, or delivery (extradition) of those authors to the State asking for them, within the limits of the legislation in force.[390]

[384] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.06.
[385] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.07.
[386] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1306.
[387] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1310.
[388] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 18, see also p. 54.
[389] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 19.
[390] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.

358. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations provides that violators of IHL are "war criminals who may be brought before military tribunals".[391]
359. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "any act contrary to respect for the Law of War must be sanctioned".[392]
360. Canada's Unit Guide notes that the Geneva Conventions "impose an obligation on all nations which have ratified them to search for and try all persons who committed or ordered to be committed grave breaches of the Conventions".[393]
361. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

> Parties to the conflict shall take such measures as may be necessary to suppress and punish all breaches of [GC III]. If a breach amounts to a grave breach all persons responsible therefor, or having ordered such acts, shall, regardless of their nationality, be liable to be tried by any party to [GC III]. They may also be handed over by the latter for trial by any other party to [GC III] able to prosecute effectively.[394]

The manual also provides that:

> At the request of a party to the conflict, an enquiry shall be instituted in a manner to be decided between the interested parties, concerning any alleged violation of the Geneva Conventions. If a violation is established, parties to the conflict must put an end to it and punish those responsible with the least possible delay.[395]

The manual further states that "States have the obligation to repress grave breaches (i.e., ensure perpetrators are accused and tried) and to take measures necessary to suppress (i.e., bring to an end) all other violations".[396] In addition, it states that:

> 37. The Criminal Code of Canada contains several provisions that allow Canadian courts to assume jurisdiction over and try alleged war criminals in a wide variety of circumstances.
> 38. Any state into whose hands a person who has allegedly committed a grave breach falls is entitled to institute criminal proceedings, even though that state was neutral during the conflict in which the offence was alleged to have been committed. Since 1945, it has been generally accepted that if a state is unwilling to institute its own proceedings, it may hand the person over to a claimant state on presentation of prima facie evidence that the alleged offender has committed the offence in question . . .
> 43. The four Geneva Conventions obligate the parties thereto to enact such legislation as may be necessary to provide effective sanctions for persons committing or ordering any of the acts which would constitute grave breaches under the Conventions. They also provide that the parties will take the measures

[391] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 35.
[392] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 25, § 121.1.
[393] Canada, Unit Guide (1990), § 702.1.
[394] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-6, § 52.
[395] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 15-3, § 18.
[396] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-2, § 11.

necessary to suppress any violation of the Conventions not amounting to grave breaches.[397]

362. Canada's Code of Conduct states that:

It is essential that any alleged breaches of these rules [of the Code of Conduct] and the Law of Armed Conflict be investigated rapidly in as impartial a manner as possible. An impartial investigation will not only assist in bringing violators to justice, thereby maintaining discipline, but will also provide the best opportunity to clear anyone who has not acted improperly. In most cases that investigation will be carried out by the military police or National Investigation Service.[398]

363. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "war crimes shall be repudiated and sanctioned by the international community, by States through their legislation and by civil society".[399] It specifies that, before conflicts, States are obliged "to establish in national legislation, especially in criminal law, rules which define and punish crimes . . . against IHL".[400] The manual further states that "violations committed by officials [of the State or] . . . soldiers . . . shall be sanctioned in compliance with the disciplinary, administrative and criminal legislation of the State".[401] This is also the case for violations committed by members of organised armed groups.[402]

364. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic reminds soldiers that they "may be tried and convicted for crimes committed in combat even after they have left the service. Furthermore, criminal acts may make your mission harder and thereby endanger your life."[403]

365. Ecuador's Naval Manual states that "in the event of a clearly established violation of the law of armed conflict, the aggrieved State may: . . . punish individual offenders either during the conflict or upon cessation of hostilities".[404] It adds that:

Belligerent States have the obligation, under international law, to punish their own nationals, whether members of the armed forces or civilians, who commit war crimes. International law also provides that belligerent States have the right to punish enemy armed forces personnel and enemy civilians who fall under their control for such offences.[405]

366. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "grave breaches of the law of war are war crimes which must be investigated, brought before each party's courts and punished under criminal law".[406]

[397] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), pp. 16-5 and 16-6, §§ 37–38 and 43.
[398] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 11, § 3.
[399] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 31.
[400] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 27.
[401] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 36.
[402] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 37.
[403] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 12.
[404] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.
[405] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5.
[406] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.

367. France's LOAC Teaching Note, in a part dealing with "grave breaches of the rules of the law of armed conflict", states that:

> On the criminal level, persons charged with [grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions] may be prosecuted before French judicial courts, but also before foreign courts or international criminal courts having jurisdiction over war crimes: today this means the International Criminal Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda for the crimes committed solely on the occasion of these two conflicts; tomorrow, this will mean . . . the International Criminal Court which will have jurisdiction over all war crimes and crimes against humanity in case of the failure of national tribunals.[407]

368. Germany's Military Manual provides that "each member of the armed forces who has violated the rules of international humanitarian law must be aware of the fact that he can be prosecuted according to penal or disciplinary provisions".[408] The manual refers to Articles 49 and 50 GC I, 50 and 51 GC II, 129 and 130 GC III, 146 and 147 GC IV and 85 AP I and states that "the four Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I oblige the contracting parties to make grave breaches of the protective provisions liable to punishment and to take all suitable measures to ensure compliance with the Conventions".[409]

369. Germany's IHL Manual provides that "under public international law, every State has the duty to hold responsible, in a criminal and in a disciplinary way, the members even of its own armed forces who have violated the rules of international humanitarian law".[410]

370. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "war crimes . . . are punished by the military penal code applicable in times of war, and international cooperation for the pursuit, arrest, extradition and punishment of the persons who have allegedly committed [such crimes] is established".[411]

371. South Korea's Operational Law Manual provides that persons who have committed a grave breach of IHL "shall be tried or extradited".[412]

372. The Military Manual of the Netherlands refers to Article 86 AP I, noting the duty to repress grave breaches and to take measures necessary to suppress all other breaches which result from a failure to act when under a duty to do so.[413]

373. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "hostile persons who have committed a war crime and fall into the hands of [one's] own troops must be tried".[414]

374. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

[407] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[408] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1207.
[409] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1208.
[410] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 803.
[411] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 86.
[412] South Korea, Operational Law Manual (1996), p. 193, § 4.
[413] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. IX-3/IX-6.
[414] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-45.

The [Geneva] Conventions make one further departure of significance. For the first time they provide in treaty form a clear obligation upon States to punish what the Conventions describe as "grave breaches", even if those States are not parties to the conflict, the offenders and the victims not their nationals, and even though the offences were committed outside the territorial jurisdiction of the State concerned. In other words, the Conventions have introduced the concept of universal jurisdiction in so far as grave breaches are concerned, and if the State in question is unwilling to try an offender found within its territory, it is obliged to hand him over for trial to any party to the Convention making out a prima facie case.[415]

The manual also notes that "in the event of 'any alleged violations' of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions an enquiry must be instituted at the request of a Party to the conflict. If a violation be established, the Parties to the conflict must put an end to it and punish it with the least possible delay."[416] It further provides that:

The four Geneva Conventions require the parties to them to enact such legislation as may be necessary to provide effective sanctions for persons committing or ordering any of the acts which would constitute grave breaches under the Conventions. They also provide that the parties will take the measures necessary to suppress any violation of the Convention not amounting to grave breaches.[417]

The manual adds that "any grave breach described as such in the [Geneva] Conventions and the first protocol [AP I] shall be an indictable offence".[418]

375. Nigeria's Military Manual recalls that "the High Contracting Parties [to AP I] and the parties to the conflict shall repress breaches, and take measures necessary to suppress all other breaches of the [Geneva] conventions or of [AP I] which result from a failure to act when under a duty to do so".[419]

376. According to Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War, "the Geneva Conventions stipulate that a contracting party shall enact all necessary legislation to prohibit acts which contravene their provisions".[420]

377. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines provides that:

All human rights-related incidents allegedly committed by members of the AFP and PNP in the course of security/police operations shall be immediately investigated and if evidence warrants, charges shall be filed in the proper courts. Reports of investigation as well as actions taken shall be submitted to GHQ or PNP HQs fifteen (15) days after receipt of information about the alleged human rights violation. [The] same shall be forwarded to the Department of National Defense or Department of Interior and Local Government.[421]

[415] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 117.5.
[416] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1609.
[417] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1711.1 and 1711.4.
[418] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1712.
[419] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 9, § 9e.
[420] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 7.
[421] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2(b)(1).

378. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "signatory States [of the Geneva Conventions] are required to treat as criminals under domestic law anyone who commits or orders a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions]".[422] It adds that:

Grave breaches of the law of war are regarded as war crimes. They shall be repressed by penal sanctions . . .

Grave breaches are indictable offence[s] under Section 7 of the Geneva Conventions Act, RSA, 1957. South Africa is obliged to search out and prosecute or extradite those who have committed a grave breach. For all breaches (i.e. violations of the law of war), South Africa has an obligation to take steps to ensure that the offences do not happen again . . . If breaches went unpunished, it would signify the degradation of human values and the regression of the entire concept of humanity.[423]

379. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol I impose on States parties the obligation to adopt in their domestic legislation all the legislative measures necessary to determine adequate penal sanctions against those who commit, or order to be committed, any kind of grave breaches".[424] It states that "Spain has complied with the obligation undertaken when ratifying the Geneva Conventions and dedicated Title II of Volume II of the Military Criminal Code to categorize and sanction the offences against the laws and customs of war".[425] The manual also provides that:

States have the obligation to search for persons accused of having committed, or having ordered to be committed, grave breaches, being obliged to make them appear before their own tribunals, regardless of their nationality. They can also agree to the extradition of those persons in order for them to be judged by other States, in accordance with the legal obligations which regulate the said extradition.

. . .

With regard to breaches that are not of a grave nature, the necessary measures must be taken for their immediate cessation.[426]

380. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that:

It is incumbent upon parties to the Conventions to enact legislation necessary to apply effective sanctions to persons committing, or ordering to be committed, breaches of the Conventions. Each State is obliged to search for persons accused of committing or ordering a grave breach and shall bring them, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts. A permitted alternative is to hand over the wanted person to another contracting party, provided that this state has an interest in punishing the breach and has made out a prima facie case.

For breaches not considered as grave, the contracting parties' obligations are limited to taking any steps needed to ensure that the transgressions cease.[427]

[422] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 35.
[423] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), §§ 41 and 42.
[424] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1), see also § 1.1.d.(6).
[425] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1)
[426] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 11.8.b.(1) and 11.8.b.(2).
[427] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, pp. 93 and 94.

381. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that:

1. Violations of the laws and customs of war must be punished. Those responsible may be brought either before the courts of their own country or before the courts of the injured State, or before an international tribunal.
2. Each Contracting Party is also bound to search for and prosecute in its own courts persons who have committed grave breaches of the provisions of the law of nations in time of war.[428]

382. The UK Military Manual notes that "the Regulations [1907 HR] themselves . . . provide that the perpetrators of the particular offences of seizure, damage or wilful destruction of churches, hospitals, schools, museums, historic monuments, works of art, etc., shall be prosecuted".[429] It also states that:

In the case of "any alleged violations" of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions an inquiry must be instituted at the request of a party to the conflict. If a violation be established, the parties to the conflict must put an end to it and punish it with the least possible delay. These provisions form an important method of ensuring that the laws of war are observed by belligerents.[430]

The manual further states that:

All parties to the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions undertook to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing or ordering to be committed any of the "grave breaches" of the Conventions. Parties are also bound to search for persons alleged to have committed, or ordered, "grave breaches", and regardless of their nationality, to bring them to trial in their own courts. If a party so prefers, and in accordance with the provisions of its own legislation, it may hand such persons over for trial to another State concerned which is a party to the Conventions, provided that that other State has made out a prima facie case against those persons.[431]

383. The US Field Manual states that:

At the request of a Party to the conflict, an enquiry shall be instituted, in a manner to be decided between the interested Parties, concerning any alleged violation of the [Geneva] Convention[s] . . . Once the violation has been established, the Parties to the conflict shall put an end to it and shall repress it with the least possible delay.[432]

The manual adds that:

The High Contracting Parties [to the Geneva Conventions] undertake to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing, or ordering to be committed, any of the grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions . . .

Each High Contracting Party shall be under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, . . . grave breaches

[428] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 198.
[429] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 618.
[430] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 621.
[431] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 639.
[432] US, Field Manual (1956), § 496.

and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts. It may also, if it prefers, and in accordance with the provisions of its own legislation, hand such persons over for trial to another High Contracting Party concerned, provided such High Contracting Party has made out a prima facie case ...

[These] principles ... are declaratory of the obligations of belligerents under customary international law to take measures for the punishment of war crimes committed by all persons, including members of a belligerent's own armed forces ...

Commanding officers of United States troops must insure that war crimes committed by members of their forces against enemy personnel are promptly and adequately punished.[433]

384. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that:

Domestic tribunals have the competence and, under the grave breaches articles of the Geneva Conventions, the strict obligation to punish certain violations ... Ad hoc international tribunals, such as those established in Germany and Japan following World War II, did punish individuals for their personal actions violating the law of armed conflict. However, the importance of criminal responsibility ... primarily relates to a state's own efforts to enforce the law of armed conflict with respect to its own armed forces.[434] [emphasis in original]

It further states that:

There are express obligations to search for persons alleged to have committed grave breaches, to bring them to trial or extradite them, to take all measures necessary to suppress all acts contrary to the Conventions and to implement all obligations ... The United States has for many years urged measures on the international scene to improve the implementation and better observance of the law of armed conflict ...

Within the Geneva Conventions system, state responsibility to repress breaches is stressed, and no provision is made for international tribunals within the Conventions ...

In the United States, jurisdiction is not limited to offenses against US nationals but extends to offenses against victims of other nationalities. Violations by adversary personnel, when appropriate, are tried as offenses against international law which forms part of the law of the United States. In occupied territories, trials are usually held under occupation law. Trials of such personnel have been held in regular military courts, military commissions, provost courts, military government courts, and other military tribunals of the United States, as well as in international tribunals.[435]

385. The US Soldier's Manual reminds soldiers that they "may be tried and convicted for crimes committed in combat even after they have left the service. Furthermore, criminal acts may make your mission harder and thereby endanger your life".[436]

386. The US Instructor's Guide notes that "nearly all nations have signed the Geneva Conventions and have agreed in doing so to search out, to bring to trial, [433] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 506(a) and (b) and 507(b).

[434] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 10-6.
[435] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 15-2(b), 15-3(a) and 15-4(a).
[436] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 27.

and to punish all persons who commit a grave breach of the conventions. You may be tried and convicted even after leaving the service".[437]

387. The US Naval Handbook provides that "in the event of a clearly established violation of the law of armed conflict, the aggrieved nation may: . . . punish individual offenders either during the conflict or upon cessation of hostilities".[438] (emphasis in original) The Handbook further states that:

> Belligerents have the obligation under international law to punish their own nationals, whether members of the armed forces or civilians, who commit war crimes. International law also provides that belligerents have the right to punish enemy armed forces personnel and enemy civilians who fall under their control for such offenses.[439]

388. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that:

> The parties to a conflict have a duty to prevent violations of the laws of war by all available means and to call to account and punish perpetrators, regardless of their nationality. States are obliged, in peace time, to provide in their legislation that serious violations of the laws of war are crimes.[440]

The manual also states that "parties to a conflict are authorised and obliged to determine the criminal responsibility of members of their own or enemy armed forces, that is, their own or enemy citizens who ordered the commission or committed war crimes or other serious violations of the laws of war".[441] It further states that:

> Persons who commit a war crime or other serious violations of the laws of war shall be brought to justice before their own national courts or, if they fall into enemy hands, before his courts. The perpetrators of such criminal acts may also be brought to justice before an international court if such court is established.[442]

National Legislation

389. Argentina's Law on the Creation of a National Committee to Investigate War Crimes Committed during the War in the South Atlantic establishes:

> within the Ministry of National Defence the National Committee to investigate War Crimes which aims at clarifying the facts related to the possible commission of war crimes during the period of the belligerent incidents which occurred in the South Atlantic between the months of April and June of [1982].[443]

390. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides for the introduction of the title "Offences against protected persons and objects in case of armed conflict" in the Code of Military Justice as amended.[444] This title provides for

[437] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 13.
[438] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.
[439] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[440] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 18.
[441] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 32.
[442] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 20.
[443] Argentina, Law on the Creation of a National Committee to Investigate War Crimes Committed during the War in the South Atlantic (1995), Article 1.
[444] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 287, introducing a new Title XVIII, Chapter I in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).

the punishment of specified prohibited acts "committed in the event of armed conflict".[445] As to this title scope of application, the Draft Code states that:

> [The present title applies to the following protected persons:]
> 1) The wounded, sick and shipwrecked and medical or religious personnel protected by [GC I and II or AP I];
> 2) Prisoners of war protected by [GC III or AP I];
> 3) The civilian population and [individual] civilian persons protected by [GC IV or AP I];
> 4) Persons hors de combat and the personnel of the protecting power and of its substitute, protected by [the Geneva Conventions or AP I];
> 5) Parlementaires and the persons accompanying them, protected by [the 1899 Hague Convention II];
> 6) Any other person [to which AP II] or any other international treaty to which Argentina is a party applies.[446]

The Draft Code further provides that:

> A soldier who, at the occasion of an armed conflict, commits . . . any other violation or act contrary to the provisions of the international treaties to which Argentina is a party and relating to the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, the treatment of prisoners of war, the protection of civilian persons and the protection of cultural property in case of armed conflict, will be punished.[447]

391. In its Chapter 33 entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind", Armenia's Penal Code provides for the punishment of certain acts, committed during armed conflicts, which violate the laws and customs of war, including "Serious breaches of international humanitarian law during armed conflict", crimes against humanity and genocide.[448]

392. Australia's War Crimes Act as amended gives Australian courts jurisdiction over individuals accused of war crimes committed during the Second World War. The Act defines a war crime as a serious crime committed "in the course of hostilities in a war", "in the course of an occupation", "in pursuing a policy associated with the conduct of a war or with an occupation" or, "on behalf of, or in the interests of, a power conducting a war or engaged in an occupation". War is defined as "a) a war, whether declared or not; b) any other armed conflict between countries; or c) a civil war or similar armed conflict (whether or not involving Australia or a country allied or associated with Australia) in so far as it occurred in Europe in the period beginning on 1 September 1939 and ending on 8 May 1945".[449]

[445] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Articles 289-296, introducing new Articles 873-880 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[446] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 288, introducing a new Article 872 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[447] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 296, introducing a new Article 880 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[448] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Articles 383, 386–387 and 390–397.
[449] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Sections 5, 7 and 9.

393. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides for the punishment of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I. It states that:

> A person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person of a grave breach of any of the Conventions or of Protocol I is guilty of an indictable offence.
> . . .
> This section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship.[450]

394. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act contains a list of acts qualified as "Genocide" (Sections 268.3-268.7), "Crimes against humanity" (Sections 268.8–268.23), "War crimes that are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions" (Sections 268.24–268.34), "Other serious war crimes that are committed in the course of an international armed conflict" (Sections 268.35–268.68), "War crimes that are serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and are committed in the course of an armed conflict that is not an international armed conflict" (Sections 268.69–268.76), "War crimes that are other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in an armed conflict that is not an international armed conflict" (Sections 268.77–268.94), "War crimes that are grave breaches of Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions" (Sections 268.95–268.101). The Act also includes the penalty to be imposed by Australian courts for each of these crimes.[451]

395. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War, which establishes disciplinary, administrative and criminal liability, is applicable in international and non-international armed conflicts.[452]

396. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides for punishment, inter alia, in case of war crimes (Article 57). In the chapter entitled "War crimes", the Code contains further provisions criminalising: the use of "mercenaries" (Article 114); "violations of [the] laws and customs of war" (Article 115); "violations of the norms of international humanitarian law in time of armed conflict" (Article 116); "negligence or giving criminal orders in time of armed conflict" (Article 117); "pillage" (Article 118); and "abuse of protected signs" (Article 119).[453]

397. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act provides that:

> (1) A Tribunal shall have the power to try and punish any person irrespective of his nationality who, being a member of any armed, defence or auxiliary forces commits or has committed in the territory of Bangladesh, whether before or after the commencement of this act, any of the following crimes.

[450] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1) and (3).
[451] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Sections 268.3–268.101.
[452] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 8 and 31.
[453] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 57 and 114–119.

(2) The following acts or any of them are crimes within the jurisdiction of a Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility, namely: –
(a) Crimes against Humanity . . .
(b) Crimes against Peace . . .
(c) Genocide . . .
(d) War Crimes . . .
(e) Violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Convention of 1949 . . .
(f) Any other crimes under international law;
(g) Attempt abatement or conspiracy to commit any such crimes;
(h) Complicity in or failure to prevent commission of any such crimes.[454]

398. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that:

A grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 that would, if committed in Barbados, be an offence under any law of Barbados, constitutes an offence under that law when committed outside Barbados.
. . . A person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados.[455]

399. The Criminal Code of Belarus, in a chapter entitled "War crimes and other violations of the laws and customs of war", provides, inter alia, for the punishment of specified acts, such as "mercenary activities" (Article 133), "use of weapons of mass destruction" (Article 134), "violations of the laws and customs of war" (Article 135), "criminal offences against the norms of international humanitarian law during armed conflicts" (Article 136), or "abuse of signs protected by international treaties" (Article 138).[456]

400. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides for the punishment of genocide and crimes against humanity.[457] It further provides that acts defined as:

grave breaches . . . which cause injury or damage, by act or omission, to persons or objects protected by the [Geneva Conventions] and by Protocols I and II additional to those Conventions . . . shall . . . constitute crimes under international law and be punishable in accordance with the provisions of the present Act.[458]

The Law lists such grave breaches, stating, however, that this list is "without prejudice to the criminal provisions applicable to other breaches of the Conventions referred to in the present Act and without prejudice to criminal provisions

[454] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3.
[455] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(1)–(2).
[456] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 132–138.
[457] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Articles 1(1) and 1(2).
[458] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3).

applicable to breaches committed out of negligence".[459] In addition, it provides that:

> Belgian courts shall be competent to deal with breaches provided for in the present Act, irrespective of where such breaches have been committed.
>
> In respect of breaches committed abroad by a Belgian national against a foreigner, no filing of complaint by the foreigner or his family or official notice by the authority of the country in which the breach was committed shall be required.[460]

401. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina contains provisions regarding the punishment of certain acts, some of them committed "in time of war or armed conflict", such as: "war crimes against civilians" (Article 154); "war crimes against the wounded and sick" (Article 155); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 156); "organizing a group and instigating the commission of genocide and war crimes" (Article 157); "unlawful killing or wounding of the enemy" (Article 158); "marauding" (Article 159); "using forbidden means of warfare" (Article 160); "violating the protection granted to bearers of flags of truce" (Article 161); "cruel treatment of the wounded, sick and prisoners of war" (Article 163); "destruction of cultural and historical monuments" (Article 164); and "misuse of international emblems" (Article 166).[461] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provisions.[462]

402. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the scheduled conventions as is referred to in the following articles respectively of those conventions, that is to say [Article 50 GC I, Article 51 GC II, Article 130 GC III, Article 147 GC IV] shall be guilty of an offence and [be punished].
>
> In the case of an offence under this section [i.e. a grave breach in the meaning of Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC and 147 GC IV] committed outside Botswana, a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in Botswana as if the offence had been committed in that place.[463]

403. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of a list of specified acts entitled "Crimes against the laws and customs of waging war".[464]

404. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes aims at "integrating into Burundian legislation the crime of genocide, the crimes against humanity and war crimes, and to organize the procedure of

[459] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3).
[460] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 7.
[461] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 154–161 and 163–166.
[462] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433–445.
[463] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1) and (2).
[464] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 410–415.

prosecution and of bringing to trial of persons accused for such crimes".[465] It provides for the punishment of a list of acts defined as genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes.[466] The Draft Law also provides that:

The crime of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes shall be the subject of an inquiry, and the persons against whom clues of guilt exist are searched for, arrested, brought before the competent courts and, if they are found guilty, punished in conformity with the procedure foreseen by the criminal procedure code or by other specific provisions foreseen by the law.[467]

405. The express purpose of Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial is to:

bring to trial senior leaders of Democratic Kampuchea and those who were responsible for crimes and serious violations of Cambodian penal law, international law and custom, and international conventions recognized by Cambodia, and which were committed during the period from April 17, 1975 to January 6, 1979.[468]

It therefore provides for the establishment of "Extraordinary Chambers . . . in the existing courts, namely the trial court, the appeals court, and the supreme court" (Article 2) in order to permit the prosecution and punishment of persons having committed "any of the crimes set forth in the 1956 Penal Code" such as: homicide, torture and religious persecution (Article 3); genocide (Article 4); crimes against humanity (Article 5); grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (Article 6); destruction of cultural property during armed conflict pursuant to the 1954 Hague Convention (Article 7); and crimes against internationally protected persons as set forth in the Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons (Article 8), committed during the relevant period.[469]

406. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

Every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach referred to in Article 50 [GC I], Article 51 [GC II], Article 130 [GC III] Article 147 [GC IV] or Article 11 or 85 [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence and [is liable to punishment].

Where a person is alleged to have committed an offence [in the meaning of the above], proceedings in respect of that offence may, whether or not the person is in Canada, be commenced in any territorial division in Canada and that person may be tried and punished in respect of that offence in the same manner as if the offence had been committed in that territorial division.[470]

407. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that for offences within Canada "every person is guilty of an indictable offence who

[465] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 1.
[466] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Articles 2–5 and 8–19.
[467] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 22.
[468] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 1.
[469] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Articles 2–8.
[470] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1) and (2).

commits (a) genocide; (b) a crime against humanity; or (c) a war crime".[471] It adds that for offences outside Canada, "every person who, either before or after coming into force of this section, commits outside Canada (a) genocide, (b) a crime against humanity, or (c) a war crime is guilty of an indictable offence and may be prosecuted".[472] It further adds that "war crime means an act or omission committed during an armed conflict that . . . constitutes a war crime according to customary international law or conventional international law applicable to armed conflicts" and it specifies that the crimes described in Articles 6, 7 and 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law".[473]

408. Chile's Code of Military Justice, under the heading "Offences against international law", provides, inter alia, for the punishment of certain war crimes.[474]

409. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals contains a list of offences regarded as war crimes and also provides for the punishment of "other acts violating the law or usages of war, or acts whose cruelty or destructiveness exceeds their military necessity, forcing people to do things beyond their obligation, or acts hampering the exercise of legal rights".[475]

410. Colombia's Penal Code, under the heading "Crimes against persons and objects protected by international humanitarian law", contains a list of provisions concerning the punishment of specified crimes committed "in the event and during an armed conflict". The persons protected are: the civilians, the persons not taking part in the hostilities and the civilians in the power of the adverse party, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked placed hors de combat, the combatants who have laid down their arms, because of capture, surrender, or any similar reason, the persons considered as stateless or refugees before the beginning of the conflict, and the persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I and AP II.[476]

411. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended contains provisions for the punishment of a list of offences such as war crimes which are applicable "in time of war or in an area where a state of siege or a state of emergency has been proclaimed".[477]

412. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act provides for the punishment of the authors and perpetrators of acts such as:

a) grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions . . .
b) other grave breaches of the laws and customs applicable to international armed conflicts in the scope established by international law;

[471] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 4.
[472] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 6.
[473] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Article 4(3) and (4).
[474] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Articles 261–264.
[475] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3.
[476] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Articles 135–164.
[477] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Articles 436, 455, 472 and 522–526.

c) grave breaches of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions . . .
d) and other grave breaches recognized as applicable to armed conflicts which are not of an international character, within the scope established by international law.[478]

413. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands, referring to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV and Articles 11(4) and 85(2), (3) and (4) AP I, provides that:

(1) Any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the Conventions or of the First [1977 Additional] Protocol is guilty of an offence.
. . .
(3) This section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship.[479]

414. Costa Rica's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of offences such as acts of genocide and "other punishable acts against human rights and international humanitarian law, provided for in the treaties adhered to by Costa Rica or in this Code".[480] Under another provision entitled "War crimes", it also provides for the punishment of:

Whoever, in the event of an armed conflict, commits or orders to be committed acts which can be qualified as grave breaches or war crimes, in conformity with the provisions of international treaties to which Costa Rica is a party, regarding the conduct of hostilities, the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, the treatment of prisoners of war, the protection of civilian persons and the protection of cultural property, [applicable] in cases of armed conflict, and under any other instrument of international humanitarian law.[481]

The Code as amended further provides for the punishment of crimes against humanity.[482]

415. Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, in a chapter dealing with offences against the law of nations, provides for the punishment of certain acts committed "in time of war or occupation", such as "crimes against the civilian population (Article 138) and "crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 139). It further provides for the punishment of the illegal use of distinctive signs and emblems (Article 473).[483]

416. Croatia's Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Criminal offences against values protected by international law", provides for a list of punishable acts committed by "whoever" and some of them "during war, armed conflict (or occupation)", such as: "war crimes against the civilian population" (Article 158);

[478] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Articles 4, 5, 10 and 11.
[479] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1) and (3).
[480] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 7.
[481] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 378.
[482] Costa Rica, Penal Code as amended (1970), Article 379.
[483] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Articles 138–139 and 473.

"war crimes against the wounded and sick" (Article 159); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 160); "unlawful killing and wounding of the enemy" (Article 161); "unlawful taking of the belongings of those killed or wounded on the battlefield" (Article 162); "forbidden means of combat" (Article 163); "injury of an intermediary" (Article 164); "brutal treatment of the wounded, sick and prisoners of war" (Article 165); "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" (Article 166); "destruction of cultural objects or of facilities containing cultural objects" (Article 167); and "misuse of international symbols" (Article 168).[484]

417. Cuba's Military Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Offences committed during combat actions", contains provisions criminalising certain acts such as "mistreatment of prisoners of war" (Article 42), "plundering" (Article 43), "violence against the population of the area of military activities" (Article 44) and "prohibited use of banners or symbols of the Red Cross" (Article 45).[485]

418. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act, referring to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV, provides for the prosecution and punishment of "any person who, in spite of nationality, commits any serious violation ... of the Geneva Conventions in or outside of the Republic". It further provides that:

> In case an offence provided by this Article has been committed outside the Republic, a person may be prosecuted, charged with the offence, be tried and punished anywhere within the territory of the Republic, as if the offence had been committed in this territory; for all purposes relative or relevant to the trial or punishment, the offence is considered being committed in this territory.[486]

419. Cyprus's AP I Act, with respect to "a serious violation of the provisions of the [AP I]", contains a provision similar to the one in the Geneva Conventions Act.[487]

420. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended, under the heading "Crimes against humanity", provides for the punishment of certain offences such as: "genocide" (Article 259); "torture and other inhuman and cruel treatment" (Article 259a); "use of a forbidden weapon or an unpermitted form of combat" (Article 262); "wartime cruelty" (Article 263); "persecution of a population" (Article 263a); "plunder in a theatre of war" (Article 264); and "misuse of internationally recognized insignia and state insignia" (Article 265).[488]

421. The Code of Military Justice of the Dominican Republic provides for the punishment of a soldier who infringes certain rules of the LOAC, notably against prisoners of war, hospitals, temples or parlementaires.[489]

[484] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158-168.
[485] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Articles 42–45.
[486] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Sections 4 (1) and (2).
[487] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Sections 4 (1) and (2).
[488] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 259–259(a) and 262–265.
[489] Dominican Republic, Code of Military Justice (1953), Article 201.

422. El Salvador's Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of various offences committed "in time of international or civil war", such as arson, destruction of property, plundering of inhabitants or acts of violence against persons (Article 68). It also provides for the punishment of other acts committed "in time of international war", including offences against prisoners of war, attacks on medical units, transports or personnel, abuse of the red cross, destruction of cultural property, offences against parlementaires (Article 69), despoliation of the wounded or prisoners (Article 70), despoliation of the dead (Article 71), and unnecessary requisition of buildings and objects (Article 72).[490]

423. El Salvador's Penal Code provides for the punishment of acts of "Genocide" (Article 361), "Violations of the laws and customs of war" committed "during an international or a civil war" (Article 362), "Violations of the duties of humanity" (Article 363), and "Enforced disappearance of persons" (Article 364).[491]

424. The Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador provide for the punishment of a list of crimes committed during an international or internal armed conflict.[492]

425. Estonia's Penal Code provides for the punishment of a list of crimes, including crimes against humanity (paragraph 89), genocide (paragraph 90), crimes against peace (paragraphs 91-93) or war crimes (paragraphs 94–109).[493]

426. Ethiopia's Penal Code, under the heading "Offences against the law of nations", provides for a list of punishable acts committed by "whosoever" such as: "war crimes against the civilian population" (Article 282); "war crimes against wounded, sick or shipwrecked persons" (Article 283); "war crimes against prisoners and interned persons" (Article 284); "pillage, piracy and looting" (Article 285); "provocation and preparation [of the above-mentioned acts]" (Article 286); "dereliction of duty towards the enemy" (Article 287); "use of illegal means of combat" (Article 288); "maltreatment of, or dereliction of duty towards, wounded, sick or prisoners" (Article 291); "denial of justice" (Article 292); "hostile acts against international humanitarian organizations" (Article 293); "abuse of international emblems and insignia" (Article 294); and "hostile acts against the bearer of a flag of truce" (Article 295). Some of these provisions specify that the acts concerned be committed "in time of war, armed conflict (or occupation)" and/or "in violation of the rules of public international law".[494]

427. In 1992, the transitional government of Ethiopia adopted the Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation which provides that "it is essential that higher officials of the WPE and members of the security and armed forces who have been detained at the time the EPRDF assumed control

[490] El Salvador, Code of Military Justice (1934), Articles 68–72.
[491] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Articles 361–364.
[492] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Title XIX.
[493] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), §§ 89–109.
[494] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Articles 282–288 and 291–295.

of the Country and thereafter and who are suspected of having committed offences . . . must be brought to trial". Furthermore, the proclamation provides that "it is necessary to provide for the establishment of a Special Public Prosecutor's Office that shall conduct prompt investigation and bring to trial detainees as well as those persons who are responsible for having committed offences".[495]

428. Finland's Revised Penal Code, in a chapter dealing with "War crimes and offences against humanity", provides that:

> Any person who in an act of war
>
> (1) uses a prohibited means of warfare or weapon;
> (2) abuses an international symbol designated for the protection of the wounded and sick; or
> (3) otherwise violates the provisions of an international agreement on warfare binding on Finland or the generally acknowledged and established rules and customs of war under public international law
>
> shall be sentenced for a war crime.[496]

429. France's Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes provides for the prosecution of certain persons having committed specific acts from the opening of hostilities.[497]

430. France's Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of acts of pillage (Articles 427 and 428) and illegal use, in times of war, of "distinctive signs and emblems defined by international conventions" (Article 439).[498]

431. France's Penal Code provides for the punishment of a list of certain acts such as genocide and crimes against humanity and also provides for a special norm in case such crimes are committed "in times of war".[499]

432. France's Laws on Cooperation with the ICTY and ICTR provide for the punishment of authors and accomplices of serious violations of IHL.[500]

433. Georgia's Criminal Code, in a part entitled "Crimes against peace and security of mankind and international humanitarian law", provides for a list of punishable offences such as: "genocide" (Article 407); "crimes against humanity" (Article 408); "mercenaries" (Article 410); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in armed conflict" (Article 411); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in international or internal armed conflict with the threat to health or causing bodily injury" (Article 412); and "other breaches of norms of international humanitarian law" (Article 413), the latter including "any other war crime provided for in the [1998 ICC Statute]".[501] For some of these offences, the Code

[495] Ethiopia, Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation (1992), preamble
[496] Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Section 1(1).
[497] France, Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes (1944), Article 1.
[498] France, Code of Military Justice (1982), Articles 427, 428 and 439.
[499] France, Penal Code (1994), Articles 211(1)–212(3).
[500] France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995), Article 2; Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1996), Article 2.
[501] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 407–408 and 410–413.

specifies that the acts be committed "in an international or internal armed conflict".[502]

434. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code applies "to all criminal offences against international law designated under this Act, to serious offences designated therein even when the offence was committed abroad and bears no relation to Germany".[503] It provides for the punishment of, inter alia, genocide (Article 1, paragraph 6), crimes against humanity (Article 1, paragraph 7) and war crimes, including "War crimes against persons" (Article 1, paragraph 8), "War crimes against property and other rights" (Article 1, paragraph 9), "War crimes against humanitarian operations and emblems" (Article 1, paragraph 10), "War crimes consisting in the use of prohibited methods of warfare" (Article 1, paragraph 11) and "War crimes consisting in employment of prohibited means of warfare" (Article 1, paragraph 12).[504] Some of these crimes must be punished when committed "in connection with an international armed conflict or with an armed conflict not of an international character", some others when committed "in connection with an international armed conflict".[505] It further provides that "the prosecution of serious criminal offences pursuant to this Act [inter alia, genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes] and the execution of sentences imposed on their account shall not be subject to any statute of limitations".[506]

435. Guatemala's Penal Code provides for the punishment of certain war crimes, namely those committed against prisoners of war, the civilian population and certain objects.[507]

436. Guinea's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of certain acts constitutive of violations of IHL, such as pillage, the despoliation of the dead, wounded, sick and shipwrecked in a zone of military operations and the use, in an area of military operations and in violation of the laws and customs of war, of distinctive insignia or emblems defined under international conventions.[508]

437. Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, under the title "Crimes against humanity", provides for the punishment of a list of certain acts including genocide and war crimes, such as "Violence against the civilian population" (Article 158), "War-time looting" (Article 159), "Wanton warfare" (Article 160), "Use of weapons prohibited by international treaty" (Article 160/A), "Battlefield looting" (Article 161), "Violence against a war emissary" (Article 163) and "Misuse

[502] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 411–412.
[503] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 1.
[504] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, §§ 6–12.
[505] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, §§ 8(1)–(2), 9(1), 10(1)–(2), 11(1)–(2) and 12 (international and non-international armed conflict); Article 1, §§ 8(3), 9(2) and 11(3) (international armed conflict).
[506] Germany, Law introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 5.
[507] Guatemala, Penal Code (1973), Article 378.
[508] Guinea, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 569, 570 and 579.

of the red cross" (Article 164), some of them when committed "in an operational or occupied area" or "violating the rules of the international law of warfare".[509]

438. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

If any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of a grave breach of any of the Conventions [i.e. the 1949 Geneva Conventions] he shall be punished . . .

When an offence under this chapter [i.e. a grave breach of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] is committed by any person outside India, he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within India at which he may be found.[510]

439. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

Any person, whatever his or her nationality, who, whether in or outside the State, commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or [AP I] shall be guilty of an offence and on conviction on indictment [be liable to punishment].[511]

It also provides for the punishment of "minor breaches" of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols in the following terms:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, in the State, commits, or aids, or abets or procures the commission in the State by any other person of any other minor breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of Protocol I or Protocol II shall be guilty of an offence.

. . .

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, outside the State, commits, or aids, or abets or procures the commission outside the State by any other person of any other minor breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] or [AP II] shall be guilty of an offence.

Any person who is guilty of an offence under this section shall be liable [to punishment].[512]

440. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law provides for the punishment of:

a person who has committed one of the following offences –

(1) done, during the period of the Nazi régime, in an enemy country, an act constituting a crime against the Jewish people;
(2) done, during the period of the Nazi régime, in an enemy country, an act constituting a crime against humanity;
(3) done, during the period of the Second World War, in an enemy country, an act constituting a war crime.[513]

[509] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Sections 155–165.
[510] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Sections 3 and 4.
[511] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3.
[512] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4.
[513] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(a).

441. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of various offences related to wartime activity.[514]

442. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, in a part entitled "War crimes", contains a list of offences "committed in time of armed conflicts" with respect to which it provides for punishment.[515]

443. Kazakhstan's Penal Code, in a special part entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind", provides a list of punishable acts such as: "the use of prohibited means and methods of warfare" in an armed conflict (Article 159); "genocide" (Article 160); "ecocide" (Article 161); "mercenaries" (Article 162); and "attacks against persons or organisations beneficiaries of an international protection" (Article 163).[516]

444. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the Conventions such as is referred to in the following Articles [i.e. Article 50 GC I, Article 51 GC II, Article 130 GC III and Article 147 GC IV] is guilty of an offence and [shall be sentenced].
>
> Where an offence under this section is committed outside Kenya, a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in Kenya, as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[517]

445. Kyrgyzstan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of acts such as: "intentional destruction of historical and cultural monuments" (Article 172); "capture of hostages" (Article 224); "ecocide" (Article 374); the participation of mercenaries "in an armed conflict or in hostilities" (Article 375); and "attacks against persons or institutions under international protection" (Article 376).[518]

446. Latvia's Criminal Code contains a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and peace, war crimes and genocide" in which it provides for certain punishable offences such as "genocide" (Section 71), "war crimes" (Section 74), "pillage" (Section 76) and "destruction of cultural and national heritage" (Section 79).[519]

447. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon provide for the punishment of persons committing acts listed under a new article on war crimes. They also provide that "the crimes provided for in this law are not subject to statutes of limitation". Furthermore, they state that "the Lebanese tribunals have jurisdiction for the war crimes provided for in this

[514] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Articles 167–230.
[515] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41.
[516] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Articles 156–164.
[517] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1) and (2).
[518] Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 172, 224 and 374–376.
[519] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Sections 71–79.

law, regardless of the nationality of the author and the place where they have been committed".[520]

448. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, in a chapter entitled "War crimes", contains a list of punishable offences. Some of these offences are to be punished when committed in "violation of humanitarian law in time of war, during an international armed conflict or occupation". Some others are to be punished when committed "in time of war, during an armed conflict or occupation".[521]

449. Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes provides for the prosecution and sentencing of non-Luxembourg nationals having committed war crimes

> if such infringements have been committed at the occasion or under the pretext of war and if they are not justified by the laws and customs of war, these agents either being found within the Grand-Duché or on enemy territory, or the Government having obtained their extradition.[522]

450. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides for the prosecution and punishment of persons having committed or being involved in the commission of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[523] It also provides that "any individual who has committed an offence under this law outside the territory of the Grand-Duché can be prosecuted in the Grand-Duché even though he may not be present there".[524]

451. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person of any such grave breach of any of the Conventions as is referred to in [Article 50 GC I, Article 51 GC II, Article 130 GC III and Article 147 GC IV] shall without prejudice to his liability under any other written law be guilty of an offence and [be liable to imprisonment].
>
> Where an offence under this section is committed without Malawi a person may be proceeded against, tried and punished therefor in any place in Malawi as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[525]

452. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> Any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person of any such grave breach of [Article 50 GC I, Article 51 GC II, Article 130 GC III

[520] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146 and 149–150.
[521] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 333–344.
[522] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 1.
[523] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Articles 1–8.
[524] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 10.
[525] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1) and (2).

and Article 147 GC IV], shall be guilty of an offence and on conviction thereof [be punished].

In the case of an offence under this section committed outside the Federation, a person may be proceeded against, charged, tried and punished therefor in any place in the Federation as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[526]

453. Mali's Penal Code provides for the punishment of the perpetrators of certain crimes such as "crimes against humanity" (Article 29), "genocide" (Article 30) and a list of "war crimes" covering the grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict (Article 31).[527]

454. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius provides that:

Any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions shall commit an offence ...

This section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship.

Any person who commits an offence against this section shall, on conviction, be liable [to punishment].[528]

455. Mexico's Penal Code as amended, under the heading "Offences against the duties of humanity", provides for the punishment of a number of offences committed against certain protected persons and objects.[529]

456. Mexico's Code of Military Justice, under the headings "Crimes against the laws of nations" and "Crimes committed in the exercise of military duties or with relation to them" provides for the punishment of perpetrators of a number of offences related to war operations.[530]

457. Moldova's Penal Code provides sanctions for perpetrators of certain acts such as "genocide" (Article 135), "ecocide" (Article 136), "inhuman treatments" (Article 137), "violations of international humanitarian law" committed "during an armed conflict or hostilities" (Article 138), "mercenary activity ... in an armed conflict or military hostilities" (Article 141), "use of prohibited means and methods of warfare ... during an armed conflict" (Article 143), "unlawful use of the red cross signs" (Article 363), "pillage of the dead on the battlefield" (Article 389), "acts of violence against the civilian population in the area of military hostilities" (Article 390), "grave breaches of international humanitarian law ... committed during international and internal armed conflicts" (Article 391) and "perfidious use of the red cross emblem as a protective sign during armed conflict" (Article 392).[531]

[526] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1) and (2).
[527] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Articles 29–31.
[528] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1), (3) and (4).
[529] Mexico, Penal Code as amended (1931), Article 149.
[530] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Articles 208–215 and 324–337.
[531] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Articles 135–138, 141, 143, 363 and 389–392.

458. Mozambique's Military Criminal Law provides for the punishment of persons committing crimes listed thereunder, some of them being committed "in an armed confrontation [and in violation of] generally accepted international rules" or "in times of war" and/or "in the theatre of operations".[532]

459. The aim of the Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended of the Netherlands is "to establish provisions concerning offences committed in the event of war and their prosecution".[533] The term "war" is considered to include civil war.[534] According to the Act, "the special courts may . . . take cognisance of crimes defined in the International Crimes Act [genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture]".[535]

460. The International Crimes Act of the Netherlands provides for the punishment of genocide (Article 3), crimes against humanity (Article 4), war crimes committed in international armed conflicts (Article 5) or non-international armed conflicts (Article 6), and torture (Article 8). The Act also punishes "anyone who, in the case of an international or non-international armed conflict, commits a violation of the laws and customs of war other than as referred to in Articles 5 and 6".[536]

461. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

> Any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of the First Protocol is guilty of an indictable offence.
> . . .
> This section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship.[537]

462. New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act provides that "every person is liable on conviction on indictment to the penalty specified in subsection (3) who, in New Zealand or elsewhere, commits a war crime". The Act includes similar provisions with respect to genocide and crimes against humanity. War crimes, genocide and crimes against humanity are defined as the acts specified in the 1998 ICC Statute.[538]

463. Nicaragua's Military Penal Law provides for the punishment of persons who commit "mistreatment of prisoners of war (Article 80), "looting" (Article 81), "abuses at the occasion of military activities" (Article 82) and "unlawful use of the symbols of the Red Cross" (Article 83).[539]

464. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code, under the headings "Crimes against international humanitarian law" and "Specific crimes against the laws and customs of war", provides for the punishment of certain offences, for some of [532] Mozambique, Military Criminal Law (1987), Articles 83–89.

[533] Netherlands, Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended (1952), preamble.
[534] Netherlands, Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended (1952), Article 1, § 3.
[535] Netherlands, Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended (1952), Article 12, § 3.
[536] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 3–8.
[537] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1) and (3).
[538] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Sections 9–11.
[539] Nicaragua, Military Penal Law (1980), Articles 80–83.

them specifying that they be committed "during an international or civil war" and/or "in times of war".[540]

465. Nicaragua's Revised Penal Code provides for the punishment of "anyone who, during an international or a civil war, commits serious violations of the international conventions relating to the use of prohibited weapons, the treatment of prisoners and other norms related to war".[541]

466. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code, in a part entitled "Crimes against the international order", provides for the punishment of a list of offences, stating in the case of most of them that they be committed "at the occasion", "in times of" and/or "during an international or internal armed conflict".[542]

467. Niger's Penal Code as amended, under a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and war crimes", provides for the punishment of a list of offences such as genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes defined as serious offences against the persons and objects protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, AP I and AP II.[543]

468. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> If, whether in or outside the Federation, any person, whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva Conventions] . . . he shall, on conviction thereof [be punished].
>
> A person may be proceeded against, tried and sentenced in the Federal territory of Lagos for an offence under this section committed outside the Federation as if the offence had been committed in Lagos, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in Lagos.[544]

469. Norway's Military Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of "anyone who uses a weapon or means of combat which is prohibited by any international agreement to which Norway has acceded, or who is accessory thereto" and of "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property" laid down in the 1949 Geneva Conventions or AP I or AP II.[545]

470. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> A person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions is guilty of an offence.
>
> This section applies to persons regardless of their nationality or citizenship.[546]

471. Paraguay's Military Penal Code, under the heading "Provisions with regard to times of war", provides for the punishment of a list of offences.[547]

[540] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Articles 47–61.
[541] Nicaragua, Revised Penal Code (1997), Article 551.
[542] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Articles 444–472.
[543] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Articles 208.1–208.8.
[544] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1) and (2).
[545] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), §§ 107–108.
[546] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2) and (3).
[547] Paraguay, Military Penal Code (1980), Articles 282–296.

472. Paraguay's Penal Code provides for the punishment of offences such as "torture" (Article 309), "genocide" (Article 319) and a list of "war crimes" (Article 320), stating in the case of "war crimes" that they be committed "in violation of international laws of war, armed conflict or military occupation".[548]

473. Peru's Code of Military Justice, in a part entitled "Violations of the law of nations", provides for the punishment of a list of offences, some of them when committed "in times of war".[549]

474. The War Crimes Trial Executive Order of the Philippines provides for a list of punishable offences including "violations of the laws and customs of war" and other specified acts committed "before or during the war . . . whether or not in violation of the local laws".[550]

475. Poland's Penal Code, in a specific part entitled "Offences against peace, humanity and war offences", provides for the punishment of certain acts, some of them when committed "during hostilities" or "in violation of international law", such as internationally prohibited acts against certain specific protected persons – including persons "who, during hostilities, enjoy international protection" – and objects, as well as the use of means or methods of combat prohibited by international law.[551]

476. Portugal's Penal Code, under the headings "War crimes against civilians" and "Destruction of monuments", provides for the punishment of certain offences when committed "in times of war, of armed conflict or occupation".[552]

477. Romania's Law on the Punishment of War Criminals provides for the punishment of precisely defined "criminals of war".[553]

478. Romania's Penal Code, in provisions entitled "[Unlawful] use of the emblem of the Red Cross" (Article 294), "Use of the emblem of the Red Cross during military operations" (Article 351), "Inhuman treatment" (Article 358) and "Destruction of objects and appropriation of property" (Article 359), provides for the punishment of offences listed thereunder, stating for some of those offences that they be committed "in times of war and in relation with military operations" or "in times of war".[554]

479. Russia's Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals states that:

> The peoples of the Soviet Union that suffered losses during the war cannot let fascist barbarians go unpunished. The Soviet State has always proceeded from the universally recognised rules of international law that provide for the inevitable prosecution of Nazi criminals, no matter where and for how long they have been hiding from justice.[555]

[548] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Articles 309 and 319–320.
[549] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Articles 91–96.
[550] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), § II(b)(2) and (3).
[551] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Articles 117–126.
[552] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Articles 241–242.
[553] Romania, Law on the Punishment of War Criminals (1945), Articles I and III.
[554] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Articles 294, 351 and 358–359.
[555] Russia, Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals (1965), preamble.

It also provides that "Nazi criminals, guilty of most serious crimes against peace and humanity and war crimes, are subject to prosecution and punishment".[556]

480. Russia's Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind" and under a provision entitled "Use of banned means and methods of warfare", provides for the punishment of "cruel treatment of prisoners of war, deportation of the civilian population, plunder of the national property in the occupied territory and use in a military conflict of means and methods of warfare banned by [international treaties to which Russia is a party]".[557] The Code further provides for the punishment of offences such as genocide, ecocide, use of, and participation by, mercenaries in an armed conflict or hostilities and assaults on persons or institutions enjoying international protection.[558]

481. Rwanda's Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions aims:

to organize the putting on trial of persons prosecuted for having, between 1 October 1990 and 31 December 1994, committed acts qualified and punished by the Penal Code and which constitute:

a) ... crimes of genocide or crimes against humanity as defined by the [1948 Genocide Convention], by the [1949 GC IV and the 1977 Additional Protocols], as well as in the [1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity].[559]

482. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by another person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions ... is guilty of an offence and ... shall on conviction [be punished].

Where an offence under this section is committed outside Seychelles, a person may be proceeded against, charged, tried and punished therefor in any place in Seychelles, as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, deemed to have been committed in that place.[560]

483. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [of the Geneva Conventions] shall be guilty of an offence under this Act and on conviction thereof ... [be punished].

In the case of an offence under this section committed outside Singapore, a person may be proceeded against, charged, tried and punished therefor in any place in Singapore as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall,

[556] Russia, Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals (1965).
[557] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 356.
[558] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Articles 357–360.
[559] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 1.
[560] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1) and (2).

for the purposes incidental to or consequential on the trail or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[561]

484. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended, under the heading "Crimes against humanity", provides for the punishment of certain offences such as: "genocide" (Article 259); "torture and other inhuman and cruel treatment" (Article 259a); "use of a forbidden weapon or an unpermitted form of combat" (Article 262); "wartime cruelty" (Article 263); "persecution of a population" (Article 263a); "plunder in a theatre of war" (Article 264); and "misuse of internationally recognised insignia and state insignia" (Article 265).[562]

485. Slovenia's Penal Code, in a chapter entitled "Criminal offences against humanity and international law", criminalises certain acts, committed by "whoever" and some of them "during war, armed conflict (or occupation)", such as: "war crimes against the civilian population" (Article 374); "war crimes against the wounded and sick" (Article 375); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 376); "use of unlawful weapons" (Article 377); "unlawful killing and wounding of the enemy" (Article 379); "unlawful plundering on the battlefield" (Article 380); "infringement of the rights of parlementaires" (Article 381); "maltreatment of the sick and wounded, and of prisoners of war" (Article 382); "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" (Article 383); "destruction of cultural and historical monuments and natural sites" (Article 384); and "abuse of international symbols" (Article 386).[563]

486. Under Spain's Law on Judicial Power, Spanish criminal courts have jurisdiction over offences committed by Spanish nationals and aliens, on Spanish territory or outside it, which constitute genocide or any other offence that, according to international treaties or conventions, must be prosecuted in Spain.[564]

487. Spain's Military Criminal Code contains a part on "Crimes against the laws and customs of war" and provides for the punishment of soldiers committing acts listed thereunder.[565]

488. Spain's Penal Code, in chapters entitled "Genocide" and "Offences against protected persons and objects in the event of armed conflict", criminalises offences listed thereunder. Protected persons in the meaning of the chapter on "Offences against protected persons and objects in the event of armed conflict" are those protected by the 1949 Geneva Conventions and both Additional Protocols, as well as those falling within the scope of "whatever other international treaty to which Spain is a party". The chapter contains several provisions regarding the punishment of certain acts "committed in the event of an armed conflict".[566]

[561] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1) and (2).
[562] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 259–259(a) and 262–265.
[563] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 374–386.
[564] Spain, Law on Judicial Power (1985), Article 23(4).
[565] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Articles 69–78.
[566] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Articles 607–614.

489. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

> A person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any person to commit
> (a) a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions; or
> (b) a breach of common Article 3 of the [Geneva] Conventions
>
> is guilty of an indictable offence.[567]

It further provides that such a person "is liable to [punishment]".[568]

490. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of "a person guilty of a serious violation of a treaty or agreement with a foreign power or an infraction of a generally recognised principle or tenet relating to international humanitarian law concerning armed conflicts".[569]

491. Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended states that the provisions of its chapter dealing with "Offences committed against the law of nations in case of armed conflict" are "applicable in case of declared war and other armed conflicts between two or more States", and also provide for "the punishment of violations of international agreements if these agreements provide for a wider scope of application" (Article 108). The Code provides for the punishment of offences listed under this chapter, and especially – among other more specific offences – of "anyone who contravenes the prescriptions of international conventions relating to the conduct of hostilities, as well as to the protection of persons and objects, [and] anyone who violates other recognised laws and customs of war".[570] Other offences, such as pillage committed in time of war or marauding on the battlefield are also to be punished.[571]

492. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of: "illegal use of emblems and signs of the Red Cross and Red Crescent" (Article 333); "genocide" (Article 398); "biocide" (Article 399); "ecocide" (Article 400); "mercenarism" (Article 401); "attacks against persons and establishments under international protection" (Article 402); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in [an international or internal] armed conflict" (Article 403); "wilful breaches of norms of international humanitarian law committed in international or internal armed conflict with the threat to health or causing bodily injury" (Article 404); and "other breaches of the norms of international humanitarian law" (Article 405).[572]

493. Thailand's Prisoners of War Act provides for the punishment of persons committing offences listed under the heading "Offences with respect to prisoners of war" and offences specified under the heading "Offences in the case of armed conflict not of an international character".[573]

[567] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Article 3(1).
[568] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Article 4(1).
[569] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Chapter 22, § 6.
[570] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Articles 108–114.
[571] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Articles 139–140.
[572] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 333 and 398–405.
[573] Thailand, Prisoners of War Act (1955), Sections 12–19.

494. Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act states that:

Any person who commits any of the crimes specified in Articles 6 [of the ICC Statute – genocide], 7 [of the ICC Statute – crimes against humanity] and 8 [of the ICC Statute – war crimes] outside Trinidad and Tobago, may be prosecuted and punished for that crime in Trinidad and Tobago as if the crime had been committed in Trinidad and Tobago.[574]

495. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . commits an offence and on conviction thereof [shall be punished].

Where an offence under this section is committed without Uganda a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in Uganda as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[575]

496. Ukraine's Criminal Code provides for a list of punishable offences such as, inter alia: "looting" (Article 432); "violence against the civilian population in areas of war operations" (Article 433); "bad treatment of prisoners of war" (Article 434); "unlawful use or misuse of the Red Cross and Red Crescent symbols" (Article 435); "violations of the laws and customs of war", notably those provided for in international instruments to which Ukraine is a party (Article 438); "use of weapons of mass destruction" (Article 439); "ecocide" (Article 441); "genocide" (Article 442); "illegal use of the symbols of the red cross and red crescent" (Article 445); and "mercenarism" (Article 447).[576]

497. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions or the first protocol shall be guilty of an offence and on conviction on indictment [shall be punished].

In the case of an offence under this section committed outside the United Kingdom, a person may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in the United Kingdom as if the offence had been committed in that place, and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[577]

498. The UK War Crimes Act grants the UK courts jurisdiction over war crimes committed in Germany or German-occupied territory during the Second World War by persons who are now UK citizens or residents, irrespective of their nationality at the time of the alleged offence. The act only applies to crimes such as murder and manslaughter, which "constituted a violation of the laws

[574] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Part II, Section 5(2).
[575] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1) and (2).
[576] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Articles 432–447.
[577] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1) and (2).

and customs of war", and were considered war crimes during the Second World War.[578]

499. The UK UN Personnel Act provides that:

> If a person commits, outside the United Kingdom, any act to or in relation to a UN worker which, if he had done it in any part of the United Kingdom, would have made him guilty of [murder, manslaughter, culpable homicide, rape, assault causing injury, kidnapping, abduction or false imprisonment], he shall in that part of the United Kingdom be guilty of that offence.[579]

This Act does not apply to any UN operation "which is authorised by the Security Council of the United Nations as an enforcement action under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, . . . in which UN workers are engaged as combatants against organised armed forces, and . . . to which the law of international armed conflict applies".[580]

500. The UK ICC Act includes as offences under domestic law, the acts of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes as defined in the 1998 ICC Statute.[581] Thus, it provides that "it is an offence against the law of England and Wales for a person to commit genocide, a crime against humanity or a war crime".[582] There is a similar provision for Northern Ireland.[583]

501. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I established provisions for the punishment of the perpetrators of a list of specific offences and also of "all other offences against the laws or customs of war", to be pronounced by the military commissions.[584]

502. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II established provisions for the punishment of the perpetrators of a list of "violations of the laws and customs of war" and other more specific acts committed "against any civilian population before or during the war", to be pronounced by the military commissions.[585]

503. The US War Crimes Act as amended provides that:

> (a) Offence. – Whoever, whether inside or outside the United States, commits a war crime, in any of the circumstances described in subsection (b), shall be [punishable].
> (b) Circumstances. – The circumstances referred to in subsection (a) are that the person committing such war crime or the victim of such war crime is a member of the Armed Forces of the United States or a national of the United States (as defined in section 101 of the Immigration and Nationality Act).

[578] UK, War Crimes Act (1991), Section 1; see also annexed Report of the War Crimes Inquiry, which preceded the 1991 Act, and related documents.
[579] UK, UN Personnel Act (1997), Section 1.
[580] UK, UN Personnel Act (1997), Section 4(3).
[581] UK, ICC Act (2001), Part 5, Section 50.
[582] UK, ICC Act (2001), Part 5, Section 51.
[583] UK, ICC Act (2001), Part 5, Section 58.
[584] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.
[585] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945), Regulation 2(b) and (c).

(c) Definition. – As used in this section the term "war crime" means any conduct –
  (1) defined as a grave breach in any of the international conventions signed at Geneva 12 August 1949, or any protocol to such convention to which the United States is a party;
  (2) prohibited by Article 23, 25, 27, or 28 of the Annex to the Hague Convention IV, Respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, signed 18 October 1907;
  (3) which constitutes a violation of common Article 3 of the international conventions signed at Geneva, 12 August 1949, or any protocol to such convention to which the United States is a party and which deals with non-international armed conflict; or
  (4) of a person who, in relation to an armed conflict and contrary to the provisions of the Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices as amended at Geneva on 3 May 1996 (Protocol II as amended on 3 May 1996), when the United States is a party to such Protocol, willfully kills or causes serious injury to civilians.[586]

504. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended, under the heading "Crimes which affect the moral strength of the army and of the naval forces", lists a number of acts, such as the violation of the rule of humane treatment of POWs, looting, attacks against certain specific objects, for which it provides punishment.[587]

505. Uzbekistan's Criminal Code, in a chapter entitled "Crimes against the peace and security of mankind", criminalises "violations of laws and customs of war" (Article 152), "genocide" (Article 153) and the participation of "mercenaries" in "armed conflict or military actions" (Article 154).[588]

506. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that:

Any grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu.

Where a person has committed an act or omission that is an offence by virtue of [the above], the offence is within the competence of and may be tried and punished by the court having jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Vanuatu.[589]

507. Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, under a chapter dealing with "crimes against international law", provides for the punishment of the offenders of a list of certain war crimes.[590]

508. Venezuela's Revised Penal Code provides for the punishment of Venezuelan nationals and foreigners who have committed certain acts "during a war

[586] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441.
[587] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58.
[588] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Articles 152–154.
[589] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Sections 4 and 5.
[590] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474.

between Venezuela and another nation" or who "violate the conventions or treaties [to which Venezuela is a party] in a way which entails the responsibility of the latter".[591]

509. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who commits, inter alia, one of the offences listed under the following headings: "Violation of policy concerning soldiers killed or wounded in combat" (Article 271); "Theft or destruction of war booty" (Article 272); "Harassment of civilians" (Article 273); "Exceeding military need in performance of a mission" (Article 274); "Mistreatment of a prisoner of war or of a soldier who has surrendered" (Article 275); "Crimes against humanity" committed in time of peace or in time of war (Article 278); "War crimes", such as "acts seriously breaching international norms contained in the treaties to which Vietnam is a party" (Article 279); and "Recruitment of mercenaries and service as a mercenary" (Article 280).[592]

510. Yemen's Military Criminal Code provides for the punishment of a list of offences such as war crimes committed in a "zone of military operations" (Article 20) or "during a war [and] against persons and objects protected under the international conventions to which the Republic of Yemen is a party" (Article 21).[593]

511. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) provides for the punishment of "any person who commits a war crime, i.e., who during the war or the enemy occupation acted as an instigator or organiser, or who . . . assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of [one of the acts listed thereunder]".[594]

512. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY), in a chapter entitled "Criminal acts against humanity and international law", provides for a list of punishable acts committed by "any person" and some of them "during war, armed conflict (or occupation)", such as: "war crimes against civilians" (Article 142); "war crimes against the wounded and the ill" (Article 143); "war crimes against prisoners of war" (Article 144); "unlawful killing and wounding of the enemy" (Article 146); "unlawful seizure of belongings from the killed and wounded in a theatre of war" (Article 147); "use of prohibited means of combat" (Article 148); "harming a parlementaires" (Article 149); "cruel treatment of the wounded, the ill and prisoners of war" (Article 150); "unjustified delay in the repatriation of prisoners of war" (Article 150-a); "destruction of cultural and historic monuments" (Article 151); and "misuse of international emblems" (Article 153).[595] A commentary on these Code's provisions emphasises that these crimes can be committed in time of war, armed conflict (or

[591] Venezuela, Revised Penal Code (2000), Article 156.
[592] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Articles 271–280.
[593] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Articles 5 and 20–23.
[594] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).
[595] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Articles 142–153.

occupation).[596] The Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY) notes that the term "armed conflict" in this context should be interpreted as including internal conflicts.[597]

513. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

> Any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [the Geneva Conventions or AP I]... shall be guilty of an offence.
>
> A person guilty of an offence in terms of [the above] shall be liable...[to punishment].
>
> Where an offence in terms of this section has been committed outside Zimbabwe, the person concerned may be proceeded against, indicted, tried and punished therefor in any place in Zimbabwe as if the offence had been committed in that place and the offence shall, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment thereof, be deemed to have been committed in that place.[598]

National Case-law

514. In the Priebke case in 1995, Argentina's Public Prosecutor of First Instance pointed out that owing to the far-reaching implications of war crimes, the international community was obliged to hunt down and punish war criminals.[599]

515. In the Polyukhovich case before Australia's High Court in 1991, in which the accused, charged with crimes committed during the Second World War, challenged the validity of the War Crimes Act to the imputed crimes, the Australian government argued that the War Crimes Act codified the customary law obligation to search for persons suspected of having committed serious war crimes, to bring them to trial and, if found guilty, to punish them.[600]

516. In the Violations of IHL in Somalia and Rwanda case in 1997, a Belgian Military Court acquitted two Belgian soldiers accused of having injured and threatened the civilian population whilst performing duties as part of the UNOSOM II peacekeeping operation in Somalia. The Court concluded that the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols were not applicable to the armed conflict in Somalia and that, therefore, the civilian population could not be granted protection on this basis. The Court also held that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions did not apply to the situation, as the Somali militia did not have an organised military structure, a responsible leadership or exercise authority over a specific part of the territory. Consequently, Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended was also inapplicable. The Court further stated that the members of the UNOSOM II mission could

[596] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Commentary to Articles 142–144, 146, 148–151 and 153.
[597] Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY), 1997, Chapter 6.4.
[598] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1), (2) and (3).
[599] Argentina, Court of Bariloche, Priebke case, Judgement, 23 August 1995, Point V.3.
[600] Australia, High Court, Polyukhovich case, Judgement, 14 August 1991.

not be considered as "combatants" since their primary task was not to fight against any of the factions, nor could they fall into the category of an "occupying force".[601]

517. In The Four from Butare case in 2001, a Belgian court found four Rwandan nationals individually responsible and guilty of war crimes during the 1994 genocide in Rwanda. The four Rwandans were arrested under Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended. They were charged with violations or grave breaches of provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I, as well as with violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Articles 1, 2 and 4 AP II.[602] The judgement was confirmed by the Belgian Court of Cassation in 2002.[603]

518. In the Brocklebank case in 1996, Canada's Court Martial Appeal Court acquitted a Canadian soldier accused of torture and negligent performance of a military duty in respect of acts committed while serving as a member of the peacekeeping mission in Somalia. The Court held that there was no evidence that the soldier had formed the necessary mens rea to commit the offences charged. It was further held that no armed conflict existed in Somalia at the relevant time, nor were the Canadian forces to be considered as a party to the conflict, as they were engaged in a peacekeeping mission. As a result, the Court concluded that neither the 1949 Geneva Conventions nor the Canadian Unit Guide to the Geneva Conventions were applicable.[604]

519. In the Sarić case in 1994, a Danish court found a Bosnian Croat guilty on numerous charges of war crimes.[605]

520. In the Javor case in 1994, in a civil suit filed by Bosnian nationals alleging ill-treatment in a Serb-run detention camp, France's Tribunal de Grande Instance of Paris found that it had jurisdiction over the claims of war crimes. In its consideration of the charge, the Court focused on the grave breaches provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[606] The Court of Appeal reversed this decision and held, inter alia, the absence of direct applicability of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[607]

521. In the Djajić case in 1997 involving a national of the former Yugoslavia, Germany's Supreme Court of Bavaria referred to GC IV and the grave breaches regime. It considered the conflict to be an international conflict (in June 1992)

[601] Belgium, Military Court, Violations of IHL in Somalia and Rwanda case, Judgement, 17 December 1997.
[602] Belgium, Cour d'Assises de Bruxelles, The Four from Butare case, Judgement, 7/8 June 2001.
[603] Belgium, Court of Cassation, The Four from Butare case, Judgement, 9 January 2002.
[604] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Brocklebank case, Judgement, 2 April 1996; see also Court Martial Appeal Court, Brown case, Judgement, 6 January 1995, Boland case, Judgement, 16 May 1995 and Seward case, Judgement, 16 May 1995.
[605] Denmark, High Court, Sarić case, Judgement, 25 November 1994.
[606] France, Tribunal de Grande Instance of Paris, Javor case, Order establishing partial lack of jurisdiction and the admissibility of a civil suit, 6 May 1994.
[607] France, Court of Appeal of Paris, Javor case, Judgement, 24 November 1994.

and regarded the victims as "protected persons" in the meaning of Article 4 GC IV. The accused was found guilty of complicity in 14 counts of murder and 1 count of attempted murder.[608] The Court based its jurisdiction on Article 6(9) of the German Penal Code which extends the jurisdiction of German courts to acts which are committed abroad and which are prosecuted in Germany on the basis of an international agreement binding on Germany. It also stated that the prosecution of war criminals was "in the interest of the international community as a whole" and not only in the particular interest of Germany. It further noted that "Article 146 [GC IV], in its paragraph 2, obliges each State party to the Convention 'to search for persons alleged to have committed . . . such grave breaches'. It has to 'bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts'".[609]

522. In the Jorgić case in 1997, Germany's Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf, a Bosnian Serb was tried for acts committed in 1992 in Bosnia and Herzegovina which were punishable under the German Penal Code. In its judgment, the Court referred, inter alia, to Article 147 GC IV. It based its jurisdiction on Article 6(1) and (9) of the Penal Code, which criminalises genocide and acts the prosecution of which was made compulsory under the terms of an international agreement, and stated that "Geneva Convention IV serves as a basis for penal prosecution". Moreover, the Court referred to Article 146, second paragraph, GC IV under which, as the Court confirmed, the States party to the Convention "have engaged to bring persons who are alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches, before their own courts, regardless of their nationality". The accused was found guilty of complicity in genocide, in conjunction with dangerous bodily harm, deprivation of liberty and murder.[610] In 1999, the Federal Supreme Court upheld the conviction for the most part.[611] In its judgement in 2000, the Federal Constitutional Court confirmed that the accused could be tried by German courts and under German penal law. Moreover, it stated that:

A norm of international customary law prohibiting the extension of German competence to legislate in criminal matters . . . was at variance with Art. VI of the [1948] Genocide Convention. With regard to the principle of non-interference recognised in international customary and international treaty law (Art. 2(1) of the United Nations Charter), the Federal Constitutional Court required that jurisdiction over events occurring in the territory of another State and therefore outside German territorial sovereignty be predicated on a meaningful link . . . Whether such a link exists depends on the subject matter. In criminal law, a meaningful link is constituted not only by the principles of territoriality, protection, active and passive personality, and criminal representation, but also by the principle of universal jurisdiction . . . The principle of universal jurisdiction applied to conduct deemed

608 Germany, Supreme Court of Bavaria, Djajić case, Judgement, 23 May 1997.
609 Germany, Supreme Court of Bavaria, Djajić case, Judgement, 23 May 1997.
610 Germany, Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf, Jorgić case, Judgement, 26 September 1997.
611 Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Jorgić case, Judgement, 30 April 1999.

to constitute a threat to the protected interests of the international community. It therefore differs from the principle of criminal representation, codified in Article 7(2)(2) of the [German Penal Code], in that the conduct does not need to be punishable by the law of the place where it occurred and no failure to extradite is required.[612]

523. In the Sokolović case before Germany's Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf in 1999, a Bosnian Serb accused of acts committed in 1992 in Bosnia and Herzegovina was sentenced for complicity in genocide, deprivation of liberty and dangerous bodily injury. The Court held that, according to Article 6(9) of the German Penal Code and in connection with the provisions of the Geneva Conventions, German domestic courts had jurisdiction over grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions committed in the course of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.[613] In 2001, the Federal Supreme Court upheld this judgement and referred, inter alia, to Articles 146 and 147 GC IV and provisions of the German Penal Code. It held that "a duty to prosecute arises from [GC IV] at least when an international armed conflict takes place and when the criminal offences fulfil the requirements of a 'grave breach' in the meaning of Article 147 of this Convention".[614] Referring to the apparent requirement of a specific link to Germany which, according to the judgement in the trial of first instance, had been established in the case and therefore gave it jurisdiction, the Federal Supreme Court moreover noted that not only had the Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf correctly found such link to be established, but that:

> The Senate is nevertheless inclined not to require such additional link, in any case with regard to [Article 6(9) of the German Penal Code]... Indeed, the prosecution and punishment in accordance with German penal law by the Federal Republic of Germany, acting in fulfilment of an internationally binding obligation accepted under agreement between States, of an act committed abroad by a foreigner against foreigners, can hardly be said to be an infringement of the principle of non-interference.[615]

However, the Federal Supreme Court stated that in this case it did not fall to it to reach a decision in the matter.[616]

524. In the Kusljić case in 1999, Germany's Supreme Court of Bavaria tried a Bosnian national for crimes committed during 1992 in the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina. The accused was sentenced to life imprisonment for, inter alia, genocide in conjunction with six counts of murder. The Court found that a specific link to Germany, necessary for the prosecution under German penal law of acts committed abroad by a non-German national and against non-German victims, was established.[617] In 2001, the German Federal Supreme

[612] Germany, Federal Constitutional Court, Jorgić case, Decision, 12 December 2000.
[613] Germany, Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf, Sokolović case, Judgement, 29 November 1999.
[614] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Sokolović case, Judgement, 21 February 2001.
[615] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Sokolović case, Judgement, 21 February 2001.
[616] Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Sokolović case, Judgement, 21 February 2001.
[617] Germany, Supreme Court of Bavaria, Kusljić case, Judgement, 15 December 1999.

Court revised this judgement into a life sentence for, inter alia, six counts of murder. It considered the acts of the accused to be grave breaches in the meaning of Articles 146 and 147 GC IV. Referring to its judgement of the same day in the Sokolović case, the Court ruled that German courts, on the ground of Article 6(9) of the German Penal Code, had jurisdiction over grave breaches in the meaning of Articles 146 and 147 GC IV.[618]

525. In the Eichmann case in 1961, Israel's District of Court of Jerusalem rejected arguments that the acts of which Eichmann was accused constituted acts of State for which Germany alone was responsible. The Court held that the repudiation of the doctrine of act of State was one of the principles of international law acknowledged by the IMT Charter and Judgement in Nuremberg as well as by the UN General Assembly in Resolution 96(I).[619] The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decision, holding, inter alia, that there was no scope for the application of the doctrine in respect of acts prohibited by the law of nations, and especially with regard to international crimes.[620]

526. In the Grabež case in 1997, a person born in the former Yugoslavia was prosecuted by a Swiss Military Tribunal for violations of the laws and customs of war under the Swiss Military Penal Code as amended on charges of beating and injuring civilian prisoners in the camps of Omarska and Keraterm in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Tribunal held that it had jurisdiction under Articles 108(2) and 109 of the Military Penal Code as amended over violations of the laws and customs of war, grave breaches of GC III, GC IV and AP I, and violations of AP II, but acquitted the accused for lack of sufficient evidence.[621]

527. In the Niyonteze case in 1999, a Swiss Military Tribunal convicted a Rwandan national for, inter alia, grave breaches of IHL committed in Rwanda on the basis of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II.[622]

528. In the Quirin case in 1942, the US Supreme Court held that "from the very beginning of its history this Court has applied the law of war, including that part of the law of nations which prescribes for the conduct of war, the status, rights and duties of enemy nations as well as enemy individuals". It then went on to give a list of cases in which individual offenders had been charged with offences against the law of nations.[623]

529. In the Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg rejected arguments by the defendants that international law was concerned with the actions of sovereign States and did not provide punishment for individuals, holding that it had long been established that international law imposed duties and liabilities upon individuals as well as upon States.[624]

618 Germany, Federal Supreme Court, Kusljić case, Decision, 21 February 2001.
619 Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961.
620 Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962.
621 Switzerland, Military Tribunal at Lausanne, Grabež case, Judgement, 18 April 1997.
622 Switzerland, Military Tribunal at Lausanne, Niyonteze case, Judgement, 30 April 1999.
623 US, Supreme Court, Quirin case, Judgement, 31 July 1942; see also Supreme Court, Yamashita case, Judgement, 4 February 1946.
624 US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case, Judgement, 4 December 1947.

530. In the Flick case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg noted that "it can no longer be successfully maintained that international law is concerned only with the actions of sovereign states and provides no punishment for individuals". The Tribunal also rejected the argument that the fact that the defendants were private individuals rather than public officials representing the State meant that they could not be criminally responsible for a violation of international law. Instead, it held that "international law . . . binds every citizen just as does ordinary municipal law . . . The application of international law to individuals is no novelty."[625]

531. In the Karadžić case in 1995, a US Court of Appeals considered a civil action brought by Bosnian victims of atrocities against Radovan Karadžić under, inter alia, the US Alien Tort Claims Act which gives the US courts jurisdiction over claims by aliens for torts committed in violation of the law of nations or treaties to which the US is party. The Court emphasised that individuals could be held responsible, both criminally, and, as in this case, civilly, for violations of international law and noted that "the liability of private individuals for committing war crimes has been recognized since World War I and was confirmed at Nuremberg after World War II, and remains today an important aspect of international law".[626]

532. In the Trajković case in 2001, a Kosovan Serb and former chief of police, was convicted, inter alia, of having participated in crimes committed against the civilian population in 1999, acts which the District Court of Gnjilan in Kosovo (FRY) found had to be qualified as war crimes under Article 142 of the FRY Penal Code as well as crimes against humanity. The Court also found that the acts had been committed "in time of war".[627] However, on appeal, the Supreme Court of Kosovo overruled this judgement and ordered that the case be returned to the same court for retrial.[628] In a written opinion, the International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo stated that:

> Article 146 of Geneva Convention IV requires states party to the Convention to criminalize the commission and ordering of grave breaches of the Convention during armed conflict . . . Article 142 of the Yugoslav Penal Code appears most directly derived from this provision of international law.[629]

Other National Practice

533. During the Algerian war of independence, it is reported that the ALN Command had stigmatised and punished acts deemed to be contrary to the

[625] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Flick case, Judgement, 22 December 1947. (Similar statements were made by the Tribunal in Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case, Judgement, 14 August 1947–29 July 1948, and in Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial), Judgement, 30 December–28 October 1948.)
[626] US, Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Karadžić case, Decision, 13 October 1995.
[627] SFRY (FRY), District Court of Gnjilan, Trajković case, Judgement, 6 March 2001.
[628] SFRY (FRY), Supreme Court of Kosovo, Trajković case, Decision Act, 30 November 2001.
[629] SFRY (FRY), International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo, Trajković case, Opinion on Appeals of Convictions, 30 November 2001, Sections IV and IV(A).

laws of war.[630] In the same context, it commented on the execution of three French prisoners after their trial for war crimes by an ALN military tribunal. The ALN Command reiterated that it would continue to try French prisoners accused of war crimes and execute the sentences of those convicted.[631]

534. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, the representative of Australia stated that:

> Governments must also denounce – and denounce strongly – attacks against United Nations personnel and humanitarian workers and take all measures to bring perpetrators of violence to justice. Impunity, as so many of my colleagues have emphasized in this discussion, cannot be allowed.[632]

535. An explanatory memorandum submitted to the Belgian Senate in 1991 in the context of the adoption of the Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols stated that the draft law extended to the grave breaches enunciated in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I, in accordance with Belgium's obligations. However, it also stated that IHL contained other infringements which it did not qualify as "grave breaches", but which had to be suppressed nevertheless. The memorandum therefore stated that such offences would be dealt with in a separate law, noting, however, that in the meantime, "the repression of all violations of the laws and customs of war is covered by 'ordinary' national penal law" insofar as the violations corresponded to offences punishable under national (penal) law.[633] An early draft of this law was amended in order to include acts committed in the context of non-international conflicts and which corresponded to the grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I. The authors of the amendment mentioned that one of the reasons for the inclusion of acts committed in the context of non-international conflicts was the fact that international law did not prohibit such criminalisation. The Belgian government supported the amendment and noted that although the proposals "go further than required by the Conventions and Protocols, they remain within the scope of the – admittedly extensive – application of an international instrument ratified by Belgium".[634]

536. It is reported that the Chief of Staff of the armed forces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in response to the international reaction to the destruction of the 630 El Moudjahid, Vol. 1, p. 440.

631 "Le problème des prisonniers de guerre", El Moudjahid, Vol. 1, pp. 474 and 476.
632 Australia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 6.
633 Belgium, Senate, Explanatory Memorandum, Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, 1990–1991 Session, Doc. 1317-1, 30 April 1991, p. 6.
634 Belgium, Senate, Complementary report submitted on behalf of the Commission of Justice, Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, 1991–1992 Extraordinary Session, Doc. 481-5, 22 December 1992, pp. 2 ff.

Mostar Bridge by HVO forces in 1993, had distributed a brochure describing international provisions regarding IHL, war crimes, cultural heritage and POWs, and promised the severest punishment to members of the armed forces who did not respect the laws of war.[635]

537. According to the Report on the Practice of Canada, following the report of the Canadian Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals in 1987, a section for war crimes was created in the Canadian Police and in the Ministry of Justice. A special unit was also established in the Ministry of Immigration to search for immigrants alleged to have committed war crimes or crimes against humanity. The report states that this reflects the belief held by the Canadian authorities in the necessity of setting up appropriate legal mechanisms to meet Canadian obligations regarding the search for war criminals on Canadian territory.[636]

538. In 1981, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly in relation to the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the GDR stated that "in connexion with the enforcement of individual criminal responsibility, States were obliged under international law to take appropriate measures and enact legislation ensuring prosecution and punishment of persons guilty of international offences". It added that "it was therefore necessary to establish a universal duty to prosecute offences, which included the obligation to co-operate in combating international offences".[637]

539. In a statement at the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, Germany's Minster of State stated that "crimes against international humanitarian law are mostly war crimes. Crimes against international humanitarian law are internationally banned. These crimes must have criminal prosecution as consequences." He added that guaranteeing prosecution was the task not only of individual States but of the international community as a whole.[638]

540. According to a representative of the German Central Office for the Investigation of National-Socialist Atrocities at Ludwigsburg (Zentrale Stelle zur Aufklärung nationalsozialistischer Gewaltverbrechen) established by the judicial administrations of the German States in 1958, by September 1999, Germany had investigated against more than 100,000 accused and suspected persons for crimes committed during the Nazi regime. In all, 7,225 of the proceedings were handed over to the public prosecution and about 6,500 individuals were convicted.[639]

[635] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Committee on Culture and Education, Fourth information report on war damage to the cultural heritage in Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, Doc. 6999, 19 January 1994, § 71.

[636] Report on the Practice of Canada, 1998, Chapter 6.3.

[637] GDR, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/36/SR.60, 26 November 1981, § 26.

[638] Germany, Minister of State, Statement at the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August 1–September 1993, Bulletin, No. 69, Presse- und Informationsamt der Bundesregierung, Bonn, 4 September 1993, p. 733.

[639] Willi Dressen, "Eine Behörde gegen das Vergessen", Die Welt, 2 September 1999.

541. In its third periodic report to the CAT in 1998, Italy referred to allegations of violations committed by members of Italian armed forces participating in a multinational peacekeeping operation in Somalia in 1993 and 1994, and stated that:

> 76. Thorough and complex investigations are currently being carried out by various Italian judicial authorities in connection with the acts of violence committed by Italian soldiers in Somalia. Four such investigations are currently in progress at the Public Prosecutor's Office attached to the Court of Livorno.
> 77. As regards the proceedings for alleged torture suffered by a Somali man arrested at Jhoar and the alleged rape of a Somali woman by soldiers at a roadblock in Mogadishu, a probatory hearing was arranged so as to have the testimonies of the victims and a witness collected directly by the judge. Expert examinations are being carried out to ascertain the after-effects of the violence on the victims and also to see whether they corresponded to the photographs published by a weekly journal. The expert work is now in progress. Investigations are also being continued in the other two proceedings.
> 78. The Public Prosecutor's Office attached to the Court of Milan, for its part, is diligently continuing its investigations regarding an alleged case of carnal violence committed by an Italian soldier in Mogadishu.
> 79. By means of a decree dated 9 February 1997, the Preliminary Examination Judge of the Court of Leghorn ordered that the case based on the facts denounced by Abdi Hasn Addò be filed. Addò had accused Italian soldiers of having shot and killed three Somalis in a car on 3 June 1993. But the investigations showed that on the day in question the soldiers had been engaged in a military operation known as "Illach 26" that was taking place in another part of Somalia from that indicated by Addò.[640]

542. At the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002, the President of the National Assembly of Niger committed the National Assembly and the deputies of Niger:

> 1) To make approaches to the government in order that Niger:
> a) becomes a party to the following treaties in 2002: the Statute of the International Criminal Court (1998);
> . . .
> 2) To ensure that legislative measures required by International Humanitarian Law be adopted . . . in particular for punishment of violations of International Humanitarian Law treaties and of protection of the emblem of the Red Cross and the Red Crescent.[641]

543. In 2000, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, Slovenia stated that:

[640] Italy, Third periodic report to the CAT, UN Doc. CAT/C/44/Add.2, 15 December 1998, §§ 77–79.

[641] Niger, Pledge made on 20 February 2002 at the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, §§ 1–2.

States have the primary responsibility to ensure the safety and security of all personnel [i.e. UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict areas]. The Security Council for its part should insist on the responsibility of all parties to a conflict to respect international humanitarian law, and should take appropriate action in that regard. Attacks against such personnel clearly represent breaches of norms of international law. Every incident must be fully investigated, and the perpetrators must be brought to justice.[642]

544. In 1998, in its report on "gross violations of human rights" committed between 1960 and 1993, South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission stated that:

Those combatants who were killed or seriously injured while they were unarmed or out of combat, executed after they had been captured, or wounded when they clearly could have been arrested were held to be victims of gross violations of human rights, and those responsible were held accountable.[643]

545. In a resolution adopted on the occasion of the 25th Anniversary of the Additional Protocols in 2002, Switzerland's Conseil des Etats invited "national parliaments to examine the totality of the most appropriate legislative and judicial means in order to ... better prevent and repress violations of this law".[644]

546. According to the Report on the Practice of Syria, Syria considers that the duty to try or extradite persons alleged to have committed grave breaches, as defined in the Geneva Conventions and AP I, is part of customary law. It considers that no such duty exists in regard to violations committed in non-international conflicts.[645]

547. In the aftermath of the war in the South Atlantic, the UK Metropolitan Police investigated allegations according to which criminal offences had been committed by UK soldiers during that conflict. However, in 1994, in reply to a question in the House of Lords, the Lord Chancellor stated that:

The Director of Public Prosecution has ... announced that she has concluded her consideration of the inquiries carried out by the Metropolitan Police into allegations that criminal offences had been committed by members of the Parachute Regiment during their operations in the Falkland Islands in 1982 ... She has concluded that the evidence is not such as to afford a realistic prospect of conviction of any person for any criminal offence and has therefore decided that no criminal proceedings should be instituted.[646]

642 Slovenia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.4100 (Resumption 1), 9 February 2000, p. 8.
643 South Africa, Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, 1998, Vol. 1, p. 76, § 102.
644 Switzerland, Conseil des Etats, Declaration concerning the Protocols additional to the Geneva Conventions, 12 June 2002, Summer Session 2002, Seventh Session, Official Bulletin, No. 02.048 (provisional version of the text).
645 Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 6.3.
646 UK, House of Lords, Reply by the Lord Chancellor to a question, Hansard, 14 July 1994, Vol. 556, col. 1961.

548. In July 1997, UK special forces arrested a leading Bosnian war crime suspect, in order to bring him before the ICTY.[647]

549. At the CDDH, the US stated with respect to a proposal to characterise the use of certain prohibited weapons as a grave breach under Article 85 AP I that "grave breaches were meant to be the most serious type of crime; Parties have an obligation to punish or extradite those guilty of them".[648]

550. The 1979 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program stated that:

> It is the policy of the Department of Defense to ensure that:
>
> . . .
>
> 2. A program, designed to prevent violations of the law of war, is implemented by the U.S. Armed Forces.
> 3. Alleged violations of the law of war, whether committed by or against U.S. or enemy personnel, are promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and, where appropriate, remedied by corrective action.[649]

The Directive also stated that "the Armed Forces of the U.S. shall institute and implement programs to prevent violations of the law of war".[650]

551. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, referring to Articles 80–85 AP I, affirmed that "we support the principle that all necessary measures for the implementation of the rules of humanitarian law be taken without delay". Referring to Articles 85–89 AP I, he added that "we support the principle that the appropriate authorities take all reasonable measures to prevent acts contrary to the applicable rules of humanitarian law, take all appropriate steps to bring to justice any persons who have wilfully committed such acts".[651]

552. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq, the US stated that:

> The Government of the United States reminds the Government of Iraq that under International Law, violations of the Geneva Conventions, the Geneva Protocol of 1925, or related International Laws of armed conflict are war crimes, and individuals guilty of such violations may be subject to prosecution at any time . . . This includes members of the Iraqi armed forces and civilian government officials.[652]

[647] Marcus Tanner and Fran Abrams, "Commando swoop on Serbs", The Independent, 11 July 1997, p. 1.

[648] US, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, Doc. CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 280, § 7.

[649] US, Department of Defense, Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, Section C(2) and (3).

[650] US, Department of Defense, Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 10 July 1979, Section E(b).

[651] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

[652] US, Department of State, Diplomatic note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, Annex I, p. 2.

In another such diplomatic note, the US reiterated that "Iraqi individuals who are guilty of . . . war crimes . . . are . . . subject to prosecution at any time".[653]

553. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

[Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77] is the foundation for the US military law of war program. It contains four policies:

. . .

- A program, designed to prevent violations of the law of war . . . [will be] implemented by the US Armed Forces.
- Alleged violations of the law of war, whether committed by or against US or enemy personnel . . . [will be] promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and, where appropriate, remedied by corrective action.[654]

The report also stated that "each service has issued directives to implement [Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77] with respect to the reporting and investigation of suspected violations of the law of war committed by or against its personnel".[655]

554. The 1998 version of the US Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program, reissuing the one of 1979, provides that:

It is the DoD policy to ensure that:

. . .

4.2 An effective program to prevent violations of the law of war is implemented by the DoD Components.

4.3 All reportable incidents committed by or against U.S. or enemy persons are promptly reported, thoroughly investigated, and, where appropriate, remedied by corrective action.[656]

It further stated that "the Heads of the DoD Components shall . . . institute and implement effective programs to prevent violations of the law of war".[657]

555. The Report on US Practice states that:

It is the opinio juris of the US that all nations are obligated to punish members of their armed forces guilty of serious violations of the laws of war. As to other persons suspected of war crimes, there is a general obligation to try them or to cooperate with another state willing to try them in accordance with international fair trial standards.[658]

[653] US, Department of State, Diplomatic note to Iraq, Washington, 21 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22130, 22 January 1991, p. 4.

[654] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 633.

[655] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 633.

[656] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 4(2) and (3).

[657] US, Department of Defense Directive on the Law of War Program No. 5100.77, 9 December 1998, Section 5(3)(2).

[658] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.3.

The report also states that it is the opinio juris of the US that "there is a general obligation to try [persons suspected of war crimes other than members of its own armed forces] or to cooperate with another state willing to try them in accordance with international fair trial standards".[659]

556. In Order No. 985-1/91 issued in 1991, the YPA Chief of General Staff stated that:

1. YPA units have the duty to secure in the area of their operations full and unconditional implementation of rules of international humanitarian law of armed conflicts and suppress violations of those rules.
2. War crimes and other grave breaches of norms of law on warfare are serious criminal offences and call for criminal liability of all perpetrators. Appropriate measures should be carried out immediately against all perpetrators aimed at suppressing unnecessary and excessive suffering of [the] civilian population, wounded, prisoners and all other persons affected by military operations.
3. In order to prevent violations of international law of warfare, officers and all other members of [the] YPA are authorized to apply all measures, including use of force, against all perpetrators, regardless of their affiliation to different existing forces.[660]

557. In 1995, the Presidential Adviser for Military Affairs of a State party to a non-international armed conflict explained to the ICRC that there were problems of discipline in the armed forces. In his view, the absence of a credible system of military justice and, consequently, of sanctions, explained the conduct of members of the armed forces during military operations. The Military Penal Code of this State did not contain provisions expressly prohibiting certain types of conduct which violated IHL. The adviser added that, to end these multiple and serious violations, there had to be a threat of sanction. As long as there was a "climate of impunity" it was not likely that IHL would be respected.[661]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

558. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council expressed its determination "to put an end to violations of international humanitarian law and serious acts of violence directed against refugees, and that effective measures be taken to bring to justice the persons who are responsible for such crimes". It therefore urged States:

to arrest and detain, in accordance with their national law and relevant standards of international law, pending prosecution by the International Tribunal for Rwanda or by the appropriate national authorities, persons found within their territory against

[659] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.4.
[660] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Legal Department, Order No. 985-1/91, 3 October 1991, §§ 1–3.
[661] ICRC archive document.

whom there is sufficient evidence that they were responsible for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda.[662]

The Security Council also urged States on whose territory serious acts of violence in the refugee camps had taken place to arrest and detain, in accordance with their national law and relevant standards of international law, and submit to the appropriate authorities for the purpose of prosecution persons against whom there is sufficient evidence that they have incited or participated in such acts.[663]

559. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council called upon the Taliban:

to investigate urgently [the attacks on the United Nations personnel in the Taliban-held territories of Afghanistan, including the killing of the two Afghan staff members of the World Food Programme and of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Jalalabad, and of the Military Adviser to the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan in Kabul], and to keep the United Nations informed about the results of the investigation.[664]

560. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation in Kosovo, the UN Security Council underlined "the need for the authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to bring to justice those members of the security forces who have been involved in the mistreatment of civilians and the deliberate destruction of property".[665]

561. In April 1994, a statement by its President on the situation in Rwanda, the UN Security Council required that "the interim Government of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front take effective measures to prevent any attacks on civilians in areas under their control". It called on "the leadership of both parties to condemn publicly such attacks and to commit themselves to ensuring that persons who instigate or participate in such attacks are prosecuted and punished".[666]

562. In October 1994, in a statement by its President on the situation in Rwanda, the UN Security Council welcomed "the speed with which the United Nations and the Government of Rwanda responded to allegations that some RPA soldiers might have been responsible for systematic killings" and underlined "the importance it attaches to the thorough and expeditious investigation of these allegations". The Security Council further reaffirmed its view that "those responsible for serious breaches of international humanitarian law and acts of genocide must be brought to justice".[667]

[662] UN Security Council, Res. 978, 27 February 1995, preamble and § 1.
[663] UN Security Council, Res. 978, 27 February 1995, § 5.
[664] UN Security Council, Res. 1193, 28 August 1998, § 6.
[665] UN Security Council, Res. 1199, 23 September 1998, § 14.
[666] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/21, 30 April 1994.
[667] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/59, 14 October 1994.

563. In 1994, in a statement by its President in connection with events in Burundi, the UN Security Council stated that it fully supported the efforts of the Burundian authorities "in seeking to ensure that those committing or inciting the commitment of acts of violence are held accountable for their actions".[668]

564. In September 1995, in a statement by its President on the situation in Croatia, the UN Security Council demanded that the Croatian government "immediately investigate all [reports of human rights violations including the burning of houses, looting of property and killings] and take appropriate measures to put an end to such acts".[669]

565. In September 1995, in a statement by its President on the situation in Croatia, the UN Security Council demanded that the Croatian government "investigate all reports of human rights violations and take appropriate measures to put an end to such acts".[670]

566. In 1997, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council voiced its deep concern at "continuing reports of massacres, other atrocities and violations of IHL in eastern Zaire" and pointed out that it attached great importance to the "commitment of the leader of the ADFL to take appropriate action against members of the ADFL who violate the rules of international humanitarian law concerning the treatment of refugees and civilians".[671]

567. In 1998, in a statement by its President concerning the conflict in the DRC, the UN Security Council stated that it:

> recognizes the necessity to investigate further the massacres, other atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law and to prosecute those responsible. It deplores the delay in the administration of justice. The Council calls on the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda to investigate without delay, in their respective countries, the allegations contained in the report of the Investigative Team and to bring to justice any persons found to have been involved in these or other massacres, atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law. The Council takes note of the stated willingness of the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo to try any of its nationals who are guilty of or were implicated in the alleged massacres . . . Such action is of great importance in helping to bring an end to impunity and to foster lasting peace and stability in the region.[672]

568. In 1998, in two statements by its President concerning the situation in Afghanistan, the UN Security Council stated that it supported "the steps of [668] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/82, 22 December 1994.

[669] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/44, 7 September 1995, p. 1.
[670] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/49, 17 September 1995.
[671] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/24, 30 April 1997.
[672] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/20, 13 July 1998, pp. 1-2.

the Secretary-General to launch investigations into alleged mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians in Afghanistan".[673]

569. In 2000, in a statement by its President on the protection of UN personnel, associated personnel and humanitarian personnel in conflict zones, the UN Security Council urged "States to fulfil their responsibility to act promptly and effectively in their domestic legal systems to bring to justice all those responsible for attacks and other acts of violence against such personnel, and to enact effective national legislation as required for that purpose".[674]

570. In a resolution adopted in 1946 on the extradition and punishment of war criminals, the UN General Assembly recommended that members of the UN take all the necessary measures:

> to cause the arrest of those war criminals who have been responsible for or have taken a consenting part in [crimes as defined, inter alia, in the Moscow Declaration of 1943 and the Charter of the International Military Tribunal of 1945], and to cause them to be sent back to the countries to which their abominable deeds were done, in order that they may be judged and punished according to the laws of those countries.

It also called upon governments of non-member States to take all necessary measures for the apprehension and removal of war criminals.[675]

571. In a resolution adopted in 1969 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly called upon the States concerned:

> to take the necessary measures for the thorough investigation of war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . and for the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of all war criminals and persons guilty of crimes against humanity who have not yet been brought to trial or punished.[676]

572. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly urged States "to take measures to ensure the punishment of all persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including their extradition to those countries where they have committed such crimes".[677]

573. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly declared that "war crimes and crimes against humanity, wherever they are committed, shall

[673] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/9, 6 April 1998, p. 2; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/22, 14 July 1998, p. 3.
[674] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/2000/4, 9 February 2000.
[675] UN General Assembly, Res. 3 (I), 13 February 1946, § 3.
[676] UN General Assembly, Res. 2583 (XXIV), 15 December 1969, § 1; see also Res. 2712 (XXV), 15 December 1970, §§ 2 and 5.
[677] UN General Assembly, Res. 2840 (XXVI), 18 December 1971, § 1.

be subject to investigation and the persons against whom there is evidence that they have committed such crimes shall be subject to tracing, arrest, trial and, if found guilty, to punishment".[678]

574. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN General Assembly referred to the 1994 Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict and invited all States:

> to disseminate widely the revised guidelines for military manuals and instructions on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict received from the International Committee of the Red Cross and to give due consideration to the possibility of incorporating them into their military manuals and other instructions addressed to their military personnel.[679]

575. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on rape and abuse of women in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that rape in the conduct of armed conflict constituted a war crime and called upon "States to take all measures required for the protection of women and children from such acts and to strengthen mechanisms to investigate and punish all those responsible and bring the perpetrators to justice".[680]

576. In a resolution adopted in 1997 on the rights of the child, the UN General Assembly called upon all States to:

> take all measures required for the protection of women and children from all acts of gender-based violence, including rape, sexual exploitation and forced pregnancy, and to strengthen mechanisms to investigate and punish all those responsible and bring the perpetrators to justice.[681]

577. In a resolution adopted in 1994 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "the international community will exert all efforts to bring them [all persons who perpetrate or authorize violations of international humanitarian law] to justice in accordance with internationally recognized principles of due process".[682]

578. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged UN member States "to exert every effort to bring to justice, in accordance with internationally recognized principles of due process, all those individuals directly or indirectly involved in these outrageous international crimes".[683]

579. In a resolution adopted in 1995 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded "immediate, firm and resolute action by all concerned parties and the international

[678] UN General Assembly, Res. 3074 (XXVIII), 3 December 1973, § 1.
[679] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/50, 9 December 1994, § 11.
[680] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/192, 22 December 1995, § 3, see also Res. 51/77, 12 December 1996, § 28.
[681] UN General Assembly, Res. 52/107, 12 December 1997, § 12.
[682] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 17.
[683] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/77, 9 March 1994, § 6.

community" to bring to trial those responsible for human rights violations and breaches of international law. It also reaffirmed that "all persons who perpetrate or authorize violations of international humanitarian law . . . should be brought to justice in accordance with internationally recognized principles of due process".[684]

580. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN Commission on Human Rights recognised that the practice of rape as a weapon of war constituted a war crime and called for the "protection and care of rape victims, respect for the special needs of victims of sexual violence in the investigation and prosecution of alleged violations, and punishment of those responsible".[685] The Commission also expressed "its outrage over the failure of parties to arrest and surrender persons indicted by the [ICTY] in violation of the peace agreement".[686]

581. In a resolution on the situation of human rights in 1996, the UN commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "the international community will exert every effort, in cooperation with national and International tribunals, to bring those responsible [for grave violations of international humanitarian law] to justice in accordance with international principles of due process.[687]

582. In resolutions adopted in 1994, 1995 and 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights reminded the government of Myanmar of its obligations:

> to put an end to the impunity of perpetrators of violations of human rights, including members of the military, and its responsibility to investigate alleged cases of human rights violations committed by its agents on its territory, to bring them to justice, prosecute them and punish those found guilty, in all circumstances.[688]

583. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights called "once more upon the Government of the Sudan to ensure a full and thorough investigation by the independent judicial inquiry commission of the killings of Sudanese employees of foreign relief organizations, to bring to justice those responsible for the killings".[689]

584. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed the commitments made by the government of Rwanda "to protect and promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to eliminate impunity by investigating and prosecuting those responsible for acts of retribution".[690] In a further resolution adopted in 1996, the Commission encouraged the government of Rwanda to ensure investigation and prosecution

[684] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/89, 8 March 1995, §§ 13 and 19.
[685] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 2.
[686] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 6.
[687] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/76, 23 April 1996, § 4.
[688] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/85, 9 March 1994, § 8; Res. 1995/72, 8 March 1995, § 12; Res. 1996/80, 23 April 1996, § 12.
[689] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/77, 8 March 1995, § 17.
[690] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/91, 8 March 1995, preamble and § 6 of those responsible for genocide and other serious violations of international law.[691]

585. In a resolution on Sierra Leone adopted in 1999, the UN Commission on Human Rights reminded "all factions and forces in Sierra Leone that in any armed conflict, including an armed conflict not of an international character . . . all countries are under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, . . . grave breaches [of IHL] and to bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before their own courts".[692]

586. In a resolution adopted in 1999, the UN Commission on Human Rights invited the government of Burundi "to take more measures, including in the judicial sphere, to put an end to impunity, in particular by bringing to trial those responsible for violations of human rights and of international humanitarian law".[693]

587. In a resolution on Chechnya adopted in 2000, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the Russian government to:

> establish urgently, according to recognized international standards, a national, broad-based and independent commission of inquiry to investigate promptly alleged violations of human rights and breaches of international humanitarian law committed in the Republic of Chechnya in order to establish the truth and identify those responsible, with a view to bringing them to justice and preventing impunity.[694]

588. In a resolution on Chechnya adopted in 2001, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the Russian government to:

> ensure that all necessary measures are taken to investigate and solve all cases of forced disappearance as recorded and reported, inter alia, by the Office of the Special Representative of the President of the Russian Federation, and to ensure where necessary that criminal prosecutions are undertaken.[695]

589. In a resolution on impunity adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that it:

> Emphasizes the importance of combating impunity to the prevention of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law and urges States to give necessary attention to the question of impunity for violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, including those perpetrated against women and children, and to take appropriate measures to address this important issue;
> . . .
> Emphasizes the importance of taking all necessary and possible steps to hold accountable perpetrators, including their accomplices, of violations of international human rights and humanitarian law, recognizes that amnesties should not be

[691] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/76, 23 April 1996, § 6.
[692] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/1, 6 April 1999, § 2.
[693] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/10, 23 April 1999, § 8.
[694] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2000/58, 25 April 2000, § 4.
[695] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/24, 20 April 2001, § 10.

granted to those who commit violations of international humanitarian and human rights law that constitute serious crimes and urges States to take action in accordance with their obligations under international law;
...
Recognizes that crimes such as genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture are violations of international law and that perpetrators of such crimes should be prosecuted or extradited by States, and urges all States to take effective measures to implement their obligations to prosecute or extradite perpetrators of such crimes.[696]

590. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, "dismayed at the continued extremely unsatisfactory capacity of the judicial system to punish those guilty of violations of human rights", strongly urged the government of El Salvador "to take all necessary measures to ensure that those responsible for the murder of Monsignor Romero, Archbishop of San Salvador, be brought to trial".[697]

591. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the punishment of the crime of genocide, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights urged States "to make every effort to bring to justice ... all those individuals directly or indirectly involved in the unspeakable crimes committed in Bosnia and Herzegovina, elsewhere in the territory of the former Yugoslavia or in any other part of the world".[698]

592. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation in Peru, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, condemning the violations of human rights by the Sendero Luminoso (Shining Path) and the MRTA and regretting the violations of human rights by some members of the forces of law and order, urged the Peruvian authorities "to adopt the necessary measures to guarantee full compliance with the State's obligations to investigate and penalize those responsible for human rights violations".[699]

593. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1994, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights called for "action to investigate, identify and establish the responsibilities, both national and international, of the individuals implicated in the war crimes, including ... crimes against humanity and genocide in the tragedy of Rwanda, for the purpose of punishing those responsible".[700]

594. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1995, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights deplored the fact that the efforts of the international community were still inadequate, "whereas the duty of trying those responsible for the genocide and war crimes does not devolve solely on the Government of Rwanda".[701]

[696] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/79, 25 April 2002, §§ 1, 2 and 11.
[697] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/9, 31 August 1989, preamble and § 5.
[698] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/8, 20 August 1993, § 4.
[699] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/23, 23 August 1993, §§ 2, 3 and 8.
[700] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/1, 9 August 1994, § 7.
[701] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/5, 19 August 1995, § 3.

595. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, including internal armed conflict, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights stated that it:

> 5. Calls upon all States to enact and enforce legislation incorporating relevant international criminal law into their municipal legal systems to allow for the effective prosecution in municipal courts of all acts of sexual violence committed during armed conflict;
> 6. Also calls upon all States to consider enacting legislation as required by the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 to provide jurisdiction in their municipal courts for serious international crimes committed in other States, thereby increasing the potential venues in which acts of sexual violence may be prosecuted;
> 7. Affirms at the same time that all States must ensure that their legal systems at all levels conform to their international obligations and are capable of adjudicating international crimes and administering justice without gender bias;
> . . .
> 9. Reiterates that States must respect their international obligations to prosecute perpetrators . . . of human rights and humanitarian law violations.[702]

596. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights stated that it:

> 6. Calls upon all States to enact and enforce legislation incorporating relevant international criminal law into their national legal systems to allow for the effective prosecution in national courts of acts of sexual violence committed during armed conflicts;
> 7. Affirms at the same time that all States must ensure that their legal systems at all levels conform to their international obligations and are capable of adjudicating international crimes and administering justice without gender bias;
> . . .
> 9. Reiterates that States must respect their international obligations to prosecute perpetrators and compensate all victims of human rights and humanitarian law violations;
> 10. Recognizes that to give effect to rules applicable in conflict situations requires the adoption and implementation of measures in peacetime;
> 11. Calls upon States to make possible respect for their obligations in situations of conflict by, inter alia:
> . . .
> (b) Putting in place effective mechanisms for the investigation and prosecution of such offences by their own armed forces and for the protection of the victims of such offences;
> . . .
> 12. Calls upon States to provide effective criminal penalties . . . in order to end the cycle of impunity with regard to sexual violence committed during armed conflicts.[703]

[702] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/18, 21 August 1998, §§ 5–7 and 9.
[703] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/16, 26 August 1999, §§ 6–7 and 9–12.

597. In 1996, in a report concerning UNAMIR in Rwanda, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

The [Rwandan] authorities took some significant steps to address reported human rights violations. Four soldiers were tried and convicted by a military court in late December 1995 for their involvement in an incident in which four civilians were shot, and three killed. The Rwandan Patriotic Army cooperated with the Field Operation in its investigation of the 25 November killings by soldiers of civilians at a temporary settlement in Nyungwe forest. The official investigation is now in the hands of the Military Prosecutor . . . However, the Field Operation remained concerned that official investigations were carried out only in some of the cases of possible human rights violations reported to it, including killings of civilians allegedly by members of the security forces.[704]

598. In 2001, in a recommendation in his report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary–General encouraged member States "to introduce or strengthen domestic legislation and arrangements providing for the investigation, prosecution and trial of those responsible for the systematic and widespread violations of international criminal law".[705]

599. In 1996, in a report on a mission to North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences recommended, inter alia, that, at the national level the government of Japan should "identify and punish, as far as possible, perpetrators involved [during the Second World War] in the recruitment and institutionalization of comfort stations".[706]

600. In 1998, in a report on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict submitted to the UN Sub-Commission of Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur recommended that:

States should enact special legislation incorporating international criminal law into their municipal legal systems. Domestic law codifications of international criminal law should specifically criminalize slavery and acts of sexual violence, including rape, as grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, war crimes, torture and constituent acts of crimes against humanity and genocide. Military regulations, codes of conduct, and training materials for the uniformed and armed services must explicitly address the prohibition of sexual violence and sexual slavery during armed conflict. States should search for and bring to justice all perpetrators of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, pursuant to article 146 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. States should, for example, follow the examples of Belgium and Canada and enact legislation providing universal jurisdiction for violations of [704] UN Secretary-General, Progress report on the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda, UN Doc. A/50/868-S/1996/61, 30 January 1996, § 11.

[705] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, Recommendation 3.

[706] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences, Report on the mission to North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1, 4 January 1996, § 137(f).

jus cogens norms and other international crimes including sexual slavery and sexual and gender violence committed by State and non-State actors, including armed groups not under State authority.[707]

601. In 1994, in its final report on grave violations of IHL in Rwanda, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994) noted that it had been informed by the Rwandan Minister of Defence that the government had detained 70 FPR soldiers and intended to try and punish them for private acts of revenge exacted against Hutus. The government emphasised that these acts were not only unauthorised, but subject to heavy military discipline and punishment. The Commission of Experts considered that "the armed conflict between 6 April and 15 July 1994 qualifies as a non-international armed conflict".[708]

602. In 1995, in his second report concerning the conflict in Guatemala, the Director of MINUGUA observed that:

Verification has uncovered cases in which the Government failed to guarantee the right to integrity and security of person in terms of freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, or the threat of such treatment. Cases have been verified in which State officials appear to be implicated, but they have not been promptly or thoroughly investigated and the guilty parties have not been prosecuted.[709]

603. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador stated with respect to an incident which had occurred at El Junquillo that:

On 12 March 1981, soldiers and members of the Cacaopera military defence unit attacked the population, consisting solely of women, young children and old people. They killed the inhabitants and raped a number of women and little girls under the age of 12. They set fire to houses, cornfields and barns.

The Commission finds that: . . . the Government and the judiciary of El Salvador failed to conduct investigations into the incident. The State thus failed in its duty under international human rights law to investigate, bring to trial and punish those responsible and to compensate the victims or their families.[710]

With respect to the killing of more than 200 civilians committed by units of the Atlacatl Battalion of the armed forces of El Salvador, the Commission deplored the fact that:

Although it received news of the massacre, which would have been easy to corroborate because of the profusion of unburied bodies, the Armed Forces High Command

[707] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, § 102.

[708] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 935 (1994), Final report, UN Doc. S/1994/1405, 9 December 1994, §§ 99 and 108.

[709] MINUGUA, Director, Second report, UN Doc. A/49/929, 29 June 1995, § 179.

[710] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, p. 67.

did not conduct or did not give any word of an investigation and repeatedly denied that the massacre had occurred. There is full evidence that General José Guillermo García, then Minister of Defence, initiated no investigations that might have enabled the facts to be established. There is sufficient evidence that General Rafael Flórez Lima, Chief of the Armed Forces Joint Staff at the time, was aware that the massacre had occurred and also failed to undertake any investigation.

The High Command also took no steps whatsoever to prevent the repetition of such acts, with the result that the same units were used in other operations and followed the same procedures.

The El Mozote massacre was a serious violation of international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

The President of the Supreme Court of Justice of El Salvador, Mr. Mauricio Gutiérrez Castro, has interfered unduly and prejudicially, for biased political reasons, in the ongoing judicial proceedings on the case.[711]

Referring to the massacre of more than 300 unarmed civilians on the banks of the Sumpul river by troops of a military detachment, members of the National Guard and members of the paramilitary Organización Nacional Democrática (ORDEN) for which it found sufficient evidence, the Commission stated that:

The Commission believes that the Salvadorian military authorities were guilty of a cover-up of the incident. There is sufficient evidence that Colonel Ricardo Augusto Peña Arbaiza, Commander of Military Detachment No. 1 in May 1980, made no serious investigation of the incident.

The Sumpul river massacre was a serious violation of international humanitarian law and international human rights law.[712]

Turning to the activities of the death squads in El Salvador, the Commission stated that:

It is especially important to call attention to the repeated abuses committed by the intelligence services of the security forces and the armed forces . . . Any investigation must result both in an institutional clean-up of the intelligence services and in the identification of those responsible for this aberrant practice.

The lack of effective action by the judicial system was a factor that reinforced the impunity that shielded and continues to shield members and promoters of the death squads in El Salvador.

. . .

The issue of the death squads in El Salvador is so important that it requires special investigation. More resolute action by national institutions, with the cooperation and assistance of foreign authorities who have any information on the subject, is especially needed. In order to verify a number of specific violations and ascertain who was responsible, it will be necessary to investigate the serious acts of violence committed by the death squads on a case-by-case basis.[713]

[711] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, p. 121.

[712] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, p. 124.

[713] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, pp. 137–138.

604. In 1993, in its report to the UN General Assembly, the ILC recognised the creation of the ICTY as a step towards the creation of a system of universal penal jurisdiction.[714]

Other International Organisations

605. In a declaration adopted in 1993 on the rape of women and children in the territory of former Yugoslavia, the Council of Ministers of the Council of Europe appealed to "member States and the international community at large to ensure that these atrocities cease and that their instigators and perpetrators are prosecuted by an appropriate national or international penal tribunal".[715]

606. In a recommendation adopted in 1979 calling for the ratification of the 1974 European Convention on the Non-applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stated that it believed that: "Council of Europe member states should do everything they can, both individually and in close co-operation, to search for and prosecute the most serious of the surviving criminals of the Second World War, and to bring them to trial".[716]

607. In 1995, in a report on the human rights situation in Chechnya, the Rapporteur of the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe noted that violations of IHL and/or human rights law committed by members of the Russian troops had not been prosecuted. Referring to acts such as robbery and looting, wanton destruction, extortion, arson, rape, disappearances and hostage-taking, he concluded that:

> It can be summarised that in principle there seems to be no investigation or prosecution of human rights abuses committed by Russian federal troops against the Chechen population, either through military discipline, or through the ordinary judicial system. This is an unacceptable situation.[717]

The Rapporteur recommended that the Russian authorities "tighten military discipline and introduce the principle of accountability into the armed forces" and "prosecute individual criminal acts committed during the last six months . . . through the judicial system".[718]

608. In a recommendation adopted in 1999 concerning respect for IHL in Europe, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe recommended that the Committee of Ministers "invite the governments of the member

[714] ILC, Report to the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/48/10, 1 November 1993, p. 1.
[715] Council of Europe, Council of Ministers, Declaration on the rape of women and children in the territory of former Yugoslavia, 18 February 1993.
[716] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 855, 2 February 1979, § 9.
[717] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Report on the Human Rights Situation in Chechnya, Doc. 7384, 15 September 1995, Appendix I, §§ 40–41 and 68–69.
[718] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights, Report on the Human Rights Situation in Chechnya, Doc. 7384, 15 September 1995, Appendix I, §§ 69 and 75.

states: . . . to introduce the aut dedere aut iudicare principle in their criminal law".[719]

609. In a resolution adopted in 1982 on the situation in Lebanon, the European Parliament noted "the establishing, albeit belated, of an official Israeli inquiry into the [killings of Palestinians] in the camps in Sabra and Chatila and hopes that responsibility for them is to be fully and clearly established".[720]

610. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the European Parliament affirmed that "there should be no question of impunity for those responsible for war crimes in the former Yugoslavia".[721]

611. At the first OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1994, the participants concluded that "it is necessary to bring to the attention of OAU Member States the importance of improving national legislation, particularly in integrating penal and disciplinary measures to repress violation[s] of International Humanitarian Law (IHL)".[722] The OAU Council of Ministers took note of the recommendations of the seminar.[723]

612. At the fourth OAU/ICRC seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, held in 1997, the participants noted that they appreciated "the national measures taken by the Government of Ethiopia, launched toward repression of war crimes and crimes against humanity" and called upon "the International Community to render appropriate support with a view to make them more effective".[724]

613. Addressing the President of the UN Security Council as members of the Contact Group of OIC in 1992, Egypt, Iran, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal and Turkey stated that:

> Steps should be taken to bring before an international tribunal those responsible for the abhorrent practice of "ethnic cleansing", for mass killings and the commission of other grave breaches of international humanitarian law and in particular the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949.[725]

International Conferences

614. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the application of the Geneva Conventions by the United Nations Emergency Forces in which it recommended that "the authorities [719] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1427, 23 September 1999, § 8(ii)(i).

[720] European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in the Lebanon, 15 October 1982, § 3.
[721] European Parliament, Resolution on Human Rights in the world and Community human rights policy for the years 1991/92, 26 April 1993, §§ 7 and 8.
[722] OAU/ICRC, First seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 7 April 1994, Conclusions and Recommendations, § 7.
[723] OAU, Council of Ministers, Res. 1526 (LX), 11 June 1994, § 1.
[724] OAU/ICRC, Fourth seminar on IHL for diplomats accredited to the OAU, Addis Ababa, 29–30 April 1997, Recommendations, § 6.
[725] OIC, Contact Group on Bosnia and Herzegovina, Letter dated 5 October 1992 from Egypt, Iran, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal and Turkey to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/24620, 6 October 1992, p. 2.

responsible for the contingents [made available to the UN] agree to take all the necessary measures to prevent and suppress any breaches of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions".[726]

615. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the repression of violations of the Geneva Conventions in which it appealed "to Governments which have so far not done so to complete their legislation so as to ensure adequate penal sanctions for violations of these Conventions".[727]

616. In the Final Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants urged all States to:

> 5. Adopt and implement, at the national level, all appropriate regulations, laws and measures to ensure respect for international humanitarian law applicable in the event of armed conflict and to punish violations thereof.
> 6. Contribute to an impartial clarification of alleged violations of international humanitarian law . . .
> 7. Ensure that war crimes are duly prosecuted and do not go unpunished, and accordingly implement the provisions on the punishment of grave breaches of international humanitarian law and encourage the timely establishment of appropriate international legal machinery, and in this connection acknowledge the substantial work accomplished by the International Law Commission on an international criminal court.[728]

617. The Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention in 2001 adopted a declaration calling upon "all parties, directly involved in the conflict [between Israel and Palestinians] or not, to . . . take measures necessary for the prevention and suppression of breaches of the [1949 Geneva] Conventions".[729]

618. In the Final Declaration of the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002, the participants stated that:

> Wherever necessary, we commit ourselves to work towards the inclusion of these humanitarian norms in our national legislation with a view to guarantee their full implementation.
>
> . . . We commit ourselves to see that our States have the legislative means of repressing violations of International Humanitarian Law . . .
>
> We consider that a multidisciplinary committee bringing together all the State branches concerned and the various organisations, including the national Red Cross and Red Crescent Society, can be a useful and efficient mechanism to ensure the implementation of International Humanitarian Law. We therefore encourage our Parliaments to facilitate the setting up of such a structure if it is not yet in existence, [726] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXV, § 3.

[727] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXVI.
[728] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § II(5), (6) and (7).
[729] Conference of High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Geneva, 5 December 2001, Declaration, § 4.

and take necessary measures to be represented on it and to be kept informed about its proceedings and recommendations.[730]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

619. In 1993, in the Application of Genocide Convention case (Provisional Measures) brought by Bosnia and Herzegovina against the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the ICJ called upon the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro) to ensure that:

any military, paramilitary or irregular armed units which may be directed or supported by it, as well as any organizations and persons which may be subject to its control, direction or influence, do not commit any acts of genocide, of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, or in complicity in genocide, whether directed against the Muslim population of Bosnia and Herzegovina or against any other national, ethnical, racial or religious group.[731]

620. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, the CRC strongly recommended that:

All reported cases of abuse, rape and/or violence against children committed by members of the armed forces be rapidly, impartially, thoroughly and systematically investigated. Appropriate judicial sanctions should be applied to perpetrators and wide publicity should be given to such sanctions.[732]

621. In its admissibility decision in X v. FRG in 1976 regarding the right to be tried within a reasonable time for war crimes committed during the Second World War, the ECiHR noted that:

The international community requires the competent authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany to investigate and prosecute [war crimes committed during the Second World War] despite the difficulties encountered by reason of the long time that has elapsed since the commission of the acts concerned.[733]

622. In 1993, in a report on the situation of human rights in Peru, the IACiHR recommended that the Peruvian government adopt "legislation to regulate offenses committed in connection with the performance of duties, in order to punish crimes committed by members of security forces in emergency areas".[734]

[730] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Final Declaration, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, preamble and §§ 7 and 11–12.
[731] ICJ, Application of Genocide Convention case (Provisional Measures), Order, 8 April 1993, § 52.
[732] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.69, 24 January 1997, § 41.
[733] ECiHR, X v. FRG, Admissibility Decision, 6 July 1976 , p. 116.
[734] IACiHR, Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Peru, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83 Doc. 31, 12 March 1993, p. 61.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

623. According to the ICRC Commentary on the First Geneva Convention, there is an inconsistency between the English and the French text in the third paragraph of Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 149 GC IV in that the English text uses the term "suppression", while the French text uses the wider expression "faire cesser":

> The expression "faire cesser", employed in the French text, is open to various interpretations. In our opinion it covers everything a State can do to prevent the commission, or the repetition, of acts contrary to the Convention ... The English word "suppression" corresponds more or less exactly to the French word "répression" (though not to the French word "suppression"). The French and English texts do not therefore correspond exactly. There can, however, be no doubt that the primary purpose of the paragraph is the repression of infractions other than "grave breaches", and that the administrative measures which may be taken to ensure respect for the provisions of the Convention on the part of the armed forces and the civilian population are only a secondary consideration ... It is thus clear that all breaches of the present Convention should be repressed by national legislation. At the very least, the Contracting Powers, having arranged for the repression of the various grave breaches and fixed an appropriate penalty for each, must include a general clause in their national legislative enactments, providing for the punishment of other breaches of the Convention. Furthermore, under the present paragraph the authorities of the Contracting Parties should issue instructions in accordance with the Convention and arrange for judicial or disciplinary proceedings to be taken in all cases of failure to comply with such instructions.[735] [emphasis in original]

624. In 1993, in its report submitted to the UN General Assembly on the protection of the environment in time of armed conflict, the ICRC stated that "under international law, States have a clear duty to bring to justice all persons suspected of having committed or ordered the commission of such acts ['certain breaches of international law, including those bearing on the environment in time of armed conflict']".[736]

625. In 1993, in a communication to the information services of National Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the ICRC stated that:

> The parties to a conflict and all the states party to the 1949 Geneva Conventions are under the obligation to repress grave breaches of international humanitarian law and to put an end to any violations thereof. The obligation to repress applies whatever the nationality of the offender and whenever the offence is committed.
> ...
> Nothing prevents states from collectively exercising powers that they possess on an individual basis ... The setting-up of [the ICTY] ... does not release states from [735] Jean S. Pictet (ed.), Commentary on the First Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1952, pp. 367–368.

[736] ICRC, Report on the Protection of the Environment in Time of Armed Conflict submitted to the UN General Assembly, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General on the protection of the environment in times of armed conflict, UN Doc. A/48/269, 29 July 1993, § 49.

their obligation to take all other measures intended to ensure respect for international humanitarian law, to prevent and, where necessary, repress any violations thereof.[737]

626. In 1993, the ICRC informed the authorities of a State of an event involving the abuse of the remains of a dead person. The purpose of the notification was to enable the authorities "to conduct an inquiry into this violation of international humanitarian law and to avoid the repetition of such acts in the future". The ICRC expressed its hope that this might facilitate the work of the authorities, reminding them that they were "mandated to make prevail law and order".[738]

627. At its Seville Session in 1997, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution in which it invited National Societies to promote the creation of an international criminal court, "while at the same time encouraging States to comply with their existing obligation under international humanitarian law to repress violations of this law and of the Convention relating to the crime of genocide".[739]

628. At its Geneva Session in 1999, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on the international criminal court in which it invited National Societies:

to promote the ratification of the Rome Statute without making the declaration under Art. 124 of the Rome Statute, while at the same time encouraging States to comply with their existing obligation under international humanitarian law to suppress and repress violations of this law.[740]

VI. Other Practice

629. In 1988, in report on human rights in Nicaragua, Americas Watch stated that:

We learned of another rape, however, that did result in punishment. Four Sandinista soldiers were tried for the rape on January 27, 1988 in Yacapuca, Jinotega, of four women in their house. In addition, they were charged with theft. The soldiers, apparently conducting a recruitment sweep, accused the women of being contra collaborators.[741]

630. In 1993, the authorities of a separatist entity stated that it was impossible for the armed forces to prevent acts of pillage by civilians, since the troops were needed in another region. They added, however, that they had encouraged local television and radio stations to broadcast messages calling on the civilian population to stop the pillage of homes.[742]

631. In an appeal in 1996, Amnesty International stated that "IFOR should provide adequate security for grave sites to ensure that those responsible [737] ICRC archive document [738] ICRC archive document.

[739] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Seville Session, 25–27 November 1997, Res. 5, § 1.
[740] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Geneva Session, 29–30 October 1999, Res. 11, § 1.
[741] Americas Watch, Human Rights in Nicaragua: 1987–1988, New York, August 1998, p. 98.
[742] ICRC archive document.

for grave breaches of the [1949] Geneva Conventions can be brought to justice".[743]

632. In a resolution adopted at its Berlin Session in 1999, the Institute of International Law stated that:

> The competent authorities of a State on the territory of which is found a person against whom is alleged a serious violation of international humanitarian law committed in a non-international armed conflict are entitled to prosecute and try such a person before their courts; they are urged to do so.[744]

633. In 1995, the Groupe écoute et réconciliation dans l'Afrique des Grands Lacs – a group of private individuals from the Great Lakes region that met under the auspices of the Graduate Institute of Development Studies in Geneva – stated in a declaration on ending the reign of impunity in Rwanda and Burundi that the absence of an extradition treaty should not be used as an excuse to prevent the arrest and surrender of persons suspected of acts of genocide. In cases where States could not or would not extradite the suspects, they should be tried under the laws of the country where they resided.[745]

Granting of asylum to suspected war criminals

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

634. Article 1(F)(a) of the 1951 Refugee Convention provides that:

> The provisions of this Convention shall not apply to any person with respect to whom there are serious reasons for considering that . . . he has committed a crime against peace, a war crime, or a crime against humanity, as defined in the international instruments drawn up to make provision in respect of such crimes.

Other Instruments

635. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

636. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that:

> Where an individual seeking asylum in a neutral state is alleged to have committed grave breaches of LOAC, and a prima facie case can be established, the neutral state [743] Amnesty International, Amnesty International renews calls for IFOR to comply with international law, April 1996.

[744] Institute of International Law, Berlin Session, Resolution on the Application of International Humanitarian Law and Fundamental Human Rights in Armed Conflicts in which Non-State Entities are Parties, 25 August 1999, § VIII.

[745] Institut Universitaire d'études du développement, Groupe écoute et réconciliation dans l'Afrique des Grands Lacs, Pour en terminer avec la "culture de l'impunité" au Rwanda et Burundi, January 1995, p. 3.

is obligated either to place the individual on trial or hand them over to another party to the Geneva Conventions for trial.[746]

National Legislation

637. No practice was found.

National Case-law

638. In the Ahmed case in 1996, the Administrative Law Division of the Council of State of the Netherlands ruled that a Somali national could not be granted the protection of the 1951 Refugee Convention since he was suspected of having been involved in committing crimes against humanity and, being a high-ranking soldier and acting on behalf of the Somali government, was thus guilty of acts contrary to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[747] Similar judgements were pronounced by the same body in the Hamoud case and in the Chantirakumar case in 1997.[748]

639. In the Demjanjuk case in 1985, proceedings before the US Court of Appeals led to the revocation of the citizenship of the accused who was subsequently extradited to stand trial in Israel on accusations of having committed war crimes during the Second World War.[749]

Other National Practice

640. The Report on the Practice of the Netherlands, with respect to the 1984 Convention against Torture and its ratification procedure in the Netherlands, and referring to decisions of the Dutch Administrative Law Division of the Council of State to refuse protection under the 1951 Refugee Convention to persons suspected of having been involved in committing crimes against humanity and crimes in violation of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, states that "the Dutch government completely complied with the treaty requirements".[750]

641. The Report on US Practice states that "over the last 20 years, the US Department of Justice has engaged in extensive investigations and litigation to denaturalise and expel war criminals from the Second World War era. It has also sought to exclude such persons from entry into the United States." The report concludes that "this reflects a broader opinio juris that no nation should provide sanctuary to persons guilty of war crimes".[751]

[746] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1114.
[747] Netherlands, Council of State (Raad van State), Administrative Law Division, Ahmed case, Judgement, 20 December 1996.
[748] Netherlands, Council of State (Raad van State), Administrative Law Division, Hamoud case, Judgement, 11 September 1997; Chantirakumar case, Judgement, 2 September 1997.
[749] US, Court of Appeals, Demjanjuk case, Judgement, 31 October 1985.
[750] Report on the Practice of the Netherlands, 1997, Chapter 6.4.
[751] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.12. (For a list of denaturalisation and deportation cases for which the US has sought judicial assistance from the Soviet Union, see Marian Nash

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

642. In 1994, in a statement by its President on Rwanda, the UN Security Council, after reaffirming its view that those responsible for serious breaches of IHL and acts of genocide must be brought to justice, stressed that "persons involved in such acts cannot achieve immunity from prosecution by fleeing the country" and noted that "the provisions of the Convention relating to the status of refugees do not apply to such persons".[752]

643. In a resolution adopting the Declaration on Territorial Asylum in 1967, the UN General Assembly stated that:

> The right to seek and to enjoy asylum may not be invoked by any person with respect to whom there are serious reasons for considering that he has committed a crime against peace, a war crime or a crime against humanity, as defined in the international instruments drawn up to make provision in respect of such crimes.[753]

644. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly stated that "States shall not grant asylum to any person with respect to whom there are serious reasons for considering that he has committed a crime against peace, a war crime or a crime against humanity".[754]

Other International Organisations

645. No practice was found.

International Conferences

646. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

647. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

648. No practice was found.

(Leich), Cumulative Digest of the United States Practice in International Law, 1981–1988, US Department of State Publication 10120, Washington, D.C., 1993–1995, pp. 1404–1405.)

752 UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1994/59, 14 October 1994, p. 2.

753 UN General Assembly, Res. 2312 (XXII), 14 December 1967, Article 1(2).

754 UN General Assembly, Res. 3074 (XXVIII), 3 December 1973, § 7.

VI. Other Practice

649. In its summary findings of the project dealing with safeguarding the rights of refugees under the exclusion clauses provided in the 1951 Refugee Convention, the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights stated that:

Once an individual has been excluded, the Legal Advisory Group found that States are under a twofold duty. They must ensure that (a) those who have committed serious crimes are brought to justice and held responsible and (b) that the individual concerned continues to benefit from international human rights protection.

Some excludable crimes are crimes so serious under international law that any state may investigate, try and punish their perpetrators on the basis of the principle of universal jurisdiction. This is the case in particular for crimes within the purview of Article 1F(a) [of the 1951 Refugee Convention] including genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity. Simply excluding the perpetrators of such crimes is not sufficient: States have a duty to prosecute such persons before a national or an international court.

There are three broad ways to ensure that those who have committed serious human rights violations are brought to justice:

- States may prosecute an excluded individual under the principle of universal jurisdiction
- States may extradite the excluded individual to face trial in the country in which the crimes were committed or a third State, if all requirements under binding international human rights law regarding the integrity of the person and fair trial guarantees can be assured
- States may extradite the excluded individual to face trial before an international tribunal. Where an International Tribunal, such as the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) or a future International Criminal Court (ICC), has sought the extradition of an excluded individual States have an obligation to comply with this request.[755]

650. In a report in 2002, the Lawyers Committee for Human Rights analysed the issue of preventing presumed criminals from acquiring the status of a refugee and stated that:

International refugee law contained a mechanism – exclusion – that, at least in theory, provided a foundation for effective action: individuals who have committed serious international crimes are not permitted to avail themselves of the protection of the refugee regime. In many ways exclusion can be viewed as a permanent valve which mediates between the obligation to protect those threatened with serious human rights violations (refugees) and the goal of combating the impunity of the authors of such violations. Serving as a reminder that criminals may not be unjustly sheltered, exclusion can play a role in triggering a State's obligation to search out those who have committed the most serious crimes and ensure that they are held accountable for their actions under international law.[756]

[755] Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, "Safeguarding the Rights of Refugees under the Exclusion Clauses: Summary Findings of the Project and a Lawyers Committee for Human Rights Perspective", International Journal of Refugee Law, Special Supplementary Issue, Winter 2000, Vol. 12, p. 322.

[756] Lawyers Committee for Human Rights, Refugees, Rebels and the Quest for Justice, New York, 2002, pp. viii–ix

D. Amnesty

Note: For practice concerning fair trial guarantees, see Chapter 32, section M. For practice concerning release and return of persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, section K.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

651. Article 6(5) AP II provides that:

At the end of hostilities, the authorities in power shall endeavour to grant the broadest possible amnesty to persons who have participated in the armed conflict, or those deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict, whether they are interned or detained.

Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[757]

652. Section 1(b) of the 1987 Esquipulas II Accords provides that:

In each Central American country, except those where the International Verification and Follow-up Commission determines this to be unnecessary, amnesty decrees shall be issued which establish all necessary provisions guaranteeing the inviolability of life, freedom in all its forms, property and security of person of those to whom such decrees are applicable. Simultaneously with the issue of amnesty decrees, the irregular forces of the countries in question shall release anyone that they are holding prisoner.

653. In Article 3(c) of the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties agreed that:

Displaced persons/refugees shall have the right to return peacefully without risk of arrest, detention, imprisonment or legal criminal proceedings.

Such immunity shall not apply to persons where there are serious evidences that they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity as defined in international instruments and international practice as well as serious non-political crimes committed in the context of the conflict. Such immunity shall also not apply to persons who have previously taken part in the hostilities and are currently serving in armed formations, preparing to fight in Abkhazia.

Persons falling into these categories should be informed through appropriate channels of the possible consequences they may face upon return.

654. Article VI of the 1995 Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords provides that:

Any returning refugee or displaced person charged with a crime, other than a serious violation of international humanitarian law as defined in the Statute of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia since January 1, 1991 or a common crime unrelated to the conflict, shall upon return enjoy an amnesty. In no case shall charges for crimes be imposed for political or other inappropriate reasons or to circumvent the application of the amnesty.

[757] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

655. Article 10 of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that:

An amnesty granted to any person falling within the jurisdiction of the Special Court in respect of the crimes referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute [crimes against humanity, violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of AP II, and other serious violations of IHL] shall not be a bar to prosecution.

Other Instruments

656. Article 3(1) of the 1992 Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners provides that:

All prisoners not accused of, or sentenced for, grave breaches of International Humanitarian Law as defined in Art. 50 of the First, Art. 51 of the Second, Art. 130 of the Third and Art. 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention, as well as in Art. 85 of Additional Protocol I, will be unilaterally and unconditionally released.

657. Article 19 of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia provides that:

The Parties . . . agree that . . . there shall be a general amnesty granted to all persons and parties involved in the Liberian civil conflict in the course of actual military engagements. Accordingly, acts committed by the Parties or by their forces while in actual combat or on the authority of any of the Parties in the course of actual combat are hereby granted amnesty.

658. The preamble to the General Amnesty Proclamation Order concerning Sudan, annexed to the 1997 Sudan Peace Agreement, provides that "the parties agree that the President of the Republic of the Sudan shall declare a general and unconditional amnesty for all offences committed . . . in accordance with the common will of the people of the Sudan".

659. Articles 1 and 2 of the General Amnesty Proclamation Order concerning Sudan, annexed to the 1997 Sudan Peace Agreement, provide that:

1. The general and unconditional amnesty shall cover the period from 16 May 1983 to . . . 1997 to all (SSDF) forces, to the effect that nobody shall be prosecuted or punished for acts or omissions committed during this period.
2. No action or other legal proceedings whatsoever, civil or criminal, shall be instituted against any persons in any court of law or any place for, or on account of, any act, omission or matter done inside or outside Sudan as from . . . if such act or omission or matter was committed by any member of (the SSDF).

660. Article 6 of the General Amnesty Proclamation Order concerning Sudan, annexed to the 1997 Sudan Peace Agreement, established a Joint Amnesty Commission in order to follow up on its implementation. Article 7 established a Joint Amnesty Tribunal in order to "receive, examine and determine cases which are covered by this Amnesty Proclamation".

661. The 1996 Moscow Agreement on Tajikistan, forming part of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, states that "there is a need to implement a universal amnesty and reciprocal pardoning of persons who took part in the military and political confrontation from 1992 up to the time of adoption of the Amnesty Act".

662. The 1996 Protocol on the Commission on National Reconciliation in Tajikistan, forming part of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, provides that:

> During the transition period the President and the Commission on National Reconciliation will exercise the following functions and powers: . . . adoption of a Reciprocal Pardon Act and drafting of an Amnesty Act to be adopted by Parliament and the Commission on National Reconciliation.

663. Paragraph 2 of the 1997 Protocol on Tajik Refugees, forming part of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, provides that:

> The Government of the Republic of Tajikistan assumes the obligation . . . not to institute criminal proceedings against returning refugees or displaced persons for their participation in the political confrontation and the civil war, in accordance with the legislative acts in force in the Republic.

664. Paragraph 7 of the 1997 Statute of the Tajik Commission on National Reconciliation, forming part of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, provides that "the Commission shall have the following functions and powers: . . . Adoption of a Reciprocal Pardon Act and drafting of an Amnesty Act to be adopted by the Parliament and the Commission on National Reconciliation."

665. Paragraph 1 of the 1997 Protocol on Political Questions concerning Tajikistan, forming part of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, provides that:

> The President and the Commission on National Reconciliation shall adopt the reciprocal-pardon act as the first political decision to be taken during the initial days of the Commission's work. No later than one month after the adoption of the reciprocal-pardon act, the amnesty act shall be adopted.

666. The 1997 Bishkek Memorandum, referring to the 1997 Protocol on Political Questions concerning Tajikistan, forming part of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, recalls that "a protocol on political questions was signed, which includes agreements on such basic issues as the adoption of the reciprocal-pardon act and the amnesty act".

667. Paragraph 1 of the 1997 Protocol on the Guarantees of Implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, forming part of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, recalls that the parties to the conflict agreed "to provide amnesty for persons who took part in the civil conflict and political confrontation".

668. Article IX of the 1999 Peace Agreement between the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF, entitled "Pardon and Amnesty", provides that:

1. In order to bring lasting peace to Sierra Leone, the Government of Sierra Leone shall take appropriate legal steps to grant Corporal Foday Sankoh absolute and free pardon.
2. After the signing of the present Agreement, the Government of Sierra Leone shall also grant absolute and free pardon and reprieve to all combatants and collaborators in respect of anything done by them in pursuit of their objectives, up to the time of the signing of the present Agreement.
3. To consolidate the peace and promote the cause of national reconciliation, the Government of Sierra Leone shall ensure that no official or judicial action is taken against any member of the RUF/SL, ex-AFRC, ex-SLA or CDF in respect of anything done by them in pursuit of their objectives as members of those organisations, since March 1991, up to the time of the signing of the present Agreement. In addition, legislative and other measures necessary to guarantee immunity to former combatants, exiles and other persons, currently outside the country for reasons related to the armed conflict shall be adopted ensuring the full exercise of their civil and political rights, with a view to their reintegration within a framework of full legality.

669. By Article 22(2)(c) of Protocol II to the 2000 Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, which forms an integral part of the Agreement, the National Assembly of Burundi agreed "pending the installation of a transnational Government [to] adopt such legislation as is necessary for the granting of temporary immunity against prosecution for politically motivated crimes prior to the signature of the Agreement".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

670. Canada's LOAC Manual provides, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, that:

At the end of hostilities, and in order to facilitate a return to peaceful conditions, the authorities in power are to endeavour to grant the broadest possible amnesty to those who have participated in the conflict or been deprived of their liberty for reasons related thereto, whether they are interned or detained.[758]

671. New Zealand's Military Manual, with respect to non-international armed conflicts, provides that:

In order to facilitate a return to peaceful conditions, the authorities in power at the end of the hostilities are to endeavour to grant the broadest possible amnesty to those who have participated in the conflict or been deprived of their liberty for reasons related to it, whether they were interned or detained . . .

[758] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 31.

This terminology is used to apply to whichever Party is in power at the end of the conflict, whether it be the former government or its opponents . . .

This would seem to include persons tried for treason, but not those sentenced for common crimes, including assassination.[759]

672. The UK Military Manual states that:

Having regard to the duty of belligerents to try those who have committed grave breaches of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions, it may now be open to doubt whether a treaty of peace would operate, as was often the case in the past, as an amnesty. It is, on the other hand, open to two or more belligerents to agree in a peace treaty, or even in a general armistice, that no further war crimes trials will be instituted by them after a certain agreed date or as from the date of the treaty of the armistice.[760]

National Legislation

673. Algeria's Law on National Reconciliation, proposed by the government for persons involved in terrorist activities who say they wish to stop, provides, inter alia, for immunity from prosecution for anyone:

who has not committed or participated in the commission of one of the offences set forth in Article 87 bis of the Penal Code [i.e. acts qualifying as "terrorist or subversive"], leading to death or permanent disability, rape, or who has not used explosives in public places or places frequented by the public and who, within six months of the date of promulgation of this law, has advised the competent authorities that he will stop any terrorist or subversive activity and has given himself up to the competent authorities.[761]

674. Argentina's Amnesty Law provides that amnesty shall be granted for acts committed before 25 May 1973 and relating to political, social, trade union or student activities, and for acts committed by civilians prosecuted by military courts or military commanders. Under this law, all sentences for such acts should be discontinued.[762]

675. Argentina's Self-Amnesty Law, in connection with the armed confrontations which occurred in the fight against subversive terrorism, discontinued the penal actions resulting from crimes committed for the purpose of terrorist or subversive activities between 25 May 1973 and 17 June 1982. It also applied to all unlawful acts undertaken on the occasion of, or for the purpose of developing, actions to prevent, thwart or put an end to terrorist or subversive activities.[763] However, this law was found to be unconstitutional and declared void by the Law Repealing the Self-Amnesty Law which declared it to be "without any juridical effect as regards the judgement of the penal, civil, administrative and military responsibilities for the acts it claims to cover. In particular, the [759] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1816, including footnotes 55 and 56.

[760] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 641, footnote 1.
[761] Algeria, Law on National Reconciliation (1999), Article 3.
[762] Argentina, Amnesty Law (1973), Articles 1 and 5.
[763] Argentina, Self-Amnesty Law (1983), Articles 1, 2 and 6.

principle of least harsh punishment, stipulated in Article 2 of the Penal Code, is inapplicable."[764]

676. The Constitution of the City of Buenos Aires (Argentina) provides that the functions of the head of government of the autonomous City of Buenos Aires shall include the authority to "pardon or commute penalties individually and in exceptional cases following a plea by a competent court. However, at no time may he pardon or commute, inter alia, penalties for crimes against humanity, or crimes committed by public officials during the course of their duties."[765]

677. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides that "in no case shall amnesty or pardon be granted with respect to the offences contained in Chapter I (offences against protected persons and objects in the event of armed conflict)".[766]

678. The Amnesty Law as amended of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that:

> Amnesty is granted to all persons who committed, until 22 December 1995 [14 December 1995 in the original version before the amendment], criminal offences against the basic principles of the social system and security of Bosnia and Herzegovina . . . criminal offences against the armed forces . . . illegal possession of weapons and explosive material . . . as well as the criminal offence of failing to respond to a call and avoiding the military service by incapacitation or deceit and deliberate withdrawal or escape from the armed forces . . . if this Law or other related provisions applied in the territory of the Federation foresees penal sanctions against the persons who commit these criminal acts.[767]

679. The Law on Amnesty of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that:

> Exemption from criminal prosecution or full exemption from pronounced sentence or part of the sentence that has not been served (hereinafter: the amnesty) are granted to all persons who committed, in the period between 1 January 1991 and 22 December 1995, any criminal act stipulated in appropriate criminal laws that were applied in the territory of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (hereinafter: the Federation), except for criminal acts against humanity and international law as stipulated in Section XVI of the [Criminal Code] of the SFRY that has been taken over, and following criminal acts: murder . . . rape . . . criminal acts against a person's dignity and moral . . . as well as serious cases of robbery . . . if this Law or other related provisions applied in the territory of the Federation foresees penal sanctions against the persons who commit these criminal acts.[768]

680. The Law on Amnesty as amended of the Republika Srpska provides that:

> Exemption from criminal prosecution or partial or full exemption from pronounced sentence or a part of the sentence that has not been served (hereinafter: the amnesty)

[764] Argentina, Law Repealing the Self-Amnesty Law (1983), Articles 1 and 2.
[765] Argentina, Constitution of the City of Buenos Aires (1996), Article 104(18).
[766] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 184, amending Article 478 of the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[767] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Amnesty Law as amended (1996), Article 1.
[768] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Law on Amnesty (1999), Article 1.

are granted to all persons who committed, in the period between 1 January 1991 and 14 December 1995, any criminal act against basic principles of the social system of the Republika Srpska as stipulated in Section XV, and criminal acts against the armed forces of Republika Srpska as stipulated in the Criminal law of Republika Srpska, as well as the following acts: . . . illegal possession of weapons and explosive material.[769]

681. In line with the provisions of Protocol II to the 2000 Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi providing for the interim period and transitional institutions, a Draft Law on Provisional Immunity for Political Leaders (2001) is being discussed in Burundi, according to which members of political parties and movements signatory of the said agreement returning from exile shall be granted provisional immunity from penal prosecution for politically motivated offences committed during the period of 1 July 1962–28 August 2000. The Draft Law states that "this immunity does not concern crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes".[770] However, in early 2002, the Draft Law failed to be adopted by the National Assembly (parliament) of Burundi.[771]

682. In Chile, during the military government, the Decree-Law on General Amnesty extended an amnesty to:

all persons who have been the authors, accomplices, or accessories of unlawful deeds during the period in which the state of siege was in force, between 11 September 1973 and 10 March 1978, unless they are currently being tried or have been sentenced and to those persons who as of the date that this decree-law took effect have been sentenced by military tribunals since 11 September 1973.[772]

683. Colombia's Amnesty Decree states that:

The National Government can grant, in every particular case, the benefits of a pardon or an amnesty [to Colombian nationals] for offences or acts which constitute crimes of rebellion, sedition, putsch, conspiracy and related acts, committed before the promulgation of the [Constitution], when, in its opinion, the guerrilla group of which the person asking for [the pardon or amnesty] is a member has demonstrated its intention to reintegrate into civil life.

. . .

The benefits provided for in this decree can neither be granted with respect to atrocities nor with respect to murder committed outside a situation of combat or in taking advantage of the defenselessness of the victim.[773]

684. Croatia's General Amnesty Law "grants general amnesty from criminal prosecution and proceedings for perpetrators of criminal offences committed during the aggression, armed rebellion or armed conflicts and in connection [therewith] in the Republic of Croatia". The Law provides, however, that "from [769] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Law on Amnesty as amended (1996), Article 1.

[770] Burundi, Draft Law on Provisional Immunity for Political Leaders (2001), Articles 1–2.
[771] International Crisis Group (ICG), Burundi after six months of transition: Continuing the war or winning peace?, ICG Africa Report No. 46, Nairobi/Brussels, 24 May 2002, p. 3.
[772] Chile, Decree-Law on General Amnesty (1978), Article 1.
[773] Colombia, Amnesty Decree (1991), Article 1.

the amnesty for criminal offences stated in . . . this law are exempted" perpetrators of crimes (under Articles 120–122 of the Criminal Code), genocide (under Article 119 of the Criminal Code) and any other act which under the Criminal Code constitutes a violation of the laws and customs of war.[774]

685. In 1987, El Salvador adopted the Law on Amnesty to Achieve National Reconciliation in conformity with the 1987 Esquipulas II Accords. The Law grants "absolute and exclusive legal amnesty" to all persons, national and foreign, who have acted as the immediate or proximate perpetrators or accomplices in the commission of political crimes or common crimes related to political or common crimes perpetrated prior to 22 October 1987 in which no fewer than 20 persons were involved. The Law also extends to those who have taken up arms if they come forward and state their wish to renounce violence and receive amnesty within 15 days of the date the law enters into effect. Those who took part in the assassinations of Mgr Romero and Herbert Anaya, committed kidnapping for personal gain or engaged in drug trafficking cannot benefit from the amnesty.[775]

686. Article 1 of El Salvador's General Amnesty Law for Consolidation of Peace gives full, absolute and unconditional amnesty to all persons who in any way have participated in the commission of political crimes, related common crimes and common crimes committed before 1 January 1992 by persons numbering no less than 20. In Article 2, the law extends the definition of a political crime to include "crimes against the public peace", "crimes against judicial activity" and crimes "committed because, or as a result of armed conflict, without taking into consideration political status, militancy, affiliation or ideology". Article 4 provides, inter alia, that "the amnesty granted by this law extinguishes all civil liability".[776]

687. Ethiopia's Constitution provides that:

> The legislature or any other organ of state shall have no power to pardon or give amnesty with regard to [acts qualified as "crimes against humanity" such as] inhuman punishment, forcible disappearances, summary executions, acts of genocide. Crimes against humanity shall not be subject to amnesty or pardon by any act of government.[777]

688. Guatemala's National Reconciliation Law foresees the "total release from penal responsibility for political crimes committed during the armed internal confrontation" and "the total release from penal responsibility for common crimes . . . connected to" such political crimes.[778] However, it states that:

> The release from penal responsibility . . . does neither apply to crimes of genocide, torture and forced disappearance nor to the crimes which are not subject

[774] Croatia, General Amnesty Law (1996), Articles 1 and 3.
[775] El Salvador, Law on Amnesty to Achieve National Reconciliation (1987).
[776] El Salvador, General Amnesty Law for Consolidation of Peace (1993), Articles 1, 2 and 4.
[777] Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 28(1).
[778] Guatemala, National Reconciliation Law (1996), Articles 2 and 4.

to limitations or which, in conformity with internal law or international treaties ratified by Guatemala, do not allow the release from penal responsibility.[779]

689. Between 1987 and 1993, the Peruvian Congress adopted the Law on Terrorism (1987), the Law on the Mitigation, Exemption or Remission of Punishment of Terrorism (1989), the Decree on Terrorism (1991), the Decree-Law on the Conditions for Mitigation, Exemption, Remission or Reduction of Punishment for Terrorism (1992) and the Decree on Repentance for Terrorism (1993). In principle these laws excluded the commutation of sentences for offences related to acts of terrorism, foreseeing, however, sentence reductions or exemptions if there had been subsequent "repentance".[780]

690. In 1996, Peru adopted the Law on Amnesty for Retired Officers of the Armed Forces and the Law on Amnesty for Military and Civil Personnel by which it granted a general amnesty to military and civilian personnel investigated or tried for acts related to insults to the armed forces, disobedience, etc.[781]

691. In 1997, the Russian State Duma adopted the Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya. The Law aims at "re-enforcing the civil peace and understanding within the Russian Federation" and provides for the refraining from or ending of criminal procedures against persons who have committed "socially dangerous acts" in relation to the armed conflict in the Chechen Republic. It also provides for the exemption of such persons from the execution of punishment.[782] However, referring to a number of articles of Russia's Criminal Code, the law expressly excludes from the amnesty persons who committed specific acts such as spying, terrorism, banditry, intentional homicide, rape, kidnapping, robbery, etc., as well as foreigners.[783] According to the Law on the Execution of the Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya, the amnesty applies to persons who committed crimes within the territory of the Chechen Republic, Ingushetia, Daghestan, North Ossetia – Alanya and Stavropolsky Kraj – between 9 December 1994 and 31 December 1996, and to persons who committed one of the following acts, irrespective of the place of its committal: evasion of regular military duty; unwarranted absence and unwarranted abandonment of unit or duty station; desertion; and evasion of military service by maiming or by other [779] Guatemala, National Reconciliation Law (1996), Article 8.

[780] Peru, Law on Terrorism (1987); Law on the Mitigation, Exemption or Remission of Punishment of Terrorism (1989); Decree on Terrorism (1991); Decree-Law on the Conditions for Mitigation, Exemption, Remission or Reduction of Punishment for Terrorism (1992); Decree on Repentance for Terrorism (1993).

[781] Peru, Law on Amnesty for Retired Officers of the Armed Forces (1996); Law on Amnesty for Military and Civil Personnel (1996).

[782] Russia, Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya (1997), preamble and Articles 1–3.

[783] Russia, Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya (1997), Article 4.

means. Nevertheless, the amnesty does not release persons from the duty to repair the damage caused by the illicit acts.[784]

692. Rwanda's Law on the Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide and Crimes against Humanity provides that "the court having jurisdiction over the civil action shall rule on damages even where the accused . . . has benefited from an amnesty".[785]

693. South Africa's Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act provides that one of the functions of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission is to:

> facilitate and promote the granting of amnesty in respect of acts associated with political objectives, by receiving from persons desiring to make a full disclosure of all the relevant facts, applications for the granting of amnesty in respect of such acts, and transmitting such applications to the Committee on Amnesty for its decision, and by publishing decisions granting amnesty, in the Gazette.[786]

694. Tajikistan's Constitution gives the Supreme Assembly (parliament) the power to declare a general amnesty.[787] The Draft Amnesty Act, signed by the Tajik President in July 1997, provides for the annulment of the convictions and the discontinuation of all criminal cases under investigation with regard to persons who took part in the political and military confrontation from 1992 to the time of adoption of the law.[788] Certain crimes are excluded.[789]

695. In 1998, the Tajik parliament, in honour of the 7th anniversary of Tajikistan's independence and the anniversary of the signing of the 1997 General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, adopted the General Amnesty Law which provides for the release from prison of convicted persons, such as, inter alia, "participants and veterans of the Great Patriotic War and persons equated with them, participants and veterans of armed conflicts on the territory of other States". The Law also provides for the stopping of criminal investigations against such persons. However, referring to a number of provisions of the Criminal Code of Tajikistan, it excludes from the granting of amnesty persons who have committed crimes such as pillage and violations against the civilian population in the area of armed clashes. Nor does it extend to acts such as murder, kidnapping, rape, terrorism, robbery and other similar crimes.[790]

696. In 1999, the Tajik parliament adopted a Resolution on Amnesty for Opposition Fighters, initiated by the President of Tajikistan, based on a resolution of [784] Russia, Law on the Execution of the Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya (1997), Articles 1 and 4.

[785] Rwanda, Law on the Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide and Crimes against Humanity (1996), Article 31.
[786] South Africa, Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act (1995), Article 4(c).
[787] Tajikistan, Constitution (1994), Article 49(24).
[788] Tajikistan, Draft Amnesty Act (1997), Articles 1–2.
[789] Tajikistan, Draft Amnesty Act (1997), Article 4.
[790] Tajikistan, General Amnesty Law (1998), Articles 1, 6 and 8(b) and (c).

the Commission on National Reconciliation, and on the request of the UTO. This resolution expressly aims at "facilitating the process of peace building and national reconciliation in Tajikistan" and is "guided by the principle of humanity". It provides for the release of members of the armed forces of the UTO in accordance with a list approved by the Commission on National Reconciliation, as well as for the stopping of criminal investigations against such persons, and applies to acts committed before adoption of the resolution.[791]

697. Under its Amnesty Law of 1985, Uruguay granted amnesty with respect to all political offences and criminal and military offences related thereto committed after 1 January 1962. "Political offences" are defined as those committed directly or indirectly for political motives. The amnesty extends to all persons accused of committing these offences as authors, co-authors or accomplices and accessories, whether or not they have been convicted or tried. Offences committed by police or military personnel, equiparados, and others who have subjected individuals to inhuman, cruel or degrading treatment or detained individuals who subsequently disappeared are excluded, as are offences committed by persons of these categories who acted as accomplices for or covered up those offences. Penalties and sanctions imposed for the amnestied offences were also declared null and void ab initio.[792]

698. In 1986, Uruguay adopted an Amnesty Law for offences committed between 1984 and 1985 by military and police personnel for political motives or in the course of discharging their functions, and for offences committed on orders received during the "de facto period" when a situation of internal violence prevailed.[793]

699. Zimbabwe's Amnesty Act provides that "no legal proceedings whatsoever, whether civil or criminal, shall be instituted in any court of law in respect of any act to which this section applies, done within Southern Rhodesia or elsewhere before the 21st December, 1979".[794] The Amnesty (General Pardon) Act provides that "a free pardon is hereby granted to every person in respect of any act committed by him, being an act which constitutes a criminal offence, to which this Act applies".[795]

National Case-law

700. In the Cavallo case in 2001, Argentina's Federal Judge nullified two 1987 laws that had amnestied hundreds of military officers for human rights violations during the country's 1976–1983 dictatorship. The judge stated that these laws did not respect States' obligations under international law to investigate and punish human rights violations and crimes against humanity.[796]

[791] Tajikistan, Resolution on Amnesty of Opposition Fighters (1999), preamble and Articles 1–3.
[792] Uruguay, Amnesty Law (1985), Articles 1–7.
[793] Uruguay, Amnesty Law (1986), Article 1.
[794] Zimbabwe, Amnesty Act (1979), Article 2.
[795] Zimbabwe, Amnesty (General Pardon) Act (1980), Article 2.
[796] Argentina, Federal Judge, Cavallo case, Decision, 6 March 2001.

701. In the Saavedra case in 1993 concerning the application of Chile's 1978 Decree-Law on Amnesty to serious violations of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, the Supreme Court of Chile ruled that:

The appellant claims in the writ of appeal that the ruling appealed from is contrary to the Conventions of Geneva of 1949, because the decree-law of amnesty by definition does not apply to persons accused of serious infractions of the aforementioned Conventions. In this connection, it should be stated that Articles 2 and 3 common to the four Conventions establish the scope of their application to international conflicts and armed conflicts not of an international character occurring in the territory of one of the High Contracting Parties. Concerning armed conflicts not of an international character, it is the opinion of this Court that disturbances or other situations of internal order, usually accompanied by terrorist or unlawful actions such as the one in question, do not constitute conflicts governed by what is known as the Law of Geneva, and the appellant's argument in this case is invalid. The facts of this case are not congruent with the characteristics of the situations of internal war referred to by Article 3 common to the said Conventions.[797]

702. In the Videla case in 1994 concerning the abduction, torture and murder of a Chilean woman in 1974, Chile's Appeal Court of Santiago held that the acts charged constituted grave breaches under Article 147 GC IV, which it found applicable, and that:

Such offences as constitute grave breaches of the Convention are . . . unamenable to amnesty; . . . [it is not] appropriate to apply amnesty as a way of extinguishing criminal liability. Any attempt by a State to tamper with the criminality of and consequent liability for acts which infringe the laws of war and the rights of persons in wartime is beyond the State's competence while it is a Party to the Geneva Conventions on humanitarian law.[798]

703. In 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court examined the constitutionality of AP II. As part of its consideration of Article 6(5) AP II, the Court stated that:

In internal armed conflicts . . . those who have taken up arms do not in principle enjoy prisoner-of-war status and are consequently subject to penal sanctions imposed by the State, since they are not legally entitled to fight or to take up arms. In so doing they are guilty of an offence, such as rebellion or sedition, which is punishable under domestic legislation . . . It is easy to understand the purpose of a provision designed to ensure that the authorities in power will grant the broadest

[797] Chile, Supreme Court, Saavedra case, Judgement, 19 November 1993; see also Supreme Court, Bascuñán case, Judgement, 24 August 1990, where it is stated that "it can be concluded that the Geneva Conventions are not applicable to the unlawful acts investigated in the case giving rise to the appeal; and so although these acts did take place during the state of siege covered by the amnesty, they have not been shown to be the consequence or result of a state of internal conflict of the nature described [in the Geneva Conventions]. Consequently, the provisions of the aforementioned Conventions are unaffected by the legal precept that granted the amnesty of 1978."

[798] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago (Third Criminal Chamber), Videla case, Judgement, 26 September 1994.

possible amnesty for reasons related to the conflict, once hostilities are over, as this can pave the way towards national reconciliation.[799]

704. In the Mengistu and Others case in 1995 concerning the prosecution and trial of Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam and former members of the Derg for allegedly committing genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes during the former regime between 1974 and 1991, the Special Prosecutor of Ethiopia, in a reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, stated that "it is . . . a well established custom and belief that war crimes and crimes against humanity are not subject to amnesty".[800] Referring to a statement made in 1991 by a high-ranking US peace negotiator at the London Conference as well as to a decision of the Transitional Government of Ethiopia, the Special Prosecutor further quoted the following: "The Transitional Government should consider an appropriate amnesty or indemnity for past acts not constituting violations of the laws of war or international human rights."[801]

705. In the Azapo case in 1996 in which the appellants challenged the constitutionality of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act of 1995, which granted amnesties from personal criminal and civil liability for the covered unlawful activities, a South African Court stated that:

> It is however, unnecessary, in our judgment, to consider further the applicability of the jus cogens to the interpretation of the Constitution. That is because there is an exception to the peremptory rule prohibiting an amnesty in relation to crimes against humanity contained in Additional Protocol II.
> . . .
> In our judgment this subarticle [Article 6(5) AP II] indicates that there is no peremptory rule of international law which prohibits the granting of the broadest possible amnesty in the case of conflicts of the kind which existed in South Africa prior to the firm "cut-off date" referred to in the post-amble to the Constitution.[802]

In the same case in 1996, South Africa's Constitutional Court was asked to decide upon the constitutionality of a provision of the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act of 1995 according to which amnesty can be granted to persons prepared to make "full disclosure of all the relevant facts relating to acts associated with a political objective". The Azanian People's Organisation argued that the State was obliged by international law to prosecute those responsible for gross human rights violations and that the relevant provision authorising amnesty for such offenders constituted a breach of international law including Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 129 GC III and 146 GC IV. In considering this argument, the Court stated that it was "doubtful whether the [799] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.

[800] Ethiopia, Special Prosecutor's Office, Mengistu and Others case, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995, Conclusion.
[801] Ethiopia, Special Prosecutor's Office, Mengistu and Others case, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995, Conclusion.
[802] South Africa, Cape Provincial Division, Azapo case, Judgement, 6 May 1996.

Geneva Conventions of 1949 read with the relevant Protocols thereto apply at all to the situation in which this country found itself during the years of the conflict". The Court referred to Article 6(5) AP II and stated that in situations of internal armed conflict, "there is no obligation on the part of a contracting state to ensure the prosecution of those who might have performed acts of violence or other acts which would ordinarily be characterised as serious invasions of human rights". In conclusion, the Court held that the wording of the provision in question did not violate the South African Constitution.[803]

706. In the Pinochet case in 1998, Spain's Sala de lo Penal de la Audiencia Nacional, sitting in full bench, held that Chile's Decree-Law on General Amnesty of 1978 did not preclude the exercise of universal jurisdiction by Spanish courts. It stated that:

> Regardless of the fact that Decree-Law 2.191 of 1978 can be considered contrary to international ius cogens, said Decree-Law is not tantamount to a true pardon in accordance with the Spanish rules applicable in this case and can be considered a rule that waives punishment for reasons of political expediency; it therefore does not apply in the case of someone who has been acquitted or pardoned abroad . . . but rather in the case of conduct . . . that is not punishable in the country in which the offence was committed . . . which has no effect on Spain's extraterritorial jurisdiction in application of the principles of protection and universal persecution.[804]

Other National Practice

707. In 1993, in the context of peace talks between the three parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the ICRC reported that "the Bosnian Government says it stands ready to release all prisoners, except war criminals, after an amnesty has been proclaimed".[805]

708. A decision taken in 1956 by the Chinese National People's Congress adopted as policy for the prosecution of Japanese war criminals that those Japanese whose criminal acts were of secondary importance or who showed good signs of repentance would be dealt with leniently and spared prosecution. Those Japanese war criminals who had committed serious crimes would be sentenced on an individual basis according to the crimes they had committed and their behaviour during detention.[806]

709. In October 2001, the government of the FYROM confirmed its intention "to grant amnesty to the members of the so-called NLA (UCK) who [803] South Africa, Constitutional Court, Azapo case, Judgement, 25 July 1996.

[804] Spain, Sala de lo Penal de la Audiencia Nacional, Pinochet case, Judgement, 5 November 1998.
[805] ICRC, Paper on unconditional and unilateral release of all prisoners presented during talks among the three sides to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Geneva, 2–4 January 1993, annexed to Report of the UN Secretary-General on the activities of the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. S/25050, 6 January 1993, Annex IV, § 2(a).
[806] China, Decision on the handling of Japanese war criminals under detention who committed crimes during the Japanese Invasion War by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, 25 April 1956, Documents on Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, World Knowledge Press, Beijing, Vol. 4, pp. 58–59.

voluntarily surrendered their weapons during the NATO operation 'Essential Harvest'". The President of FYROM stated that this would initiate a process of reintegration of those who did not commit crimes and that the amnesty would allow the process of return of the security forces of FYROM in the regions that were temporarily out of their control. However, he stressed that "the amnesty does not refer to those who committed war crimes and crimes against humanity, torture and murder of civilians, ethnic cleansing, demolition of religious buildings and other acts for which the International Tribunal for former Yugoslavia is responsible".[807] Members of the NLA welcomed the amnesty but added that it should be given force of law, and demanded the release of rebel prisoners.[808]

710. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, communist insurgents have been encouraged to surrender, and declarations of amnesty have been issued regularly. One of these was issued in September 1955.[809]

711. In 1991, the President of Rwanda offered a general amnesty to FPR combatants accepting to lay down their weapons between 14 and 29 March 1991, provided they fulfilled certain conditions such as entering the country at a certain checkpoint and depositing their weapons at a specific place.[810]

712. According to a report by a Rwandan human rights organisation, the application of two amnesty laws in Rwanda in 1992 led to the release from prison of approximately 60 persons accused or detained for acts committed during the war or other politically motivated acts.[811]

713. In 1992, the President of the Philippines issued a proclamation amending a previous proclamation by which the National Unification Commission was established and which states that:

> [The previous Proclamation] is hereby amended to read as follows: . . . Amnesty is hereby granted in favor of those who have applied for amnesty under Executive Order No. 350, and whose applications had already been processed and are ready for final action as of date hereof, and whosoever may want to apply for amnesty under Executive Order No. 350 from the date of this Proclamation up to December 31, 1992, who have committed any act covered under Section 2 of Executive Order No. 350, series of 1989.[812]

714. In 1994, the President of the Philippines issued a proclamation granting amnesty to rebels, insurgents and other persons according to which:

[807] FYROM, Statement by the President, 8 October 2001.
[808] BBC News, 12 October 2001.
[809] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 6.10.
[810] Rwanda, Amnesty Offer by the President, Ruhengeri, 14 March 1991, reprinted in Agence Rwandaise de Presse, Daily Bulletin No. 003931, 16th Year, 15 March 1991, pp. 1–2.
[811] Association Rwandaise pour la défense des droits de l'homme et des libertés publiques, Report on Human Rights in Rwanda, October 1992–October 1993, p. 45.
[812] Philippines, President, Proclamation No. 10-A Amending Proclamation No. 10 Granting Amnesty in favor of Persons Who Have Filed Applications for Amnesty under Executive Order No. 350, Series of 1989 and Creating the National Unification Commission, Manila, 28 July 1992, Section 4 amending Section 1 of the original version of the Proclamation, and Section 5 introducing a new Section 2 in the original version of the Proclamation.

Amnesty is hereby granted to all personnel of the APF and the PNP who shall apply therefor and who have or may have committed crimes, on or before thirty (30) days following the publication of this Proclamation in two (2) newspapers of general circulation, in pursuit of political beliefs, whether punishable under the Revised Penal Code or special laws, including but not limited to the following: rebellion or insurrection; coup d'etat; conspiracy and proposal to commit rebellion, insurrection or coup d'etat; disloyalty of public officers or employees; inciting to rebellion or insurrection; sedition; conspiracy to commit sedition; inciting to sedition; illegal assembly; illegal association; direct assault; indirect assault; resistance and disobedience to a person in authority or the agents of such person; tumults and other disturbances of public order; unlawful means of publication and unlawful utterances; alarms and scandals; illegal possession of firearms, ammunition or explosives, committed in furtherance of, incident to, or in connection with the crimes of rebellion or insurrection; and violations of Articles 59 (desertion), 62 (absence without leave), 67 (mutiny or sedition), 68 (failure to suppress mutiny or sedition), 94 (various crimes), 96 (conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentlemen), and 97 (general article) of the Articles of War; Provided, that the amnesty shall not cover crimes against chastity and other crimes committed for personal ends.[813] [emphasis in original]

By the same proclamation, the President also established the National Amnesty Commission in charge with receiving and processing applications for amnesty and determining whether the applicants were entitled to amnesty under the proclamation.[814]

715. In 1994, the President of the Philippines issued a proclamation granting amnesty to certain members of the AFP and PNP which stated that:

Amnesty is hereby granted to all personnel of the APF and the PNP who shall apply therefor and who have or may have committed, as of the date of this Proclamation, acts or omissions punishable under the Revised Penal Code, the Articles of War or other special laws, in furtherance of, incident to, or in connection with counter-insurgency operations; Provided, that such acts or omissions do not constitute acts of torture, arson, massacre, rape, other crimes against chastity, or robbery of any form; and Provided, that the acts were not committed for personal ends.[815] [emphasis in original]

716. At the CDDH, the USSR, in its explanation of vote on Article 10 of Draft AP II (which later became Article 6 AP II), stated that it "was convinced that

[813] Philippines, President, Proclamation No. 347 Granting Amnesty to Rebels, Insurgents, and All Other Persons Who Have or May Have Committed Crimes against Public Order, Other Crimes Committed in furtherance of Political Ends, and Violations of the Articles of War, and Creating a National Amnesty Commission, Manila, 25 March 1994, Section 1.

[814] Philippines, President, Proclamation No. 347 Granting Amnesty to Rebels, Insurgents, and All Other Persons Who Have or May Have Committed Crimes against Public Order, Other Crimes Committed in furtherance of Political Ends, and Violations of the Articles of War, and Creating a National Amnesty Commission, Manila, 25 March 1994, Section 4.

[815] Philippines, President, Proclamation No. 348 Granting Amnesty to Certain Personnel of the AFP and PNP Who Have or May Have Committed Certain Acts or Omissions Punishable under the Revised Penal Code, the Articles of War, or Other Special Laws, Committed in furtherance of, incident to or in connection with Counter-Insurgency Operations, Manila, 25 March 1994, Section 1.

the text elaborated by Committee I could not be construed as enabling war criminals, or those guilty of crimes against peace and humanity, to evade severe punishment in any circumstances whatsoever".[816]

717. In 1981, a high-ranking government official informed the ICRC that his government had given a complete amnesty to all prisoners captured during the war that year and that no prosecution for war crimes or other crimes had been undertaken.[817]

718. In 1988, in a meeting with the ICRC, the official of a State party to an armed conflict stated that all death penalties imposed on prisoners had been commuted to 20-year sentences under an amnesty law adopted in 1987.[818]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

719. In a resolution adopted in 1964 on the policies of apartheid of the government of South Africa, the UN Security Council urged the South African government "to grant an amnesty to all persons already imprisoned, interned of subjected to other restrictions for having opposed the policy of apartheid".[819] In another resolution adopted the same year, the Security Council urged the South African government "to grant immediate amnesty to all persons detained or on trial, as well as clemency to all persons sentenced for their opposition to the Government's racial policies".[820]

720. In a resolution adopted in 1980, the UN Security Council called upon the South African regime to take measures immediately to eliminate the policy of apartheid, including "granting of an unconditional amnesty to all persons imprisoned, restricted or exiled for their opposition to apartheid".[821]

721. In a resolution adopted in 1986, the UN Security Council demanded that South Africa "unconditionally release all persons imprisoned, detained or restricted for their opposition to apartheid".[822]

722. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council welcomed "the proclamation by the National Assembly of Angola of amnesty arrangements, as agreed in Libreville, for offences resulting from the Angolan conflict, in order to facilitate the formation of a joint military command".[823]

723. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council commended the government of Angola for the promulgation of an amnesty law.[824]

816 USSR, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.64, 7 June 1976, p. 319, § 85.
817 ICRC archive document.
818 ICRC archive document.
819 UN Security Council, Res. 190, 9 June 1964, § 1(c).
820 UN Security Council, Res. 191, 18 June 1964, § 4(b).
821 UN Security Council, Res. 473, 13 June 1980, § 7.
822 UN Security Council, Res. 581, 13 February 1986, § 8.
823 UN Security Council, Res. 1055, 8 May 1996, § 9.
824 UN Security Council, Res. 1064, 11 July 1996, § 9.

724. In a resolution adopted in 1997, the UN Security Council urged Croatia:

> to eliminate ambiguities in implementation of the Amnesty Law, and to implement it fairly and objectively in accordance with international standards, in particular by concluding all investigations of crimes covered by the amnesty and undertaking an immediate and comprehensive review with United Nations and local Serb participation of all charges outstanding against individuals for serious violations of international humanitarian law which are not covered by the amnesty in order to end proceedings against all individuals against whom there is insufficient evidence.[825]

725. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Security Council recalled that:

> The Special Representative of the Secretary-General appended to his signature of the Lomé Agreement a statement that the United Nations holds the understanding that the amnesty provisions of the Agreement shall not apply to international crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law.[826]

726. In 1997, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council encouraged the government of Croatia "to take such steps as are needed to promote goodwill, build confidence, and provide assurances of a safe, secure and stable environment to all people in the region. These steps should include full implementation of its Law on Amnesty."[827]

727. In 1997, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council called upon the government of Croatia "to remove uncertainty about the implementation of its amnesty law, in particular by finalizing without delay the list of war crime suspects on the basis of existing evidence and in strict accordance with international law".[828]

728. In a resolution adopted in 1991, the UN General Assembly called upon the Afghan authorities "to apply amnesty decrees equally to foreign detainees".[829]

729. In a resolution on Afghanistan adopted in 1992, the UN General Assembly welcomed "the [1992] declaration of general amnesty issued by the Islamic State of Afghanistan, which should be applied in a strictly non-discriminatory manner" and called upon the Afghan authorities "to apply amnesty decrees equally to all detainees".[830]

730. In a resolution on Kosovo adopted in 1998, the UN General Assembly called upon the authorities of the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro) "to mitigate [825] UN Security Council, Res. 1120, 14 July 1997, § 7.

[826] UN, Security Council, Res. 1315, 14 August 2000, preamble.
[827] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/4*, 6 March 1997, p. 2.
[828] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/15, 19 March 1997, p. 2.
[829] UN General Assembly, Res. 46/136, 17 December 1991, § 9.
[830] UN General Assembly, Res. 47/141, 18 December 1992, preamble and § 8; see also Res. 48/152, 20 December 1993, preamble and § 12; Res. 49/207, 23 December 1994, preamble and § 14.

the punishments of and where appropriate to amnesty the ethnic Albanians in Kosovo sentenced for criminal offences motivated by political aims".[831]

731. In a resolution adopted in 1987, the UN Commission on Human Rights emphasised the need for the government of Chile "to investigate and clarify without further delay the fate of persons arrested for political reasons who have subsequently disappeared, without the granting of amnesty which creates an obstacle for the identification of those responsible and the administration of justice".[832]

732. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the Republika Srpska and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina "to adopt amnesty laws" and deplored "reported arrests inconsistent with the amnesty law adopted by the State of Bosnia and Herzegovina".[833]

733. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed the announcement by the government of Sudan of a national amnesty in 1995.[834]

734. In a resolution on impunity adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights recognised that "amnesties should not be granted to those who commit violations of international humanitarian and human rights law that constitute serious crimes".[835]

735. In a resolution in 1995 on the situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights emphasised that no provision for impunity for any act of genocide, "ethnic cleansing" or other serious war crimes, including rape, must be made in the peace plan.[836]

736. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights noted that "the rights and obligations of States and individuals with respect to the violations referred to in the present resolution cannot, as a matter of international law, be extinguished by peace treaty, peace agreement, amnesty or by any other means".[837]

737. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in Croatia, the UN Secretary-General stated that:

> One potential obstacle to the return of young adult males is the requirement that they first undergo interrogations by Croatian authorities concerning their activities on behalf of the so-called "Republic of Serb Krajina". In the absence of broad amnesty legislation, these interrogations have caused widespread apprehension among potential returnees, as well as delays in the processing of applications.[838]

[831] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 14(d).
[832] UN, Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1987/60, 12 March 1987, § 10(e).
[833] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 24.
[834] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, preamble.
[835] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/79, 25 April 2002, § 2.
[836] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, § 7; see also Res. 1993/17, 20 August 1993, § 3.
[837] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1999/16, 26 August 1999, § 13.
[838] UN Secretary-General, Further report on the situation of human rights in Croatia pursuant to Security Council resolution 1019 (1995), UN Doc. S/1996/691, 23 August 1996, § 22.

738. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General noted that:

> While recognizing that amnesty is an accepted legal concept and a gesture of peace and reconciliation at the end of a civil war or an internal armed conflict, the United Nations has consistently maintained the position that amnesty cannot be granted in respect of international crimes, such as genocide, crimes against humanity or other serious violations of international humanitarian law.
>
> At the time of the signature of the Lomé Peace Agreement, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Sierra Leone was instructed to append to his signature on behalf of the United Nations a disclaimer to the effect that the amnesty provision contained in article IX of the Agreement ("absolute and free pardon") shall not apply to international crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other serious violations of international humanitarian law . . .
>
> In the negotiations on the Statute of the Special Court, the Government of Sierra Leone concurred with the position of the United Nations and agreed to the inclusion of an amnesty clause which would read as follows: "an amnesty granted to any person falling within the jurisdiction of the Special Court in respect of the crimes referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the present Statute shall not be a bar to prosecution."[839]

739. In 2001, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General pointed out that "the granting of amnesties to those who committed serious violations of international humanitarian and criminal law is not acceptable. The experience of Sierra Leone has confirmed that such amnesties do not bring about lasting peace and reconciliation."[840]

740. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that:

> 54. The new Law on Amnesty, passed by the Parliament on 25 September 1996, has been hailed by most observers as a significant step towards both the return of Croatian Serb refugees and the peaceful reintegration of the region of Eastern Slavonia into the rest of the country. However, the Special Rapporteur's attention has been drawn to the need to scrutinize the Law's application in practice.
> 55. The Law, which became effective on 3 October 1996, applies to criminal acts referred to in Croatian legislation as "participation in armed rebellion", and specifically excludes war crimes. The Law stipulates that all current investigations and trials shall be stopped, all completed trials annulled and all prisoners sentenced for "armed rebellion" released.
> 56. Some 100 prisoners reportedly were released between 5 and 7 October 1996 from various detention centres in Croatia. The Special Rapporteur has received reliable information, however, that at least seven of these persons were rearrested only a few days after their release in connection with an investigation of alleged involvement in war crimes by the Karlovac Public Prosecutor's Office, although they had not previously been charged with war crimes. The remainder of those released reportedly were to be transported at their request to the FRY for resettlement.

[839] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, §§ 22–24.

[840] UN Secretary-General, Report of the on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, § 10.

57. The rearrest of several Croatian Serbs is of great concern to the Special Rapporteur, and she will seek to monitor this situation closely. The potential benefit of the new amnesty legislation in raising the confidence of Croatia's Serb population and encouraging returns will be substantially damaged if persons still find themselves the subject of criminal proceedings.[841]

741. In 1997, in a report on assistance to Guatemala in the field of human rights, the Independent Expert of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

The National Reconciliation Act [of Guatemala], which came into force on 29 December 1996 with the signing of the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace, leaves it to the courts to determine which acts committed by members of the army and the URNG in the course of the armed conflict will be pardoned. Crimes against humanity are excluded from this. The burden of proof is being turned upside down, since it will be for the victim to demonstrate that the injury suffered was not a reasonable consequence of the conflict.[842]

742. In 1998, in the conclusions and recommendations of his fifth report question of the human rights of all persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment, in particular, torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated with respect to the Draft Statute for an International Criminal Court that:

In this connection, the Special Rapporteur is aware of suggestions according to which nationally granted amnesties could be introduced as a bar to the proposed court's jurisdiction. He considers any such move subversive not just of the project at hand, but of international legality in general. It would gravely undermine the purpose of the proposed court, by permitting States to legislate their nationals out of the jurisdiction of the court. It would undermine international legality, because it is axiomatic that States may not invoke their own law to avoid their obligations under international law. Since international law requires States to penalize the types of crime contemplated in the draft statute of the court in general, and torture in particular, and to bring perpetrators to justice, the amnesties in question are, ipso facto, violations of the concerned States' obligations to bring violators to justice.[843]

743. In 1996, in a statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees stated with respect to the situation

[841] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/9, 22 October 1996, §§ 54–57.

[842] UN Commission on Human Rights, Independent Expert on the Situation of Human Rights in Guatemala, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/90, 22 January 1997, § 100.

[843] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Torture, Fifth report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/38, 24 December 1997, § 228.

in Bosnia and Herzegovina that "personal security was evidently of critical importance in the context of peaceful and dignified return. The amnesty adopted by the Bosnian Parliament, covering inter alia, draft evaders and deserters, was thus a very welcome step."[844]

Other International Organisations

744. In a resolution adopted in 1984 on enforced disappearances, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called upon the governments of member States "to support the preparation and adoption by the United Nations of a declaration setting forth the following principles: . . . enforced disappearance is a crime against humanity which . . . may not be covered by amnesty laws".[845]

745. In a recommendation on Kosovo adopted in 1998, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe recommended that the Committee of Ministers urge the government of the FRY "to take practical steps to facilitate the voluntary return of refugees and displaced persons to their homes before the winter . . . ceasing the practice of interrogating male returnees; [and] providing and respecting an amnesty for those wishing to return".[846]

746. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the European Parliament stated that it believed that "the problem of impunity . . . can take the form of amnesty, immunity, extraordinary jurisdiction and constrains democracy by effectively condoning human rights infringements and distressing victims". It stressed that "there should be no question of impunity for those responsible for war crimes in the former Yugoslavia".[847]

747. In 2002, the EU Secretary General/High Representative CFSP stated that:

> I warmly welcome the adoption yesterday of a Law on Amnesty by the Assembly of the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM).
>
> With its adoption, the elected representatives of the citizens have taken a courageous step forward, towards peace, stability and reconciliation.[848]

748. In 2001, NATO welcomed the acceptance by members of the NLA of an amnesty issued by the government of the FYROM, adding, however, that the challenge was to show that the amnesty worked in practice.[849]

749. In 2001, the OSCE welcomed the decision of the President and parliament of Tajikistan to grant a general amnesty to more than 19,000 detainees. It also [844] UN High Commissioner on Refugees, Statement before the UN Commission on Human Rights, 20 March 1996, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.4, 25 March 1996, § 54.

[845] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 828, 26 September 1984, § 13(a)(i)(3).
[846] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1385, 24 September 1998, § 7(i)(b).
[847] European Parliament, Resolution on human rights in the world and Community human rights policy for the years 1991/1992, 12 March 1993, §§ 7 and 8.
[848] EU, Secretary General/High Representative CFSP, Communiqué No. 0039/02, Dr. Javier Solana, EU High Representative for the Common Foreign and Security Policy (CFSP), welcomes the adoption of the Law on Amnesty in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), 8 March 2002.
[849] BBC News, 12 October 2001.

"noted with appreciation the humanitarian character of the General Amnesty Law".[850]

International Conferences

750. In the Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, the participants at the African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers in 1999 called upon African States "to respect fully the provisions of international human rights and humanitarian law, in particular in the case of captured child soldiers, especially by . . . considering the broadest possible amnesty".[851]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

751. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

The fact that torture is prohibited by a peremptory norm of international law has other effects at the inter-state and individual levels. At the inter-state level, it serves to internationally de-legitimise any legislative, administrative or judicial act authorising torture. It would be senseless to argue, on the one hand, that on account of the jus cogens value of the prohibition against torture, treaties or customary rules providing for torture would be null and void ab initio, and then be unmindful of a State say, taking national measures authorising or condoning torture or absolving its perpetrators through an amnesty law. If such a situation were to arise, the national measures, violating the general principle and any relevant treaty provision, would produce the legal effects discussed above and in addition would not be accorded international legal recognition. Proceedings could be initiated by potential victims if they had locus standi before a competent international or national judicial body with a view to asking it to hold the national measure to be internationally unlawful; or the victim could bring a civil suit for damage in a foreign court, which would therefore be asked inter alia to disregard the legal value of the national authorising act. What is even more important is that perpetrators of torture acting upon or benefiting from those national measures may nevertheless be held criminally responsible for torture, whether in a foreign State, or in their own State under a subsequent regime. In short, in spite of possible national authorisation by legislative or judicial bodies to violate the principle banning torture, individuals remain bound to comply with that principle. As the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg put it: "individuals have international duties which transcend the national obligations of obedience imposed by the individual State".[852]

752. In 1992, in its General Comment on the prohibition of torture and cruel treatment or punishment, the HRC noted that:

[850] OSCE, Press Release, OSCE welcomes granting of amnesty to detainees in Tajikistan, 3 September 2001.
[851] African Conference on the Use of Children as Soldiers, Maputo, 19–22 April 1999, Maputo Declaration on the Use of Children as Soldiers, § 5.
[852] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 155.

Some States have granted amnesty in respect of acts of torture. Amnesties are generally incompatible with the duty of States to investigate such acts; to guarantee freedom from such acts within their jurisdiction; and to ensure that they do not occur in the future. States may not deprive individuals of the right to an effective remedy, including compensation and such full rehabilitation as may be possible.[853]

753. In its admissibility decision in Dujardin and Others v. France in 1991 concerning the killing of four disarmed gendarmes by about 50 assailants in New Caledonia, in the aftermath of which an amnesty law had been adopted preventing the public authorities from prosecuting the assailants, the ECiHR held that:

The Commission considers . . . that the amnesty law, which is entirely exceptional in character, was adopted in the context of a process designed to resolve conflicts between the various communities of the islands.

It is not for the Commission to assess the advisability of the measures taken by France to that end. The State is justified in adopting, in the context of its criminal policy, any amnesty laws it might consider necessary, with the proviso, however, that a balance is maintained between the legitimate interests of the State and the interests of individual members of the public in having the right to life protected by law.[854]

754. In 1983, in a report on the situation of a segment of the Nicaraguan population of Miskito origin, the IACiHR recommended that the government of Nicaragua "declare a pardon or amnesty to cover all Indian Nicaraguans who have been accused of committing crimes against public order and security or any other connected crime and who are currently in prison . . . or who are at liberty, within or outside of Nicaragua".[855]

755. In 1992, in a report on a case with respect to the Las Hojas massacres in El Salvador in 1983, during which about 74 persons were allegedly killed by members of the Salvadoran armed forces with the participation of members of the Civil Defence and which had led to a petition before the IACiHR, the IACiHR held that the application of El Salvador's 1987 Law on Amnesty to Achieve National Reconciliation constitutes a clear violation of the obligation of the Salvadoran Government to investigate and punish the violations of the rights of the Las Hojas victims, and to provide compensation for damages resulting from the violations . . . The present amnesty law, as applied in these cases, by foreclosing the possibility of judicial relief in cases of murder, inhumane treatment and absence of judicial guarantees, denies the fundamental nature of the most basic human rights. It eliminates perhaps the single most effective means of enforcing such rights, the trial and punishment of offenders.[856]

[853] HRC, General Comment No. 20 (Article 7 ICCPR), 10 March 1992, § 15.
[854] ECiHR, Dujardin and Others v. France, Admissibility Decision, 2 September 1991.
[855] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights of a segment of the Nicaraguan population of Miskito origin, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.62 Doc. 10 rev. 3, 29 November 1983, Part Three, B(1).
[856] IACiHR, Case 10.287 (El Salvador), Report, 24 September 1992.

756. In 1994, in a report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, the IACiHR stated with respect to El Salvador's General Amnesty Law for Consolidation of Peace that:

Regardless of any necessity that the peace negotiations might pose and irrespective of purely political considerations, the very sweeping General Amnesty Law [for Consolidation of Peace] passed by El Salvador's Legislative Assembly constitutes a violation of the international obligations it undertook when it ratified the American Convention on Human Rights, because it makes possible a "reciprocal amnesty" without first acknowledging responsibility . . . because it applies to crimes against humanity, and because it eliminates any possibility of obtaining adequate pecuniary compensation, primarily for victims.[857]

757. In 1999, in a report of a case concerning El Salvador's 1993 General Amnesty Law for Consolidation of Peace, the IACiHR stated that:

The Commission should emphasize that [this law] was applied to serious human rights violations in El Salvador between January 1, 1980, and January 1, 1992, including those examined and established by the Truth Commission. In particular, its effect was extended, among other things, to crimes such as summary executions, torture, and the forced disappearance of persons. Some of these crimes are considered of such gravity as to have justified the adoption of special conventions on the subject and the inclusion of specific measures for preventing impunity in their regard, including universal jurisdiction and inapplicability of the statute of limitations . . . The Commission also notes that Article 2 of [this law] was apparently applied to all violations of common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] and of [AP II], committed by agents of the State during the armed conflict which took place in El Salvador.[858]

The Commission concluded that:

In approving and enforcing the General Amnesty Law, the Salvadoran State violated the right to judicial guarantees enshrined in Article 8(1) of the [1969 ACHR], to the detriment of the surviving victims of torture and of the relatives of . . . who were prevented from obtaining redress in the civil courts; all of this in relation to Article 1(1) of the Convention . . . In promulgating and enforcing the Amnesty Law, El Salvador has violated the right to judicial protection enshrined in Article 25 of the [the 1969 ACHR], to the detriment of the surviving victims and those with legal claims on behalf of . . .[859]

In its conclusions, the IACiHR stated that El Salvador "has also violated, with respect to the same persons, common Article 3 of the Four Geneva Conventions of 1949 and Article 4 of [AP II]".[860] Moreover, in order to safeguard the rights of the victims, it recommended that El Salvador should, "if need be, . . . annul that law ex-tunc".[861]

[857] IACiHR, Report on the Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador, Doc. OEA/Ser/L/V/II.86 Doc.5 rev. 1, June 1994.
[858] IACiHR, Case 10.480 (El Salvador), Report, 27 January 1999, §§ 112 and 115.
[859] IACiHR, Case 10.480 (El Salvador), Report, 27 January 1999, §§ 123 and 129.
[860] IACiHR, Case 10.480 (El Salvador), Report, 27 January 1999, Chapter XI, § 2.
[861] IACiHR, Case 10.480 (El Salvador), Report, 27 January 1999, Chapter XII, § 1.

758. In its judgement in the Barrios Altos case in 2001 involving the question of the legality of Peruvian amnesty laws, the IACtHR stated that:

> 41. This Court considers that all amnesty provisions, provisions on prescription and the establishment of measures designed to eliminate responsibility are inadmissible, because they are intended to prevent the investigation and punishment of those responsible for serious human rights violations such as torture, extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary execution and forced disappearance, all of them prohibited because they violate non-derogable rights recognized by international human rights law.
> 42. The Court, in accordance with the arguments put forward by the Commission and not contested by the State, considers that the amnesty laws adopted by Peru prevented the victims' next of kin and the surviving victims in this case from being heard by a judge . . . they violated the right to judicial protection . . . they prevented the investigation, capture, prosecution and conviction of those responsible for the events that occurred in Barrios Altos, thus failing to comply with Article 1(1) of the [1969 ACHR], and they obstructed clarification of the facts of this case. Finally, the adoption of self-amnesty laws that are incompatible with the [1969 ACHR] meant that Peru failed to comply with the obligation to adapt internal legislation that is embodied in Article 2 of the [1969 ACHR].
> 43. The Court considers that it should be emphasized that, in the light of the general obligations established in Articles 1(1) and 2 of the [1969 ACHR], the States Parties are obliged to take all measures to ensure that no one is deprived of judicial protection and the exercise of the right to a simple and effective recourse, in the terms of Articles 8 and 25 of the [1969 ACHR]. Consequently, States Parties to the [1969 ACHR] which adopt laws that have the opposite effect, such as self-amnesty laws, violate Articles 8 and 25, in relation to Articles 1(1) and 2 of the [1969 ACHR]. Self-amnesty laws lead to the defenselessness of victims and perpetuate impunity; therefore, they are manifestly incompatible with the aims and spirit of the Convention. This type of law precludes the identification of the individuals who are responsible for human rights violations, because it obstructs the investigation and access to justice and prevents the victims and their next of kin from knowing the truth and receiving the corresponding reparation.
> 44. Owing to the manifest incompatibility of self-amnesty laws and the American Convention on Human Rights, the said laws lack legal effect and may not continue to obstruct the investigation of the grounds on which this case is based or the identification and punishment of those responsible, nor can they have the same or a similar impact with regard to other cases that have occurred in Peru, where the rights established in the [1969 ACHR] have been violated.[862]

In his concurring opinion, one of the judges added that:

> The international responsibility of the State for violations of internationally recognized human rights, – including violations which have taken place by means of the adoption and application of laws of self-amnesty, – and the individual penal [862] IACtHR, Barrios Altos case, Judgment, 14 March 2001, §§ 41–44.

responsibility of agents perpetrators of grave violations of human rights and of International Humanitarian Law, are two faces of the same coin, in the fight against atrocities, impunity, and injustice. It was necessary to wait many years to come to this conclusion, which, if it is possible today, is also due, – may I insist on a point which is very dear to me, – to the awakening of the universal juridical conscience, as the material source par excellence of International Law itself.[863] [emphasis in original]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

759. In 1995, in a meeting of the Humanitarian Liaison Working Group on the role of mechanisms for accountability in resolving humanitarian emergencies, the issue of amnesty at the end of a conflict was discussed, in particular Article 6 AP II. The ICRC noted that, given "the preparatory works and the context", this provision could not be invoked in favour of impunity of war criminals, since it only applied to prosecution for the sole participation in hostilities.[864]

760. In a letter from the Head of the ICRC Legal Division to the Department of Law at the University of California in 1997, the ICRC stated that:

> The "travaux préparatoires" of Article 6(5) [AP II] indicate that this provision aims at encouraging amnesty, i.e., a sort of release at the end of hostilities. It does not aim at an amnesty for those having violated international humanitarian law . . . Anyway States did not accept any rule in Protocol II obliging them to criminalize its violations . . . Conversely, one cannot either affirm that international humanitarian law absolutely excludes any amnesty including persons having committed violations of international humanitarian law, as long as the principle that those having committed grave breaches have to be either prosecuted or extradited is not voided of its substance.[865]

VI. Other Practice

761. According to Amnesty International, Article 19 of the 1993 Cotonou Agreement on Liberia providing for a general amnesty would appear to violate the obligation of States to take the necessary measures to suppress violations of IHL under the 1949 Geneva Conventions, in particular, in respect of violations of common Article 3.[866]

762. With respect to Russia's Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya and the Law on the Execution of the Law on [863] IACtHR, Barrios Altos case, Concurring Opinion of Judge Cançado Trindade, 14 March 2001, § 13.

[864] ICRC, Statement at the Humanitarian Liaison Working Group (HLWG), Geneva, 19 June 1995.
[865] ICRC, Letter from the Head of the ICRC Legal Division to the Department of Law at the University of California and the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, 15 April 1997.
[866] Amnesty International, Letter from to the ICRC, 28 September 1993.

Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya, both of 1997, the Russian human rights group Memorial, together with the Soldiers' Mothers Committee and families of Russian soldiers detained in Chechnya, called for the revision of the amnesty law as it would jeopardise the life and security of the detainees and halt the exchange process of POWs.[867]

E. Statutes of Limitation

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

763. The preamble to the 1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity recognises that "it is necessary and timely to affirm in international law, through this Convention, the principle that there is no period of limitation for war crimes and crimes against humanity, and to secure its universal application".

764. Article 1 of the 1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity provides that:

No statutory limitation shall apply to the following crimes, irrespective of the date of their commission:

(a) War crimes as they are defined in the Charter of the International Military Tribunal, Nürnberg, of 8 August 1945 and confirmed by resolutions 3(1) of 13 February 1946 and 95(I) of 11 December 1946 of the General Assembly of the United Nations, particularly the "grave breaches" enumerated in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the protection of war victims;

(b) Crimes against humanity whether committed in time of war or in time of peace as they are defined in the Charter of the International Military Tribunal, Nürnberg, of 8 August 1945 and confirmed by resolutions 3(I) of 13 February 1946 and 95(I) of 11 December 1946 of the General Assembly of the United Nations, eviction by armed attack or occupation and inhuman acts resulting from the policy of apartheid, and the crime of genocide as defined in the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, even if such acts do not constitute a violation of the domestic law of the country in which they were committed.

765. Article 1 of the 1974 European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that:

Each Contracting State undertakes to adopt any necessary measures to secure that statutory limitation shall not apply to the prosecution of the following offences, or to the enforcement of the sentences imposed for such offences, in so far as they are punishable under its domestic law:

[867] "Exchange or deception? The Amnesty is unlikely to help the Chechens who are in the hands of the Russian military", Izvestiya, Moscow, 28 March 1997.

1. the crimes against humanity specified in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide adopted on 9 December 1948 by the General Assembly of the United Nations;
2. (a) the violations specified in Article 50 of the 1949 Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, Article 51 of the 1949 Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea, Article 130 of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and Article 147 of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, (b) any comparable violations of the laws of war having effect at the time when this Convention enters into force and of customs of war existing at that time, which are not already provided for in the above-mentioned provisions of the Geneva Conventions, when the specific violation under consideration is of a particularly grave character by reason either of its factual and intentional elements or of the extent of its foreseeable consequences;
3. any other violation of a rule or custom of international law which may hereafter be established and which the Contracting State concerned considers according to a declaration under Article 6 as being of a comparable nature to those referred to in paragraph 1 or 2 of this article.

As of 1 February 2004, four States (Belgium, France, Netherlands and Romania) had signed the Convention, and three (Belgium, Netherlands and Romania) had ratified it. Article 3(2) states that "the Convention shall enter into force three months after the date of deposit of the third instrument of ratification or acceptance".

766. Article 2 of the 1974 European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that:

1. The present Convention applies to offences committed after its entry into force in respect of the Contracting State concerned.
2. It applies also to offences committed before such entry into force in those cases where the statutory limitation period had not expired at that time.

767. Article 29 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "the crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court shall not be subject to any statute of limitations".

768. Upon signature of the 1998 ICC Statute, Egypt declared that:

The Arab Republic of Egypt declares that the principle of the non-retroactivity of the jurisdiction of the Court, pursuant to articles 11 and 24 of the Statute, shall not invalidate the well established principle that no war crime shall be barred from prosecution due to the statute of limitations.[868]

Other Instruments

769. Article 7 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Non-applicability of statutory limitations", provides that "no statutory limitation shall apply to crimes against the peace and security of mankind".

[868] Egypt, Declarations made upon signature of the ICC Statute, 26 December 2000, § 5.

770. Article 6 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that "statutes of limitations shall not apply for prosecuting violations of international human rights and humanitarian law norms that constitute crimes under international law".

771. Article 7 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that:

> Statutes of limitations for prosecuting other violations or pursuing civil claims should not unduly restrict the ability of a victim to pursue a claim against the perpetrator, and should not apply with respect to periods during which no effective remedies exist for violations of human rights and international humanitarian law norms.

772. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and torture. Section 17(1) provides that these offences "shall not be subject to any statute of limitations".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

773. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that:

> Any nation may prosecute any person who is suspected of committing a major war crime and no statute of limitation applies for such prosecutions. Trial of a suspected war criminal may take place any time that the individual is located or evidence of a war crimes commission is unearthed.[869]

774. France's LOAC Manual states that "Article 29 of the [1998 ICC Statute] provides that crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court shall not be subject to any statute of limitations".[870]

775. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "war crimes are not subject to statutes of limitation".[871]

776. The UK Military Manual states that it is "open to two or more belligerents to agree in a peace treaty, or even in a general armistice, that no further war crimes trials will be instituted by them after a certain agreed date or as from the date of the treaty of the armistice".[872]

777. The US Instructor's Guide provides that "there is no statute of limitations on the prosecution of a war crime".[873]

[869] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1307.
[870] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 45.
[871] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 86.
[872] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 641, footnote 1.
[873] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 13.

778. The US Naval Handbook provides that "there is no statute of limitations on the prosecution of a war crime".[874]

National Legislation

779. Albania's Military Penal Code provides that statutory limitations will not apply to war crimes and crimes against humanity.[875]

780. Argentina's Law concerning the Imprescriptibility of War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity approved the 1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitation to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity.[876]

781. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides for the introduction of a new provision in the Code of Military Justice as amended according to which "the penal action with respect to [offences against protected persons and objects in the event of an armed conflict] are not subject to statutory limitations".[877]

782. Armenia's Penal Code provides that crimes such as "Application of prohibited methods of warfare", "Serious breaches of international humanitarian law during armed conflict" or genocide are not subject to statutes of limitation.[878]

783. Austria's Penal Code, which provides for possible life imprisonment for, inter alia, acts such as murder (Article 75), specific cases of rape (Article 201(3)) and genocide (Article 321), states that "acts which are punishable with life imprisonment, or which are punishable with imprisonment for a period between ten and twenty years or life imprisonment, are not subject to statutory limitations".[879]

784. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code excludes statutory limitations with regard to war crimes.[880]

785. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that "the exoneration from criminal responsibility or punishment . . . in relation with the expiration of statutory limitation is inapplicable to crimes against peace, [crimes against] the security of mankind and war crimes".[881]

786. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that "Article 21 of the Introductory Part of the Code of Penal Procedure and Article 91 of the Penal Code, relative to the statutory limitation of public prosecutions and penalties, shall not be applicable to the breaches listed in

[874] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.3.
[875] Albania, Military Penal Code (1995), Article 67.
[876] Argentina, Law concerning the Imprescriptibility of War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity (1995).
[877] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 236, introducing a new Article 601 bis in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[878] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 75(6).
[879] Austria, Penal Code (1974), Article 57(1).
[880] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 75.
[881] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 85.

Article 1 of the present Act".[882] Article 1 provides for the punishment of the crime of genocide (paragraph 1), crimes against humanity (paragraph 2) and "grave breaches . . . which cause injury, by act or omission, to persons or objects protected by the [1949 Geneva Conventions] and by Protocols I and II additional to those Conventions" (paragraph 3).[883]

787. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes states that "the prosecution and punishment of infringements constituent of genocide, crimes against humanity or war crimes are not subject to statutes of limitation".[884]

788. Under Colombia's Penal Code, the period of limitation for penal action with regard to genocide, forced disappearance, torture and forced displacement is 30 years.[885]

789. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act states that statutes of limitation do not apply with regard to the prosecution and repression of war crimes or with regard to the pronounced penalty.[886]

790. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that:

> The non-applicability of the criminal legislation of the Republic of Croatia [because of the statute of limitations] does not apply to the criminal offences of genocide, as referred to in Article 156, a war of aggression, as referred to in Article 157, war crimes, as referred to in Articles 158, 159 and 160 of this Code, or other criminal offences which, pursuant to international law, are not subject to the statute of limitations.[887]

The Code further provides that:

> No statutory limitation shall apply to the execution of punishment pronounced on a perpetrator of the criminal offence of genocide as specified in Article 156, of a war of aggression as specified in Article 157, of war crimes as specified in Articles 158, 159 and 160 of this Code, or of other criminal offences which, pursuant to international law, are not subject to the statute of limitations.[888]

791. Cuba's Penal Code states that its provisions regarding statutes of limitation for penal action "do not apply to cases for which the law foresees the death penalty and to crimes against humanity".[889] It adds that its provisions regarding statutes of limitation for punishment "do not apply with respect to crimes against humanity".[890]

[882] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 8.
[883] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(1), (2) and (3).
[884] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 28.
[885] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 83.
[886] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 14.
[887] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 18(2).
[888] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 24.
[889] Cuba, Penal Code (1987), Article 64(5).
[890] Cuba, Penal Code (1987), Article 65(5).

792. Estonia's Criminal Code as amended provides that there is no statutory limitation for war crimes.[891]

793. In 1992, the transitional government of Ethiopia adopted the Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation which has "the power to conduct investigation and institute proceedings in respect of any person having committed or responsible for the commission of an offence by abusing his position in the party, the government or mass organization under the Derg-WPE regime".[892] The Proclamation states, inter alia, that "the provisions concerning limitation of criminal action and the time limit concerning the submission of charges, evidence and pleading to charges shall not be applicable to proceedings instituted by the Office".[893]

794. Ethiopia's Constitution provides that "there shall be no period of limitation on persons charged with crimes against humanity [i.e. "inhuman punishment, forcible disappearances, summary executions, acts of genocide"] as provided by international conventions ratified by Ethiopia and other laws of Ethiopia".[894]

795. Under France's Penal Code, "the public action with regard to [genocide and "other crimes against humanity"], as well as the sentences imposed [on genocide and "other crimes against humanity"], are not subject to statutory limitations".[895]

796. Under Germany's Penal Code, genocide and murder are explicitly excluded from the general provisions relative to statutory limitation.[896]

797. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides that "the prosecution of serious criminal offences pursuant to this Act [inter alia, genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes] and the execution of sentences imposed on their account shall not be subject to any statute of limitations".[897]

798. Hungary's Criminal Code as amended provides that statutory limitations will not apply to war crimes and crimes against humanity.[898]

799. Under Israel's Criminal Procedure Law, the period of limitation for the most serious crimes is 20 years and for other crimes 10 years.[899]

800. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law provides that there shall be no period of limitation for the crimes dealt with therein (crimes against the Jewish people, crimes against humanity and war crimes).[900]

[891] Estonia, Criminal Code as amended (1992), Section 53.
[892] Ethiopia, Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation (1992), Articles 2(1) and 6.
[893] Ethiopia, Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation (1992), Article 7(2).
[894] Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 28(1).
[895] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 213(5).
[896] Germany, Penal Code (1998), Section 78(2).
[897] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1(5).
[898] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Article 33(2).
[899] Israel, Criminal Procedure Law (1982), Article 9.
[900] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 12.

801. Israel's Crime of Genocide (Prevention and Punishment) Law excludes the applicability of the provision of the Penal Code dealing with limitations.[901]
802. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, in a part entitled "war crimes", states that "the provisions with regard to statutes of limitation of the common law do not apply to war crimes nor to the sanctions incurred".[902]
803. The Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, in a part dealing with the punishment of war criminals, provide that "the crimes provided for in this law are not subject to statutes of limitation".[903]
804. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended provides that "there is no prescription for genocide and war crimes".[904]
805. Luxembourg's Law on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes provides that "war crimes . . . are, by their nature, not subject to statutes of limitation".[905]
806. Malaysia's Armed Forces Act provides for a general three-year limitation period for offences under service law, except for offences relative to mutiny and desertion.[906]
807. Mali's Penal Code provides that "any of the crimes provided for under the present title [i.e. crimes against humanity, genocide and war crimes] . . . just as any punishment pronounced in repression of such crimes are not subject to statutes of limitation".[907]
808. Moldova's Draft Penal Code, under a provision dealing with statutes of limitation for crimes, provides that "the statutes of limitation do not apply with regard to persons having committed crimes against the peace and security of mankind or war crimes". It also states that "the statutes of limitation do not apply to the principal penalties which are applied with regard to crimes against the security of mankind or to war crimes provided for in this Code".[908]
809. According to the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, the expiration of the right to institute criminal proceedings or to impose a sentence, as defined in Articles 70 and 76 of the Penal Code as amended, "shall not apply to the crimes defined in this Act [genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture]".[909]
810. Niger's Penal Code as amended, under a chapter entitled "Crimes against humanity and war crimes" in which it provides for the punishment of a list of offences such as genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes in the

[901] Israel, Crime of Genocide (Prevention and Punishment) Law (1950), Section 6.
[902] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 43.
[903] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 149.
[904] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 49.
[905] Luxembourg, Law on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes (1974).
[906] Malaysia, Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 144.
[907] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 32.
[908] Moldova, Draft Penal Code (1999), Articles 61(8) and 95(4).
[909] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 13.

meaning of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and both AP I and AP II, states that "the prosecution with regard to the crimes set out under this chapter, as well as the penalties pronounced, are not subject to statutes of limitation".[910]

811. Poland's Penal Code provides for the non-application of statutory limitations to war offences and crimes against peace and humanity.[911]

812. Russia's Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals states that "Nazi criminals, guilty of most serious crimes against peace and humanity and war crimes, are subject to prosecution and punishment, irrespective of the time elapsed after the crimes committed".[912]

813. Russia's Criminal Code, with respect to possible release from criminal responsibility owing to the expiry of statutes of limitation, provides that:

> The periods of limitation shall not be applied to persons who have committed crimes against peace and the security of mankind, provided for by Articles 353 [planning, preparing, unleashing or waging an aggressive war], 356 [use of banned means and methods of warfare], 357 [genocide] and 358 [ecocide] of this Code.[913]

With respect to possible release from punishment owing to the expiry of the limitation period of the Court's sentence, the Code provides that:

> Limitation periods shall not be applicable to persons convicted for the commission of crimes against peace and the security of mankind, provided for by Articles 353 [planning, preparing, unleashing or waging an aggressive war], 356 [use of banned means and methods of warfare], 357 [genocide] and 358 [ecocide] of this Code.[914]

814. Rwanda's Law on the Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide and Crimes against Humanity provides that "prosecutions and penalties for offences constituting the crime of genocide or crimes against humanity are not subject to a limitation period".[915]

815. Rwanda's Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions provides that "the public action and penalties related to offences of the crime of genocide or crimes against humanity are imprescriptible".[916]

816. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that:

> Criminal prosecution and the implementation of a sentence shall not be prevented for criminal offences from Articles 373–378 of the Present Code [i.e. genocide; war crimes against the civilian population; war crimes against the wounded and sick; war crimes against prisoners of war; war crimes of use of unlawful weapons; association with and incitement to genocide and war crimes] as well as for criminal

[910] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.8.
[911] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 109.
[912] Russia, Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals (1965).
[913] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 78(5).
[914] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 83(4).
[915] Rwanda, Law on the Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide and Crimes against Humanity (1996), Article 37.
[916] Rwanda, Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001), Article 92.

offences the prosecution of which may not be prevented under international agreements.[917]

817. Spain's Military Criminal Code provides for periods of limitation for military offences punishable thereunder, including offences against the laws and customs of war, and for the penalties imposed for such offences.[918]

818. Spain's Penal Code provides that "in no case shall the crime of genocide be subject to statutory limitations" and that the same is valid for the punishment imposed therefore.[919] Periods of limitation are provided for other offences punishable under the Code.[920]

819. Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended provides that:

[The following acts] are not subject to statutes of limitation:

1. Crimes aiming at the extermination or oppression of a group of the population because of its nationality, race, religion or because of its ethnic, social or political affiliation;
2. Serious crimes under the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and other international agreements relating to the protection of victims of war to which Switzerland is a party, if the offence under examination is particularly serious because of the conditions under which it was committed;
3. Crimes committed with the aim of exercising duress or extortion and which put in danger or threaten to put in danger the life and physical integrity of persons, in particular by the use of means of massive destruction, the triggering of a catastrophe or the taking of hostages.[921]

Switzerland's Penal Code as amended contains an identical provision.[922]

820. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides that "crimes against the peace and security of mankind are not subject to statutes of limitation".[923]

821. Uzbekistan's Criminal Code provides that statutory limitations are not applicable to crimes against the peace and security of mankind, including genocide and violations of the laws and customs of war.[924]

822. Yemen's Military Criminal Code states that "with regard to the crimes set out under this chapter [i.e. war crimes], the right to prosecution is not subject to statutes of limitation".[925]

823. Zimbabwe's Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act as amended provides that:

[917] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 116.
[918] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Articles 45 and 46.
[919] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Articles 131(4) and 133(2).
[920] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 133.
[921] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Article 56 bis.
[922] Switzerland, Penal Code as amended (1937), Article 75 bis.
[923] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 75 and 81.
[924] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Articles 64 and 69.
[925] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 22.

(1) The right of prosecution for murder shall not be barred by any lapse of time.
(2) The right of prosecution for any offence other than murder . . . shall, unless some other period is expressly provided by law, be barred by the lapse of twenty years from the time when the offence was committed.[926]

National Case-law

824. In the Bohne case in 1966, Argentina's Supreme Court of Justice found that in fact there had been no verification that prescription applied to penal action under the laws of the requesting State (FRG), and that the decision in question remained unchanged even in the light of the argument put forward by the defence to the effect that prescription of penal action for the crimes attributed to the accused applied after 15 years because the case was one of participation in simple homicide. The accused had been requisitioned for widespread and systematic execution of mentally ill persons in 1939 and 1940.[927]

825. In the Priebke case in 1995 dealing with the question of the possible extradition of the accused to Italy for acts committed during the Second World War (Ardeatine caves massacre), Argentina's Court of Appeal found that, under the terms of Argentine legislation, the charge of homicide was prescribed and therefore the extradition request should be rejected.[928] The Supreme Court revoked the decision of the Court of Appeal and allowed the extradition, stating that the fact that Priebke was required for trial in Italy established prima facie the crime of genocide "for killing 75 Jews out of 335 dead". It added that "the classification of offences as crimes against humanity does not depend on whether the requesting or requested States agree with the extradition process, but instead on the principles of jus cogens of international law" and that "there is no prescription for crimes under this law".[929] One of the Court magistrates referred to the 1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity and concluded that the Argentine Republic's practice undeniably contributed to the development of an international custom that favoured the non-applicability of statutory limitations, and that express acceptance of such non-applicability through adherence to or ratification of the Convention was not the only means of determining the existence of jus cogens. In his opinion, Argentina's Executive and Legislative Branches had already expressed their agreement with the contents of the text, which had already been approved by both the Argentine Senate and House of Deputies.[930] Other magistrates also found that Priebke's conduct had all the characteristics of crimes against humanity committed against civilians and prisoners of war

926 Zimbabwe, Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act as amended (1927), Section 23.
927 Argentina, Supreme Court of Justice, Bohne case, 24 August 1966.
928 Argentina, Court of Appeal of General Roca, Priebke case (Appeal), 23 August 1995.
929 Argentina, Supreme Court, Priebke case (Supreme Court), 2 November 1995.
930 Argentina, Supreme Court, Priebke case (Supreme Court), 2 November 1995, Opinion by Dr Bossert.

in wartime, and that this classification was in line with the principles of jus cogens, and that such crimes were not subject to limitations.[931] However, other judges casting dissenting votes found that, since the crimes were homicides in terms of Article 62 of the Argentine Penal Code, the time limit after which prescription would apply had already elapsed. They found that even if the acts were to be considered crimes against humanity, they would be subject to a period of limitation since the UN Convention had yet to enter into force in Argentina.[932]

826. In the Schwammberger case in 1989, a magistrate of Argentina's Cámara Federal de La Plata found the 1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity to be an indisputable factor in the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes as a principle of international law, and despite the absence of ratification by Argentina, held that Argentina was bound by the principle according to Article 102 of its Constitution.[933] Similarly, another magistrate rejected the position that prescription was covered by Article 18 of the National Constitution.[934] The Attorney-General argued that in the case in question it must be verified whether penal action was not prescribed under the laws of the requesting State (FRG) rather than the laws of Argentina.[935] Similarly, in 1990, the Supreme Court found that under German law there was no prescription.[936]

827. In its judgement in the Videla case in 1994 concerning the abduction, torture and murder of a Chilean woman in 1974, Chile's Appeal Court of Santiago held that the acts charged constituted grave breaches under Article 147 GC IV, which it found applicable, and that:

> Such offences as constitute grave breaches of the Convention are imprescriptible . . . the ten-year prescription of legal action in respect of the crimes provided for in Article 94 of the Penal Code cannot apply . . . Any attempt by a State to tamper with the criminality of and consequent liability for acts which infringe the laws of war and the rights of persons in wartime is beyond the State's competence while it is a Party to the Geneva Conventions on humanitarian law.[937]

828. In the Mengistu and Others case in 1995 concerning the prosecution and trial of Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam and former members of the Derg for allegedly committing genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes during [931] Argentina, Supreme Court, Priebke case (Supreme Court), 2 November 1995, Opinion by Drs Nazareno and Moliné O'Connor.

[932] Argentina, Supreme Court, Priebke case (Supreme Court), 2 November 1995, Dissenting vote by Drs Belluscio and Levene.
[933] Argentina, Cámara Federal de La Plata, Schwammberger case (First Instance), 30 August 1989, Opinion by Dr Schiffrin.
[934] Argentina, Cámara Federal de La Plata, Schwammberger case (First Instance), 30 August 1989, Opinion by Dr Garro.
[935] Argentina, Legal opinion of the Procurator-general of the Nation, Schwammberger case (Legal Opinion), 21 January 1989.
[936] Argentina, Supreme Court of Justice, Schwammberger case (Supreme Court), 20 March 1990.
[937] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago (Third Criminal Chamber), Videla case, Judgement, 26 September 1994.

the former regime between 1974 and 1991, the Special Prosecutor of Ethiopia, in a reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, stated that "the UN General Assembly, in article 1 of its Resolution on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitation to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, has clearly stated that these offences are imprescriptible".[938] In his conclusions, the Special Prosecutor noted that "it is . . . a well established custom and belief that war crimes and crimes against humanity are not . . . barred by limitation".[939]

829. In the Barbie case in 1984, France's Court of Cassation held that:

The judgement under appeal conforms with the official interpretation of the London Agreement given on 15 June 1979 by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who was consulted on the occasion of other proceedings but whose opinion on questions relating to international public policy (ordre public international) is of general scope and binding on the judiciary. The Court held that "the only principle with regard to the statutory limitation of prosecution of crimes against humanity which is to be considered as deducible from the Charter of the International Military Tribunal is that prosecution of such crimes is not subject to statutory limitation". The Court of Appeal stated correctly that, within the meaning of Article 60 of the European Convention on Human Rights, "the right to benefit of statutory limitation of prosecution" cannot constitute a human right or fundamental freedom. The Court of Appeal then referred to Article 7(2) of the Convention, as well as to Article 15(2) of the [1966 ICCPR]. In fact, neither of these provisions give rise to any derogation or restriction on the rule that prosecution is not subject to statutory limitation. This rule is applicable to crimes against humanity by virtue of the principles of law recognized by the community of nations.[940]

In a later judgement in the same case, the Court of Cassation held that war crimes, in contrast to crimes against humanity, were subject "to the time-limits imposed by statute" and stated that:

Following the termination of hostilities, it is necessary that the passage of time should be allowed to blur acts of brutality which might have been committed in the course of armed conflict, even if those acts constituted violations of the laws and customs of war or were not justified by military necessity, provided that those acts were not of such a nature as to deserve the qualification of crimes against humanity. There is no principle of law with an authority superior to that of French law which would allow war crimes, either within the meaning of the London Agreement of 8 August 1945 or as defined in the Ordinance of 28 August 1944 which preceded it, to be declared not subject to statutory limitation.[941]

830. In 1996, the Constitutional Court of Hungary held that the provision of Hungary's Penal Code on the imprescriptibility of war crimes and crimes

[938] Ethiopia, Special Prosecutor's Office, Mengistu and Others case, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995, § 6.1.1.
[939] Ethiopia, Special Prosecutor's Office, Mengistu and Others case, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995, Conclusion.
[940] France, Court of Cassation, Barbie case, Judgement, 26 January 1984.
[941] France, Cour de Cassation, Barbie case, 20 December 1985.

against humanity could only be applied to grave breaches in international conflicts and prohibited acts under common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[942]

831. At the Trial of First Instance in the Priebke case in 1996, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome held that the criminal prosecution prescribed period of 20 years had elapsed. The charge laid against the accused was "violence and murder of Italian citizens" under Italy's Military Criminal Code, a war crime but not a crime against humanity according to the Tribunal. Since the sentence would not be life imprisonment – the only crimes (with crimes against humanity and genocide) not subject to limitation under Italian law – the Tribunal held that the prosecution was prescribed. However, this verdict was annulled by the Supreme Court of Cassation, which ordered a new trial.[943]

832. At the Trial of First Instance in the Hass and Priebke case in 1997, Italy's Military Tribunal of Rome held that the charge was both a war crime and a crime against humanity and that, under Italian law and under customary international law (which prevailed over national law), they were not subject to limitations.[944] The Military Court of Appeals, as well as the Supreme Court of Cassation, confirmed this judgement in the relevant parts.[945]

833. In the Spring case in 2001 dealing with the claim of an Auschwitz survivor against the Swiss Confederation for compensation for having been handed over, in November 1943, to German troops by Swiss border guards, Switzerland's Federal Court, in the part of the judgement concerning the question whether the right to compensation was barred by statutes of limitation, referred to Article 75(1) bis of the Swiss Penal Code and Article 56 bis of the Swiss Military Criminal Code as amended and stated that these provisions excluded the applicability of statutes of limitation to, inter alia, genocide and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions or other international agreements on the protection of victims of war if the offence was particularly serious given the circumstances. However, the Federal Court pointed out that Article 75 bis of the Swiss Penal Code had been adopted under the premise that the provision be applicable "only if the prosecution of the crime or the punishment was not yet barred by statutes of limitation under the then applicable law at the time of the coming into force of this change" and that this would not be valid only for the cases of extradition and other forms of international cooperation in criminal matters. As to the alleged punishable act – the claimant referring, inter alia, [942] Hungary, Constitutional Court of Hungary, Judgement No. 36/1996, 4 September 1996.

[943] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement (Trial of First Instance), 1 August 1996; Supreme Court of Cassation, Priebke case, Judgement (Cancelling Verdict of First Instance), 15 October 1997.

[944] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement (Trial of First Instance), 22 July 1997.

[945] Italy, Military Appeals Court, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement (Trial of Second Instance), 7 March 1998; Supreme Court of Cassation, Hass and Priebke case, Judgement (Trial of Third Instance), 16 November 1998.

to complicity in genocide – the Court stated that, if the handing over of the claimant to the German authorities should in fact be relevant under penal law, the relevant acts would, at the time of the coming into force of Article 75 bis of the Swiss Penal Code in 1983, have been barred by absolute statutes of limitation, which would be the reason why the applicant could not deduce a right in his favour from the principle that statutes of limitation under penal law can also be applicable to the right under civil law.[946]

Other National Practice

834. On the occasion of a possible request for the extradition of a Belgian national from Spain for acts committed during the Second World War, it was noted in the Commission of Justice of the Belgian parliament that Belgium did not want to ratify the 1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity because it could be applied to acts committed before its entry into force, in contradiction with general principles of Belgian penal law. Belgium would, however, be willing to ratify the 1974 European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes since it only applied to acts for which the limitation period had not elapsed.[947]

835. In an explanatory memorandum submitted to the Belgian Senate in 1991 in the context of the adoption procedure of the Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols (as amended), the Belgian government noted that the principle of the non-application of statutory limitations to war crimes was now generally accepted and that several States had modified their legislation in accordance with the principle. It referred to the UN and European Conventions on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, although Belgium had ratified neither of them at the time.[948]

836. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who had committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Brazil stated that "the principle of non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity was a new principle for many countries, including his own, where the law recognized statutory limitations in criminal matters".[949]

946 Switzerland, Federal Court, Spring case, Judgement, 21 January 2001.

947 Belgium, House of Representatives, Commission of Justice, Debates on a proposal for a resolution on the request for extradition of the war criminal Léon Degrelle and on the ratification of the 1974 European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, 1982–1983 Session, Débats parlementaires, Chambre, Vol. 540, No. 2, pp. 6–9, reprinted in part in RBDI, Vol. 19, 1986, pp. 463–464.

948 Belgium, Senate, Explanatory Memorandum, Draft Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols, 1990–1991 Session, Doc. 1317-1, 30 April 1991, p. 16.

949 Brazil, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1547, 12 December 1967, § 28.

837. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who had committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Bulgaria stated that:

He was convinced of the need to adopt a convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes in order to prevent new crimes . . . In resolution 1158 (XLI) the Economic and Social Council had urged all States to take "any measures necessary to prevent the application of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity". The Committee's task was therefore very simple and essentially a technical one: it had to adopt a convention which was of the nature of a declaration and brought together principles that already existed in international law. Statutory limitation with respect to war crimes did not exist in Bulgaria, nor in the legislation of many countries . . . Although statutory limitation was known in the domestic law of many countries, it had always been very controversial, and in some countries applied to some crimes but not to others. All international documents dealing with international criminal law, moreover, pass over the question of the non-applicability of statutory limitation in silence . . . No moral considerations could justify the application of statutory limitation to such crimes . . . What should be done . . . was to take all necessary measures to confirm a principle which already existed in international law.[950]

838. In 1968, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Chile stated that:

His country had voted in favour of the draft convention [on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity] because it considered it essential to adopt an instrument establishing the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity.[951]

839. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Congo stated that "there could be no statutory limitation in the case of war crimes and crimes against humanity".[952]

840. In 1968, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Côte d'Ivoire stated that:

It was particularly important, by adopting a convention, to embody in international law the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity at a time when the policy of aggression, intervention and [950] Bulgaria, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1518, 17 November 1967, § 5.

[951] Chile, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1568, 10 October 1968, § 29.
[952] Congo, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1518, 17 November 1967, § 21.

hegemony pursued by certain countries was giving rise to new crimes of that kind in various parts of the world. He would therefore support any steps aimed at ensuring that such crimes were punished.[953]

841. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Cyprus stated that:

The last paragraph of the preamble and article I of the [preliminary draft convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity], as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1158 (XLI), took it for granted that the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity was a principle. If, however, the new notion of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes was, as a necessary evil, made applicable to the past, it would not be possible to speak of a principle; whereas it was elevated to the status of a principle by a process of creating international law, it would be difficult to understand why certain offences against property, included in the available definition of war crimes, should be considered of such gravity as to be exempt from statutory limitation, while more serious crimes at the national level were subject to limitation. Statements that the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes became a principle because there was no statutory limitation in international law were inadmissible; for the absence of any provision on that point did not mean that the principle was accepted or recognized.[954]

In a later meeting on the same issue in 1967, the representative of Cyprus stated that:

> 23. . . . There had indeed been no precise definition of [the crimes such as those committed during the Second World War] in international law at the time when they were committed, nor had there been any provision relating to the applicability or non-applicability of the rules of statutory limitation. The absence of any reference to that in international law was regarded by some as proof of the existence of the principle of the non-applicability in international law. In his opinion, that was not the case, for international law was not yet as developed as domestic law, and it was to the characteristics and weaknesses of international law that its silence on that point was due . . .
> . . .
> 25. While the principle of statutory limitation was well established in domestic criminal law, the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity, on the other hand, did not constitute an established principle of international law.[955]

842. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Czechoslovakia stated that:

[953] Côte d'Ivoire, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1568, 10 October 1968, § 6.
[954] Cyprus, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1516, 15 November 1967, § 15.
[955] Cyprus, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1518, 17 November 1967, §§ 23 and 25.

> 35. ... Her government fully supported the drafting of a binding legal instrument which would incorporate the principle of non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity.
> ...
> 37. ... To apply statutory limitation to [war crimes and crimes against humanity] would be contrary to the provisions of the international instruments which she had mentioned [i.e. the 1945 London Agreement, the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) and UN General Assembly resolutions 3 (I), 95 (I) and 170 (II)] and to the spirit of the [1943 Moscow Declaration] ... A number of countries, including the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, had enacted legislation under which, in accordance with the rules of international law, statutory limitation did not apply to persons who had committed war crimes or crimes against humanity. Czechoslovakia's Act No. 184, adopted in 1964, was based on the principles of international law and was aimed at assuring the Czechoslovak people ... that no war criminal would escape punishment. It embodied the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity, a principle which had more recently been confirmed by resolution 3 (XXI) of the [UN] Commission on Human Rights and resolution 1158 (XLI) of the Economic and Social Council and by the study submitted by the Secretary-General ...
> 38. ... The principle of non-applicability of statutory limitation was universally recognized as constituting one of the fundamental principles of international law ...
> 39. ... The non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity followed directly from international law ... [C]onsequently, the application to such crimes of the rules of domestic law concerning statutory limitation would constitute a flagrant violation of the principles of international law.[956]

In a later meeting of the Third Committee on the same issue in 1968, Czechoslovakia stated that "the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity constituted a valid and acknowledged principle of international law".[957]

843. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, France stated that:

> While the statutory limitation of crimes was a principle of domestic law, the very nature of war crimes, as defined in the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)], made it inapplicable to them; that had been recognized by France by the Act of 26 December 1964, and was a tenet which should be recognized at the international level, [956] Czechoslovakia, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1514, 14 November 1967, §§ 35–39.

[957] Czechoslovakia, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1567, 10 October 1968, § 22.

with retroactivity as an essential corollary, for without it the non-applicability of statutory limitation would be meaningless.[958]

844. In 1981, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly in relation to the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the GDR stated that "the draft code should include a clear provision on the non-applicability of the statute of limitations to such offences".[959]

845. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Greece stated that:

> 12. . . . The non-applicability of statutory limitation to [war crimes and crimes against humanity] was said to be a principle of international law which the [preliminary draft convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity] only affirmed. Hence the subtitle of article I of the draft convention: "Affirmation of the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity". What was actually involved, in her delegation's opinion, was a new legal concept . . .
> . . .
> 15. . . . The convention before the Committee did not meet current needs: society no longer felt the same resentment towards crimes committed twenty or thirty years ago, and the criminals who had committed those crimes were no longer the same men. They should therefore have the benefit of statutory limitation, particularly since limitation statutes applying to crimes committed in time of peace extended to even the most hideous crimes . . .
> . . .
> 19. It was thus inadvisable to exclude war crimes from statutory limitation.[960]

In a later meeting on the same issue in 1967, Greece stated that "the draft convention before the Committee [on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity] was intended to establish a new principle, the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity".[961]

846. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Honduras stated that:

[958] France, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1515, 15 November 1967, § 19.
[959] GDR, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/36/SR.60, 26 November 1981, § 26.
[960] Greece, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1515, 15 November 1967, §§ 12–19.
[961] Greece, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1547, 12 December 1967, § 5.

War criminals should have the benefit of statutory limitation for humanitarian reasons. Many countries' constitutions established that principle and made it part of their law . . . It was . . . reasonable that when the period of statutory limitation expired [a war criminal] should gain a certain degree of relief.[962]

847. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Hungary stated that:

21. . . . The recent adoption . . . in the Federal Republic of Germany of an Act under which statutory limitation would be applied to war crimes was a setback to the development of international law . . .
22. It was impossible to accept the arguments of those who favoured the application of statutory limitation to war crimes on the grounds that that principle was recognized in domestic legislation, for it was not ordinary crimes that were in question . . . Legal technicalities could not . . . be allowed to prevent the punishment of those who were responsible for war crimes and still not been brought to justice . . . The Hungarian Government had therefore established the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes by legislation decree, in 1964.[963]

848. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, India stated that its legislation did not provide for statutory limitation in the case of grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and that:

It was in the light of that legislation that her delegation had voted in the [UN] Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council in favour of the resolution requesting the principle that there would be no period of limitation for war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . She would like to reiterate her delegation's view that since that principle was not yet universally recognized the elaboration of an international convention on the matter would help to promote uniformity in national legislations.[964]

849. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Israel stated that:

The Government of Israel had no difficulty in accepting the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity, which was consistent with its legislation on the matter . . . As his delegation had stated at the 874th meeting of the [UN] Commission on Human Rights, on [962] Honduras, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1547, 12 December 1967, § 7.

[963] Hungary, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1516, 15 November 1967, §§ 21–22.
[964] India, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1516, 15 November 1967, §§ 1–2.

24 March 1966, the principle was an established principle of international law and corresponded to a need of the international community. Since the draft convention [on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity] restated that principle in more formal terms, it could be accepted.[965]

850. In 1968, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Italy stated that it "favoured the adoption of a convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes".[966]

851. In 1971, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Norway stated that "it could not accept the principle of non-applicability of statutory limitations".[967]

852. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Peru stated that:

It would . . . be advisable to find a legal formula which combined respect for the principles of statutory limitation and non-retroactivity with the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity. His delegation thought that a happy balance would be struck if the [draft] Convention [on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity] were made applicable only to future cases.[968]

853. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Poland stated that:

17. The preliminary draft convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . which the Committee had before it deserved its support . . .
18. The principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity, which was one of the basic principles of international law, was properly formulated, confirmed and sanctioned in the preamble to the preliminary draft convention. The responsibility of war criminals and of persons guilty of crimes against humanity was defined by instruments of international law where application of statutory limits was not provided for. The judgement of the International Military Tribunal of Nürnberg had not been an arbitrary decision by the victorious Powers: it had been an application of international law already in force on 8 August 1945, when the

[965] Israel, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1547, 12 December 1967, § 1.
[966] Italy, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1568, 10 October 1968, § 34.
[967] Norway, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1902, 9 December 1971, § 80.
[968] Peru, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1517, 16 November 1967, § 3.

charter of the Tribunal had been adopted. The responsibility of war criminals and of persons guilty of crimes against humanity was based on instruments and principles of international law which took precedence over any country's domestic laws. National legislation therefore could not apply statutory limitation to crimes which international law specifically excluded from such limitation. Many States whose internal legislation provided for such limitation in respect of offences under the ordinary law had borne that out by reaffirming the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes.

...

25. No one seemed to question the basic principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes. The crimes committed during the Second World War had been particularly barbarous and cruel, and the memory of the millions of victims of the Nazi terror made it imperative to adopt all necessary measures so that those who had perpetrated the crimes would not go unpunished.[969]

854. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Romania stated that "war crimes and crimes against humanity, because of their exceptional gravity, must be given special treatment. Her delegation therefore supported the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to such crimes."[970]

855. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Sweden stated that:

18. ... Statutory limitation applied in Sweden to all kinds of crimes, from the most petty to the gravest ... The statutory limitation on [the most serious crimes punished by life imprisonment] was fixed at twenty-five years from the date on which the crime was committed. The principle of statutory limitation had been recognized in his country for more than 150 years and was an integral part of the Swedish Penal Code. His government therefore had no intention of renouncing that principle with regard to a certain category of crimes, even if they were war crimes or crimes against humanity ...
19. Since that was the case, his Government had no intention of acceding to the convention adopted by the Committee. He felt that, except as regarded those States which became parties to the [draft] convention [on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity], there was no principle of international law which sanctioned the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity.[971]

[969] Poland, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1514, 14 November 1967, §§ 17–25.

[970] Romania, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1547, 12 December 1967, § 4.

[971] Sweden, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1549, 13 December 1967, §§ 18–19.

856. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the Ukraine stated that:

The Committee's task was not to establish a new system of judicial procedure, but to confirm in a multilateral international treaty a generally recognized principle of international law, namely, the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . Statutory limitation . . . was of an exceptional nature and could only apply when the law so indicated. War crimes and crimes against humanity did not come in the category of ordinary crimes and because of the social dangers involved the principle of statutory limitation was not equally applicable to them.[972]

857. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the USSR stated that:

6. In the whole history of criminal law there had never been a code or law envisaging the monstrous crimes committed by the Nazis. There could accordingly be no question of fixing a period of limitation for such crimes. It should also be noted that modern international law did not recognize the institution of statutory limitation. On the contrary, international law affirmed the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity, and honest people the world over hoped that the United Nations would enshrine that principle in an international instrument, a convention. It was therefore the duty of the United Nations to draw up such a convention without delay
7. . . . The [UN] Secretary-General's earlier study "Question of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity" . . . based on the relevant international instruments, national legislation, the doctrines of international law and international practice, clearly demonstrated the existence of the legal principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . That the principle in question was not unknown in international law was demonstrated by various important documents, such as the London Declaration of 13 January 1942, the [1943 Moscow Declaration], the Potsdam Agreements of 1945, the [1945 London Agreement], the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] and the [1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo)] . . . The same principle was embodied in various United Nations documents, including General Assembly resolutions 3 (I), 95 (I) and 170 (II), and it was not merely a fortuitous circumstance that none of them mentioned the possibility of statutory limitation in respect of such crimes.
8. The same principle of international law found expression in the domestic legislation of many countries – Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic, Poland, France, Hungary, Austria, and Czechoslovakia, among others. It was also embodied in the domestic legislation of the Soviet Union; a decree by the [972] Ukraine, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1517, 16 November 1967, § 5.

Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the Union dated 4 March 1965 stipulated that war crimes and crimes against humanity were not subject to statutory limitation.

9. Her delegation considered that such precedents indicated quite clearly that the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes had long been established and recognized in international law.[973]

858. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of the UK stated that:

As her Government had explained in its reply to the [UN] Secretary-General's questionnaire, there was no prescription or statute of limitation under the criminal law of the United Kingdom which would preclude persons from being tried for war crimes or crimes against humanity because of the date on which the crime was committed.[974]

In a later meeting on the same issue, the UK representative stated that:

30. . . . Her Government was in favour of a convention to the effect that no statutory limitation should apply to war crimes and crimes against humanity irrespective of the date of their commission . . .

. . .

34. Her delegation was . . . in favour of a general definition [of war crimes and crimes against humanity] and suggested that article I [of the draft convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity] should be replaced by the following text:

"No statutory limitation shall apply to war crimes of a grave nature and to crimes against humanity as defined in international law, irrespective of the date of their commission".[975]

859. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of the US stated that:

Her delegation supported the basic human rights objectives sought through the adoption of a convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitation to the kinds of crimes of which Nazi criminals were prosecuted and convicted at Nürnberg, namely war crimes and crimes against humanity and would co-operate with other delegations which wished to approach the question in a constructive manner.[976]

[973] USSR, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1516, 15 November 1967, §§ 6–9.

[974] UK, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1518, 17 November 1967, § 14.

[975] UK, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1547, 12 December 1967, §§ 30 and 34.

[976] US, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1517, 16 November 1967, § 9.

860. In 1977, in reply to a question from the Embassy of France, the US Department of State stated that:

It is the view of the United States Government that neither the [1945 London Agreement], with the [1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg)] annexed, nor [the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10] . . . contain any provisions setting a time limit for prosecution or punishment. The United States further regards [the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10] as revoking the benefits of any statute of limitation in respect of the period specified; and in light of the absence of any provision to the contrary, the offenses covered in these instruments are considered not to be subject to limitation concerning their prosecution and punishment.

United States Federal law contains no statute of limitations on war crimes and crimes against humanity.[977]

861. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq, the US stated that:

The Government of the United States reminds the Government of Iraq that under International Law, violations of the Geneva Conventions, the Geneva Protocol of 1925, or related International Laws of armed conflict are war crimes, and individuals guilty of such violations may be subject to prosecution at any time, without any statute of limitations. This includes members of the Iraqi armed forces and civilian government officials.[978]

In another such diplomatic note, the US reiterated that "Iraqi individuals who are guilty of . . . war crimes . . . are personally liable and subject to prosecution at any time".[979]

862. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of Uruguay stated that:

Under Uruguayan legislation, statutory limitation would be applied to all crimes, the period of limitation depending on the severity of the punishment. He recognized, however, that in the present instance, since international law prevailed over domestic law, war crimes and crimes against humanity could be excluded from the range of applicability of the rules regarding statutory limitation, or at least that the periods of limitation could be prolonged in the case of such crimes.[980]

[977] US, Department of State, Note addressed to the Embassy of France, 19 May 1977, Department of State File No. P77 0090-522, reprinted in John A. Boyd, Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1977, US Department of State Publication 8960, Washington, D.C., 1979, p. 927.

[978] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, Annex I, p. 2.

[979] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 21 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22130, 21 January 1991, p. 4.

[980] Uruguay, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1518, 17 November 1967, § 12.

863. In 1968, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Venezuela stated that it "had no difficulty in recognizing the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity".[981]

864. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of the SFRY stated that:

> 27. ... Yugoslavia, like many other countries, was most anxious to see all those responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity punished, without exception, and to see the adoption of an international convention which would reaffirm once again, the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity, ensuring that all States would acknowledge and respect that principle ...
> 28. Although the principle of the non-applicability of statutory limitation to prosecution and punishment for war crimes [and crimes] against humanity had been universally accepted since the end of the Second World War, some countries had not yet adapted their legislation to that principle ... His delegation ... considered that the adoption of a convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitation to the prosecution and punishment of those guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity was an urgent necessity and a duty.
> ...
> 34. In his delegation's view, there should be no particular difficulty in adopting the convention [on the non-applicability of statutory limitations to war crimes and crimes against humanity], for it would merely be a solemn reaffirmation of principles which, since the Second World War, had already become positive norms of international law and should therefore prompt all States to adapt their national legislation to positive international law.[982]

865. In 1993, in a letter to the UN Secretary-General concerning the establishment of the ICTY, the FRY stated that "war crimes ... are not subject to the statute of limitations".[983]

866. In 1967, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Zaire stated that it "welcomed with enthusiasm the principle of non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity".[984]

[981] Venezuela, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1568, 10 October 1968, § 4.
[982] SFRY, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1514, 14 November 1967, §§ 27–34.
[983] FRY, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Letter dated 17 May 1993 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/48/170*–S/25801*, 21 May 1993, p. 2.
[984] Zaire, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1518, 17 November 1967, § 1.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

867. In a resolution adopted in 1967, the UN General Assembly, noting "that none of the solemn declarations, instruments or conventions relating to prosecution and punishment for war crimes and crimes against humanity makes provision for a period of limitation", stated that:

> The application to war crimes and crimes against humanity of the rules of municipal law relating to the period of limitation for ordinary crimes is a matter of serious concern to world public opinion, since it prevents the prosecution and punishment of persons responsible for those crimes.[985]

The General Assembly recognised that "it is necessary and timely to affirm in international law, through a convention, the principle that there is no period of limitation for war crimes and crimes against humanity, and to secure its universal application" and recommended that "no legislative or other action be taken which may be prejudicial to the aims and purposes of a convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity".[986]

868. In a resolution adopted in 1969 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly invited States concerned "which had not yet signed or ratified the [1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity] to do so as soon as possible".[987]

869. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly welcomed "with satisfaction the fact that the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity entered into force on 11 November 1970" and requested States which had not yet become parties to this Convention "to do so as soon as possible".[988]

870. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly called upon all States which had not yet done so "to become as soon as possible parties to the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity".[989]

871. In 1973, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution on principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment

[985] UN General Assembly, Res. 2338 (XXII), 18 December 1967, preamble.
[986] UN General Assembly, Res. 2338 (XXII), 18 December 1967, preamble and § 5.
[987] UN General Assembly, Res. 2583 (XXIV), 15 December 1969, § 2.
[988] UN General Assembly, Res. 2712 (XXV), 15 December 1970, preamble and § 6.
[989] UN General Assembly, Res. 2840 (XXVI), 18 December 1971, § 3.

of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity in which it recalled its resolution 2583 (XXIV) of 1969 and in which it stated that:

> States shall not take any legislative or other measures which may be prejudicial to the international obligations they have assumed in regard to the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity.[990]

872. In a resolution adopted in 1966 on the question of punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN Economic and Social Council urged all States "to prevent the application of statutory limitation to war crimes and crimes against humanity".[991]

873. In a resolution adopted in 1965 on the question of punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN Commission on Human Rights considered that:

> The United Nations must contribute to the solution of the problems raised by war crimes and crimes against humanity, which are serious violations of the law of nations, and that it must, in particular, study possible ways and means of establishing the principle that there is no period of limitation for such crimes in international law.[992]

The Commission requested the UN Secretary-General "to undertake a study of the problems raised in international law by war crimes and crimes against humanity, and by priority a study of legal procedures to ensure that no period of limitation shall apply to such crimes".[993]

874. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the UN Commission on Human Rights noted "the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitation to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity of 26 November 1968".[994]

Other International Organisations

875. In a recommendation adopted in 1979, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe expressed "its keen disappointment at the fact that none of Council of Europe member states has ratified the [1974 European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes], and that it has been signed only by France" and recommended that the Committee of Ministers:

[990] UN General Assembly, Res. 3074 (XXVIII), 3 December 1973, preamble and § 8.
[991] ECOSOC, Res. 1158 (XLI), 5 August 1966, § 1.
[992] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 3 (XXI), 9 April 1965, preamble.
[993] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 3 (XXI), 9 April 1965, § 2.
[994] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/66, 25 April 2001, preamble.

i. invite member governments to sign and ratify the European Convention on the non-applicability of statutory limitation to crimes against humanity and war crimes of 1974;
ii. invite member governments to take whatever steps may be necessary to ensure that neither the application of statutory limitation nor the implementation of any other legal measures should enable crimes against humanity and other very serious crimes to escape punishment.[995]

876. In a resolution adopted in 1984 on enforced disappearances, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called upon the governments of the member States "to support the preparation and adoption by the United Nations of a declaration setting forth the following principles: . . . enforced disappearance is a crime against humanity which . . . is not subject to limitation".[996]

877. In a recommendation adopted in 1993 on establishing an international court to try serious violations of international humanitarian law, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe recommended that the Committee of Ministers "invite member states which have not yet done so to sign and ratify the 1974 European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitation to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes".[997]

878. In 1979, in his presentation of a report on the statutory limitations of war crimes and crimes against humanity prepared by the Legal Affairs Committee of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe's, the Rapporteur stated that:

We studied the legislation in the member states [with regard to statutory limitation applying to war crimes and crimes against humanity] and have come to certain conclusions. There is no statutory limitation of war crimes, including World War II crimes, and crimes against humanity, in Austria, Denmark, France, Ireland, Italy, Liechtenstein, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. In the Federal Republic of Germany the statutory limitation period for Second World War crimes will expire on 31 December 1979, but there will be no statutory limitation for future crimes.

In Luxembourg, the situation is reverse. There is statutory limitation in Belgium, Greece, Malta, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Turkey. But in Switzerland there is a proposal for the abolition of this limitation.[998]

The Rapporteur further stated that:

We ask that the statutory limitation be stopped. Sign and ratify the [1974 European Convention on the Non-applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes [995] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 855 on statutory limitation of war crimes and crimes against humanity, 2 February 1979, §§ 4 and 10(i) and (ii).

[996] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 828 on enforced disappearances, 26 September 1984, § 13(a)(i)(2).
[997] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1218 (1993) on establishing an international court to try serious violations of international humanitarian law, 27 September 1993, § 6(iii).
[998] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Legal Affairs Committee, Rapporteur, Report on the statutory limitation of war crimes and crimes against humanity, 30th Ordinary Session, Twenty-fifth Sitting, 2 February 1979, Official Report of Debates, p. 959.

against Humanity and War Crimes], take whatever steps may be necessary to ensure that neither the application of statutory limitation nor the implementation of any other legal measures should enable crimes against humanity and other very serious crimes to escape punishment.[999]

879. In 1993, a motion for a recommendation on the systematic gang rape of women and children on the territory of the former Yugoslavia presented by 37 members of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe contained the following part:

The [Parliamentary] Assembly . . . recommends that the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe and the governments of the member states: . . . re-affirm without delay that these violations of the integrity and dignity of women and children are unquestionably war crimes and even crimes against humanity and are not, therefore, subject to limitation.[1000]

International Conferences

880. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

881. In its judgement in the Tadić case in 1997, the ICTY referred to the judgements of the French courts in the Barbie case and stated that:

641. In this case the Chambre d'accusation of the Court of Appeal of Lyons ordered that an indictment for crimes against humanity be issued against Klaus Barbie, head of the Gestapo of Lyons during the Second World War, but only for "persecutions against innocent Jews", and held that prosecution was barred by the statute of limitations for crimes committed by Barbie against combatants who were members of the Resistance or whom Barbie thought were members of the Resistance, even if they were Jewish, because these acts could only constitute war crimes and not crimes against humanity . . .
642. While instructive, it should be noted that the court [of Cassation] in the Barbie case was applying national legislation that declared crimes against humanity not subject to statutory limitation, although the national legislation defined crimes against humanity by reference to the United Nations resolution of 13 February 1946, which referred back to the Nürnberg Charter (law of 26 December 1964); and the fact that a crime against humanity is an international crime was relied upon to deny the accused's appeal on the bases of disguised extradition and an elapsed statute of limitations.[1001]

[999] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Legal Affairs Committee, Rapporteur, Report on the statutory limitation of war crimes and crimes against humanity, 30th Ordinary Session, Twenty-fifth Sitting, 2 February 1979, Official Report of Debates, p. 960.
[1000] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Motion for a Recommendation on the systematic gang rape of women and children on the territory of the former Yugoslavia, Doc. 6770, Forty-fourth Ordinary Session, Fifth Part, Documents, Vol. VIII, 5 February 1993, § 3(i). (The motion was referred to the Committee on Legal Affairs and Human Rights.)
[1001] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement, 7 May 1997, §§ 641–642.

882. In its admissibility decision in X v. FRG in 1976 concerning an application relative to the right to be tried for crimes committed during the Second World War within a reasonable time in criminal matters, the ECiHR stated that:

> The Commission had regard to the fact that the rules of prescription do not apply to war crimes and that the international community requires the competent authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany to investigate and prosecute these crimes despite the difficulties encountered by reason of the long time that has elapsed since the commission of the acts concerned.
>
> In this situation the Commission considers that the criteria determining reasonableness of the length of ordinary criminal proceedings are not applicable to proceedings concerning war crimes.[1002]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

883. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

884. No practice was found.

F. International Cooperation in Criminal Proceedings

Cooperation between States

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

885. Under Article 1(1) of the 1959 European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, the parties undertake:

> to afford each other, in accordance with the provisions of this Convention, the widest measure of mutual assistance in proceedings in respect of offences the punishment of which, at the time of the request for assistance, falls within the jurisdiction of the judicial authorities of the requesting Party.

According to Article 1(2), the Convention does not apply, however, to "arrests, the enforcement of verdicts or offences under military law which are not offences under ordinary criminal law".

886. Article 88(1) AP I provides that "the High Contracting Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connexion with criminal proceedings brought in respect of grave breaches of the Conventions or of this Protocol". Article 88 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1003]

[1002] ECiHR, X v. FRG, Decision, 6 July 1976, § 1.
[1003] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.45, 30 May 1977, p. 309.

887. Article 10 of the 1977 OAU Convention against Mercenarism provides that "the contracting States shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with the investigation and criminal proceedings brought in respect of the offence and other acts connected with the activities of the offender".

888. Article 13 of the 1989 UN Mercenary Convention provides that:

> States Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with criminal proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in the present Convention, including the supply of all evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings. The law of the State whose assistance is requested shall apply in all cases.
>
> The provisions of paragraph 1 of this article shall not affect obligations concerning mutual judicial assistance embodied in any other treaty.

889. Article 1 of the 1989 US-Soviet Memorandum of Understanding on the Pursuit of Nazi War Criminals provides that the Office of the Procurator General of the USSR and the US Department of Justice "agree to provide legal assistance on a reciprocal basis in the investigation of individuals who are suspected of having committed Nazi war crimes or of having assisted in the commission of such crimes".

890. Article 19 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention concerning "Mutual legal assistance", which, according to its Article 22(1), also applies to armed conflicts not of an international character, provides that:

> 1. Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with investigations or criminal or extradition proceedings brought in respect of the offences set forth in Article 15, including assistance in obtaining evidence at their disposal necessary for the proceedings.
> 2. Parties shall carry out their obligations under paragraph 1 in conformity with any treaties or other arrangements on mutual legal assistance that may exist between them. In the absence of such treaties or arrangements, Parties shall afford one another assistance in accordance with their domestic law.

Other Instruments

891. In paragraphs 11 and 12 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY, the parties agreed to institute, with the cooperation of the ICRC, a confidential enquiry system regarding allegations of violations of IHL.

892. Article 4 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law states that "violations of international ... humanitarian law norms that constitute crimes under international law carry the duty to ... cooperate with and assist States ... in the investigation and prosecution of these violations".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

893. Argentina's Law of War Manual, referring to Article 88 AP I, states that "the contracting parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance in connection with criminal proceedings brought in respect of grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions and of [AP I]".[1004]

894. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that:

> The States Signatory to the [1949 Geneva] Conventions have engaged to take a series of measures in order to promote their respect. These measures can be summarized as follows:
>
> ...
>
> 3) search for, identification and prosecution before the own courts of the authors of grave breaches, whatever their nationality may be, or extradition of these authors to the State which requests for it, within the limits of the legislation in force.[1005]

895. Hungary's Military Manual states that "the judicial procedure [in case of breaches or violations of IHL] also comprises: assistance between belligerent parties".[1006]

896. Italy's IHL Manual notes that "international cooperation for the search, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons who have committed [war crimes] is established".[1007]

897. South Korea's Operational Law Manual provides that each party to the Geneva Conventions shall cooperate to extradite persons who have committed grave breaches of IHL.[1008]

898. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "in general, States are obliged to provide judicial assistance to each other to the maximum extent possible with respect to penal procedures concerning grave breaches".[1009]

899. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "AP I Art. 88 requires the parties to assist one another in connection with grave breaches, including cooperation in matters of extradition".[1010]

900. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "States shall provide each other with the greatest possible mutual assistance for the penal repression of violations, at national and international level".[1011]

901. Sweden's IHL Manual notes that AP I "states that the contracting parties shall to the greatest extent possible assist each other in connection with

[1004] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.08.
[1005] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55, § 3(3).
[1006] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 91
[1007] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 86.
[1008] South Korea, Operational Law Manual (1996), p. 193, § 4.
[1009] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-8.
[1010] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1711.4, footnote 76.
[1011] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(4).

penal procedures instituted as a consequence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions or [AP I]".[1012]

National Legislation

902. Argentina's Law on International Cooperation on Criminal Matters stipulates that "Argentina shall do its utmost to assist in the investigation, conviction and punishment" of crimes corresponding to the jurisdiction of any State requesting such assistance, and shall act "most diligently" in such procedures. As regards the investigation and conviction of such crimes, the law provides that "assistance shall be provided even if the act in question is not a crime in Argentina", although under such circumstances there would be some exceptions to the types of assistance provided.[1013]

903. According to Germany's Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended, "the legal assistance in criminal matters with foreign countries is based on this law". However, the Law also states that "provisions of international agreements have priority insofar as they have become directly applicable domestic law".[1014]

904. Portugal's Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended applies to the following forms of international cooperation in criminal matters: extradition; transfer of proceedings in criminal matters; enforcement of criminal judgements; transfer of persons sentenced to any punishment, or measure, involving deprivation of liberty; supervision of conditionally sentenced or conditionally released persons; and mutual legal assistance in criminal matters.[1015] These "shall apply, as appropriate, to the cooperation between Portugal and any international judicial entities established within the framework of treaties or conventions that bind the Portuguese State".[1016]

National Case-law

905. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

906. In 1971, the French delegation explained its abstention in the vote on UN General Assembly Resolution 2840 (XXVI) stating that it:

abstained in the vote on the draft resolution because we consider that all the work of the United Nations in connexion with this matter is vitiated by the faulty definition of a number of crimes contained in the Convention on the Non-Applicability

[1012] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 97.
[1013] Argentina, Law on International Cooperation on Criminal Matters (1997), Articles 1 and 67.
[1014] Germany, Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended (1982), Section 1.
[1015] Portugal, Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended (1999), Article 1(1).
[1016] Portugal, Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended (1999), Article 1(2).

of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, to which France is not a party. Indeed this definition is based on theoretical and practical considerations which are too imprecise for a convention of a penal nature and which are at any rate contrary to the principles of the French Penal Code.[1017]

907. In 1981, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly in relation to the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the GDR stated that "it was necessary to establish a universal duty to prosecute offences, which included the obligation of States to co-operate in combating international offences".[1018]

908. In 1979, in a diplomatic note addressed to the USSR embassy, the US Department of State stated that:

> The Department of State requests the cooperation of the Embassy of the USSR in bringing to the attention of the appropriate officials and organs the essential need for . . . witnesses to testify in the prosecution of war crimes cases in the United States. Without firm assurances on the availability of witnesses the United States Government will be unable to continue these prosecutions. In many cases, therefore, individuals accused of committing serious crimes during 1941–1945 will be allowed to remain free without a proper trial.
>
> We believe that it is in the mutual best interest of the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to cooperate to ensure that this result is avoided and that justice is done in these cases.[1019]

909. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State, referring to Articles 85–89 AP I, affirmed that "we support the principle that the appropriate authorities . . . make good faith efforts to cooperate with one another".[1020]

910. In 1989, a study prepared by the Deputy Director of the US Office of Special Investigations summarized the Office's assistance in investigations involving three Second World War Nazi war criminals outside the US. The study reported that:

> At the time of [Klaus Barbie's] extradition [from Bolivia to France], OSI [Office of Special Investigations] was asked by Attorney General William French Smith to investigate and report on allegations concerning Barbie's post-war relationship [1017] France, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/PV.2025, 18 December 1971, § 102.

[1018] GDR, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/36/SR.60, 26 November 1981, § 26.

[1019] US, Department of State, Note addressed to the USSR Embassy, 21 March 1979, Department of State File No. P79 0046–0132, reprinted in Marian Lloyd Nash, Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1979, US Department of State Publication 9374, Washington, D.C., 1983, pp. 883–884.

[1020] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 428.

with American military intelligence and the latter's efforts to prevent his arrest by French authorities . . .

In 1985, OSI strongly supported an effort with West German and Israeli authorities to locate [Josef] Mengele's whereabouts . . .

Prompted by a request from the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, OSI undertook a formal inquiry into the relationship between the United States government and convicted criminal Robert Jan Verbelen.[1021]

911. In 1992, a report on Iraqi war crimes (Desert Shield/Desert Storm) prepared under the auspices of the US Secretary of the Army noted that "the obligation to investigate violations of the law of war committed against allied personnel is subject to the consent of the ally in question, particularly if the alleged violations occurred within the territory of the ally".[1022] As regards alleged Iraqi war crimes, the report noted that to carry out US directives dealing with the investigation and prosecution of war crimes:

An interagency meeting was held on 30 August 1990 . . . [The participants] understood that any formal war crimes investigation would depend upon authorization by appropriate authority and, depending on the scope of the investigation, might also require the consent of the host nation . . .

Detachments selected for mobilization were the 199th Judge Advocate Detachment . . . and the 208th Judge Advocate Detachment . . . Elements of the 199th arrived in Kuwait City on 1 March 1991, and upon arrival, reestablished contact with the Kuwaiti Ministry of Justice. Then, with the consent of the Ministry, they contacted members of Kuwaiti resistance groups . . . The Ministry of Justice was also investigating Iraqi actions during the occupation, To avoid duplicate effort, and in the spirit of cooperation, the mission of the 199th evolved into establishing the nature and extent of Iraqi offences rather than building cases for prosecution. One of the goals was to accumulate and organize the evidence in a fashion that would facilitate preparation of criminal cases should prosecution of war criminals at a later date become an option.[1023]

912. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that "there is a general obligation to try [persons suspected of war crimes other than members of its own armed forces] or to cooperate with another state willing to try them in accordance with international fair trial standards".[1024] It also states that "the United States appears to recognize a general obligation on all states to assist each other in the investigation and prosecution of war crimes".[1025]

[1021] US, Office of Special Investigations, Deputy Director, Study on "The Purpose and History of the Office of Special Investigations", 1989, Department of State File Nos. P90 0015–0882, 0932/0935, reprinted in Marian Nash (Leich), Cumulative Digest of the United States Practice in International Law, 1981–1988, US Department of State Publication 10120, Washington, D.C., 1993–1995, pp. 1408–1409.

[1022] US, Secretary of the Army, Report on Iraqi war crimes (Desert Shield/Desert Storm), unclassified version, 8 January 1992, p. 4.

[1023] US, Secretary of the Army, Report on Iraqi war crimes (Desert Shield/Desert Storm), unclassified version, 8 January 1992, pp. 4–8.

[1024] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.4.

[1025] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 6.10.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

913. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on hostage-taking and abduction, the UN Security Council, considering that "the taking of hostages and abduction are offences of grave concern to all States and serious violations of international humanitarian law", urged:

> the further development of international co-operation among States in devising and adopting effective measures which are in accordance with the rules of international law to facilitate the prevention, prosecution and punishment of all acts of hostage-taking and abduction as manifestations of terrorism.[1026]

914. In 1998, in a statement by its President concerning the conflict in the DRC, the UN Security Council urged member States "to cooperate with the Governments of the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Rwanda in the investigation and prosecution of [any persons found to have been involved in . . . massacres, atrocities and violations of international humanitarian law]".[1027]

915. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly called upon all the States concerned "to intensify their co-operation in the collection and exchange of information which will contribute to the detection, arrest, extradition, trial and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity".[1028]

916. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly stated that it was "firmly convinced of the need for international co-operation in the thorough investigation of war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . and in bringing about the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of all war criminals and persons guilty of crimes against humanity who have not yet been brought to trial or punished".[1029] The General Assembly went on to state that it:

> 2. Further urges all States to co-operate in particular in the collection and exchange of information which will contribute to the detection, arrest, extradition, trial and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity.
> . . .
> 4. Affirms that refusal by States to co-operate in the arrest, extradition, trial and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity is contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and to generally recognized norms of international law.[1030] [emphasis in original]

[1026] UN Security Council, Res. 683, 31 July 1989, preamble and § 6.
[1027] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/20, 13 July 1998, p. 2.
[1028] UN General Assembly, Res. 2712 (XXV), 15 December 1970, § 4.
[1029] UN General Assembly, Res. 2840 (XXVI), 18 December 1971, preamble.
[1030] UN General Assembly, Res. 2840 (XXVI), 18 December 1971, §§ 2 and 4.

917. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly requested the UN Commission on Human Rights "to submit to the General Assembly . . . draft principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity".[1031]

918. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly declared that:

> The United Nations, in pursuance of the principles and purposes set forth in the Charter concerning the promotion of co-operation between peoples and the maintenance of international peace and security, proclaims the following principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity:
>
> . . .
>
> 3. States shall co-operate with each other on a bilateral and multilateral basis with a view to halting and preventing war crimes and crimes against humanity, and shall take the domestic and international measures necessary for that purpose.
> 4. States shall assist each other in detecting, arresting and bringing to trial persons suspected of having committed such crimes and, if they are found guilty, in punishing them.
>
> . . .
>
> 6. States shall co-operate with each other in the collection of information and evidence which would help to bring to trial [persons against whom there is evidence that they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity] and shall exchange such information.[1032]

919. In a resolution adopted in 1965 on the question of punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN Commission on Human Rights requested ECOSOC:

> to urge all States to continue their efforts to ensure that, in accordance with international law and national laws, the criminals responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity are traced, apprehended and equitably punished by the competent courts. For this purpose they should co-operate, in particular, by making available any documents in their possession, relating to such crimes.[1033]

920. In a resolution adopted in 1988 on prosecution and punishment of all war criminals and persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged:

[1031] UN General Assembly, Res. 3020 (XXVII), 18 December 1972, § 3.
[1032] UN General Assembly, Res. 3074 (XXVIII), 3 December 1973, preamble and §§ 3–6.
[1033] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 3 (XXI), 9 April 1965, § 1(a).

all States to take the necessary measures, in accordance with their national constitutional systems, to ensure full international co-operation for the purpose of securing, preferably in the place where they committed their deeds, the prosecution and just punishment of all those who have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity.[1034]

921. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights stated that:

The Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights . . .

Convinced that maximum international cooperation among States is needed in order to ensure a thorough investigation of war crimes and crimes against humanity, as well as to bring to trial their perpetrators . . .

1. Affirms that within the framework of international cooperation in the search for, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the highest priority should be given, independently of the circumstances in which these violations are committed, to legal proceedings against all individuals responsible for such crimes, including former heads of State or Government whose exile serves as a pretext for their impunity;
2. Urges all States to cooperate in order to search for, arrest, extradite, bring to trial and punish persons found guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity;
3. Reaffirms the principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity recorded in General Assembly resolution 3074 (XXVIII) of 3 December 1973 . . .
4. Affirms that States have an obligation to cooperate in the arrest, extradition, trial and punishment of persons found guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including former heads of State or Government, keeping in mind the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and generally recognized norms of international law.[1035]

922. In 2001, in a report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the UN Secretary-General pointed out that "consistent enforcement depends primarily on the commitment and cooperation of national jurisdictions. The prosecution of individuals is, first and foremost, a responsibility of the State concerned."[1036]

Other International Organisations

923. In a recommendation adopted in 1979 on statutory limitation of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe recommended that the Committee of Ministers:

[1034] UN, Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1988/47, 8 March 1988.
[1035] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/22, 16 August 2001, preamble and §§ 1–4
[1036] UN Secretary-General, Report on the protection of civilians in armed conflict, UN Doc. S/2001/331, 30 March 2001, § 12.

iii. invite member governments to improve their co-operation, co-ordination and exchange of information for the purpose of prosecuting the perpetrators of [crimes against humanity and war crimes] by:

a. providing rapidly all relevant information on these crimes to the competent authorities of the member states concerned;
b. providing facilities for rapid direct contacts between the authorities responsible for the search for and prosecution of the perpetrators of these crimes in member states;
c. studying further possibilities for co-operation and co-ordination in respect of these crimes;
d. preparing a special wanted persons' list in respect of these crimes;
e. considering the possibility of appointing a special public prosecutor in charge of the prosecution of these crimes.[1037]

924. In 1979, during his presentation of a report by the Legal Affairs Committee on the statutory limitation of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stated that "we beg member governments to improve their co-operation, their co-ordination and exchange of information for the purpose of prosecuting the perpetrators of [crimes against humanity and other very serious crimes]".[1038]

International Conferences

925. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

926. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

927. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

The [High Contracting] Parties shall afford one another the greatest measure of assistance with penal proceedings relative to grave breaches of the law of war.

The [High Contracting] Parties shall benefit by the same assistance from neutral States.[1039]

VI. Other Practice

928. No practice was found.

[1037] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 855, 2 February 1979, § 10(iii).
[1038] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Legal Affairs Committee, Rapporteur, Report on the statutory limitation of war crimes and crimes against humanity, 30th Ordinary Session, Twenty-fifth Sitting, 2 February 1979, Official Report of Debates, p. 960.
[1039] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 783–784.

Extradition

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

929. Article 49, second paragraph, GC I, Article 50, second paragraph, GC II, Article 129, second paragraph, GC III and Article 146, second paragraph, GC IV provide that:

> Each High Contracting Party shall be under the obligation to search for persons alleged to have committed, or to have ordered to be committed, such grave breaches, and shall bring such persons, regardless of their nationality, before its own courts. It may also, if it prefers, and in accordance with the provisions of its own legislation, hand such persons over for trial to another High Contracting Party concerned, provided such High Contracting Party has made out a prima facie case.

930. Under Article 1 of the 1957 European Convention on Extradition, the parties undertake:

> to surrender to each other, subject to the provisions and conditions laid down in this Convention, all persons against whom the competent authorities of the requesting Party are proceeding for an offence or who are wanted by the said authorities for the carrying out of a sentence or detention order.

931. Article 2(1) of the 1957 European Convention on Extradition provides that "extradition shall be granted in respect of offences punishable under the laws of the requesting Party and of the requested Party by deprivation of liberty or under a detention order for a maximum period of at least one year or by a more severe penalty".

932. According to Article 4 of the 1957 European Convention on Extradition, "extradition for offences under military law which are not offences under ordinary criminal law is excluded from the application of this Convention".

933. Article 11 of the 1957 European Convention on Extradition provides for the possibility to refuse extradition if the offence for which it is requested is punishable by death under the law of the requesting party.

934. Article 3 of the 1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity provides that:

> The States Parties to the present Convention undertake to adopt all necessary domestic measures, legislative or otherwise, with a view to making possible the extradition in accordance with international law, of the persons referred to in Article 2 of this Convention [i.e. representatives of the State authority and private individuals who, as principals or accomplices, participate in or who directly incite others to the commission of war crimes or crimes against humanity, or who conspire to commit them, irrespective of the degree of completion, and representatives of the State authority who tolerate their commission].

935. Article 78 of draft AP I, entitled "Extradition", submitted by the ICRC to the CDDH provided that:

Grave breaches of the Conventions or of the present Protocol, whatever the motives for which they were committed, shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between the High Contracting Parties. The High Contracting Parties undertake to include the said grave breaches as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.

If a High Contracting Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another High Contracting Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the Conventions and the present Protocol shall be considered as the legal basis for extradition in respect of the said grave breaches. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested High Contracting Party.

High Contracting Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize the said grave breaches as extraditable offences between themselves subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested High Contracting Party.[1040]

After several proposals of amendment, paragraph 1 of Article 78 was rejected in Committee I of the CDDH by 27 votes in favour, 7 against and 39 abstentions; paragraph 2 was rejected by 41 votes in favour, one against and 29 abstentions; Article 78 was consequently rejected as a whole.[1041]

936. Article 88(2) AP I provides that:

Subject to the rights and obligations established in the [1949 Geneva] Conventions and in Article 85, paragraph 1 of this Protocol, and when circumstances permit, the High Contracting Parties shall co-operate in the matter of extradition. They shall give due consideration to the request of the State in whose territory the alleged offence has occurred.

937. Upon accession to AP I, China stated that "at present [i.e. in 1983], Chinese legislation has no provisions concerning extradition, and deals with this matter on a case-by-case basis. For this reason China does not accept the stipulations of Article 88, paragraph 2, of Protocol I".[1042]

938. Article 7 of the 1977 OAU Convention against Mercenarism states that:

1. A request for extradition cannot be rejected, unless the State from which it is sought undertakes to prosecute the offender in accordance with the provisions of Article Five of the present Convention.
2. When a national is the subject of the request for extradition, the State from which it is sought must, if it refuses, undertake prosecution of the offence committed.
3. If, in accordance with sections 1 and 2 of this Article, prosecution is undertaken, the State from which extradition is sought will notify the outcome of such prosecution to the state seeking extradition and to any other interested Member State of the Organization of African Unity.

[1040] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. I, Part Three, Draft Additional Protocols, June 1973, p. 25.
[1041] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. IX, CDDH/I/SR.70, 28 April 1977, pp. 396–397, § 54.
[1042] China, Reservation made upon accession to AP I, 14 September 1983.

4. A state will be regarded as an interested party for the outcome of a prosecution as defined in section 3 of this Article if the offence has some connection with its territory or militates against its interests.

939. Article 3 of the 1978 Second Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Extradition provides that extradition may be refused, under certain conditions, in case it is requested for the purpose of carrying out a sentence or detention order imposed by a decision rendered against a person in absentia.
940. Article 4 of the 1978 Second Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Extradition provides that "extradition shall not be granted for an offence in respect of which an amnesty has been declared in the requested State and which that State had competence to prosecute under its own criminal law".
941. Article 3(1) of the 1984 Convention against Torture states that "no State Party shall expel, return ("refouler") or extradite a person to another State where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be in danger of being subjected to torture".
942. Article 7(1) of the 1984 Convention against Torture provides that:

The State Party in the territory under whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in article 4 is found shall in the cases contemplated in article 5, if it does not extradite him, submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution.

943. Article 15 of the 1989 UN Mercenary Convention provides that:

1. The offences set forth in articles 2, 3 and 4 of the present Convention shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties. States Parties undertake to include such offences as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.
2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may at its option consider the present Convention as the legal basis for extradition in respect of those offences. Extradition shall be subject to the other conditions provided by the law of the requested State.
3. States Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize those offences as extraditable offences between themselves, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested State.
4. The offences shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territories of the State required to establish their jurisdiction in accordance with article 9 of the present Convention.

944. Article 1 of the 1997 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US provides that "the Parties agree to extradite to each other, pursuant to the provisions of this Treaty, persons whom the authorities in the Requesting State have charged with or found guilty of an extraditable offense".

945. Article 2 of the 1997 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US provides that:

1. An offense shall be an extraditable offense if it is punishable under the laws in both Parties by deprivation of liberty for a maximum period of more than one year or by a more severe penalty . . .
. . .
4. In accordance with the provisions of this Treaty, extradition shall be granted for offenses committed in whole or in part within the Requesting State's territory, which, for the purposes of this Article, includes all places subject to that State's criminal jurisdiction. Extradition shall also be granted for offenses committed outside the territory of the Requesting State if:
   (a) the act or acts that constitute the offense have effects in the territory of the Requesting State; or
   (b) the laws in the Requested State provide for punishment of an offense committed outside its territory in similar circumstances.

946. Article 7 of the 1997 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US provides that "extradition shall not be denied on the ground that the prosecution or the penalty would be barred under the statute of limitations in the Requested State".

947. Article 18 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention, which, according to its Article 22(1), also applies to armed conflicts not of an international character, provides that:

1. The offences set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs 1 (a) to (c) shall be deemed to be included as extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between any of the Parties before the entry into force of this Protocol. Parties undertake to include such offences in every extradition treaty to be subsequently concluded between them.
2. When a Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another Party with which it has no extradition treaty, the requested Party may, at its option, consider the present Protocol as the legal basis for extradition in respect of offences as set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs 1 (a) to (c).
3. Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognise the offences set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs 1 (a) to (c) as extraditable offences between them, subject to the conditions provided by the law of the requested Party.
4. If necessary, offences set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs 1 (a) to (c) shall be treated, for the purposes of extradition between Parties, as if they had been committed not only in the place in which they occurred but also in the territory of the Parties that have established jurisdiction in accordance with Article 16 paragraph 1.

Other Instruments

948. Paragraph 18 of the 1989 Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions provides that:

Governments shall either bring . . . persons [identified by the investigation as having participated in extra-legal, arbitrary or summary executions] to justice or cooperate to extradite any such persons to other countries wishing to exercise jurisdiction. This principle shall apply irrespectively of who and where the perpetrators or the victims are, their nationalities or where the offence was committed.

949. Article 6 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, dealing with the "Obligation to try or extradite", provides that:

1. A State in whose territory an individual alleged to have committed a crime against the peace and security of mankind is present shall either try or extradite him.
2. If extradition is requested by several States, special consideration shall be given to the request of the State in whose territory the crime was committed.
3. The provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 do not prejudge the establishment and the jurisdiction of an international criminal court.

950. Article 9 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Obligation to extradite or prosecute", provides that:

Without prejudice to the jurisdiction of an international criminal court, the State Party in the territory of which an individual alleged to have committed a crime set out in articles 17, 18, 19 or 20 [crime of genocide, crimes against humanity, crimes against United Nations and associated personnel, war crimes] is found shall extradite or prosecute that individual.

951. Article 10 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Extradition of alleged offenders", provides that:

1. To the extent that the crimes set out in articles 17, 18, 19 and 20 [crime of genocide, crimes against humanity, crimes against United Nations and associated personnel, war crimes] are not extraditable offences in any extradition treaty existing between States Parties, they shall be deemed to be included as such therein. States Parties undertake to include those crimes as extraditable offences in every extradition treaty to be concluded between them.
2. If a State Party which makes extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty receives a request for extradition from another State Party with which it has no extradition treaty, it may at its option consider the present Code as the legal basis for extradition in respect of those crimes. Extradition shall be subject to the conditions provided in the law of the requested State.
3. State Parties which do not make extradition conditional on the existence of a treaty shall recognize those crimes as extraditable offences between themselves subject to the conditions provided in the law of the requested State.
4. Each of those crimes shall be treated, for the purpose of extradition between States Parties, as if it had been committed not only in the place in which it occurred but also in the territory of any other State Party.

952. Article 5 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law provides that "States shall incorporate within their domestic law . . . appropriate legislation to facilitate extradition or surrender of offenders to other States and to international judicial bodies".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

953. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that:

> The States Signatory to the [1949 Geneva] Conventions have engaged to take a series of measures in order to promote their respect. These measures can be summarized as follows:
>
> . . .
>
> 3) search for, identification and prosecution before the own courts of the authors of grave breaches, whatever their nationality may be, or extradition of these authors to the State which requests for it, within the limits of the legislation in force.[1043]

954. Italy's IHL Manual notes that "international cooperation for the search, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons who have committed [war crimes] is established".[1044]

955. South Korea's Operational Law Manual provides that each party to the Geneva Conventions shall cooperate to extradite persons who have committed grave breaches of IHL.[1045]

956. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "in general, States . . . must cooperate as much as possible with respect to the extradition of war criminals".[1046]

957. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "AP I Art. 88 requires the parties to assist one another in connection with grave breaches, including cooperation in matters of extradition".[1047]

958. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that:

> The States have the obligation to search for persons accused of having committed, or having ordered to be committed, grave breaches, being obliged to make them appear before their own tribunals, regardless of their nationality. They can also agree to the extradition of those persons in order for them to be judged by other States, in accordance with the legal obligations which regulate the said extradition.[1048]

The manual adds that "States shall provide each other with the greatest possible mutual assistance for the penal repression of violations, at national and international level. Such cooperation shall also be accorded in extradition matters."[1049]

959. Sweden's IHL Manual notes that:

[1043] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55, § 3(3).
[1044] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 86.
[1045] South Korea, Operational Law Manual (1996), p. 193, § 4.
[1046] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-8.
[1047] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1711.4, footnote 76.
[1048] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1).
[1049] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(4).

Additional Protocol I . . . states that the contracting parties shall to the greatest extent possible assist each other in connection with penal procedures instituted as a consequence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions or the Protocol. The States shall also cooperate in extradition cases . . .

In the extradition request the government can refer to the article in Additional Protocol I concerning mutual assistance in criminal proceedings (AP I, Art. 88:2), according to which due consideration shall be given to a request for extradition from the state in whose territory the alleged offence has occurred.[1050]

National Legislation

960. Armenia's Penal Code provides that:

In accordance with an international treaty of the Republic of Armenia, the foreign citizens and stateless persons who committed a crime outside the territory of the Republic of Armenia and who find themselves in the Republic of Armenia can be extradited to a foreign State, for criminal liability or to serve a sentence.[1051]

961. Germany's Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended provides that "a foreign person who is searched for or convicted by a foreign State for an offence which is punishable in that State, can, on the request of a competent authority of that State, . . . be extradited to that State".[1052]

962. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that:

The restriction on granting extradition contained in section 12 of the Extradition Act, 1965 [which states that "extradition shall not be granted for offences under military law which are not offences under ordinary criminal law"], does not apply in the case of an offence involving a grave or minor breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or Protocol I or a minor breach of Protocol II.[1053]

963. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended provides that:

Foreigners who have committed a crime shall be extradited for committing offences in accordance with corresponding international and interstate agreements, or, if there are no such agreements, in accordance with the laws of the Republic of Lithuania.

. . .

Foreign nationals shall not be extradited if the acts committed by them are not considered criminal under the criminal laws of the Republic of Lithuania.

Persons shall not be . . . extradited to foreign countries for committing acts which have been ground for granting asylum in the Republic of Lithuania.[1054]

964. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches states that, under certain conditions,

[1050] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 97.
[1051] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 16(2).
[1052] Germany, Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended (1982), Section 2(1).
[1053] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 11.
[1054] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 7.

Luxembourg can hand over to governments of States parties to the [1949 Geneva Conventions] every foreign person being prosecuted or convicted in these States for an offence provided for in the Geneva Conventions and in Article 1 of this law, provided that sufficient charges are held against [him or her] and that the statutes of limitation for the public prosecution or for the sentencing have not yet been reached under Luxembourg's law.[1055]

965. Under the Act on the Surrender of Persons Suspected of War Crimes as amended of the Netherlands, individuals can be surrendered to another power for trial if they are suspected of having committed one of the crimes defined in Articles 3 (genocide), 5 to 8 (war crimes committed in an international or a non-international armed conflict, and torture) and, in so far as it is connected with the offences referred to in those articles, Article 9 of the International Crimes Act.[1056]

966. Portugal's Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended provides that:

1. Extradition may be granted only for the purpose either of instituting criminal proceedings or of executing a sanction or measure involving deprivation of liberty, for an offence that the courts of the requesting State have jurisdiction to try.
2. For any such purpose, surrender of a person shall be possible only in respect of offences, including attempted offences, that are punishable under both the Portuguese law and the law of the requesting State by a sanction or measure involving deprivation of liberty for a maximum period of at least one year . . .[1057]

967. The US Military Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act, under a provision entitled "Delivery to authorities of foreign countries", provides that:

(a) Any person designated and authorized . . . may deliver a person described in section 3261(a) ["whoever engages in conduct outside the United States that would constitute an offence punishable by imprisonment for more that 1 year if the conduct had been engaged in within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States – (1) while employed by or accompanying the Armed Forces outside the United States; or (2) while a member of the Armed Forces"] to the appropriate authorities of a foreign country in which such person is alleged to have violated section 3261(a) if

(1) appropriate authorities of that country request the delivery of the person to such country for trial for such conduct as an offence under the laws of that country; and
(2) the delivery of such person to that country is authorized by a treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is a party.[1058]

[1055] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 11.
[1056] Netherlands, Act on the Surrender of Persons Suspected of War Crimes as amended (1954), Article 1.
[1057] Portugal, Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended (1999), Article 31.
[1058] US, Military Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act (2000), § 3263.

968. Zimbabwe's Extradition Act provides that:

> (1) Subject to this Act, a person may be arrested, detained and extradited from Zimbabwe to a designated country . . . for an offence in respect of which in the designated country he is accused or has been convicted and is required to be sentenced or to undergo punishment, whether the offence was committed before or after the declaration of the country concerned as a designated country.
> (2) This part shall apply to any offence which –
> (a) is punishable in the law of the designated country concerned by imprisonment for a period of twelve months or by any more severe punishment; and
> (b) would constitute an offence punishable in Zimbabwe if the act or omission constituting the offence took place in Zimbabwe or, in the case of an extraterritorial offence, in corresponding circumstances outside Zimbabwe.[1059]

National Case-law

969. In the Bohne case in 1966, in which extradition was requested for crimes related to the execution of mentally ill patients during Germany's Nazi regime, Argentina's Supreme Court of Justice emphasised that it was "a duty under international law to provide mutual support in the pursuit of criminals that represent a danger to all". It added that the extradition process was founded on the common interest of all States for offenders to be tried, and possibly punished, "by the country whose jurisdiction had cognisance of the criminal acts concerned".[1060]

970. In the Schwammberger case in 1989 concerning a request for extradition by the FRG, Argentina's Cámara Federal de La Plata referred to the prosecution and punishment of the major war criminals. The public prosecutor referred to the lawfulness of an extradition for an act committed outside the territory of the requesting State. The Court, invoking the various commitments made at the international level regarding the handing over of individuals accused of war crimes, rejected the request of the defendant to be tried by Argentine courts, an option provided by Argentine law, and affirmed the lower court's decision granting the request for extradition.[1061] In the same case before the Supreme Court of Justice in 1990, both the Attorney-General and the Court considered that:

> The prosecution and punishment of crimes committed prior to changes in sovereignty constitutes a discretionary decision for the new power rather than an obligation, but as the new power has expressed an interest in exercising penal authority against such crimes, the international community has no legitimate reason to oppose such measures.[1062]

[1059] Zimbabwe, Extradition Act (1982), Section 14.
[1060] Argentina, Supreme Court of Justice, Bohne case, 24 August 1966.
[1061] Argentina, Cámara Federal de La Plata, Schwammberger case (First Instance), 30 August 1989.
[1062] Argentina, Supreme Court of Justice, Schwammberger case (Supreme Court), 20 March 1990.

971. At the hearing of the Public Prosecutor of the First Instance n the Priebke case in Argentina in 1995, the public prosecutor qualified the alleged acts of the requested person as war crimes and stated that the refusal to extradite him to Italy would trigger the international responsibility of Argentina, even if such refusal would be based on a rule of internal law.[1063] The extradition request was granted by the Court of first instance which stated that there could be no statutory limitation with regard to the alleged acts and therefore rejected the argument raised by the defence that extradition could not be granted because the acts were prescribed under Argentine law.[1064] However, the Court of Appeal found that under the terms of Argentine legislation, penal action was extinguished and that, therefore, extradition had to be refused.[1065] The Supreme Court of Justice found in favour of the requested person's extradition and considered that the acts for which extradition was sought were prima facie genocide. It added that "the classification of offences as crimes against humanity does not depend on whether the requesting or requested State agrees with the extradition process, but instead of the principles of jus cogens of international law".[1066]

972. In the Barbie extradition case in 1974, Bolivia's Supreme Court turned down France's request for the extradition of Klaus Barbie, the head of the Gestapo in Lyon during the Second World War, who had been found guilty of war crimes in absentia. The rejection was based on the absence of an extradition treaty between the two States.[1067]

973. In the Barbie case in 1983, France's Court of Cassation quoted the Court of Appeal which had stated that it was competent to examine the submissions made in the application by Barbie, according to which his detention was a nullity since there did not exist any extradition treaty between France and Bolivia and it was the result of a '"disguised extradition":

> In the absence of any extradition request, the execution of an arrest warrant on national territory, against a person who has previously taken refuge abroad, is not subject to his voluntary return to France or to the institution of extradition proceedings. Furthermore, by reason of their nature, the crimes against humanity do not simply fall within the scope of French municipal law but are subject to an international criminal order to which the notions of frontiers and extradition rules arising therefrom are completely foreign.[1068]

The Court of Cassation stated that "in giving this ruling . . . the Court of Appeal gave a proper legal basis to its decision, without inadequacy or contradiction". Referring to the 1945 London Agreement and UN General Assembly Resolution [1063] Argentina, Court of Bariloche, Priebke case, Hearing of the Public Prosecutor of the First Instance, 1995.

[1064] Argentina, Court of Bariloche, Priebke case (First Instance), Judgement, 31 May 1995.
[1065] Argentina, Court of Appeal of General Roca, Priebke case, Judgement, 23 August 1995.
[1066] Argentina, Supreme Court of Justice, Priebke case, Judgement, 2 November 1995.
[1067] Bolivia, Supreme Court, Barbie extradition case, 11 December 1974.
[1068] France, Court of Cassation, Barbie case, Judgement, 6 October 1983.

3(I) of 1946 on extradition and punishment of war criminals, the Court ruled that:

It results from these provisions that "all necessary measures" are to be taken by the Member States of the United Nations to ensure that war crimes, crimes against peace and crimes against humanity are punished and that those persons suspected of being responsible for such crimes are sent back "to the countries in which their abominable deeds were done in order that they may be judged and punished according to the laws of those countries". By reasons of the nature of those crimes, these provisions are in accordance with the general principles of law recognized by the community of nations.[1069]

974. In the decision in the trial of first instance in the Cavallo case in 2001, a Mexican court allowed the extradition, on the request of a Spanish judge, of Ricardo Miguel Cavallo, a former military officer of Argentine citizenship charged with committing acts of genocide, torture and terrorism during the 1976–1983 "dirty war" in Argentina. The Court's decision was based, inter alia, on the principle of universal jurisdiction.[1070]

Other National Practice

975. According to the Report on the Practice of Croatia, Croatia has concluded treaties on extradition with a number of States. The report also notes that:

According to Article 134 of the Croatian Constitution [which provides that "international agreements concluded and ratified in accordance with the Constitution and made public are part of the Republic's internal legal order and are in terms of legal effect above law"], Croatian courts should directly apply the European Convention on Extradition with its two additional protocols and also existing bilateral agreements on extradition.[1071]

976. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, Israel has signed extradition agreements with numerous countries. It has also cooperated with other countries for the extradition, mainly for trial in Israel, of suspected Nazi war criminals.[1072]

977. At the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, Kuwait expressed the view that States should cooperate for the extradition of war criminals.[1073]

978. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, the extradition of persons having committed grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions is governed by Malaysia's Extradition Act. Under this act, if there is no extradition

[1069] France, Court of Cassation, Barbie case, Judgement, 6 October 1983.
[1070] Mexico, Federal Court of the First Circuit, Cavallo case, Decision, 11 January 2001.
[1071] Report on the Practice of Croatia, 1997, Chapter 6.3.
[1072] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 6.11.
[1073] Kuwait, Remarks and Proposals of the Ministry of Justice concerning the draft Declaration of the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, § 4.

treaty with the requesting State, the Minister of Home Affairs may permit the extradition if he/she deems fit.[1074]

979. In 2001, with regard to the Cavallo case, the Mexican Foreign Relations Secretariat issued a directive on this matter, stating that:

> Based on Article 28, part XI, of the Federal Public Administration Law and in conformity with articles 30 of the International Law of Extradition, and articles 1, 9, 14 and 25 of the Treaty of Extradition and Mutual Assistance on Criminal Matters between the United Mexican States and the Kingdom of Spain, it is resolved: . . . to grant the extradition of the individual in question, Ricardo Miguel Cavallo, known as Miguel Angel Cavallo, requested by the government of Spain through its embassy in Mexico, to face charges of genocide, torture and terrorism.[1075]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

980. In a resolution adopted in 1946 on extradition and punishment of war criminals, the UN General Assembly stated that it:

> Recommends that Members of the United Nations forthwith take all the necessary measures . . . to cause [war criminals who have been responsible for or have taken a consenting part in war crimes, crimes against peace and against humanity] to be sent back to the countries in which their abominable deeds were done, in order that they may be judged and punished according to the laws of those countries;
>
> and calls upon the governments of States which are not Members of the United Nations also to take all necessary measures for the apprehension of such criminals in their respective territories with a view to their immediate removal to the countries in which the crimes were committed.[1076]

981. In a resolution adopted in 1947 on surrender of war criminals and traitors, the UN General Assembly

> Recommends Members of the United Nations, which desire the surrender of alleged war criminals or traitors (that is to say nationals of any State accused of having violated their national law by treason or active collaboration with the enemy during the war) by other Members in whose jurisdiction they are believed to be, to request surrender as soon as possible and to support their request with sufficient evidence to establish that a reasonable prima facie case exists as to identity and guilt.[1077]

982. In a resolution adopted in 1969 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly stated that it was convinced:

[1074] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 6.4, referring to the Extradition Act (1992), Sections 1 to 6.

[1075] Mexico, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Communication No. 021/01, The Ministry of Foreign Affairs grants Spain's Request to extradite Ricardo Miguel Cavallo, Directive of 2 February 2001, § 2.

[1076] UN General Assembly, Res. 3 (I), 13 February 1946.

[1077] UN General Assembly, Res. 170 (II), 31 October 1947.

that the . . . extradition and punishment of persons responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity . . . constitute an important element in the prevention of such crimes, the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the encouragement of confidence, the furtherance of co-operation among peoples, and the promotion of international peace and security.[1078]

983. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly stated that it was convinced:

that . . . the . . . extradition and punishment or persons guilty of [war crimes and crimes against humanity] – wherever they may have been committed – . . . are important elements in the prevention of similar crimes now and in the future, and also in the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, the strengthening of confidence and the development of co-operation between peoples, and the safeguarding of international peace and security.[1079]

The General Assembly called upon all States:

to take measures, in accordance with recognized principles of international law, to arrest such persons and extradite them to the countries where they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity, so that they can be brought to trail and punished in accordance with the laws of those countries.[1080]

984. In a resolution adopted in 1971 on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly urged all States:

to implement the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and to take measures in accordance with international law . . . to ensure the punishment of all persons guilty of [war crimes and crimes against humanity], including their extradition to those countries where they have committed such crimes.[1081]

985. In a resolution adopted in 1973 on principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN General Assembly declared that:

The United Nations, in pursuance of the principles and purposes set forth in the Charter concerning the promotion of co-operation between peoples and the maintenance of international peace and security, proclaims the following principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity:

. . .

5. Persons against whom there is evidence that they have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity shall be subject to trial and, if found guilty, to [1078] UN General Assembly, Res. 2583 (XXIV), 15 December 1969, preamble.

[1079] UN General Assembly, Res. 2712 (XXV), 15 December 1970, preamble.
[1080] UN General Assembly, Res. 2712 (XXV), 15 December 1970, § 2.
[1081] UN General Assembly, Res. 2840 (XXVI), 18 December 1971, § 1.

> punishment, as a general rules in the country in which they have committed those crimes. In that connexion, States shall co-operate on questions of extraditing such persons.[1082]

986. In a resolution adopted in 1988 on prosecution and punishment of all war criminals and persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the UN Commission on Human Rights noted "with satisfaction the spirit of co-operation shown by several Member States in facilitating the extradition of war criminals who, in the aftermath of the Second World War, attempted to elude responsibility for their deeds by taking refuge in other countries". It welcomed "the interest shown in this problem by numerous Member States regarding alleged war criminals residing in their territories and the assistance given by other Member States in providing evidence making possible the extradition and prosecution of such individuals".[1083]

987. In a resolution on impunity adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights recognised that "crimes such as genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture are violations of international law and that perpetrators of such crimes should be prosecuted or extradited by States".[1084]

988. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights urged all governments:

> to implement the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies and to take measures in accordance with international law to . . . ensure the punishment of all persons found guilty of [war crimes and crimes against humanity], or their extradition to those countries where they have committed such crimes, even when there is no treaty to facilitate that task.[1085]

Other International Organisations

989. No practice was found.

International Conferences

990. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

991. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

992. No practice was found.

[1082] UN General Assembly, Res. 3074 (XXVIII), 3 December 1973, preamble and § 5.
[1083] UN, Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1988/47, 8 March 1988.
[1084] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/79, 25 April 2002, § 11.
[1085] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/22, 16 August 2001, § 5

VI. Other Practice

993. In 1994, in a report on Ethiopia, Human Rights Watch noted that:

The SPO [Special Prosecutor's Office] believes that some 300 government and military officials fled Ethiopia when the Mengistu regime collapsed. Other Dergue officials guilty of human rights violations may have left the country earlier, having fallen out of favor with the regime. The SPO has investigated the whereabouts of at least sixty fugitive officials. The largest number of fugitives are believed to be in the United States and Kenya, with others in Europe and Djibouti . . . Ethiopia does not have extradition treaties in force with the countries where the fugitives are believed to be.[1086]

Extradition of own nationals

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

994. The following bilateral treaties provide, for example, that in a case where extradition is requested for one of its own nationals, the State has a choice to extradite or try the person itself: the 1874 Extradition Treaty between Peru and France (Article 1); the 1881 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Spain; the 1886 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Belgium; the 1886 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Italy; the 1889 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the UK; the 1893 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the Netherlands; the 1904 Extradition Treaty between Peru and the UK (Article 3); the 1932 Extradition Treaty between Peru and Chile (Articles 1 and 4); the 1972 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US; the 1987 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Italy; the 1988 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Australia; and the 1994 Extradition Treaty between Peru and Italy (Articles 2, 5 and 7).

995. Under Article 20 of the 1889 Montevideo Treaty on International Criminal Law concluded between Argentina, Bolivia, Paraguay and Uruguay, extradition is granted regardless of the nationality of the person for whom it is requested.

996. Article 1 of the 1919 Extradition Treaty between Brazil and Peru provides that "the High Contracting Parties are obliged to reciprocally hand over criminals of whatever nationality, including their own nationals".

997. Article 228 of the 1919 Treaty of Versailles provides that:

The German Government shall hand over to the Allied and Associated Powers, or to such one of them as shall so request, all persons accused of having committed an act in violation of the laws and customs of war, who are specified either by name or by the rank, office or employment which they held under the German authorities.

[1086] Human Rights Watch, Reckoning under the Law, Series Human Rights Watch/Africa, Vol. 6, No. 11, New York, December 1994, p. 16.

In the end, however, the German government refused to extradite its nationals. Instead, prosecutions were instituted before the court of Leipzig.[1087]

998. Article 345 of the 1928 Bustamante Code – a convention on private international law concluded between 21 States of South, Central and North America – provides that "the States parties are not obliged to extradite their own nationals". However, the same provision states that a State which refuses to extradite is obliged to try the individual.

999. Article 7(1) of the 1933 Inter-American Convention on Extradition provides that "the nationality of the person sought may not be invoked as a ground for denying extradition, except when the law of the requested State otherwise provides".

1000. Article 6(1)(a) of the 1957 European Convention on Extradition provides that "a Contracting Party shall have the right to refuse extradition of its nationals". However, according to Article 6(2), "if the requested Party does not extradite its national, it shall at the request of the requesting Party submit the case to its competent authorities in order that proceedings may be taken if they are considered appropriate".

1001. Article 4 of the 1973 Extradition Treaty between Uruguay and the US provides that "the Requested Party will not refuse the request for extradition on the ground that the person is a national of the Requested Party".

1002. Article 7 of the 1977 OAU Convention against Mercenarism provides that:

> 2. When a national is the subject of the request for extradition, the State from which it is sought must, if it refuses, undertake prosecution of the offence committed.
> 3. If, in accordance with sections 1 and 2 of this Article, prosecution is undertaken, the State from which extradition is sought will notify the outcome of such prosecution to the state seeking extradition and to any other interested Member State of the Organization of African Unity.

1003. Upon ratification of AP I, Mongolia declared that:

> In regard of Article 88, paragraph 2 of the Additional Protocol to the Protection of Victims in the International Armed Conflicts ("Protocol I") which states [that] "The High Contracting Parties shall co-operate in the matter of extradition", the Mongolian law which prohibits deprivation and extradition of its citizens from Mongolia shall be respected.[1088]

1004. Article 3 of the 1997 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US provides that "the extradition and surrender of the person sought shall not be refused on the ground that such person is a national of the Requested Party".

Other Instruments

1005. No practice was found.

[1087] M. Cherif Bassiouni, Crimes against Humanity in International Criminal Law, Kluwer, Dordrecht, 1992, pp. 200 and 201.

[1088] Mongolia, Reservation made upon ratification of AP I, 6 December 1995.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1006. The YPA Military Manual states that nationals would be tried in the SFRY at the request of a foreign country if reliable evidence of serious violations of IHL were provided.[1089]

National Legislation

1007. Argentina's Law on International Cooperation in Criminal Matters provides that if the person for whom extradition is sought has been an Argentine national since the time the crime was committed (and is still an Argentine national at the time of the option), such person may opt to be tried by Argentine courts, unless a treaty obliging the extradition of its nationals applies. If the Argentine national chooses to exercise this right, extradition is denied and the case is tried in Argentina under Argentine penal law, so long as the requesting State gives its consent and renounces its jurisdiction, and hands over the relevant records and evidence.[1090]

1008. Armenia's Penal Code provides that "the citizens of the Republic of Armenia who have committed a crime in another State are not extradited to that State".[1091]

1009. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, Chilean law does not, in general, prohibit the extradition of Chilean nationals.[1092]

1010. Croatia's Constitution and Code of Criminal Procedure prohibit the extradition of a Croatian national.[1093]

1011. Georgia's Constitution provides that "the extradition of a citizen of Georgia to another State is prohibited, except in cases provided for by international agreements. A decision on extradition may be appealed in court."[1094]

1012. Germany's Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended, which provides for the possibility of the extradition of "a foreign person who is searched for or convicted by a foreign State for an offence which is punishable in that State", provides that "a foreign person in the terms of this law is a person who is not a German national in the meaning of . . . the Basic Law [of the Federal Republic of Germany]".[1095]

1013. Ireland's Extradition Act as amended provides that "extradition shall not be granted where a person claimed is a citizen of Ireland, unless the relevant extradition provisions otherwise provide".[1096]

[1089] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Point 35.
[1090] Argentina, Law on International Cooperation in Criminal Matters (1997), Article 12.
[1091] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 16(1).
[1092] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Chapter 6.3.
[1093] Croatia, Constitution (1990), Article 9(2); Code of Criminal Procedure (1993), Article 13.
[1094] Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 13(4).
[1095] Germany, Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended (1982), Section 2(1) and (3).
[1096] Ireland, Extradition Act as amended (1965), Section 14.

1014. Italy's Constitution as amended provides that:

> (1) The extradition of a citizen may be permitted only in such cases as are expressly provided for in international conventions.
> (2) In no instance shall it be permitted for political offences.[1097]

1015. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended provides that "citizens of the Republic of Lithuania shall not be extradited to foreign states for committing offences".[1098]

1016. Portugal's Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended provides that:

> 1. Extradition shall be excluded . . . in the following cases:
> a) where the offence was committed on Portuguese territory;
> b) where the person claimed is a Portuguese national, without prejudice to the provisions of the following paragraph.
> 2. The extradition of Portuguese nationals shall however not be excluded where:
> extradition of nationals is provided for in a treaty, convention or agreement to which Portugal is a Party, and > extradition is sought for offences of terrorism or international organised crime, and the legal system of the requesting State embodies guarantees of a fair trial.[1099]

1017. Under Russia's Constitution, the extradition of Russian citizens is prohibited.[1100] Russia's Criminal Code also provides that Russian citizens who have committed crimes in the territory of a foreign State shall not be extradited to that State.[1101]

1018. Under Rwanda's Penal Code, Rwandan nationals cannot be extradited.[1102]

1019. Spain's Law on Passive Extradition provides that "extradition of Spanish nationals will not be granted".[1103]

1020. Under Yemen's Constitution as amended, the extradition of nationals is prohibited.[1104]

1021. The Constitution as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that a Yugoslav citizen "may not be . . . deported from the country, or extradited to another state".[1105]

National Case-law

1022. No practice was found.

[1097] Italy, Constitution as amended (1947), Article 26.
[1098] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 7.
[1099] Portugal, Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended (1999), Article 32.
[1100] Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 61.
[1101] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 13.
[1102] Rwanda, Penal Code (1977), Article 16.
[1103] Spain, Law on Passive Extradition (1985), Article 3(1).
[1104] Yemen, Constitution as amended (1994), Article 44.
[1105] SFRY, Constitution as amended (1992), Article 17(3).

Other National Practice

1023. In 1968, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Austria stated that "it was a principle recognized in international law that States were not bound to consent to the extradition of their own nationals".[1106]

1024. In 1973, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, Belgium noted that Belgian law prohibited the extradition of Belgian nationals.[1107]

1025. In 1968, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, Chile stated that "the principle whereby the requested State was not bound to accede to the extradition of its own nationals was recognized by only a minority of States in international law".[1108]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

1026. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1027. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1028. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

1029. No practice was found.

Political offence exception to extradition

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1030. Article IV of the 1919 Extradition Treaty between Brazil and Peru provides that "extradition for political offences" shall not take place. Under the [1106] Austria, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1570, 14 October 1968, § 22.

[1107] Belgium, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.2022, 9 November 1973, § 40.

[1108] Chile, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1570, 14 October 1968, § 27.

same provision, "acts committed during insurrection or civil war" are not extraditable offences, unless they constitute "barbarous acts or acts of vandalism prohibited by the laws of war".

1031. Article 7 of the 1948 Genocide Convention provides that:

> Genocide and the other acts enumerated in Article III shall not be considered as political crimes for the purpose of extradition.
>
> The Contracting parties pledge themselves in such cases to grant extradition in accordance with their laws and treaties in force.

1032. Article 3(1) of the 1957 European Convention on Extradition provides that "extradition shall not be granted if the offence in respect of which it is requested is regarded by the requested Party as a political offence or as an offence connected with a political offence".

1033. Upon signature of the 1959 European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, the USSR declared that it would not consider a grave breach, as defined in the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP I, or a violation of Articles 1–4 AP II, as a "political offence" or "offences connected with a political offence".[1109]

1034. Article 4(5) of the 1962 Extradition Treaty between Venezuela and Chile provides that "in no case may genocide [and] acts of terrorism . . . be considered political crimes".

1035. Article 11 of the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid provides that practices of apartheid "shall not be considered political crimes for the purpose of extradition".

1036. Article 1 of the 1975 Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Extradition specifies that:

> For the application of Article 3 of the Convention, political offences shall not be considered to include the following:
>
> a. the crimes against humanity specified in the [1948 Genocide Convention];
> b. the violations specified in Article 50 of [GC I], Article 51 of [GC II], Article 130 of [GC III] and Article 147 of [GC IV];
> c. any comparable violations of the laws of war having effect at the time when this Protocol enters into force and of customs of war existing at that time, which are not already provided for in the above-mentioned provisions of the Geneva Conventions.

1037. Article 5(1) of the 1987 Extradition Treaty between Spain and Argentina stipulates that "extradition shall not be granted for political offences or offences related to offences of such a nature". It provides, however, that "b) acts of terrorism [and] c) war crimes and crimes which are committed against the peace and security of mankind" shall not be considered political crimes.

[1109] USSR, Reservations and declarations made upon signature of the 1959 European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, 7 November 1996, Article 3.

1038. According to Article 5 of the 1989 Extradition Treaty between Peru and Spain, extradition shall not be granted "with regard to offences considered to be political or connected with offences of such a nature". It provides, however, that "in no case shall . . . b) acts of terrorism, c) war crimes and crimes committed against the peace and security of mankind" be deemed political offences.

1039. Article 5(1) of the 1992 Extradition Treaty between Chile and Spain provides that "extradition shall not be granted for political offences or offences related to offences of such a nature". It provides, however, that "b) acts of terrorism [and] c) war crimes and crimes which are committed against the peace and security of mankind, in conformity with international law" shall in no case be considered political crimes.

1040. Article IV(1) of the 1993 Extradition Treaty between Australia and Chile provides that:

> Extradition shall not be granted: . . . if the offence for which extradition is requested is a political offence . . . To the effect of this paragraph, reference to political offences does not include: . . . b) war crimes and crimes committed against the peace and security of mankind, in conformity with international law.

1041. Article V of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons provides that "the forced disappearance of persons shall not be considered a political offense for purposes of extradition" and "shall be deemed to be included among the extraditable offenses in every extradition treaty entered into between States Parties".

1042. Article 4 of the 1997 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US provides that:

> 1. Extradition shall not be granted if the offense for which extradition is requested is a political offense.
> 2. For the purposes of this Treaty, the following offenses shall not be considered to be political offenses:
>
> . . .
>
> (b) an offense for which both Parties have the obligation, pursuant to a multilateral international agreement on genocide, acts of terrorism, . . . or other crimes, to extradite the person sought or to submit the case to their competent authorities for decision as to prosecution;
>
> 3. Notwithstanding the terms of paragraph 2 of this Article, extradition shall not be granted if the competent authority of the Requested State determines that the request was politically motivated.
> 4. The Requested State may refuse extradition for offenses under military law that are not offenses under ordinary criminal law.

1043. Article 20 of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention, concerning "Grounds for refusal" of extradition and mutual legal assistance, which, according to its Article 22(1), also applies to armed conflicts not of an international character, provides that:

1. For the purpose of extradition, offences set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs 1 (a) to (c), and for the purpose of mutual legal assistance, offences set forth in Article 15 shall not be regarded as political offences nor as offences connected with political offences nor as offences inspired by political motives. Accordingly, a request for extradition or for mutual legal assistance based on such offences may not be refused on the sole ground that it concerns a political offence or an offence connected with a political offence or an offence inspired by political motives.
2. Nothing in this Protocol shall be interpreted as imposing an obligation to extradite or to afford mutual legal assistance if the requested Party has substantial grounds for believing that the request for extradition for offences set forth in Article 15 sub-paragraphs 1 (a) to (c) or for mutual legal assistance with respect to offences set forth in Article 15 has been made for the purpose of prosecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's race, religion, nationality, ethnic origin or political opinion or that compliance with the request would cause prejudice to that person's position for any of these reasons.

Other Instruments

1044. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1045. New Zealand's Military Manual states with respect to the prosecution of alleged war criminals that:

> If the Party concerned does not institute proceedings against offenders, it may, subject to the provisions of its own law, hand such persons over for trial by any party to the Conventions which has made out a prima facie case. This reference to the local law makes the procedure subject to local extradition legislation and some countries are likely to argue that war criminals acting on governmental instruction are political offenders immune from extradition. This argument was expressly rejected by the Ghana Court of Appeal in Ex p. Schumann (1949) . . . when put forward to contest an extradition application in respect of a doctor involved in the extermination programme at the Auschwitz concentration camp. AP I Art. 88 requires the parties to assist one another in connection with grave breaches, including cooperation in matters of extradition.[1110]

1046. The UK Military Manual, in a footnote related to the provision on extradition of war criminals, states that "an accused person is not to be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character or if he proves that the request for surrender has been made with a view to try or punish him for an offence of a political nature".[1111]

[1110] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1711.4, footnote 76.
[1111] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 639, footnote 5.

National Legislation

1047. Argentina's Law on International Cooperation in Criminal Matters provides that extradition shall not take place in case of political offences.[1112] However, it also states that the following crimes are not considered to be political offences: war crimes and crimes against humanity or illegal acts against internationally protected persons; illegal acts against the population or innocent civilians not involved in the violence caused by an armed conflict; and crimes for which Argentina, as a signatory to an international convention, has assumed the obligation to extradite or prosecute.[1113]

1048. Colombia's Penal Code provides that "extradition proceedings will not be taken with regard to political offences".[1114]

1049. Under Croatia's Code of Criminal Procedure, the Minister of Justice will not allow extradition for a political offence.[1115]

1050. Germany's Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended provides that "extradition is not permissible if requested for a political offence or an offence connected with such an offence. It is permissible if the person searched for is prosecuted or convicted for . . . genocide, murder or homicide or the participation therein."[1116]

1051. Ireland's Extradition Act as amended states that "extradition shall not be granted for an offence which is a political offence or an offence connected with a political offence".[1117] (emphasis in original)

1052. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches, in the part dealing with the conditions for a possible extradition of war criminals, states that "the crimes provided for in Article 1 [i.e. grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] are neither considered to be political crimes nor acts connected with similar crimes".[1118]

1053. According to the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "the crimes defined in this Act [genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and torture] shall be deemed not to be offences of a political nature for the purposes of the Extradition Act or the [Act on the Surrender of Persons Suspected of War Crimes as amended]".[1119]

1054. Under Peru's Constitution, political offences are not extraditable offences. Acts of terrorism, murder of high-ranking officials (magnicidio) and acts of genocide are not to be considered as political offences.[1120]

[1112] Argentina, Law on International Cooperation in Criminal Matters (1997), Article 8(a).
[1113] Argentina, Law on International Cooperation in Criminal Matters (1997), Article 9.
[1114] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 18.
[1115] Croatia, Code of Criminal Procedure (1993), Article 520(2).
[1116] Germany, Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended (1982), Section 6(1).
[1117] Ireland, Extradition Act as amended (1965), Section 11(1).
[1118] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 11.
[1119] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 12.
[1120] Peru, Constitution (1979), Article 109; Constitution (1993), Article 37.

1055. Portugal's Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended provides that extradition and other forms of cooperation are excluded "where there are well-founded reasons for believing that cooperation is sought for the purpose of persecuting or punishing a person on account of that person's . . . political or ideological beliefs".[1121] It further provides that:

1. A request for co-operation shall also be refused where the proceedings concern:
   a) Any facts that, according to the concepts of Portuguese law, constitute a political offence or an offence connected with a political offence;
   b) any facts that constitute a military offence and do not constitute an offence under ordinary criminal law.
2. The following shall not be regarded as political offences:
   a) genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and serious offences under the [Geneva Conventions];
   b) the offences mentioned in Article 1 of the [1977 European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism];
   c) the acts mentioned in the [1984 Convention against Torture];
   d) any other offences that ought not to be regarded as political under the terms of an international treaty, convention or agreement to which Portugal is a Party.[1122]

1056. Rwanda's Penal Code does not permit extradition for political offences.[1123]

1057. Spain's Law on Passive Extradition provides that:

Extradition will not be granted in the following cases:
1. When it concerns offences of a political character, which does not include acts of terrorism [and] crimes against humanity aimed at in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations . . .
2. When it concerns military offences classified as such by Spanish legislation, without prejudice, however, to what is established by International Conventions signed and ratified by Spain.[1124]

1058. Zimbabwe's Extradition Act provides that "no extradition to a designated country shall take place . . . if the offence for which the extradition is requested is an offence of a political character".[1125]

National Case-law

1059. In the Bohne case in 1966, in which extradition was requested for crimes related to the execution of mentally ill patients during Germany's Nazi regime, [1121] Portugal, Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended (1999), Article 6(1)(b).

[1122] Portugal, Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended (1999), Article 7.
[1123] Rwanda, Penal Code (1977), Article 15.
[1124] Spain, Law on Passive Extradition (1985), Article 4(1) and (2).
[1125] Zimbabwe, Extradition Act (1982), Section 15(b).

Argentina's Supreme Court of Justice emphasised that "neither claims for political reasons nor arguments based on supposed military necessity shall be admitted as grounds for the denial of extradition for criminal acts which clearly contravene the common opinion of civilized peoples".[1126]

Other National Practice

1060. The Report on the Practice of Croatia, with regard to the Code of Criminal Procedure's provision prohibiting extradition for political offences, states that:

> The European Convention on Extradition and its Protocols are directly applicable in the Croatian legal system, judges as well as the Minister of Justice are bound by their provisions. Consequently war crimes, genocide and violations of the laws of war and customs of war should not be considered as political offences.[1127]

1061. In 1971, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on the question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity, the representative of France stated that "in France war crimes were not regarded as political crimes and that perpetrators could be extradited in the same way as common offenders".[1128]

1062. In 1996, in a diplomatic communiqué issued in reaction to the events linked with the operation by the MRTA at the residence of the Japanese Ambassador in Peru, and to the release of two Peruvians whose extradition was requested, the President of Uruguay declared that:

> The release of the Peruvians Luis Samaniego and Silvia Gora, decided by the Third Criminal Appeals Court, was exclusively the act of the Judicial Power . . . [The appellate court] upheld the same criterion applied in previous court decisions concerning the application of the 1889 Montevideo Treaty on International Penal Law.[1129]

He recognised the limitations of the extradition treaties, concluded over a century ago, that had governed Uruguay's relations with third parties in this respect. He stated that the Executive Power had brought these rules up to date by signing new extradition treaties in 1996 with Argentina, Chile, Spain, France and Mexico, and by pursuing negotiations with other countries. These treaties excluded terrorism from the category of political offences.[1130]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1063. No practice was found.

[1126] Argentina, Supreme Court of Justice, Bohne case, 24 August 1966.
[1127] Report on the Practice of Croatia, 1997, Chapter 6.4.
[1128] France, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.1902, 9 December 1971, § 76.
[1129] Uruguay, Communiqué issued by the President of Uruguay, 26 December 1996, § 2.
[1130] Uruguay, Communiqué issued by the President of Uruguay, 26 December 1996, § 3.

Other International Organisations

1064. In a resolution adopted in 1984 on enforced disappearances, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe called on the governments of member States:

> to support the preparation and adoption by the United Nations of a declaration setting forth the following principles: . . . enforced disappearance is a crime against humanity which . . . cannot be considered a political offence and is therefore subject to the extradition laws.[1131]

International Conferences

1065. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1066. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1067. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

1068. No practice was found.

Cooperation with international criminal tribunals

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1069. Article 3 of the 1945 London Agreement provides with regard to the IMT (Nuremberg) that:

> Each of the Signatories shall take the necessary steps to make available for the investigation of the charges and trial the major war criminals detained by them who are to be tried by the International Military Tribunal. The Signatories shall also use their best endeavors to make available for investigation of the charges against and the trial before the International Military Tribunal such of the major war criminals as are not in the territories of any of the Signatories.

1070. Articles 86–101 of the 1998 ICC Statute deal with "International Cooperation and Judicial Assistance". Article 86 provides that "States Parties shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Statute, cooperate fully with the Court in its investigation and prosecution of crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court". Article 88 provides that "States Parties shall ensure that there are procedures available under their national law for all of the forms of cooperation which are specified under this Part".

[1131] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 828 on enforced disappearances, 26 September 1984, § 13(a)(i)(1).

1071. Article 93 of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> 1. States Parties shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Part and under procedures of national law, comply with requests by the Court to provide the following assistance in relation to investigations or prosecutions:
> (a) The identification and whereabouts of persons or the location of items;
> (b) The taking of evidence, including testimony under oath, and the production of evidence, including expert opinions and reports necessary to the Court;
> (c) The questioning of any person being investigated or prosecuted;
> (d) The service of documents, including judicial documents;
> (e) Facilitating the voluntary appearance of persons as witnesses or experts before the Court;
> (f) The temporary transfer of persons as provided in paragraph 7;
> (g) The examination of places or sites, including the exhumation and examination of grave sites;
> (h) The execution of searches and seizures;
> (i) The provision of records and documents, including official records and documents;
> (j) The protection of victims and witnesses and the preservation of evidence;
> (k) The identification, tracing and freezing or seizure of proceeds, property and assets and instrumentalities of crimes for the purpose of eventual forfeiture, without prejudice to the rights of bona fide third parties; and
> (l) Any other type of assistance which is not prohibited by the law of the requested State, with a view to facilitating the investigation and prosecution of crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court.
>
> . . .
>
> 4. In accordance with article 72, a State Party may deny a request for assistance, in whole or in part, only if the request concerns the production of any documents or disclosure of evidence which relates to its national security.
> 5. Before denying a request for assistance under paragraph 1(l), the requested State shall consider whether the assistance can be provided subject to specified conditions, or whether the assistance can be provided at a later date or in an alternative manner, provided that if the Court or the Prosecutor accepts the assistance subject to conditions, the Court or the Prosecutor shall abide by them.

1072. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Argentina declared that:

> With regard to article 87, paragraph 2, of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the Argentine Republic hereby declares that requests for cooperation coming from the Court, and any accompanying documentation, shall be in Spanish or shall be accompanied by a translation into Spanish.[1132]

[1132] Argentina, Declaration made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 8 February 2001.

1073. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Austria declared that "pursuant to article 87, paragraph 2 of the [1998 ICC] Statute the Republic of Austria declares that requests for cooperation and any documents supporting the request shall either be in or be accompanied by a translation into the German language".[1133]

1074. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Belgium stated that:

> With reference to article 87, paragraph 1, of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the Kingdom of Belgium declares that the Ministry of Justice is the authority competent to receive requests for cooperation.
> ...
> With reference to article 87, paragraph 2 [of the 1998 ICC Statute], the Kingdom of Belgium declares that requests by the Court for cooperation and any documents supporting the request shall be in an official language of the Kingdom.[1134]

1075. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Belize declared that "pursuant to Article 87 (1) (a) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court, Belize declares that all requests made to it in accordance with Chapter 9 be sent through diplomatic channels".[1135]

1076. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Finland stated that:

> Pursuant to article 87 (1) (a) of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the Republic of Finland declares that requests for cooperation shall be transmitted either through the diplomatic channel or directly to the Ministry of Justice, which is the authority competent to receive such requests. The Court may also, if need be, enter into direct contact with other competent authorities of Finland. In matters relating to requests for surrender the Ministry of Justice is the only competent authority.
>
> Pursuant to article 87 (2) of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the Republic of Finland declares that requests from the Court and any documents supporting such requests shall be submitted either in Finnish or Swedish, which are the official languages of Finland, or in English which is one of the working languages of the Court.[1136]

1077. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, France stated that "pursuant to article 87, paragraph 2, of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the French Republic declares that requests for cooperation, and any documents supporting the request, addressed to it by the Court must be in the French language".[1137]

1078. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Germany stated that:

> The Federal Republic of Germany declares, pursuant to article 87 (1) of the [1998 ICC] Statute, that requests from the Court can also be transmitted directly to the Federal Ministry of Justice or an agency designated by the Federal Ministry of Justice in an individual case. Requests to the Court can be transmitted directly from the Federal Ministry of Justice or, with the Ministry's agreement, from another competent agency to the Court.

[1133] Austria, Declaration made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 28 December 2000.
[1134] Belgium, Declarations made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 28 June 2000.
[1135] Belize, Declaration made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 5 April 2000.
[1136] Finland, Declarations made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 29 December 2000.
[1137] France, Declarations made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 9 June 2000, § II.

The Federal Republic of Germany further declares, pursuant to article 87 (2) of the [1998 ICC] Statute, that requests for cooperation to Germany and any documents supporting the request must be accompanied by a translation into German.[1138]

1079. Upon signature of the 1998 ICC Statute, Israel stated that:

Being an active consistent supporter of the concept of an International Criminal Court, and its realization in the form of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the Government of the State of Israel is proud to thus express its acknowledgment of the importance, and indeed indispensability, of an effective court for the enforcement of the rule of law and the prevention of impunity.[1139]

1080. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Norway stated that:

1. With reference to Article 87, paragraph 1 (a) [of the 1998 ICC Statute], the Kingdom of Norway hereby declares that the Royal Ministry of Justice is designated as the channel for the transmission of requests from the Court.
2. With reference to Article 87, paragraph 2 [of the 1998 ICC Statute], the Kingdom of Norway hereby declares that requests from the Court and any documents supporting the request shall be submitted in English, which is one of the working languages of the Court.[1140]

1081. Upon ratification of the 1998 ICC Statute, Spain stated that:

In relation to article 87, paragraph 1, of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the Kingdom of Spain declares that, without prejudice to the fields of competence of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Justice shall be the competent authority to transmit requests for cooperation made by the Court or addressed to the Court.

In relation to article 87, paragraph 2, of the [1998 ICC] Statute, the Kingdom of Spain declares that requests for cooperation addressed to it by the Court and any supporting documents must be in Spanish or accompanied by a translation into Spanish.[1141] 1082. Article 17 of the 2002 Agreement on the Special Court for Sierra Leone, entitled "Cooperation with the Special Court", provides that:

1. The Government shall cooperate with all organs of the Special Court at all stages of the proceedings. It shall, in particular, facilitate access to the Prosecutor to sites, persons and relevant documents required for the investigation.
2. The Government shall comply without undue delay with any request for assistance by the Special Court or an order issued by the Chambers, including, but not limited to:
   (a) Identification and location of persons;
   (b) Service of documents;
   (c) Arrest or detention of persons;
   (d) Transfer of an indictee to the Court.

[1138] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 11 December 2000.
[1139] Israel, Declaration made upon signature of the ICC Statute, 31 December 2000, § 1.
[1140] Norway, Declarations made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 16 February 2000, §§ 1 and 2.
[1141] Spain, Declarations made upon ratification of the ICC Statute, 24 October 2000.

Other Instruments

1083. Article 29 of the 1993 ICTY Statute, entitled "Cooperation and judicial assistance", provides that:

1. States shall cooperate with the International Tribunal in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law.
2. States shall comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber, including, but not limited to:
   (a) the identification and location of persons;
   (b) the taking of testimony and the production of evidence;
   (c) the service of documents;
   (d) the arrest or detention of persons;
   (e) the surrender or the transfer of the accused to the International Tribunal.

1084. Article 54 of the 1994 ILC Draft Statute for an International Criminal Tribunal, entitled "Obligation to extradite or prosecute", provides that:

> In a case of a crime referred to in article 20 (e) ["crimes, established under or pursuant to the treaty provisions listed in the Annex, which, having regard to the conduct of the alleged, constitute exceptionally serious crimes of international concern"], a custodial State party to this Statute which is a party to the treaty in question but which has not accepted the Court's jurisdiction with respect to the crime for the purposes of article 21 (1) (b) (i) . . . shall either take all necessary steps to extradite the suspect to a requesting State for the purpose of prosecution or refer the case to its competent authorities for that purpose.

1085. The Annex to the 1994 ILC Draft Statute for an International Criminal Tribunal, entitled "Crimes pursuant to Treaties (see art. 20 (e))", refers, inter alia, to grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions; grave breaches of AP I; crimes defined by Article 2 of the 1973 Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons; and the crime of torture made punishable by Article 4 of the 1984 Convention against Torture.

1086. Article 28 of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that:

1. States shall cooperate with the International Tribunal for Rwanda in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law.
2. States shall comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber, including, but not limited to:
   (a) The identification and location of persons;
   (b) The taking of testimony and the production of evidence;
   (c) The service of documents;
   (d) The arrest or detention of persons;
   (e) The surrender or the transfer of the accused to the International Tribunal for Rwanda.

1087. Article 4 of the 2000 Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law states that "violations of international . . . humanitarian law norms that constitute crimes under international law carry the duty to . . . cooperate with and assist . . . appropriate international judicial organs in the investigation and prosecution of these violations".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1088. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that:

> In the [Geneva] Conventions and Protocol I, it is provided that the governments shall take such legislative measures as may be necessary to determine adequate penal sanctions to be applied to persons committing or ordering any of the grave breaches; the persons accused of having committed, or of having ordered to commit, those breaches . . . shall be searched for.
>
> . . . It is also possible to hand the author of the violations over to an international tribunal, in case such a tribunal has been established.[1142]

The manual also states that "in the event of grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions or of Protocol I, the contracting parties shall cooperate, jointly or individually, with the United Nations and in accordance with the UN Charter".[1143]

1089. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that:

> Where there is widespread evidence of war crimes having been committed, the international community may elect to establish a world forum or war crimes tribunal to conduct trials. The Nuremberg and Tokyo war crimes tribunals conducted after WW II are examples of this approach.[1144]

1090. France's LOAC Teaching Note, in a part dealing with "Grave breaches of the rules of the law of armed conflict", states that:

> On the criminal level, persons charged with [grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions] may be prosecuted before . . . international criminal courts having jurisdiction over war crimes: today this means the International Criminal Tribunals for the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda for the crimes committed solely on the occasion of these two conflicts; tomorrow, this will mean . . . the International Criminal Court which will have jurisdiction over all war crimes and crimes against humanity in case of the failure of national tribunals.[1145]

1091. France's LOAC Manual states that the ICTY and the ICTR, "having concurrent jurisdiction with national tribunals of each State, have, however, primary jurisdiction and may request national tribunals to hand over cases to [them]".[1146] Regarding the ICC, the manual also states that:

[1142] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.02.
[1143] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.09.
[1144] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1308.
[1145] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[1146] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 77–78.

The Court has jurisdiction as soon as the national State of the alleged perpetrator(s), or the State on the territory of which the crime occurred, is party to the [1998 ICC Statute] or gives its express consent. This Court is additional to national jurisdiction. It intervenes only if national jurisdictions are incapable, or refuse to, try the perpetrators.[1147]

1092. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War recalls the experiences of the Nuremberg and Tokyo trials, stating that "the central importance of the Nuremberg Trials ... is in creating a precedent for the execution of judgement against war criminals by the whole of humanity, without leaving the work to prejudiced internal courts".[1148] It also mentions the ICTY and the ICTR. Referring to the ICC, it states that:

One of the biggest difficulties faced by the Hague court for judging Yugoslavia's war criminals is the extradition of war criminals. The permanent court has been empowered to demand extradition of war criminals into its hands, so that such criminals will not find a haven ...

Israel is in a dilemma regarding the Rome Constitution. On the one hand, in light of the Holocaust experience, Israel has a special interest in seeing war criminals brought to justice. On the other hand, there is a fear that the court will serve as a lever for demanding the extradition and trial of IDF soldiers.[1149]

1093. New Zealand's Military Manual, regarding the prosecution of alleged war criminals, states that "by Art. 89 [AP I] they [States parties] are obliged to act jointly or individually in cooperation with the United Nations in regard to serious 'violations' of the [Geneva] Conventions or [AP I]".[1150]

1094. Spain's LOAC Manual states that:

Historically ... International Tribunals established to judge alleged war criminals have existed (such as the Nuremberg and Tokyo Tribunals), and this possibility remains nowadays and seems to be a developing trend for the action of the International Community, an example of which is the creation by the Security Council of ... [the ICTY]. To cooperate with [this Tribunal], Spain has adopted Organic Law No. 15/94 of 1 June.[1151]

The manual further states that "the obligation devolving on the States to cooperate in the penal repression of grave breaches of the [Geneva] Conventions is not limited to cooperation with other States but also comprises cooperation with the United Nations, in conformity with the United Nations Charter".[1152]

1095. The UK Military Manual, in a footnote related to the provision on extradition of war criminals, states that the handing over of a person suspected of war crimes "can be made with the consent of the States concerned to an international court if one should be established".[1153]

[1147] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 76–77.
[1148] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), pp. 66–67.
[1149] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), pp. 68–69.
[1150] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1711.4, footnote 76.
[1151] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.6.b.(2).
[1152] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(5).
[1153] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 639, footnote 5.

1096. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "the perpetrators of such criminal acts [war crimes or serious violations of the laws and customs of war] may also be brought to justice before an international court if such court is established".[1154]

National Legislation

1097. Many States have adopted legislation providing for cooperation with both the ICTY and ICTR, including: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, UK and US.[1155] Other States have adopted legislation providing for cooperation with the ICTY, including: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Finland, Hungary, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, Romania and Spain.[1156]

1098. Many States have adopted special legislation providing for cooperation with the ICC. Examples are Australia, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, South Africa, Switzerland and UK.[1157]

1099. In October 2001, the Republika Srpska adopted the Law on Cooperation with the ICTY in which it provides that both the ICTY and the national courts are competent for the criminal prosecution of persons responsible for violations of IHL in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the ICTY, however, being given precedence (Article 1). Article 2 provides that:

> Cooperation with the Tribunal is related to prosecution of persons only for crimes referred to in Article 2, namely grave violations of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, article 3, pertaining to the violations of laws and customs of war, article 4, pertaining to genocide, and article 5 of the Statute of the Tribunal, pertaining to the

[1154] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 20.

[1155] Australia, International War Crimes Tribunal Act (1995); Austria, Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1996); Belgium, Law on Recognition of and Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1996); Denmark, International Tribunals Act (1994); France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995); France, Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1996); Germany, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995); Germany, Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1998); Greece, Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1998); Ireland, War Crimes Tribunal Act (1998); Luxembourg, Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1999); New Zealand, International War Crimes Act (1995); Norway, Law on the Incorporation of UN Resolutions on International Tribunals (1994); Sweden, Cooperation with the International Tribunals Act as amended (1995); Switzerland, Decree on Cooperation with the International Tribunals Act (1995); UK, ICTY Order (1996); UK, ICTR Order (1996); US, Law on Judicial Assistance to the ICTY and ICTR (1996).

[1156] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Decree on Deferral upon Request by the ICTY (1995); Croatia, Cooperation with the ICTY Act (1996); Finland, ICTY Jurisdiction and Legal Assistance Act (1994); Hungary, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1996); Iceland, Law on Legal Aid to the ICTY (1994); Italy, Decree-Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1993); Netherlands, Act on the Establishment of the ICTY (1994); Romania, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1998); Spain, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1994).

[1157] Australia, ICC Act (2002); Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000); Denmark, ICC Act (2001); Finland, ICC Act (2000); France, Law on Cooperation with the ICC (2002); Germany, Law on Cooperation with the ICC (2002); Netherlands, ICC Implementation Act (2002); New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000); Norway, ICC Act (2001); South Africa, ICC Bill (2001); Switzerland, Law on Cooperation with the ICC (2001); UK, ICC Act (2001); see also Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Part III.

crimes against humanity committed in the territory of former Yugoslavia since 1 January 1991.

Cooperation shall be conducted in the manner stipulated in this Law, Statute of the Tribunal and Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal.[1158]

The other provisions of the law namely deal with the "Procedure for gathering evidence upon request of the tribunal" (Part II); the "Transfer of responsibility for leading the criminal proceedings" (Part III); the "Pre-trial detention of the defendant and hand over to the tribunal" (Part IV); the "Legal Assistance to the Tribunal" (Part V); and the "Execution of verdicts of the tribunal" (Part VI).[1159]

National Case-law

1100. In the Musema case in 1997, Switzerland agreed to surrender to the ICTR an accused of Rwandan nationality arrested in Switzerland in 1995 for violations of the laws of war in Rwanda, pursuant to Article 109 of the Swiss Military Criminal Code as amended and provisions of the Decree on Cooperation with the International Tribunals.[1160]

Other National Practice

1101. In 1994, in its comments on the report of the Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court, Australia stated with regard to the provision on surrender of an accused person to the international tribunal (draft Article 63, now Article 89, of the 1998 ICC Statute) that:

[The draft provision] obliges States parties which have accepted the court's jurisdiction to surrender the accused person to the tribunal. This may be seen as cutting across generally accepted rules of extradition law where States retain the discretion not to extradite the person subject to the request. However, as regards the tribunal it may be argued that, by specifically consenting to jurisdiction, States have already agreed to the tribunal hearing the case and have given up the right not to hand over the accused person. The situation may therefore be distinguished from mere requests for extradition where no prior consent has been given to the exercise of jurisdiction by the courts of a foreign country and where, accordingly, it is entirely appropriate that the requested State retains the discretion not to extradite.[1161]

1102. In 1994, in its comments on the report of the Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court, Belarus stated with regard to the provision on surrender of an accused person to the international tribunal (draft Article 63, now Article 89, of the 1998 ICC Statute) that:

[1158] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (2001), Articles 1 and 2.

[1159] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (2001), Parts II-VI.

[1160] Switzerland, Federal Court, Musema case, Judgement, 28 April 1997.

[1161] Australia, Comments of 16 February 1994 on the report of the Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court, UN Doc. A/CN.4/458, 18 February 1994, p. 16.

In any case, the rule regarding priority should be applied unconditionally in cases involving the surrender of persons accused of crimes within the sphere of exclusive jurisdiction of the court.

It would be desirable to resolve in article 63 the question of the failure to surrender an accused person to the court, in violation of the provisions of the statute. In such situations, the court should be granted the right to request the United Nations Security Council to obtain the surrender of the accused person.[1162]

1103. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Bosnia and Herzegovina thanked the Netherlands for its financial and other contributions to the ICTY and stated that it hoped that "others will follow its example and heed the call for material, political, legal and legislative support for the Tribunal".[1163]

1104. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Colombia stated that "we encourage the international community to cooperate more actively with the [ICTY] so that it can accomplish its task of bringing to justice those who committed atrocities during the war in the former Yugoslavia".[1164]

1105. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Costa Rica stated that:

The lack of cooperation [with the ICTY] on the part of some Governments and local authorities, in violation of their international obligations, is scandalous. The authorities of the Republika Srpska, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) must comply with their international obligations. The authorities of these entities must arrest and transfer to the custody of the Tribunal the accused who are in their territories. These authorities must also cooperate in the gathering of evidence and facilitate the participation of witnesses.[1165]

1106. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Croatia stated that:

Croatia was among the first countries to enact implementing legislation so as to institutionalize its cooperation with the [ICTY]. The Tribunal opened its Liaison Office in Zagreb, and the Croatian Government established its own office for Cooperation with the Tribunal . . .

Croatia does not condition its cooperation with the Tribunal upon the reciprocal cooperation of any other country. Croatia considers cooperation to be a legal, political and moral duty . . .

[1162] Belarus, Comments of 18 February 1994 on the report of the Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court, UN Doc. A/CN.4/458, 18 February 1994, p. 20, § 10.

[1163] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 8.

[1164] Colombia, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 10.

[1165] Costa Rica, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 17.

It should be duly noted that the Republic of Croatia recently used its good offices in the transfer of 10 additional Bosnian Croat indictees into the custody of the Tribunal.

... The work of the Tribunal, just like that of the future international criminal court and the international protection of justice in general, depends upon the cooperation of individual countries. It is the duty of the United Nations to encourage such cooperation or to take appropriate steps if needed.[1166]

1107. According to the Report on the Practice of Croatia, a suspect of Croatian nationality was surrendered to the ICTY on the basis that such surrender was not to be considered an "extradition" since the suspect was surrendered to an international tribunal rather than to another State.[1167]

1108. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Germany stated that it wished to "underline again the obligation of States to cooperate with the [ICTY] under Security Council resolution 827 (1993)". It further stated that:

[Germany] has made every effort to contribute to the prosecution of violations of humanitarian law in the Balkans and will continue to do so. Germany was one of those actively supporting the establishment of the [ICTY] right from the beginning. We have continued vigorously to support its work in the political and legal fields. We have also assisted with personnel and financial contributions ... The cooperation of German authorities with the Tribunal is regulated in a statute passed by the German parliament in April 1995 [i.e. the Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995)]. [The German] Government extradited two men charged with war crimes to the Tribunal. The extradition of Duško Tadić by Germany to The Hague was the very first extradition to the Tribunal by a Member State. Germany has also declared its readiness to execute sentences handed down by the Tribunal. German law enforcement authorities cooperate closely with the Tribunal in order to ensure an effective and transnational prosecution of violations of humanitarian law. The efforts include special protection for those of the many refugees from Bosnia and Herzegovina on German territory who are required by the Tribunal as witnesses.[1168]

1109. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Hungary deplored "the absence of cooperation with the [ICTY] by certain countries and entities" and called upon all members of the international community and all international forums "to continue to support the Tribunal's work and to facilitate the fulfilment of its mandate".[1169]

1110. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Iran stated that:

Since the inception of the [ICTY], the Islamic Republic of Iran has strongly supported its various activities aimed at terminating the culture of impunity.

[1166] Croatia, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, pp. 11–12.
[1167] Report on the Practice of Croatia, 1997, Chapter 6.3.
[1168] Germany, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, pp. 17–18.
[1169] Hungary, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 19.

Accordingly, [Iran], as have done many other States, has already expressed its readiness to accept the convicted persons so that they can serve their sentences in Iranian prisons. However, the report [of the ICTY] indicates that some of the States or entities of the former Yugoslavia, in particular the so-called Republika Srpska, still resist full cooperation with the Tribunal and refuse to arrest and transfer the main indictees to face justice. Such intractable recalcitrance cannot and should not be tolerated by the international community and thus deserves to be condemned.[1170]

1111. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Italy stated that:

The greatest obstacle [to combat impunity of persons indicted by the ICTY] remains the failure by some States and entities in the former Yugoslavia to comply with their obligation to fully cooperate with the Tribunal, in particular with the Tribunal's orders to arrest and deliver indicted persons to The Hague. This obligation was confirmed and reinforced by the 1995 Dayton Agreement. Italy is of the view that it must be met in the most complete and effective way. Respect for State authority cannot be adduced as a pretext for not cooperating with the Tribunal.

. . . Italy has consistently supported the activity of the Tribunal and will continue to do so in order to ensure its complete success.[1171]

1112. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Malaysia stated that:

The Dayton Peace Agreement, signed in December 1995 obliges its signatories to cooperate fully with the [ICTY] by executing the arrest warrants and delivering the indicted criminals to the Tribunal for trial in The Hague. However, to our utter dismay, the parties to the Agreement, notably the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and the Serb entity, have persistently refused to meet their obligations, and seem to be getting away with it. The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has not only defied the orders of the Tribunal, but has failed to ensure the Republika Srpska's compliance with the Dayton Agreement by the execution of arrest warrants issued for more than 40 indictees in its territory. We strongly deplore their failure, which constitutes a blatant violation of the relevant Security Council resolutions and their commitment to the Dayton Agreement and shows a gross disrespect for international law.

Full cooperation with the Tribunal by all parties in bringing the war criminals to justice is a fundamental obligation which must be honoured if genuine stability and lasting peace are to be consolidated in Bosnia and Herzegovina . . .

[Malaysia] also wishes to emphasize the need for the parties involved in the implementation of the Dayton Peace Agreement to extend their full cooperation to the Tribunal. In this regard, we commend the recent efforts by the Stabilization Force (SFOR) in arresting an indicted criminal in Serb territory.[1172]

1113. In 1994, during a debate in the Dutch parliament concerning the establishment of the ICTY, the point was made that a State, as regards its cooperation with the Tribunal, may not raise the objection of statutes of limitation arising from its national legal system in order to refuse such cooperation. It was further stated that violations of the laws and customs of war as mentioned in Article 8 of the Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended of the Netherlands were not subject to statutes of limitation.[1173]

[1170] Iran, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 11.

[1171] Italy, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 8.

[1172] Malaysia, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 14.

1114. In 1997, when a question was raised by a member of the Dutch parliament concerning the measures taken in order to arrest suspected war criminals, the government of the Netherlands replied that it was in favour of issuing a list of information and photographs of persons indicted by the ICTY to the soldiers of the SFOR mission to ensure that persons suspected of war crimes were brought to trial before the Tribunal. It also stated that the government of the Netherlands had proposed this course of action to NATO on several occasions.[1174]

1115. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, the Netherlands stated that:

> The [ICTY] is justified in asking Member States to put more of an effort into arresting indicted war criminals and bringing them before the Tribunal . . . We urge all those involved, directly or indirectly, to live up to their obligations and cooperate in advancing the course of justice.
>
> We also appeal to all Member States to seek ways and means in the realm of their domestic jurisdiction of assisting the Tribunal in every way possible . . . This can be done, for instance, by actively tracing and handing over indicted persons to the Tribunal, by instituting proceedings against alleged war criminals in their domestic courts, and by allowing war criminals convicted by the Tribunal to be imprisoned within their borders.
>
> . . . We wish to remind all States of their obligations, political and legal, under international law and of their duty to cooperate with the Tribunal under the terms of its Statute. We commend the Tribunal for drawing up model arrangements to this particular end and again urge Member States to seek early the conclusion and implementation of such arrangements.[1175]

1116. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Pakistan stated that:

> Security Council resolution 827 (1993) called upon "all States" to cooperate with the [ICTY] in order to ensure its effective functioning. In this regard, we appreciate the cooperation extended by Croatia and the central authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina. However, cooperation from the other parties is not satisfactory. Despite repeated appeals from the international community, one of the parties has not yet taken measures to enact legislation enabling it to cooperate with the Tribunal.

[1173] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Debates on the establishment of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, 1993–1994 Session, Doc. 23 542, No. 6, p. 3.

[1174] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Reply by the Minister of Defence to a question, 1996–1997 Session, 27 January 1997, Doc. 581, p. 1193.

[1175] Netherlands, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 6.

. . .
[Pakistan] would like to welcome the cooperation extended to the Tribunal by the United Nations Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium (UNTAES) and the Stabilization Force (SFOR).[1176]

1117. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Russia stated that:

We continue to attach great importance to the work of the [ICTY] . . . However, we absolutely cannot agree with the attempts to describe as "cooperation" with the Tribunal or as "support" for its work preplanned actions for the armed seizure of suspects, in particular under the aegis of the current peacekeeping operation in Bosnia and Herzegovina . . . The problem of extradition to The Hague of persons indicted of war crimes should be resolved only through cooperation among the parties themselves with the International Tribunal, as was stated in the international documents on the Bosnian settlement, in particular in the decisions of the London Conference of 1996.[1177]

1118. In 1994, in its comments on the report of the Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court, Switzerland stated that:

Indeed, the cooperation thus contemplated between the national administrative and judicial authorities on the one hand and the court on the other seems to be essential in order to ensure the effective functioning of the Court. In this connection, however, the draft fails to pronounce on the surrender of nationals . . . this silence no doubt means that such surrender may be demanded by the court. However, certain countries refuse to extradite their nationals. Would it therefore not be preferable to determine the fate of the nationals of the State concerned by applying to it the principle of aut dedere aut judicare?[1178]

1119. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Turkey stated that:

[Turkey welcomes] the continuing cooperative approach [with regard to the ICTY] demonstrated by two States, Bosnia and Herzegovina and Croatia . . . On the other hand, it is regrettable that this cooperative attitude was not displayed by the other parties.
. . . Refusal to comply with [the commitments made in the 1995 Dayton Accords], after formal recognition of the Tribunal and the undertaking to cooperate with it, constitutes a violation of the Agreement.[1179]

1120. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, the US stated that:

[1176] Pakistan, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 15.
[1177] Germany, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 19.
[1178] Switzerland, Comments of 8 February 1994 on the report of the Working Group on a draft statute for an international criminal court, UN Doc. A/CN.4/458, 18 February 1994, p. 37.
[1179] Turkey, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 13.

We reaffirm [the ICTY] President Cassese's request that all States and entities cooperate fully with the [ICTY]. There is no justification for the near-total non-cooperation of Republika Srpska and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia with the order of the Tribunal, particularly in the apprehension of indictees in areas under their control. The recent cooperation of the Government of Croatia in facilitating the surrender of indictees is commendable, but more cooperation from Croatia is required. The United States will continue to use every tool at its disposal to compel cooperation and to strengthen the capabilities of the [ICTY].

The United States joins with other Member States in continuing to support the work of the war crimes tribunals.[1180]

1121. In 1998, in response to the situation in Kosovo, but also referring to the other conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, the US Congress adopted a resolution by unanimous consent stating that:

The United States should engage with other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and other interested states in a discussion of measures to be taken to apprehend indicted war criminals and persons indicted for crimes against humanity with the objective of concluding a plan of action that will result in these indictees' prompt delivery into the custody of the Tribunal.[1181]

1122. The Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY) notes that:

In fact, the refusal to amend Article 17 of the FRY Constitution prohibiting extradition of own nationals, or to apply somewhat broader interpretation of its provisions, is an expression of the lack of political will to accept jurisdiction of the [ICTY] and, therefore, a sign of rejection of the obligation to recognise universal jurisdiction based on the Tribunal Statute. This position is clear from numerous statements regarding the calls to the FRY to extradite its nationals indicted by the Prosecutor of the Tribunal for war crimes.[1182]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1123. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council called upon States and international humanitarian organisations to collate substantiated information in their possession or submitted to them relating to the violations of humanitarian law, including grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, being committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and to make this information available to the Council.[1183]

1124. In its resolution adopted in 1992 on the establishment of the UN Commission of Experts to examine and analyse violations of IHL committed in the [1180] US, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 16.

[1181] US, Congress, S. Con. Resolution 105 on the Sense of Congress Regarding the Culpability of Slobodan Miloševic, 17 July 1998, Congressional Record (Senate), pp. S8456–S8458.
[1182] Report on the Practice of the SFRY (FRY), 1997, Chapter 6.4.
[1183] UN Security Council, Res. 771, 13 August 1992, § 5.

territory of the former Yugoslavia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reaffirmed its call upon States and, as appropriate, international humanitarian organizations:

to collate substantiated information in their possession or submitted to them relating to the violations of humanitarian law, including grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 being committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and requests States, relevant United Nations bodies, and relevant organizations to make this information available within thirty days of the adoption of the present resolution and as appropriate thereafter, and to provide other appropriate assistance to the Commission of Experts.[1184]

1125. In its resolution on the establishment of the ICTY adopted in 1993 under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, the UN Security Council decided that:

All States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs in accordance with the present resolution and the Statute of the International Tribunal and that consequently all States shall take any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of the present resolution and the Statute, including the obligation of States to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber under Article 29 of the Statute.[1185]

1126. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1994, the UN Security Council called upon States and international humanitarian organisations "to collate substantiated information in their possession or submitted to them relating to grave violations of international humanitarian law committed in Rwanda during the conflict".[1186]

1127. In 1994, in its resolution on the establishment of an International Tribunal for Rwanda adopted under Chapter VII of the UN Charter, the UN Security Council decided that:

All States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal and its organs in accordance with the present resolution and the Statute of the International Tribunal and that consequently all States shall take any measures necessary under their domestic law to implement the provisions of the present resolution and the Statute, including the obligation of States to comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber under Article 28 of the Statute, and requests States to keep the Secretary-General informed of such measures.[1187]

1128. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council:

1. Urges States to arrest and detain, in accordance with their national law and relevant standards of international law, pending prosecution by the International Tribunal for Rwanda or by the appropriate national authorities, persons found within their territory against whom there is sufficient evidence

[1184] UN Security Council, Res. 780, 6 October 1992, § 1.
[1185] UN Security Council, Res. 827, 25 May 1993, § 4.
[1186] UN Security Council, Res. 935, 1 July 1994, § 2.
[1187] UN Security Council, Res. 955, 8 November 1994, § 2.

that they were responsible for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda;

2. Urges States who detain persons referred to in paragraph 1 above to inform the Secretary-General and the Prosecutor of the International Tribunal for Rwanda of the identity of the persons detained, the nature of the crimes believed to have been committed, the evidence providing probable cause for the detentions, the date when the persons were detained and the place of detention.[1188]

1129. In its resolution adopted in 1995 authorizing the establishment of IFOR, the UN Security Council reaffirmed that:

All States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and its organs in accordance with the provisions of resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 and the Statute of the International Tribunal, and shall comply with requests for assistance or orders issued by a Trial Chamber under article 29 of the Statute, and calls upon them to allow the establishment of offices of the Tribunal.[1189]

1130. In a resolution adopted in 1997, the UN Security Council reiterated its call to all the States "in the region" (Eastern Slavonia, Baranja, and Western Sirmium of the Republic of Croatia), including the government of Croatia, "to cooperate fully with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia" and recalled "its encouragement by the increased cooperation of the Government of the Republic of Croatia with the Tribunal".[1190]

1131. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation in Kosovo, the UN Security Council called upon the authorities of the FRY, the leaders of the Kosovo Albanian community and all others concerned "to cooperate fully with the Prosecutor of the [ICTY] in the investigation of possible violations within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal".[1191]

1132. In 1995, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council reiterated that "all States shall cooperate fully with the International Tribunal established pursuant to its resolution 827 (1993) and its organs".[1192]

1133. In 1995, in a statement by its President on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council recalled "the establishment of the International Tribunal pursuant to its resolution 827 (1993)" and reiterated that "all States shall cooperate fully with the Tribunal and its organs".[1193]

1134. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN General Assembly requested States, as a matter of urgency "to make available to the [ICTY] expert personnel,

[1188] UN Security Council, Res. 978, 27 February 1995, §§ 1–2.
[1189] UN Security Council, Res. 1031, 15 December 1995, § 4; see also Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, § 12 and Res. 1037, 15 January 1995, § 20.
[1190] UN Security Council, Res. 1145, 19 December 1997, § 11.
[1191] UN Security Council, Res. 1199, 23 September 1998, § 13.
[1192] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/44, 7 September 1995, p. 2.
[1193] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1995/52, 12 October 1995, p. 2.

resources and services to aid in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of having committed serious violations of international humanitarian law".[1194] The General Assembly requested all States, in particular the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), "to cooperate, as required under Security Council resolution 827 (1993), with the [ICTY] in providing evidence for investigations and trials and in surrendering persons accused of crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal".[1195]

1135. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly called upon all States "to cooperate with the International Tribunal and the Office of the Prosecutor in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of using rape as a weapon of war and in the provision of protection, counselling and support to victims and witnesses".[1196]

1136. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the UN General Assembly urged States "to cooperate fully" with the ICTR.[1197]

1137. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the UN General Assembly urged all States:

> pursuant to Security Council resolution 978 (1995), to exert, without delay, every effort, including arrest and detention, in order to bring those responsible to justice in accordance with international principles of due process, and also urges States to honour their obligations under international law in this regard, particularly under the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.[1198]

1138. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reminded all States of their obligation > to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 and also with the Office of the Prosecutor in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of using rape as a weapon of war.[1199]

1139. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN General Assembly reminded all States of their obligation under Security Council resolution 827 (1993):

> to cooperate with the [ICTY], including through compliance with requests for assistance and orders issued by a trial chamber of the Tribunal, and, in this regard,

[1194] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 9.
[1195] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 10.
[1196] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/205, 23 December 1994, § 13.
[1197] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/206, 23 December 1994, § 6.
[1198] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/200, 22 December 1995, § 8.
[1199] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/192, 22 December 1995, § 5.

urges the parties to allow the establishment of offices of the Tribunal in their territories and draws the attention of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the Republic of Croatia and the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina to their obligation to cooperate with the Tribunal, in particular to arrest, detain and facilitate the transfer to the custody of the Tribunal any and all indicted war criminals who reside in or transit through or are otherwise present in their respective territories.[1200]

1140. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the UN General Assembly urged all States:

to cooperate fully, without delay, with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan Citizens Responsible for Genocide and Other Such Violations Committed in the Territory of Neighbouring States, between 1 January and 31 December 1994, taking into account the obligations contained in Security Council resolutions 955 (1994) of 8 November 1994 and 978 (1995) of 27 February 1995.[1201]

1141. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly reminded all States:

of their obligation to cooperate with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991 in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of using rape as a weapon of war.[1202]

1142. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights welcomed the establishment of the ICTY and urged that "all States provide all necessary and appropriate support to the Tribunal". It further urged all States and responsible authorities to cooperate with the ICTY, "including the provision of substantiated information and the apprehension of persons accused of violations of international humanitarian law".[1203] It reiterated this appeal in 1995.[1204]

1143. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the rape and abuse of women in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all States that hosted refugees "to provide the necessary assistance to the Commission of Experts in its efforts to interview or otherwise collect evidence for its investigation of the systematic practice of rape of women".[1205]

1144. In resolutions on Rwanda adopted in 1995 and 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all States concerned to cooperate fully with the ICTR,

[1200] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 10.
[1201] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/114, 12 December 1996, § 5.
[1202] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/115, 12 December 1996, § 5.
[1203] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, §§ 16 and 19.
[1204] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/89, 8 March 1995, § 23
[1205] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/77, 9 March 1994, § 10.

taking into account the obligations contained in Security Council Resolutions 955 (1994) and 978 (1995).[1206]

1145. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded that all States and parties to the 1995 Dayton Accords "meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the Tribunal, as required by Security Council resolution 827 of 25 May 1993, including with respect to surrendering persons sought by the Tribunal". It also demanded that "all States arrest, detain and facilitate the transfer of . . . persons [indicted by the Tribunal] to the custody of the Tribunal and ensure adequate protection of witnesses who have appeared before the Tribunal".[1207]

1146. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the situation of human rights in the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Commission on Human Rights stressed "continuing obstruction of the work of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia".[1208] The Commission further stated that it:

> 16. Notes with grave concern that Slobodan Miloševic and other senior leaders of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) continue to maintain positions of power despite their indictment for war crimes and crimes against humanity, that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) has repeatedly ignored the orders of the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia to transfer indicted war criminals to The Hague for trial and has not transferred even one indictee to The Hague since the inception of the Tribunal;
> 17. Stresses the evidence that the most senior leaders of the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) are responsible for the continuing refusal of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to meet its obligations to cooperate with the Tribunal;
> 18. Demands, in accordance with Security Council resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 and the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) cooperate fully with the Tribunal and, in particular, permit immediate access to all parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), firstly through prompt issuance of requested visas to officials of the Tribunal to conduct investigations;
> . . .
> 20. Calls upon authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) to:
> (a) Comply fully with the obligation to cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia;
> . . .
> 36. Welcomes the transfer to the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia by the Government of Croatia of indicted war criminals, including Mladen Naletilic ("Tuta");

[1206] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/91, 8 March 1995, § 5; Res. 1996/76, 23 April 1996, § 5.
[1207] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, §§ 5 and 6.
[1208] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2000/26, 18 April 2000, § 3(e).

...

45. Calls upon all parties to the Peace Agreement, especially the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), to meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, noting that there is no valid constitutional or statutory reason for failure to cooperate, and urges all parties to respect the "rules of the road" for the submission of cases to the Tribunal;
46. Urges all States and the Secretary-General to support the Tribunal to the fullest extent possible, in particular by helping to ensure that persons indicted by the Tribunal stand trial before it, by ensuring that victims and witnesses are given adequate protection and by continuing to make available to the Tribunal adequate resources to aid in the fulfilment of its mandate;
47. Welcomes the close cooperation between the Stabilization Force and the Tribunal that has led to a substantial number of arrests of persons indicted for war crimes, the most recent example of which is the arrest of Momcilo Krajisnik;
48. Calls upon all indicted persons to surrender voluntarily to the custody of the Tribunal, as required by the Peace Agreement;
49. Urgently calls once again upon authorities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including those of the Federation and in particular in the Republika Srpska, to apprehend and surrender for prosecution all persons indicted by the Tribunal, as required by Security Council resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 and the statement by the President of the Security Council of 8 May 1996, and calls upon all parties to cooperate in the apprehension and surrender of indictees who may be in their territory.[1209]

1147. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on the situation of human rights in south-eastern Europe, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged all States and parties to the 1995 Dayton Accords to:

to meet their obligations to cooperate fully with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, as required by Security Council resolution 827 (1993) of 25 May 1993 and all subsequent relevant resolutions, and in particular to comply with their obligations to arrest and transfer to the custody of the Tribunal all those indicted persons present in their territories or under their control.[1210]

The Commission also called upon the authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina to "cooperate fully with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, in particular for the apprehension of former Republika Srpska President Radovan Karadžić and former Bosnian Serb General Ratko Mladić".[1211] It also welcomed:

the commitment of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, [noted] the first steps it has undertaken in this regard and [urged] all authorities of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to comply fully with their obligations to cooperate with the Tribunal, [1209] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2000/26, 18 April 2000, §§ 16–18, 20(a), 36 and 45–49.

[1210] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/12, 18 April 2001, § 10.
[1211] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/12, 18 April 2001, § 19.

in particular concerning the apprehension and extradition of persons indicted for war crimes.[1212]

The Commission further suggested the appointment of a special representative of the Commission with the task to "closely monitor the situation, paying particular attention to those areas that remain a source of concern, including cooperation with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia".[1213]

1148. In a resolution on impunity adopted in 2002, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon States:

> to continue to support the work of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda and consider ways of supporting the initiatives to establish judicial mechanisms currently under consideration in a few countries in cooperation with the United Nations, and in this regard encourages the continuation or resumption, where needed, of discussions regarding the establishment of appropriate legal frameworks in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law.[1214]

1149. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights welcomed the ICTY decision to implement its first indictments as well as:

> the progress made by the Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal and [called] on all States, as required under Security Council resolution 827 (1993) of 23 May 1993, to cooperate with the International Tribunal in providing information and evidence for investigations and trials and in the apprehension and surrender of persons accused of crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal.[1215]

1150. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1996, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights appealed "to the international community to provide the [ICTR] and the Government of Rwanda with the necessary means to enable them to prosecute and try those guilty of . . . genocide and massacres". It further urged "all States in whose territory there are persons allegedly responsible for acts of genocide to arrest those persons so that they can be . . . extradited at the request of the International Criminal Tribunal or the Rwandan authorities".[1216]

Other International Organisations

1151. In 1993 and 1995, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe welcomed the establishment of the ICTY, insisting that "the perpetrators of

[1212] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/12, 18 April 2001, § 25.
[1213] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/12, 18 April 2001, § 40(b).
[1214] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/79, 25 April 2002, § 7.
[1215] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, preamble and § 8.
[1216] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/3, 19 August 1996, § 4 and § 6

such offences be brought to justice with the fullest possible co-operation of those representing the sides concerned".[1217]

1152. In 1997, during plenary discussions in the UN General Assembly on a report of the ICTY, Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the EU as well as the Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia and Cyprus, stated that:

> We would like to stress the need for unstinting cooperation by all States and all parties with the [ICTY], to enable it to perform its duties satisfactorily.
>
> ... The legal obligation to cooperate with the Tribunal is mentioned in article 29 of its statute. The handing over or transfer of indictees for whom arrest warrants have been issued is essential in order to assure the Tribunal's proper functioning and credibility. The European Union believes that the international community must see to it that article 29 of the statute is fully implemented ...
>
> ... Whereas Croatia and the central authorities of Bosnia and Herzegovina have complied, to varying degrees, with the Tribunal's orders, the two entities that make up Bosnia and Herzegovina? the Republika Srpska and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has not, thus defying the authority of the United Nations ...
>
> Nothing can justify the non-execution of arrest warrants. It is essential that States adopt the necessary legislative, administrative and judicial measures to ensure the speedy execution of the orders issued by the Tribunal. Although many States have promulgated enforcement legislation to discharge their responsibilities, the European Union continues to be concerned that, generally speaking, the situation is unsatisfactory.
>
> Moreover, the European Union reaffirms that it is imperative to give proper financial support and to ensure effective personnel management in the Tribunal ...
>
> The European Union and its member States will continue to make voluntary contributions to help the Tribunal's work; it will provide full support for its smooth functioning. To that end, a cooperative relationship with the various republics is contingent upon their compliance with the peace accords and their cooperation with the International Tribunal.[1218]

International Conferences

1153. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1154. Several indictments by the ICTY and ICTR have recalled the obligation upon States to cooperate with the international tribunals. For instance, in the Karadžić and Mladić case (Review of the Indictments) in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber, acting pursuant to Rule 61 of the ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence, stated that "the failure to effect personal service of the indictments and [1217] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 1218, 27 September 1993; Res. 1066, 27 September 1995, § 7.

[1218] EU, Statement by Luxembourg on behalf of the EU and associated States before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/52/PV.44, 4 November 1997, p. 5.

to execute the warrants of arrest issued against Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić may be ascribed to the refusal of Republika Srpska and to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to cooperate with the Tribunal".[1219]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1155. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

1156. In its report to the OSCE on a fact-finding mission to Chechnya in 1996, the International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights recommended that "the OSCE openly and vigorously support in principle the establishment of an appropriate international judicial process for investigating and prosecuting allegations of violations of humanitarian law committed by both parties to the conflict in Chechnya".[1220]

[1219] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Review of the Indictments, 11 July 1996, § 101.
[1220] International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights, Report to the OSCE: Fact-Finding Mission to Chechnya, 1–11 October 1996, Vienna, 16 October 1996, pp. 8–9.

APPENDICES

TREATIES

1864
GC
Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded in Armies in the Field, Geneva, 22 August 1864.

1868
St. Petersburg Declaration
Declaration Renouncing the Use, in Time of War, of Explosive Projectiles Under 400 Grammes Weight, St. Petersburg, 29 November–11 December 1868.

1874
Extradition Treaty between Peru and France
Extradition Treaty between Peru and France, Paris, 30 September 1874.

1881
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Spain
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Spain, Buenos Aires, 7 May 1881.

1886
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Belgium
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Belgium, Brussels, 12 August 1886.
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Italy
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Italy, Rome, 16 June 1886.

1889
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the UK
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the United Kingdom, Buenos Aires, 22 May 1889.
Montevideo Treaty on International Criminal Law
Treaty on International Criminal Law concluded between Argentina, Bolivia, Paraguay and Uruguay, Montevideo, 23 January 1889.

1893
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the Netherlands
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the Netherlands, Buenos Aires, 7 September 1893.

1899
Hague Convention (II)
Convention (II) with Respect to the Laws and Customs of War on Land, The Hague, 29 July 1899.

HR
Regulations concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, annexed to Convention (II) with Respect to the Laws and Customs of War on Land, The Hague, 29 July 1899.
Hague Convention (III)
Convention (III) for the Adaptation to Maritime Warfare of the Principles of the Geneva Convention of 22 August 1864, The Hague, 29 July 1899.
Hague Declaration concerning Asphyxiating Gases
Declaration (IV, 2) concerning Asphyxiating Gases, The Hague, 29 July 1899.
Hague Declaration concerning Expanding Bullets
Declaration (IV, 3) concerning Expanding Bullets, The Hague, 29 July 1899.

1902
Agreement Ending the Boer War
Agreement between Great Britain and the Orange Free State and the South African Republic as to the Terms of Surrender of the Boer Forces in the Field, Pretoria, 31 May 1902.

1904
Extradition Treaty between Peru and the UK
Extradition Treaty between Peru and the United Kingdom, Lima, 26 January 1904.

1906
GC
Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armies in the Field, Geneva, 6 July 1906.

1907
Hague Convention (IV)
Convention (IV) respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, The Hague, 18 October 1907.
HR
Regulations concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, annexed to Convention (IV) respecting the Laws and Customs of War on Land, The Hague, 18 October 1907.
Hague Convention (IX)
Hague Convention (IX) concerning Bombardment by Naval Forces in Time of War, The Hague, 18 October 1907.
Hague Convention (X)
Hague Convention (X) for the Adaptation to Maritime Warfare of the Principles of the Geneva Convention, The Hague, 18 October 1907.

1919
Extradition Treaty between Brazil and Peru
Extradition Treaty between Brazil and Peru, Rio de Janeiro, 13 February 1919.
Treaty of Versailles
Treaty of Versailles, Versailles, 28 June 1919.

1921

Convention for the Suppression of Traffic in Women and Children

International Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children, Geneva, 30 September 1921, amended by a Protocol adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 126 (II), 20 October 1947.

1922

Treaty on the Use of Submarines and Noxious Gases in Warfare

Treaty on the Use of Submarines and Noxious Gases in Warfare between France, Italy, Japan, UK and US, Washington, D.C., 6 February 1922.

1925

Geneva Gas Protocol

Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, Geneva, 17 June 1925.

1926

Slavery Convention

Convention to Suppress the Slave Trade and Slavery, adopted by the League of Nations, Geneva, 25 September 1926, as amended by the Protocol amending the Slavery Convention, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 794 (VIII), 23 October 1953.

1928

Bustamante Code

Convention on International Private Law, adopted at the 4th Panamerican Conference, Havana, 20 February 1928.

1929

GC

Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armies in the Field, Geneva, 27 July 1929.

Geneva POW Convention

Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, Geneva, 27 July 1929.

1930

Forced Labour Convention

Convention concerning Forced or Compulsory Labour, ILO Convention No. 29, adopted by the ILO General Conference, Geneva, 28 June 1930.

1932

Extradition Treaty between Peru and Chile

Extradition Treaty between Peru and Chile, Lima, 5 November 1932.

1933

Inter-American Convention on Extradition

Inter-American Convention on Extradition, Montevideo, 26 December 1933.

1935

Roerich Pact

Treaty on the Protection of Artistic and Scientific Institutions and Historic Monuments (Roerich Pact), Washington, D.C., 15 April 1935.

1944

Chicago Convention

Convention on International Civil Aviation, Chicago, 7 December 1944, as amended by the Protocol relating to an Amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, Montreal, 10 May 1984.

1945

IMT Charter (Nuremberg)

Charter of the International Military Tribunal for Germany, concluded by the Government of the United States of America, the Provisional Government of the French Republic, the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, acting in the interests of all the United Nations and by their representatives duly authorized thereto, annexed to the London Agreement, London, 8 August 1945.

London Agreement

Agreement between the Government of the United States of America, the Provisional Government of the French Republic, the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the Prosecution and Punishment of the Major War Criminals of the European Axis, London, 8 August 1945.

UN Charter

Charter of the United Nations, adopted by the Conference on International Organisations, San Francisco, 26 June 1945.

1946

Paris Agreement on Reparation from Germany

Agreement on Reparation from Germany, on the Establishment of an Inter-Allied Reparation Agency and on the Restitution of Monetary Gold, concluded between Albania, the United States of America, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, France, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Greece, India, Luxembourg, Norway, New Zealand, Netherlands, Czechoslovakia, Union of South Africa and Yugoslavia, Paris, 14 January 1946.

1947

Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Bulgaria

Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers on the one part and Bulgaria on the other part, Paris, 10 February 1947.

Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Finland

Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers on the one part and Finland on the other part, Paris, 10 February 1947.

Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Hungary

Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers on the one part and Hungary on the other part, Paris, 10 February 1947.

Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Italy
Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers on the one part and Italy on the other part, Paris, 10 February 1947.
Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Romania
Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers on the one part and Romania on the other part, Paris, 10 February 1947.

1948
Brussels Treaty
Treaty of Economic, Social and Cultural Collaboration and Collective Self-Defence, Brussels, 17 March 1948.
Genocide Convention
Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 260 A (III), 9 December 1948.

1949
Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others
Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 317 (IV), 2 December 1949.
GC I
Convention (I) for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, Geneva, 12 August 1949.
GC II
Convention (II) for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea, Geneva, 12 August 1949.
GC III
Convention (III) relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, Geneva, 12 August 1949.
GC IV
Convention (IV) relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, Geneva, 12 August 1949.
Karachi Agreement
Karachi Agreement Establishing a Cease-fire Line in the State of Jammu and Kashmir concluded between India and Pakistan, Karachi, 27 July 1949.

1950
ECHR
European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Rome, 4 November 1950, as amended by Protocol No. 11, Strasbourg, 11 May 1994.
Statute of the UNHCR
Statute of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 428 (V), 14 December 1950.

1951
Peace Treaty for Japan
Treaty of Peace signed between the Allied Powers and Japan, San Francisco, 8 September 1951.

Refugee Convention
Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, adopted by the UN Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Status of Refugees and Stateless Persons convened pursuant to UN General Assembly Res. 429 (V), Geneva, 28 July 1951, as amended by the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees, approved by the UN Economic and Social Council, Res. 1186 (XLI), 18 November 1966, and taken note of by the UN General Assembly, Res. 2198 (XXI), 16 December 1966.

1952

Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation
Convention on the Settlement of Matters Arising out of the War and the Occupation (with Annex), Bonn, 26 May 1952, also known as the Transference Treaty, as amended by Schedule IV to the Protocol on the Termination of the Occupation Régime in the Federal Republic of Germany, Paris, 23 October 1954.

Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and Israel
Agreement between the State of Israel and the Federal Republic of Germany (with Schedule, Annexes, Exchanges of Letters and Protocols), Luxembourg, 10 September 1952.

Protocol to the ECHR
Protocol to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Paris, 20 March 1950.

1953

Panmunjom Armistice Agreement
Agreement between the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, on the one hand, and the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, on the other hand, concerning a Military Armistice in Korea, Panmunjom, 27 July 1953.

Constitution of the IOM
Constitution of the International Organization for Migration, Brussels, as adopted by a resolution dated 5 December 1951, 19 October 1953, as amended on 20 May 1987.

1954

Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities in Viet-Nam
Agreement on the Cessation of Hostilities in Viet-Nam, concluded between France and the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, Geneva, 20 July 1954.

Hague Convention
Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, The Hague, 14 May 1954.

Hague Protocol
Protocol for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, The Hague, 14 May 1954.

Protocols to the Brussels Treaty on the WEU
Protocols to the 1948 Brussels Treaty establishing the Western European Union, Paris, 23 October 1954, also known as the Paris Agreements on the Western European Union.

1955

Austrian State Treaty

State Treaty for the Re-establishment of an Independent and Democratic Austria (with Annexes and Maps), concluded between France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America and Austria, accession of Australia, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Mexico, New Zealand, Poland and Yugoslavia, Vienna, 15 May 1955.

1956

Joint Declaration on Soviet-Japanese Relations

Joint Declaration by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Japan concerning the restoration of diplomatic relations between the two countries, Moscow, 19 October 1956.

Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery

Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, adopted by a Conference of Plenipotentiaries convened by the UN Economic and Social Council pursuant to Res. 608 (XXI), Geneva, 7 September 1956.

Yoshida-Stikker Protocol

Protocol between the Government of the Kingdom of the Netherlands and the Government of Japan relating to settlement of the problem concerning certain types of private claims of Dutch nationals, following the Exchange of Letters between the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands, Dirk U. Stikker, and the Prime Minister of Japan, Shigeru Yoshida, 7–8 September 1951, Tokyo, 13 March 1956.

1957

Convention concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour

Convention concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour, ILO Convention No. 105, adopted by the ILO General Conference, Geneva, 25 June 1957.

European Convention on Extradition

European Convention on Extradition, Paris, 13 December 1957.

1959

Agreement concerning Payments on behalf of Norwegian Nationals Victimized by National Socialist Persecution

Agreement concerning Payments on behalf of Norwegian Nationals Victimized by National Socialist Persecution (with Exchange of Notes) between the Federal Republic of Germany and Norway, Oslo, 7 August 1959.

European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters

European Convention on Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters, Strasbourg, 20 April 1959.

1961

Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs

Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, adopted by the Conference of Plenipotentiaries for the Adoption of a Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, New York, 30 March 1961.

1962

Extradition Treaty between Venezuela and Chile
Extradition Treaty between Venezuela and Chile, Santiago de Chile, 2 June 1962.

1963

Protocol 4 to the ECHR
Protocol No. 4 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Strasbourg, 16 September 1963.

1965

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination
International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 2106 A (XX), 21 December 1965.

1966

ICCPR
International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 2200 A (XXI), 16 December 1966.

ICESCR
International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 2200 A (XXI), 16 December 1966.

1968

UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 2391 (XXIII), 26 November 1968.

1969

ACHR
American Convention on Human Rights, adopted by the OAS Inter-American Specialized Conference on Human Rights, San José, 22 November 1969, also known as Pact of San José.

Convention Governing Refugee Problems in Africa
Convention Governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, adopted by the Sixth Ordinary Session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, Addis Ababa, 10 September 1969.

Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties Convention on the Law of Treaties, Vienna, 23 May 1969.

1970

Convention on the Illicit Trade in Cultural Property
Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property, adopted by the 16th Session of the UNESCO General Conference, Paris, 14 November 1970.

Hague Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft, The Hague, 16 December 1970.

1971

Convention on Psychotropic Substances
Convention on Psychotropic Substances, Vienna, 21 February 1971.

Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation, Montreal, 23 September 1971.

OAS Convention to Prevent and Punish Acts of Terrorism
Convention to Prevent and Punish the Acts of Terrorism Taking the Form of Crimes against Persons and Related Extortion That Are of International Significance, adopted by the Third Special Session of the OAS General Assembly, Washington, D.C., 2 February 1971.

1972

BWC
Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction, opened for signature at London, Moscow and Washington, D.C., 10 April 1972.

Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the United States of America, Washington, D.C., 21 January 1972, superseded by the 1997 Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the United States of America.

Protocol Amending the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs Protocol Amending the 1961 UN Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, Geneva, 25 March 1972.

1973

Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam
Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam, signed on behalf of the United States of America, the Republic of Viet-Nam, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, and the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Viet-Nam, Paris, 27 January 1973.

Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons
Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 3166 (XXVIII), 14 December 1973.

Extradition Treaty between Uruguay and the US
Treaty on Extradition and Co-operation in Penal Matters between Uruguay and the United States of America, Washington, D.C., 6 April 1973.

International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 3068 (XXVIII), 30 November 1973.

Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam Protocol on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Personnel, signed on behalf of the United States of America, the Republic of Viet-Nam, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, and the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Viet-Nam, Paris, 27 January 1973.

1974

Agreement on Repatriation of Detainees between Bangladesh, India and Pakistan
Agreement on the Repatriation of Prisoners of War and Civilian Internees between Bangladesh, India and Pakistan, New Delhi, 9 April 1974.

Disengagement Agreement between Israel and Syria
Separation of Forces Agreement between Israel and Syria, Geneva, 31 May 1974.

European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes
European Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, Strasbourg, 25 January 1974.

NATO STANAG 2132
Standardization Agreement 2132, Edition 2, Documentation Relative to Medical Evacuation, Treatment and Cause of Death of Patients, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Military Agency for Standardization, Brussels, 7 August 1974.

1975

Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Extradition
Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Extradition, Strasbourg, 15 October 1975.

1976

ENMOD Convention
Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 31/72, 10 December 1976.

1977

AP I
Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I), Geneva, 8 June 1977.

AP II
Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, and relating to the Protection of Victims of Non-International Armed Conflicts (Protocol II), Geneva, 8 June 1977.

European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism
European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism, Strasbourg, 27 January 1977.

OAU Convention against Mercenarism
Convention for the Elimination of Mercenarism in Africa, adopted by the OAU Council of Ministers at its 29th Session, Res. 817 (XXIX), Libreville, 3 July 1977, OAU Doc. CM/817 (XXIX) Annex II Rev.3 (1977).

1978

Second Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Extradition
Second Additional Protocol to the European Convention on Extradition, Strasbourg, 17 March 1978.

1979

Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women
Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 34/180, 18 December 1979.

Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material
Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, Vienna, 26 October 1979.

International Convention against the Taking of Hostages
International Convention against the Taking of Hostages, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 34/146, 17 December 1979.

Peace Treaty between Israel and Egypt
Treaty of Peace between the Government of the State of Israel and the Government of the Arab Republic of Egypt, Washington, D.C., 26 March 1979.

1980

CCW
Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, Geneva, 10 October 1980.

Protocol I to the CCW
Protocol on Non-detectable Fragments, to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, Geneva, 10 October 1980.

Protocol II to the CCW
Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices, to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, Geneva, 10 October 1980.

Protocol III to the CCW
Protocol on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Incendiary Weapons, to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, Geneva, 10 October 1980.

1981

ACHPR
African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, adopted by the Eighteenth Ordinary Session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, Nairobi, 27 June 1981, OAU Doc. CAB/LEG/67/3 rev.5.

1983

Protocol 6 to the ECHR
Protocol No. 6 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms concerning the Abolition of the Death Penalty, Strasbourg, 28 April 1983.

1984

Convention against Torture
Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 39/46, 10 December 1984.

Protocol Amending the Chicago Convention
Protocol Relating to an Amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, Montreal, 10 May 1984.
Protocol 7 to the ECHR
Protocol No. 7 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Strasbourg, 22 November 1984.

1985
Inter-American Convention against Torture
Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, adopted by the Fifteenth Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly, Res. 783 (XV-O/85), Cartagena de Indias, 9 December 1985.

1987
Agreement to Establish Peace and Normalcy in Sri Lanka
Indo-Sri Lankan Agreement to Establish Peace and Normalcy in Sri Lanka, Colombo, 29 July 1987.
Esquipulas II Accords
Procedure for the Establishment of a Firm and Lasting Peace in Central America, signed by the Presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua, Guatemala City, 7 August 1987, annexed to Letter dated 27 August 1987 from the Permanent Representatives of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/42/521-S/19085, 31 August 1987.
European Convention for the Prevention of Torture
European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, Strasbourg, 26 November 1987.
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Italy
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Italy, Rome, 9 December 1987.
Extradition Treaty between Spain and Argentina
Treaty between Spain and the Argentine Republic on Extradition and Judicial Assistance in Criminal Matters, Buenos Aires, 3 March 1987.
NATO STANAG 2067
Standardization Agreement 2067, Edition 5, Control and Return of Stragglers, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Military Agency for Standardization, Brussels, 10 June 1987.

1988
Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation, Rome, 10 March 1988.
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Australia
Extradition Treaty between Argentina and Australia, Buenos Aires, 6 October 1988.
Protocol of San Salvador
Additional Protocol to the American Convention on Human Rights in the Area of Social, Economic and Cultural Rights, adopted by the Eighteenth Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly, Res. 907 (XVIII-O/88), San Salvador, 17 November 1988.

1989

Extradition Treaty between Peru and Spain
Extradition Treaty between Peru and Spain, Madrid, 28 June 1989.

Convention on the Rights of the Child
Convention on the Rights of the Child, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 44/25, 20 November 1989.

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention
Convention concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries, ILO Convention No. 169, adopted by the ILO General Conference, Geneva, 27 June 1989.

Second Optional Protocol to the ICCPR
Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming at the Abolition of the Death Penalty, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 44/128, 15 December 1989.

UN Mercenary Convention
International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 44/34, 4 December 1989.

US-Soviet Memorandum of Understanding on the Pursuit of Nazi War Criminals
Memorandum of Understanding concerning Cooperation in the Pursuit of Nazi War Criminals between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Moscow, 19 October 1989.

1990

African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child
African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child, adopted by the Sixteenth Ordinary Session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, Res. 197 (XVI), Monrovia, 17–20 July 1990, OAU Doc. CAB/LEG/24.9/49 (1990).

Implementation Agreement to the German Unification Treaty
Vereinbarung zwischen der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik zur Durchführung und Auslegung des am 31. August 1990 in Berlin unterzeichneten Vertrags zwischen der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und der Deutschen Demokratischen Republik über die Herstellung der Einheit Deutschlands, Bonn, 18 September 1990.

US-Soviet Chemical Weapons Agreement
Agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on Destruction and Non-Production of Chemical Weapons and on Measures to Facilitate the Multilateral Convention on Banning Chemical Weapons, Washington, D.C., 1 June 1990.

1992

Convention on Biodiversity
Convention on Biological Diversity, adopted at the UN Conference on Environment and Development, Rio de Janeiro, 5 June 1992.

Extradition Treaty between Chile and Spain
Treaty on Extradition and Judicial Assistance in Criminal Matters between Chile and Spain, Santiago de Chile, 14 April 1992.

Finnish-Russian Agreement on War Dead
Agreement on Cooperation in Perpetuating the Memory of Finnish Servicemen in Russia and Russian (Soviet) Servicemen in Finland Who Fell in the Second World War, Helsinki, 11 July 1992.
India-Pakistan Declaration on Prohibition of Chemical Weapons
Declaration on the Complete Prohibition of Chemical Weapons between India and Pakistan, New Delhi, 19 August 1992.

1993
CIS Agreement on the Protection of Victims of Armed Conflicts
Agreement on Primary Measures for Protection of Victims of Armed Conflicts, Commonwealth of Independent States, Moscow, 24 September 1993.
CWC
Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction, Paris, 13 January 1993.
Extradition Treaty between Australia and Chile
Extradition Treaty between Australia and Chile, Canberra, 6 October 1993.

1994
Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel
Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 49/59, 9 December 1994.
Extradition Treaty between Peru and Italy
Extradition Treaty between Peru and Italy, Rome, 24 November 1994.
Inter-American Convention on Violence against Women
Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women, adopted by the Twenty-fourth Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly, Res. 1257 (XXIV-O/94), Belém do Pará, 9 June 1994.
Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons
Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons, adopted by the Twenty-fourth Regular Session of the OAS General Assembly, Res. 1256 (XXIV-O/94), Belém do Pará, 9 June 1994.
Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs
Quadripartite Agreement on Voluntary Return of Refugees and Displaced Persons in the Republic of Georgia, between the Abkhaz and Georgian Sides, the Russian Federation and UNHCR, Moscow, 4 April 1994, annexed to Letter dated 5 April 1994 from the permanent representative of Georgia to the UN addressed to the President of the Security Council, UN Doc. S/1994/397, 5 April 1994, Annex II.

1995
Agreement between the Government of Croatia and UNCRO
Agreement between the Government of the Republic of Croatia and the United Nations Peace Forces (UNPF)-United Nations Confidence Restoration Operation (UNCRO) on temporary measures in the areas formerly known as "Sector North" and "Sector South", Zagreb, 6 August 1995, annexed to Letter dated 7 August 1995 from the UN Secretary-General addressed to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1995/666, 7 August 1995, Annex III.
Agreement on Human Rights annexed to the Dayton Accords
General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Annex 6, Agreement on Human Rights, signed by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska, Dayton, 22 November 1995.

Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Peace Settlement annexed to the Dayton Accords
General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Annex 1A, Military Aspects of the Peace Settlement, signed by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska, Dayton, 22 November 1995.

Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons annexed to the Dayton Accords
General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Annex 7, Agreement on Refugees and Displaced Persons, signed by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska, Dayton, 22 November 1995.

Dayton Accords
General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina, initialled in Dayton, 21 November 1995, signed in Paris, 14 December 1995.

Protocol IV to the CCW
Protocol on Blinding Laser Weapons, to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, Vienna, 13 October 1995.

US-Germany Agreement concerning Final Benefits to Certain US Nationals Who Were Victims of National Socialist Measures of Persecution Agreement between the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Government of the United States of America concerning Final Benefits to Certain United States Nationals Who Were Victims of National Socialist Measures of Persecution, Bonn, 19 September 1995, also known as the Princz Agreement.

1996

Agreement on the Normalization of Relations between Croatia and the FRY Agreement on Normalization of Relations between the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Belgrade, 23 August 1996.

Amended Protocol II to the CCW
Protocol on Prohibitions on the Use of Mines, Booby-Traps and Other Devices, as amended, to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects, Geneva, 3 May 1996.

Israel-Lebanon Ceasefire Understanding
Israel-Lebanon Ceasefire Understanding, concluded between the United States of America, Israel and Lebanon, in consultation with Syria, 26 April 1996, also known as the Grapes of Wrath Understanding.

1997

Agreement of the Joint Working Group on Operational Procedures of Return Agreement of the Joint Working Group on the Operational Procedures of Return between Croatia, UNTAES and UNHCR, Osijek, 23 April 1997, annexed to Letter dated 25 April 1997 from the Permanent Representative of Croatia to the UN addressed to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1997/341, 28 April 1997.

Estonian-Finnish Agreement on War Dead
Agreement on Cooperation in Acknowledging the Memory of the War Victims, concluded between Estonia and Finland, Parnu, 16 August 1997.

Extradition Treaty between Argentina and the US
Extradition Treaty between the Republic of Argentina and the United States of America, Buenos Aires, 10 June 1997.
Ottawa Convention
Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, Ottawa, 18 September 1997.

1998
Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance
Draft International Convention on the Protection of all Persons from Forced Disappearance, reprinted in Report of the sessional working group on the administration of justice, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/19, 19 August 1998, Annex.
ICC Statute
Statute of the International Criminal Court, adopted by the UN Diplomatic Conference of Plenipotentiaries on the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, Rome, 17 July 1998, UN Doc. A/CONF.183/9.

1999
Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labour
Convention concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour, ILO Convention No. 182, adopted by the ILO General Conference, Geneva, 17 June 1999.
NATO STANAG 2070
Standardization Agreement 2070, Edition 4, Emergency War Burial Procedures, North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Military Agency for Standardization, Brussels, 6 April 1999.
Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention
Second Protocol for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, The Hague, 26 March 1999.

2000
Agreement on the Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and the Future"
Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany concerning the Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and the Future", Berlin, 17 July 2000.
Austrian-Belarussian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund
Abkommen zwischen der Österreichischen Bundesregierung und der Regierung der Republik Belarus über die Zusammenarbeit bei den freiwilligen Leistungen der Republik Österreich an ehemalige Sklaven- und Zwangsarbeiter des nationalsozialistischen Regimes, Vienna, 24 October 2000.
Austrian-Czech Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund
Abkommen zwischen der Österreichischen Bundesregierung und der Regierung der Tschechischen Republik über die Zusammenarbeit bei den freiwilligen Leistungen der Republik Österreich an ehemalige Sklaven- und Zwangsarbeiter des nationalsozialistischen Regimes, Vienna, 24 October 2000.
Austrian-Hungarian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund
Abkommen zwischen der Österreichischen Bundesregierung und der Regierung der Republik Ungarn über die Zusammenarbeit bei den freiwilligen Leistungen der Republik Österreich an ehemalige Sklaven- und Zwangsarbeiter des nationalsozialistischen Regimes, Vienna, 24 October 2000.

Austrian-Polish Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund
Abkommen zwischen der Österreichischen Bundesregierung und der Regierung der Republik Polen über die Zusammenarbeit bei den freiwilligen Leistungen der Republik Österreich an ehemalige Sklaven- und Zwangsarbeiter des nationalsozialistischen Regimes, Vienna, 24 October 2000.

Austrian-Russian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund
Abkommen zwischen der Österreichischen Bundesregierung und der Regierung der Russischen Föderation über die Zusammenarbeit bei den freiwilligen Leistungen der Republik Österreich an ehemalige Sklaven- und Zwangsarbeiter des nationalsozialistischen Regimes, Vienna, 27 November 2000.

Austrian-Ukrainian Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund
Abkommen zwischen der Österreichischen Bundesregierung und der Regierung der Ukraine über die Zusammenarbeit bei den freiwilligen Leistungen der Republik Österreich an ehemalige Sklaven- und Zwangsarbeiter des nationalsozialistischen Regimes, Vienna, 24 October 2000.

Austrian-US Executive Agreement concerning the Austrian Reconciliation Fund
Agreement between the Austrian Federal Government and the Government of the United States of America concerning the Austrian Fund "Reconciliation, Peace and Cooperation", Vienna, 24 October 2000.

Optional Protocol on Child Trade, Prostitution and Pornography
Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 54/263, 25 May 2000, Annex II.

Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts
Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 54/263, 25 May 2000, Annex I.

Peace Agreement between Eritrea and Ethiopia
Agreement between the Government of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia and the Government of the State of Eritrea, Algiers, 12 December 2000, also known as the Algiers Agreement.

Protocol on Trafficking in Persons
Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the UN Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 55/25, 15 November 2000, Annex II.

Protocol 12 to the ECHR
Protocol No. 12 to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms concerning the general prohibition of discrimination, Rome, 4 November 2000.

2001

Amendment to Article 1 of the 1980 CCW
Amendment to Article I of the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects (CCW), Geneva, 21 December 2001.

Annex A to the Austrian-US Agreement concerning the Austrian General Settlement Fund

Joint Settlement Statement on Holocaust Restitution, 17 January 2001, together with Diplomatic Note No. 14 from the US to Austria, Vienna, 23 January 2001 and Annexes A, B and C to the Agreement.

Washington Agreement between France and the US Concerning Payments for Certain Losses Suffered During World War II

Agreement between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of France Concerning Payments for Certain Losses Suffered During World War II, Washington, 18 January 2001.

2002

SAARC Convention on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Women and Children for Prostitution

South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) Convention on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Women and Children for Prostitution, Kathmandu, 5 January 2002.

Agreement on the Special Court for Sierra Leone

Agreement between the United Nations and the Government of Sierra Leone on the Establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, Freetown, 16 January 2002, annexed to Letter dated 6 March 2002 from the UN Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council, UN Doc. S/2002/246, 8 March 2002, p. 17.

Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 57/199, 18 December 2002.

Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone

Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, annexed to the 2002 Agreement on the Special Court for Sierra Leone, Freetown, 16 January 2002, annexed to Letter dated 6 March 2002 from the UN Secretary-General to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/2002/246, 8 March 2002, p. 29.

2003

Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights on the Establishment of an African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights

Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples Rights on the Establishment of an African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights, signed at Ouagadougou on 10 June 1998.

Protocol to the ACHPR on the Rights of Women in Africa

Protocol to the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights on the Rights of Women in Africa, Maputo, 11 July 2003.

STATUS OF RATIFICATIONS
(as of 21 April 2004)

Country	1925 Geneva Gas Protocol	1935 Roerich Pact	1949 Geneva Conventions	1954 Hague Convention	1954 Hague Protocol	1966 ICESCR
Afghanistan	09.12.1986		26.09.1956			24.01.1983
Albania	20.12.1989		27.05.1957	20.12.1960	20.12.1960	04.10.1991
Algeria	27.01.1992		20.06.1960			12.09.1989
Andorra			17.09.1993
Angola	08.11.1990		20.09.1984			10.01.1992
Antigua and Barbuda	27.04.1989		06.10.1986
Argentina	12.05.1969		18.09.1956	22.03.1989		08.08.1986
Armenia			07.06.1993	05.09.1993	05.09.1993	13.09.1993
Australia	23.05.1930		14.10.1958	19.09.1984		10.12.1975
Austria	09.05.1928		27.08.1953	25.03.1964	25.03.1964	10.09.1978
Azerbaijan			01.06.1993	20.09.1993	20.09.1993	13.08.1992
Bahamas			11.07.1975
Bahrain	09.12.1988		30.11.1971
Bangladesh	20.05.1989		04.04.1972			05.10.1998
Barbados	16.07.1976		10.09.1968	09.04.2002		05.01.1973
Belarus			03.08.1954	07.05.1957	07.05.1957	12.11.1973
Belgium	04.12.1928		03.09.1952	16.09.1960	16.09.1960	21.04.1983
Belize			29.06.1984
Benin	09.12.1986		14.12.1961			12.03.1992
Bhutan	19.02.1979		10.01.1991
Bolivia	13.08.1985		10.12.1976			12.08.1982
Bosnia and Herzegovina			31.12.1992	12.07.1993	12.07.1993	01.09.1993
Botswana			29.03.1968	03.01.2002
Brazil	28.08.1970	05.08.1936	29.06.1957	12.09.1958	12.09.1958	24.01.1992
Brunei Darussalam			14.10.1991
Bulgaria	07.03.1934		22.07.1954	07.08.1956	09.10.1958	21.09.1970
Burkina Faso	03.03.1971		07.11.1961	18.12.1969	04.02.1987	04.01.1999
Burundi			27.12.1971			09.05.1990
Cambodia	15.03.1983		08.12.1958	04.04.1962	04.04.1962	26.05.1992
Cameroon	20.07.1989		16.09.1963	12.10.1961	12.10.1961	27.06.1984
Canada	06.05.1930		14.05.1965	11.12.1998		19.05.1976
Cape Verde	15.10.1991		11.05.1984			06.08.1993

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1925 Geneva Gas Protocol	1935 Roerich Pact	1949 Geneva Conventions	1954 Hague Convention	1954 Hague Protocol	1966 ICESCR
Central African Republic	31.07.1970		01.08.1966			08.05.1981
Chad			05.08.1970			09.06.1995
Chile	20.07.1935	08.09.1936	12.10.1950			10.02.1972
China	13.07.1952		28.12.1956	05.01.2000	05.01.2000	27.03.2001
Colombia		20.02.1937	08.11.1961	18.06.1998	18.06.1998	29.10.1969
Comoros			21.11.1985
Congo			04.02.1967			05.10.1983
Congo (Dem. Rep. of)			24.02.1961	18.04.1961	18.04.1961	01.11.1976
Cook Islands			11.06.2001
Costa Rica			15.10.1969	03.06.1998	03.06.1998	29.11.1968
Côte d'Ivoire	27.07.1970		28.12.1961	24.01.1980		26.03.1992
Croatia			11.05.1992	06.07.1992	06.07.1992	12.10.1992
Cuba	24.06.1966	26.08.1935	15.04.1954	26.11.1957	26.11.1957
Cyprus	12.12.1966		23.05.1962	09.09.1964	09.09.1964	02.04.1969
Czech Republic	16.08.1938		05.02.1993	26.03.1993	26.03.1993	22.02.1993
Denmark	05.05.1930		27.06.1951	26.03.2003	26.03.2003	06.01.1972
Djibouti			06.03.1978			05.11.2002
Dominica			28.09.1981			17.06.1993
Dominican Republic	08.12.1970	02.11.1936	22.01.1958	05.01.1960	21.03.2002	04.01.1978
Ecuador	16.09.1970		11.08.1954	02.10.1956	08.02.1961	06.03.1969
Egypt	16.12.1928		10.11.1952	17.08.1955	17.08.1955	14.01.1982
El Salvador		01.05.1936	17.06.1953	19.07.2001	27.03.2002	30.11.1979
Equatorial Guinea	20.05.1989		24.07.1986	19.11.2003		25.09.1987
Eritrea			14.08.2000			17.04.2001
Estonia	28.08.1931		18.01.1993	04.04.1995		21.10.1991
Ethiopia	07.10.1935		02.10.1969			11.06.1993
Fiji	20.03.1973		09.08.1971
Finland	26.06.1929		22.02.1955	16.09.1994	16.09.1994	19.08.1975
France	10.05.1926		28.06.1951	07.06.1957	07.06.1957	04.11.1980
Gabon			26.02.1965	04.12.1961	04.12.1961	21.01.1983
Gambia	05.11.1966		20.10.1966			29.12.1978
Georgia			14.09.1993	04.11.1992	04.11.1992	03.05.1994
Germany	25.04.1929		03.09.1954	11.08.1967	11.08.1967	17.12.1973
Ghana	03.05.1967		02.08.1958	25.07.1960	25.07.1960	07.09.2000
Greece	30.05.1931		05.06.1956	09.02.1981	09.02.1981	16.05.1985
Grenada	03.01.1989		13.04.1981			06.09.1991
Guatemala	03.05.1983	16.09.1936	14.05.1952	02.10.1985	19.05.1994	19.05.1988
Guinea			11.07.1984	20.09.1960	11.12.1961	24.01.1978
Guinea-Bissau	20.05.1989		21.02.1974			02.07.1992
Guyana			22.07.1968			15.02.1977
Haiti			11.04.1957
Holy See	18.10.1966		22.02.1951	24.02.1958	24.02.1958

(cont.)

Country	1925 Geneva Gas Protocol	1935 Roerich Pact	1949 Geneva Conventions	1954 Hague Convention	1954 Hague Protocol	1966 ICESCR
Honduras			31.12.1965	25.10.2002	25.10.2002	17.02.1981
Hungary	11.10.1952		03.08.1954	17.05.1956	16.08.1956	17.01.1974
Iceland	02.11.1967		10.08.1965			22.08.1979
India	09.04.1930		09.11.1950	16.06.1958	16.06.1958	10.04.1979
Indonesia	20.01.1971		30.09.1958	10.01.1967	26.07.1967
Iran (Islamic Rep. of)	05.11.1929		20.02.1957	22.06.1959	22.06.1959	24.06.1975
Iraq	08.09.1931		14.02.1956	21.12.1967	21.12.1967	25.01.1971
Ireland	29.08.1930		27.09.1962			08.12.1989
Israel	20.02.1969		06.07.1951	03.10.1957	01.04.1958	03.10.1991
Italy	03.04.1928		17.12.1951	09.05.1958	09.05.1958	15.09.1978
Jamaica	28.07.1970		20.07.1964			03.10.1975
Japan	21.05.1970		21.04.1953			21.06.1979
Jordan	20.07.1977		29.05.1951	02.10.1957	02.10.1957	28.05.1975
Kazakhstan			05.05.1992	14.03.1997	14.03.1997
Kenya	06.07.1970		20.09.1966			01.05.1972
Kiribati			05.01.1989
Korea (Dem. People's Rep. of)	04.01.1989		27.08.1957			14.09.1981
Korea (Rep. of)	04.01.1989		16.08.1966			10.04.1990
Kuwait	15.12.1971		02.09.1967	06.06.1969	11.02.1970	21.05.1996
Kyrgyzstan			18.09.1992	03.07.1995		07.10.1994
Lao (People's Dem. Rep.)	20.05.1989		29.10.1956
Latvia	03.06.1931		24.12.1991	19.12.2003	19.12.2003	14.04.1992
Lebanon	17.04.1969		10.04.1951	01.06.1960	01.06.1960	03.11.1972
Lesotho	10.03.1972		20.05.1968			09.09.1992
Liberia	17.06.1927		29.03.1954
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya	29.12.1971		22.05.1956	19.11.1957	19.11.1957	15.05.1970
Liechtenstein	06.09.1991		21.09.1950	28.04.1960	28.04.1960	10.12.1998
Lithuania	15.06.1933		03.10.1996	27.07.1998	27.07.1998	20.11.1991
Luxembourg	01.09.1936		01.07.1953	29.09.1961	29.09.1961	18.08.1983
Macedonia			01.09.1993	30.04.1997	30.04.1997	18.01.1994
Madagascar	02.08.1967		18.07.1963	03.11.1961	03.11.1961	22.09.1971
Malawi	14.09.1970		05.01.1968			22.12.1993
Malaysia	10.12.1970		24.08.1962	12.12.1960	12.12.1960
Maldives	27.12.1966		18.06.1991
Mali			24.05.1965	18.05.1961	18.05.1961	16.07.1974
Malta	21.09.1964		22.08.1968			13.09.1990
Marshall Islands
Mauritania			30.10.1962
Mauritius	12.03.1968		18.08.1970			12.12.1973
Mexico	28.05.1932	02.10.1936	29.10.1952	07.05.1956	07.05.1956	23.03.1981

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1925 Geneva Gas Protocol	1935 Roerich Pact	1949 Geneva Conventions	1954 Hague Convention	1954 Hague Protocol	1966 ICESCR
Micronesia			19.09.1995
Moldova (Rep. of)			24.05.1993	09.12.1999	09.12.1999	26.01.1993
Monaco	06.01.1967		05.07.1950	10.12.1957	10.12.1957	28.08.1997
Mongolia	06.12.1968		20.12.1958	04.11.1964		18.11.1974
Morocco	13.10.1970		26.07.1956	30.08.1968	30.08.1968	03.05.1979
Mozambique			14.03.1983
Myanmar			25.08.1992	10.02.1956	10.02.1956
Namibia			22.08.1991			28.11.1994
Nauru
Nepal	09.05.1969		07.02.1964			14.05.1991
Netherlands	30.10.1930		03.08.1954	14.10.1958	14.10.1958	11.12.1978
New Zealand	24.05.1930		02.05.1959			28.12.1978
Nicaragua	05.10.1990		17.12.1953	25.11.1959	25.11.1959	12.03.1980
Niger	05.04.1967		21.04.1964	06.12.1976	06.12.1976	07.03.1986
Nigeria	15.10.1968		20.06.1961	05.06.1961	05.06.1961	29.07.1993
Niue
Norway	27.07.1932		03.08.1951	19.09.1961	19.09.1961	13.09.1972
Oman			31.01.1974	26.10.1977
Pakistan	15.04.1960		12.06.1951	27.03.1959	27.03.1959
Palau			25.06.1996
Panama	04.12.1970		10.02.1956	17.07.1962	08.03.2001	08.03.1977
Papua New Guinea	02.09.1980		26.05.1976
Paraguay	22.10.1933		23.10.1961			10.06.1992
Peru	13.08.1985		15.02.1956	21.07.1989	21.07.1989	28.04.1978
Philippines	08.06.1973		06.10.1952			07.06.1974
Poland	04.02.1929		26.11.1954	06.08.1956	06.08.1956	18.03.1977
Portugal	01.07.1930		14.03.1961	04.08.2000		31.07.1978
Qatar	18.10.1976		15.10.1975	31.07.1973
Romania	23.08.1929		01.06.1954	21.03.1958	21.03.1958	09.12.1974
Russian Federation	05.04.1928		10.05.1954	04.01.1957	04.01.1957	16.10.1973
Rwanda	11.05.1964		05.05.1964	28.12.2000		16.04.1975
Saint Kitts and Nevis	27.04.1989		14.02.1986
Saint Lucia	21.12.1988		18.09.1981
Saint Vincent and the Grenadines	24.03.1999		01.04.1981			09.11.1981
Samoa			23.08.1984
San Marino			29.08.1953	09.02.1956	09.02.1956	18.10.1985
São Tomé and Príncipe			21.05.1976
Saudi Arabia	27.01.1971		18.05.1963	20.01.1971
Senegal	15.06.1977		18.05.1963	17.06.1987	17.06.1987	13.02.1978
Seychelles			08.11.1984	08.10.2003		05.05.1992
Sierra Leone	20.03.1967		10.06.1965			23.08.1996
Singapore			27.04.1973

(cont.)

Country	1925 Geneva Gas Protocol	1935 Roerich Pact	1949 Geneva Conventions	1954 Hague Convention	1954 Hague Protocol	1966 ICESCR
Slovakia	16.08.1938		02.04.1993	31.03.1993	31.03.1993	28.05.1993
Slovenia			26.03.1992	28.10.1992	05.11.1992	06.07.1992
Solomon Islands	01.06.1981		06.07.1981			17.03.1982
Somalia			12.07.1962			24.01.1990
South Africa	24.05.1930		31.03.1952	18.12.2003
Spain	22.08.1929		04.08.1952	07.07.1960	26.06.1992	27.04.1977
Sri Lanka	20.01.1954		28.02.1959			11.06.1980
Sudan	17.12.1980		23.09.1957	23.07.1970		18.03.1986
Suriname			13.10.1976			28.12.1976
Swaziland	23.07.1991		28.06.1973			26.03.2004
Sweden	25.04.1930		28.12.1953	22.01.1985	22.01.1985	06.12.1971
Switzerland	12.07.1932		31.03.1950	15.05.1962	15.05.1962	18.06.1992
Syrian Arab Republic	17.12.1968		02.11.1953	06.03.1958	06.03.1958	21.04.1969
Tajikistan			13.01.1993	28.08.1992	28.08.1992	04.01.1999
Tanzania (United Rep. of)	22.04.1963		12.12.1962	23.09.1971		11.06.1976
Thailand	06.06.1931		29.12.1954	02.05.1958	02.05.1958	05.09.1999
Timor-Leste			08.05.2003			16.04.2003
Togo	05.04.1971		06.01.1962			24.05.1984
Tonga	19.07.1971		13.04.1978
Trinidad and Tobago	31.08.1962		24.09.1963			08.12.1978
Tunisia	12.07.1967		04.05.1957	28.01.1981	28.01.1981	18.03.1969
Turkey	05.10.1929		10.02.1954	15.12.1965	15.12.1965	23.09.2003
Turkmenistan			10.04.1992			01.05.1997
Tuvalu			19.02.1981
Uganda	24.05.1965		18.05.1964			21.01.1987
Ukraine	07.08.2003		03.08.1954	06.02.1957	06.02.1957	12.11.1973
United Arab Emirates			10.05.1972
United Kingdom	09.04.1930		23.09.1957			20.05.1976
United States of America	10.04.1975	13.07.1935	02.08.1955
Uruguay	12.04.1977		05.03.1969	24.09.1999	24.09.1999	01.04.1970
Uzbekistan			08.10.1993	21.02.1996		28.09.1995
Vanuatu			27.10.1982
Venezuela	08.02.1928	11.11.1936	13.02.1956			10.05.1978
Viet Nam	15.12.1980		28.06.1957			24.09.1982
Yemen	17.03.1971		16.07.1970	06.02.1970	06.02.1970	09.02.1987
Yugoslavia	12.04.1929		16.10.2001	11.09.2001	11.09.2001	12.03.2001
Zambia			19.10.1966			10.04.1984
Zimbabwe			07.03.1983	09.06.1998		13.05.1991
Total	133	10	191	109	88	149

Country	1966 ICCPR	1965 Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity	1970 Convention on the Illicit Trade in Cultural Property	1972 BWC	1976 ENMOD Convention
Afghanistan	24.01.1983	06.07.1983	22.07.1983		26.03.1975	22.10.1985
Albania	04.10.1991	11.05.1994	19.05.1971	13.06.2002	11.08.1992
Algeria	12.09.1989	14.02.1972		24.06.1974	22.07.2001	19.12.1991
Andorra
Angola	10.01.1992			07.11.1991
Antigua and Barbuda		25.10.1988			29.01.2003	25.10.1988
Argentina	08.08.1986	02.10.1968	26.08.2003	11.01.1973	05.12.1979	20.03.1987
Armenia	23.06.1993	23.06.1993	23.06.1993	05.09.1993	07.06.1994	15.05.2002
Australia	13.08.1980	30.09.1975		30.10.1989	05.10.1977	07.09.1984
Austria	10.09.1978	09.05.1972			10.08.1973	17.01.1990
Azerbaijan	13.08.1992	16.08.1996	16.08.1996	25.08.1999
Bahamas		05.08.1975		09.10.1997	26.11.1986
Bahrain		27.03.1990			28.10.1988
Bangladesh	06.09.2000	11.06.1979		09.12.1987	13.03.1985	03.10.1979
Barbados	05.01.1973	08.11.1972		10.04.2002	16.02.1973
Belarus	12.11.1973	08.04.1969	08.05.1969	28.04.1988	26.03.1975	07.06.1988
Belgium	21.04.1983	07.08.1975			15.03.1979	12.07.1982
Belize	10.06.1996	14.11.2001		26.01.1990	20.10.1986
Benin	12.03.1992	30.11.2001			25.04.1975	30.06.1986
Bhutan				26.09.2002	08.06.1978
Bolivia	12.08.1982	22.09.1970	06.10.1983	04.10.1976	30.10.1975
Bosnia and Herzegovina	01.09.1993	16.07.1993	01.09.1993	12.07.1993	15.08.1994
Botswana	08.09.2000	20.02.1974			05.02.1992
Brazil	24.01.1992	27.03.1968		16.02.1973	27.02.1973	12.10.1984
Brunei Darussalam					31.01.1991
Bulgaria	21.09.1970	08.08.1966	21.05.1969	15.09.1971	02.08.1972	31.05.1978
Burkina Faso	04.01.1999	18.07.1974		07.04.1987	17.04.1991
Burundi	09.05.1990	27.10.1977
Cambodia	26.05.1992	28.11.1983		26.09.1972	09.03.1983
Cameroon	27.06.1984	24.06.1971	06.10.1972	24.05.1972
Canada	19.05.1976	14.10.1970		28.03.1978	18.09.1972	11.06.1981
Cape Verde	06.08.1993	03.10.1979			20.10.1977	03.10.1979
Central African Republic	08.05.1981	16.03.1971		01.02.1972
Chad	09.06.1995	17.08.1977
Chile	10.02.1972	20.10.1971			22.04.1980	26.04.1994
China		29.12.1981		28.11.1989	15.11.1984
Colombia	29.10.1969	02.09.1981		24.05.1988	19.12.1983
Comoros

(cont.)

Country	1966 ICCPR	1965 Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity	1970 Convention on the Illicit Trade in Cultural Property	1972 BWC	1976 ENMOD Convention
Congo	05.10.1983	11.07.1988			23.10.1978
Congo (Dem. Rep. of)	01.11.1976	21.04.1976		23.09.1974	16.09.1975
Cook Islands
Costa Rica	29.11.1968	16.01.1967		06.03.1996	17.12.1973	07.02.1996
Côte d'Ivoire	26.03.1992	04.01.1973		30.10.1990
Croatia	12.10.1992	12.10.1992	12.10.1992	06.07.1992	08.10.1991
Cuba		15.02.1972	13.09.1972	30.01.1980	21.04.1976	10.04.1978
Cyprus	02.04.1969	21.04.1967		19.10.1979	06.11.1973	12.04.1978
Czech Republic	22.02.1993	22.02.1993	22.02.1993	26.03.1993	05.04.1993	22.02.1993
Denmark	06.01.1972	09.12.1971		26.03.2003	01.03.1973	19.04.1978
Djibouti	05.11.2002
Dominica	17.06.1993				08.11.1978	09.11.1992
Dominican Republic	04.01.1978	25.05.1983		07.03.1973	23.02.1973
Ecuador	06.03.1969	22.09.1966		24.03.1971	12.03.1975
Egypt	14.01.1982	01.05.1967		05.04.1973		01.04.1982
El Salvador	30.11.1979	30.11.1979		20.02.1978	31.12.1991
Equatorial Guinea	25.09.1987	08.10.2002			16.01.1989
Eritrea	22.01.2002	31.07.2001
Estonia	21.10.1991	21.10.1991	21.10.1991	27.10.1995	21.06.1993
Ethiopia	11.06.1993	23.06.1976			26.05.1975
Fiji		11.01.1973			01.10.1973
Finland	19.08.1975	14.07.1970		14.06.1999	04.02.1974	12.05.1978
France	04.11.1980	28.07.1971		07.01.1997	27.09.1984
Gabon	21.01.1983	29.02.1980		29.08.2003
Gambia	22.03.1979	29.12.1978	29.12.1978		21.11.1991
Georgia	03.05.1994	02.06.1999	31.03.1995	04.11.1992	22.05.1996
Germany	17.12.1973	16.05.1969			07.04.1983	24.05.1983
Ghana	07.09.2000	08.09.1966	07.09.2000		06.06.1975	22.06.1978
Greece	05.05.1997	18.06.1970		05.06.1981	10.12.1975	23.08.1983
Grenada	06.09.1991			10.09.1992	22.10.1986
Guatemala	05.05.1992	18.01.1983		14.01.1985	19.09.1973	21.03.1988
Guinea	24.01.1978	14.03.1977	07.06.1971	18.03.1979
Guinea-Bissau					20.08.1976
Guyana	15.02.1977	15.02.1977
Haiti	06.02.1991	19.12.1972
Holy See		01.05.1969			04.01.2002

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1966 ICCPR	1965 Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity	1970 Convention on the Illicit Trade in Cultural Property	1972 BWC	1976 ENMOD Convention
Honduras	25.08.1997	10.10.2002		19.03.1979	14.03.1979
Hungary	17.01.1974	04.05.1967	24.06.1969	23.10.1978	27.12.1972	19.04.1978
Iceland	22.08.1979	13.03.1967			15.02.1973
India	10.04.1979	03.12.1968	12.01.1971	24.01.1977	15.07.1974	15.12.1978
Indonesia		25.06.1999			19.02.1992
Iran (Islamic Rep. of)	24.06.1975	29.08.1968		27.01.1975	22.08.1973
Iraq	25.01.1971	14.01.1970		12.02.1973	19.06.1991
Ireland	08.12.1989	29.12.2000			27.10.1972	16.12.1982
Israel	03.10.1991	03.01.1979
Italy	15.09.1978	05.01.1976		02.10.1978	30.05.1975	27.11.1981
Jamaica	03.10.1975	04.06.1971			13.08.1975
Japan	21.06.1979	15.12.1995		09.09.2002	18.06.1982	09.06.1982
Jordan	28.05.1975	30.05.1974		15.03.1974	27.06.1975
Kazakhstan		26.08.1998
Kenya	01.05.1972	13.09.2001	01.05.1972		07.01.1976
Kiribati
Korea (Dem. People's Rep. of)	14.09.1981		08.11.1984	13.05.1983	13.03.1987	08.11.1984
Korea (Rep. of)	10.04.1990	05.12.1978		14.02.1983	25.06.1987	02.12.1986
Kuwait	21.05.1996	15.10.1968	07.03.1995	22.06.1972	26.07.1972	02.01.1980
Kyrgyzstan	07.10.1994	05.09.1997		03.07.1995
Lao (People's Dem. Rep.)		22.02.1974	28.12.1984		25.04.1973	05.10.1978
Latvia	14.04.1992	14.04.1992	14.04.1992		06.02.1997
Lebanon	03.11.1972	12.11.1971		25.08.1992	26.03.1975
Lesotho	09.09.1992	04.11.1971			06.09.1977
Liberia		05.11.1976
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya	15.05.1970	03.07.1968	16.05.1989	09.01.1973	19.01.1982
Liechtenstein	10.12.1998	01.03.2000			06.06.1991
Lithuania	20.11.1991	10.12.1998	01.02.1996	27.07.1998	10.02.1998	16.04.2002
Luxembourg	18.08.1983	01.05.1978			23.03.1976
Macedonia	18.01.1994	18.01.1994	18.01.1994	30.04.1997	14.03.1997
Madagascar	21.06.1971	07.02.1969		21.06.1989
Malawi	22.12.1993	11.06.1996				05.10.1978
Malaysia					06.10.1991
Maldives		24.04.1984			02.08.1993

(cont.)

Country	1966 ICCPR	1965 Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity	1970 Convention on the Illicit Trade in Cultural Property	1972 BWC	1976 ENMOD Convention
Mali	16.07.1974	16.07.1974		06.04.1987	25.11.2003
Malta	13.09.1990	27.05.1971			07.04.1975
Marshall Islands
Mauritania		13.12.1988		27.04.1977
Mauritius	12.12.1973	30.05.1972		27.02.1978	11.01.1973	09.12.1992
Mexico	23.03.1981	20.02.1975	15.03.2002	04.10.1972	08.04.1974
Micronesia
Moldova (Rep. of)	26.01.1993	26.01.1993	26.01.1993
Monaco	28.08.1997	27.09.1995			30.04.1999
Mongolia	18.11.1974	06.08.1969	21.05.1969	23.05.1991	14.09.1972	19.05.1978
Morocco	03.05.1979	18.12.1970		03.02.2003	21.03.2002
Mozambique	21.07.1993	18.04.1983
Myanmar
Namibia	28.11.1994	11.11.1982
Nauru
Nepal	14.05.1991	30.01.1971		23.06.1976
Netherlands	11.12.1978	10.12.1971			22.06.1981	15.04.1983
New Zealand	28.12.1978	22.11.1972			18.12.1972	07.09.1984
Nicaragua	12.03.1980	15.02.1978	03.09.1986	19.04.1977	07.08.1975
Niger	07.03.1986	27.04.1967		16.10.1972	23.06.1972	17.02.1993
Nigeria	29.07.1993	16.10.1967	01.12.1970	24.01.1972	09.07.1973
Niue
Norway	13.09.1972	06.08.1970			01.08.1973	15.02.1979
Oman		02.01.2003		02.06.1978	31.03.1992
Pakistan		21.09.1966		30.04.1981	03.10.1974	27.02.1986
Palau					03.02.2003
Panama	08.03.1977	16.08.1967		13.08.1973	20.03.1974	13.05.2003
Papua New Guinea		27.01.1982			27.10.1980	28.10.1980
Paraguay	10.06.1992	18.08.2003			09.06.1976
Peru	28.04.1978	29.09.1971	11.08.2003	24.10.1979	05.06.1985
Philippines	23.10.1986	15.09.1967	15.05.1973		21.05.1973
Poland	18.03.1977	05.12.1968	14.02.1969	31.01.1974	25.01.1973	08.06.1978
Portugal	15.06.1978	24.08.1982		09.12.1985	15.05.1975
Qatar		22.07.1976		20.04.1977	17.04.1975
Romania	09.12.1974	15.09.1970	15.09.1969	06.12.1993	26.07.1979	06.05.1983
Russian Federation	16.10.1973	04.02.1969	22.04.1969	28.04.1988	26.03.1975	30.05.1978

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1966 ICCPR	1965 Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity	1970 Convention on the Illicit Trade in Cultural Property	1972 BWC	1976 ENMOD Convention
Rwanda	16.04.1975	16.04.1975	16.04.1975	25.09.2001	20.05.1975
Saint Kitts and Nevis					02.04.1991
Saint Lucia		14.02.1990			26.11.1986	27.05.1993
Saint Vincent and the Grenadines	09.11.1981	09.11.1981	09.11.1981		13.05.1999	27.04.1999
Samoa
San Marino	18.10.1985	12.03.2002			11.03.1975
São Tomé and Príncipe					24.08.1979	05.10.1979
Saudi Arabia		23.09.1997		08.09.1976	24.05.1972
Senegal	13.02.1978	19.04.1972		09.12.1984	26.03.1975
Seychelles	05.05.1992	07.03.1978			11.10.1979
Sierra Leone	23.08.1996	02.08.1967			29.06.1976
Singapore					02.12.1975
Slovakia	28.05.1993	28.05.1993	28.05.1993	31.03.1993	17.05.1993	28.05.1993
Slovenia	06.07.1992	06.07.1992	06.07.1992	05.11.1992	07.04.1992
Solomon Islands		17.03.1982			17.06.1981	19.06.1981
Somalia	24.01.1990	26.08.1975
South Africa	10.12.1998	10.12.1998		18.12.2003	03.11.1975
Spain	27.04.1977	13.09.1968		10.01.1986	20.06.1979	19.07.1978
Sri Lanka	11.06.1980	18.02.1982		07.04.1981	18.11.1986	25.04.1978
Sudan	18.03.1986	21.03.1977			17.10.2003
Suriname	28.12.1976	15.03.1984			06.01.1993
Swaziland	26.03.2004	07.04.1969			18.06.1991
Sweden	06.12.1971	06.12.1971		13.01.2003	05.02.1976	27.04.1984
Switzerland	18.06.1992	29.11.1994		03.10.2003	04.05.1976	05.08.1988
Syrian Arab Republic	21.04.1969	21.04.1969		21.02.1975
Tajikistan	04.01.1999	11.01.1995		28.08.1992		12.10.1999
Tanzania (United Rep. of)	11.06.1976	27.10.1972		02.08.1977
Thailand	29.10.1996	28.01.2003			28.05.1975
Timor-Leste	18.09.2003	16.04.2003			07.05.2003
Togo	24.05.1984	01.09.1972			10.11.1976
Tonga		16.02.1972			28.09.1976

(cont.)

Country	1966 ICCPR	1965 Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination	1968 UN Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity	1970 Convention on the Illicit Trade in Cultural Property	1972 BWC	1976 ENMOD Convention
Trinidad and Tobago	21.12.1978	04.10.1973
Tunisia	18.03.1969	13.01.1967	15.06.1972	10.03.1975	06.06.1973	11.05.1978
Turkey	23.09.2003	16.09.2002		21.04.1981	04.11.1974
Turkmenistan	01.05.1997	29.09.1994			11.01.1996
Tuvalu
Uganda	21.06.1995	21.11.1980			12.05.1992
Ukraine	12.11.1973	07.03.1969	19.06.1969	28.04.1988	26.03.1975	13.06.1978
United Arab Emirates		20.06.1974
United Kingdom	20.05.1976	07.03.1969		01.08.2002	26.03.1975	16.05.1978
United States of America	08.06.1992	21.10.1994		02.09.1983	26.03.1975	17.01.1980
Uruguay	01.04.1970	30.08.1968	21.09.2001	09.08.1977	06.04.1981	16.09.1993
Uzbekistan	28.09.1995	28.09.1995		15.03.1996	11.01.1996	26.05.1993
Vanuatu					12.10.1990
Venezuela	10.05.1978	10.10.1967			18.10.1978
Viet Nam	24.09.1982	09.06.1982	06.05.1983		20.06.1980	26.08.1980
Yemen	09.02.1987	18.10.1972	09.02.1987		01.06.1979	20.07.1977
Yugoslavia	12.03.2001	12.03.2001	12.03.2001	11.09.2001	13.06.2001
Zambia	10.04.1984	04.02.1972		21.06.1985
Zimbabwe	13.05.1991	13.05.1991			05.11.1990
Total	152	169	48	103	151	69

Country	1977 AP I	1977 AP II	1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women	1980 CCW	1980 Protocol I to the CCW	1980 Protocol II to the CCW	1980 Protocol III to the CCW
Afghanistan			05.03.2003
Albania	16.07.1993	16.07.1993	11.05.1994	28.08.2002	28.08.2002	28.08.2002	28.08.2002
Algeria	16.08.1989	16.08.1989	22.05.1996
Andorra			15.01.1997
Angola	20.09.1984		17.09.1986
Antigua and Barbuda	06.10.1986	06.10.1986	01.08.1989
Argentina	26.11.1986	26.11.1986	15.07.1985	02.10.1995	02.10.1995	29.09.1995	29.09.1995
Armenia	07.06.1993	07.06.1993	13.09.1993
Australia	21.06.1991	21.06.1991	28.07.1983	29.09.1983	29.09.1983	29.09.1983	29.09.1983
Austria	13.08.1982	13.08.1982	31.03.1982	14.03.1983	14.03.1983	14.03.1983	14.03.1983
Azerbaijan			10.07.1995
Bahamas	10.04.1980	10.04.1980	08.10.1993
Bahrain	30.10.1986	30.10.1986	18.06.2002
Bangladesh	08.09.1980	08.09.1980	06.11.1984	06.09.2000	06.09.2000	06.09.2000	06.09.2000
Barbados	19.02.1990	19.02.1990	16.10.1980
Belarus	23.10.1989	23.10.1989	04.02.1981	23.06.1982	23.06.1982	23.06.1982	23.06.1982
Belgium	20.05.1986	20.05.1986	10.07.1985	07.02.1995	07.02.1995	07.02.1995	07.02.1995
Belize	29.06.1984	29.06.1984	16.05.1990
Benin	28.05.1986	28.05.1986	12.03.1992	27.03.1989	27.03.1989		27.03.1989
Bhutan			31.08.1981
Bolivia	08.12.1983	08.12.1983	08.06.1990	21.09.2001	21.09.2001	21.09.2001	21.09.2001
Bosnia and Herzegovina	31.12.1992	31.12.1992	01.09.1993	01.09.1993	01.09.1993	01.09.1993	01.09.1993
Botswana	23.05.1979	23.05.1979	13.08.1996
Brazil	05.05.1992	05.05.1992	01.02.1984	03.10.1995	03.10.1995	03.10.1995	03.10.1995
Brunei Darussalam	14.10.1991	14.10.1991
Bulgaria	26.09.1989	26.09.1989	08.02.1982	15.10.1982	15.10.1982	15.10.1982	15.10.1982
Burkina Faso	20.10.1987	20.10.1987	14.10.1987	26.11.2003	26.11.2003	26.11.2003	26.11.2003
Burundi	10.06.1993	10.06.1993	08.01.1992
Cambodia	14.01.1998	14.01.1998	15.10.1992	25.03.1997	25.03.1997	25.03.1997	25.03.1997
Cameroon	16.03.1984	16.03.1984	23.08.1994
Canada	20.11.1990	20.11.1990	10.12.1981	24.06.1994	24.06.1994	24.06.1994	24.06.1994
Cape Verde	16.03.1995	16.03.1995	05.12.1980	16.09.1997	16.09.1997	16.09.1997	16.09.1997
Central African Republic	17.07.1984	17.07.1984	21.06.1991
Chad	17.01.1997	17.01.1997	09.06.1995
Chile	24.04.1991	24.04.1991	07.12.1989	15.10.2003	15.10.2003		15.10.2003
China	14.09.1983	14.09.1983	04.11.1980	07.04.1982	07.04.1982	07.04.1982	07.04.1982
Colombia	01.09.1993	14.08.1995	19.01.1982	06.03.2000	06.03.2000	06.03.2000	06.03.2000
Comoros	21.11.1985	21.11.1985	31.10.1994

(cont.)

Country	1977 AP I	1977 AP II	1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrim-ination against Women	1980 CCW	1980 Protocol I to the CCW	1980 Protocol II to the CCW	1980 Protocol III to the CCW
Congo	10.11.1983	10.11.1983	26.07.1982
Congo (Dem. Rep. of)	03.06.1982	12.12.2002	17.10.1986
Cook Islands	07.05.2002	07.05.2002
Costa Rica	15.12.1983	15.12.1983	04.04.1986	17.12.1998	17.12.1998	17.12.1998	17.12.1998
Côte d'Ivoire	20.09.1989	20.09.1989	18.12.1995
Croatia	11.05.1992	11.05.1992	09.09.1992	02.12.1993	02.12.1993	02.12.1993	02.12.1993
Cuba	25.11.1982	23.06.1999	17.07.1980	02.03.1987	02.03.1987	02.03.1987	02.03.1987
Cyprus	01.06.1979	18.03.1996	23.07.1985	12.12.1988	12.12.1988	12.12.1988	12.12.1988
Czech Republic	05.02.1993	05.02.1993	22.02.1993	22.02.1993	22.02.1993	22.02.1993	22.02.1993
Denmark	17.06.1982	17.06.1982	21.04.1983	07.07.1982	07.07.1982	07.07.1982	07.07.1982
Djibouti	08.04.1991	08.04.1991	02.12.1998	29.07.1996	29.07.1996	29.07.1996	29.07.1996
Dominica	25.04.1996	25.04.1996	15.09.1980
Dominican Republic	26.05.1994	26.05.1994	02.09.1982
Ecuador	10.04.1979	10.04.1979	09.11.1981	04.05.1982	04.05.1982	04.05.1982	04.05.1982
Egypt	09.10.1992	09.10.1992	18.09.1981
El Salvador	23.11.1978	23.11.1978	19.08.1981	26.01.2000	26.01.2000	26.01.2000	26.01.2000
Equatorial Guinea	24.07.1986	24.07.1986	23.10.1984
Eritrea			05.09.1995
Estonia	18.01.1993	18.01.1993	21.10.1991	20.04.2000	20.04.2000		20.04.2000
Ethiopia	08.04.1994	08.04.1994	10.09.1981
Fiji			28.08.1995
Finland	07.08.1980	07.08.1980	04.09.1986	08.05.1982	08.05.1982	08.05.1982	08.05.1982
France	11.04.2001	24.02.1984	14.12.1983	04.03.1988	04.03.1988	04.03.1988	18.07.2002
Gabon	08.04.1980	08.04.1980	21.01.1983
Gambia	12.01.1989	12.01.1989	16.04.1993
Georgia	14.09.1993	14.09.1993	26.10.1994	29.04.1996	29.04.1996	29.04.1996	29.04.1996
Germany	14.02.1991	14.02.1991	10.07.1985	25.11.1992	25.11.1992	25.11.1992	25.11.1992
Ghana	28.02.1978	28.02.1978	02.01.1986
Greece	31.03.1989	15.02.1993	07.06.1983	28.01.1992	28.01.1992	28.01.1992	28.01.1992
Grenada	23.09.1998	23.09.1998	30.08.1990
Guatemala	19.10.1987	19.10.1987	12.08.1982	21.07.1983	21.07.1983	21.07.1983	21.07.1983
Guinea	11.07.1984	11.07.1984	09.08.1982
Guinea-Bissau	21.10.1986	21.10.1986	23.08.1985
Guyana	18.01.1988	18.01.1988	17.07.1980

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1977 AP I	1977 AP II	1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women	1980 CCW	1980 Protocol I to the CCW	1980 Protocol II to the CCW	1980 Protocol III to the CCW
Haiti			20.07.1981
Holy See	21.11.1985	21.11.1985		22.07.1997	22.07.1997	22.07.1997	22.07.1997
Honduras	16.02.1995	16.02.1995	03.03.1983	30.10.2003	30.10.2003	30.10.2003	30.10.2003
Hungary	12.04.1989	12.04.1989	22.12.1980	14.06.1982	14.06.1982	14.06.1982	14.06.1982
Iceland	10.04.1987	10.04.1987	18.06.1985
India			09.07.1993	01.03.1984	01.03.1984	01.03.1984	01.03.1984
Indonesia			13.09.1984
Iran (Islamic Rep. of)
Iraq			13.08.1986
Ireland	19.05.1999	19.05.1999	23.12.1985	13.03.1995	13.03.1995	13.03.1995	13.03.1995
Israel			03.10.1991	22.03.1995	22.03.1995	22.03.1995
Italy	27.02.1986	27.02.1986	10.06.1985	20.01.1995	20.01.1995	20.01.1995	20.01.1995
Jamaica	29.07.1986	29.07.1986	19.10.1984
Japan			25.06.1985	09.06.1982	09.06.1982	09.06.1982	09.06.1982
Jordan	01.05.1979	01.05.1979	01.07.1992	19.10.1995	19.10.1995		19.10.1995
Kazakhstan	05.05.1992	05.05.1992	26.08.1998
Kenya	23.02.1999	23.02.1999	09.03.1984
Kiribati			17.03.2004
Korea (Dem. People's Rep. of)	09.03.1988		27.02.2001
Korea (Rep. of)	15.01.1982	15.01.1982	27.12.1984	09.05.2001	09.05.2001
Kuwait	17.01.1985	17.01.1985	02.09.1994
Kyrgyzstan	18.09.1992	18.09.1992	10.02.1997
Lao (People's Dem. Rep.)	18.11.1980	18.11.1980	14.08.1981	03.01.1983	03.01.1983	03.01.1983	03.01.1983
Latvia	24.12.1991	24.12.1991	14.04.1992	04.01.1993	04.01.1993	04.01.1993	04.01.1993
Lebanon	23.07.1997	23.07.1997	16.04.1997
Lesotho	20.05.1994	20.05.1994	22.08.1995	06.09.2000	06.09.2000	06.09.2000	06.09.2000
Liberia	30.06.1988	30.06.1988	17.07.1984
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya	07.06.1978	07.06.1978	16.05.1989
Liechtenstein	10.08.1989	10.08.1989	22.12.1995	16.08.1989	16.08.1989	16.08.1989	16.08.1989
Lithuania	13.07.2000	13.07.2000	18.01.1994	03.06.1998	03.06.1998		03.06.1998
Luxembourg	29.08.1989	29.08.1989	02.02.1989	21.05.1996	21.05.1996	21.05.1996	21.05.1996
Macedonia	01.09.1993	01.09.1993	18.01.1994	30.12.1996	30.12.1996	30.12.1996	30.12.1996
Madagascar	08.05.1992	08.05.1992	17.03.1989
Malawi	07.10.1991	07.10.1991	12.03.1987
Malaysia			05.07.1995
Maldives	03.09.1991	03.09.1991	01.07.1993	07.09.2000	07.09.2000		07.09.2000

(cont.)

Country	1977 AP I	1977 AP II	1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women	1980 CCW	1980 Protocol I to the CCW	1980 Protocol II to the CCW	1980 Protocol III to the CCW
Mali	08.02.1989	08.02.1989	10.09.1985	24.10.2001	24.10.2001	24.10.2001	24.10.2001
Malta	17.04.1989	17.04.1989	08.03.1991	26.06.1995	26.06.1995	26.06.1995	26.06.1995
Marshall Islands
Mauritania	14.03.1980	14.03.1980	10.05.2001
Mauritius	22.03.1982	22.03.1982	09.07.1984	06.05.1996	06.05.1996	06.05.1996	06.05.1996
Mexico	10.03.1983		23.03.1981	11.02.1982	11.02.1982	11.02.1982	11.02.1982
Micronesia	19.09.1995	19.09.1995
Moldova (Rep. of)	24.05.1993	24.05.1993	01.07.1994	08.09.2000	08.09.2000	08.09.2000	08.09.2000
Monaco	07.01.2000	07.01.2000		12.08.1997	12.08.1997
Mongolia	06.12.1995	06.12.1995	20.07.1981	08.06.1982	08.06.1982	08.06.1982	08.06.1982
Morocco			21.06.1993	19.03.2002		19.03.2002
Mozambique	14.03.1983	12.11.2002	21.04.1997
Myanmar			22.07.1997
Namibia	17.06.1994	17.06.1994	23.11.1992
Nauru				12.11.2001	12.11.2001	12.11.2001	12.11.2001
Nepal			22.04.1991
Netherlands	26.06.1987	26.06.1987	23.07.1991	18.06.1987	18.06.1987	18.06.1987	18.06.1987
New Zealand	08.02.1988	08.02.1988	10.01.1985	18.10.1993	18.10.1993	18.10.1993	18.10.1993
Nicaragua	19.07.1999	19.07.1999	27.10.1981	05.12.2000	05.12.2000		05.12.2000
Niger	08.06.1979	08.06.1979	08.10.1999	10.11.1992	10.11.1992	10.11.1992	10.11.1992
Nigeria	10.10.1988	10.10.1988	13.06.1985
Niue
Norway	14.12.1981	14.12.1981	21.05.1981	07.06.1983	07.06.1983	07.06.1983	07.06.1983
Oman	29.03.1984	29.03.1984
Pakistan			12.03.1996	01.04.1985	01.04.1985	01.04.1985	01.04.1985
Palau	25.06.1996	25.06.1996
Panama	18.09.1995	18.09.1995	29.10.1981	26.03.1997	26.03.1997	26.03.1997	26.03.1997
Papua New Guinea			12.01.1995
Paraguay	30.11.1990	30.11.1990	06.04.1987
Peru	14.07.1989	14.07.1989	13.09.1982	03.07.1997	03.07.1997		03.07.1997
Philippines		11.12.1986	05.08.1981	15.07.1996	15.07.1996	15.07.1996	15.07.1996
Poland	23.10.1991	23.10.1991	30.07.1980	02.06.1983	02.06.1983	02.06.1983	02.06.1983
Portugal	27.05.1992	27.05.1992	30.07.1980	04.04.1997	04.04.1997	04.04.1997	04.04.1997
Qatar	05.04.1988
Romania	21.06.1990	21.06.1990	07.01.1982	26.07.1995	26.07.1995	26.07.1995	26.07.1995
Russian Federation	29.09.1989	29.09.1989	23.01.1981	10.06.1982	10.06.1982	10.06.1982	10.06.1982
Rwanda	19.11.1984	19.11.1984	02.03.1981

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1977 AP I	1977 AP II	1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrim-ination against Women	1980 CCW	1980 Protocol I to the CCW	1980 Protocol II to the CCW	1980 Protocol III to the CCW
Saint Kitts and Nevis	14.02.1986	14.02.1986	25.04.1985
Saint Lucia	07.10.1982	07.10.1982	08.10.1982
Saint Vincent and the Grenadines	08.04.1983	08.04.1983	04.08.1981
Samoa	23.08.1984	23.08.1984	25.09.1992
San Marino	05.04.1994	05.04.1994	10.12.2003
São Tomé and Príncipe	05.07.1996	05.07.1996	03.06.2003
Saudi Arabia	21.08.1987	28.11.2001	07.09.2000
Senegal	07.05.1985	07.05.1985	05.02.1985	29.11.1999			29.11.1999
Seychelles	08.11.1984	08.11.1984	05.05.1992	08.06.2000	08.06.2000	08.06.2000	08.06.2000
Sierra Leone	21.10.1986	21.10.1986	11.11.1988
Singapore			05.10.1995
Slovakia	02.04.1993	02.04.1993	28.05.1993	28.05.1993	28.05.1993	28.05.1993	28.05.1993
Slovenia	26.03.1992	26.03.1992	06.07.1992	06.07.1992	06.07.1992	06.07.1992	06.07.1992
Solomon Islands	19.09.1988	19.09.1988	06.05.2002
Somalia
South Africa	21.11.1995	21.11.1995	15.12.1995	13.09.1995	13.09.1995	13.09.1995	13.09.1995
Spain	21.04.1989	21.04.1989	05.01.1984	29.12.1993	29.12.1993	29.12.1993	29.12.1993
Sri Lanka			05.10.1981
Sudan
Suriname	16.12.1985	16.12.1985	01.03.1993
Swaziland	02.11.1995	02.11.1995	26.03.2004
Sweden	31.08.1979	31.08.1979	02.07.1980	07.07.1982	07.07.1982	07.07.1982	07.07.1982
Switzerland	17.02.1982	17.02.1982	27.03.1997	20.08.1982	20.08.1982	20.08.1982	20.08.1982
Syrian Arab Republic	14.11.1983		28.03.2003
Tajikistan	13.01.1993	13.01.1993	26.10.1993	12.10.1999	12.10.1999	12.10.1999	12.10.1999
Tanzania (United Rep. of)	15.02.1983	15.02.1983	20.08.1985
Thailand			09.08.1985
Timor-Leste			16.04.2003
Togo	21.06.1984	21.06.1984	26.09.1983	04.12.1995	04.12.1995	04.12.1995	04.12.1995
Tonga	20.01.2003	20.01.2003

(cont.)

Country	1977 AP I	1977 AP II	1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrim-ination against Women	1980 CCW	1980 Protocol I to the CCW	1980 Protocol II to the CCW	1980 Protocol III to the CCW
Trinidad and Tobago	20.07.2001	20.07.2001	12.01.1990
Tunisia	09.08.1979	09.08.1979	20.09.1985	15.05.1987	15.05.1987	15.05.1987	15.05.1987
Turkey			20.12.1985
Turkmenistan	10.04.1992	10.04.1992	01.05.1997	19.03.2004	19.03.2004	19.03.2004
Tuvalu			06.10.1999
Uganda	13.03.1991	13.03.1991	22.07.1985	14.11.1995	14.11.1995	14.11.1995	14.11.1995
Ukraine	25.01.1990	25.01.1990	12.03.1981	23.06.1982	23.06.1982	23.06.1982	23.06.1982
United Arab Emirates	09.03.1983	09.03.1983
United Kingdom	28.01.1998	28.01.1998	07.04.1986	13.02.1995	13.02.1995	13.02.1995	13.02.1995
United States of America				24.03.1995	24.03.1995	24.03.1995
Uruguay	13.12.1985	13.12.1985	09.10.1981	06.10.1994	06.10.1994	06.10.1994	06.10.1994
Uzbekistan	08.10.1993	08.10.1993	19.07.1995	29.09.1997	29.09.1997	29.09.1997	29.09.1997
Vanuatu	28.02.1985	28.02.1985	08.09.1995
Venezuela	23.07.1998	23.07.1998	02.05.1983
Viet Nam	19.10.1981		17.02.1982
Yemen	17.04.1990	17.04.1990	30.05.1984
Yugoslavia	16.10.2001	16.10.2001	12.03.2001	12.03.2001	12.03.2001	12.03.2001	12.03.2001
Zambia	04.05.1995	04.05.1995	21.06.1985
Zimbabwe	19.10.1992	19.10.1992	13.05.1991
Total	161	156	177	94	92	83	88

Country	1984 Convention against Torture	1989 UN Mercenary Convention	1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child	1992 Convention on Biodiversity	1993 CWC	1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel
Afghanistan	01.04.1987		28.03.1994	19.09.2002	24.09.2003
Albania	11.05.1984		27.02.1992	05.01.1994	11.05.1994	30.03.2001
Algeria	12.09.1989		16.04.1993	14.08.1995	14.08.1995
Andorra			02.01.1996		27.02.2003
Angola			05.12.1990	01.04.1998
Antigua and Barbuda	19.07.1993		05.10.1993	09.03.1993
Argentina	24.09.1986		04.12.1990	22.11.1994	02.10.1995	06.01.1997
Armenia	13.09.1993		23.06.1993	14.05.1993	27.01.1995
Australia	08.08.1989		17.12.1990	18.06.1993	06.05.1994	04.12.2000
Austria	29.07.1987		06.08.1992	18.08.1994	17.08.1995	06.09.2000
Azerbaijan	16.08.1996	04.12.1997	13.08.1992	03.08.2000	29.02.2000	03.08.2000
Bahamas			20.02.1991	02.09.1993
Bahrain	06.03.1998		13.02.1992	30.08.1996	28.04.1997
Bangladesh	05.10.1998		03.08.1990	03.05.1994	25.04.1997	22.09.1999
Barbados		10.07.1992	09.10.1990	10.12.1993
Belarus	13.03.1987	28.05.1997	01.10.1990	08.09.1993	11.07.1996	29.11.2000
Belgium	25.06.1999	31.05.2002	16.12.1991	22.11.1996	27.01.1997	19.02.2002
Belize	17.03.1986		02.05.1990	30.12.1993	01.12.2003
Benin	12.03.1992		03.08.1990	30.06.1994	14.05.1998
Bhutan			01.08.1990	25.08.1995
Bolivia	12.04.1999		26.06.1990	03.10.1994	14.08.1998
Bosnia and Herzegovina	01.09.1993		01.09.1993	26.08.2002	25.02.1997	11.08.2003
Botswana	08.09.2000		14.03.1995	12.10.1995	31.08.1998	01.03.2000
Brazil	28.09.1989		24.09.1990	28.02.1994	13.03.1996	06.09.2000
Brunei Darussalam			27.12.1995		28.07.1997	20.03.2002
Bulgaria	16.12.1986		03.06.1991	17.04.1996	10.08.1994	04.06.1998
Burkina Faso	04.01.1999		31.08.1990	02.09.1993	08.07.1997
Burundi	18.02.1993		19.10.1990	15.04.1997	04.09.1998
Cambodia	15.10.1992		15.10.1992	09.02.1995
Cameroon	19.12.1986	26.01.1996	11.01.1993	19.10.1994	16.09.1996
Canada	24.06.1987		13.12.1991	04.12.1992	26.09.1995	03.04.2002
Cape Verde	04.06.1992		04.06.1992	29.03.1995	10.10.2003
Central African Republic			23.04.1992	15.03.1995
Chad	09.06.1995		02.10.1990	07.06.1994	13.02.2003
Chile	30.09.1988		13.08.1990	09.09.1994	12.07.1996	27.08.1997
China	04.10.1988		02.03.1992	05.01.1993	25.04.1997
Colombia	08.12.1987		28.01.1991	28.11.1994	05.04.2000
Comoros			22.06.1993	29.09.1994
Congo	30.07.2003		14.10.1993	01.08.1996
Congo (Dem. Rep. of)	18.03.1996		27.09.1990	03.12.1994
Cook Islands			06.06.1997	20.04.1993	15.07.1994
Costa Rica	11.11.1993	20.09.2001	21.08.1990	26.08.1994	31.05.1996	17.10.2000

(cont.)

Country	1984 Convention against Torture	1989 UN Mercenary Convention	1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child	1992 Convention on Biodiversity	1993 CWC	1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel
Côte d'Ivoire	18.12.1995		04.02.1991	29.11.1994	18.12.1995	13.03.2002
Croatia	12.10.1992	27.03.2000	12.10.1992	07.10.1996	23.05.1995	27.03.2000
Cuba	17.05.1995		21.08.1991	08.03.1994	29.04.1997
Cyprus	18.07.1991	08.07.1993	07.02.1991	10.07.1996	28.08.1998	01.07.2003
Czech Republic	22.02.1993		22.02.1993	03.12.1993	06.03.1996	13.06.1997
Denmark	27.05.1987		19.07.1991	21.12.93	13.07.1995	11.04.1995
Djibouti	05.11.2002		06.12.1990	01.09.1994
Dominica			13.03.1991	06.04.1994	12.02.2001
Dominican Republic			11.06.1991	25.11.1996
Ecuador	30.03.1988		23.03.1990	23.02.1993	06.09.1995	28.12.2000
Egypt	25.06.1986		06.07.1990	02.06.1994
El Salvador	17.06.1996		10.07.1990	08.09.1994	30.10.1995
Equatorial Guinea	08.10.2002		15.06.1992	06.12.1994	25.04.1997
Eritrea			03.08.1994	21.03.1996	14.02.2000
Estonia	21.10.1991		21.10.1991	27.07.1994	26.05.1999
Ethiopia	14.03.1994		14.05.1991	05.04.1994	13.05.1996
Fiji			13.08.1993	25.02.1993	20.01.1993	01.04.1999
Finland	30.08.1989		20.06.1991	27.07.1994	07.02.1995	05.01.2001
France	18.02.1986		07.08.1990	01.07.1994	02.03.1995	09.06.2000
Gabon	08.09.2000		09.02.1994	14.03.1997	08.09.2000
Gambia			08.08.1990	10.06.1994	19.05.1998
Georgia	26.10.1994	08.06.1995	02.06.1994	02.06.1994	27.11.1995
Germany	01.10.1990		06.03.1992	21.12.1993	12.08.1994	22.04.1997
Ghana	07.09.2000		05.02.1990	29.08.1994	09.07.1997
Greece	06.10.1988		11.05.1993	04.08.1994	22.12.1994	03.08.2000
Grenada			05.11.1990	11.08.1994
Guatemala	05.01.1990		06.06.1990	10.07.1995	12.02.2003
Guinea	10.10.1989	18.07.2003	13.07.1990	07.05.1993	09.06.1997	07.09.2000
Guinea-Bissau			20.08.1990	27.10.1995
Guyana	19.05.1988		14.01.1991	29.08.1994	12.09.1997
Haiti			08.06.1995	25.09.1996
Holy See	26.06.2002		20.04.1990		12.05.1999
Honduras	05.12.1996		10.08.1990	31.07.1995
Hungary	15.04.1987		07.10.1991	24.02.1994	31.10.1996	13.07.1999
Iceland	23.10.1996		28.10.1992	12.09.1994	28.04.1997	10.05.2001
India			11.12.1992	18.02.1994	03.09.1996
Indonesia	28.10.1998		05.09.1990	23.08.1994	12.11.1998
Iran (Islamic Rep. of)			13.07.1994	06.08.1996	03.11.1997
Iraq			15.06.1994
Ireland	11.04.2002		28.09.1992	22.03.1996	24.06.1996	28.03.2002
Israel	03.10.1991		03.10.1991	07.08.1995
Italy	12.01.1989	21.08.1995	05.09.1991	15.04.1994	08.12.1995	05.04.1999

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1984 Convention against Torture	1989 UN Mercenary Convention	1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child	1992 Convention on Biodiversity	1993 CWC	1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel
Jamaica			14.05.1991	06.01.1995	08.09.2000	08.09.2000
Japan	29.06.1999		22.04.1994	28.05.1993	15.09.1995	06.06.1995
Jordan	13.11.1991		24.05.1991	12.11.1993	29.10.1997
Kazakhstan	26.08.1998		12.08.1994	06.09.1994	23.03.2000
Kenya	21.02.1997		30.07.1990	26.07.1994	25.04.1997
Kiribati			11.12.1995	16.08.1994	07.09.2000	08.10.2003
Korea (Dem. People's Rep. of)			21.09.1990	26.10.1994
Korea (Republic of)	09.01.1995		20.11.1991	03.10.1994	28.04.1997	08.12.1997
Kuwait	08.03.1996		21.10.1991	02.08.2002	28.05.1997
Kyrgyzstan	05.09.1997		07.10.1994	06.08.1996	29.09.2003
Lao (People's Dem. Rep.)			08.05.1991	20.09.1996	25.02.1997	22.08.2002
Latvia	14.04.1992		14.04.1992	14.12.1995	23.07.1996
Lebanon	05.10.2000		14.05.1991	15.12.1994		25.09.2003
Lesotho	12.11.2001		10.03.1992	10.01.1995	07.12.1994	06.09.2000
Liberia			04.06.1993	08.11.2000
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya	16.05.1989	22.09.2000	15.04.1993	12.07.2001	06.01.2004	22.09.2000
Liechtenstein	02.11.1990		22.12.1995	19.11.1997	24.11.1999	11.12.2000
Lithuania	01.02.1996		31.01.1992	01.02.1996	15.04.1998	08.09.2000
Luxembourg	29.09.1987		07.03.1994	09.05.1994	15.04.1997	30.07.2001
Macedonia	12.12.1994		02.12.1993	02.12.1997	20.06.1997	06.03.2002
Madagascar			19.03.1991	04.03.1996
Malawi	11.06.1996		02.01.1991	02.02.1994	11.06.1998
Malaysia			17.02.1995	24.06.1994	20.04.2000
Maldives	20.04.2004	11.09.1991	11.02.1991	09.11.1992	31.05.1994
Mali	26.02.1999	12.04.2002	20.09.1990	29.03.1995	28.04.1997
Malta	13.09.1990		30.09.1990	29.12.2000	28.04.1997
Marshall Islands			04.10.1993	08.10.1992
Mauritania		09.02.1998	16.05.1991	16.08.1996	09.02.1998
Mauritius	09.12.1992		26.07.1990	04.09.1992	09.02.1993
Mexico	23.01.1986		21.09.1990	11.03.1993	29.08.1994
Micronesia			05.05.1993	20.06.1994	21.06.1999
Moldova (Rep. of)	28.11.1995		26.01.1993	20.10.1995	08.07.1996
Monaco	06.12.1991		21.06.1993	20.11.1992	01.06.1995	05.03.1999
Mongolia	24.01.2002		05.07.1990	30.09.1993	17.01.1995	25.02.2004
Morocco	21.06.1993		21.06.1993	21.08.1995	28.12.1995
Mozambique	14.09.1999		26.04.1994	25.08.1995	15.08.2000
Myanmar			15.07.1991	25.11.1994
Namibia	28.11.1994		30.09.1990	16.05.1997	24.11.1995
Nauru			27.07.1994	11.11.1993	12.11.2001	12.11.2001
Nepal	14.05.1991		14.09.1990	23.11.1993	18.11.1997	08.09.2000

(cont.)

Country	1984 Convention against Torture	1989 UN Mercenary Convention	1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child	1992 Convention on Biodiversity	1993 CWC	1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel
Netherlands	21.12.1988		06.02.1995	12.07.1994	30.06.1995	07.02.2002
New Zealand	10.12.1989		06.04.1993	16.09.1993	15.07.1996	16.12.1998
Nicaragua			05.10.1990	20.11.1995	05.10.1999
Niger	05.10.1998		30.09.1990	25.07.1995	09.04.1997
Nigeria	28.06.2001		19.04.1991	29.08.1994	20.05.1999
Niue			20.12.1995	28.02.1996
Norway	09.07.1986		08.01.1991	09.07.1993	07.04.1994	03.07.1995
Oman			09.12.1996	08.02.1995	08.02.1995
Pakistan			12.11.1990	26.07.1994	28.10.1997
Palau			04.08.1995	06.01.1999	03.02.2003
Panama	24.08.1987		12.12.1990	17.01.1995	07.10.1998	04.04.1996
Papua New Guinea			02.03.1993	16.03.1993	17.04.1996
Paraguay	12.03.1990		25.09.1990	24.02.1994	01.12.1994
Peru	07.07.1988		04.09.1990	07.06.1993	20.07.1995
Philippines	18.06.1986		21.08.1990	08.10.1993	11.12.1996	07.06.1997
Poland	26.07.1989		07.06.1991	18.01.1996	23.08.1995	22.05.2000
Portugal	09.02.1989		21.09.1990	21.12.1993	10.09.1996	14.10.1998
Qatar	11.01.2000	26.03.1999	03.04.1995	21.08.1996	03.09.1997
Romania	18.12.1990		28.09.1990	17.08.1994	15.02.1995	29.12.1997
Russian Federation	03.03.1987		16.08.1990	05.04.1995	05.11.1997	25.06.2001
Rwanda			24.01.1991	29.05.1996	31.03.2004
Saint Kitts and Nevis			24.07.1990	07.01.1993
Saint Lucia			16.06.1993	28.07.1993	09.04.1997
Saint Vincent and the Grenadines	01.08.2001		26.10.1993	03.06.1996	18.09.2002
Samoa			29.11.1994	09.02.1994	27.09.2002
San Marino			25.11.1991	28.10.1994	10.12.1999
São Tomé and Príncipe			14.05.1991	29.09.1999	09.09.2003
Saudi Arabia	23.09.1997	14.04.1997	26.01.1996	03.10.2001	09.08.1996
Senegal	21.08.1986	09.06.1999	31.07.1990	17.10.1994	20.07.1998	09.06.1999
Seychelles	05.05.1992	12.03.1990	07.09.1990	22.09.1992	07.04.1993
Sierra Leone	25.04.2001		18.06.1990	12.12.1994
Singapore			05.10.1995	21.12.1995	21.05.1997	26.03.1996
Slovakia	28.05.1993		28.05.1993	25.08.1994	27.10.1995	26.06.1996
Slovenia	16.07.1993		06.07.1992	09.07.1996	11.06.1997	21.01.2004
Solomon Islands			10.04.1995	03.10.1995
Somalia	24.01.1990
South Africa	10.12.1998		16.06.1995	02.11.1995	13.09.1995
Spain	21.10.1987		06.12.1990	21.12.1993	03.08.1994	13.01.1998
Sri Lanka	03.01.1994		12.07.1991	23.03.1994	19.08.1994	23.09.2003
Sudan			03.08.1990	30.10.1995	24.05.1999

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1984 Convention against Torture	1989 UN Mercenary Convention	1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child	1992 Convention on Biodiversity	1993 CWC	1994 Convention on the Safety of UN Personnel
Suriname		10.08.1990	01.03.1993	12.01.1996	28.04.1997
Swaziland	26.03.2004		07.09.1995	09.11.1994	20.09.1996
Sweden	08.01.1986		29.06.1990	16.12.1993	17.06.1993	25.06.1996
Switzerland	02.12.1986		24.02.1997	21.11.1994	10.03.1995
Syrian Arab Republic			15.07.1993	04.01.1996
Tajikistan	11.01.1995		26.10.1993	29.10.1997	11.01.1995
Tanzania (United Rep. of)			10.06.1991	08.03.1996	25.06.1998
Thailand			27.03.1992	31.10.2003	10.12.2002
Timor-Leste	16.04.2003		16.04.2003		07.05.2003
Togo	18.11.1987	25.02.1991	01.08.1990	04.10.1995	23.04.1997
Tonga			06.11.1995	19.05.1998	29.05.2003
Trinidad and Tobago			05.12.1991	01.08.1996	24.06.1997
Tunisia	23.09.1988		30.01.1992	15.07.1993	15.04.1997	12.09.2000
Turkey	02.08.1988		04.04.1995	14.02.1997	12.05.1997
Turkmenistan	25.06.1999	18.09.1996	20.09.1993	18.09.1996	29.09.1994	29.09.1998
Tuvalu			22.09.1995	20.12.2002	19.01.2004
Uganda	03.11.1986		17.08.1990	08.09.1993	30.11.2001
Ukraine	24.02.1987	13.09.1993	28.08.1991	07.02.1995	16.10.1998	17.08.1995
United Arab Emirates			03.01.1997	10.02.2000	28.11.2000
United Kingdom	08.12.1988		16.12.1991	03.06.1994	13.05.1996	06.05.1998
United States of America	21.10.1994				25.04.1997
Uruguay	24.10.1986	14.07.1999	20.11.1990	05.11.1993	06.10.1994	03.09.1999
Uzbekistan	28.09.1995	19.01.1998	29.06.1994	19.07.1995	23.07.1996	03.07.1996
Vanuatu			07.07.1993	25.03.1993
Venezuela	29.07.1991		13.09.1990	13.09.1994	03.12.1997
Viet Nam			28.02.1990	16.11.1994	30.09.1998
Yemen	05.11.1991		01.05.1991	21.02.1996	02.10.2000
Yugoslavia	12.03.2001		12.03.2001	01.03.2002	20.04.2000	31.07.2003
Zambia	07.10.1998		06.12.1991	28.05.1993	09.02.2001
Zimbabwe			11.09.1990	11.11.1994	25.04.1997
Total	136	25	192	188*	162	71

*According to UN treaty database, the European Community approved this convention on 21.12.1993

Country	1995 Protocol IV to the CCW	1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW	1997 Ottawa Convention	1998 ICC Statute	1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention	2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts
Afghanistan			11.09.2002	10.02.2003		24.09.2003
Albania	28.08.2002	28.08.2002	29.02.2000	31.01.2003
Algeria			09.10.2001
Andorra			29.06.1998	30.04.2001		30.04.2001
Angola			05.07.2002
Antigua and Barbuda			03.05.1999	18.06.2001
Argentina	21.10.1998	21.10.1998	14.09.1999	08.02.2001	07.01.2002	10.09.2002
Armenia
Australia	22.08.1997	22.08.1997	14.01.1999	01.07.2002
Austria	27.07.1998	27.07.1998	29.06.1998	28.12.2000	01.03.2002	01.02.2002
Azerbaijan					17.04.2001	03.07.2002
Bahamas			31.07.1998
Bahrain
Bangladesh	06.09.2000	06.09.2000	06.09.2000			06.09.2000
Barbados			26.01.1999	10.12.2002
Belarus	13.09.2000	02.03.2004	03.09.2003		13.12.2000
Belgium	10.03.1999	10.03.1999	04.09.1998	28.06.2000		06.05.2002
Belize			23.04.1998	05.04.2000		01.12.2003
Benin			25.09.1998	22.01.2002
Bhutan
Bolivia	21.09.2001	21.09.2001	09.06.1998	27.06.2002
Bosnia and Herzegovina	11.10.2001	07.09.2000	08.09.1998	11.04.2002		10.10.2003
Botswana			01.03.2000	08.09.2000
Brazil	04.10.1999	04.10.1999	30.04.1999	20.06.2002		27.01.2004
Brunei Darussalam
Bulgaria	03.12.1998	03.12.1998	04.09.1998	11.04.2002	14.06.2000	12.02.2002
Burkina Faso	26.11.2003	26.11.2003	16.09.1998			16.04.2004
Burundi			22.10.2003
Cambodia	25.03.1997	25.03.1997	28.07.1999	11.04.2002
Cameroon			19.09.2002
Canada	05.01.1998	05.01.1998	03.12.1997	07.07.2000		07.07.2000
Cape Verde	16.09.1997	16.09.1997	14.05.2001			10.05.2002
Central African Republic			08.11.2002	04.10.2001
Chad			06.05.1999			28.09.2003
Chile	15.10.2003	15.10.2003	10.09.2001			31.07.2003
China	04.11.1998	04.11.1998
Colombia	06.03.2000	06.03.2000	06.09.2000	05.08.2002
Comoros			19.09.2002

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1995 Protocol IV to the CCW	1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW	1997 Ottawa Convention	1998 ICC Statute	1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention	2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts
Congo			04.05.2001
Congo (Dem. Rep. of)			02.05.2002	11.04.2002		11.11.2001
Cook Islands
Costa Rica	17.12.1998	17.12.1998	17.03.1999	07.06.2001	09.12.2003	24.01.2003
Côte d'Ivoire			30.06.2000
Croatia	25.04.2002	25.04.2002	20.05.1998	21.05.2001		01.11.2002
Cuba
Cyprus	22.07.2003	22.07.2003	17.01.2003	07.03.2002	16.05.2001
Czech Republic	10.08.1998	10.08.1998	26.10.1999			30.11.2001
Denmark	30.04.1997	30.04.1997	08.06.1998	21.06.2001		27.08.2002
Djibouti			18.05.1998	05.11.2002
Dominica			26.03.1999	12.02.2001		20.09.2002
Dominican Republic			30.06.2000
Ecuador	16.12.2003	14.08.2000	29.04.1999	05.02.2002
Egypt
El Salvador	26.01.2000	26.01.2000	27.01.1999		27.03.2002	18.04.2002
Equatorial Guinea			16.09.1998		19.11.2003
Eritrea			27.08.2001
Estonia	20.04.2000	20.04.2000		30.01.2002
Ethiopia
Fiji			10.06.1998	29.11.1999
Finland	11.01.1996	03.04.1998		29.12.2000		10.04.2002
France	30.06.1998	23.07.1998	23.07.1998	09.06.2000		05.02.2003
Gabon			08.09.2000	20.09.2000	29.08.2003
Gambia			23.09.2002	28.06.2002
Georgia				05.09.2003
Germany	27.06.1997	02.05.1997	23.07.1998	11.12.2000
Ghana			30.06.2000	20.12.1999
Greece	05.08.1997	20.01.1999	25.09.2003	15.05.2002		22.10.2003
Grenada			19.08.1998
Guatemala	30.08.2002	29.10.2001	26.03.1999			09.05.2002
Guinea			08.10.1998	14.07.2003
Guinea-Bissau			22.05.2001
Guyana			05.08.2003
Haiti
Holy See	22.07.1997	22.07.1997	17.02.1998			24.10.2001
Honduras	30.10.2003	30.10.2003	24.09.1998	01.07.2002	26.01.2003	14.08.2002
Hungary	30.01.1998	30.01.1998	06.04.1998	30.11.2001
Iceland			05.05.1999	25.05.2000		01.10.2001

(cont.)

Country	1995 Protocol IV to the CCW	1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW	1997 Ottawa Convention	1998 ICC Statute	1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention	2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts
India	02.09.1999	02.09.1999
Indonesia
Iran (Islamic Rep. of)
Iraq
Ireland	27.03.1997	27.03.1997	03.12.1997	11.04.2002		18.11.2002
Israel	30.10.2000	30.10.2000
Italy	13.01.1999	13.01.1999	23.04.1999	26.07.1999		09.05.2002
Jamaica			17.07.1998			09.05.2002
Japan	10.06.1997	10.06.1997	30.09.1998
Jordan		06.09.2000	13.11.1998	11.04.2002
Kazakhstan						10.04.2003
Kenya			23.01.2001			28.01.2002
Kiribati			07.09.2000
Korea (Dem. People's Rep. of)
Korea (Rep. of)		09.05.2001		13.11.2002
Kuwait
Kyrgyzstan						13.08.2003
Lao (People's Dem. Rep.)
Latvia	11.03.1998	22.08.2002		28.06.2002
Lebanon
Lesotho			02.12.1998	06.09.2000		24.09.2003
Liberia			23.12.1999
Libyan Arab Jamahiriya					20.07.2001
Liechtenstein	19.11.1997	19.11.1997	05.10.1999	02.10.2001
Lithuania	03.06.1998	03.06.1998	12.05.2003	12.05.2003	13.03.2002	20.02.2003
Luxembourg	05.08.1999	05.08.1999	14.06.1999	08.09.2000
Macedonia			09.09.1998	06.03.2002	19.04.2002	12.01.2004
Madagascar			16.09.1999
Malawi			13.08.1998	19.09.2002
Malaysia			22.04.1999
Maldives	07.09.2000	07.09.2000	07.09.2000
Mali	24.10.2001	24.10.2001	02.06.1998	16.08.2000		16.05.2002
Malta			07.05.2001	29.11.2002		09.05.2002
Marshall Islands				07.12.2000
Mauritania			21.07.2000
Mauritius	24.12.2002		03.12.1997	05.03.2002
Mexico	10.03.1998		09.06.1998		07.10.2003	15.03.2002

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1995 Protocol IV to the CCW	1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW	1997 Ottawa Convention	1998 ICC Statute	1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention	2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts
Micronesia
Moldova (Rep. of)	08.09.2000	16.07.2001	08.09.2000			07.04.2004
Monaco		04.05.1997	17.11.1998			13.11.2001
Mongolia	06.04.1999			11.04.2002
Morocco	19.03.2002	19.03.2002				22.05.2002
Mozambique			25.08.1998
Myanmar
Namibia			21.09.1998	26.06.2002		16.04.2002
Nauru	12.11.2001	12.11.2001	07.08.2000	12.11.2001
Nepal
Netherlands	25.03.1999	25.03.1999	12.04.1999	17.07.2001
New Zealand	08.01.1998	08.01.1998	27.01.1999	07.09.2000		12.11.2001
Nicaragua	05.12.2000	05.12.2000	30.11.1998		01.06.2001
Niger			23.03.1999	11.04.2002
Nigeria			27.09.2001	27.09.2001
Niue			15.04.1998
Norway	20.04.1998	20.04.1998	09.07.1998	16.02.2000		23.09.2003
Oman
Pakistan	05.12.2000	09.03.1999
Palau
Panama	26.03.1997	03.10.1999	07.10.1998	21.03.2002	08.03.2001	08.08.2001
Papua New Guinea
Paraguay			13.11.1998	14.05.2001		27.09.2002
Peru	03.07.1997	03.07.1997	17.06.1998	10.11.2001		08.05.2002
Philippines	12.06.1997	12.06.1997	15.02.2000			26.08.2003
Poland		14.10.2003		12.11.2001
Portugal	12.11.2001	31.03.1999	19.02.1999	05.02.2002		19.08.2003
Qatar			13.10.1998		04.09.2000	25.07.2002
Romania	25.08.2003	25.08.2003	30.11.2000	11.04.2002		10.11.2001
Russian Federation	09.09.1999
Rwanda			08.06.2000			23.04.2002
Saint Kitts and Nevis			02.12.1998
Saint Lucia			13.04.1999
Saint Vincent and the Grenadines			01.08.2001	03.12.2002
Samoa			23.07.1998	16.09.2002
San Marino			18.03.1998	13.05.1999
São Tomé and Príncipe			31.03.2003
Saudi Arabia

(cont.)

Country	1995 Protocol IV to the CCW	1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW	1997 Ottawa Convention	1998 ICC Statute	1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention	2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts
Senegal		29.11.1999	24.09.1998	02.02.1999		03.03.2004
Seychelles	08.06.2000	08.06.2000	02.06.2000
Sierra Leone			25.04.2001	15.09.2000		15.05.2002
Singapore
Slovakia	30.11.1999	30.11.1999	25.02.1999	11.04.2002	11.02.2004
Slovenia	03.12.2002	03.12.2002	27.10.1998	31.12.2001
Solomon Islands			26.01.1999
Somalia
South Africa	26.06.1998	26.06.1998	26.06.1998	27.11.2000
Spain	19.01.1998	27.01.1998	19.01.1999	24.10.2000	06.07.2001	08.03.2002
Sri Lanka						08.09.2000
Sudan			13.10.2003
Suriname			23.05.2002
Swaziland			22.12.1998
Sweden	15.01.1997	16.07.1997	30.11.1998	28.06.2001		20.02.2003
Switzerland	24.03.1998	24.03.1998	24.03.1998	12.10.2001		26.06.2002
Syrian Arab Republic						17.10.2003
Tajikistan	12.10.1999	12.10.1999	12.10.1999	05.05.2000		05.08.2002
Tanzania (United Rep. of)			13.11.2000	20.08.2002
Thailand			27.11.1998
Timor-Leste			07.05.2003	06.09.2002
Togo			09.03.2000
Tonga
Trinidad and Tobago			27.04.1998	06.04.1999
Tunisia			09.07.1999			02.01.2003
Turkey			25.09.2003
Turkmenistan		19.03.2004	19.01.1998
Tuvalu
Uganda			25.02.1999	14.06.2002		06.05.2002
Ukraine	28.05.2003	15.12.1999
United Arab Emirates
United Kingdom	11.02.1999	11.02.1999	31.07.1998	04.10.2001		24.06.2003
United States of America		24.05.1999				23.12.2002
Uruguay	18.08.1998	18.08.1998	07.06.2001	28.06.2002		09.09.2003

(cont.)

(cont.)

Country	1995 Protocol IV to the CCW	1996 Amended Protocol II to the CCW	1997 Ottawa Convention	1998 ICC Statute	1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention	2000 Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflicts
Uzbekistan	29.09.1997
Vanuatu
Venezuela			14.04.1999	07.06.2000		23.09.2003
Viet Nam						20.12.2001
Yemen			01.09.1998
Yugoslavia	12.08.2003		18.09.2003	06.09.2001	02.09.2002	10.10.2002
Zambia			23.02.2001	13.11.2002
Zimbabwe			18.06.1998
Total	75	76	141	93	21	71

OTHER INSTRUMENTS

1863
Lieber Code
Instructions for the Government of Armies of the United States in the Field, prepared by Francis Lieber, promulgated as General Order No. 100 by President Abraham Lincoln, Washington D.C., 24 April 1863.

1874
Brussels Declaration
Project of an International Declaration concerning the Laws and Customs of War, Brussels, 27 August 1874.

1880
Oxford Manual
The Laws of War on Land, adopted by the Institute of International Law, Oxford, 9 September 1880.

1913
Oxford Manual of Naval War
The Laws of Naval War Governing the Relations between Belligerents, adopted by the Institute of International Law, Oxford, 9 August 1913.

1919
Report of the Commission on Responsibility
Report submitted to the Preliminary Conference of Versailles by the Commission on Responsibility of the Authors of the War and on Enforcement of Penalties, Versailles, 29 March 1919.

1923
Hague Rules of Air Warfare
Rules concerning the Control of Wireless Telegraphy in Time of War and Air Warfare, Part II, drafted by a Commission of Jurists, The Hague, December 1922–February 1923.

1938
ILA Draft Convention for the Protection of Civilian Populations against New Engines of War
Draft Convention for the Protection of Civilian Populations against New Engines of War, adopted by the International Law Association, Fortieth Conference, Amsterdam, 29 August–2 September 1938.

1943

Inter-Allied Declaration against Acts of Dispossession

Inter-Allied Declaration against Acts of Dispossession Committed in Territories under Enemy Occupation or Control, as agreed between the Union of South Africa, United States of America, Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovak Republic, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Greece, India, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Yugoslavia, and the French National Committee, London, 5 January 1943, also known as the London Declaration.

Moscow Declaration

Declaration concerning Atrocities, made at the Moscow Conference, signed by the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and China, Moscow, 30 October 1943.

1945

Allied Control Council Law No. 10

Allied Control Council Law No. 10: Punishment of Persons Guilty of War Crimes, Crimes against Peace and against Humanity, enacted by the Allied Control Council of Germany, composed of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, France, the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Berlin, 20 December 1945.

1946

IMT Charter (Tokyo)

Charter of the International Military Tribunal for the Far East, approved by an Executive Order, General Douglas MacArthur, Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Japan, Tokyo, 19 January 1946, amended on 26 April 1946.

1948

American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man

American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, adopted by the Ninth International Conference of American States, Res. XXX, Bogotá, 2 May 1948.

UDHR

Universal Declaration on Human Rights, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 217 A (III), 10 December 1948.

1950

Nuremberg Principles

Principles of International Law Recognized in the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and in the Judgement of the Tribunal, adopted by the International Law Commission, UN Doc. A/1316, New York, 5 June–29 July 1950.

UN Command Rules and Regulations

Rules of Criminal Procedure for Military Commissions of the United Nations Command, Tokyo, 22 October 1950.

1952

Luxembourg Agreement between Germany and the CJMC

Agreement consisting of Protocol No. 1 drawn up by the Representatives of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany and of the Conference on Jewish Material Claims against Germany; and Protocol No. 2 drawn up by the Representatives of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Conference on Jewish Material Claims against Germany.

UN Flag Code

United Nations Flag Code, adopted by the UN Secretary-General on 11 November 1952, pursuant to UN General Assembly Res. 167 (II) of 20 October 1947, and rescinding the Flag Code issued on 19 December 1947.

1954

ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind

Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind, adopted by the International Law Commission, reprinted in Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its sixth session, UN Doc. A/2693, 1954.

1955

Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners

Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the 1st UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Geneva, 30 August 1955, UN Doc. A/CONF/6/1, Annex I, A, adopted on 30 August 1955, approved by the UN Economic and Social Council, Res. 663 C (XXIV), 31 July 1957, extended by Res. 2076 (LXII), 13 May 1977 to persons arrested or imprisoned without charge.

1956

New Delhi Draft Rules

Draft Rules for the Limitation of the Dangers Incurred by the Civilian Population in Time of War, drafted by the International Committee of the Red Cross, September 1956, submitted to governments for their consideration on behalf of the 19th International Conference of the Red Cross, New Delhi, 28 October–7 November, Res. XIII.

1969

Agreement between the Government of Greece and the ICRC

Agreement between the Government of the Kingdom of Greece and the International Committee of the Red Cross, Athens, 3 November 1969.

1972

Stockholm Declaration on the Human Environment

Declaration of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, Stockholm, 5–6 June 1972, UN Doc. A/CONF.48/14/rev.1, 16 June 1972.

1974

UN Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict

Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 3318 (XXIX), 14 December 1974.

1975

UN Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subject to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subject to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 3452 (XXX), 9 December 1975.

1979

Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials

Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 34/169, 17 December 1979.

1981

Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination based on Religion or Belief

Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination based on Religion or Belief, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 36/55, 25 November 1981.

1982

World Charter for Nature

World Charter for Nature, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 37/7, 28 October 1982.

1985

Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary

Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Milan, 26 August–6 September 1985, UN Doc. A/CONF.121/22/Rev.1, 1985, p. 59, endorsed by the UN General Assembly, Res. 40/32, 29 November 1985 and Res. 40/146, 13 December 1985.

Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice

United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 40/33, 29 November 1985, also known as the Beijing Rules.

1986

Statutes of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

Statutes of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, adopted by the 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986.

1987

European Prison Rules

Recommendation No. R (87) 3 of the Committee of Ministers to Member States of the Council of Europe on the European Prison Rules, adopted by the Committee of Ministers at the 404th meeting of the Ministers' Deputies, Strasbourg, 12 February 1987.

1988

Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment

Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 43/173, 9 December 1988.

1989

Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions

Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-Legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions, recommended by the UN Economic and Social Council, Res. 1989/65, 24 May 1989.

1990

Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers

Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers, adopted by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Havana, 27 August–7 September 1990, UN Doc. A/CONF.144/28/Rev.1, 1990, p. 118, endorsed by the UN General Assembly, Res. 45/166, 18 December 1990.

Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners

Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 45/111, 14 December 1990.

Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials

Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials, adopted by the Eight United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, Havana, 27 August–7 September 1990, UN Doc. A/CONF.144/28/Rev.1, 1990, p. 112.

Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam

Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam, adopted at the 19th Session of the Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, Res. 49/19-P, Cairo, 5 August 1990, annexed to Letter dated 19 September 1990 from the Permanent Representative of Egypt to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/45/421-S/21797, 20 September 1990.

Government of El Salvador-FMLN Agreement on Human Rights

Agreement on Human Rights between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional, San José, 26 July 1990, annexed to Note verbale dated 14 August 1990 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of El Salvador to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/44/971-S/21541, 16 August 1990.

Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency

United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 45/112, 14 December 1990, also known as the Riyadh Guidelines.

Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of their Liberty

United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of Their Liberty, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 45/113, 14 December 1990.

1991

Agreement between Croatia and the SFRY on the Exchange of Prisoners

Agreement between Croatia and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on the Exchange of Prisoners and of Persons Deprived of Liberty, Zagreb, 6 November 1991.

Cartagena Declaration on Weapons of Mass Destruction

Cartagena Declaration on Renunciation of Weapons of Mass Destruction, signed by Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela, Cartagena de Indias, 4 December 1991.

Final Act of the Paris Conference on Cambodia
Final Act of the Paris Conference on Cambodia, Paris, 30 July–30 August 1989 and 21–23 October 1991.

FRY-Croatia Agreement on a Protected Zone around the Hospital of Osijek
Agreement Relating to the Establishment of a Protected Zone around the Hospital of Osijek, between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Croatia, Pècs, 27 December 1991.

Hague Statement on Respect for Humanitarian Principles
Statement on Respect for Humanitarian Principles, signed by the Presidents of the Six Republics of the former Yugoslavia, The Hague, 5 November 1991.

ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind
Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, adopted by the International Law Commission, reprinted in Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-third session, 29 April–19 July 1991, UN Doc. A/46/10, 1991.

Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains: Rules of Procedure and Plan of Operation, established on the Basis of a Memorandum of Understanding between the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Republic of Croatia, Republic of Serbia, Yugoslav People's Army and International Committee of the Red Cross, Pècs, 16 December 1991.

Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY
Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of International Humanitarian Law between Croatia and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Geneva, 27 November 1991.

Memorandum of Understanding between Iraq and the UN
Memorandum of Understanding between Iraq and the United Nations, Baghdad, 18 April 1991.

Mendoza Declaration on Chemical and Biological Weapons
Joint Declaration on the Complete Prohibition of Chemical and Biological Weapons, signed by Argentina, Brazil and Chile, Mendoza, 5 September 1991, also known as the Mendoza Accord, annexed to Letter dated 11 September 1991 from the Permanent Representatives of Argentina, Brazil and Chile to the UN addressed to the Secretary-UN General, UN Doc. A/46/463, 12 September 1991.

Peace Accords between the Government of Angola and UNITA
Peace Accords between the Government of Angola and UNITA, Lisbon, 1 May 1991, also known as Bicesse Accords, annexed to Letter dated 17 May 1991 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Angola to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/22609, 17 May 1991.

Plan of Operation for the Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains Plan of Operation Designed to Ascertain the Whereabouts or Fate of the Military and Civilian Missing, Annex to the Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains: Rules of Procedure and Plan of Operation, established on the Basis of a Memorandum of Understanding between the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Republic of Croatia, Republic of Serbia, Yugoslav People's Army and the International Committee of the Red Cross, Pècs, 16 December 1991.

1992

Addendum to the Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the FRY

Addendum to the Memorandum of Understanding of 27 November 1991 between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Geneva, 23 May 1992.

Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina

Agreement between Representatives of Mr. Alija Izetbegović (President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and President of the Party of Democratic Action), Representatives of Mr. Radovan Karadžić (President of the Serbian Democratic Party), and Representative of Mr. Miljenko Brkić (President of the Croatian Democratic Community), Geneva, 22 May 1992.

Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Exchange of Prisoners (March 1992)

Agreement between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on the Exchange of Prisoners, Pècs, 20 March 1992.

Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Exchange of Prisoners (July 1992)

Agreement between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on the Exchange of Prisoners, reached under the auspices of the International Committee of the Red Cross, Geneva, 28–29 July 1992.

Agreement between Croatia and the FRY on the Release and Repatriation of Prisoners

Agreement between Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia on the implementation of the July 1992 Agreement on the Release and Repatriation of Prisoners, Budapest, 7 August 1992.

Agreement between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners

Agreement on the Release and Transfer of Prisoners, concluded between Representatives of Mr. Alija Izetbegović (President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and President of the Party of Democratic Action), Representative of Mr. Radovan Karadžić (President of the Serbian Democratic Party), and Representative of Mr. Mate Boban (President of the Croatian Democratic Community), Geneva, 1 October 1992.

Agreement No. 2 on the Implementation of the Agreement of 22 May 1992 between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina

Agreement No. 2 between Representatives of Mr. Alija Izetbegović (President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and President of the Party of Democratic Action), Representatives of Mr. Radovan Karadžić (President of the Serbian Democratic Party), and Representative of Mr. Miljenko Brkić (President of the Croatian Democratic Community) on the implementation of the Agreement of 22 May 1992, Geneva, 23 May 1992.

Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina

Agreement No. 3 between Representatives of Mr. Alija Izetbegović (President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and President of the Party of Democratic Action), Representative of Mr. Radovan Karadžić (President of the Serbian Democratic Party), and Representative of Mr. Miljenko Brkić (President of the Croatian Democratic Community) on the ICRC Plan of Action, Geneva, 6 June 1992.

Bahir Dar Agreement
Agreement on Humanitarian Issues of the All-Party Meeting on Somalia, Bahir Dar, 2 June 1992.

Bahir Dar Declaration
Declaration of the All-Party Meeting on Somalia, Bahir Dar, 3 June 1992.

Declaration on Humanitarian Assistance and Gradual Repatriation of Temporary Refugees and Displaced Persons from the War in Bosnia and Herzegovina and in Croatia
Declaration on Humanitarian Assistance and Gradual Repatriation of Temporary Refugees and Displaced Persons from the War in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and in the Republic of Croatia, signed by Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Hungary and Slovenia, Ljubljana, 2 July 1992.

General Peace Agreement for Mozambique
General Peace Agreement for Mozambique, along with seven Protocols and four related documents, Rome, 4 October 1992, annexed to Letter dated 6 October 1992 from the Permanent Representative of Mozambique to the UN addressed to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/24635, 8 October 1992.

Joint Declaration by the Presidents of the FRY and Croatia (September 1992)
Joint Declaration by President Dobrica Cosić of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and President Franjo Tudjman of the Republic of Croatia, Geneva, 30 September 1992, annexed to Report of the UN Secretary-General on the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. S/24795, 11 November 1992, Annex II.

Joint Declaration by the Presidents of the FRY and Croatia (October 1992)
Joint Declaration by President Dobrica Cosić of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and President Franjo Tudjman of the Republic of Croatia, Geneva, 20 October 1992, annexed to Report of the UN Secretary-General on the International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. S/24795, 11 November 1992, Annex VI.

London Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues
Programme of Action on Humanitarian Issues agreed between the Co-chairmen of the London International Conference and the Parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, London, 27 August 1992, annexed to Report by the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1993/50, 10 February 1993, Annex III.

N'sele Cease-fire Agreement
Cease-fire Agreement between the Government of the Republic of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front, N'sele, 29 March 1991, as amended at Gbadolite, 16 September 1991, and at Arusha, 12 July 1992, annexed to Letter dated 4 March 1993 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Rwanda to the UN addressed to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/25363, 4 March 1993.

Recommendation on the Tragic Situation of Civilians in Bosnia and Herzegovina Recommendation on the Tragic Situation of Civilians in Bosnia and Herzegovina, adopted at the invitation of the International Committee of the Red Cross and signed by Representatives of Mr. Alija Izetbegović (President of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and President of the Party of Democratic Action), Representative of Mr. Radovan Karadžić (President of the Serbian Democratic Party), and Representative of Mr. Mate Boban (President of the Croatian Democratic Community), Geneva, 1 October 1992.

Rio Declaration

Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, adopted at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, Rio de Janeiro, 13 June 1992, UN Doc. A/CONF.151/26 (Vol. I), 12 August 1992, endorsed by the UN General Assembly, Res. 47/190, 22 December 1992; see also Res. 47/191, 22 December 1992 and Res. 49/113, 19 December 1994.

Sarajevo Declaration on Humanitarian Treatment of Displaced Persons

Sarajevo Declaration on Humanitarian Treatment of Displaced Persons, signed by the parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina under the auspices of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Sarajevo, 11 April 1992, annexed to Report of the UN Secretary-General pursuant to UN Security Council resolution 749, UN Doc. S/23836, 24 April 1992, Annex III, pp. 12–13.

UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance

Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 47/133, 18 December 1992.

1993

Afghan Peace Accord

Peace Accord between the Islamic State of Afghanistan, Harkat-e-Inqilab-e-Islami, Mahaz-e-Milli, Harkat-e-Islami, Hizbe-e-Islami, Jabha-e-Nijat-e-Milli, Ahmadzai Ittehad-e-Islami and Hizb-e-Wahdat-e-Islami, Islamabad, 7 March 1993, annexed to Letter dated 10 March 1993 from the Permanent Representative of Pakistan to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/25398, 11 March 1993.

Agreement on Demilitarization of Srebrenica and Žepa

Agreement on Demilitarization of Srebrenica and Žepa, concluded between Lt. Gen. Ratko Mladić and Gen. Sefer Halilović, in the presence of Lt. Gen. Philippe Morillon, Sarajevo, 8 May 1993.

Agreement among the Parties to Halt the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina

Agreement among the Parties to Halt the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, signed by the representatives of the Hrvatsko Vijece Obrane (HVO) and the Army of Bosnia and Herzegovina (ABiH), Kiseljac, 9 June 1993.

Arusha Peace Accords

Peace Agreement between the Government of the Republic of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front, Arusha, 4 August 1993.

Arusha Protocol on Displaced Persons

Protocol of Agreement on the Repatriation of Rwandan Refugees and the Resettlement of Displaced Persons, concluded between the Government of the Republic of Rwanda and the Rwandese Patriotic Front, Arusha, 9 June 1993.

Cotonou Agreement on Liberia

Cotonou Peace Agreement on Liberia between the Interim Government of National Unity of Liberia (IGNU) of the first part and the National Patriotic Front of Liberia (NPFL) of the second part and the United Liberation Movement of Liberia for Democracy (ULIMO) of the third part, Cotonou, 25 July 1993, annexed to Letter dated 6 August 1993 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of Benin to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/26272, 9 August 1993.

Franco-German Declaration on the War in Bosnia and Herzegovina
Franco-German Declaration on the War in Bosnia and Herzegovina, 61st French-German Consultations, Beaune, 2 June 1993.

ICTY Statute
Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, adopted by the UN Security Council, Res. 827, 25 May 1993, as amended by Res. 1166, 13 May 1998 and by Res. 1329, 30 November 2000.

UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women
Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, adopted by the UN General Assembly, Res. 48/104, 20 December 1993.

1994

Agreement on a Cease-fire in Yemen
Agreement on a Cease-fire in the Republic of Yemen, Moscow, 30 June 1994.

Agreement on a Temporary Cease-fire on the Tajik-Afghan Border
Agreement on a Temporary Cease-fire and the Cessation of Other Hostile Acts on the Tajik–Afghan Border and within the Country for the Duration of the Talks, Tehran, 17 September 1994.

Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala
Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights between the Government of the Republic of Guatemala and the Unidad Revolucionaria Nacional Guatemalteca, Mexico City, 29 March 1994, annexed to Letter dated 8 April 1994 from the UN Secretary-General to the President of the UN General Assembly and to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. A/48/928-S/1994/448, 19 April 1994, Annex I.

CSCE Code of Conduct
The Code of Conduct on Politico-Military Aspects of Security, adopted at the 91st Plenary Meeting of the Special Committee of the CSCE Forum for Security Co-operation, Budapest, 3 December 1994, incorporated as Decision IV in the CSCE Budapest Document, Towards a Genuine Partnership in a New Era, Doc. RC/1/95, corrected version of 21 December 1994.

Guidelines on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict
Revised Guidelines for Military Manuals and Instructions on the Protection of the Environment in Times of Armed Conflict, prepared by the International Committee of the Red Cross and presented to the UN Secretary-General, annexed to Report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Decade of International Law, UN Doc. A/49/323, 19 August 1994, pp. 49–53.

ICTR Statute
Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for genocide and other such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994, adopted by the UN Security Council, Res. 955, 8 November 1994, as amended by Res. 1165, 30 April 1998, and by Res. 1329, 30 November 2000.

ILC Draft Statute for an International Criminal Tribunal
Draft Statute for an International Criminal Court, adopted by the International Law Commission, reprinted in Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-sixth session, 2 May–22 July 1994, UN Doc. A/49/10, 1994.

Lusaka Protocol
Lusaka Protocol between the Government of Angola and UNITA, Lusaka, 15 November 1994, annexed to Letter dated 9 December 1997 from the Permanent Representative of Angola to the UN addressed to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/1994/1441, 22 December 1994, Annexes 1–10.

Israel-PLO Agreement on the Gaza Strip
Israel-PLO Agreement on the Gaza Strip and the Jericho Area, Cairo, 4 May 1994.

San Remo Manual
Louise Doswald-Beck (ed.), San Remo Manual on International Law Applicable to Armed Conflicts at Sea, 12 June 1994, Prepared by international lawyers and naval experts convened by the International Institute of Humanitarian Law, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 1995.

1995

Agreement on Ground Rules for Operation Lifeline Sudan
Agreement on Ground Rules for Operation Lifeline Sudan (OLS), between Dr. John Garang, Commander in Chief of the SPLM/A, and Pierce Gerety, OLS Coordinator and UNICEF Chief of Operations, 23 July 1995; also signed by Dr. Riek Machar, Commander-in-Chief of the SSIM/A, 6 August 1995 and by Dr. Lam Akol, Commander-in-Chief of SPLM/A-United, 29 July 1996.

Johannesburg Principles on Freedom of Expression
The Johannesburg Principles on National Security, Freedom of Expression and Access to Information, adopted on 1 October 1995 by a group of experts in international law, national security and human rights convened by Article 19, the International Centre against Censorship, in collaboration with the Centre for Applied Legal Studies of the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, 1 October 1995, annexed to Report of the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Promotion and Protection of the Right to Freedom of Opinion and Expression pursuant to UN Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/45, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/39, 22 March 1996.

1996

Ashgabat Protocol on Prisoner Exchange in Tajikistan
Protocol on the Implementation of a Humanitarian Action Involving the Exchange of Prisoners of War and Detainees, concluded between the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan and the United Tajik Opposition, Ashgabat, 21 July 1996, annexed to Report of the UN Secretary-General on the situation in Tajikistan, UN Doc. S/1996/754, 13 September 1996.

ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind
Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, adopted by the International Law Commission, reprinted in Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its forty-eighth session, 6 May–26 July 1996, UN Doc. A/51/10, 1996.

Moscow Agreement on a Cease-fire in Chechnya
Agreement on a Cease-fire, the Cessation of Military Activities, and on Measures for a Settlement of the Armed Conflict on the Territory of the Chechen Republic, Moscow, 27 May 1996.

Moscow Agreement on Tajikistan
Agreement between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the United Tajik Opposition, Moscow, 23 December 1996, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1996 from the Permanent Representative of the Russian Federation to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/1996/1070, 27/12/1996, Annex I.

Protocol to the Moscow Agreement on a Cease-fire in Chechnya

Protocol of the Meeting of the Working Group on the Question of a Settlement of the Armed Conflict on the Territory of the Chechen Republic, Moscow, 28 May 1996.

Protocol to the Moscow Agreement on a Cease-fire in Chechnya to Locate Missing Persons and to Free Forcibly Detained Persons Protocol of the Meeting of the Working Groups, Formed under the Negotiations Commissions, to Locate Missing Persons and to Free Forcibly Detained Persons, Nazran, 10 June 1996.

Protocol on the Commission on National Reconciliation in Tajikistan

Protocol on the Main Functions and Powers of the Commission on National Reconciliation in Tajikistan, Moscow, 23 December 1996, annexed to UN Doc. S/1996/1070, Letter dated 24 December 1996 from the Permanent Representative of the Russian Federation to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, 27 December 1996, Annex II.

1997

Bishkek Memorandum

Bishkek Memorandum between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the United Tajik Opposition, Bishkek, 18 May 1997, annexed to UN Doc. S/1997/385, Letter dated 20 May 1997 from the Permanent Representative of Kyrgyzstan to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, 20 May 1997, Annex II.

General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan

General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, Moscow, 27 June 1997, annexed to UN Doc. A/52/219-S/1997/510, Letter dated 1 July 1997 from the Permanent Representative of the Russian Federation to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, 2 July 1997, Annex I.

General Amnesty Proclamation Order concerning Sudan

General Amnesty Proclamation Order, annexed to the Sudan Peace Agreement, Khartoum, 21 April 1997.

Protocol on the Guarantees of Implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan

Protocol on the Guarantees of Implementation of the General Agreement on the Establishment of Peace and National Accord in Tajikistan, Tehran, 28 May 1997, annexed to UN Doc. S/1997/410, Letter dated 28 May 1997 from the Permanent Representative of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, 28 May 1997.

Protocol on Political Questions concerning Tajikistan

Protocol on Political Questions between the President of the Republic of Tajikistan and the leader of the United Tajik Opposition, Bishkek, 18 May 1997, annexed to UN Doc. S/1997/385, Letter dated 20 May 1997 from the Permanent Representative of Kyrgyzstan to the UN addressed to the UN Secretary-General, 20 May 1997, Annex I.

Protocol on Tajik Refugees

Protocol on Refugees between the Government of the Republic of Tajikistan, the United Tajik Opposition and the Special Representative of the UN

Secretary-General for Tajikistan, Tehran, 13 January 1997, annexed to UN Doc. S/1997/56, Progress Report of the UN Secretary-General on the situation in Tajikistan, 21 January 1997, Annex III.

Revised Lauswolt Document

Draft Provisions for the Revision of the 1954 Hague Convention and Commentary from the UNESCO Secretariat, Paris, October 1997, UNESCO Doc. CLT-97/CONF.208/2.

Statute of the Tajik Commission on National Reconciliation

Statute of the Tajik Commission on National Reconciliation, Mashhad, 21 February 1997, annexed to UN Doc. S/1997/169, Letter dated 24 February 1997 from the Chargé d'affaires a.i. of the Permanent Mission of the Islamic Republic of Iran to the UN addressed to the Secretary-General, 27 February 1997, Annex I.

Sudan Peace Agreement

Sudan Peace Agreement between the Government of Sudan; the South Sudan United Democratic Salvation Front (UDSF), comprised of the South Sudan Independence Movement (SSIM) and the Union of Sudan African Parties (USAP); the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM), the Equatoria Defence Force (EDF); and the South Sudan Independents Group (SSIG), Khartoum, 21 April 1997, also known as the Khartoum Peace Agreement.

1998

Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines

Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and International Humanitarian Law between the Government of the Republic of the Philippines and the National Democratic Front of the Philippines, The Hague, 16 March 1998.

Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement

Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement, presented to the UN Commission on Human Rights by the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General on Internally Displaced Persons, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/53/Add.2, 11 February 1998.

OAU Framework Agreement on Eritrea and Ethiopia

Framework Agreement for a Peaceful Settlement of the Dispute between Eritrea and Ethiopia, Ouagadougou, 8–10 June 1998, as approved by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution at its Fourth Ordinary Session, Ouagadougou, 17–18 December 1998, as endorsed by the 35th Ordinary Session of the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government, Algiers, 12–14 July 1999, annexed to UN Doc. S/1998/1223, Letter dated 24 December 1998 from the Permanent Representative of Ethiopia to the UN addressed to the President of the UN Security Council, 28 December 1998, Modalities for the implementation of the OAU Framework Agreement on the Settlement of the Dispute between Ethiopia and Eritrea, Annex III to UN Doc. S/1999/794.

1999

Agreement on the Protection and Provision of Humanitarian Assistance in Sudan

Agreement on the Implementation of Principles Governing the Protection and Provision of Humanitarian Assistance to War Affected Civilian Populations, concluded by the Government of Sudan, Sudan People's Liberation Movement and the United Nations–Operations Lifeline Sudan, Geneva, 15 December 1999.

Algiers Declaration
Algiers Declaration, adopted by the 35th Ordinary Session of the OAU Heads of State and Government, Decl. 1 (XXXV), Algiers, 12–14 July 1999.

Peace Agreement between the Government of Sierra Leone and the RUF
Peace Agreement Ending the Conflict between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front, Lomé, 7 July 1999, also known as the Lomé Peace Accord.

UN Secretary-General's Bulletin
Observance by United Nations Forces of International Humanitarian Law, Secretary-General's Bulletin, UN Secretariat, UN Doc. ST/SGB/1999/13, 6 August 1999.

UNMIK Regulation No. 1999/23
UNMIK Regulation No. 1999/23 on the Establishment of the Housing and Property Claims Directorate and the Housing and Property Claims Commission, 15 November 1999.

2000

Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi
Arusha Peace and Reconciliation Agreement for Burundi, concluded between the Government of the Republic of Burundi, the National Assembly, Alliance Burundo-Africaine pour le Salut (ABASA), Alliance Nationale pour le Droit et le Développement (ANADDE), Alliance des Vaillants (AV-INTWARI), Conseil National pour la Défense de la Démocratie (CNDD), Front pour la Démocratie au Burundi (FRODEBU), Front pour la Libération Nationale (FROLINA), Parti Socialiste et Panafricaniste (INKINZO), Parti pour la Libération du Peuple Hutu (PALIPEHUTU), Parti pour le Redressement National (PARENA), Parti Indépendant des Travailleurs (PIT), Parti Libéral (PL), Parti du Peuple (PP), Parti pour la Réconciliation du Peuple (PRP), Parti Social-Démocrate (PSD), Ralliement pour la Démocratie et le Développement Economique et Social (RADDES), Rassemblement du Peuple Burundais (RPB) and Union pour le Progrès National (UPRONA), Arusha, 28 August 2000, including Protocol II on Democracy and Good Governance.

Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law
Basic Principles and Guidelines on the Right to a Remedy and Reparation for Victims of Violations of International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law, annexed to The Right to Restitution, Compensation and Rehabilitation for Victims of Gross Violations of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms: Final Report of the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights, submitted in accordance with UN Commission on Human Rights resolution 1999/33, UN Doc. E/CN.4/2000/62,18 January 2000.

Cairo Declaration
Cairo Declaration, adopted at the Africa-Europe Summit under the Aegis of the Organization of African Unity and the European Union, Cairo, 3–4 April 2000.

Cairo Plan of Action
Cairo Plan of Action, adopted at the Africa-Europe Summit, held under the Aegis of the Organization of African Unity and the European Union, Cairo, 3–4 April 2000.

EU Charter of Fundamental Rights
Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, signed and proclaimed by the European Parliament, the Council and the Commission of the European Union, Nice, 7 December 2000.

ICC Elements of Crimes
Finalized draft text of the Elements of Crimes, adopted by the 23rd Meeting of the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court, New York, 30 June 2000, Report of the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court, UN Doc. PCNICC/2000/INF/3/Add.2, Addendum, 6 July 2000, as adopted by the Assembly of States Parties, First Session, 3–10 September 2002, Official Records of the Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute of the ICC, UN Doc. ICC-ASP/1/3, 25 September 2002, and ICC-ASP/1/3/Corr.1, 31 October 2002.

ICC Rules of Procedure and Evidence
Finalized draft text of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, adopted by the 23rd Meeting of the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court, New York, 30 June 2000, Report of the Preparatory Commission for the International Criminal Court, UN Doc. PCNICC/2000/1/Add.1, Addendum, Part I, 2 November 2000, as adopted by the Assembly of States Parties, First Session, 3–10 September 2002, Official Records of the Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute of the ICC, UN Doc. ICC-ASP/1/3, 25 September 2002, and ICC-ASP/1/3/Corr.1, 31 October 2002.

ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence
Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, The Hague, 11 February 1994, Rev. 18, as amended 14 July 2000.

United Nations Millennium Declaration
United Nations Millennium Declaration, adopted by the UN Millennium Summit, New York, 6–8 December 2000, endorsed by the UN General Assembly, Res. 55/2, 8 September 2000.

UNMIK Regulation No. 2000/60
UNMIK Regulation No. 2000/60 on Residential Property Claims and The Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Housing and Property Directorate and the Housing and Property Claims Commission, 31 October 2000.

UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15
Regulation on the Establishment of Panels with Exclusive Jurisdiction over Serious Criminal Offences, UN Doc. UNTAET/REG/2000/15, Dili, 6 June 2000.

2001

ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility
Draft Articles on Responsibility of States for Internationally Wrongful Acts, adopted by the International Law Commission, reprinted in Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fifty-third session, 23 April–1 June and 2 July–10 August 2001, UN Doc. A/56/10, 2001.

ICTR Rules of Procedure and Evidence
Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, Arusha, 29 June 1995, as amended on 31 May 2001.

MILITARY MANUALS

Argentina

Law of War Manual (1969)
Leyes de Guerra, RC-46-1, Público, II Edición 1969, Ejército Argentino, Edición original aprobado por el Comandante en Jefe del Ejército, 9 May 1967.

Regulation for the Treatment of POWs (1985)
Reglamento para el Tratamiento de los Prisioneros de Guerra de la Armada, Publicación R.A.-6-006, Armada Argentina, Dirección General del Personal Naval, 1ra. Edición, 1985.

Navy Regulations (1986)
Reglamento General del Servicio Naval, Tomo 1, Del Servicio en General, Publicación R.G-1-003, Armada Argentina, Estado Mayor General de la Armada, 3ra. Edición, 1986.

Law of War Manual (1989)
Leyes de Guerra, PC-08-01, Público, Edición 1989, Estado Mayor Conjunto de las Fuerzas Armadas, aprobado por Resolución No. 489/89 del Ministerio de Defensa, 23 April 1990.

Australia

Defence Force Manual (1994)
Australian Defence Force, Manual on Law of Armed Conflict, Australian Defence Force Publication, Operations Series, ADFP 37 - Interim Edition, 1994.

Commanders' Guide (1994)
Australian Defence Force, Law of Armed Conflict, Commanders' Guide, Australian Defence Force Publication, Operations Series, ADFP 37 Supplement 1 - Interim Edition, 7 March 1994.

Defence Training Manual (1994)
Australian Defence Force, Law of Armed Conflict Training, DI(G) OPS 33-1, 24 January 1994.

Air Force Manual (1994)
Operations Law for RAAF Commanders, Royal Australian Air Force, DI (AF) AAP 1003, 1st Edition, 1994.

Belgium

Manual on Prisoners of War (1963)
Instruction Relative au Traitement et à l'Administration des Prisonniers de Guerre, Règlement A 78, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, Administration Générale du Personnel, Direction des Statuts Administratifs, 1963.

Field Regulations (1964)
Règlement sur le Service en Campagne, Règlement IF 47, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, Etat-Major Général, Force Terrestre, Direction Supérieure de la Tactique, Direction Générale du Planning, Entraînement et Organisation, 1964.

Regulations on Armoured Infantry Squads (1972)
Le Peloton d'Infanterie Blindée, Règlement G 176, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, Etat-Major Général, Force Terrestre, Direction de l'Infanterie, des Paras-Commandos et de la Police Militaire, 1972.

Regulations on Tank Squadrons (1982)
L'Escadron de Chars, Règlement G 287, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, Etat-Major Général, Force Terrestre, Ecole des Troupes Blindées, 1982.

Law of War Manual (1983)
Droit Pénal et Disciplinaire Militaire et Droit de la Guerre, Deuxième Partie, Droit de la Guerre, Ecole Royale Militaire, par J. Maes, Chargé de cours, Avocat-général près la Cour Militaire, D/1983/1187/029, 1983.

Regulations on Anti-tank Squads (1986)
Règlement sur le Peloton Antichar Striker, Règlement G 294, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, Etat-Major Général, Force Terrestre, Ecole des Troupes Blindées, 1986.

Disciplinary Regulations (1991)
Règlement de Discipline pour l'Armée, Etat-Major Général, Division Personnel, 18 November 1991.

Regulations on Light Infantrymen (1991)
Le Peloton de Voltigeurs, Règlement G 293, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, Etat-Major Général, Force Terrestre, Ecole des Troupes Blindées, 1991.

Regulations on the Tactical Use of Large Units (1994)
L'Emploi Tactique des Grandes Unités, Règlement G 119, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, Etat-Major Général, Force Terrestre, Sections Operations et Entraînement, 1994 (édition provisoire).

Teaching Manual for Officers (1994)
Droit de la Guerre, Manuel d'Instruction pour Officiers, Etat-Major Général, Division Opérations, 1994.

LOAC Teaching Directive (1996)
Directive sur l'enseignement du droit des conflits armés et des règles d'engagement au sein des Forces Armées belges, Ordre Général J/185, Forces Armées, Etat-Major Général, Division Opérations, 8 February 1996.

Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated)
Droit de la Guerre, Dossier d'Instruction pour Soldat, à l'attention des officiers instructeurs, JS3, Etat-Major Général, Forces Armées belges.

Benin

Military Manual (1995)
Le Droit de la Guerre, III fascicules, Forces Armées du Bénin, Ministère de la Défense nationale, 1995

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Military Instructions (1992)
Instructions on the Implementation of the International Law of War in the Armed Forces of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Official Gazette of ABiH, No. 2/92, 5 December 1992.

Instructions to the Muslim Fighter (1993)
Instructions to the Muslim Fighter, booklet, ABiH 3rd Corps, 1993, cited in ICTY, Hadžihasanović and Others Case, Amended Indictment, 11 January 2002, § 24.

Burkina Faso

Disciplinary Regulations (1994)

Règlement de Discipline Générale dans les Forces Armées, Décret No. 94-159/IPRES/DEF, Ministère de la Défense, 1994.

Cameroon

Disciplinary Regulations (1975)

Règlement de Discipline dans les Forces Armées, Décret No. 75/700, 6 November 1975.

Instructors' Manual (1992)

Droit International Humanitaire et Droit de la Guerre, Manuel de l'Instructeur en vigueur dans les Forces Armées, Présidence de la République, Ministère de la Défense, Etat-major des Armées, Troisième Division, Edition 1992.

Canada

Unit Guide (1990)

Unit Guide for the Geneva Conventions, Canadian Forces Publication C 318(4), 1990.

Rules of Engagement for Operation Deliverance (1992)

Canadian Joint Force Somalia: Rules of Engagement Operation Deliverance, completed on 11 December 1992, reprinted in James M. Simpson, Law Applicable to Canadian Forces in Somalia 1992/93. A study prepared for the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces to Somalia, Minister of Public Works and Government Services, Ottawa, 1997, Appendix, pp. 73-80.

LOAC Manual (1999)

The Law of Armed Conflict at the Operational and Tactical Level, Office of the Judge Advocate General, 1999.

Code of Conduct (2001)

Code of Conduct for CF Personnel, Office of the Judge Advocate General, Edition of 4 June 2001.

China

PLA Rules of Discipline (1947)

Order on Re-promulgation of the Three Main Rules of Discipline and the Eight Points for Attention by the Headquarters of the PLA, 10 October 1947, in Selected Works of Mao Zedong, Vol. 4, The People's Press, p. 1241.

Colombia

Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992)

Transcripción Normas Fundamentales del Derecho Humanitario Aplicables en los Conflictos Armados, Circular No. 033/DIPL-SERPO-526, Policía Nacional, Dirección General, Santafé de Bogotá, 14 May 1992.

Human Rights Teaching Plan (1992)

Plan de Instrucción General sobre Derechos Humanos, Comando General Fuerzas Militares, 1992.

Directive on IHL (1993)

Normas de Derecho Internacional Humanitario, Directiva Permanente No. 017, Ministerio de Defensa Nacional, 17 August 1993.

Basic Military Manual (1995)

Derecho Internacional Humanitario - Manual Básico para las Personerías y las Fuerzas Armadas de Colombia, Ministerio de Defensa Nacional, 1995.

Instructors' Manual (1999)
Derechos Humanos & Derecho Internacional Humanitario - Manual de Instrucción de la Guía de Conducta para el Soldado e Infante de Marina, Ministerio de Defensa Nacional, Oficina de Derechos Humanos, Fuerzas Militares de Colombia, Santafé de Bogotá, 1999.
Soldiers' Manual (1999)
Derechos Humanos & Derecho Internacional Humanitario - Guía de Conducta para el Soldado e Infante de Marina, Ministerio de Defensa Nacional, Oficina de Derechos Humanos, Fuerzas Militares de Colombia, Santafé de Bogotá, 1999.

Congo, Republic of
Disciplinary Regulations (1986)
Décret No. 86/057 du 14 janvier 1986 portant Règlement du Service dans l'Armée Populaire Nationale, 1986.

Croatia
LOAC Compendium (1991)
Compendium "Law of Armed Conflicts", Republic of Croatia, Ministry of Defence, 1991.
Commanders' Manual (1992)
Basic Rules of the Law of Armed Conflicts - Commanders' Manual, Republic of Croatia, Ministry of Defence, 1992.
Soldiers' Manual (1992)
Rules of Conduct for Soldiers, Republic of Croatia, Ministry of Defence, 1992.
Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993)
Instructions "Basic Rules of International Humanitarian Law Applicable in Armed Conflicts", Republic of Croatia, Ministry of Defence, 1993.

Dominican Republic
Military Manual (1980)
La Conducta en Combate según las Leyes de la Guerra, Escuela Superior de las FF. AA. "General de Brigada Pablo Duarte", Secretaría de Estado de las Fuerzas Armadas, May 1980.

Ecuador
Naval Manual (1989)
Aspectos Importantes del Derecho Internacional Marítimo que Deben Tener Presente los Comandantes de los Buques, Academia de Guerra Naval, 1989.

El Salvador
Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated)
Derechos Humanos. Decálogo de la Fuerza Armada de El Salvador, Ministerio de la Defensa Nacional, Departamento de Derecho Humanitario.
Soldiers' Manual (undated)
Manual del Combatiente.

France
Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975)
Règlement de Discipline Générale dans les Armées, Decree No. 75-675 of 28 July 1975, replacing Decree No. 66-749, completed by Decree of 11 October 1978, implemented by Instruction No. 52000/DEF/C/5 of 10 December 1979, and modified by Decree of 12 July 1982, Ministère de la Défense, Etat-Major de l'Armée de Terre, Bureau Emploi.

LOAC Summary Note (1992)
Fiche de Synthèse sur les Règles Applicables dans les Conflits Armés, Note No. 432/DEF/EMA/OL.2/NP, Général de Corps d'Armée Voinot (pour l'Amiral Lanxade, Chef d'Etat-major des Armées), 1992.
LOAC Teaching Note (2000)
Fiche didactique relative au droit des conflits armés, Directive of the Ministry of Defence, 4 January 2000, annexed to the Directive No. 147 of the Ministry of Defence of 4 January 2000.
LOAC Manual (2001)
Manuel de droit des conflits armés, Ministère de la Défense, Direction des Affaires Juridiques, Sous-Direction du droit international humanitaire et du droit européen, Bureau du droit des conflits armés, 2001.

Germany
Soldiers' Manual (1991)
Taschenkarte, Humanitäres Völkerrecht in bewaffneten Konflikten - Grundsätze, Bearbeitet nach ZDv 15/2, Humanitäres Völkerrecht in bewaffneten Konflikten - Handbuch, Zentrum Innere Führung, June 1991.
Military Manual (1992)
Humanitarian Law in Armed Conflicts - Manual, DSK VV207320067, edited by The Federal Ministry of Defence of the Federal Republic of Germany, VR II 3, August 1992, English translation of ZDv 15/2, Humanitäres Völkerrecht in bewaffneten Konflikten - Handbuch, August 1992.
IHL Manual (1996)
ZDv 15/1, Humanitäres Völkerrecht in bewaffneten Konflikten - Grundsätze, DSK VV230120023, Bundesministerium der Verteidigung, June 1996.

Hungary
Military Manual (1992)
A Hadijog, Jegyzet a Katonai, Föiskolák Hallgatói Részére, Magyar Honvédség Szolnoki Repülötiszti Föiskola, 1992.

India
Madras Police Standing Orders (1951)
Madras Police Standing Orders, Government of Madras, Madras, 1951.
West Bengal Police Regulations (1962)
West Bengal Police Regulations, Regulation No. 156, Government of West Bengal, Calcutta, 1962.
Manual of Military Law (1983)
Manual of Military Law, Three Volumes, Ministry of Defence, Government of India, 1983.
Police Manual (1986)
Police Manual for Handling Civil Disturbances, Home Ministry, Government of Maharashtra, Bombay, 1986.
Army Training Note (1995)
Army Training Note, Chief of Staff, Army Training Command, Ministry of Defence, Government of India, 1995.

Indonesia
Field Manual (1979)
Field Manual concerning the Treatment of Prisoners of War, Department of Defence, 1979.

Military Manual (1982)
The Basics of International Humanitarian Law, Legal Division of the Indonesian Armed Forces.
Air Force Manual (1990)
The Basics of International Humanitarian Law in Air Warfare, Indonesian Air Force, 1990.
Directive on Human Rights in Irian Jaya and Maluku (1995)
Directive concerning Human Rights, issued by the Commander of the Regional Military Command of Irian Jaya and Maluku, 1995.
Directive on Human Rights in Trikora (1995)
Directive concerning the Respect of Human Rights in Military Operations, issued by the Commander of the Regional Military Command of Trikora, No. Skep/96/XII/1995, 1 November 1995.

Israel
Law of War Booklet (1986)
Conduct in the Battlefield in Accordance with the Law of War, Israel Defence Forces, 1986.
Manual on the Laws of War (1998)
Laws of War in the Battlefield, Manual, Military Advocate General Headquarters, Military School, 1998.

Italy
IHL in Armed Conflicts Manual (1988)
Diritto umanitario nei conflitti armati, Academia Militare, 1988.
LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991)
Regole elementari di diritto di guerra, SMD-G-012, Stato Maggiore della Difesa, I Reparto, Ufficio Addestramento e Regolamenti, Rome, 1991.
IHL Manual (1991)
Manuale di diritto umanitario, Introduzione e Volume I, Usi e convenzioni di Guerra, SMD-G-014, Stato Maggiore della Difesa, I Reparto, Ufficio Addestramento e Regolamenti, Rome, 1991.
Peace Operations Manual (1994)
Manuale interforze per le operazioni di pace, Stato Maggiore della Difesa, 1994.

Japan
Self-Defence Force Notification (1965)
Notification on the Treatment of an Emblem of the Red Cross and ID Cards for Medical Staff, Land Self-Defence Force Notification No. 92-11, 1 October 1965.

Kenya
LOAC Manual (undated)
Law of Armed Conflict, Military Basic Course (ORS), 4 Précis, The School of Military Police.

Korea, Republic of Military Regulation 187 (1991)
Military Regulation 187, 1 January 1991.
Military Operations Law of War Compliance Regulation (1993)
Military Operations Law of War Compliance Regulation, Regulation No. 525-8, 1 November 1993, Statute 525-8 of United Nations Command/Combined

Force Command (UNC/CFC), Statute of Observing Laws of War of 15 December 1988.
Regulation for Compliance with the Laws of War (1994)
Regulation for Compliance with the Laws of War, promulgated as Army Regulation 187, 1 April 1994.
Military Law Manual (1996)
Military Law Manual, 1996.
Operational Law Manual (1996)
Operational Law Manual, 1996.

Kuwait
Military Laws (1962-1980)
Military Laws, 1962-1980.
Statute of the Police Force (1968)
Statute of the Police Force, Law No. 23, Ministry of Interior, 1968.

Kyrgyzstan
Law of War Manual (1999)
Law of War, D. Akmatov and B. Markei, ed. Izdatelskii, Republic of Kyrgyzstan, 1999.
Military Manual (1999)
Law of Armed Conflicts - Manual for the Education of Officers of the Armed Forces, Ministry of Defence, Republic of Kyrgyzstan, Bishkek, 1999.

Lebanon
Army Regulations (1971)
Règlement Général de l'Armée, No. 1/400, Ministère de la Défense, Commandement de l'Armée, 14 January 1971.
Field Manual (1996)
Manuel de Service du Terrain dans l'Armée Libanaise, Arrêt No. 3188/A.A./Q, Département de l'Armée pour la Planification, Direction des Etudes Générales, 23 October 1996.
Teaching Manual (1997)
Manuel de l'Instruction Nationale dans l'Armée Libanaise, 1997.

Madagascar
Military Manual (1994)
Le Droit des Conflits Armés, Ministère des Forces Armées, August 1994.

Mali
Army Regulations (1979)
Règlement du Service dans l'Armée, 1ère Partie: Discipline Générale, Ministère de la Défense Nationale, 1979.

Morocco
Disciplinary Regulations (1974)
Règlement de Discipline Général dans les Forces Armées Royales, Dahir No. 1-74-383 du 15 rejeb 1394, 5 August 1974.

Netherlands
Military Manual (1993)
Toepassing Humanitair Oorlogsrecht, Voorschift No. 27-412/1, Koninklijke Landmacht, Ministerie van Defensie, 1993.

Aide-Mémoire for IFOR Commanders (1995)
Aide-Mémoire voor IFOR Commandanten, First Edition, 21 December 1995.
IFOR Instructions (1995)
IFOR Instructiekaart, geweldsinstructie, First Edition, 18 December 1995.
Military Handbook (1995)
Handboek Militair, Ministerie van Defensie, 1995.

New Zealand
Military Manual (1992)
Interim Law of Armed Conflict Manual, DM 112, New Zealand Defence Force, Headquarters, Directorate of Legal Services, Wellington, November 1992.

Nicaragua
Military Manual (1996)
Manual de Comportamiento y Proceder de las Unidades Militares y de los Miembros del Ejército de Nicaragua en Tiempo de Paz, Conflictos Armados, Situaciones Irregulares o Desastres Naturales, Ejército de Nicaragua, Estado Mayor General, Asesoría Jurídica del Nicaragua, 1996.

Nigeria[1]
Operational Code of Conduct (1967)
Operational Code of Conduct for Nigerian Armed Forces, Federal Military Government of Nigeria, July 1967.
Military Manual (1994)
International Humanitarian Law (IHL), Directorate of Legal Services, Nigerian Army, 1994.
Manual on the Laws of War (undated)
The Laws of War, by Lt. Col. L. Ode PSC, Nigerian Army, Lagos.
Soldiers' Code of Conduct (undated)
Code of Conduct for Combatants, "The Soldier's Rules", Nigerian Army.

Peru
Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991)
Derechos Humanos: Decálogo de las Fuerzas del Orden, Comando Conjunto de las Fuerzas Armadas, Ministerio de Defensa, Ejército Peruano, 1991.
Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (1994)
Derechos Humanos: Principios, Normas y Procedimientos, MFA 09-1, Comando Conjunto de las Fuerzas Armadas, Ministerio de Defensa, Ejército Peruano, Lima, Peru, May 1994.

Philippines[2]
Military Directive to Commanders (1988)
Protection and Rehabilitation of Innocent Civilians Affected by AFP Counterinsurgency Operations, Directive to Commanders of Major Services

[1] According to the Report on the Practice of Nigeria, in areas not covered by domestic legislation and manuals, resort is made to the UK Military Manual, which is applied as Nigerian law either "as an unrepealed statute of general application or because the content of the rules have become crystallised as part of common law or international customary law of war. Report on the Practice of Nigeria, 1997, Introduction, p. 2.

[2] According to a naval officer interviewed for the Report on the Practice of the Philippines, in the absence of an updated military manual, the Armed Forces of the Philippines follow the laws of war as applied by the US, Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 2.9, Footnote 28.

and Area Commands, Office of the Chief of Staff, General Headquarters of the Armed Forces of the Philippines, Ministry of National Defense, 15 July 1988.

Handbook on Discipline (1989)

Handbook on Discipline, Armed Forces of the Philippines, 1989.

Military Instructions (1989)

Safety of Innocent Civilians and Treatment of the Wounded and Dead, Directive to Commanders of Major Services and Area Commands, Office of the Chief of Staff, General Headquarters of the Armed Forces of the Philippines, Ministry of National Defence, 6 September 1989.

Rules for Combatants (1989)

Rules for Combatants, in Handbook on Discipline, Annex C(II), General Headquarters, Armed Forces of the Philippines, Camp General Emilio Aguinaldo, Quezon City, 1989.

Soldier's Rules (1989)

Soldier's Rules, in Handbook on Discipline, Annex C(I), General Headquarters, Armed Forces of the Philippines, Camp General Emilio Aguinaldo, Quezon City, 1989.

Code of Ethics (1991)

Armed Forces of the Philippines Code of Ethics, 1991.

Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991)

Implementation Guidelines for Presidential Memorandum Order No. 393, dated 9 September 1991, Directing the Armed Forces of the Philippines and the Philippines National Police to Reaffirm their Adherence to the Principles of Humanitarian Law and Human Rights in the Conduct of Security/Police Operations, Joint Circular Number 2-91, Department of National Defense, Department of Interior and Local Government, 1991.

Police Rules of Engagement (1993)

National Police Rules of Engagement, 1993.

Romania

Soldiers' Manual (1991)

Manualul Soldatului, Ghid de comportare în luptă, Asociaţia Română de Drept Umanitar (ARDU), 1991.

Russia

Military Manual (1990)

Instructions on the Application of the Rules of International Humanitarian Law by the Armed Forces of the USSR, Appendix to Order of the USSR Defence Minister No. 75, 1990.

Rwanda

Military Instructions (1987)

Cours d'organisation destiné aux commandants de compagnie, Ecole Supérieure Militaire, Kigali, 4ème édition, 1987.

Disciplinary Regulations (undated)

Règlement de Discipline Militaire - Amategeko ya Disciplini Y'Ingabo Z'Igihugu - Military Disciplinary Regulations.

Senegal

Disciplinary Regulations (1990)

Règlement de Discipline dans les Forces Armées, Décret 90-1159, 12 October 1990.

IHL Manual (1999)
Le DIH adapté au contexte des opérations de maintien de l'ordre, République du Sénégal, Ministère des Forces Armées, Haut Commandement de la Gendarmerie et Direction de la Justice Militaire, Cabinet, 1999.

South Africa
LOAC Manual (1996)
Presentation on the South African Approach to International Humanitarian Law, Appendix A, Chapter 4: International Humanitarian Law (The Law of Armed Conflict), National Defence Force, 1996. This manual is also included in Chapter 4 of the Draft Civic Education Manual of 1997.
Medical Services Military Manual (undated)
Medical Services Military Manual - Humanitarian Law, South African Medical Service Academy in Voortrekkerhoogte, s.d.

Spain
Field Regulations (1882)
El Reglamento para el Servicio de Campaña, 4 January 1882.
Order 60/1992 on Military Instruction for High-Ranking Officers (1992)
Orden 60/1992 sobre Planes de Estudio para la Enseñanza Militar de Formación de Grado Superior de los Cuerpos Generales de los Ejércitos e Infantería de Marina, Ministry of Defence, 30 July 1992, Boletín Oficial de Defensa, No. 160, 17 August 1992, p. 7.789.
Order 63/1993 on Military Instruction for Other Officers (1993)
Orden 63/1993 sobre Planes de Estudio de la Enseñanza Militar de Formación de los Cuerpos Comunes de las Fuerzas Armadas, Escala Superior y Media, Ministry of Defence, 31 May 1993, Boletín Oficial de Defensa, No. 110, 8 June 1993, p. 3.786.
LOAC Manual (1996)
Orientaciones. El Derecho de los Conflictos Armados, Publicación OR7-004, 2 Tomos, aprobado por el Estado Mayor del Ejército, Division de Operaciones, 18 March 1996.

Sweden
Military Manual (1976)
Folkrätten – Internationella regler i krig, Blhang Svensk soldat, 1976.
IHL Manual (1991)
International Humanitarian Law in Armed Conflict, with reference to the Swedish Total Defence System, Swedish Ministry of Defence, January 1991.

Switzerland
Military Manual (1984)
Lois et coutumes de la guerre, Manuel 51.7/III dfi, Armée suisse, 1984.
Teaching Manual (1986)
Droit des gens en temps de guerre, Programme d'instruction fondé sur le Manuel 51.7/III "Lois et coutumes de la guerre", Cours de base pour recrues de toutes les armes 97.2f, Armée suisse, 1986.
Basic Military Manual (1987)
Lois et coutumes de la guerre (Extrait et commentaire), Règlement 51.7/II f, Armée Suisse, 1987.

Tajikistan

Order on Law of Armed Conflict Curriculum (1997)

Order No. 566 on the Inclusion of the Subject "Law of Armed Conflict" in the Curriculum of the Republican Specialised Boarding School No. 1 in Dushanbe, 1 October 1997.

Order No. 148 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses (1997)

Order No. 148 on the Implementation of the "Law of Armed Conflict" Courses at the Military Chairs of Civilian Institutions of Higher Education, at the S. Safarov Tajik Higher Military College and at the Military Schools of the Republic of Tajikistan, Ministry of Defence, 8 August 1997.

Order No. 554 on Law of Armed Conflict Courses (1997)

Order No. 554 on the Implementation of the "Law of Armed Conflict" Courses at the Military Chairs of Civilian Institutions of Higher Education of the Republic of Tajikistan, 24 September 1997.

Togo

Military Manual (1996)

Le Droit de la Guerre, III fascicules, Etat-major Général des Forces Armées Togolaises, Ministère de la Défense nationale, 1996.

Uganda

Code of Conduct (1986)

Code of Conduct for the National Resistance Army (NRA), Legal Notice No. 1 of 1986 (Amendment), 23 August 1986.

Operational Code of Conduct (1986)

Operational Code of Conduct for the National Resistance Army (NRA), Legal Notice No. 1 of 1986 (Amendment), 23 August 1986.

United Kingdom

Military Manual (1958)

The Law of War on Land being Part III of the Manual of Military Law, The War Office, HMSO, 1958.

LOAC Manual (1981)

The Law of Armed Conflict, D/DAT/13/35/66, Army Code 71130 (Revised 1981), Ministry of Defence, prepared under the Direction of The Chief of the General Staff, 1981.

United States of America

Field Manual (1956)

Field Manual 27-10, The Law of Land Warfare, US Department of the Army, 18 July 1956, as modified by Change No. 1, 15 July 1976.

Rules of Engagement for the Vietnam War (1971)

Rules of Engagement for the Employment of Firepower in the Republic of Viet-Nam, US Military Assistance Command Viet-Nam, Directive No. 525-13, May 1971, unclassified contents reprinted in Eleanor C. McDowell, Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1975, US Department of State Publication 8865, Washington, D.C., 1976, pp. 814-815.

Air Force Pamphlet (1976)

Air Force Pamphlet 110-31, International Law - The Conduct of Armed Conflict and Air Operations, US Department of the Air Force, 1976.

Code of Conduct (1979)

Code of the US Fighting Force, American Forces Information Service, Department of Defence, 1979.

Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980)
Air Force Pamphlet 110-34, Commander's Handbook on the Law of Armed Conflict, Judge Advocate General, US Department of the Air Force, 25 July 1980.

Soldier's Manual (1984)
Your Conduct in Combat under the Law of War, Publication No. FM 27-2, Headquarters Department of the Army, Washington, November 1984.

Instructor's Guide (1985)
Instructor's Guide - The Law of War, Headquarters Department of the Army, Washington, April 1985.

Health Service Manual (1991)
Field Manual 8-10, Health Service Support in a Theatre of Operations, Department of the Army Headquarters, 1 March 1991.

Rules of Engagement for Operation Desert Storm (1991)
Desert Storm - Rules of Engagement, Pocket Card, US Central Command, January 1991, reprinted in Operational Law Handbook, International and Operational Law Department, The Judge Advocate General's School, United States Army, Charlottesville, Virginia, 1995, pp. 8-7 and 8-8.

Operational Law Handbook (1993)
Operational Law Handbook, JA 422, Center for Law and Military Operations and International Law Division, The Judge Advocate General's School, United States Army, Charlottesville, Virginia 22903-1781, 1993.

Naval Handbook (1995)
The Commander's Handbook on the Law of Naval Operations, NWP 1-14M/MCWP 5-2.1/COMDTPUB P5800.7, issued by the Department of the Navy, Office of the Chief of Naval Operations and Headquarters, US Marine Corps, and Department of Transportation, US Coast Guard, October 1995 (formerly NWP 9 (Rev. A)/FMFM 1-10, October 1989).

Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997)
Annotated Supplement to the Commander's Handbook on the Law of Naval Operations, prepared by the Oceans Law and Policy Department, Center for Naval Warfare Studies, Naval War College, Newport, Rhode Island, November 1997.

Uruguay

Disciplinary Regulations (1980)
Reglamento General de Servicios No. 21 (1ª y 2ª Parte), Reglamento de Disciplina y Servicio Interno, 4ta. Edición, Publicación del Centro Militar, Vol. 61, Suplemento No. 58, April 1980.

Yugoslavia, Federal Republic of

YPA Military Manual (1988)
Propisi o Primeri Pravila Medjunarodnog Ratnog Prava u Oruzanim Snagama SFRJ, PrU-2, Savezni Sekretarijat za Narodnu Odbranu (Pravna Uprava), 1988.[3]

[3] This manual was adopted in its entirety by Article 12 of the Law on the Application of the Constitution of the Republika Srpska. According to the Report on the Practice of the Republika Srpska, it was applied in the context of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Report on the Practice of Republika Srpska, 1997, Chapter 1.1.

NATIONAL LEGISLATION

Albania

Emblem Law (1994)

Për mbrojtjen e Emblemës dhe emrin e Kryqit të Kuq (Law No. 7865 for the protection of the emblem and the name of the Red Cross), adopted on 29 September 1994, published (by Decree No. 946 of 17 October 1994 of the President of the Republic of Albania) in Fletorja Zyrtare e Republikës së Shqipërisë (Official Gazette of the Republic of Albania), No. 15, November 1994, pp. 610–691.

Military Penal Code (1995)

Kodi Penal Ushtarak (Law No. 8003, Military Penal Code), adopted on 28 September 1995, published in Fletorja Zyrtare e Republikës së Shqipërisë (Official Gazette of the Republic of Albania), No. 22, October 1995, pp. 967–990.

Anti-Personnel Mines Decision (2000)

Për ndalimin e përdorimit, magazinimit, të prodhimit dhe të transferimit të minave kundër personit (MKP) dhe për shkatërimin e tyre (Decision of the Council of Ministers No. 266 on the prohibition of the use, storage, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines and their destruction), adopted on 25 May 2000, published in Fletorja Zyrtare e Republikës së Shqipërisë (Official Gazette of the Republic of Albania), No. 15, June 2000, pp. 734–735.

Algeria

Penal Code (1966)

Ordonnance n° 66-156 du 8 juin 1966 portant code pénal, published in the Journal officiel de la République algérienne, No. 49, 11 June 1966, pp. 562ff.

Code of Military Justice (1971)

Ordonnance n° 71-28 du 22 avril 1971 portant code de justice militaire, published in the Journal officiel de la République algérienne, No. 38, 11 May 1971, pp. 470ff. (as completed by the Ordonnance n° 73 du 8 janvier 1973).

Law on National Reconciliation (1999)

Loi n° 99-08 du 29 Rabie El Aouel 1420 correspondant au 13 juillet 1999 relative au rétablissement de la concorde civile, published in the Journal officiel de la République algérienne, No. 46, 20 July 1999, pp. 3–7.

Andorra

Decree on Arms (1989)

Decret sobre possessió, ús i circulació d'armes, adopted on 3 July 1989, published in Butlletí Oficial de Principat d'Andorra, No. 17, 8 October 1989.

Angola

Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations (2001)
Normas Sobre o Reassentamento das Populações Deslocadas, adopted by Decreto No. 1/01, Conselho de Ministros, 5 January 2001, published in Diário da República, I Série – No. 1, Sexta-feira, 5 January 2001, pp. 1–3.

Antigua and Barbuda

Red Cross Society Act (1983)
An Act for the Incorporation of the Antigua and Barbuda Red Cross Society and for matters incidental thereto and connected therewith, Act No. 5 of 1983, 22 July 1983, published in the Gazette, No. 40, 4 August 1983.

Argentina

Emblem Law (1893)
Ley No. 2976 sobre el uso del emblema, el nombre y las insignias de la Sociedad Argentina de la Cruz Roja (Cruz Roja Argentina), adopted on 18 September 1893, promulgated on 21 September 1893, published in R. N., 1893, t. II, p. 221.

Code of Military Justice as amended (1951)
Ley No. 14.029, Código de Justicia Militar, adopted on 4 July 1951, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 6 August 1951, amended by Ley No. 23.049, Modificaciones al Código de Justicia Militar, adopted on 9 February 1984, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 15 February 1984.

Law on National Defence (1966)
Ley No. 16.970 de Defensa Nacional, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 10 October 1966, abrogated by Ley No. 23.554 de Defensa Nacional (Law No. 23.554 on National Defence), adopted on 13 April 1988, promulgated on 26 April 1988, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 5 May 1988.

Decree on the Law on National Defence (1967)
Decreto No. 739/67 del Poder Ejecutivo Nacional (– Ley de Defensa Nacional; reglamentación de la ley 16.970) (Decree No. 739/67 concerning the Regulation of Law No. 16.970), published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 14 February 1967.

Amnesty Law (1973)
Ley No. 20.508, Ley de amnistía, adopted on 26 May 1973, promulgated on 27 May 1973, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 28 May 1973.

Decree on the State of Emergency (1974)
Decreto No. 1368 del Poder Ejecutivo Nacional (– Estado de sitio – Declaración en todo el país), of 6 November 1974, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, November 1974.

Decree on the State of Emergency (1975)
Decreto No. 807 del Poder Ejecutivo Nacional (– Estado de sitio – opción para salir del país – Reglamentación), of 1 April 1975, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 7 April 1975.

Decree on the State of Emergency (1976)
Decreto No. 642 del Poder Ejecutivo Nacional (– Estado de sitio – condiciones para autorizar la opción para salir del país prevista en el art. 23 de la Constitución Nacional – Recurso de habeas corpus – Sustitución del art. 639 del Código de Procedimientos en Materia Penal), of 17 February 1976, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 23 February 1976.

Law on the State of Emergency (1977)

Ley No. 21.650 (– Estado de sitio – de los arrestos – de las opciones para salir del territorio argentino – Reglamentación del acta institucional del 1° de septiembre de 1977) (Law No. 21.650 (Regulation of the institutional act of the 1st of September of 1977)), adopted and promulgated on 26 September 1977, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 27 September 1977.

Law on Civil Defence in Buenos Aires (1981)

Ley No. 22.418, Ley de defensa civil para la ciudad de Buenos Aires, adopted and promulgated on 5 March 1981, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 11 March 1981.

Self-Amnesty Law (1983)

Ley No. 22.924, Ley de Amnistía, Amnistía de delitos cometidos con motivación o finalidad terrorista o subversiva, desde el 25/5/73 hasta el 17/6/82, adopted on 23 March 1983, promulgated on 22 September 1983, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 27 September 1983.

Decree on Trial before the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces (1983)

Decreto No. 158/83 del Poder Ejecutivo Nacional. Juicio Sumario ante el Consejo Supremo de las Fuerzas Armadas al Tnte. Gral. Jorge R. Videla, Brig. Gral. Orlando R. Agosti, Aimte. Emilio E. Massera, Tnte. Gral. Roberto E. Viola, Brig. Gral. Omar D. R. Graffigna, Aimte. Armando R. Lambruschini, Tnte. Gral. Leopoldo F. Galtieri, Brig. Gral. Basilio Lami Dozo y Aimte. Jorge I. Anaya por los delitos de homicidio, privación ilegal de la libertad y aplicación de tormentos a detenidos con apelación ante de la Cámara Federal, signed on 13 December 1983, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 15 December 1983.

Law repealing the Self-Amnesty Law (1983)

Ley No. 23.040, Ley de amnistía 22.924 – Derogación por inconstitucional, declarándosela insanablemente nula, adopted on 22 December 1983, promulgated on 27 December 1983, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 29 December 1983.

Penal Code (1984)

Ley No. 11.179, Código Penal de la República Argentina, adopted on 21 December 1984, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 16 January 1985.

Code of Criminal Procedure (1991)

Ley No. 23.984, Código Procesal Penal, adopted on 21 August 1991, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 9 September 1991.

Law on Compensation for Political Prisoners (1991)

Ley No. 24.043 de Indemnización a ex-presos políticos, adopted on 27 November 1991, promulgated on 23 December 1991, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 2 January 1992.

Constitution (1994)

Constitución de la Nación Argentina (Constitution of the Argentine Nation), adopted on 22 August 1994, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 23 August 1994.

Decree on the Creation of the National Committee on IHL (1994)
Decreto No. 933/94. Créase la Comisión de Aplicación del Derecho Internacional Humanitario. Integración, signed on 16 June 1994, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, No. 27.919, 27 June 1994, p. 1.
Law on Compensation for Enforced Disappearances (1994)
Ley No. 24.411 de beneficio a las personas ausentes por desaparición forzada y a las fallecidas por el accionar de las fuerzas armadas, adopted on 7 December 1994, promulgated on 28 December 1994, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 1994.
Law on the Creation of a National Committee to Investigate War Crimes Committed during the War in the South Atlantic (1995)
Ley No. 24.517. Comisión Nacional Investigadora de Crimenes de Guerra relacionados con los sucesos bélicos en el Atlantico Sud. Creación. Funciones, adopted on 5 July 1995, promulgated on 28 July 1995, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, 3 August 1995.
Law concerning the Imprescriptibility of War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity (1995)
Ley No. 24.584 apruébase la "Convención sobre la imprescriptibilidad de los crímenes de guerra y de los crímenes de lesa humanidad", (Law No. 24.584: Approval of the Convention about imprescribility of war crimes and crimes against humanity), adopted on 1 November 1995, promulgated on 23 November 1995, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, No. 28.281, 29 November 1995, pp. 1–2.
Constitution of the City of Buenos Aires (1996)
Constitución de la Ciudad de Buenos Aires, adopted on 1 October 1996, published in Clarín, Special Supplement, 5 October 1996, pp. 1–8.
Law on International Cooperation in Criminal Matters (1997)
Ley No. 24.767, Ley de Cooperación Internacional en Materia Penal, adopted on 18 December 1996, promulgated on 13 January 1997, published in the Boletín Oficial de la República Argentina, No. 26.565, 16 January 1997, pp. 1–5.
Draft Code of Military Justice (1998)
Anteproyecto de Ley de reforma al Código de Justicia Militar, marzo 1998.
Draft Emblem Law (1999)
Proyecto de Ley de protección del uso del emblema, nombre e insignias de la Cruz Roja, Cámara de Diputados de la Nación, Orden del Día No. 2552, 1999, pp. 1087–1091.

Armenia
Emblem Law (2002)
Law of the Republic of Armenia on the Use and Protection of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Emblem, adopted on 5 February 2002, not yet published.
Penal Code (2003)
Penal Code of the Republic of Armenia, adopted on 18 April 2003 by National Assembly No. HO-528-N, signed by the President on 29 April 2003, published in the Official Bulletin of the Republic of Armenia, No. 25 (260), 2 May 2003.

Australia
War Crimes Act (1945)
An Act to Provide for the Trial and Punishment of War Criminals, Act No. 48, 1945, assented to on 11 October 1945.

War Crimes Act as amended (1945)
An Act to Provide for the Trial and Punishment of War Criminals, Act No. 48, 1945, assented to on 11 October 1945, as amended by An Act to amend the War Crimes Act 1945, Act No. 3, 1989, adopted on 25 January 1989, published in Acts of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia 1989, Vol. I, Canberra, Australian Government Publishing Service, 1990, pp. 135–145, An Act to amend the War Crimes Act 1945, Act No. 174, 1999, assented to on 22 December 1999, and by Law and Justice Legislation Amendment (Application of Criminal Code) Act 2001, Act No. 24, 2001, assented to on 6 April 2001.

Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957)
An Act to enable effect to be given to certain Conventions done at Geneva on 12 August 1949 and to Protocol additional to those Conventions done at Geneva on 10 June 1977, and for related purposes, Act No. 103, 1957, adopted on 18 December 1957, published in Gazette, 1959, as amended by the Act to amend the Geneva Conventions Act 1957, Act No. 27, 1991, adopted on 4 March 1991 and published in Acts of the Parliament of the Commonwealth 1991, Vol. I, Canberra, Australian Government Publishing Service, 1992, pp. 929–1006, and An Act to amend the Criminal Code Act 1995 and certain other Acts in consequence of the enactment of the International Criminal Court Act 2002, and for other purposes, Act No. 42 of 2002, assented to on 27 June 2002.

Biological Weapons Act (1976)
An Act relating to the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of certain Biological Agents and Toxins and of Weapons for their Delivery, Act No. 11, 1977, adopted on 28 February 1977, published in Acts of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia 1977, Canberra, Australian Government Publishing Service, 1979, pp. 36–42.

Defence Force Discipline Act (1982)
An Act relating to the discipline of the Defence Force and for related purposes, Act No. 152 of 1982, assented to on 31 December 1982.

Chemical Weapons (Prohibition) Act (1994)
An Act relating to the prohibition of the development, production, stockpiling or use of chemical weapons and the control of certain chemicals capable of being used as chemical weapons, and related provisions, Act No. 26 of 1994 as amended, adopted on 25 February 1994 (as amended), published in Acts of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia 1994, Vol. I, Canberra, Australian Government Publishing Service, 1995, pp. 538–706.

International War Crimes Tribunals Act (1995)
An Act to provide for the Commonwealth to help the International War Crimes Tribunals perform their functions, and for related purposes, Act No. 18 of 1995, assented to on 29 March 1995.

Anti-Personnel Mines Convention Act (1998)
An Act to implement the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, and for related purposes, Act No. 126, 1998, assented to on 21 December 1998.

ICC Act (2002)
An Act to facilitate compliance by Australia with obligations under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and for related purposes, Act No. 41 of 2002, assented to on 27 June 2002.

ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002)
An Act to amend the Criminal Code Act 1995 and certain other Acts in consequence of the enactment of the International Criminal Court Act 2002, and for other purposes, Act No. 42 of 2002, assented to on 27 June 2002.

Austria
Red Cross Protection Law (1962)
Bundesgesetz vom 27. Juni 1962 über den Schutz des Zeichens und des Namens des Roten Kreuzes (Rotkreuzschutzgesetz) (Federal Law of 27 June 1962 on the protection of the emblem and name of the Red Cross (Red Cross Protection Law), entered into force on 1 October 1962, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 196/1962, 48. Stück, 20 July 1962, pp. 1001–1002.
Military Penal Code as amended (1970)
Bundesgesetz vom 30. Oktober 1970 über besondere strafrechtliche Bestimmungen für Soldaten (Militärstrafgesetz – MilStG) (Federal Law of 30 October 1970 on special penal provisions for soldiers), entered into force on 1 January 1971, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, Nr. 344/1970, 30 October 1970, as amended several times.
Penal Code (1974)
Bundesgesetz vom 23. Jänner 1974 über die mit gerichtlicher Strafe bedrohten Handlungen (Strafgesetzbuch-StGB) (Federal Law of 23 January 1974 on punishable acts (Penal Code – StGB)), entered into force on 1 January 1975, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 1974/60, Stück 21, pp. 641–692
National Fund Law as amended (1995)
Bundesgesetz über den Nationalfonds der Republik Österreich für Opfer des Nationalsozialismus (Federal Law on the National Fund of the Republic of Austria for Victims of National Socialism), entered into force on 27 April 1995, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 432/1995, Stück 136, 30 June 1995, pp. 6257–6259, as amended by Bundesgesetz, mit dem das Bundesgesetz über den Nationalfonds der Republik Österreich für Opfer des Nationalsozialismus geändert wird (Federal Law amending the Federal Law on the National Fund of the Republic of Austria for Victims of National Socialism), published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 11/2001, 28 February 2001, pp. 461–462.
Anti-Personnel Mines Law (1997)
Bundesgesetz über das Verbot von Anti-Personen-Minen (Federal Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines), entered into force on 1 January 1997, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 13/1997, 10 January 1997, pp. 97–98.
Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1996)
Bundesgesetz über die Zusammenarbeit mit den internationalen Gerichten (Federal Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunals), entered into force on 1 June 1996, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik

Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 263/1996, 87. Stück, 13 June 1996, pp. 2237–2244.

Law on the Prohibition of Blinding Laser Weapons (1998)

Bundesgesetz über das Verbot von blindmachenden Laserwaffen (Federal Law on the Prohibition of Blinding Laser Weapons), entered into force on 1 January 1998, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 4/1998, 5 January 1998, pp. 395–396.

Reconciliation Fund Law as amended (2000)

Bundesgesetz über den Fonds für freiwillige Leistungen der Republik Österreich an ehemalige Sklaven – und Zwangsarbeiter des nationalsozialistischen Regimes (Versöhnungsfonds-Gesetz) (Federal Law Concerning the Fund for Voluntary Payments by the Republic of Austria to Former Slave Labourers and Forced Labourers of the National Socialist Regime (Reconciliation Fund Law)), entered into force on 27 November 2000, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 74/2000, 8 August 2000, pp. 775–779, as amended by Bundesgesetz, mit dem das Entschädigungsfondsgesetz (BGBl. I Nr. 12/2001), das Bundesfinanzgesetz 2001 (BGBl. I Nr. 1/2001) und das Versöhnungsfonds-Gesetz (BGBl. I Nr. 74/2000) geändert werden (Federal Law amending the General Settlement Fund Law (BGBl. I, No. 12/2001), the Federal Law on Financce (BGBl. I, No. No. 1/2001) and the Reconciliation Fund Law (BGBl. I, No. 74/2001)), published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 40/2001, 27 April 2001, pp. 985–986.

General Settlement Fund Law as amended (2001)

Bundesgesetz über die Einrichtung eines Allgemeinen Entschädigungsfonds für Opfer des Nationalsozialismus und über Restitutionsmassnahmen (Entschädigungsfondsgesetz) sowie zur Änderung des Allgemeinen Sozialversicherungsgesetzes und des Opferfürsorgegesetzes (Federal Law on the Establishment of a General Settlement Fund for Victims of National Socialism and on Restitution Measures (General Settlement Fund Law), as well as on an Amendment to the General Social Security Law and the Victims Assistance Act), entered into force on 28 May 2001, published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 12/2001, 28 February 2001, pp. 463–473, as amended by Bundesgesetz, mit dem das Entschädigungsfondsgesetz (BGBl. I Nr. 12/2001), das Bundesfinanzgesetz 2001 (BGBl. I Nr. 1/2001) und das Versöhnungsfonds-Gesetz (BGBl. I Nr. 74/2000) geändert werden (Federal Law amending the General Settlement Fund Law (BGBl. I, No. 12/2001), the Federal Law on Financce (BGBl. Part I, No. 1/2001) and the Reconciliation Fund Law (BGBl. I, No. 74/2001)), published in Bundesgesetzblatt für die Republik Österreich (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette of the Austrian Republic), Part I, No. 40/2001, 27 April 2001, pp. 985–986.

Azerbaijan

Criminal Code (1960)

Criminal Code of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Azerbaijan, adopted by the law of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Azerbaijan on 8 December 1960, as amended, published in the Bulletin of the Supreme Council of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Azerbaijan, No. 29, 1960, Article 143.

Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995)

Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War, Law No. 1073, adopted on 30 June 1995, published as a part of "The Collection of military legislative acts of the Republic of Azerbaijan", Military priniting house, Baku, 1996, republished as upddated in "The Collection of military legislative acts of the Republic of Azerbaijan", State Publishin House "Qanun", 2002, pp. 185–194.

Criminal Code (1999)

Criminal Code of the Republic of Azerbaijan, Law No. 886-1g, adopted on 30 December 1999, published in the Official Gazette of Parliament "Azerbaijan", Special Issue No. 2, 28 May 2000, pp. 1–23, republished in "The Collection of Legislation of the Republic of Azerbaijan", No. 4, 30 April 2000, Article 251.

Bahamas

Red Cross Society Act (1975)

An Act to establish and incorporate The Bahamas Red Cross Society and for connected purposes, Act No. 13 of 1975, assented to on 23 June 1975, published in Official Gazette Bahamas, Supplement Part I, 3 July 1975, pp. 5–8.

Bangladesh

International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973)

An Act to provide for the detention, prosecution and punishment of persons for genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and other crimes under international law, Act No. XIX of 1973, received the assent of the President on 19 July 1973, published in Bangladesh Gazette, Extra, 20 July 1973, pp. 1–4.

Draft Emblems Protection Act (1998)

An Act to provide for the protection of the red crescent and red cross emblems, designations and other distinctive signs and signals to give effect to the provisions regarding protection of these emblems, etc., in the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their Additional Protocols of 1977, draft of 28 July 1998.

Barbados

Geneva Conventions Act (1980)

An Act respecting the Geneva Conventions of 1949, Act No. 40 of 1980, assented to by the Acting Governor General on 12 September 1980, published in Official Gazette, Supplement, 22 September 1980, pp. 1–10.

Belarus

Law on the Rights of the Child (1993)

Law No. 2570-XII on the Rights of the Child, 19 November 1993, published in Newsletter of Verkhovny Sovet of the Republic of Belarus, No. 33, 1993, art. 430.

Order on Study and Dissemination of IHL (1997)

Minister of Defence Order No. 425 "On measures for the studying and dissemination of international humanitarian law in the Armed Forces of the Republic of Belarus", 12 August 1997.

Criminal Code (1999)

Criminal Code (1999), Law No. 275-3 as registered in the National registration bureau of Legal Acts, 1999, No. 76, 2/50, promulgated on 24 June 1999, published in the News of the National Assembly of the Republic of Belarus, No. 24, 15 October 1999, pp. 420ff.

Law on the Emblem (2000)

Law on the use and the protection of the emblem of the Red Cross and the Red Crescent in the Republic of Belarus, Law No. 382-3 as registered in the National registration bureau of Legal Acts, 2000, No. 49, 2/57, promulgated on 2 May 2000, published in the News of the National Assembly of the Republic of Belarus, No. 15, 26 May 2000, pp. 183ff.

Belgium

Law on Arms and Ammunition as amended (1933)

Loi du 3 janvier 1933 relative à la fabrication, au commerce et au port des armes et au commerce des munitions, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 173, 22 June 1933, p. 3196, as amended by the Loi modifiant la loi du 3 janvier 1933 relative à la fabrication, au commerce et au port des armes et au commerce des munitions, 30 janvier 1991, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 183, 21 September 1991, p. 20645, by the Loi relative aux mines antipersonnel et pièges ou dispositifs de même nature, 9 mars 1995, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 67, 1 April 1995, p. 8228, by the Loi modifiant la loi du 3 janvier 1933 relative à la fabrication, au commerce et au port des armes et au commerce des munitions en vue d'interdire à l'Etat belge ou aux administrations publiques de tenir en dépôt des mines antipersonnel, 24 juin 1996, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 131, 9 July 1996, p. 18777 and by the Loi relative à l'interdiction définitive des mines antipersonnel, 30 mars 2000, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 71, 7 April 2000, p. 10946.

Law on the Jurisdiction of Military Tribunals over War Crimes (1947)

Loi du 20 juin 1947 relative à la compétence des jurisdictions militaires en matière de crimes de guerre, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 177–178, 26–27 June 1947, p. 6304.

Law on the Protection of the Emblem (1956)

Loi du 4 juillet 1956 relative à la protection des dénominations, signes et emblèmes de la Croix-Rouge, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 193, 11 July 1956, p. 4616.

Law on Discipline in the Armed Forces (1975)

Loi du 14 janvier 1975 portant règlement de discipline des Forces armées, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 23, 1 February 1975, p. 1161.

Order on the Distinctive Emblem of Cultural Property (1977)

Arrêté ministériel fixant le modèle du signe distinctif qui peut être appliqué aux monuments protégés par arrêté royal, 1 April 1977, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 93, 12 May 1977, p. 6497.

Order of the Executive of the Walloon Region on the Distinctive Sign of Cultural Property (1990)

Arrêté de l'Exécutif régional wallon relatif à l'apposition d'un sign distinctif sur les monuments et les sites protégés, 7 juin 1990, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 180, 18 September 1990, F. 90-2294, p. 17817.

Law on Demilitarisation of the Gendarmerie (1991)

Loi du 18 juillet 1991 modifiant la loi du 2 décembre 1957 sur la gendarmerie et la loi du 27 décembre 1973 relative au statut du personnel du cadre actif du corps opérationnel de la gendarmerie et portant démilitarisation de la gendarmerie, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 143, 26 July 1991, p. 16566.

Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993)
Loi du 16 juin 1993 relative à la répression des infractions graves aux Conventions internationales de Genève du 12 août 1949 et aux Protocoles I et II du 8 juin 1977 additionnels à ces Conventions, published in the Moniteur Belge, 5 August 1993, F. 93-1856, pp. 17751–17755, as amended by the Loi du 10 février 1999 relative à la répression des violations graves du droit international humanitaire (Law relating to the repression of serious violations of international humanitarian law), published in the Moniteur Belge, 23 March 1999, F. 99-809, pp. 9286–9287.

Order of the Government of the Germanophone Community on the Distinctive Sign of Cultural Property (1995)
Arrêté du Gouvernement de la Communauté germanophone relatif à l'apposition d'un signe distinctif sur les monuments et les sites protégés, 13 mars 1995, published in the Moniteur Belge, 16 September 1995, F. 95-2523, pp. 26421–26422.

Order of the Government of the Region of Brussels on the Distinctive Sign of Cultural Property (1995)
Arrêté du Gouvernement de la Région de Bruxelles-Capitale relatif à l'apposition d'un signe distinctif sur les monuments et sites protégés, 16 mars 1995, published in the Moniteur Belge, No. 190, 30 September 1995, F. 95-2669, p. 27954.

Law on Recognition of and Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1996)
Loi du 22 mars 1996 relative à la reconnaissance du Tribunal international pour l'ex-Yougoslavie et du Tribunal international pour le Rwanda, et à la coopération avec ces Tribunaux, published in the Moniteur Belge, 27 April 1996, F. 96-911, pp. 10260–10263.

Belize

Red Cross Society Act (1983)
An Act to provide for the incorporation of the Belize Red Cross Society and for matters connected therewith, Act No. 12 of 1983, 18 August 1983, gazetted on 27 August 1983.

Bolivia

Constitution as amended (1967)
Constitución Política del Estado, de 2 de febrero de 1967, as amended by Ley de Reforma a la Constitución Política del Estado N° 1585 de 12 de agosto de 1994, published in Gaceta Oficial de Bolivia, Año XXXIX, No. 1842, 1994.

Penal Code as amended (1972)
Decreto Ley No. 10426 de 23 de agosto de 1972, sancionatorio del Código Penal, as amended by Ley No. 1768 de 10 de marzo de 1997, Ley de Modificaciones al Código Penal.

Military Penal Code (1976)
Decreto Ley No. 13321 del 22 de enero de 1976, Código Penal Militar.

Emblem Law (2002)
Ley No. 2390 de 23 de mayo de 2002 sobre el uso y la protección del emblema de la Cruz Roja, published in Gaceta Oficial de Bolivia, No. 2047, 19 June 2002, pp. 3–7.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Decree Law on Service in the Army (1992)

Decree Law No. 227 on Service in the Army of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina (1992), published in Sluzbeni list Republike Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 11/92, 1 August 1992, pp. 271–279.

Emblem Decree (1992)

Statutory Decree on Use and Protection of the Emblem and the Name of the Red Cross of Bosnia and Herzegovina (1992), 10 November 1992, published in Sluzbeni list Republike Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 21/92, 23 November 1992, pp. 580–582.

Decree on Deferral upon Request by the ICTY (1995)

Decree with Force of Law on Deferral upon Request by the International Tribunal, 10 April 1995, published in Sluzbeni list Republike Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 12/95, 10 April 1995, pp. 317–323.

Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina

Amnesty Law as amended (1996)

Amnesty Law No. 155 (1996), 12 June 1996, published in Sluzbene Novine Federacije Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 9/96, 30 June 1996, pp. 287ff.

Law on Sale of Apartments with Occupancy Rights (1997)

Law No. 249 on Sale of Apartments with Occupancy Rights, adopted by the House of Representatives of the Parliament of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 11 June 1997 and by the House of Peoples of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 21 October 1997, published in Sluzbene Novine Federacije Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 27/97, 28 November 1997, pp. 525–533 (amendments published in Nos. 11/98, 22/99, 27/99 and 7/00).

Law on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on Abandoned Apartments (1998)

Law No. 76 on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on Abandoned Apartments, adopted by the House of Representatives of the Parliament of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 12 March 1998 and by the House of Peoples of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 26 February 1998, published in Sluzbene Novine Federacije Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 11/98, 3 April 1998, pp. 273–278 (amendments published in Nos. 38/98, 12/99, 18/99 and 27/99).

Law on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on Temporary Abandoned Real Property Owned by Citizens (1998)

Law No. 79 on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on Temporary Abandoned Real Property Owned by Citizens, adopted by the House of Representatives of the Parliament of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 3 March 1998 and by the House of Peoples of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 26 February 1998, published in Sluzbene Novine Federacije Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 11/98, 3 April 1998, pp. 281–284 (amendment published in No. 29/98).

Criminal Code (1998)
Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina No. 327, adopted by the House of Representatives of the Parliament of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 29 July 1998 and by the House of Peoples of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina on 17 July 1998, published in Sluzbene Novine Federacije Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 43/98, 20 November 1998, pp. 1649–1733.
Law on Amnesty (1999)
Law on Amnesty of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, published in Sluzbene Novine Federacije Bosne i Hercegovine (Official Gazette of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina), No. 48/1999.

Republika Srpska
Law on Amnesty as amended (1996)
Law No. 02-736/96 on Amnesty of the Republika Srpska, 19 June 1996, published in Sluzbeni glasnik Republika Srpska (Official Gazette of the Republika Srpska), No. 13/1996, 26 June 1996, pp. 553–554, as amended by the Law No. 02-517/99 on Changes and Amendments to the Amnesty Law of the Republika Srpska, 14 July 1999, published in Sluzbeni glasnik Republika Srpska (Official Gazette of the Republika Srpska), No. 17/1999, 15 July 1999, p. 355.
Law on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on the Use of Abandoned Property (1998)
Law No. 02-1481/98 on the Cessation of the Application of the Law on the Use of Abandoned Property, 2 December 1998, published in Sluzbeni glasnik Republika Srpska (Official Gazette of the Republika Srpska), No. 38/1998, 11 December 1998, pp. 982–985.
Criminal Code (2000)
Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska, 22 June 2000, published in Sluzbeni glasnik Republika Srpska (Official Gazette of the Republika Srpska), No. 22/2000, 31 July 2000, pp. 513–560.
Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (2001)
Law No. 01-1052/01 on Cooperation of the Republika Srpska with the International Criminal Tribunal at the Hague, 2 October 2001, published in Sluzbeni glasnik Republika Srpska (Official Gazette of the Republika Srpska), No. 52/2001, 17 October 2001, pp. 1057–1059.

Botswana
Red Cross Society Act (1968)
An Act to provide for the incorporation of the Red Cross Society of Botswana and for the protection of its emblems and to make incidental provision in connection therewith, Act No. 4 of 1968, assented to on 27 February 1968, published in Botswana Government Gazette, Supplement B, 1 March 1968, pp. B.97–B.100.
Geneva Conventions Act (1970)
An Act to Enable Effect to Be Given in Botswana to Certain International Conventions Made at Geneva on the Twelfth Day of August, Nineteen Hundred and Forty Nine, and for Purposes Connected Therewith, Act No. 28 of 1970, assented to on 14 August 1970, published in Botswana Government Gazette Extraordinary, Supplement F, 14 August 1970 (F. 237), pp. 1–5.

Brazil

Red Cross Society Decree (1910)

Decreto No. 2.380, de 31 de dezembro de 1910, Regula a existencia das associações da CRUZ VERMELHA, que se fundarem de accordo com as Convenções de Genebra, published in Bulletin International, April 1912, p. 120.

Decree on the Use of the Red Cross Emblem (1962)

Decreto No. 966 de 7 de maio 1962, Regulamenta a Lei No. 3.960 de 20 de setembro de 1961, que instituiu, obrigatòriamente, o uso do distintivo das profissões médicas e para-médicas (O Uso do Emblema da Cruz Vermelha), published in Diário Oficial da União, 14 May 1962, p. 5.277.

Military Penal Code (1969)

Decreto-Lei No. 1001, de 21 de outubro de 1969, Código Penal Militar, published in Diário Oficial da União, 21 October 1969, p. 008940.

Anti-Personnel Mines Act (2001)

Lei No. 10.300 de 31 de outubro de 2001, Proíbe o emprego, o desenvovlimento, a fabricação, a comercialização, a importação, a exportação, a aquisição, a estocagem, a retenção ou a transferência, direta ou indiretamente, de minas terrestres antipessoal, published in Diário Oficial da União, 1 November 2001, p. 000002.

Brunei Darussalam

Red Crescent Society Act (1983)

An Act to incorporate the Brunei Red Crescent Society under the name of Persatuan Bulan Sabit Merah Brunei (or in English the Brunei Red Crescent Society), for purposes connected therewith, 1 July 1983, published in Brunei Darussalam Government Gazette.

Bulgaria

Penal Code as amended (1968)

Nakazatelen kodeks (Penal Code), first published in Bulgarian State Gazette, No. 26, 2 April 1968, as amended in the State Gazette Nos. 29/1968, 92/1969, 26 and 27/1973, 89/1974, 95/1975, 3/1977, 53/1978, 89/1979, 28 and 31/1982, 44/1984, 41, 79 and 80/1985, 89 and 90/1986, 37, 91 and 99/1989, 10, 31 and 81/1990, 1, 86, 90 and 105/1991, 54/1992 and 10/1993; Decision No. 19/1995 of the Constitutional Court; State Gazette Nos. 50 and 102/1995, 107/1996, 62 and 85/1997, 83, 85, 132, 133 and 153/1998 and 7, 51 and 81/1999.

Red Cross Society Law (1995)

Zakon za Bulgarskiya Cherven krust (Law of the Bulgarian Red Cross, Law No. 254, 14 September 1995, promulgated by virtue of Decree No. 254 of the President of the Republic of Bulgaria in the State Gazette, No. 87, 29 September 1995, pp. 1–2.

Burkina Faso

Code of Military Justice (1994)

Loi N° 24/94/ADP du 24 mai 1994 portant Code de Justice Militaire, promulguée par le Décret N° 94-221/PRES du 13 juin 1994, published in Journal Officiel du Burkina Faso, No. 48, 1 December 1994, pp. 2447ff.

Anti-Personnel Mines Decree (2001)

Décret n° 2001-180/PRES/PM/SECU du 2 mai 2001 portant interdiction des mines antipersonnel au Burkina Faso, published in Journal Officiel du Burkina Faso, No. 20, 2001.

Burundi

Red Cross Decree (1912)
Décret du 30 avril 1912, Mesures d'exécution prévue par la Convention de Genève – Emploi de l'emblème de la Croix rouge, published in Bulletin Officiel Congo Belge, printed in Belgium, 1912, pp. 526–528.

Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001)
Loi No. . . ./2001 portant répression du crime de génocide, des crimes contre l'humanité et des crimes de guerre, draft law of 2001.

Draft Law on Provisional Immunity for Political Leaders (2001)
Loi No. . . ./2001 portant immunité provisoire de poursuites judiciaires en faveur des leaders politiques rentrant d'exil, draft law of 2001.

Cambodia

Law Banning Anti-Personnel Mines (1999)
Law to Ban Anti-personnel Mines, adopted by the National Assembly of the Kingdom of Cambodia on 28 April 1999, published in Monthly Bulletin of Laws and Regulations of the Kingdom of Cambodia, Second Quarter – April, May, June (published July 1999), pp. 1–4.

Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001)
Law on the establishment of extraordinary chambers in the courts of Cambodia for the prosecutions of crimes committed during the period of Democratic Kampuchea, as adopted by the National Assembly on 2 January 2001, approved by the Senate on 15 January 2001 and promulgated on 10 August 2001.

Cameroon

Code of Military Justice (1928)
Code de Justice Militaire, Loi du 9 mars 1928, published in G. J. Bouvenet et R. Bourdin, Codes et Lois du Cameroun, Vol. I, Yaoundé, Haut-Commissariat de la République française au Cameroun, 1956–1958, pp. 376ff.

Emblem Law (1997)
Law No. 97-2 of 10 January 1997 on the Protection of the Red Cross Emblem and Name, published in Official Gazette of the Republic of Cameroon, 7th Year, No. 2, 1 February 1997, pp. 63–66.

Penal Code as amended (1967)
Loi n° 65-LF-24 du 12 novembre 1965 portant institution du Code Pénal, and Loi n° 67-LF-1 du 12 juin 1967 portant institution du Code Pénal, as amended by Loi n° 91-007 du 30 juillet 1991, modifiant et complétant certaines dispositions de la loi n° 90-061 du 19 décembre 1990 portant modification du Code Pénal, and by Loi n° 97-009 du 10 janvier 1997 réprimant la torture.

Canada

Criminal Code (1985)
An Act respecting the Criminal Law (amended several times), published in Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, Vol. 3, Ottawa, Queen's Printer of Canada, 1985, c. C-46.

National Defence Act (1985)
An Act respecting national defence, published in Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, Vol. VI, Ottawa, Queen's Printer for Canada, 1985, c. N-5.

Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985)
An Act respecting the Geneva Conventions, 1949, published in Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, Vol. V, Ottawa, Queen's Printer for Canada, 1985, c. G-3, 143 pp., as amended by the Act to amend the Geneva Conventions Act, the National Defence Act and the Trade-marks Act, 12 June 1990 (c. 14), published in Acts of Parliament of Canada, passed in 1990 S.C., 1990, c. 14, Vol. 1, 38–39 ELIZ. II, and Acts of Parliament of Canada passed in 1995 S.C., 1995, c. 5, s. 25, Vol. 1, 43–44 ELIZ. II, (SI/95-65, 31 May 1995, Canada Gazette, Part II, Vol. 129, No. 11, p. 1541).

Chemical Weapons Act (1995)

Chemical Weapons Convention Implemetnation Act, S.C. 1995, c. 5, s. 25, 13 July 1995.

Anti-Personnel Mines Act (1997)

Act to implement the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, 27 November 1997, published in Canada Gazette, Part III, Vol. 20, No. 3, Ottawa, 2 February 1998, c. 33.

Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000)

An Act respecting genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes and to implement the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, 29 June 2000, published in Canada Gazette, Part III, Vol. 23, No. 3, Ottawa, 9 August 2000, c. 24.

Chad

Code of Military Justice (1962)

Loi No. 25-62 du 18 décembre 1962 portant Code de Justice Militaire (Law No. 25-62 of 18 December 1962 instituting the Code of Military Justice), published in the Journal Officiel, 15 January 1963, pp. 27–37.

Chile

Code of Military Justice (1925)

Código de Justicia Militar, 23 December 1925, published in Diario Oficial de la República de Chile, 24 December 1925, and 15th official edition approved by Decree No. 1614 of the Ministry of Justice, 24 November 1992, editorial jurídica de Chile.

Emblem Law as amended (1939)

Ley No. 6.371, que protege el emblema de la Cruz Roja, 20 July 1939, as amended by the Ley No. 19.511. Modifica la Ley No. 6.371, de 1939, que protege el emblema de la Cruz Roja, 31 July 1997, published in Diario Oficial de la República de Chile, No. 35.858, 3 September 1997, p. 2.

Decree-Law on General Amnesty (1978)

Decreto Ley No. 2.191, de 1978. Concede amnistía general, bajo las circunstancias que indica, por los delitos que señala, 18 April 1978, published in Diario Oficial de la República de Chile, No. 30.042, 19 April 1978.

Decree establishing the Commission on Truth and Reconciliation (1990)

Decreto Supremo No. 355. Crea Comisión de Verdad y Reconciliación, 25 April 1990, published in Diario Oficial de la República de Chile, 1990.

China

Law governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946)

Law governing the Trial of War Criminals, 24 October 1946.

Red Cross Society Law (1993)

Law of the People's Republic of China on the Red Cross Society, adopted at the 4th Meeting of the Standing Committee of the Eighth National People's Congress on 31 October 1993, promulgated by Order No. 14 of the President of the People's Republic of China on 31 October 1993, published in Gazette of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China.

Emblem Regulations (1996)

Regulations of the People's Republic of China for the use of the emblem of the Red Cross, 29 January 1996.

Martial Law Enforcement Act (1996)

Martial Law of the People's Republic of China, adopted at the 18th Meeting of the Standing Committee of the Eighth National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China on 1 March 1996, promulgated by Order No. 61 of the President of the People's Republic of China on 1 March 1996, published in Gazette of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China, No. 1, 1996, pp. 3ff.

Criminal Code as amended (1997)

The Criminal Law of the People's Republic of China, adopted by the Second Session of the Fifth National People's Congress on 1 July 1979, revised at the Fifth Session of the Eighth National People's Congress on 14 March 1997, promulgated by Order No. 83 of the President of the People's Republic of China, 14 March 1997, published in Gazette of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China, No. 2, 30 March 1997.

Colombia

Constitution (1991)

Constitución Política de Colombia, 20 de julio de 1991, published in Gaceta Constitucional, No. 116, 20 July 1991, pp. 1ff.

Amnesty Decree (1991)

Decreto No. 1943 del 12 de agosto de 1991 por el cual se dictan medidas sobre indulto y amnistía, published in Diario Oficial, No. 39.964, 12 August 1991, pp. 1ff.

Circular on the Use of the Emblem (1992)

Circular No. 028/DIPLA-REHUM-868 del 27 de abril de 1992 sobre la utilización del símbolo de la Cruz Roja.

Decree on the Control of Firearms, Ammunition and Explosives (1993)

Decreto No. 2535 del 17 de diciembre de 1993, por el cual se expiden normas sobre armas, municiones y explosivos, published in Diario Oficial, No. 41.142, 17 December 1993, pp. 8ff.

Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997)

Ley No. 387 de 1997 por la cual se adoptan medidas para la prevención del desplazamiento forzado; la atención, protección, consolidación y estabilización socioeconómica de los desplazados internos por la violencia en la República de Colombia, 18 de julio de 1997, published in Diario Oficial, No. 43.091, 24 July 1997, pp. 1ff.

Law on Judicial Cooperation (1997)

Ley 418 de 26 de diciembre de 1997 por la cual se consagran unos instrumentos para la búsqueda de la convivencia, la eficacia de la justicia y se dictan otras disposiciones, published in Diario Oficial, No. 43.201, 26 Deccember 1997, pp. 4ff.

Emblem Decree (1998)

Decreto No. 860 de 1998 (mayo 8) por el cual se reglamenta lo relativo a la protección y el uso que darse al nombre y el emblema de la Cruz Roja, se protegen sus actividades y se facilita la prestación de los servicios humanitarios en Colombia, published in Diario Oficial, No. 43.298, 13 May 1998, pp. 15–17.

Military Penal Code (1999)

Ley 522 del 12 de agosto de 1999 por medio de la cual se expide el Código Penal Militar, published in Diario Oficial, No. 43665, 13 August 1999, p. 1ff.

Penal Code (2000)

Ley 599 de 2000 (julio 24) por la cual se expide el Código Penal, published in Diario Oficial, No. 44.097, 24 July 2000, pp. 1–24.

Comoros

Emblem Decree (1994)

Décret No. 94-095/PR portant reconnaissance de l'emblème et des mots Croissant-Rouge en République Fédérale Islamique des Comores, adopté par le Président de la République le 27 septembre 1994.

Congo, Democratic Republic of (DRC)

Red Cross Decree (1912)

Décret du 30 avril 1912, Mesures d'exécution prévue par la Convention de Genève – Emploi de l'emblème de la Croix rouge, published in Bulletin Officiel Congo Belge, printed in Belgium, 1912, pp. 526–528.

Code of Military Justice as amended (1972)

Ordonnance-loi n° 72/060 du 25 septembre 1972 portant institution d'un Code de justice militaire, published in the Journal Officiel, No. 6, 25 September 1972, pp. 428ff., and amended by the Ordonnance-loi No 78-027 du 16 septembre 1978, published in the Journal Officiel, No. 20, 16 September 1978, pp. 19ff., and by the Ordonnance-loi n° 80/015 du 5 septembre 1980, published in the Journal Officiel, No. 28, 5 September 1980, pp. 8ff.

Congo, Republic of

Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998)

Loi No. 8-98 du 31 octobre 1998 portant définition et répression du génocide, des crimes de guerre et des crimes contre l'humanité.

Cook Islands

Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002)

An Act to consolidate and amend the Geneva Conventions Act 1958, assented to on 11 February 2002.

Costa Rica

Penal Code as amended (1970)

Ley No. 4573, Código Penal, 4 March 1970, published in Alcance No. 120 de La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, No. 257, 15 november 1970, as amended by Ley No. 8272, Represión penal como castigado por los crímenes de guerra y de lesa humanidad, 25 April 2002, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, No. 97, 22 May 2002.

Emblem Law (2000)

Ley No. 8031, Uso y Protección de los emblemas de la Cruz Roja y de la Media Luna Roja, 19 October 2000, published in Alcance No. 75 de La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, No. 210, 2 November 2000.

Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines (2002)
Ley No. 8231, Prohibición de minas antipersonales, 18 march 2002, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, No. 73, 17 April 2002.

Côte d'Ivoire
Code of Military Penal Procedure (1974)
Loi No. 74-350 du 26 novembre 1974 relative à l'institution d'un Code de Procédure militaire, published in the Journal Officiel de la République de Côte d'Ivoire, No. 55 (numéro spécial), 26 November 1974, 16th year, pp. 1985–2004.
Penal Code as amended (1981)
Loi No. 81-640 du 31 juillet 1981 instituant le Code Pénal, published in the Journal Officiel de la République de Côte d'Ivoire, No. 1 (numéro spécial), 4 January 1982, 24th year, pp. 1ff., amended by the Loi No. 95-522 du 6 juillet 1995 portant modification de la loi No. 81-640 instituant le Code pénal, published in the Journal Officiel de la République de Côte d'Ivoire, No. 33, 17 August 1995, 37th year, pp. 623ff., by the Loi No. 96-764 du 03 octobre 1996 portant modification des dispositions de l'article 98 du Code pénal, published in the Journal Officiel de la République de Côte d'Ivoire, No. 4, 23 January 1997, 39th year, p. 76, by the Loi No. 97-398 du 11 juillet 1997 modifiant et complétant les articles 293, 294, 295, 296 et 297 du Code pénal, published in the Journal Officiel de la République de Côte d'Ivoire, No. 29, 17 July 1997, 39th year, pp. 746ff. and by the Loi No. 98-756 du 23 décembre 1998 modifiant et complétant la loi No. 81-640 du 31 juillet 1981 instituant le Code pénal, published in the Journal Officiel de la République de Côte d'Ivoire, No. 5, 4 February 1999, 41st year, pp. 73ff.
Decree on Dissemination and Training for the Armed Forces (1999)
Arreté No. 0057/MD/CAB portant organisation interne du Ministère de la Défense, 15 avril 1999 (not published).

Croatia
Constitution (1990)
Constitution, 22 December 1990, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 56, 22 December 1990, pp. 1236–1247.
Directive on Displaced Persons (1991)
Directive on the Status of Displaced Persons and Refugees, December 1991, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 64, 3 December 1991.
Code of Criminal Procedure (1993)
Code of Criminal Procedure, 1993, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 34, 21 May 1993.
Defence Law (1993)
Defence Law, 1993, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 74, 6 August 1993, Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 57, 12 July 1996, and Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 31, 6 March 1998.
Emblem Law (1993)
Law on the Protection of the Red Cross Name and Emblem, 30 July 1993, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 75, 13 August 1993.
Law on Displaced Persons (1993)
Law on the Status of Displaced Persons and Refugees, October 1993, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 96, 25 October 1993, Narodne

Novine (Official Gazette), No. 39, 9 June 1995, and Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 128, 30 November 1999.

Law on Military Service (1995)

Law on Military Service, 1995, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 23, 1995.

Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1996)

Constitutional Law on the Cooperation of the Republic of Croatia with the International Criminal Tribunal, 19 April 1996, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 32, 26 April 1996.

General Amnesty Law (1996)

Law on General Amnesty, 20 September 1996, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 80, 27 September 1996.

Criminal Code (1997)

Criminal Code, 19 September 1997, published in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 110, 21 October 1997, pp. 3461–3516, Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 27, 27 February 1998, correction concerning derogations from Article 204, §§ 1 and 2, in Narodne Novine (Official Gazette), No. 50, 17 May 2000.

Cuba

Emblem Decree (1910)

Decreto Presidencial No. 221 del 22 de marzo de 1910, adopted on 23 March 1910 and published in Gaceta Oficial de la República, Año IX, No. 68, 23 March 1910, p. 2993.

Military Criminal Code (1979)

Ley No. 22/79. Ley de los Delitos Militares del 15 de febrero de 1979, adopted on 1 March 1979 and published in Gaceta Oficial de la República, Año LXXVII, No. 6, 5 March 1979, pp. 111–119.

Penal Code (1987)

Ley No. 62/87. Código Penal del 29 de diciembre de 1987, adopted on 30 April 1988 and published in Gaceta Oficial de la República, Año LXXXV, 30 December 1987, pp. 51ff.

Constitution as amended (1992)

Constitución de la República de Cuba, proclaimed on 24 February 1976, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República, Especial No. 2, 24 February 1976 and reformada por la Asamblea Nacional del Poder Popular en el XI Período Ordinario de Sesiones de la III Legislatura celebrada los días 10, 11 y 12 de julio de 1992, en la Ley de Reforma Constitucional, 13 de julio de 1992, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República, Extraordinaria, Año XC, No. 6, 13 July 1992, pp. 23ff.; Constitucíon de la República de Cuba, adopted on 1 August 1992 and published in Gaceta Oficial de la República, Extraordinaria, Año XC, No. 7, 1 August 1992, pp. 33ff.

National Defence Act (1994)

Ley No. 75/94 de la Defensa Nacional, adopted on 21 December 1994 and published in Gaceta Oficial de la República, Año XCII, No. 1, 13 January 1995, pp. 1–12.

Cyprus

Geneva Conventions Act (1966)

A Law to ratify certain international Conventions concluded in Geneva on 12 August, 1949, enforce them and provide for other related matters, Law

No. 40 of 1966, published in Official Gazette of the Republic, No. 510, Annex No. 1, 18 July 1966, pp. 425–426.

AP I Act (1979)

A law to ratify the Additional Protocol (Protocol I) to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August, 1949, and providing for other related matters, Law No. 43 of 1979, published in Official Gazette of the Republic, No. 1518, Annex No. 1, 12 May 1979, pp. 669–671.

Czech Republic

Criminal Code as amended (1961)

Trestní zákon (Criminal Code), Act No. 140/1961 Coll. (Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic) of 29 November 1961, as amended by Act No. 305/1999 Coll. of 18 November 1999 on the prohibition of the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of antipersonnel mines and on their destruction and on the amendment to Act No. 140/1961, Criminal Code, as amended.

Emblem and Red Cross Society Act (1992)

Act No. 126 Coll. (Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic) of 5 March 1992 on the protection of the emblem and the name of the Red Cross and on the Czechoslovak Red Cross.

Act on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (1997)

Act No. 19/1997 Coll. (Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic) of 24 January 1997 on Some Measures concerning Chemical Weapons Prohibition, and on Amendments to Act No. 50/1976 Coll. "On Zone Planning and the Building Code" (Building Act), as amended, the Small Businesses Act No. 455/1991 Coll., as amended, and the Penal Code Act No. 140/1961 Coll., as amended.

Act on Anti-Personnel Mines (1999)

Act no. 305/1999 Coll. (Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic) of 18 November 1999 on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on their Destruction and on amendment of Act No. 140/1961 Coll., Criminal Code as amended.

Czechoslovakia

Decree No. 16 on the Punishment of Nazi Criminals as amended (1945)

Decree No. 16 of the President of the Republic of 19 June 1945 on the Punishment of Nazi Criminals, Traitors and their Supporters and on the Establishment of Extraordinary People's Tribunals (Decree No. 16/1945 Coll.), as amended by Law No. 22 of 24 January 1946.

Denmark

Civil Defence Act (1976)

The Civil Defence Act of 20 September 1976, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A), the latest version of which is contained in Consolidated Act No. 912 of 2 October 2000, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A).

Military Criminal Code as amended (1978)

The Military Criminal Code, originally adopted as Act No. 216 of 26 April 1973, published by Forsvarsministeriet, 1974 and in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A), as amended by Act No. 195 of 3 May 1978 on the repeal of the Act on capital punishment for certain acts committed during war or enemy occupation as well as amendment to the Military Criminal Code, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A).

Penal Code (1978)
The Penal Code, Act No. 411 of 17 August 1978, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A), the latest version of which is contained in Consolidated Act No. 849 of 6 September 2000, with later amendments, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A).
Military Administration of Justice Act (1984)
The Military Administration of Justice Act, Act No. 218 of 26 April 1973, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A), as amended by Act No. 644 of 19 December 1984, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A).
Rescue Preparedness Act (1992)
The Danish Preparedness Act, 23 December 1992, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette).
International Tribunals Act (1994)
Act No. 1099 of 21 December 1994 on Criminal Proceedings before the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for War Crimes Committed in the Territory of Former Yugoslavia, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A).
Executive Order on Weapons and Ammunition (1995)
Executive Order No. 712 of 29 August 1995 on Weapons and Ammunition, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A), the latest version of which is contained in Executive Order No. 66 of 26 January 2000 on Weapons and Ammunition etc., issued under the authority provided in Consolidated Act No. 67 of 26 January 2000 on Weapons and Explosives, as amended by Law No. 433 of 31 May 2000 and published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A).
ICC Act (2001)
Act No. 342 of 16 May 2001 concerning the International Criminal Court, published in Lovtidende A (Official Gazette A).

Dominican Republic
Code of Military Justice (1953)
Código de Justicia de las Fuerzas Armadas, Ley 3488 del 13 de febrero de 1953, published in Gaceta Oficial, No. 7532, 5 March 1953.

Ecuador
National Civil Police Penal Code (1960)
Código Penal de la Policia Civil Nacional, 1960, published in Suplemento del Registro Oficial, No. 1202, 20 August 1960.
Penal Code (1971)
Código Penal de Ecuador, 20 de enero de 1971, published in Suplemento del Registro Oficial, No. 147, 22 January 1971.
Emblem Regulation (1972)
Reglamento No. 362 de 20 de junio de 1972 para normar el uso del emblema y las palabras Cruz Roja en el Ecuador (mediante Decreto Legislativo No. 893 de 1923 sobre el uso del emblema de la Cruz Roja), published in Suplemento del Registro Oficial, No. 93, 3 July 1972, pp. 8–9.
Code of Criminal Procedure (2000)
Código de Procedimiento Penal 2000, Suplemento del Registro Oficial, No. 360, 13 January 2000.

Egypt

Penal Code (1937)
Penal Code of 1937, published in Official Journal, No. 7, 1 August 1937, modified by Law No. 13 of 1940, published in Official Journal, No. 33, 28 March 1940.

Emblem Law (1940)
Law No. 12/40 of 25 March 1940 concerning the protection of the emblem of the red crescent and equivalent emblems and names, published in Official Journal, No. 33, 28 March 1940.

Military Criminal Code (1966)
Military Criminal Code, No. 25 of 1966, published in Official Journal, No. 123, 1 June 1966.

Law on the Environment (1994)
Law on the environment No. 4/1994 of 27 January 1994, published in Official Journal, No. 5, 3 February 1994.

El Salvador

Code of Military Justice (1934)
Código de Justicia Militar,1934.

Law on Amnesty to Achieve National Reconciliation (1987)
Ley de Amnistía para el logro de la Reconciliación Nacional, Decreto Ley No. 805, adopted on 27 October 1987, published in Diario Oficial, No. 199, Vol. 297, 28 October 1987.

General Amnesty Law for Consolidation of Peace (1993)
Ley de Amnistía General para la Consolidación de la Paz, Decreto Ley No. 486, adopted on 20 March 1993, published in Diario Oficial, No. 56, Vol. 318, 22 March 1993.

Law on the Control of Firearms, Ammunition and Explosives (1993)
Ley de Control de Armas de Fuego, Municiones, Explosivos y Artículos Similares, Decreto Legislativo No. 739, adopted on 8 December 1993, published in Diario Oficial, No. 1, Vol. 322, 3 January 1994.

Emblem Law (1994)
Ley de Protección del Emblema de la Cruz Roja, Decreto Legislativo No. 789, adopted on 26 January 1994, published in Diario Oficial, No. 56, Vol. 322, 21 March 1994, pp. 3–4.

Penal Code (1997)
Código Penal, Decreto Legislativo No. 1030, adopted on 26 April 1997, published in Diario Oficial, No. 105, Vol. 335, 10 June 1997.

Law on the Armed Forces (1998)
Ley Orgánica de la Fuerza Armada, 18 July 1998, Decreto Legislativo No. 353, adopted on 9 July 1998, published in Diario Oficial, No. 143, Vol. 340, 30 July 1998.

Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998)
Reformas al Código Penal vigente al Título "Delitos contra la humanidad", 1998.

Law on the Control of Firearms, Ammunition and Explosives (1999)
Ley de Control y Regulación de Armas de Fuego, Municiones, Explosivos y Artículos Similares, Decreto Legislativo No. 655, adopted on 1 July 1999, published in Diario Oficial, No. 139, Vol. 344, 26 July 1999.

Emblem Law (2000)
Ley de Protección del Emblema y el Nombre de la Cruz Roja y Media Luna Roja, Decreto Legislativo No. 175, adopted on 19 October 2000, published in Diario Oficial, No. 237, Vol. 349, 18 December 2000, pp. 2–5.

Estonia
Criminal Code as amended (1992)
Kriminaalkoodeks Ülemnõukogu seadustik, koodeks No. 1221 (Criminal Code) of 7 May 1992, published in Riigi Teataja (RTI) (Official Journal), No. 38, 1999, as amended in 1994.
Penal Code (2001)
Penal Code, of 6 June 2001, published in Riigi Teataja I 2001, 61, 364; 2002, 44, 284; 56, 350; 64, 390.

Ethiopia
Red Cross Legal Notice (1947)
Legal Notice No. 99 of 1947, Charter, 31 October 1947, published in Negarit Gazeta (Gazette Extraordinary), 7th Year, No. 2, Addis Ababa, 31 October 1947, pp. 7–12.
Penal Code (1957)
Penal Code of the Empire of Ethiopia, Proclamation No. 158, 23 July 1957, published in Negarit Gazeta (Gazette Extraordinary), 16th Year, No. 1, Addis Ababa, 23 July 1957.
Transitional Period Charter of Ethiopia (1991)
The Transitional Period Charter of Ethiopia, 22 July 1991, published in Negarit Gazeta (Gazette Extraordinary), 50th Year, No. 1, Addis Ababa, 22 July 1991, pp. 1–5.
Special Public Prosecutor's Office Establishment Proclamation (1992)
Proclamation No. 22/1992, A Proclamation to provide for the Establishment of the Special Public Prosecutor's Office, 8 August 1992, published in Negarit Gazeta, 51st Year, No. 18, Addis Ababa, 8 August 1992, pp. 109–112.
Constitution (1994)
A Proclamation to pronounce the coming into effect of the Constitution of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia of 8 December 1994, Proclamation No. 1/1995, 21 August 1995, published in Federal Negarit Gazetta (Gazette Extraordinary), 1st Year, No. 1, Addis Ababa, 21 August 1995, pp. 1–36.

Finland
Emblem Act (1979)
Laki eräiden kansainvälisesti suojattujen tunnusten käytöstä (Act on the Use of Certain Internationally Protected Signs and Emblems), Act No. 947/1979 of the Statute Book of Finland (Suomen asetuskokoelma 1979), issued on 21 December 1979, pp. 1757–1758.
ICTY Jurisdiction and Legal Assistance Act (1994)
Laki entisen Jugoslavian alueella tehtyjä rikoksia käsittelevän sotarikostuomioistuimen toimivallasta ja tuomioistuimelle annettavasta oikeusavusta (Act on the Jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Crimes Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia and on Legal Assistance to the International Tribunal), Act No. 12/1994, 5 January 1994, Finnish legislative gazette (Suomen säädöskokoelma), 1994, pp. 23–25.

Revised Penal Code (1995)
Penal Code, Act No. 39/1889, as amended; Revised Finnish Penal Code, Chapter 11 on War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity (Laki rikoslain muuttamisesta), Act No. 578/1995 of the Finnish legislative gazette (Suomen säädöskokoelma), issued on 21 April 1995, pp. 1460–1478.
ICC Act (2000)
Laki Kansainvälisen rikostuomioistuimen Rooman perussäännän lainsäädännön alaan kuuluvien määräysten voimaansaattamisesta ja perussäännön soveltamisesta (Act on the implementation of a legislative nature of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and on the application of the Statute), Act No. 1284/2000, Finnish legislative gazette (Suomen säädöskokoelma), 28 December 2000, pp. 3515–3516.

France
Emblem Law (1939)
Loi du 4 juillet 1939 tendant à modifier la loi du 24 juillet 1913 en vue d'assurer la protection de l'emblème de la Croix-Rouge et des armoiries de la Confédération suisse conformément aux dispositions de la convention de Genève du 27 juillet 1929 pour l'amélioration du sort des blessés et des malades dans les armées en campagne, published in the Journal officiel de la République française of 6 July 1939, p. 8566.
Ordinance on Repression of War Crimes (1944)
Ordonnance du 28 août 944 relative à la répression des crimes de guerre, published in the Journal officiel de la République française of 30 August 1944, p. 780.
Law on the Prohibition of Biological Weapons (1972)
Loi No. 72-467 du 9 juin 1972 interdisant la mise au point, la fabrication, la détention, le stockage, l'acquisition et la cession d'armes biologiques ou à base de toxines, published in the Journal officiel de la République française of 11 June 1972, p. 5883.
Code of Military Justice (1982)
Code de justice militaire, as amended by the Loi No. 82-621 du 21 juillet 1982 relative à l'instruction et au jugement des infractions en matière militaire et de sûreté de l'Etat et modifiant les codes de procédure pénale et de justice militaire, published in the Journal officiel de la République française, 22 juillet 1982, pp. 2318–2321 and by the Loi No. 99–929 du 10 novembre 1999, portant réforme du code de justice militaire et du code de procédure pénale, published in Journal officiel de la République française of 11 novembre 1999.
Penal Code (1994)
Loi No. 92-1336 du 16 décembre 1992 relative à l'entrée en vigueur du nouveau code pénal et à la modification de certaines dispositions de droit pénal et de procédure pénale nécessaires à cette entrée en vigueur, published in the Journal officiel de la République française, No. 292, 23 December 1992, pp. 17568–17595.
Code of Criminal Procedure (1994)
Loi No. 93-2 du 4 janvier 1993 portant réforme de la procédure pénale, published in the Journal officiel de la République française, No. 3, 5 January 1993, pp. 215–246.

Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995)
Loi No. 95-1 du 2 janvier 1995 portant adaptation de la législation française aux dispositions de la résolution 827 du Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies instituant un tribunal international en vue de juger les personnes présumées responsables de violations graves du droit international humanitaire commises sur le territoire de l'ex-Yougoslavie depuis 1991 (Law No. 95-1 of 2 January 1995 adapting French legislation to the provisions of United Nations Security Council resolution 827 establishing an international criminal tribunal to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991), published in the Journal officiel de la République française, No. 2, 3 January 1995, pp. 71–73.

Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1996)
Loi No. 96-432 du 22 mai 1996 portant adaptation de la législation française aux dispositions de la résolution 955 du Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies instituant un tribunal international en vue de juger les personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis en 1994 sur le territoire du Rwanda et, s'agissant des citoyens rwandais, sur le territoire d'Etats voisins (Law No. 96-432 of 22 May 1996 adapting French legislation to the provisions of the United Nations Security Council resolution 955 establishing an international criminal tribunal to prosecute persons responsible for acts of genocide or other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in 1994 in Rwanda and, for Rwandan citizens, in neighbouring States), published in the Journal officiel de la République française, No. 119, 23 May 1996, p. 7695.

Law on the Implementation of the CWC (1998)
Loi No. 98-467 du 17 juin 1998 relative à l'application de la Convention du 13 janvier 1993 sur l'interdiction de la mise au point, de la fabrication, du stockage et de l'emploi des armes chimiques et sur leur destruction, published in the Journal officiel de la République française, No. 139, 18 June 1998, pp. 9247–9255.

Anti-Personnel Mines Law (1998)
Loi No. 98-564 du 8 juillet 1998 tendant à l'élimination des mines antipersonnel, published in the Journal officiel de la République française, No. 157, 9 July 1998, pp. 10456–10458.

Law on Cooperation with the ICC (2002)
Loi n° 2002-268 du 26 février 2002 relative à la coopération avec la Cour pénale internationale (Law No. 2002-268 of 26 February 2002 on the Cooperation with the International Criminal Court), published in the Journal officiel de la République française, No. 49, 27 February 2002, pp. 3684–3687.

Gambia

Red Cross Society Act (1966)
An Act to incorporate The Gambia Red Cross Society and for matters incidental thereto and connected therewith, Act No. 7 of 1966, 1 October 1966, published in Laws of the Gambia, Chapter 51:01, pp. 3–18.

Armed Forces Act (1985)
An Act to make provision for the raising and maintenance of the Armed Forces of The Gambia, to provide a machinery for its organisation, to establish a code of military discipline and for other matters connected therewith, Act No. 2 of 1985, 24 June 1985, published in Laws of the Gambia, Chapter 19, pp. 3–66.

Georgia

Criminal Code (1960)

Criminal Code of Soviet Socialist Republic of Georgia, 30 December 1960, published in Sakartvelos SSR Umaglesi Sabchos Utskebebi, No. 1, under art. 10, 1961, pp. 5–380.

Constitution (1995)

Constitution of Georgia, 24 August 1995, published in Parlamentis Utskebebi, No. 31–33, Series of August–October 1995, pp. 6–50.

Law on Displaced Persons (1996)

Law No. 335 of 28 June 1996 on forcibly displaced/persecuted persons, published in Parlamentis Utskebani, No. 19–20, July 1996, pp. 39–42.

Law on Military Service (1997)

Law No. 860 of 17 September 1997 on Military Service, published in Parlamentis Utskebani, No. 41, 8 October 1997, pp. 16–28.

Emblem Law (1997)

Law No. 902 of 2 October 1997 on the emblem and designation of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, published in Parlamentis Utskebani, No. 43, 30 October 1997, pp. 8–10.

Code of Criminal Procedure (1998)

Code of Criminal Procedure of Georgia, Law No. 1251 of 20 February 1998, published in Parlamentis Utskebani, No. 13–14, 8 April 1998, pp. 31–200.

Criminal Code (1999)

Criminal Code of Georgia, Law No. 2287 of 22 July 1999, published in Sakanonmdeblo Matsne, No. 41, 13 August 1999, pp. 2–209.

Germany

Law on the Equalization of Burdens as amended (1952)

Gesetz über den Lastenausgleich (LAG) (Federal Law on the Equalization of Burdens), adopted on 14 August 1952, entry into force on 1 September 1952, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), No. 34, 18 August 1952, pp. 446ff., as amended several times.

Law for the Compensation of the Victims of National Socialist Persecution as amended (1953)

Bundesentschädigungsgesetz (BEG) (Federal Law for the Compensation of the Victims of National Socialist Persecution, also known as Federal Indemnification Act), first adopted as Bundesergänzungsgesetz zur Entschädigung für Opfer nationalsozialistischer Verfolgung (BErG) (Federal Supplementary Law for the Compensation of the Victims of National Socialist Persecution), adopted on 18 September 1953, entry into force on 1 October 1953, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 62, 21 September 1953, pp. 1387ff.; as amended by Drittes Gesetz zur Änderung des Bundesergänzungsgesetzes zur Entschädigung für Opfer der nationalsozialistischen Verfolgung (Third Federal Law amending the Federal Law for the Compensation of the Victims of National Socialist Persecution), adopted on 29 June 1965, entry into force retroactively on 1 October 1953, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 31, 29 June 1956, pp. 559ff.; as amended by Zweites Gesetz zur Änderung des Bundesentschädigungsgesetzes (BEG-Schlussgesetz) (Second [Federal] Law amending the Federal Law for the Compensation of the Victims of National Socialist Persecution), adopted on 14 September 1965, entry into force in most parts retroactively on 1 October 1953, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 52, 18 September 1965, pp. 1315ff.

Military Penal Code as amended (1957)

Wehrstrafgesetz (WStrG) (Military Penal Code), 30 March 1957, first published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.)
(Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 11, 30 March 1957, pp. 298–305; revised version published as Neufassung des Wehrstrafgesetzes (WStG), 24 May 1974, in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 56, 5 June 1974, pp. 1213–1220, lastly amended by Gesetz zur Neuausrichtung der Bundeswehr (Bundeswehrneuausrichtungsgesetz – BwNeuAusrG), 20 December 2001, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 75, 28 December 2001, pp. 4013–4028.

Federal Restitution Law as amended (1957)

Bundesgesetz zur Regelung der rückerstattungsrechtlichen Geldverbindlichkeiten des Deutschen Reichs und gleichgestellter Rechtsträger (Bundesrückerstattungsgesetz, BRüG) (Federal Law for the Settlement of the Monetary Restitution Liabilities of the German Reich and Legal Entities of Equal Legal Status), adopted on 19 July 1957, published published in BGBl. (Bundesgesetzblatt) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 32, 23 July 1957, pp. 733–743 as amended several times.

Law on Administrative Offences (1968)

Gesetz über Ordnungswidrigkeiten (OWiG) (Law on Administrative Offences), 24 May 1968, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 33, 30 May 1968, pp. 481–502.

Law on the Reparation of Losses as amended (1969)

Gesetz zur Abgeltung von Reparations-, Restitutions-, Zerstörungs- und Rückerstattungsschäden (Reparationsschädengesetz – RepG) (Law on the Settlement of Reparation, Restitution, Destruction and Reimbursement Losses, also known as Reparation Losses Act), adopted on 12 February 1969, entry into force retroactively on 1 January 1969, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 13, 14 February 1969, pp. 105–136, as amended several times.

Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters as amended (1982)

Gesetz über die internationale Rechtshilfe in Strafsachen (IRG) (Law on International Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters), adopted on 23 December 1982, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 57, 31 December 1982, 1982, pp. 2071–2089, as amended several times.

Criminal Procedure Code as amended (1987)

Strafprozessordnung (StPO) (Criminal Procedure Code), 1 February 1877, first published in Reichsgesetzblatt (RGBl.) (Reich Law Gazette), Part I, 1877, pp. 253; revised version published as Neufassung der Strafprozessordnung (Announcement of the Revised Version of the Penal Code), 7 April 1987, in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 24, 15 April 1987, pp. 1074–1148; amended several times.

Law on the Settlement of Open Property Matters as amended (1990)

Gesetz zur Regelung offener Vermögensfragen (Law on the Settlement of Open Property Matters), adopted on 23 September 1990, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part II, No. 35, 28 September 1990, pp. 1159–1167, as amended.

Law on Indemnification of Victims of Nazism as amended (1994)
NS-Verfolgtenentschädigungsgesetz (NS-VEntschG) (Law on the Indemnification of Victims of Nazism), adopted on 27 September 1994, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 65, 30 September 1994, pp. 2632–2633, as amended several times.

Federal Border Police Law (1994)
Gesetz zur Neuregelung des Vorschriften über der Bundesgrenzschutz (Bundesgrenzschutzneuregelungsgesetz, BGSNeuRegG), 19 October 1994, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 72, 25 October 1994, pp. 2978–3000.

Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1995)
Gesetz über die Zusammenarbeit mit dem Internationalen Strafgerichtshof für das ehemalige Jugoslawien (Jugoslawia-Strafgerichtshof-Gesetz) (Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (Yugoslavia Tribunal Law), 10 April 1995, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, 13 April 1995, pp. 485ff.

Law on the Legal Status of Military Personnel (1995)
Gesetz über die Rechtsstellung der Soldaten (Soldatengesetz), 19 March 1956, first published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 11, 21 March 1956, pp. 114–126; revised vesion published as Bekanntmachung der Neufassung des Soldatengesetzes, 15 December 1995, in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 65, 21 December 1995, pp. 1738–1755.

Law on Anti-Personnel Mines (1998)
Ausführungsgesetz zum Übereinkommen über das Verbot des Einsatzes, der Lagerung, der Herstellung und der Weitergabe von Antipersonenminen und über deren Vernichtung vom 3. Dezember 1997, 6 July 1998, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 43, 9 July 1998, pp. 1778–1781.

Law on Cooperation with the ICTR (1998)
Gesetz über die Zusammenarbeit mit dem Internationalen Strafgerichtshod für Ruanda (Ruanda-Strafgerichtshof-Gesetz) (Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunal for Rwanda (Rwanda Tribunal Law)), 4 May 1998, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 25, 8 May 1998, pp. 843–844.

Penal Code (1998)
Strafgesetzbuch (StGB) (Penal Code), promulgated on 15 May 1871, first published in Reichgesetzblatt (RGBl.) (Reich Law Gazette), 1871, pp. 127ff.; revised version published as Bekanntmachung der Neufassung des Strafgesetzbuches (Announcement of the Revised Version of the Penal Code), 13 November 1998, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 75, 19 November 1998, pp. 3322–3410.

Law on the Creation of a Foundation "Remembrance, Responsibility and Future" as amended (2000)
Gesetz zur Errichtung einer Stiftung "Erinnerung, Verantwortung und Zukunft", 2 August 2000, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Teil I, No. 38, 11 August 2000, pp. 1263–1269; as amended by Erstes Gesetz zur Änderung des Gesetzes zur Errichtung einer Stiftung "Erinnerung, Verantwortung und Zukunft", 4 August 2001, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 41, 10 August 2001, pp. 2036–2037.

Law on Cooperation with the ICC (2002)
Gesetz zur Ausführung des Römischen Statuts des Internationalen Strafgerichtshofes vom 17. Juli 1998, 21 June 2002, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 41, 28 June 2002, pp. 2144–2165.
Law introducing the International Crimes Code (2002)
Gesetz zur Einführung des Völkerstrafgesetzbuch, 26 June 2002, published in Bundesgesetzblatt (BGBl.) (Federal Law Gazette), Part I, No. 42, 29 June 2002, pp. 2254–2260.

Ghana
Armed Forces Act (1962)
An Act to provide for the raising and maintenance of the Army, Navy and Air Force of Ghana, for matters connected therewith and for the repeal of certain enactments relating to the existing forces and other defence matters, Act No. 105 of 21 February 1962, published in AFR, C.I. 12, Appendix III, pp. 271ff.
Red Cross Emblem Decree (1973)
Red Cross Emblem (Control) Decree of 20 September 1973, published in NRCD, 216, pp. 1–3.

Greece
Emblem Law (1914)
Law No. 140/1914 on protection of the Red Cross emblem and name, 23 January 1914, published in Official Gazette A, Pamphlet No. 17, 23 January 1914.
Military Penal Code (1995)
Law No. 2287/1995 on the Military Penal Code, published in Official Gazette A, Pamphlet No. 10, 1 February 1995.
Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1998)
Law No. 2665/1998 on enforcement of Resolutions 827/25.5.1993 and 955/8.11.1994 of the Security Council of the United Nations, by which two International Criminal Courts were established in order to try persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, 15 December 1998, published in Official Gazette A, Pamphlet No. 279, 17 December 1998.

Grenada
Red Cross Society Law as amended (1981)
People's Law No. 24 of 1981, A Law to incorporate the Grenada Red Cross Society and for connected purposes, 29 July 1981, gazetted on 21 August 1981, as amended by An Act to amend the Grenada Red Cross Society Law 1981, 15 October 1986, gazetted on 17 October 1986.

Guatemala
Penal Code (1973)
Código Penal (Penal Code), Decreto No. 17-73 del Congreso de la República del 5 de julio de 1973, published in Diario de Centro América, Year CXCVII, No. 1, 30 August 1973.
Code of Criminal Procedure (1992)
Código Procesal Penal (Code of Criminal Procedure), Decreto No. 51-92 del Congreso de la República del 28 de septiembre de 1992, published in Diario de Centro América, Year CCXLV, No. 31, 14 December 1992, p. 705.

National Reconciliation Law (1996)
Ley de Reconciliación Nacional (National Reconciliation Law), Decreto No. 145-96 del Congreso de la República del 18 de diciembre de 1996, published in Diario de Centro América, Year CCLV, No. 54, 27 December 1996, pp. 1546–1547.
Emblem Law (1997)
Ley de Protección y Uso del Emblema de la Cruz Roja (Law on Protection and Use of the Red Cross Emblem), Decreto No. 102–97 del Congreso de la República del 21 de octubre de 1997, published in Diario de Centro América, Year CCLVII, No. 78, 18 November 1997, pp. 2562–2566.
Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines (1997)
Ley para la prohibición de la producción, compra, venta, importación, exportación, tránsito, utilización y posesión de minas antipersonales y de dispositivos antidetectores o de partes de tales artefactos, Decreto No. 106-97 del Congreso de la República del 29 de octubre de 1997, published in Diario de Centro América, Year CCLVII, No. 87, 1 December 1997, pp. 2817–2818.

Guinea
Emblem Law (1995)
Loi L/95010/CTRN portant usage et protection de l'emblème et du nom de la Croix-Rouge guinéenne (Law L/95010/CTRN on the use and protection of the emblem and of the name of the Guinean Red Cross), 9 May 1995, published in the Journal Officiel, No. 10, 25 May 1995, pp. 494–660.
Criminal Code (1998)
Loi No. 98/036 du 31 décembre 1998 portant Code pénal de la République de Guinée, published in the Journal Officiel, Numéro spécial, May 1999, pp. 1–58.
Code of Criminal Procedure (1998)
Loi No. 98/037 du 31 décembre 1998 portant Code de procédure pénale de la République de Guinée, published in the Journal Officiel, Numéro spécial, February 1999, pp. 1–70.

Guyana
Red Cross Society Act (1967)
An Act to incorporate the Guyana Red Cross Society and to provide for matters related thereto, Act No. 25 of 1967, 29 December 1967, gazetted on 30 December 1967.

Honduras
Emblem Law (1971)
Decreto No. 32-1971 del Poder Legislativo, Ley de 19 de enero 1971 de Protección del Emblema y el Nombre de la Cruz Roja Hondureña, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial de la República de Honduras, Year XCVI, No. 20.293, 4 February 1971, pp. 4–6.
Anti-Personnel Mines Law (2000)
Decreto No. 60-2000 del Poder Legislativo, Ley para la prohibción de la producción, compra, venta, importación, exportación, tránsito, utilización, posesión y transferencia de minas antipersonal y de dispositivos antidectores o de partes de tales artefactos, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial de la República de Honduras, 20 June 2000, pp. 2–3.

Hungary

Law/Decree on the Prohibition of Biological Weapons (1975)

Law/Decree No. 11 Promulgating the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on their Destruction, 9 June 1975, published in Hungarian Official Gazette, No. 41, 9 June 1975, pp. 559–561.

Criminal Code as amended (1978)

Act IV of 1978, the Criminal Code of the Hungarian People's Republic, 31 December 1978, published in Hungarian Official Gazette, No. 92, 30 December 1978, pp. 1047–1262, as amended by Act LXXXVII of 1998, Act on the Amendment of the Criminal Code of the Hungarian People's Republic, incorporating Section 160/A ("Use of Weapons Prohibited by International Treaty") in Act IV on the Criminal Code (1978), 22 December 1998, published in Hungarian Official Gazette, No. 118, 26 December 1998, pp. 7982–7998.

Red Cross Society Act as amended (1993)

Act XL of 1993 on the Hungarian Red Cross, 20 May 1993, published in Hungarian Official Gazette, No. 46, 1993 (IV.20), pp. 2681–2682, as amended by Act XXXVII of 1994, Act on the Amendment of the Act XL of 1993 on the Hungarian Red Cross, 6 April 1994, published in Hungarian Official Gazette, No. 41, 1994, p. 1444.

Civil Defence Act (1996)

Act XXXVII of 1996 on civil defence, 30 April 1996, published in Hungarian Official Gazette, No. 38, 15 May 1996, pp. 2140–2148.

Act on Cooperation with the ICTY (1996)

Act XXXIX of 1996 on the fulfilment of obligations deriving from the Statute of the International Tribunal established for punishing the serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, 22 May 1996, published in Hungarian Official Gazette, No. 40, 22 May 1996, pp. 2402–2409.

Iceland

Law on Legal Aid to the ICTY (1994)

Law No. 49 on Legal Aid to the International Tribunal for Trial of War Crimes in the Former Yugoslavia, 28 April 1994, published in Official Gazette (Stjòrnartìdindi A-Deild), 9 May 1994, pp. 136–138.

India

Penal Code (1860)

The Indian Penal Code, Act No. 45 of 1860, 6 October 1860, published in Air Manual, 5th ed., 1989, Vols. 37 and 38.

Constitution (1950)

Constitution of India, 26 January 1950, published in Gazette of India, 26 November 1949, Ext., No. C.A./83/Const./49, pp. 2347–2597.

Army Act (1950)

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the government of the regular Army, Act No. 46 of 1950, 20 May 1950, published in Gazette of India, 23 May 1950, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 11, pp. 191–293.

Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act (1958)

An Act to enable certain special powers to be conferred upon members of the armed forces in disturbed areas, Act No. 28 of 1958, 11 September 1958, published in Gazette of India, 12 September 1958, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 28, pp. 179–181.

Andhra Pradesh District Police Act (1959)

The Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) District Police, Act No. XXIV of 1959, 6 September 1959, published in The Andhra Pradesh Local Acts (Unified and Regional Laws) 1802–1971, Asia Law House, Hyderabad, Vol. 4, pp. 749–761.

Geneva Conventions Act (1960)

An Act to enable effect to be given to certain international Conventions done at Geneva on the twelfth day of August, 1949 to which India is a party, and for purposes connected therewith, Act No. 6 of 1960, 12 March 1960, published in Gazette of India, 12 March 1960, Pt. II – S. 1, Ext., No. 7, pp. 208–215.

Armed Forces Act (1962)

Army Reserve Act of 15 March 1962.

Code of Criminal Procedure (1973)

The Code of Criminal Procedure (1973), Act No. 2 of 1974, 25 January 1974, published in Gazette of India, 25 January 1974, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., pp. 15–255.

Coast Guards Act (1978)

The Coast Guards Act, Act No. 30 of 1978, 18 August 1978, published in Gazette of India, 18 August 1978, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 31, pp. 355–387.

Delhi Police Act (1978)

Delhi Police Act (1978), Act 34 of 27 August 1978, published in Gazette of India, 27 August 1978, Pt. II – S. 1, Ext., No. 35, pp. 425–477.

Armed Forces (Punjab and Chandigarh) Special Powers Act (1983)

Armed Forces (Punjab and Chandigarh) Special Powers Act (1983), Act No. 34 of 1983, 8 December 1983, published in Gazette of India, 15 November 1983, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 44, pp. 1–3.

Punjab Disturbed Areas Act (1983)

Punjab Disturbed Areas Act (1983), Act No. 32 of 1983, 8 December 1983, published in Gazette of India, 8 December 1983, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 42, pp. 1–2.

Armed Forces (Jammu and Kashmir) Special Powers Act (1990)

Armed Forces (Jammu and Kashmir) Special Powers Act (1990), Act No. 21 of 1990, 10 September 1990, published in Gazette of India, 11 September 1990, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 43, pp. 1–4.

Indo-Tibetan Boarder Police Force Act (1992)

Indo-Tibetan Border Police Force Act (1992), Act No. 35 of 1992, 1 September 1992, published in Gazette of India, 2 September 1992, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 57, pp. 1–46.

Chemical Weapons Act (2000)

An Act to give effect to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction and to provide for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto, Act No. 34 of 200, 26 August 2000, published in Gazette of India, 28 August 2000, Pt. II – Sec. I, Ext., No. 42, pp. 1–29.

Indonesia

Penal Code (1946)

Act No. 1 of 1946 regarding the Revision of the Penal Code, 26 February 1946, published in Yogyakarta on 26 February 1946, State Gazette 1946, No. 1, pp. 1–7.

Military Penal Code (1947)
Act No. 39 of 1947 regarding the Revision of the Military Penal Code, 27 December 1947, published in Yogyakarta on 27 December 1947, State Gazette 1934, No. 167, pp. 167–170.
Indonesia Act (1982)
Act No. 20 of 1982 regarding the Principles of State Defence and Security of the Republic of Indonesia, 19 September 1982, published in Jakartaon 19 September 1982, State Gazette 1982, No. 51, pp. 467–486.
Military Disciplinary Law (1997)
Extract Law No. 26 of 1997 regarding the Law of Discipline for Members of the Indonesian Armed Forces, 3 October 1997, published in Jakarta on 3 October 1997, State Gazette 1997, No. 74, pp. 287–300.

Iraq
Military Penal Code (1940)
Military Penal Code, No. 13, 1940, published in Al Waqia'a Al-Iraqia, No. 1782, Year 18, 21 March 1940, pp. 1–18.
Law on the Protection and Improvement of the Environment (1997)
Law on the protection and improvement of the environment, No. 3/1997, 10 March 1997, published in Al Waqia'a Al-Iraqia, No. 3662, 24 March 1997, Year 38, pp. 90–95.

Ireland
Red Cross Act as amended (1938)
An Act to enable, so far as Ireland is concerned, effect to be given to and advantage taken of certain provisions contained in an international Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armies in the Field and an international Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, both of which were signed at Geneva on the 27th day of July 1929, and for that purpose to make provision for the establishment and incorporation in Ireland of a Red Cross Society and for certain other matters, Act No. 32 of 14 December 1938, published in , The Acts of the Oireachtas passed in the year 1938, pp. 584–591; as amended by An Act to provide that the President of Ireland shall be the President of the Irish Red Cross Society, Act No. 20 of 28 November 1944, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas passed in the year 1944, pp. 238–239; as amended by An Act to enable, so far as Ireland is concerned, effect to be given to and advantage taken of certain provisions contained in the Conventions signed on behalf of Ireland at Geneva on the 19th day of December, 1949, and for those and other purposes to amend and extend the Red Cross Acts, 1938 and 1944, Act No. 28 of 9 December 1954, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas passed in the year 1954, pp. 734–743; and as amended by the Act to enable effect to be given to the Protocols additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 adopted at Geneva on 8 June 1977 and for that purpose to amend the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962, the Red Cross Acts, 1938 to 1954, and section 1 of the Prisoners of War and Enemy Aliens Act, 1956, and to provide for connected matters, Act No. 35 of 13 July 1998, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas as promulgated, pp. 827–908.
Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962)
An Act to enable effect to be given so far as Ireland is concerned to certain provisions of the Conventions done at Geneva on the 12th day of August, 1949, relative to the amelioration of the condition of the wounded and sick in armed forces in the field, the amelioration of the condition of wounded and shipwrecked members of armed forces at sea, the treatment of prisoners of war, and the protection of civilian persons in time of war, Act No. 11 of 21 April 1962, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas passed in the year 1962, pp. 114–487, as amended by the Act to enable effect to be given to the Protocols additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 adopted at Geneva on 8 June 1977 and for that purpose to amend the Geneva Conventions Act, 1962, the Red Cross Acts, 1938 to 1954, and section 1 of the Prisoners of War and Enemy Aliens Act, 1956, and to provide for connected matters, Act No. 35 of 13 July 1998, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas as promulgated, pp. 827–908.

Extradition Act as amended (1965)

An Act to amend the law relating to extradition, Act No. 17 of 19 July 1965, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas passed in the year 1965, pp. 412–459, as amended by An Act to amend the Extradition Acts, 1965 and 1987, Act No. 25 of 14 December 1987, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas as promulgated, and by An Act to amend and extend the Extradition Acts, 1965 to 1987, Act. No. 6 of 5 April 1994, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas as promulgated, pp. 66–75.

Explosives (Landmine) Order (1996)

S. I. No. 175 of 1996 Order entitled Explosives (Land Mines) Order 12 June 1996, published in Statutory Instruments 1996, p. 2786.

Chemical Weapons Act (1997)

An Act to implement the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction, and to provide for related matters, Act No. 28 of 19 May 1997, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas as promulgated, pp. 1117–1131.

War Crimes Tribunal Act (1998)

An Act to enable Ireland to fulfil its obligations to co-operate with international tribunals in the performance of their function relating to the prosecution and punishment of international war crimes and to provide for related matters, Act No. 40 of 10 November 1998, published in The Acts of the Oireachtas as promulgated, pp. 1023–1070.

Israel

Crime of Genocide (Prevention and Punishment) Law (1950)

Crime of Genocide (Prevention and Punishment) Law, Law No. 31, adopted by the Knesset on 29 March 1950, published in Sefer Ha-Chukkim, No. 42, 7 April 1950, pp. 137–138.

Red Shield of David Law (1950)

Red Shield of David Law, Law No. 52, adopted by the Knesset on 12 July 1950, published in Sefer Ha-Chukkim, No. 52, 21 July 1950, pp. 175–178.

Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950)

Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law, Law No. 64, adopted by the Knesset on 1 August 1950, published in Sefer Ha-Chukkim, No. 57, 9 August 1950, pp. 281–285.

Military Justice Law (1955)

Military Justice Law, Law No. 54, adopted by the Knesset on 21 June 1955, published in Sefer Ha-Chukkim, No. 189, 20 July, 1955, pp. 171–239.

Criminal Procedure Law (1982)

Criminal Procedure Law (Consolidated Version), 1982, determined by the Knesset Constitution, Legislation and Law Committee on 2 February 1982, published in Sefer Ha-Chukkim, No. 1043, 1 March 1982, pp. 41–78.

Penal Law as amended (1977)
Penal Law (Consolidated Version), 1977, as determined by the Knesset's Constitution, Legislation and Law Committee, 7 June 1977, as amended by Penal Law (Amendment No. 39) (Introductory Part and General Part), 1994, adopted by the Knesset on 25 July 1994, published in Sefer Ha-Chukkim, No. 1481, 23 August 1994, pp. 348–359.

Italy

Law concerning the Unlawful Use of the Emblem (1912)
Legge No. 740 compiti della Croce Rossa in tempo di pace e di guerra, 30 June 1912, published in Giornale Ufficiale No. 168, 17 July 1912.

Penal Code (1930)
Codice Penale, approved by Royal Decree No. 1398 of 19 October 1930.

Law of War Decree as amended (1938)
Legge italiana di guerra, adopted by Royal Decree No. 1415, 8 July 1938, published in Raccolta Ufficiale delle Leggi e dei Decreti del Regno d'Italia, Vol. 1938-XVI, p. 4307, as amended by Law No. 1902, 16 December 1940, published in Giornale Ufficiale No. 24, 30 January 1941, reprinted in Manuale di diritto umanitario, Volume IV, Raccolta delle leggi nazionali relative ai conflitti armati ed alle neutralità, SMD-G-014, Stato Maggiore della Difesa, I Reparto, Ufficio Addestramento e Regolamenti, Rome, 1992, pp. 7–122.

Wartime Military Penal Code (1941)
Codice Penale Militare di guerra (Wartime Military Penal Code), approved con r.d. 20 febbraio 1941, n. 303, relevant abstracts published in Manuale di diritto umanitario (Volume IV) Raccolta delle leggi nazionali relative ai conflitti armati ed alle neutralità (SMD-G-014), Stato Maggiore della Difesa (I Reparto – Ufficio Addestramento e Regolament), Rome, 1992, pp. 133–154.

Constitution as amended (1947)
Constituzione (Constitution), adopted on 22 December 1947, entry into force on 1 January 1948, published in Giornale Uffiziale No. 298 of 27 December 1947 (Special Edition) and Giornale Uffiziale No. 2 of 3 January 1948, as amended several times.

Law on Genocide (1967)
Legge italiana n. 962, Prevenzione e repressione del delitto di genocidio, 9 October 1967, published in Manuale di diritto umanitario (Volume IV) Raccolta delle leggi nazionali relative ai conflitti armati ed alle neutralità (SMD-G-014), Stato Maggiore della Difesa (I Reparto – Ufficio Addestramento e Regolament), Rome, 1992, pp. 199–201.

Law on the Export, Import and Transit of Armaments (1990)
Law No. 185 ("New Provisions governing the Export, Import and Transit of Armaments") of 9 July 1990.

Decree-Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1993)
Decree-Law No. 544, Provisions on Cooperation with the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia, 28 December 1993.

Law on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (1995)
Law No. 496, Ratification and Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction, with Annexes, done at Paris on 13 January 1993, 18 November 1995.

Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines (1997)
Legge No. 374, Norme per la Messa al Bando delle Mine Antipersona, 29 October 1997, published in Gazetta Ufficiale della Republica Italiana, serie generale No. 256, 3 November 1997, pp. 4–5.

Japan
Emblem Law (1947)
Law No. 127 on the Restriction of the Use of the Emblem and Name of the Red Cross, 13 April 1947.
Law on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (1995)
Law No. 65 on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons and Control of Specific Substances, 5 April 1995, published in Kanpo Gogai (Official Gazette, Extra), No. 64, 5 April 1995.
Law on the Prevention of Personal Injury Caused by Sarin (1995)
Law No. 78 on the Prevention of Personal Injury Caused by Sarin etc., 21 April 1998, published in Kanpo Gogai (Official Gazette, Extra), No. 21, 21 April 1995.
Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines (1998)
Law No. 116 concerning the Prohibition of the Production of Anti-personnel Landmines and the Regulation, etc. of their Possession, 30 September 1998.

Jordan
Military Criminal Code (1952)
Qanun Al 'Uqubat Al 'Askari, Law No. 43 of 1952, 16 June 1952, published in Official Gazette, No. 1113, 16 June 1952, pp. 329ff.
Law on Explosive Material (1953)
Qanun Al Mufarqa'at, Law No. 13 of 1953, 17 January 1953, published in Official Gazette, No. 113, 17 February 1953, pp. 457ff.
Criminal Code (1960)
Qanun Al 'uqubat Al Urduni, Law No. 16 of 1960, 1 May 1960, published in Official Gazette, No. 1487, 1 May 1960, pp. 374ff.
Code of Criminal Procedure as amended (1961)
Qanun Usul Al Muhakamat Al Jazaiyah, Law No. 9 of 1961, 16 March 1961, published in Official Gazette, No. 1539, 16 April 1961, pp. 311ff; the last amendment is Law No. 16 of 2001, published in Official Gazette, No. 4480, 18 March 2001, pp. 1294ff.
Antiquities Law (1966)
Qanun Al Athar, Antiquities Law No. 51 of 1966, published in Official Gazette, No. 1936, 16 July 1966, pp. 1327ff.
Red Crescent Society Law (1969)
Law No. 3 of 1969 of the National Society of the Jordanian Red Crescent, 1 February 1969, published in Official Gazette, 1969.
Military Service Law (1972)
Qanun Khidmat Al Afrad Fil Quwwat Al Musallaha, Military Service Law No. 2 of 1972, 15 February 1972, published in Official Gazette, No. 2345, 15 February 1972, pp. 172ff.
Law on the Protection of the Environment (1995)
Qanun Himayat Al Bi'ah, Law on the Protection of the Environment No. 12 of 1995, 2 September 1995, published in Official Gazette, No. 1472, 1 October 1995, pp. 2928ff.
Draft Emblem Law (1997) -unadopted
Draft Law concerning the use and protection of the emblem of the red crescent and red cross, July 1997.

Draft Military Criminal Code (2000)
Draft Military Criminal Code and Military Criminal Procedure, drafted by the General Commandment of the Jordanian Armed Forces and the Military Judiciary Directorate (in cooperation with the ICRC), 2000, published in Al Arab Al Yawm, 25 October 2000.
Draft Penal Code (unadopted)
Draft Penal Code.

Kazakhstan
Constitution (1995)
Constitution of the Republic of Kazakhstan, 30 August 1995, published in Kazakhstanskaya pravda, 8 September 1995.
Penal Code (1997)
Penal Code of the Republic of Kazakhstan, 16 July 1997, published as Ugolovniy kodeks Respubliki Kazakhstan: offitsial'nyj tekst, Almaty, Publishing House of the Ministry of Justice of the Republic of Kazakhstan, 1997, 272 pp.

Kenya
Armed Forces Act (1968)
An Act of Parliament to provide for the establishment, government and discipline of the Kenya Army, the Kenya Air Force and the Kenya Navy and their reserves; to make provision in relation to seconded and attached personnel and visiting forces; and for purposes connected therewith and purposes incidental thereto, Act No. 60 of 27 November 1968, Chapter 199 of the Laws of Kenya, (commencement by Legal Notice No. 353 of 29 November 1968), published in Kenya Subsidiary Legislation 1968, Vol. XLVII, pp. 570ff. (Revised Edition 1980, published by the Government Printer, Nairobi, 247 pp.)
Geneva Conventions Act (1968)
An Act of Parliament to enable effect to be given to certain International Conventions done at Geneva on the 12th August 1949, and for purposes incidental thereto, Act No. 51 of 19 November 1968, Chapter 198 of the Laws of Kenya, published in The Acts 1968, No. 51 of 1968, pp. 519ff. (Revised Edition 1970, printed and published by the Government Printer, Nairobi, pp. 1–7.)
Constitution (1992)
Constitution of Kenya, originally adopted as Legal Notice No. 718 of 1963, published in Kenya Subsidiary Legislation, July–December 1963, Kenya Gazette Supplement, No. 105, 10 December 1963, pp. 1ff., reprinted, as amended, in the Laws of Kenya: The Constitution of Kenya Revised Edition, 1992, published by the Government Printer, Nairobi.

Korea, Republic of
Red Cross Society Act as amended (1949)
Act of Incorporation of the Republic of Korea National Red Cross, Act No. 25, 30 April 1949, as amended by Act No. 3988, 4 December 1987, Act No. 4268, 27 December 1990, Act No. 4727, 7 January 1994, Act No. 4789, 20 December 1994, Act No. 4831, 23 December 1994, Act No. 5529, 28 February 1998, Act No. 5608, 30 December 1998, Act No. 6400, 29 January 2001, Act No. 6728, 26 August 2002, published in Gazette No. 15183, p. 86.
Military Criminal Code (1962)
Criminal Code of the Armed Forces, Act No. 1003, 20 January 1962, published in Governmental Gazette, No. 3054, 20 January 1962, pp. 1–7 (amended by Act No. 6290, 26 December 2000).

Chemical Weapons Act (1996)
Act on the control of the production, export, import etc. of certain chemical materials for the prohibition of chemical weapons, Act No. 5162, 16 August 1996, published in Governmental Gazette, No. 13388, 16 August 1996, pp. 6–18 (amended by Act No. 5454, 13 December 1997).
Conventional Weapons Act (2001)
Act on the Regulation of the Use and Transfer of Certain Conventional Weapons including Mines, Act No. 6476, 24 May 2001, published in Governmental Gazette, No. 14808, 24 May 2001, pp. 43–47.

Kuwait
Constitution (1962)
Constitution of 11 November 1962, published in Kuwait Al-Youm (Kuwait Today), Special Edition, 12 November 1962, pp. 1–13.
Penal Code (1970)
Law No. 16 of 2 June 1960, Penal Code, published in Kuwait Al-Youm (Kuwait Today), No. 287 repeated, 2 June 1960, pp. 19ff., as amended by Law No. 31 of 21 July 1970, published in Kuwait Al-Youm (Kuwait Today), No. 787, 26 July 1970, pp. 6–14.
Civil Defence Decree (1979)
Decree Law No. 21 of 7 May 1979 concerning Civil Defence, published in Kuwait Al-Youm (Kuwait Today), No. 1246, 13 May 1979, pp. 4–6.

Kyrgyzstan
Constitution (1993)
Constitution of the Kyrgyz Republic, adopted by the XIIth session of the Supreme Soviet of the Kyrgyz Republic, 5 May 1993, published in Vedomosti Zakonodatel'nogo Sobraniya Zhogorku Kenesha Kyrgyzskoy Respubliki (Bulletin of the Legislative Assembly of the Parliament), No. 7, 1993, pp. 75ff.
Criminal Code (1997)
Criminal Code of the Kyrgyz Republic, adopted by Zhogorku Kenesha Kyrgyzskoy Respubliki (Legislative Assembly of the Kyrgyz Republic), 18 September 1997, published in Vedomosti Zakonodatel'nogo Sobraniya Zhogorku Kenesha Kyrgyzskoy Respubliki (Bulletin of the Legislative Assembly of the Parliament), No. 7, 1998, pp. 229ff.
Emblem Law (2000)
Law on the use and protection of the emblem of the red crescent and red cross, adopted by Zhogorku Kenesha Kyrgyzskoy Respubliki (Legislative Assembly of the Kyrgyz Republic), 18 September 2000, promulgated on 29 September 2000, published in Vedomosti Zakonodatel'nogo Sobraniya Zhogorku Kenesha Kyrgyzskoy Respubliki (Bulletin of the Legislative Assembly of the Parliament), 2000.

Latvia
Draft Red Cross Society Law (1998)
Draft Latvian Red Cross Law, 12 June 1998.
Criminal Code (1998)
Kriminallikums (Criminal Law), 17 June 1998, published in the official newspaper "Latvijas vestnesis", No. 199/200, 8 July 1998.

Lebanon

Code of Military Justice (1968)

Loi No. 24/68, Code de Justice Militaire (Law No. 24/68, Code of Military Justice), 13 April 1968, published in the Journal officiel de la République libanaise, No. 34/1968, 25 April 1968, pp. 534–564.

Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997)

Draft Amendments to Law No. 24/68, Code of Military Justice, prepared by the Committee of the Army for IHL, in cooperation with the ICRC, 1997.

Lesotho

Red Cross Society Act (1967)

Act to incorporate the Lesotho Red Cross Society, to provide for transfer of all assets of the Basutoland Branch of the British Red Cross Society to the Lesotho Red Cross Society and to provide for related matters, Act No. 31 of 1967, assented to on 9 November 1967, published in Lesotho Government Gazette, No. 44, Vol. II, 17 November 1967, pp. 957–963.

Internal Security Act (1984)

The Internal Security (General) Act, Act No. 24 of 1984, assented to on 23 July 1984, published in Laws of Lesotho, Vol. XXIX, 1984, pp. 54–86.

Libya

Emblem Decree (1981)

Résolution du Comité populaire général No. 941 de 1981 relative au décret sur l'utilisation de l'emblème du Croissant Rouge, published and entered into force on 27 July 1981.

Liechtenstein

Emblem Law (1957)

Gesetz vom 27 Mai 1957 betreffend den Schutz des Zeichens und des Namens des Roten Kreuzes, published in Liechtensteinisches Landes-Gesetzblatt, No. 15, 25 July 1957, pp. 1–5.

Ordinance on the Indirect Transfer of War Material (1999)

Verordnung vom 9 September 1999 über die Vermittlung von Kriegsmaterial, published in Liechtensteinisches Landes-Gesetzblatt, No. 185, 7 October 1999, pp. 1–28.

Lithuania

Criminal Code as amended (1961)

Lietuvos Respublikos baudziamas kodeskas (Criminal Code of the Republic of Lithuania) 26 June 1961, published in Valstybes zinios, No. 18-147, 1961, as amended on 9 June 1998.

Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem (2000)

Lietuvos Raudonojo Kryziaus draugijos, Raudonojo Kryziaus ir Raudonojo Pusmenulio emblemos ir pavadinimo istatymas (Law on the Lithuanian Red Cross Society, the Red Cross and Red Crescent Emblem and Name), No. VIII-1978, 10 October 2000, published in Valsybe zinios, No. 89-2744, 2000.

Draft Decree on the Emblem (1999)

Draft Decree of the Government of the Republic of Lithuania relating to Regulations on the use of the Red Cross emblem, 1999.

Luxembourg

Emblem Law (1914)

Loi concernant la protection des emblèmes de la Croix-Rouge, 18 décembre 1914, published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, 1914.

Code of Criminal Investigation (1944)

Arrêté grand-ducal du 25 mai 1944 modifiant les dispositions des art. 5 à 7 du code d'instruction criminelle dans le but d'assurer la juste répression de crime et délits commis en dehors du territoire, pp. 31-32.

Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947)

Loi du 2 août 1947 sur la répression des crimes de guerre, published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, 1947, pp. 755–758.

Law on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes (1974)

Loi du 24 décembre 1974 ayant pour objet l'imprescriptibilité des crimes de guerre, published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, 1974, Volume II, pp. 2328–2329.

Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985)

Loi du 9 janvier 1985 relative à la répression des infractions graves aux Conventions internationales de Genève du 12 août 1949, published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, 1985, pp. 24–27.

Law on the Approval of the CWC (1997)

Loi du 10 avril 1997 portant approbation de la Convention sur l'interdiction de la mise au point, de la fabrication, du stockage et de l'emploi des armes chimiques et sur leur destruction, faite à Paris,le 13 janvier 1993 (Law of 10 April 1997 approving the Convention) as amended, published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, A-No. 23, 16 April 1997, p. 881, Réctificatif (Corrigendum) published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, A-No. 33, 2 May 1997, p. 1164.

Blinding Laser Weapons Act (1999)

Loi du 29 avril 1999 portant approbation

- du Protocole sur l'interdiction ou la limitation de l'emploi des mines, pièges et autres dispositifs, tel qu'il a été modifié le 3 mai 1996 (Protocole II, tel qu'il a été modifié le 3 mai 1996), annexé à la Convention sur l'interdiction ou la limitation de l'emploi de certaines armes classiques qui peuvent être considérées comme produisant des effets traumatiques excessifs ou comme frappant sans discrimination du 10 octobre 1980, adopté à Genève, le 3 mai 1996;
- du Protocole additionnel à la Convention sur l'interdiction ou la limitation de l'emploi de certaines armes classiques qui peuvent être considérées comme produisant des effets traumatiques excessifs ou comme frappant sans discrimination du 10 octobre 1980, (Protocole IV intitulé Protocole relatif aux armes à laser aveuglantes), adopté le 13 octobre 1995, published in Memorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, ttt A-No. 50, 6 May 1999, pp. 1175–1176.

Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines (1999)

Loi du 29 avril 1999 portant approbation de la Convention sur l'interdiction de l'emploi, du stockage, de la production et du transfert des mines antipersonnel et sur leur destruction, signée à Ottawa le 4 décembre 1997, published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, A-No. 50, 6 May 1999, p. 1189.

Law on Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1999)

Loi du 18 mai 1999 introduisant certaines mesures visant à faciliter la coopération avec:

1) le Tribunal international créé par le Conseil de Sécurité des Nations Unies dans sa Résolution 827 du 25 mai 1993 pour le jugement des personnes présumées responsables de violations graves du droit international humanitaire commises sur le territoire de l'ancienne République fédérative socialiste de Yougoslavie depuis 1991
2) le Tribunal international créé par le Conseil de Sécurité des Nations Unies dans sa Résolution 955 du 8 novembre 1994 pour le jugement des personnes présumées responsables d'actes de génocide ou d'autres violations graves du droit international humanitaire commis sur le territoire du Rwanda et les citoyens rwandais présumés responsables de tels actes ou violations commis sur le territoire d'Etats voisins, entre le 1er janvier et le 31 décembre 1994, published in Mémorial, Journal officiel du Grand-Duché de Luxembourg, A-No. 66, 11 June 1999, pp. 1435–1438.

Malawi

National Service Act (1951)

Act to make provision for securing and controlling the enlistment of persons for national service during an emergency and for purposes connected therewith, 10 April 1951, Laws of Malawi, Vol. III, Cap. 12:02, published in Government Gazette Notice, No. 15, 10 April 1951, pp. 1–7.

Geneva Conventions Act (1967)

An Act to enable effect to be given to certain International Conventions done at Geneva on the Twelfth Day of August, one thousand nine hundred and forty-nine and for purposes connected therewith, Act No. 18 of 1967, 24 July 1967, Laws of Malawi, Vol. III, Cap. 12:03, published in Malawi Gazette, Supplement, 9 August 1967, pp. 1–6.

Red Cross Society Act (1968)

An Act to Provide for the Incorporation of the Malawi Red Cross Society and for Matters Incidental Thereto and Connected Therewith, 16 February 1968, Laws of Malawi, Vol. III, Cap. 18:09, published in Government Gazette Notice, No. 51, 16 February 1968, pp. 1–4.

Malaysia

Geneva Conventions Act (1962)

An Act to enable effect to be given to certain international conventions done at Geneva on the twelfth day of August, nineteen hundred and fortynine, and for purposes connected therewith, Laws of Malaysia, Act 512 of 1962, 16 April 1962, first published as Act No. 5 of 1962 of the Federation of Malaya, in Gazette, Vol. VI, No. 4, 16 April 1962, pp. 19-25.

Police Act (1967)

An Act relating to the organisation, discipline, powers and duties of the Royal Malaysian Police, Laws of Malaysia, Act 344 of 1967, published as revised up to 1 September 1988 in Gazette, 29 September 1988.

Armed Forces Act (1972)
An Act to amend and consolidate the law relating to the establishment, government and discipline of the armed forces of Malaysia, Laws of Malaysia, Act 77 of 1972, published in Gazette, 4 May 1972, as amended by Acts A 440, A 583 and A 974.
Internal Security Act (1972)
An Act to provide for the internal security of Malaysia, preventive detention, the prevention of subversion, the suppression of organised violence against persons and property in specified areas of Malaysia, and for matters incidental thereto, Laws of Malaysia, Act 82 of 1960, published in Gazette, No. 14, 6 July 1972; revised version of 1972, published in Gazette, 13 July 1972, pp. 9ff.
Official Secrets Act (1972)
An Act relating to the protection of official secrets, Laws of Malaysia, Act 88 of 1972, published in Gazette, No. 20, 28 September 1972.
Extradition Act (1992)
An Act relating to extradition of fugitive criminals, Laws of Malaysia, Act 479 of 1992, published in Gazette, No. 4, 20 February 1992, pp. 7–49.
Revised Penal Code (1997)
An Act relating to criminal offences, Laws of Malaysia, Act 574, published as revised up to 31 May 1997 in Gazette, 31 July 1997.
Anti-Personnel Mines Act (2000)
An Act to implement the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti–Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, Laws of Malaysia, Act 603 of 2000, 30 May 2000, published in Gazette, 15 June 2000, pp. 3–16.

Mali
Code of Military Justice (1995)
Loi No. 95 042/ANRM du 16 février 1995 portant Code de Justice Militaire au Mali, published in the Journal Officiel du Mali, No. 17, 15 September 1995, pp. 645–659.
Anti-Personnel Mines Order (2000)
Ordonnance No. 00-049/P-RM du 27 septembre 2000 portant mise en oeuvre de la Convention sur l'interdiction de l'emploi, du stockage, de la production et du transfert des mines antipersonnel et sur leur destruction, signée à Ottawa le 03 décembre 1997, published in the Journal Officiel du Mali, No. 32, 20 November 2000, pp. 1255–1257.
Penal Code (2001)
Loi No. 01-079 du 20 août 2001 portant Code pénal, published in the Journal Officiel Spécial du Mali, 1 February 2001, pp. 1–333.

Malta
Armed Forces Act as amended (1970)
Malta Armed Forces Act to make provisions for the raising and maintenance of armed forces in Malta and to provide for matters connected therewith or ancillary thereto, enacted by Act XXVII of 1970, 22 September 1970, Cap. 220 of the Laws of Malta, as amended by Act XXXV of 1974, Act LVIII of 1974, Act XIII of 1975, Legal Notice 148 of 1975, Act XVIII of 1976, Act XXII of 1976, Act XX of 1980, Act XIII of 1983, Act VIII of 1990, Act XV of 1990, Act XXIV of 1995, Act X of 2000 and Act XII of 2000.

Red Cross Society Act (1992)
An Act to make provision for the recognition of the Socjetà Maltija tas-Salib l-Ahmar – Malta Red Cross Society and for matters connected therewith, enacted by Act VI of 1992, 19 June 1992, Cap. 359 of the Laws of Malta, published in Suppliment tal-Gazzetta tal-Gvern ta' Malta, No. 15,618, 19 June 1992, pp. A 164–A 175.

Mauritius
Geneva Conventions Act (1970)
Geneva Conventions Act, RL3/37, 24 December 1970, published in Mauritius Laws 1996, Vol. 2, pp. 678–682.
Anti-Personnel Mines (Prohibition) Act (2001)
An Act to give effect to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti–Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, Act No. 1 of 2001, 10 April 2001, published in Legal Supplement to the Government Gazette of Mauritius, No. 40, 28 April 2001, pp. 1–5.

Mexico
Constitution (1917)
Constitución Política de los Estados Unidos Mexicanos, 31 January 1917, published in Diario Oficial de la Federación, 5 February 1917.
Penal Code as amended (1931)
Código Penal Federal, 13 August 1931, published in Diario Oficial de la Federación, 14 August 1931; updated version published as Código Penal Federal, edición 2000, published in Diario Oficial de la Federación, 12 June 2000, and in Código Penal Federal, Mexico, Editorial Porrúa (Colección Porrúa), 2000, 311 pp.
Code of Military Justice as amended (1933)
Código de Justicia Militar, 28 August 1933, published in Diario Oficial de la Federación, 31 August 1933; updated version published as Código de Justicia Militar (Tomo I), Mexico, Taller Autográfico (bajo la supervisión del Estado Mayor de la Defensa Nacional), 1996, 181 pp.
Decree on the Ratification of the Ottawa Convention (1998)
Decreto Promulgatorio de la Convención sobre la Prohibición del Empleo, Almacenamiento, Producción y Transferencia de Minas Antipersonal y sobre su Destrucción, hecha en Noruega, 10 June 1998, published in Diario Oficial de la Federación, 21 August 1998, pp. 2–9.

Moldova
Emblem Law (1999)
Law on the use and protection of the emblem of the Red Cross, adopted by the Parliament on 12 November 1999, published in Monitorul Oficial al Republicii Moldova, No. 145–148 (538–541), 23 December 1999, pp. 4–6.
Penal Code (2002)
Penal Code, adopted on 18 April 2002 under No. 985-XV, promulgated into Law by the Decree of the President No. 873-III on 6 September 2002, published in Monitorul Oficial al Republicii Moldova, No. 128-129, 13 September 2002, Article 1012 (the Presidential Decree is published under Article 1013).

Monaco
Emblem Law (1953)
Ordonnance Souveraine No. 828 du 12 novembre 1953 réglementant l'emploi de l'emblème de la Croix-Rouge, published in the Journal de Monaco, No. 5.016, 23 November 1953, p. 810.

Anti-Personnel Mines Order (1999)
Ordonnance Souveraine No. 14.123 du 30 août 1999 relative à l'application de la Convention des Nations Unies sur l'interdiction de l'emploi, du stockage, de la production et du transfert des mines antipersonnel et sur leur destruction, published in the Journal de Monaco, No. 7406, 3 September 1999, pp. 1237–1238.

Morocco
Code of Military Justice (1956)
Dahir du 10 novembre 1956 formant Code de justice militaire, published in the Bulletin officiel, 21 November 1956, pp. 1319ff.
Emblem Law (1958)
Dahir No. 1-58-256 du 29 octobre 1958 relatif à l'emploi de l'emblème du Croissant-Rouge, published in the Bulletin officiel, No. 2405, 5 December 1958, p. 1968.

Mozambique
Law on Criminal Punishment (1983)
Lei No. 5/83, Determina que seja aplicada a pena de chicotada como medida punitiva e educativa aos autores, cúmplices e encobridores de vários crimes, consumados, frustrados ou tentados, 31 March 1983, published in Boletim da República, No. 13, Supplement, pp. 26 and 26(2).
Military Criminal Law (1987)
Lei dos Crimes Militares No. 17/87, 21 December 1987, published in Boletim da República, No. 50, 6th Supplement, 21 December 1987, pp. 418(19)–418(31).

Myanmar
Defence Services Act (1959)
Defence Services Act, Act No. XLIII of 1959, 29 September 1959, published in Burma Gazette, 29 September 1959, Part I, pp. 1899ff.; amended by Defence Services (Amendment) Act, Act No. 23/1960, 5 October 1960, Defence Services (Amendment) Act, Act No. 39/1961, 1 July 1961, Defence Services (Amendment) Law, Act No. 11/1962, 20 June 1962 and Defence Services (Amendment) Law, Act No. 13/1989, 10 May 1985.

Namibia
Criminal Procedure Act (1977)
Criminal Procedure Act, Act No. 51, 1977, assented to on 21 April 1977 by the Parliament of South Africa (as amended), published in South African Government Gazette, 248 pp.
Constitution (1990)
The Constitution of the Republic of Namibia, adopted on 9 February 1990, published in Government Gazette of the Republic of Namibia, No. 2, 21 March 1990, 80 pp.

Netherlands
Penal Code as amended (1881)
Wet van 3 maart 1881 tot vaststelling van een Wetboek van Strafrecht (Law of 3 March 1881), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 35, 1 september 1886, pp. 1–124, as amended by Wet van 10 maart 1984 tot herziening van bepalingen van het Wetboek van Strafrecht en van enkele andere wetten in verband met de indeling van strafbare feiten in geldboetecategorieën (Wet indeling geldboetecategorieën) (Law of 10 March 1984), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 91, 10 March 1984, entry into force 1 May 1984, pp. 1–25.

Extraordinary Penal Law Decree as amended (1943)

Besluit Buitengewoon Strafrecht (Extraordinary Penal Law Decree of 22 December 1943), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. D.61, 22 December 1943, pp. 1–10, entry into force: 4 September 1944, as amended by Besluit van 27 juni 1947, houdende nadere voorzieningen met betrekking tot de bijzondere rechtspleging, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. H.206, 27 June 1947, pp. 1–20, and Wet van 10 juli 1947, houdende voorziening met betrekking tot de berechting van personen die in dienst bij of van den vijand zich hebben schuldig gemaakt aan oorlogsmisdrijven tegen de menselijkheid, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. H.233, 10 July 1947, pp. 1–2.

Decree instituting the Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes (1945)

Besluit van 29 mei 1945, houdende vaststelling van het besluit opsporing oorlogsmisdrijven (Decree instituting the Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes of 29 May 1945), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. F. 85, 29 May 1945, pp. 1–4.

Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946)

Begripsomschrijving oorlogsmisdrijven 1946 (Definition of War Crimes Decree of 1946), published in Netherlands East Indies Statute Book Decree No. 44 of 1946, 1 June 1946, pp. 1–3.

Criminal Law in Wartime Act as amended (1952)

Wet Oorlogsstrafrecht, Wet van 10 juli 1952, houdende vaststelling van de Wet Oorlogsstrafrecht alsmede van enige daarmede verband houdende wijzigingen in het Wetboek van Strafrecht, het Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht en de Invoeringswet Militair Straf- en Tuchtrecht, as amended by Wet Oorlogsstrafrecht, Wet van 14 juni 1990 tot wijziging van het Wetboek van Strafrecht, de Dienstplicht, de Wet gewetensbezwaren militaire dienst, de Militaire Ambtenarenwet 1931, het Besluit Buitengewoon Strafrecht, de Wet van 10 juli 1947 (stb H.233) en de Wet Oorlogsstrafrecht in verband met de herziening van het militair straf- en tuchtrecht en ter afschaffing van de doodstraf, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 369, 14 June 1990, pp. 1–5, by the Wet van 14 juni 1990 tot wijziging van de Wet op de rechterlijke organisatie, de Wet Oorlogsstrafrecht en de Noodwet rechtspleging, in verband met de nieuwe regels inzake de militaire strafrechtspraak, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 372, pp. 1–2, and by the International Crimes Act (2003).

Act on the Surrender of Persons Suspected of War Crimes as amended (1954)

Wet van 19 mei 1954 tot overlevering inzake oorlogsmisdrijven (Law of 19 May 1954), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 215, 19 May 1954, pp. 560–561, entry into force: 3 February 1955, as amended by the International Crimes Act (2003).

Import and Export Act (1962)
(In- en uitvoerwet) In- en Uitvoerwet van 5 juli 1962, houdende een regeling op het gebied van de invoer en de uitvoer van goederen Wet 1962 (Import and Export Act of 1962), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 295, 5 July 1962, pp. 741–744, entry into force: 1 January 1963.

Military Criminal Code as amended (1964)
Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht, Wet van 27 april 1903, tot vaststelling van een Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrjk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 111, 1 January 1923, pp. 1–46, entry into force: 27 April 1903; Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht van 1964 (Military Criminal Code of 9 January 1964) as amended by Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht gewijzigd bij de wetten van 9 januari 1964, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 9, 9 January 1964, pp. 73–85, as amended by Rijkswet van 14 juni 1990 tot wijziging van het Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht in verband met de herziening van het militair tuchtrecht en ter afschaffing van de doodstraf, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 368, 14 June 1990, pp. 1–24.

Population Evacuation Act (1988)
Wet Verplaatsing Bevolking van 1988 (Population Evacuation Act of 1988), Wet van 4 februari 1988 tot wijziging van een aantal wetten in verband met het vervallen van artikel 201, vierde lid, van de Grondwet naar de tekst van 1972, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 21, 4 February 1988, pp. 1–6.

Military Discipline Act (1990)
Rijkswet van 14 juni 1990 tot herziening van het militair tuchtrecht (Military Discipline Act), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 367, 14 June 1990, pp. 1–21, entry into force: 1 January 1991, Besluit van 30 november 1990, regelende de inwerkingtreding van de Wet militair tuchtrecht, de Wet militaire strafrechtspraak, de Rijkswet van 14 juni 1990 tot wijziging van het Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht in verband met de herziening van het militair tuchtrecht en ter afschaffing van de doodstraf (Stb 368) en de Rijkswet van 14 juni 1990 tot wijziging van het Wetboek van Militair Strafrecht in verband met de nieuwe regels inzake de militaire strafrechtspraak, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), 30 November 1990, pp. 1–2.

Act on the Establishment of the ICTY (1994)
Wet tot instelling van het Internationaal Tribunaal voor vervolging van personen aansprakelijk voor ernstige schendingen van het internationaal humanitair recht op het grondgebied van het voormalige Joegoslavië sedert 1991 (Act of 21 April 1994 containing provisions relating to the establishment of the International Tribunal for the prosecution of persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 308, 21 April 1994, pp. 1–5, entry into force: 4 May 1994.

Chemical Weapons Act (1995)
Uitvoeringswet verdrag chemische wapens, Wet van 8 juni 1995, houdende regels betreffende de uitvoering van het Verdrag tot verbod van de ontwikkeling, de produktie, de aanleg van voorraden en het gebruik van chemische wapens en inzake de vernietiging van deze wapens, ofwel de Uitvoeringswet verdrag chemische wapens, (Law of 8 June 1995), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 338, 4 July 1995, pp. 1–9, entry into force: 30 April 1997, Besluit van 22 april 1997 tot vaststelling van het tijdstip van inwerkingtreding van de Uitvoeringswet Verdrag chemische wapens en van het Uitvoeringsbesluit Verdrag chemische wapens, published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 181, 29 April 1997, pp. 1–18, entry into force: 30 April 1997.

ICC Implementation Act (2002)
Rijkswet van 20 juni 2002 tot uitvoering van het Statuut van het Internationaal Strafhof met betrekking tot de samenwerking met en bijstand aan het Internationaal Strafhof en de tenuitvoerlegging van zijn vonnissen (Uitvoeringswet Internationaal Strafhof) (Act of 20 June 2002 to implement the Statute of the International Criminal Court in relation to cooperation with and the provision of assistance to the International Criminal Court and the enforcement of its decisions) (International Criminal Court Implementation Act)), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 314, 27 June 2002, pp. 1–25, entry into force: 1 July 2002.

International Crimes Act (2003)
Wet van 19 juni 2003, houdende regels met betrekking tot ernstige schendingen van het internationaal humanitair recht (Wet internationale misdrijven) (Act of 19 June 2003 containing rules concerning serious violations of international humanitarian law (International Crimes Act)), published in Staatsblad van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden (Statute Book of the Kingdom of Netherlands), No. 270, 2003, pp. 1–13, entry into force: 1 October 2003.

New Zealand

Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958)
An Act to enable effect to be given to certain International Conventions done at Geneva on the twelfth day of August, nineteen hundred and forty-nine, and for purposes connected therewith, Act No. 19 of 1958, 18 September 1958, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 1958, Vol. 11, pp. 85–219 (also applicable to the Cook Islands, Niue and Samoa), amended by the Act to amend the Geneva Conventions Act, Act No. 144 of 1987, 10 July 1987, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 1987, Vol. 4, printed under the authority of the New Zealand Government by V. R. Ward, Government Printer, Wellington, 1989, pp. 2149–2206.

Armed Forces Discipline Act (1971)
An Act to consolidate and amend certain enactments of the General Assembly of New Zealand and the Parliament of the United Kingdom relating to the discipline of and the administration of justice within those forces, Act No. 53 of 1971, 12 November 1971, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 1971, Vol. 23, pp. 33–212, as amended by Act No. 13 of 1976, Act No. 37 of 1980, Act No. 48 of 1981, Act No. 199 of 1985, Act No. 89 of 1988, Act No. 176 of 1988, Act No. 34 of 1997, Act No. 27 of 1998, Act No. 28 of 1999 and Act No. 55 of 2001.

Disarmament Act (1987)

An Act to establish in New Zealand a Nuclear Free Zone, to promote and encourage an active and effective contribution by New Zealand to the essential process of disarmament and international arms control, and to implement in New Zealand the following treaties:

(a) The South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty of 6 August 1985 (the text of which is set out in the First Schedule to this Act);
(b) The Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, in Outer Space and Under Water of 5 August 1963 (the text of which is set out in the Second Schedule to this Act);
(c) The Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of 1 July 1968 (the text of which is set out in the Third Schedule of this Act);
(d) The Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and Other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-bed and the Ocean floor and in the Subsoil Thereof of 11 February 1971 (the text of which is set out in the Fourth Schedule to this Act);
(e) The Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on their Destruction of 10 April 1972 (the text of which is set out in the Fifth Schedule to this Act).

Act No. 86 of 1987, 8 June 1987, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 1987, Vol. 2, printed under the authority of the New Zealand Government by V. R. Ward, Government Printer, Wellington, 1989, pp. 940–976.

International War Crimes Act (1995)

An Act to provide for New Zealand to assist –

(a) The International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991; and
(b) The International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Genocide and Other Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for genocide and other such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring States, between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994; and
(c) Other ad hoc tribunals that may be established by the Security Council of the United Nations under chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations for the prosecution of violations of international humanitarian law – in the performance of their functions, Act No. 27 of 1995, 9 June 1995, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 1995, Vol. 41, pp. 577–627.

Chemical Weapons Act (1996)

An Act to implement in the law of New Zealand the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction, Act No. 37 of 1996, 24 June 1996, published in The Statutes of New Zealand, 1996, Vol. 2, pp. 1044–1182.

Crimes (Internationally Protected Persons and Hostages) Amendment Act (1998)
Crimes (Internationally Protected Persons and Hostages) Amendment Act, Act No. 36 of 1998, 2 December 1998, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 1998, Vol. 41, pp. 343–359.
Anti-Personnel Mines Act (1998)
An Act to implement in the law of New Zealand the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, Act No. 111 of 1998, 8 December 1998, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 1998, Vol. 3, pp. 1808–1836.
International Crimes and ICC Act (2000)
International Crimes and International Criminal Court Act 2000, Act No. 26 of 2000, 6 September 2000, published in The Statutes of New Zealand 2000, Vol. 1, pp. 589–797.

Nicaragua
Military Penal Law (1980)
Ley Provisional de los Delitos Militares, Decreto No. 600, 12 December 1980, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, No. 296, 23 December 1980, pp. 2901–2910.
Constitution (1987)
Constitución Política, adopted by the National Assembly at Managua on 9 January 1987, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, Year XCI, No. 5, 9 January 1987, pp. 33–62; amended by Ley No. 192, Ley de Reforma Parcial a la Constitución Política de la República de Nicaragua, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, Year XCVIII, No. 124, 4 July 1995, pp. 2405–2423.
Military Penal Code (1996)
Código Penal Militar, 1 January 1996.
Revised Penal Code (1997)
Código Penal de Nicaragua, 16 January 1974, published as revised in Código Penal de Nicaragua Comentado, Revisado y Actualizado, por Sergio J. Cuarezma Terán, Editorial Hispamer (Colección Textos Jurídicos), Managua, 1998, 339 pp.
Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines (1999) Ley No. 321 de prohibición para la producción, compra, venta, importación, exportación, tránsito, utilización y posesión de minas terrestres antipersonales, 24 November 1999, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, Year CIV, No. 8, 12 January 2000, pp. 169–170.
Draft Penal Code (1999)
Proyecto de Código Penal de la República de Nicaragua, Comisión de Justicia de la Asemblea Nacional, 24 de noviembre de 1999.
Emblem Law (2002)
Ley No. 418, Ley de protección y uso del nombre y del emblema de la Cruz Roja, 26 February 2002, published in La Gaceta, Diario Oficial, Year CVI, No. 57, 22 March 2002, pp. 1995–1998.

Niger
Penal Code as amended (1961)
Loi No. 61-027 du 15 juillet 1961 portant institution du Code Pénal, published in the Journal officiel spécial, No. 7, 15 November 1961, pp. 1–99, as amended by the Loi No. 2003-025 du 13 juin 2003 modifiant la loi No. 61-027 du 15 juillet 1961 portant institution du Code Pénal.

Nigeria

Geneva Conventions Act (1960)

An Act to enable effect to be given in the Federal Republic of Nigeria to certain international conventions done at Geneva on the twelfth day of August, nineteen hundred and forty-nine and for purposes connected therewith, Act No. 54 of 30 September 1960, published in Laws of the Federation of Nigeria, Revised Edition, 1990, printed by the Grosvenor Press (Portsmouth) Limited, Vol. IX, CAP. 162, pp. 6265–6280.

Army Act (1960)

An Act to consolidate and amend the law as to the establishment, government and discipline of the Nigerian Army and its reserves and to provide for appeals from courts-martial and purposes connected therewith and incidental thereto, Act No. 26 of 1 October 1960, published in Laws of the Federation of Nigeria, Revised Edition, 1990, printed by the Grosvenor Press (Portsmouth) Limited, Vol. XVIII, CAP. 294, pp. 11401–11546.

Revised Red Cross Society Act (1990)

The Nigerian Red Cross Society Act, published in Laws of the Federation of Nigeria, Revised Edition, 1990, printed by the Grosvenor Press (Portsmouth) Limited, CAP. 324, pp. 12033–12039.

Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended (1993)

The Armed Forces Decree 105 of 1993, as amended in 1994.

Norway

Penal Code (1902)

General Civil Penal Code of 1902.

Military Penal Code as amended (1902)

Militaer Straffelov (Military Penal Act), Act No. 13 of 22 May 1902, published in Norwegian Law Journal, Volume I, Law and central Regulations (Norsk Lovtidend, 1ste avdeling, lover og sentrale forskrifter).

Act on the Punishment of Foreign War Criminals (1946)

Act No. 14 of 13 December 1946 on the Punishment of Foreign War Criminals, published in Norwegian Law Journal, Volume I, Law and central Regulations (Norsk Lovtidend, 1ste avdeling, lover og sentrale forskrifter), 1946, pp. 753–754.

Revised Penal Code (1958)

Revised Penal Code, 1958.

Chemical Weapons Act (1994)

Act No. 10 of 6 May 1994, published in Norwegian Law Journal, Volume I, Law and central Regulations (Norsk Lovtidend, 1ste avdeling, lover og sentrale forskrifter), 1994, pp. 566–567.

Act on the Incorporation of UN Resolutions on International Tribunals (1994)

Act No. 38 of 24 June 1994 relating to the incorporation into Norwegian law of the UN Security Council resolutions on the establishment of international tribunals for crimes committed in the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, Published in Norwegian Law Journal, Volume I, Law and central Regulations (Norsk Lovtidend, 1ste avdeling, lover og sentrale forskrifter), 1998, pp. 802–803.

Anti-Personnel Mines Act (1998)
An Act relating to the implementation of the Convention on the prohibition of the use, stockpiling, production and transfer of anti-personnel mines and on their destruction, Act No. 54 of 17 July 1998.

ICC Act (2001)
Act No. 65 of 15 June 2001 relating to the implementation of the Statute of the International Criminal Court of 17 July 1998 (the Rome Statute) in Norwegian Law.

Pakistan

Prisons Act (1894)
An Act to amend the law relating to Prisons, Act No. IX of 1894, 22 March 1894, printed in The Pakistan Code, Vol. 3 (1882–1897) pp. 449–472, published by, Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Law & Parliamentary Affairs (Law Division).

Official Secrets Act (1923)
An Act to consolidate and amend the law in Pakistan relating to official secrets, Act No. XIX of 1923, 2 April 1923, printed in The Pakistan Code, Vol. 7 (1920–1923) pp. 471–485, published by Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Law & Parliamentary Affairs (Law Division).

Army Act (1952)
The Pakistan Army Act, Act No. XXXIX of 1955, 1 April 1955, printed in The Pakistan Code, Vol. 11 (1947–1952) pp. 381–457, published by Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Law & Parliamentary Affairs (Law Division).

Air Force Act (1953)
The Pakistan Air Force Act, Act VI of 1953, 23 March 1958, printed in The Pakistan Code, Vol. 12 (1953–1957) pp. 26–102, published by Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Law & Parliamentary Affairs (Law Division).

Public Order Ordinance (1958)
An Ordinance to prohibit the wearing of uniforms in connection with political purposes and the maintenance by private persons of associations of a military or semi-military character, and matters connected therewith, Ordinance No. XV of 1958, 19 September 1958, printed in The Pakistan Code, Vol. 13 (1958–1960) pp. 186–201, published by Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Law & Parliamentary Affairs (Law Division).

Frontier Corps Ordinance (1959)
An Ordinance to consolidate and amend the law relating to the regulation of the Frontier Corps Unit, Ordinance No. XXVI of 1959, 29 April 1959, printed in The Pakistan Code, Vol. 13 (1958–1960) pp. 186–201 published by Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Law & Parliamentary Affairs (Law Division).

Navy Ordinance (1961)
An Ordinance to consolidate and amend the law relating to the government and discipline of the Pakistan Navy, Ordinance No. XXXV of 1961, 8 September 1961, printed in The Pakistan Code, Vol. 14 (1961–1962) pp. 209–28 published by Government of Pakistan, Ministry of Law & Parliamentary Affairs (Law Division).

Surrender of Illicit Arms Act (1991)
Surrender of Illicit Arms Act, Act XXI of 1991, 2 December 1991, published in Gazette of Pakistan, extraordinary, Part 1, 2 December 1991.

Panama

Chemical Weapons Law (1998)

Ley No. 48 de 25 de julio de 1998.

Emblem Law (2001)

Ley No. 32 de 4 de julio de 2001 Que dicta disposiciones para la protección y el uso del emblema de la Cruz Roja y el de la Media Luna Roja, published in Gaceta Oficial, Year XCVII, No. 24,339, 6 July 2001, pp. 21–26.

Papua New Guinea

Geneva Conventions Act (1976)

An Act to give effect in Papua New Guinea, as far as possible, to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, published in Independent State of Papua New Guinea, Chapter No. 84, 1976, pp. 3–11.

Paraguay

Emblem Law (1928)

Ley de la Nación No. 993 Que prohibe el uso del nombre, distintivos y emblemas de la Cruz Roja del 6 de agosto de 1928, published in Diario Oficial, República del Paraguay, No. 1594, 9 August 1928, p. 3

Military Penal Code (1980)

Ley No. 843/80, Código Penal Militar del 19 de diciembre de 1980.

Law on the Status of Military Personnel (1997)

Ley No. 1.115 del Estatuto del Personal Militar del 26 de agosto de 1997, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República del Paraguay, No. 102 (bis), 27 August 1997, pp. 1–20.

Penal Code (1997)

Ley No. 1160/97, Código Penal de la República del Paraguay del 26 de noviembre de 1997, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República del Paraguay, No. 142 (bis), 1 December 1997, pp. 1–40.

Peru

Constitution (1979)

Constitución Política del Perú de 1979, adopted on 12 July 1980, promulgated on 28 July 1980, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 12067, 30 July 1980, pp. 3–7.

Code of Military Justice (1980)

Decreto-Ley No. 23.214, Adecuan Código de Justicia Militar a la nueva Constitución Política, promulgated on 19 July 1980, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 12063, 26 July 1980, pp. 1–16.

Law on Terrorism (1987)

Ley No. 24.651, Introduce en el Libro Segundo del Código Penal la sección octava "A" denominada "De los Delitos del Terrorismo", adopted on 6 March 1987, promulgated on 19 March 1987, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 2331, 20 March 1987, pp. 53043–53045.

Penal Code (1988)

Ley No. 24.953, Modifican varios artículos de la sección octava "A" del libro II del Código Penal, adopted on 25 November 1988, promulgated on 7 December 1988, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 3026, 8 December 1988, pp. 70547–70548.

Law on the Mitigation, Exemption or Remission of Punishment for Terrorism (1989)

Ley No. 25.103, Establece reducción, exención o remisión de la pena, a la que podrán acogerse las personas que han participado o que se encuentren incursas en comisión de delitos de terrorismo, adopted on 3 October 1989, promulgated on 4 October 1989, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 3339, 5 October 1989, pp. 78195–78197.

Penal Code as amended (1991)

Decreto Legislativo No. 635, Promulgan mediante Decreto Legislativo el Código Penal, promulgated on 3 April 1991, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 3902, 8 April 1991, Special Separate Number, amended by Ley No. 26.926, Ley que modifica diversos artículos del Código Penal e incorpora el Título XIV-A referido a los delitos contra la humanidad, adopted on 30 January 1998, promulgated on 19 February 1998, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 6450, 21 February 1998, pp. 157575–157576.

Decree on Terrorism (1991)

Decreto Legislativo No. 748, Modifican norme que establece beneficios para los incursos en delito de terrorismo y que posteriormente se arrepientan, promulgated on 8 November 1991, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 4131, 13 November 1991, pp. 101788–101789.

Law on Self-Defence Committees (1991)

Decreto Legislativo No. 741, Reconocen a Comités de Autodefensa como organizaciones de la población para desarrollar actividades de autodefensa de su comunidad, promulgated on 8 November 1991, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 4130, 12 November 1991, pp. 101687–101688, amended by Ley No. 26.600, Modifica el Decreto Legislativo No. 741 "Sustituyen el vocablo narcotráfico por la frase tráfico ilícito de drogas en diversas leyes y decretos, adopted on 30 April 1996, promulgated on 8 May 1996, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 5788, 9 May 1996, p. 139429.

Decree-Law on the Conditions for Mitigation, Exemption, Remission or Reduction of Punishment for Terrorism (1992)

Decreto-Ley No. 25.499, Establecen los términos dentro de los cuales se consideran los beneficios de reducción, exención, remisión o atenuación de la pena, a incursos en la comisión de terrorismo, promulgated on 12 May 1992, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 4320, 16 May 1992, pp. 106903–106904.

Decree on Repentance for Terrorism (1993)

Decreto Supremo No. 015-93-JUS, Aprueba el Reglamento de la Ley del Arrepentimiento sobre los delitos de Terrorismo, promulgated on 6 May 1993, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 4690, 8 May 1993, pp. 114732–114735.

Constitution (1993)

Constitución Política del Perú de 1993, ratified by referendum on 31 October 1993, promulgated on 29 December 1993, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 17002, 30 December 1993, Special Edition.

Law on Chemical Weapons (1996)

Ley No. 26.672, Constituyen el Consejo Nacional para la Prohibición de las Armas Químicas CONAPAQ, adopted on 7 October 1996, promulgated on 18 October 1996, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 5954, 20 October 1996, p. 143657.

Law on Amnesty for Retired Officers of the Armed Forces (1996)
Ley No. 26.699, Otorga amnistía a oficiales de las fuerzas armadas en situación de retiro que se encuentren procesados en el Fuero Militar por diversos delitos, adopted and promulgated on 5 December 1996, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 6001, 6 December 1996, p. 144845.
Law on Amnesty for Military and Civil Personnel (1996)
Ley No. 26.700, Otorga amnistía a personal militar y civil que se encuentre procesado con los Fueros Común y Militar por la comisión de hechos conexos o vinculados a diversos delitos, adopted and promulgated on 5 December 1996, published in the Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 6001, 6 December 1996, pp. 144845–144846.
Law against the Possession of War Weapons (1998)
Decreto Legislativo No. 898, Ley contra la posesión de armas de guerra, promulgated on 26 May 1998, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 6545, 27 May 1998, p. 160163.
Order against the Possession of War Weapons (1998)
Decreto Supremo No. 022-98-PCM, Reglamento que norma la entrega de Armas de Guerra, promulgated on 28 May 1998, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 6547, 29 May 1998, pp. 160220–160221.
Law on Compulsory Human Rights Education (2002)
Ley No. 27.741, Ley que establece la política educativa en materia de derechos humanos y crea un plan nacional para su difusión y enseñenza, adopted on 9 May 2002, promulgated on 28 May 2002, published in Diario Oficial "El Peruano", No. 8001, 29 May 2002, p. 223774.

Philippines
Revised Penal Code (1930)
Act No. 3815, An Act Revising the Penal Code and Other Penal Laws, 8 December 1930, published in Public Laws, Volume 26, Act Nos. 3673–3822, June 1930–February 1931, Second Set, pp. 406–492.
Articles of War (1938)
Commonwealth Act No. 408, An Act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defence by establishing a system of military justice for persons subject to military law, 14 September 1938, published in Philippine Laws, Statutes, etc., Public Laws of the Commonwealth, Act Nos. 146–142, Annotated, Vol. 2, pp. 781–818 (by Jacobo and Sons).
Diplomatic Immunities Act (1946)
Republic Act No. 75 of 21 October 1946, An Act to penalize acts which would impair the proper observance by the Republic and inhabitants of the Philippines of the immunities, rights, and privileges of duly accredited foreign diplomatic and consular agents in the Philippines, published in Official Gazette, Special November Issue, No. 11-A, Vol. 42, November 1946, pp. 163–165.
War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947)
Executing Order No. 68 (1947), establishing a National War Crimes Office and prescribing rules and regulations governing trial of accused war criminals, 29 July 1947, published in Official Gazette, No. 9, Vol. 43, September 1947, pp. 3547–3553.
Decree on the Constitution of the Integrated National Police (1975)
Presidential Decree No. 765 providing for the constitution of the integrated national police and for other purposes, 8 August 1975, published in Official Gazette, No. 19, Vol. 79, May 1983, pp. 2695–2699.

Red Cross Society Decree (1979)
Presidential Decree No. 1643 amending Republic Act No. 95, as amended by Republic Act No. 855 and Republic Act No. 6373 and further amended by Presidential Decree No. 1264, An Act to Incorporate the Philippine National Red Cross, 1 October 1979, published in Official Gazette, No. 48, Vol. 75, November 1979, pp. 9629–9630.

Constitution (1987)
The 1987 Constitution of the Republic of the Philippines, adopted on 15 October 1986 and ratified on 7 February 1987, Proclamation No. 58 proclaiming the ratification of the Constitution of the Republic of the Philippines adopted by the Constitutional Commission of 1986, including the Ordinance appended thereto, published in Official Gazette, No. 23, Vol. 83, June 1987, pp. 2703 –2705.

Act on Child Protection (1992)
Republic Act No. 7610 providing for stronger deterrence and special protection against child abuse, exploitation and discrimination, providing penalties for its violation, and for other purposes, 17 June 1992, published in Official Gazette, No. 30, Vol. 88, July 1992, pp. 4851–4865.

Act on Arrest, Detention and Investigation (1992)
Republic Act No. 7438 defining certain rights of persons arrested, detained or under custodial investigation as well as the duties of the arresting, detaining and investigating officers, and providing penalties for violations thereof, 27 April 1992, published in Official Gazette, No. 25, Vol. 88, April 1992, pp. 3880–3883.

Poland

Decree on the Punishment of Fascist-Hitlerite Criminals as amended (1944)
Decree concerning the punishment of Fascist-Hitlerite criminals guilty of murder and ill-treatment of the civilian population and of prisoners of war, and the punishment of traitors to the Polish nation, promulgated by the Polish Committee of National Liberation on 31 August 1944, published in Official Gazette, No. 4, 13 September 1944, pp. 17–18, amended by the Decree of 16 February 1945, published in Official Gazette, No. 7, 1945, p. 38 and the Decree of 10 December 1946, published in Official Gazette, No. 69, 1946, pp. 865–866, both Decrees enacted by the Council of Ministers of the Polish Provisional Government and approved by the National State Council. The consolidated text of the Decree is contained in the Schedule to the Proclamation of the Minister of Justice, 11 December 1946, published in Official Gazette, No. 69, item 377.

Red Cross Society Law (1964)
Law of 16 November 1964 on the Polish Red Cross, published in Journal of Laws of the Polish People's Republic, No. 41, 21 November 1964, item No. 276, pp. 413–414.

Penal Code (1997)
Penal Code, Law of 6 June 1997, published in Journal of Laws of the Republic of Poland, No. 88, 2 August 1997, item No. 553, pp. 2677–2716.

Portugal

Penal Code (1996)
Código Penal, Decreto-lei No. 48/95, publicado em 15/03/1995, em Diàrio da Repùblica No. 63, pp. 1350–1416.

Law on International Judicial Cooperation in Criminal Matters as amended (1999)
Lei No. 144/99, publicada em 31/08/1999, no Diàrio da Repùblica No. 203 (p. 6012), revista pela Lei No. 104/2001, publicada em 25/08/2001 no Diàrio da Repùblica No. 197, pp. 5456–5457.

Romania
Law on the Punishment of War Criminals (1945)
Law to pursue and punish war criminals and profiteers, 1945, published in Official Gazette, No. 17, 21 January 1945, pp. 4115–4118.
Penal Code (1968)
Penal Code, adopted on 21 June 1968, published in Monitorul Oficial al Romêniei (Official Monitor), No. 79 and 79 bis, 21 June 1968, last republished in Monitorul Oficial al Romêniei (Official Monitor), No. 65, Part I, 16 April 1997, pp. 2–46.
Red Cross Society Law (1995)
Law on the National Red Cross Society of Romania, adopted on 20 December 1995, published in Monitorul Oficial al Romêniei (Official Monitor), No. 303, 30 December 1995, pp. 9–11.
Law on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (1997)
Law No. 56/1997 to implement the provisions of the Convention on the prohibitions of the development, production, stockpiling and use of chemical weapons and on their destruction, enacted by Parliament on 24 March 1997 and promulgated by Decree No. 148 of the President of Romania on 15 April 1997, published in Monitorul Oficial al Romêniei (Official Monitor), No. 67, Part I, 17 April 1997, pp. 1–12.
Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1998)
Law No. 159/1998 regarding the cooperation of the Romanian authorities with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991, enacted by Parliament in July 1998 and promulgated by Decree No. 285 of 27 July 1998, published in Monitorul Oficial al Romêniei (Official Monitor), Part I, No. 283, 31 July 1998, pp. 6–7.

Russia
Decree on the Punishment of War Criminals (1965)
Ukaz Prezidiuma Verkhovnogo Soveta SSR ot 4 marta 1965 goda "O nakazanii lits, vinovnikh v prestupleniykh protiv mira i chelovechestva o voennikh prestupleniyakh, nezavisimo ot vremeni soversheniya prestupleniy" (Decree of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR "On the Punishment of Individuals Guilty of Crimes against Peace and Humanity and of War Crimes, Irrespective of the Time of the Crime"), 4 March 1965, published in Sbornik dogovorov, soglasheniy, konvetsiy, zaklyuchennykh SSSR s inostrannymi gosudarstvami (A Collection of Treaties, Agreements and Conventions the USSR Concluded with Foreign States), Issue XXIV, Izdatel'stvo Mezhdunarodnye Otnosheniya (International Relations Publishers), 1971, p. 552.
Ordinance regarding Ratification of the Additional Protocols (1989)
Postanovlenie 330-I Verkhovnogo Soveta SSSR o ratifikacii Dopolnitel'nogo Protokola k Zhenevskim konvenciyam ot 12 avgusta 1949 gods otnosyashikhsya k zashite zhertv mezhdunarodnykh vooruzhennykh konfliktov (Protokol I) i Dopolnitel'nogo Protokola k Zhenevskim konvenciyam ot 12 avgusta 1949 goda otnosyashikhsya k zashite zhertv nemezhdunarordnykh vooruzhennykh konfliktov (Protokol II) (Ordinance No. 330-I of the Supreme Soviet of the USSR on the Ratification of the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of August 12, 1949, and Relating to the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts (Protocol I), and the Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of August 12, 1949, and Relating to the Protection of Victims of Non-International Armed Conflicts (Protocol II)), 4 August 1989, published in Vedomosti S'ezda narodnikh deputatov SSSR i Verkhovnogo Soveta SSSR, No. 9, 1989, pp. 225ff.

Order on the Publication of the Geneva Conventions and Protocols (1990)
Prikaz Ministra oborony SSSR .75, "Ob ob'yavlenii Zhenevskikh konvenciy o zashite zhertv voyny ot 12 avgusta 1949 goda i Dopolnitel'nykh protokolov k nim" (Soviet Minister of Defence Order No. 75 "On the announcement of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 relative to the protection of victims of war and their Additional Protocols"), 16 February 1990, published in special edition by the Publishin Department of the Ministry of Defence (hard cover), 1990.

Law on Rehabilitation of the Repressed Nations (1991)
RSFSR Zakon o reabilitacii repressirovanikh narodov (RSFSR Law on Rehabilitation of the Repressed Nations), No. 1107-1, 26 April 1991, promulgated in Vedomosti SND i VS RSFSR, No. 18, 2 May 1991, pp. 572ff.

Law on Rehabilitation of Victims of Political Persecutions as amended (1991)
Zakon RF o reabilitacii zhertv politicheskikh represiy (Law of the Russian Federation on Rehabilitation of Victims of Political Persecution), No. 1761-1, 18 October 1991, promulgated in Vedomosti SND i VS RSFSR, No. 44, 31 October 1991, pp. 1428ff.

Decree on the Law on Rehabilitation of the Repressed Nations in Relation to Cossacks (1992)
Ukaz Presidenta o meraks po realizacii zakona RF "O reabilitacii repressirovanikh narodov" v otnoshenii kazachestva (Presidential Decree on Implementation of the "Law on Rehabilitation of Repressed Nations" in Relation to the Cossacks), No. 632, 15 June 1992, promulgated in Vedomosti SND i VS RSFSR, No. 25, 25 June 1992, pp. 1429ff.

Constitution (1993)
Konstituciya Rossiyskoy Federacii (Constitution of the Russian Federation), 12 December 1993, promulgated in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 237, 25 December 1993.

Service Regulations of the Armed Forces (1993)
Ustav vnutrenney sluzhby Vooruzhennikh Sil RF (Interior Service Regulations of the Armed Forces of the Russian Federation), adopted by a Decree of the President of the Russian Federation, 14 December 1993, not published in the official gazette.

Resolution on Compensation for Persons Having Suffered Nazi Persecution (1994)
Postanovlenie Pravitel'stva RF ob utverzhdenii polozheniya ob usloviyakh i poryadke vyplaty kompensaciy licam, podvergshimsya nacistkim presledovaniyam (Resolution of the Government of the Russian Federation on Approval of Terms and Conditions for Compensation to Persons Having Suffered Nazi Persecution), No. 899, 2 August 1994, promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 15, 8 August 1994, pp. 1796ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 150, 9 August 1994.

Resolution on Return of Property and Compensation for Victims of Political Persecution (1994)

Postanovlenie Pravitel'stva RF ob utverzhdenii polozheniya o poryadke vozvrata grazhdanam nezakonno konfiskovannogo, iz'yatogo ili vyshedshego inym putem iz vladeniya v svyazi s politicheskimi repressiyami imushestva, vozmesheniya ego stoimosti ili vyplaty denezhnoy kompensacii (Resolution of the Government of the Russian Federation on Approval of Rules for Return of Property Unlawfully Confiscated or Otherwise Seized in Connection with Political Persecution and for Paying out Pecuniary or Other Compensation to Citizens), No. 926, 12 August 1994, promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 18, 29 August 1994, pp. 2082ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 160, 24 August 1994.

Civil Code (1994–1995)

Grazhdanskiy kodeks Rossiyskoy Federacii (chast' pervaya) (Civil Code of the Russian Federation (Part One)), No. 51-FZ, 30 November 1994: adopted by the State Duma of the Russian Federation on 21 October 1994, (latest edition of 15 May 2001), promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 32, 5 December 1994, pp. 3301ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 238–239, 8 December 1994; Grazhdanskiy kodeks Rossiyskoy Federacii (chast' vtoraya) Civil Code of the Russian Federation (Part Two)), No. 14-FZ, 26 January 1996: adopted by the State Duma of the Russian Federation on 22 December 1995, (latest edition of 17 December 2001), promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 5, 29 January 1996, pp. 410ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 23, 6 February 1996, No. 24, 7 February 1996, No. 25, 8 February 1996 and No. 27, 10 February 1996.

Statute on Civil Defence Troops (1996)

Voprosy grazhdanskoy oborony Rossiyskoy Federacii (vmeste s "Polozheniem o voyskakh grazhdanskoy oborony Rossiyskoy Federacii") (Regulations on Civil Defence Troops of the Russian Federation), enacted by Decree No. 784 of the President Russian Federation, 27 May 1996, promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 22, 27 May 1996, pp. 2671ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 112, 15 June 1996.

Criminal Code (1996)

Ugolovniy kodeks Rossiyskoy Federacii (Criminal Code of the Russian Federation), No. 63-FZ, 13 June 1996, adopted by the State Duma on 24 May 1996 and by the Federation Council on 5 June 1996, promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 25, 17 June 1996, pp. 2954ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 113, 18 June 1996, No. 114, 19 June 1996, No. 115, 20 June 1996 and No. 118, 25 June 1996.

Code of Criminal Procedure (1996)

Ugolovno-processual'niy kodeks RSFSR (Code of Criminal Procedure RSFSR), adopted by the Supreme Soviet of RSFSR, 27 October 1960, promulgated in Vedomosti VS RSFSR, No. 40, 1960, pp. 592ff., last edition from 30 July 1996.

Law on Removed Cultural Property (1997)

O kul'turnikh tsennostyakh, peremeshennikh v Soyuz SSR v rezul'tate vtoroy mirovoy voyny i nakhodyashikhsya na terrirorii Rossiyskoy Federacii (Law "On Cultural Property Removed to the USSR as a Result of World War II and Located in the Territory of the Russian Federation"), No. 64-FZ, 15 April 1998, adopted by the State Duma on 5 February 1997, promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 16, 20 April 1998, pp. 1799ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 77, 21 April 1998.

Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya (1997)

Postanolenie GD FS RF "ob ob'yavlenii amnistii v otnoshenii lic, sovershivshikh obshestvenno opasnye deyaniya v svyazi s vooruzhennym konfliktom v Chechenskoy Respublike", 1199-II GD (Law of the State Douma of the Federal Council of the Russian Federation "On the declaration of amnesty with respect to persons who committed socially dangerous acts in connection with the armed conflict in the Chechen Republic", No. 1199-II GD), 12 March 1997, promulgated in the Rossiyskaya Gazeta, No. 52, 15 March 1997, in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 11, 17 March 1997, pp. 1290ff. and in Vedomosti Federal'nogo Sobraniya RF, No. 9, 21 March 1997, pp. 452ff.

Law on the Execution of the Law on Amnesty for Acts Committed in the Context of the Conflict in Chechnya (1997)

O poryadke primeneniya postanovleniya Gosudarstvennoy Dumy Federal'nogo Sobraniya Rossiyskoy Federacii "Ob ob'yavlenii amnistii v otnoshenii lic, sovershivshikh obshestvenno opasnye deyaniya v svyazi s vooruzhennim konfliktom v Chechenskoy Respublike" (Law on the execution of the Law of the State Douma of the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation "On the declaration of amnesty with respect to persons who committed socially dangerous acts in connection with the armed conflict in the Chechen Republic"), No. 1200-II GD, 12 March 1997, published in Rossiyskaya Gazeta, No. 52, 15 March 97 and promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 11, 17 March 1997, pp. 1291ff. and Vedomosti Federal'nogo Sobraniya RF, No. 9, 21 March 1997, pp. 453ff.

Resolution on Compensation for Destruction of Property for Citizens Having Suffered from the Settling of the Crisis in Chechnya and Having Left Chechnya Irrevocably (1997)

Postanovlenie Pravitel'stva RF o pryadke vyplaty kompensaciy za utrachennoe zhil'e i/ili imushestvo grazhdanami, postradavshimi v resul'tate razresheniya krizisa v Chechenskoy Respublike i pokinuvshim ee bezvozvratno (Resolution of the Government of the Russian Federation or Rules for Paying out Compensation for Destroyed Living Premises and/or Property to the Citizens Having Suffered from the Settling of the Crisis in the Chechen Republic and having Left the Chechen Republic Irrevocably), No. 510, 30 April 1997, promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 20, 19 May 1997, pp. 2281ff. and in Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 92, 14 May 1997.

Law on Status of Members of Armed Forces as amended (1998)

Federal'niy zakon "O statuse voennosluzhashikh" (Federal Law on Status of Members of Armed Forces), No. 76-FZ, 27 May 1998, promulgated in Sobranie zakonodatelstva Rossiyskoy Federatsii, No. 22, 1 June 1998, pp. 2331ff. and Rossiyskaya gazeta, No. 104, 2 June 1998, as amended up to 28 June 2002.

Draft Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem (1998)

O Rossiyskom obshestve Krasnogo Kresta i ob ispol'zovanii nazvaniya i emblemy Krasnogo Kresta v Rossiyskoy Federacii (Draft Law on the Russian Red Cross Society and on the Use of the Name and the Emblem of the Red Cross in the Russian Federation), adopted by the State Duma on 30 September 1998, rejected by the Federation Council on 14 October 1998.

Rwanda

Red Cross Decree (1912)

Décret du 30 avril 1912, Mesures d'exécution prévue par la Convention de Genève – Emploi de l'emblème de la Croix rouge, published in the Bulletin Officiel Congo Belge, printed in Belgium, 1912, pp. 526–528, applicable to Rwanda by virtue of Décret du 10 juin 1929, published in the Bulletin Officiel Congo Belge, 1929, p. 716.

State of Emergency Decree (1959)

Décret du 20 octobre 1959 portant sur l'état d'exception, published in the Bulletin Officiel, 1959, pp. 2412ff., enforceable in Rwanda by virtue of Ordonnance du Rwanda-Uurundi (O.R.U. 221/109) du 10 mai 1960, published in the Bulletin Officiel du Rwanda-Urundi, 1960, p. 759.

Prison Order (1961)

Ordonnance No. 111/127 du 30 mai 1961 organisant le service pénitentiaire du Rwanda-Uurundi, published in the Bulletin Officiel du Rwanda-Urundi, 1961, pp. 951ff.

Penal Code (1977)

Décret-Loi No. 21/77 du 18 août 1977 instituant le Code pénal, published in the Journal Officiel de la République Rwandaise, Year 17, No. 13 bis, 1 July 1978, pp. 1–133.

Law on the Prosecution of the Crime of Genocide and Crimes against Humanity (1996)

Loi organique sur l'organisation des poursuites des infractions constitutives du crime de génocide ou de crimes contre l'humanité, commises à partir du 1er octobre 1990, Loi organique No. 8/96 du 30 août 1996 (Organic Law on the organization of prosecutions for offences constituting the crime of genocide or crimes against humanity committed since 1 October 1990, Organic Law No. 8/96 of 30 August 1996), published in the Journal Officiel de la République Rwandaise (Official Gazette of the Republic of Rwanda), Year 35, No. 17, 1 September 1996, pp. 14–25 (English), pp. 26–37 (French).

Law Setting up Gacaca Jurisdictions (2001)

Loi organique portant création des "Juridictions GACACA" et organisation des poursuites des infractions constitutives du crime de génocide ou des crimes contre l'humanité, commises entre le 1er octobre 1990 et le 31 décembre 1994, Loi organique No. 40/2000 du 26 janvier 2001, (Organic Law setting up "Gacaca Jurisdictions" and organizing prosecutions for offences constituting the crime of genocide or crimes against humanity committed between October 1, 1990 and December 31, 1994, Organic Law No. 40/2000 of 26 January 2001), published in the Journal Officiel de la République Rwandaise (Official Gazette of the Republic of Rwanda), Year 40, No. 6, 15 March 2001, pp. 33–65 (English), pp. 66–98 (French).

Saint Kitts and Nevis

Red Cross Society Act (1985)

An Act to provide for the constitution of the Saint Kitts and Nevis Red Cross Society and for matters connected therewith, Act No. 6 of 1985, 26 July 1985, published by the Government Printery, St. Kitts, W.I.

Samoa

Emblem Act (1993)

An Act to grant statutory protection against the use within Western Samoa of the name Red Cross and the distinctive emblem of the Red Cross by any person or body not authorised by the Red Cross Society, Act No. 13, 1993, 23 December 1993.

Senegal

Penal Code as amended (1965)

Loi No. 65-60 du 21 juillet 1965 portant Code pénal (crimes et délits), published in the Journal Officiel, No. 3767, 110th Year, 6 September 1965, pp. 1009ff.

Seychelles

Geneva Conventions Act (1985)

An Act to enable effect to be given to certain international conventions done at Geneva on the 12th August, 1949; and for connected purposes, Act 20 of 1985, 31 December 1985, published in Official Gazette, Supplement, 6 January 1986, pp. 119–127.

Singapore

Armed Forces Act as amended (1972)

An Act to provide for the raising, maintenance and discipline of the Singapore Armed Forces and for matters connected therewith, Act No. 7 of 1972, 15 June 1972, as amended by Singapore Armed Forces (Amendment) Act, Act No. 20 of 1975, 24 October 1975, Singapore Armed Forces (Amendment) Act, Act No. 17 of 1978, 28 April 1978, Singapore Armed Forces (Amendment) Act, Act No. 1 of 1991, 1 April 1991, Singapore Armed Forces (Amendment) Act, Act No. 1 of 1994, 1 May 1994, Singapore Armed Forces (Amendment No. 2) Act, Act No. 20 of 1994,1 December 1994, Pensions Fund Act, Act No. 8 of 1995, 1 April 1995, Singapore Armed Forces (Amendment) Act, Act No. 12 of 1998, 1 April 1998 and Singapore Armed Forces (Amendment) Act, Act No. 10 of 2000, 31 March 2000.

Geneva Conventions Act (1973)

An Act to enable effect to be given to certain international Conventions relative to the amelioration of the condition of the wounded and sick in armed forces in the field, the amelioration of the condition of the wounded and sick and shipwrecked members of armed forces at sea, the treatment of prisoners of war, and the protection of civilian persons in time of war, and for purposes connected therewith, Act No. 15 of 1973, assented to by the President on 28 March 1973, published in Republic of Singapore Government Gazette (Acts Supplement), 3 April 1973, pp. 151–160.

Red Cross Society Act (1973)

An Act to incorporate the Singapore Red Cross Society, Act No. 16 of 1973, assented to by the President on 28 March 1973, published in Republic of Singapore Government Gazette (Acts Supplement), 3 April 1973, pp. 285–289.

Chemical Weapons (Prohibition) Act (2000)

An Act to give effect to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction concluded at Paris on 13th January 1993, Act No. 17 of 2000, assented to by the President on 8 May 2000, published in Republic of Singapore Government Gazette (Acts Supplement), 2 June 2000, pp. 343–369.

Slovakia

Criminal Code as amended (1961)

Trestní zákon (Criminal Code), Act No. 140/1961 Coll. (Collection of Laws of the Czech Republic), 29 November 1961, as amended.

Law on the Red Cross Society and Emblem (1994)

Law No. 84/1994 Coll. (Collection of the Slovak Republic), Law of the National Council of the Sovak Republic on the Slovak Red Cross and on protection of the sign and name of the Red Cross, 17 March 1994.

Law on the Ratification of the Ottawa Convention (1999)

Law No. 121/1999 Coll. (Collection of the Slovak Republic), Law of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Slovak Republic on the ratification of the Mine Ban Treaty, 4 June 1999.

Slovenia

Red Cross Society Law (1993)

Zakon o rdecem krizu slovenije (Law on the Slovenian Red Cross), 26 January 1993, published in Uradni List Republike Slovenije (Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia), No. 7, 4 February 1993, pp. 274–278.

Penal Code (1994)

Kazenski zakonik (Penal Code), 29 September 1994, published in Uradni List Republike Slovenije (Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia), No. 63, 13 October 1994, pp. 3455–3503 and No. 23, 8 April 1999, pp. 2517–2521.

Chemical Weapons Law (1999)

Zakon o kemicnem orozju (ZKO) (Chemical Weapons Law), 28 April 1999, published in Uradni List Republike Slovenije (Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia), No. 36, 14 May 1999, pp. 4176–4179.

South Africa

Geneva Convention Notice (1915)

Geneva Convention Government Notice No. 937 of 1915, Prohibition under the Geneva Convention Act, 1911, of the Unauthorized use of the Red Cross Emblem, 3 September 1915, containing, as First Schedule, the Geneva Convention Act, 1911 (Union of South Africa), Order-in-Council, 1913, 12 August 1913, and, as Second Schedule, the Geneva Convention Act, 1911, An Act to make such amendments in the Law as necessary to enable certain reserved provisions of the Second Geneva Convention to be carried out into effect, 18 August 1911, published in Statutes of the Republic of South Africa – International Law, 3 September 1915, pp. 1–4.

Defence Act as amended (1957)

Act to provide for the defence of the Republic and for matters incidental thereto, Act No. 44 of 1957, assented to on 10 June 1957, published in Statutes of the Republic of South Africa – Defence, pp. 455–606, as amended by Defence Amendment Act, Act No. 72 of 1995, 6 October 1995, published in Government Gazette, No. 17678, 6 October 1995.

Code of Military Discipline as amended (1957)

Code of Military Discipline, First Schedule of Act No. 44 of 1957, assented to on 10 June 1957, published in Statutes of the Republic of South Africa – Defence, pp. 559–606.

Non-Proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction Act (1993)
Act to provide for control over weapons of mass destruction; and the establishment of a Council to control and manage matters relating to the proliferation of such weapons in the Republic; to determine its objects and functions; to prescribe the manner in which it is to be managed and controlled; and to provide for matters connected therewith, Act No. 87, 1993, assented to on 23 June 1993, published in Government Gazette, No. 14919, 2 July 1993, pp. 1–29.

Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act (1995)
Act to provide for the investigation and the establishment of as complete a picture as possible of the nature, causes and extent of gross violations of human rights committed during the period from 1 March 1960 to the cut-off date contemplated in the Constitution, within or outside the Republic, emanating from the conflicts of the past, and the fate or whereabouts of the victims of such violations; the granting of amnesty to persons who make full disclosure of all the relevant facts relating to acts associated with a political objective committed in the course of the conflicts of the past during the said period; affording victims an opportunity to relate the violations they suffered; the taking of measures aimed at the granting of reparation to, and the rehabilitation and the restoration of the human and civil dignity of, victims of violations of human rights; reporting to the Nation about such violations and victims; the making of recommendations aimed at the prevention of the commission of gross violations of human rights; and for the said purposes to provide for the establishment of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission, comprising a Committee on Human Rights Violations, a Committee on Amnesty and a Committee on Reparation and Rehabilitation; and to confer certain powers on, assign certain functions to and impose certain duties upon that Commission and those Committees; and to provide for matters connected therewith, Act No. 34 of 1995, assented to on 19 July 1995; as amended by the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Amendment Act, Act No. 87 of 1995, the Judicial Matters Amendment Act, Act No. 104 of 1996, the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Amendment Act, Act No. 18 of 1997, and the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Second Amendment Act, Act No. 84 of 1997.

Constitution (1996)
Constitution of the Republic of South Africa, Act 108 of 1996, 10 December 1996, published in Government Gazette, No. 17678, 18 December 1996, 147 pp., amended by Constitution of the Republic of South Africa Amendment Act, Act No. 35 of 1997, 28 August 1997, published in Government Gazette, No. 18240, Vol. 386, 29 August 1997, 3 pp., Constitution of the Republic of South Africa Amendment Act, Act No. 65 of 1998, 28 September 1998, published in Government Gazette, No. 19321, Vol. 400, 7 October 1998, 3 pp., Constitution of the Republic of South Africa Second Amendment Act, Act No. 87 of 1998, 20 October 1998, published in Government Gazette, No. 19411, Vol. 400, 30 October 1998, 3 pp., Constitution of the Republic of South Africa Second Amendment Act, Act No. 2 of 1999, 17 March 1999, published in Government Gazette, No. 19861, Vol. 405, 19 March 1999, 2 pp. and Constitution of the Republic of South Africa Amendment Act, Act No. 3 of 1999, 17 March 1999, published in Government Gazette, No. 19862, Vol. 405, 19 March 1999, 2 pp.

ICC Bill (2001)
Bill to provide for the incorporation of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court into South African law; the implementation and enforcement of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court in South Africa; cooperation with the International Criminal Court; the arrest of persons and their surrender to the International Criminal Court; and to provide for matters connected therewith, Bill No. 42 of 2001, as introduced in the National Assembly as a section 75 Bill; explanatory summary of Bill published in Government Gazette, No. 22456, 4 July 2001.

Anti-Personnel Mines Bill (2001)
Bill to provide for the incorporation and enactment of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction into the South African Law; the implementation and enforcement of the Convention in South Africa; ensuring the destruction of anti-personnel mines; providing for domestic inspections; providing for international fact-finding missions to South Africa; providing for domestic as well as international cooperation; and providing for other matters relating to the obligations of the Republic under the Convention (Version 5:B), 16 November 2001.

Spain

Zones and Installations Law (1975)
Ley 8/1975, de 12 de marzo, de zonas e instalaciones de interés para la Defensa Nacional, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 63, 14 March 1975, pp. 5275–5278.

Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces (1978)
Reales Ordenanzas para las Fuerzas Armadas, Ley 85/1978, de 28 de diciembre, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 11, 12 January 1979.

Law on Passive Extradition (1985)
Ley 4/1985, de 21 de marzo, de Extradición Pasiva, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 73, 26 March 1985, pp. 7842–7845.

Law on Judicial Power (1985)
Ley Orgánica 6/1985, de 1 de julio, del Poder Judicial, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 157, 2 July 1985, pp. 20632–20678.

Military Criminal Code (1985)
Ley Orgánica 13/1985, de 9 de diciembre, por la que se aprueba el Código Penal Militar, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 296, 11 December 1985, pp. 39085–39099.

Law on Security Forces (1986)
Ley Orgánica 2/1986, de 13 de marzo, de Fuerzas y Cuerpos de Seguridad, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 63, 14 March 1986, pp. 9604–9616.

Military Personnel Regime Law (1989)
Ley 17/1989, de 19 de Julio, Reguladora del Régimen del Personal Militar Profesional, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 172, 20 July 1989, pp. 23129–23147.

Law on Cooperation with the ICTY (1994)
Ley Orgánica 15/1994, de 1 de junio, para la cooperación con el Tribunal Internacional para el enjuiciamiento de los presuntos responsables de violaciones graves del Derecho internacional humanitario cometidas en el territorio de la ex-Yugoslavia, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 131, 2 June 1994, pp. 17399–17400.

Penal Code (1995)

Ley Orgánica 10/1995, de 23 de noviembre, del Código Penal, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 281, 24 November 1995, pp. 33987–34058.

Law on the Prohibition of Anti-Personnel Mines (1998)

Ley 33/1998, de 5 de octubre, de prohibición total de minas antipersonal y armas de efecto similar, published in Boletín Oficial del Estado, No. 239, 6 October 1998, pp. 33197–33199.

Sri Lanka

Army Act as amended (1949)

An Act to provide for the raising and maintenance of an Army and for matters connected therewith, Act No. 17 of 1949, 10 October 1949, Cap. 625, pp. XX/101–XX/143, as amended by Act No. 6 of 1962, Act No. 32 of 1962, Act No. 22 of 1964, Act No. 22 of 1971, Act No. 38 of 1990 and Act No. 10 of 1993.

Air Force Act as amended (1950)

An Act to provide for the raising and maintenance of an Air Force and for matters connected therewith, Act No. 41 of 1949, 10 October 1950, Cap. 627, pp. XX/175–XX217, as amended by Act No. 21 of 1954, Act No. 7 of 1962, Act No. 33 of 1962, Act No. 21 of 1979 and Act No. 9 of 1993.

Navy Act as amended (1950)

An Act to provide for the raising and maintenance of a Navy and for matters connected therewith, Act No. 34 of 1950, 9 December 1950, Cap. 626, pp. XX/144–XX/174, as amended by Act No. 8 of 1962, Act No. 11 of 1962, Law No. 33 of 1976, Act No. 21 of 1979 and Act No. 11 of 1993.

Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002)

An Act to give effect to the Geneva Conventions of 1949; and for connected matters, draft of 2002.

Sweden

Emblems and Signs Act as amended (1953)

Lag om skydd för vissa internationella sjukvårdsbeteckningar m.m. (Act relating to the protection of certain international emblems of medical aid and of international distinctive sign of civil defence, Decree of the King-in-Council, 30 December 1953), published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1953 (Swedish Code of Statutes), 1953:771, as amended by Lag om ändring i lagen (1953:771) om skydd för vissa internationella sjukvårdsbeteckningar, 1994:744, published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1979 and as amended by Lag om ändring i lagen (1953:771) om skydd vör vissa internationella sjukvårdsbeteckningar och för civilförsvarets internationella kännetecken, 1994:1723.

Penal Code as amended (1962)

Brottsbalk (Penal Code), 21 December 1962, published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1962 (Swedish Code of Statutes), Vol. II, 1962:700, pp. 1837–1900, as amended by Lag om ändring i brottsbalken (Law amending the Penal Code), 24 March 1994, published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1994 (Swedish Code of Statutes), Vol. I, 1994:119, pp. 230–231 and Lag om ändring i brottsbalken (Law amending the Penal Code), 17 December 1998, published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1998 (Swedish Code of Statutes), Vol. III, 1998:1703, pp. 3590–3592.

Total Defence Ordinance relating to IHL (1990)
Totalförsvarets folkrättsförordning (Ordinance relating to the Status of Total Defence Personnel according to International Humanitarian Law), 18 January 1990, published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1990 (Swedish Code of Statutes), Vol. I, 1990:12, pp. 26–31.

Cooperation with the International Tribunals Act as amended (1995)
Lag om Sveriges samarbete med de internationella tribunalerna för brott mot internationell humanitär rätt (Act concerning Sweden's cooperation with the international tribunals for crimes against international humanitarian law), 2 June 1994, published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1994 (Swedish Code of Statutes), Vol. I, 1994:569, pp. 1027–1030, as amended by Lag om ändring i lagen med anledning av inrättandet av Internationella tribunalen för brott i f.d. Jugoslavien (Act concerning International Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia), 7 December 1995, published in Svensk Författningssamling (SFS) för 1995 (Swedish Code of Statutes), Vol. II, 1995:1306, pp. 2383–2384.

Switzerland

Military Criminal Code as amended (1927)
Code pénal militaire (CPM), 13 June 1927, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1927, pp. 375–437 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 321.0.

Penal Code as amended (1937)
Code pénal suisse, 21 December 1937, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1938, pp. 781–876 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 311.0.

Geneva Conventions Implementation Order (1952)
Arrêté du Conseil fédéral concernant l'application des conventions de Genève dans l'armée, 29 August 1952, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1952, p. 640 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 518.0.

Emblem Law (1954)
Loi fédérale concernant la protection de l'emblème et du nom de la Croix-Rouge, 25 March 1954, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1954, pp. 1327–1331 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 232.22.

Law on (State) Responsibility as amended (1958)
Loi fédérale sur la responsabilité de la Confédération, des membres de ses autorités et de ses fonctionnaires (Loi sur la responsabilité), 14 March 1958, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1958, pp. 1483–1491 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 170.32.

Law on the Protection of UN Names and Emblems (1961)
Loi fédérale concernant la protection des noms et emblèmes de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et d'autres organisations intergouvernementales, 15 December 1961, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1962, pp. 461–464 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 232.23.

Law on the Protection of Cultural Property (1966)
Loi fédérale sur la protection des biens culturels en cas de conflit armé, 6 October 1966, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1968, pp. 1065–1074 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 520.3.

Order on the Protection of Cultural Property (1984)
Ordonnance sur la protection des biens culturels en cas de conflit armé (Ordonnance sur protection des biens culturels [OPBC]), 17 October 1984, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1984, pp. 1250–1261 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 520.31.
Law on Civil Defence (1994)
Loi fédérale sur la protection civile (Loi sur la protection civile, LPCI), 17 June 1994, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1994, pp. 2626–2645 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 520.1.
Chemical Weapons Implementation Order (1994)
Arrêté fédéral concernant l'exécution de la Convention sur les armes chimiques, 7 October 1994, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1996, pp. 3273–3278 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 515.08.
Decree on Cooperation with the International Tribunals (1995)
Arrêté fédéral relatif à la coopération avec les tribunaux internationaux chargés de poursuivre les violations graves du droit international humanitaire, 21 December 1995, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 1995, pp. 2–11 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 351.20.
Federal Law on War Equipment as amended (1996)
Loi fédérale du sur le matériel de guerre (LFMG), published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 13 December 1996, 1998, pp. 794–806 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 514.51, as amended by the Loi fédérale sur le matériel de guerre (LFMG), modification du 20 mars 1998, Recueil officiel 1999, p. 1155 and 22 June 2001, Recueil officiel 2002, p. 248.
Law on Cooperation with the ICC (2001)
Loi fédérale sur la coopération avec la Cour pénale internationale (LCPI), 22 June 2001, published in the Recueil officiel des lois fédérales, 2001, pp. 2748–2767 and in the Recueil systématique du droit fédéral, RS 351.6.

Syria
Penal Code (1949)
Criminal Law, Legislative Decree No. 148 of 22 June 1949, published in Official Journal, 18 June 1949, pp. 2025ff.

Tajikistan
Constitution (1994)
Tajik Constitution, 6 November 1994, originally published in Russian, 30 November 1994, Leninabadskaya Pravda (Khudzhand, Tajikistan) FBIS-SOV-94-243, changes and additions adopted by the National Referendum of 26 September 1999.
Draft Amnesty Law (1997)
Draft Act on amnesty of the participants of the political and military confrontation in the Republic of Tajikistan, 1997.
Criminal Code (1998)
Criminal Code of the Republic of Tajikistan, 21 May 1998, published in Akhbori Majlisi Oli (News of the Parliament), No. 9, 1998, pp. 68ff.
General Amnesty Law (1998)
Resolution of the Majlisi Oli (Parliament) N 706 of 13 November 1998 "On the General Amnesty", published in Akhbori Majlisi Oli (News of the Parliament), No. 23–24, 1998, pp. 118–121.

Resolution on Amnesty of Opposition Fighters (1999)
Resolution of the Majlisi Oli (Parliament) N 742 of 14 May 1999 "On the General Amnesty", published in Akhbori Majlisi Oli (News of the Parliament), No. 5, 1999, pp. 59–60.
Emblem Law (2001)
Law of the Republic of Tajikistan "On the use and protection of the Red Cross and Red Crescent emblems and appellations in the Republic of Tajikistan", Law No. 26, 12 May 2001.
Law on General Amnesty (2001)
Law of the Republic of Tajikistan "On General Amnesty", Law No. 44, 29 August 2001, published in Akhbori Majlisi Oli (News of the Parliament), No. 8, 2001, pp. 18–22.

Tanzania
Red Cross Society Act (1962)
An Act to establish the Tanganyika Red Cross Society and for matters connected therewith, Act No. 71 of 1962, assented to on 27 November 1962.

Thailand
Prisoners of War Act (1955)
Act for the enforcement of the Geneva Convention relative to the treatment of prisoners of war of August 12, 1949, 6 October 1955, published in Governmental Gazette, No. 72, Section 83, 18 October 1955, pp. 1443–1451.
Red Cross Act (1956)
The Red Cross Act, B.E. 2499, 1 August 1956, published in Governmental Gazette, No. 73, Vol. 63, dated 14 August 1956, pp. 924–929.

Togo
Code of Military Justice (1981)
Loi No. 81-5 du 30 mars 1981 portant Code de Justice Militaire, published in the Journal Officiel, No. spécial, 6 May 1981, pp. 6ff.
Emblem Law (1999)
Loi No. 99-010 du 28 décembre 1999 portant protection et utilisation de l'emblème de la Croix-Rouge et du Croissant-Rouge, published in the Journal Officiel, No. 36, 28 December 1999, p. 8.

Tonga
Red Cross Society Act (1972)
An Act to incorporate the Tonga Red Cross Society, Act No. 12 of 1972, assented to on 31 October 1972.

Trinidad and Tobago
Defence Act as amended (1962)
An Act to provide for the defence of Trinidad and Tobago by the establishment of a Trinidad and Tobago Defence Force and to provide for matters connected therewith and incidental thereto, Act No. 7 of 1962, assented to on 1 June 1962, as amended by Act No. 9 of 1963, Act No. 19 of 1967, Act No. 35 of 1970, Act No. 136 of 1976, Act No. 110 of 1977, Act Nop. 218 of 1977 and Act No. 32 of 1979, Chapter 14:01 of the Laws of Trinidad and Tobago.
Red Cross Society Act (1963)
An Act for the incorporation of the Trinidad and Tobago Red Cross Society, Act No. 15 of 1963, assented to on 31 May 1962.

International War Crimes Tribunals Act (1998)
An Act to provide for the assistance of the International War Crimes Tribunals in the performance of their functions and for matters related thereto, Act No. 24 of 1998, assented to on 26 October 1998, published in Legal Supplement Part A to the "Trinidad and Tobago Gazette", No. 202, Vol. 37, 28 October 1998, pp. 150–210.
Draft ICC Act (1999)
Bill: An Act to provide for the prevention and punishment of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, to give effect to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court done at Rome on the Seventeenth Day of July, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety-Eight; and for purposes connected therewith or incidental thereto, Chapter 4:01, 1999.
Anti-Personnel Mines Act (2000)
An Act to give effect to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction in Trinidad and Tobago, Act No. 48 of 2000, assented to on 28 September 2000, published in Legal Supplement Part A to the "Trinidad and Tobago Gazette", No. 193, Vol. 39, 5 October 2000, pp. 581–594.

Tunisia
Code of Military Justice as amended (1957)
Code de Justice Militaire (Majallat Al-Murafaat Wal Uqubaat Al Askarya) (Code of Military Justice), promulgated by the Décret du 10 janvier 1957 (8 Djounada II 1376), published in the Journal officiel de la République tunisienne, No. 4, 11 January 1957, pp. 34ff., as amended, inter alia, by the Loi No. 89-23 du 27 février 1989; revised version of the Code published as Code de Justice Militaire, publications de l'imprimerie officielle de la République tunisienne, 2001, ISBN 9973-946-63-4.

Turkmenistan
Emblem Law (2001)
Law of Turkmenistan on the use and protection of the red crescent and red cross symbols, 7 July 2001, published in XXI Asyr – Türkmenin Altyn Asyry, No. 186 (23169), 27 July 2001, p. 2.

Uganda
Geneva Conventions Act (1964)
An Act to enable effect to be given to certain international conventions done at Geneva on the twelfth day of August, one thousand nine hundred and forty-nine and for purposes connected therewith, Act No. 31 of 1964, 3 October 1964, published in Laws of Uganda 1964 Statutes, pp. 213–342.
National Resistance Army Statute (1992)
A Statute to provide for the establishment and regulation of the Army, which shall be a people's Force, and for other matters connected therewith, Statute No. 3, 8 February 1992, published in Statutes Supplement of the Uganda Gazette, No. 12, Vol. LXXXV, 20 March 1992, pp. 1–59.
Emblems Order (1993)
Penal Code (Exclusive Use of The Red Cross And Red Crescent Emblems) Order, 1993, Statutory Instruments No. 1 of 1993, 6 January 1993, published in Statutory Instruments Supplement of the Uganda Gazette, No. 1, Vol. LXXXVI, 8 January 1993, pp. 1–2.

Ukraine

Military Service Law (1992)

Law of Ukraine No. 2233-XII on general military duty and military service, 25 March 1992, published in Newsletter of Verkhovna Rada, No. 27, 1992, art. 385, amended by Law No. 766-XIV, 18 June 1999, published in Newsletter of Verkhovna Rada, No. 33, 1999, art. 270.

Emblem Law (1999)

Law of Ukraine No. 862-XIV on the symbols of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in Ukraine, 8 July 1999, published in Newsletter of Verkhovna Rada, No. 36, 1999, art. 316.

Draft Red Cross Society Law (1999)

Draft Law of Ukraine on the Red Cross and Red Crescent Society, 1999.

Criminal Code (2001)

Criminal Code of Ukraine No. 2341-14, 5 April 2001, published in Newsletter of Verkhovna Rada, No. 25-26, 2001, art. 131.

United Kingdom

Regulations for the Trial of War Criminals as amended (1945)

Royal Warrant – Regulations for the Trial of War Criminals, The War Office, Army Order 81/1945, 18 June 1945, 0160/2498, as amended by Army Orders 127/1945, 8/1946 and 24/1946, published in Her Majesty's Stationery Office (London) (held at the Public Record Office, Kew, Richmond, Surrey, Reference WO 123).

Army Act as amended (1955)

An Act to make provisions with respect to the army (Chapter 18), 6 May 1955, published in The Public General Acts and Church Assembly Measures of 1955, London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office and Queen's Printer, 1956, pp. 83–226, as amended by the Armed Forces Act, An Act to continue the Army Act 1955 and the Air Force Act 1955, to limit the duration of the Naval Discipline Act 1957, and to amend those Acts and other enactments relating the armed forces (Chapter 33), 27 May 1971, published in The Public General Acts and Church Assembly Measures of 1971, London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, pp. 557–628.

Air Force Act as amended (1955)

An Act to make provisions with respect to the air force (Chapter 19), 6 May 1955, published in The Public General Acts and Church Assembly Measures of 1955, London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, pp. 226–363, as amended by the Armed Forces Act, An Act to continue the Army Act 1955 and the Air Force Act 1955, to limit the duration of the Naval Discipline Act 1957, and to amend those Acts and other enactments relating the armed forces (Chapter 33), 27 May 1971, published in The Public General Acts and Church Assembly Measures of 1971, London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, pp. 557–628.

Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957)

An Act to enable effect to be given to certain international conventions done at Geneva on the twelfth day of August, nineteen hundred and forty-nine, and for purposes connected therewith (Chapter 52), 31 July 1957, published in Public General Acts and Church Assembly Measures of 1957, London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1958, pp. 543–682 (also applicable to Fiji, Gambia, Kiribati, Solomon Islands, Trinidad and Tobago and Tuvalu), amended by An Act to make provision for the amendment of the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 to enable effect to be given to the Protocols additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 done at Geneva on 10 June 1977; and for connected purposes (Chapter 27), 19 July 1995, published in The Public General Synod Measures of 1995, London, The Stationery Office Limited, pp. 1854–1920.

Geneva Conventions Act (Colonial Territories) Order in Council (1959)
The Geneva Conventions Act (Colonial Territories) Order in Council, 1959, Order No. 1301 of 28 July 1959, published in Statutory Instruments 1959, London, Her Majesty's Stationary Office, pp. 1437–1441.

Biological Weapons Act (1974)
An Act to prohibit the development, production, acquisition and possession of certain biological agents and toxins and of biological weapons, 8 February 1974, published in Current Law Statutes 1974, last amended by Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act, 14 December 2001.

War Crimes Act (1991)
An Act to confer jurisdiction on United Kingdom courts in respect of certain grave violations of the laws and customs of war committed in German-held territory during the Second World War; and for connected purposes (Chapter 13), 9 May 1991, published in Current Law Statutes 1991, Vol. 1, London, 1991, 31-1.

Chemical Weapons Act (1996)
An Act to promote the control of chemical weapons and of certain toxic chemicals and precursors; and for connected purposes (Chapter 6), 3 April 1996, published in The Public General Synod Measures of 1996, London, The Stationery Office Limited, pp. 25–51.

ICTY Order (1996)
The United Nations (International Tribunal) (Former Yugoslavia) Order 1996, Order No. 716 of 15 March 1996, published in Statutory Instruments 1996, London, The Stationery Office Limited, pp. 2542–2548.

ICTR Order (1996)
The United Nations (International Tribunal) (Rwanda) Order 1996, Order No. 1296 of 17 May 1996, published in Statutory Instruments 1996, London, The Stationery Office Limited, pp. 4242–4268.

UN Personnel Act (1997)
An Act to enable effect to be given to certain provisions of the Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 9th December 1994 (Chapter 13), 27 February 1997, published in The Public General Acts and General Synod Measures 1997, London, The Stationery Office Limited, pp. 484–491.

Landmines Act (1998)
An Act to promote the control of anti-personnel landmines; and for connected purposes, 1988 (Chapter 33), 28 July 1998, published in The Public General Acts and General Synod Measures 1998, London, The Stationery Office Limited, pp. 1029–1049.

ICC Act (2001)
An Act to give effect to the Statute of the International Criminal Court; to provide for offences under the law of England and Wales and Northern Ireland corresponding to offences within the jurisdiction of that Court; and for connected purposes (Chapter 17), 11 May 2001, published in The Public

General Acts and General Synod Measures 2001, London, The Stationery Office Limited, pp. 1261–1340.[1]

United States of America

Alien Tort Claims Act (1789)

Alien Tort Statute, United States Code, Title 28, Section 1350 (originated as Section 9 of the Judiciary Act of 24 September 1789 (1 Stat. 76 or 73 (1789)), 25 June 1948 ch. 646, 62 Stat. 934.

California Code of Civil Procedure as amended (1873)

Code of Civil Procedure of California, 11 March 1872, as amended, published in Deerings California Code Annotated.

Criminal Statute on the Protection of the Emblem as amended (1905)

United States Code, Title 18, Section 706, 1905 Act, Public Law No. 58-4, approved on 5 January 1905, reprinted in 1942 House Hearings, p. 310, as amended in 1910, by Public Law No. 61-258.

Regulations governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945)

Regulations governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals, adopted by the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers (SCAP) on 24 September 1945.

Regulations governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945)

Regulations governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals, adopted by the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers (SCAP) on 5 December 1945.

Uniform Code of Military Justice (1950)

Uniform Code of Military Justice, adopted in 1950 (effective in 1951), published in United States Code, 1994 Edition, Vol. 3, Title 10, Chapter 47, §§ 801–946, pp. 556–633, Washington, United States Government Printing, 1995.

Foreign Assistance Act as amended (1961)

Public Law 87–195 [S. 1983], An Act to promote the foreign policy, security, and general welfare of the United States by assisting peoples of the world in their efforts toward economic development and internal and external security, and for other purposes, 4 September 1961, published in 75 Stat. 424, as amended by Public Law 93–559 [S. 3394], 30 December 1974, 88 Stat. 1795.

Victim and Witness Protection Act (1982)

Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, United States Code, Title 18, Section 3663 (18 USC Sec. 3663, Order of Restitution; Federal Criminal Restitution Statute), 12 October 1982, 96 Stat. 1253, Sec. 3579; renumbered Sec. 3663 and amended Pub. L. 98-473, title II, Sec. 212(a)(1), (3), Oct. 12, 1984, 98 Stat. 1987, 2010.

Convention on Genocide Implementation Act (1987)

18 USC Sec. 1091, added Public Law 100–606, Sec. 2(a), 4 November 1988, 102 Stat. 3045, amended Public Law 103-322, title VI, Sec. 60003(a)(13), 13 September 1994, 108 Stat. 1970.

Law on Restitution for WWII Internment of Japanese-Americans and Aleuts as amended (1988)

Public Law 100-383 [H.R. 442], An Act to implement recommendations of the Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians, 10 August

[1] This Act implements the 1998 ICC Statute into the law of England, Wales and Northern Ireland. A separate Act has been passed by the Scottish parliament – the ICC (Scotland) Act (2001) – which must be read in conjuction with the Act passed by the British parliament.

1988, published in United States Code, Congressional and Administrative News, 100th Congress, Second Session 1988, Vol. I, St. Paul (Minn.), West Publishing Co., 1988–1989, 102 Stat. pp. 903–916. US Code, Title 50, Section 1989:

Title I: Civil Liberties Act;
Title II: Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution Act;
Title III: Territory or Property Claims against United States.

Biological Weapons Anti-Terrorism Act (1989)
Public Law 101-222 [H.R. 91], An Act to prohibit exports of military equipment to countries supporting international terrorism; and for other purposes, 12 December 1989, published in United States Code, Congressional and Administrative News, 101st Congress, First Session 1989, Vol. II, St. Paul (Minn.), West Publishing Co., 1989–1990, 103 Stat. pp. 1892–1900.

Torture Victim Protection Act (1991)
Public Law 102-256 [H:R: 2092], An Act to carry out obligations of the United States under the United Nations Charter and other international agreements pertaining to the protection of human rights by establishing a civil action for recovery of damages from an individual who engages in torture or extrajudicial killing, 12 March 1992, published in United States Code, Congressional and Administrative News, 102nd Congress, Second Session 1992, Vol. I, St. Paul (Minn.), West Publishing Co., 1992–1993, 106 Stat. pp. 73–74.

Convention against Torture Implementation Act (1994)
Chapter 113 C US Code, Sec. 2340, added Public Law 103-236, title V, Sec. 506(a), 30 April 1994, 108 Stat. 463, amended Public Law 103-415, Sec. 1(k), 25 October 1994, 108 Stat. 4301; Public Law 103-429, Sec. 2(2), 31 October 1994, 108 Stat. 4377.

War Crimes Act as amended (1996)
Public Law 104-192 [H.R. 3680], An Act to amend title 18, United States Code, to carry out the international obligations of the United States under the Geneva Conventions to provide criminal penalties for certain war crimes, 21 August 1996, published in United States Code, Congressional and Administrative News, 104th Congress, X Session 1996, Vol. XX, St. Paul (Minn.), West Publishing Co., 1996–1997, 110 Stat. p. 2104, as amended by the Expanded War Crimes Act (1997), An Act to amend title 18, United States Code, relating to war crimes 105th Congress, 1st Session, 26 November 1997 Public Law 105-18 Title V, section 583, 111 Stat. 2436.

Law on Judicial Assistance to the ICTY and ICTR (1996)
Public Law P.L 104-106, 100 Stat. 486.

Chemical Weapons Act (1998)
Chemical Weapons Convention Implementation Act of 1998, Chemical Weapons US Code, Title 18, Chapter 11B, Chemical Weapons Convention Implementation, US Code, Title 22, Chapter 75.

Military Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act (2000)
Public Law 106-523, An Act to amend title 18, United States Code, to establish Federal jurisdiction over offenses committed outside the United States by persons employed by or accompanying the Armed Forces, or by members of the Armed Forces who are released or separated from active duty prior to being identified and prosecuted for the commission of such offenses, and for other purposes, 22 November 2000, published in United States Code, Congressional and Administrative News, 106th Congress, Second Session 2000, Vol. I, St. Paul (Minn.), West Publishing Co., 114 Stat. pp. 2488–2492.

Uruguay

Penal Code as amended (1933)

Código Penal, Ley No. 9.155 de 1933, 4 December 1933, published in Diario Oficial, 1933; also published as Código Penal de la República Oriental del Uruguay, concordado y anotado por Antonio Camaño Rosa, Segunda Edición, actualizada, Montevideo, Ediciones Jurídicas Amalo M. Fernandez, 1978, 470 pp.

Military Penal Code as amended (1943)

Decreto-Ley No. 10.326, Códigos Militares, Se aprueban el "Penal Militar", el de "Organización de los Tribunales Militares" y el "Procedimiento Penal Militar", 28 January 1943, published in Diario Oficial, No. 10970, 16 April 1943.

Organisational Law of Armed Forces (1974)

Ley No. 14.157, Se aprueba la Ley Orgánica Militar, 21 February 1974, published in Diario Oficial, No. 19226, 5 March 1974.

Law on the National Armed Forces (1983)

Ley of 1983, published in Diario Oficial, 1983.

Amnesty Law (1985)

Ley No. 15.737, Se aprueba la Ley de amnistía, 8 March 1985, published in Diario Oficial, No. 21906, 22 March 1985.

Amnesty Law (1986)

Ley No. 15.848, Se reconoce que ha caducado el ejercicio de la pretención punitiva del Estado respecto de los delitos cometidos hasta el 1° de marzo de 1985, 22 December 1986, published in Diario Oficial, 31 December 1986.

Emblem Decree (1992)

Decreto No. 679/992, Díctanse normas para el uso de los emblemas de la cruz roja y la media luna, así come los vocablos " CRUZ ROJA", "CRUZ DE GINEBRA" y "MEDIA LUNA ROJA", 24 November 1992, published in Diario Oficial, March 1993, pp. 499–500.

Constitution as amended (1996)

Constitución de la República Oriental del Uruguay, de 1967 con las modificaciones plebiscitadas el 26 de noviembre de 1989, el 26 de noviembre de 1994 y el 8 de diciembre de 1996.

Uzbekistan

Criminal Code (1994)

Criminal Code (1994), adopted on 22 September 1994, published in Vedomosti Verhovnogo Soveta Respubliki Uzbekistan (Bulletin of the Supreme Council of the Republic of Uzbekistan), Tashkent, 1995, No. 1 (1225), 283 pp.

Vanuatu

Geneva Conventions Act (1982)

Act to provide for the ratification and enforcement of the provisions of the Geneva Conventions, Act 22 of 1982, commencement on 24 August 1982, published in Laws of the Republic of Vanuatu, Revised Edition 1988, CAP. 150, pp. 1ff.

Venezuela

Emblem Law (1965)

Ley de protección al nombre y emblema de la Cruz Roja, 3 March 1965, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República Venezuela, No. 27.759, 10 June 1965, p. 1.

Law on the National Armed Forces (1983)
Ley Orgánica de las Fuerzas Armadas Nacionales, 11 August 1983, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República de Venezuela, No. 3.256 Extraordinario, 26 September 1983, pp. 27–50.
Code of Military Justice as amended (1998)
Ley de reforma parcial del código de justicia militar, 17 September 1998, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República de Venezuela, No. 5.263 Extraordinario, 17 September 1998, pp. 35–63.
Revised Penal Code (2000)
Ley de Reforma Parcial del Código Penal, 26 July 2000, published in Gaceta Oficial de la República de Venezuela, No. 5.494 Extraordinario, 20 October 2000, pp. 1–31.

Vietnam
Penal Code (1990)
Code pénal de la République Socialiste du Vietnam (Penal Code of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam), adopted by the National Assembly on 25 June 1985, promulgated on 19 July 1985, as completed by the amendment of 28 December 1989, promulgated on 2 June 1990, published in Nhà Xuãt Bán Pháp Lý, Hanoi, 1991, 146 pp.

Yemen
Constitution as amended (1994)
Constitution of the Republic of Yemen, 16 May 1991, as amended on 29 September 1994, published in Official Gazette of the Republic of Yemen, No. 19, 10 October 1994, First Part.
Military Criminal Code (1996)
Decree-Law No. 6/1996 relative to military offences and penalties, 15 February 1996, published in Official Gazette of the Republic of Yemen, No. 3, 15 February 1996, pp. 20–38.
Military Criminal Code (1998)
Law No. 21/1998 relative to military offences and penalties, 25 July 1998, published in Official Gazette of the Republic of Yemen, No. 14, 25 July 1998, pp. 85–60.
Emblem Law (1999)
Law No. 43/1999 on the organisation and use of the emblems of the Red Cross and Red Crescent and on the prohibition of their misuse, 20 September 1999, published in Official Gazette of the Republic of Yemen, No. 18, 30 September 1999, pp. 1–4.

Yugoslavia, Federal Republic of Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945)
Zakon o krivicnim delima protiv naroda i drzave (Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act), 25 August 1945, published in the Official Gazette of the Democratic Federative Yugoslavia, No. 66, 1 September 1945, pp. 645–647.
Penal Code as amended (1976)
Krivicni zakon SFRJ (Penal Code of the SFRY), adopted on 28 September 1976, published in Sluzbeni list SFRJ (Socijalisticka Federativna Republika Jugoslavija) (Official Gazette of the SFRY), No. 44/76, 8 October 1976, pp. 1329–1364, as amended by the Law on Alterations and Amendments of the Penal Code, adopted on 5 October 2001.

Constitution (1992)

Ustav Savezne Republike Jugoslavije (Constitution of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia),27 April 1992, published in Sluzbeni list SRJ (Savezna Republika Jugoslavija) (FRY Official Gazette), No. 2/92, as amended on 6 July 2000.

Army Act (1994)

Zakon o Vojsci Jugoslavije (Yugoslav Army Act), adopted by the Federal Parliament's Chamber of the Republics on 20 October 1993, and by the Federal Parliament's Chamber of Citizens on 18 May 1994, published in Sluzbeni list SRJ (Savezna Republika Jugoslavija) (Official Gazette of the FRY), No. 43, 27 May 1994, under the number 581, pp. 600–631.

Emblem Law (1996)

(Law on Use and Protection of the Emblem and Name of the Red Cross), proclaimed on 27 September 1996 by the Decree proclaiming the Law on Use and Protection of the Emblem and Name of the Red Cross, published in Sluzbeni list SRJ (Savezna Republika Jugoslavija) (Official Gazette of the FRY), No. 46, 4 October 1996, pp. 16–17.

Zambia

Defence Act as amended (1964)

An Act to provide for the creation and maintenance in Zambia of a Defence Force consisting of an Army comprising the Regular Force of the Army, the Territorial Force of the Army, the Army Reserve and the Territorial Army Reserve, and an Air Force comprising the Regular Force of the Air Force, the Auxiliary Air Force, the Air Force Reserve and the Auxiliary Air Force Reserve; to charge the Defence Force with the defence of Zambia and with such other duty as may from time to time be determined by the President; to provide for the creation of a Defence Council to advise the President in matters of policy and matters affecting the command, discipline and administration of the Defence Force; to provide for the commissioning, appointment and transfer of officers in the Defence Force and to set out the terms and conditions of enlistment and service of soldiers in the Regular Force of the Defence Force; to provide the conditions of discharge of soldiers from the Regular Force and for their transfer to the Reserve Force; to provide for the discipline of the Defence Force and for the trial and punishment of members of the Force who commit such military offences as are set out in the Act, or civil offences; to make provision for the arrest of members of the Defence Force who commit an offence against any provision of the Act and for the investigation of and summary dealing with charges preferred against such members; to provide for the creation and constitution of courts-martial to try persons subject to military law under the Act, for the procedure to be followed by such courts-martial, for the awarding of punishments and for the confirmation, revision and review of proceedings of courts-martial and the review of summary findings and awards; to make provision for the carrying out of sentences of imprisonment awarded by courts-martial, for a right of appeal from the decision of a court-martial to the court of appeal and for the procedure in and the determination of such appeals; to provide for the enforcement of maintenance and affiliation orders against members of the Defence Force by deduction from pay and for the imposition of forfeitures and deductions from the pay of such members in certain circumstances; to set out the order of precedence of officers and soldiers of the Defence Force and to make provision for the command of the Army and the command of the Air Force and for the exemption of officers and soldiers from serving as assessors in civil courts; to provide for the arrest of deserters and absentees without leave and for the bringing of such persons before a civil court; to set out the offences relating to military matters which are punishable by civil courts and to make provision with respect to evidence in proceedings under this Act, whether before a court-martial or a civil court; to provide for the composition of and enlistment of persons in the Territorial Force, for the training of persons enlisted in such Force, for the embodiment of such Force when necessary in the public interest, for the discharge of persons from that Force and for all other matters affecting the discipline of such Force; to set out the persons who are subject to military law under the Act and generally to provide for matters incidental to or connected with the foregoing; to repeal the Defence Act, 1955, and to give effect to the transitional provisions and savings set out in the Act, Act No. 45 of 1964, 18 September 1964, as subsequently amended, Chapter 131 of the Laws of Zambia, printed and published by the Government Printer, Lusaka, 267 pp.

Red Cross Society Act (1966)

An Act to establish and incorporate the Zambia Red Cross Society and for matters incidental thereto and connected therewith, Act No. 9 of 1966, 22 April 1966, Chapter 545 of the Laws of Zambia, printed and published by the Government Printer, Lusaka, 5 p; revised version published, as Act No. 13 of 1994, in the Official Gazette, CAP. 307, pp. 3–5.

Zimbabwe

Criminal Procedure and Evidence Act as amended (1927)

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to procedure and evidence in criminal cases, and to make provision for other matters incidental to such procedure and evidence, 1 June 1927, amended several times, published in The Statute Law of Rhodesia, Vol. II, printed by the Government Printer, Salisbury, 1974, pp. 69–205.

Defence Act as amended (1972)

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the Defence Council, the establishment, constitution, command, administration, organization, duties, conditions of service, training, co-operation with other Military Forces and discipline of the Defence Forces, the declaration of cantonments and protected areas, the requisitioning of buildings, vehicles and other things for the use of the Defence Forces in certain circumstances, the expropriation of land for defence purposes and the protection of defence stores; to provide for the publication of defence agreements and to create powers in connexion with the training of units of the Defence Forces; and to provide for matters incidental to or connected with the foregoing, Act No. 27/1972, 3 November 1972, published in Official Gazette, 3 November 1972, as amended by Act No. 37 of 1974, Act No. 23 of 1975, Act No. 35 of 1976, Act No. 51 of 1976, Act No. 2 of 1978, Act No. 41 of 1978, Act No. 29 of 1981, Statutory Instrument No. 363 of 1983, Act No. 21 of 1985, Statutory Instrument No. 324 of 1986, Act No. 3 of 1992 and Act No. 8 of 1993.

Missing Persons Act as amended (1978)

An Act to provide for the presumption of death of a person who is missing, or for the care and administration of the estate of such a person; and to provide for matters incidental to or connected with the foregoing, Act No. 28/1978, 10 November 1978, published in Official Gazette, 1978, as amended Acts No. 17/1979, 29/1981, 20/1994 and Statutory Instrument No. 856/1981.

Amnesty Act (1979)
Amnesty Act, Chapter 9:02, 21 December 1979, published in Official Gazette, 1979.

Amnesty (General Pardon) Act (1980)
Amnesty (General Pardon) Act, Chapter 9:03, 21 March 1980, published in Official Gazette, 1980.

Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981)
Act to enable effect to be given within Zimbabwe to the four Conventions signed at Geneva on the 12th August, 1949, dealing respectively with wounded and sick members of the armed forces in the field, with wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the armed forces at sea, with treatment of prisoners of war and with protection of civilian persons in time of war; to repeal the Geneva Convention Act; and to provide for matters incidental to or connected with the foregoing, 1981, published in Official Gazette, No. 36, 1981, pp. 303–310 (and schedules), amended by the Act to amend the Geneva Conventions Act, 1996, published in Official Gazette, No. 22, 1997, pp. 191–258.

Extradition Act (1982)
An Act to provide for the extradition of persons between Zimbabwe and other countries and for matters incidental to or connected with the foregoing, Act No. 6 of 1982, 9 April 1982, published in Official Gazette, 1982, pp. 657–664.

Constitution Revised Edition (1996)
Constitution Revised Edition (1996), published by the Government printer, available through Ministerial offices.

Chemical Weapons Prohibition Act (1998)
An Act to enable effect to be given within Zimbabwe to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and use of Chemical Weapons and on their Destruction with its Annexes, Chapter 11:18, 1998, published in Official Gazette, No. 9, 1998.

Anti-Personnel Mines (Prohibition) Act (2000)
Act to enable effect to be given within Zimbabwe to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction, signed at Oslo, Norway, on the 18th September, 1997, Act No. 17/2000 Chapter 11:19, 2000.

NATIONAL CASE-LAW

Argentina

Bohne case

Supreme Court of Justice, Extradition of Gerhard J. B. Bohne, Judgement of 24 August 1966.

Cavallo case

Federal Judge, Resolución del juez federal argentino Gabriel Cavallo para resolver la causa No. 8686/2000, Decision of 6 March 2001.

Military Junta case

National Court of Appeals:
Causa originalmente instruida por el Consejo Supremo de las Fuerzas Armadas en cumplimiento de Decreto 158/83 del Poder Ejecutivo Nacional, Judgement of 9 December 1985, published in Fallos de la Corte Suprema de Justicia de la Nación, Tomo 309, Vol. II, 1986.
Supreme Court:
Causa originalmente instruida por el Consejo Supremo de las Fuerzas Armadas en cumplimiento de Decreto 158/83 del Poder Ejecutivo Nacional, Cám. Nac. Apel. Cr. y Correcc., Judgement of 30 December 1986, published in en Fallos de la Corte Suprema de Justicia de la Nación, Tomo 309, Vol. II, 1986.

Priebke case

Hearing of the Public Prosecutor of the First Instance:
Priebke, Erich, s/solicitud de extradición, 1995.
Court of Bariloche:
Priebke, Erich s/solicitud de extradición, Judgement of 31 May 1995.
Court of Appeal of General Roca:
Priebke, Erich s/solicitud de extradición, Judgement of 23 August 1995.
Supreme Court of Justice:
Priebke, Erich s/solicitud de extradición, Judgement of 2 November 1995.

Schwammberger case

Legal opinion of the Prosecutor-General:
In re Extradition of Josef F. L. Schwammberger, 21 January 1989.
Cámara Federal de La Plata:
Sala III, In re Extradition of Josef F. L. Schwammberger, Judgement of 30 August 1989.
Supreme Court of Justice:
In re Extradition of Josef F. L. Schwammberger, Judgement of 20 March 1990.

Australia

Baba Masao case
Military Court at Rabaul, In re Baba Masao, Judgement of 2 June 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1951, p. 205, Case No. 94.

Ohashi case
Military Court at Rabaul, In re Ohashi and E. Shinohara, Judgement of 23 March 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 383, Case No. 164.

Polyukhovich case
High Court, Polyukhovich v Commonwealth of Australia and Another, Judgement of 14 August 1991, published in ILR, 1993, Vol. 91, p. 1.

Takehiko case
Military Court at Wewak, Trial of Tazaki Takehiko, Judgement of 30 November 1945, referred to in WCR, Vol. XIII, 1949, p. 152.

Tanaka Chuichi case
Military Court, at Rabaul, Trial of Tanaka Chuichi and Two Others, Judgement of 12 July 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XI, 1949, p. 62.

Tisato case
Military Court at Rabaul, Trial of Tomiyasu Tisato, Judgement of 2 April 1946, referred to in WCR, Vol. XIII, 1949, p. 152.

Austria

Cvjetković case
Supreme Court, Cvjetković case, Judgement of 13 July 1994.

Leopold case
Supreme Court, Public Prosecutor v. Leopold L., Judgement of 10 May 1967, published in ILR, Vol. 47, 1974, p. 464.

Belgium

Kalid case
Military Court, Korad Kalid v. V., J., F. and J., Judgement of 24 May 1995, published in Revue de droit pénal, 1996, No. 45, p. 45.

Köppelmann case
Court of Cassation, Second Chamber, In re Köppelmann, Judgement of 27 November 1950, published in ILR, Vol. 17, 1956, p. 397, Case No. 126.

Krumkamp case
Military Court of Brabant, Auditeur Militaire v. Krumkamp, Judgement of 8 February 1950, published in ILR, Vol. 17, 1956, p. 388, Case No. 122.

Lt. Mo. case
Court-Martial of Liège, 7th Chamber, Ministère Public v. Lieutenant Mo. et consorts, Judgement of 20 November 1972.

Sergeant W. case
Court-Martial of Brussels, Ministère Public v. Sergeant W., Judgement of 18 May 1966, published in Revue de droit pénal et de criminologie, 1970, p. 806.

The Four from Butare case
Cour d'Assises de Bruxelles:
Ntezimana, Higarino, Mukangango, Mukabutera case, Judgement of 7–8 June 2001.
Court of Cassation:
Second Chamber, Higaniro, Mukangango, Mukabutera case, Judgement of 9 January 2002.

V. C. case
Court of Cassation, Second Chamber, V. C. et consorts v. S. and R., Judgement of 12 January 1983.
Violations of IHL in Somalia and Rwanda case
Military Court, Centre pour l'égalité des chances et la lutte contre le racisme v. C. et B., Judgement of 17 December 1997, published in Journal des Tribunaux, 4 April 1998, p. 286.

Bolivia
Barbie extradition case
Supreme Court, Barbie extradition case, Judgement of 11 December 1974, published in RGDIP, Vol. 79, 1975, p. 778.

Bosnia and Herzegovina
Bijelić case
Cantonal Court of Bihać, Bijelić, Judgement of 30 April 1997.
Drago case
Cantonal Court in Tuzla, Drago, Case No. K. 177/96, Judgement of 13 October 1997.
Halilović case
Modrica Municipal Court, Ferid Halilović, Decision of 23 October 1997. Decision Number K-43/97, published in YIHL, Vol. 2, 1999, p. 343.
Doboj District Court, Ferid Halivović, Decision of 10 August 1998, Decision Number Kz-46/98, published in YIHL, Vol. 2, 1999, p. 343.
Turundžić case
Commission on Human Rights, Human Rights Chamber, Turundžić v. Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Applications Nos. CH/00/6143 and CH/00/6150, Decision of 8 February 2001.

Canada
Abbaye Ardenne case
Military Court at Aurich, Germany, Trial of S.S. Brigadeführer Kurt Meyer, Judgement of 10–28 December 1945, published in WCR, Vol. IV, 1948, p. 97.
Boland case
Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada, R. v. Sergeant Mark Adam Boland, Case No. CMAC-374, Judgement of 16 May 1995.
Brocklebank case
Court Martial Appeal Court, R. v. David Brocklebank, Judgement of 2 April 1996, published in Canadian Criminal Cases (3d), Vol. 106, p. 234 and in 134 D.L.R. (4th) 377.
Brown case
Court Martial Appeal Court, R. v. Private Elvin Kyle Brown, Judgement of 6 January 1995, CMAC-372.
Finta case
High Court of Justice:
Regina v. Imre Finta, Judgement of 10 July 1989, published in 69 Ontario Reports (O.R.) (2nd), 1989, p. 557.
Supreme Court:
Regina v. Imre Finta, Judgement on Appeal from the Court of Appeal for Ontario, including dissenting opinion, 24 March 1994, published in Supreme Court Reports (S.C.R.), 1994, Vol. 1, p. 701 and in Dominion Law Reports (D.L.R.) (4th), Vol. 112, p. 513.

Rudolph and Minister of Employment and Immigration case
Federal Court of Appeal, Re Rudolph and Minister of Employment and Immigration, Judgement of 1 May 1992, published in ILR, 1997, Vol. 104, p. 195.
Seward case
Court Martial Appeal Court, R. v. Major Anthony Gerald Seward, Judgement of 27 May 1996, CMAC-376.
Sinnappu case
Federal Court Trial Division, Sinnappu v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration), Judgement of 14 February 1997, published in Federal Court Reports, 1997, Vol. 2, p. 791.

Chile
Bascuñán case
Supreme Court, Case of Insunza Bascuñán, Iván Sergio, Judgement of 24 August 1990.
Benado Medwinsky case
Appeal Court of Santiago, Case of Benado Medwinsky, José Miguel, Judgement of 29 July 1980.
Guzmán and Others case
Santiago Council of War, Case of Galaz Guzmán, Ernesto, and Others, Judgement of 30 July 1974.
Saavedra case
Supreme Court, Case of Ruth Kries Saavedra, Judgement of 19 November 1993.
Videla case
Appeal Court of Santiago, Third Criminal Chamber, Case of Lumi Videla, Judgement of 26 September 1994.

China
Takashi Sakai case
War Crimes Military Tribunal of the Ministry of National Defence at Nanking, In re Takashi Sakai, Judgement of 29 August 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 222, Case No. 93.

Colombia
Constitutional Case No. T-409
Constitutional Court, Sentencia T-409, Judgement of 8 June 1992.
Administrative Case No. 7013
Council of State, Expediente 7013, Judgement of 13 December 1993.
Administrative Case No. 9276
Council of State, Expediente 9276, Judgement of 19 August 1994.
Constitutional Case No. C-225/95
Constitutional Court, Sentencia C-225/95, Expediente No. L.A.T.-40, Constitutional revision of Additional Protocol II and the Law 171 of 16 December 1994 implementing this protocol, Judgement of 18 May 1995.
Constitutional Case No. C-296
Constitutional Court, Sentencia C-296, Judgement of 6 July 1995.
Administrative Case No. 10941
Council of State, Expediente 10941, Judgement of 6 September 1995.
Constitutional Case No. C-578
Constitutional Court, Sentencia C-578, Judgement of 4 December 1995.
Constitutional Case No. C-092
Constitutional Court, Sentencia C-092, Expediente RE-07, Judgement of 7 March 1996.

Constitutional Case No. T-303
Constitutional Court, Sentencia T-303, Judgement of 20 June 1997.
Constitutional Case No. C-572
Constitutional Court, Sentencia C-572, Judgement of 7 November 1997.
Administrative Case No. 11369
Council of State, Expediente 11369, Judgement of 6 February 1997.
Administrative Case No. 10941
Council of State, Expediente 10941, Judgement of 6 September 1995.

Croatia
Perišić and Others case
District Court of Zadar, The Public Prosecutor against Momčilo Perišić, Milić Potpara, Ilija Branković, Stojan Vučković, Nikola Germanac, Spasoje Čojić, Duško Gojković, Predrag Tasić, Željko Batinić, Saša Djurović, Senaid Grbo, Mile Rudić, Dragomir Jokić, Jovan Milivojević, Miroslav Bobić, Božo Perić, Aleksandar Lazarević, Mirko Marčeta and Nebojša Filipović, Judgement of 24 April 1997, Case No. K. 74/96.
RA. R. case
District Court of Split, RA. R. et al., Judgement of 26 May 1997, not published.

Denmark
Sarić case
High Court (Ostre Landsrets):
Prosecutor v. Refik Sarić, Case No. S-3396-94, Judgement of 25 November 1994, published in Weekly Law Reports, 1995, p. 838.
Supreme Court (Hojesteret):
The Attorney General v. Refik Sarić, Case No. I 447/1994, Judgement of 15 August 1995, published in Weekly Law Reports (Ugeskrift for Retsvaesen), 1995, p. 838, reported in YIHL, Vol. I, 1998, p. 431.

Ethiopia
Mengistu and Others case
Special Prosecutor's Office, Transitional Government of Ethiopia, Mengistu and Others case, S.P.O Investigation File No. 401/85, Reply submitted in response to the objection filed by counsels for defendants, 23 May 1995.

France
Barbie case
Court of Cassation:
Criminal Chamber, Barbie, Judgement of 6 October 1983, published in RGDIP, 1984, p. 507, summary with extracts in English published in ILR, Vol. 78, 1988, p. 124.
Court of Cassation:
Criminal Chamber, Barbie, Judgement of 26 January 1984, published in RGDIP, 1984, p. 971, summary with extracts in English published in ILR, Vol. 78, 1988, p. 124.
Court of Cassation:
Fédération Nationale des Déportés et Internés Résistants et Patriotes and Others v. Barbie, Judgement of 20 December 1985, published in JCP, 1986, II, 20655, summary with extracts in English published in ILR, Vol. 78 (1988), p. 124.

Bauer case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, Trial of August Bauer, Judgement of 10 June 1947, WCR, Vol. IX, p. 65.

Baus case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, Trial of Christian Baus, Judgement of 21 August 1947, published in WCR, Vol. IX, 1949, p. 68.

Benz case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, Trial of Karl Benz, Judgement, 4 November 1947, referred to in WCR, Vol. IX, 1949, p. 65.

Bommer case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, Trial of Alois and Anna Bommer and their daughters, Judgement of 19 February 1947, published in WCR, Vol. IX, 1949, p. 62.

Buch case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, Trial of Willi Buch, Judgement of 2 December 1947, published in WCR, Vol. IX, p. 65.

Holstein case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Dijon, Trial of Franz Holstein and Two Others, Judgement of 3 February 1947, published in WCR, Vol. VIII, 1949, p. 22.

Javor case
Tribunal de Grande Instance of Paris:
Javor, Kussuran, Softic, Alic and Mujdzic v. X, Order establishing partial lack of jurisdiction and the admissibility of a civil suit, 6 May 1994.
Court of Appeal of Paris:
Javor and Others, Judgement of 24 November 1994.
Court of Cassation:
Javor and Others, Judgement of 26 March 1996.

Lingenfelder case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, K. Lingenfelder case, Judgement of 11 March 1947, published in WCR, Vol. VIII, p. 67.

Munyeshyaka case
Court of Appeal of Nîmes:
In re Wenceslas Munyeshyaka, Judgement of 20 March 1996.
Court of Cassation:
In re Wenceslas Munyeshyaka, Judgement of 6 January 1998, published in RGDIP, Vol. 102, 1998, p. 825, English translation of part of the decision published in YIHL, Vol. 1, 1998, p. 598.

Neber case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, Trial of Elizabeth Neber, Judgement of 6 April 1948, published in WCR, Vol. IX, p. 65.

Rieger case
Military Tribunal at Strasbourg, In re Rieger, Judgement of 5 May 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1948, p. 483-484, Case No. 152.

Roechling case
General Tribunal at Rastadt of the Military Government for the French Zone of Occupation in Germany, In re Roechling and Others, Judgement of 30 June 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1953, p. 398, Case No. 120.

Rust case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Metz, Trial of Philippe Rust, Judgement of 5 March 1948, published in WCR, Vol. IX, 1949, p. 71.

Szabados case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Clermont-Ferrand, Trial of Hans Szabados, Judgement of 23 June 1946, published in WCR, Vol. IX, p. 59.
Wagner case
Permanent Military Tribunal at Strasbourg, In re Wagner and Others, Judgement of 3 May 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 385, Case No. 165.

Germany
Distomo case
Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerihtshof), X and Others v. Bundesrepublik Deutschland, Judgement of 26 June 2003, published in Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW) 2003, Vol. 48, pp. 3488–3493.
Djajić case
Supreme Court of Bavaria, Public Prosecutor v. Novislav Djajić, Case No. 3 St 20/96, Judgement of 23 May 1997, published in AJIL, Vol. 92, 1998, p. 528; extracts of the original German version in Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW), 1998, Vol. 6, pp. 392ff.
Dover Castle case
Reichsgericht, The Dover Castle, Judgement of 4 June 1921, published in AD, Vol. 2, 1933, p. 429, Case No. 231.
Emblem case
Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof), Deutsches Rotes Kreuz v. Rettungsdienst Süd/Nord GmbH, Judgement of 23 June 1994, published in Entscheidungen des Bundesgerichtshofs in Zivilsachen (BGHZ), 1995, 126. Band, No. 28, p. 287.
Forced Labour case
Federal Constitutional Court (Second Chamber), Case No. 2 BvL 33/93 (Forced Labour), Judgement of 13 May 1996, published in Entscheidungen des Bundesverfassungsgerichts (BVerfGE), Vol. 94, p. 315.
General Devastation case
Oberlandsgericht of Dresden, General Devastation (Germany) case, Judgement of 21 March 1947, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1953, p. 417, Case No. 124.
Joachim A. case
Court Martial North (Truppendienstgericht Nord), Joachim A. case, Case No. N 8 BL a 2/84, Decision of 26 June 1984.
Jorgić case
Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf:
Prosecution v. Nikola Jorgić, Judgement of 26 September 1997, Case No. 2 StE 8/96 (unpublished).
Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof):
Prosecution v. Nikola Jorgić, Case No. 3 StR 215/98, Judgement of 30 April 1999, published in NStZ, Vol. 8 (1999), pp. 396 ff., and in Entscheidungen des Bundesgerichtshofs in Strafsachen (BGHSt), Vol. 45, pp. 65ff.
Federal Constitutional Court (Bundesverfassungsgericht):
Complaint about the infringement of the Constitution of J., Case No. 2 BvR 1290/99, Decision of 12 December 2000, published in EuGRZ (Europäische Grundrechte-Zeitschrift) 2001, pp. 76ff.
Kusljić case
Supreme Court of Bavaria (Bayerisches Oberstes Landesgericht):
Prosecution v. Djuradj Kusljić, Case No. 6 St 1/99, Judgement of 15 December 1999.

Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof):
Prosecution v. Djuradj Kusljic, Case No. 3 StR 244/00, Decision of 21 February 2001, published in Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW) 2001, p. 2732.

Llandovery Castle case
Reichsgericht, The Llandovery Castle, Judgement of 16 July 1921, published in AD, Vol. 2, 1933, p. 436, Case No. 235.

Personal Injuries case
Administrative Court of Appeal of Münster, Personal Injuries (Occupied Germany) case, Judgement of 9 April 1952, published in International Law Reports (ILR), Vol. 19, 1957, p. 632, Case No. 147.

Reparation Payments case
Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof), Case on payments of compensations refused with regard to the London Agreement on German External Depts of 27 February 1953, Judgement of 26 February 1963, Case No. VI ZR 94/61, published in Monatsschrift des deutschen Rechts (MDR), 1963, p. 492, and in Rechtsprechung zum Wiedergutmachungsrecht (RzW), 1963, p. 525.

Sokolović case
Higher Regional Court at Düsseldorf:
Prosecution v. Maksim Sokolović, Case No. 2 StE 6/97, Judgement of 29 November 1999.
Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof):
Prosecution v. Maksim Sokolović, Case No. 3 StR 372/00, Judgement of 21 February 2001, published in Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW), 2001, Vol. 37, p. 2728 and Entscheidungen des Bundesgerichtshofs in Strafsachen (BGHSt), Vol. 46, p. 292.

Stenger and Cruisus case
Leipzig Court, In re Karl Stenger and Benno Cruisus, published in Claud Mullins, The Leipzig Trials, London, H.F. & Witherby, 1921, p. 151.

Subordinate's Responsibility case
Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof), Prosecution v. X, Case No. 3 StR 475/85, Judgement of 22 January 1986, published in Neue Zeitschrift für Strafrecht (NStZ), 1986, p. 313.

Superior Orders case
Federal Supreme Court (Bundesgerichtshof), Prosecution v. Polizeiwachtmeister P., Case No. 3 StR 765/52, Judgement of 19 March 1953, published in Entscheidungen des Bundesgerichtshofs in Strafsachen (BGHSt), Vol. 5, 1954, p. 239.

Greece

Prefecture of Voiotia case
Court of First Instance of Leivadia:
Prefecture of Voiotia v. Federal Republic of Germany, Case No. 137/1997, Judgement of 30 October 1997, published in AJIL, Vol. 92, 1998, p. 765.
Supreme Court:
Prefecture of Voiotia v. Federal Republic of Germany, Case No. 11/2000, Judgement of 4 May 2000.

Hungary

Judgement No. 36/1996
Constitutional Court of Hungary, Judgement No. 36/1996, 4 September 1996, Magyar Közlöny 1996/75, p. 4673.

India

Dobhal case

Supreme Court, Narottam Dass Beshtoo BP Dobhal v. Union of India & Others, 16 August 1994, (1994), Supp (3) Supreme Court cases, 1994, Supp (3), pp. 264–266.

Nair case

Supreme Court, Civil Appeal, Ous Kutilingal Achudan Nair and Others v. Union of India and Others, No. 1821 of 1974, Judgement of 20 November 1975, (1976), 2 Supreme Court Cases, 1976, Supp (2), pp. 780–783.

Indonesia

Abilio Soares case

Ad Hoc Tribunal on Human Rights for East Timor: Ad Hoc Prosecuting Attorney v. Abilio Jose Osorio Soares, Case No. 02/HAM/TIM-TIM/02/2002, Indictment, 19 February 2002.
Ad Hoc Tribunal on Human Rights for East Timor: Ad Hoc Prosecuting Attorney v. Abilio Jose Osorio Soares, Judgement, 14 August 2002.

Motosuke case

Temporary Court-Martial at Amboina, In re Motosuke, Judgement of 28 January 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1953, Case No. 220.

Israel

Abu Awad case

High Court, Abu Awad v. Commander of the Judea and Samaria Region, Case H.C. 97/79, Judgement of 12 November 1979, 33(3) Piskei Din [Reports of the Israel Supreme Court] 309, excerpt in English published in Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 9, 1979, p. 343.

Abu-Kabar case

Military Court, Military Prosecutor v. Abu-Kabar et al., Judgement of 1972, published in Selected Judgements of Military Courts, Vol. 2, 1974, p. 24 and Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 7, 1977, p. 265.

Abu-Rijwa case

High Court, Alia Muhammed Abu-Rijwa v. The Minister of Defence, Case H.C. 5267/92, Judgement of 15 November 2000, not published, for an unofficial Hebrew text, see Tak-El 2000(3), 2698.

Affo and Others case

High Court, Abd al Affo et al. v. Commander of IDF Forces in the West Bank et al., Case H.C. 785/87, 945/87 and 27/88, Judgement of 10 April 1988, published in International Legal Materials, Vol. 29, No. 1, 1990, p. 139.

Al-Nawar case

High Court, Al Nawar v. Minister of Defence, Case H.C. 574/82, Judgement of 11 August 1985, published in Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 16, 1986, pp. 321–328.

Ayub case

High Court, Ayub v. Minister of Defence, Judgement of 15 March 1979, Case H.C. 606/78, published in Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 9, 1979, pp. 337–342.

Eichmann case

District Court of Jerusalem, Attorney-General of the State of Israel v. Eichmann, Judgement of 12 December 1961, published in ILR, Vol. 36, 1968, p. 5.

Supreme Court, Attorney-General of the State of Israel v. Eichmann, Judgement of 29 May 1962, published in ILR, Vol. 36, 1968, p. 277.

Enigster case

District Court of Tel Aviv, Attorney-General v. Yehezkel Ben Alish Enigster, Judgement of 4 January 1952, published in AD 1951, Vol. 18, Case No. 169, p. 538.

General Security Service case

High Court, Applications H.C. 5100/94, H.C. 4054/95, H.C. 6536/95, H.C. 5188/96, H.C. 7563/97, H.C. 7628/97 and H.C. 1043/99, Joint Judgement of 6 September 1999.

Jenin (Mortal Remains) case

High Court, sitting as a High Court of Justice, Petitioners: MK Muhammad Barake et al. v. Respondents: Minister of Defence of Israel et al., Ruling of 14 April 2002.

Kassem case

Military Court at Ramallah, Military Prosecutor v. Omar Mahmud Kassem and Others, Judgement, 13 April 1969, published in ILR, Vol. 42, 1971, p. 470.

Kawasme and Others case

High Court, Kawasme et al. v. Minister of Defence et al., [Second Phase], Case H.C. 698/80, Judgement of 4 December 1980, 35(1) Piskei Din [Report of the Israel Supreme Court] 617, excerpt in English published in Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 11, 1981, p. 349.

Nazal and Others case

High Court, Mahmud Nazal et al. v. IDF Commander of the Judea and Samaria Region, Case H.C. 513/85 and 514/85, Judgement of 29 September 1985, 39(3) Piskei Din [Report of the Israel Supreme Court] 645, excerpt in English published in Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 16, 1986, p. 329.

Ofer, Malinki and Others case

District Military Court for the Central Judicial District:
The Chief Military Prosecutor v. Lance Corporal Ofer, Major Malinki Shmuel and Others, Case concerning the events of 29 October 1956 in Kafr Qassem, Judgement of 13 October 1958, Case MC (Central) 3/57, Psakim, Vol. 17, p. 90.
Military Court of Appeal:
The Chief Military Prosecutor v. Lance Corporal Ofer, Major Malinki Shmuel and Others, Case concerning the events of 29 October 1956 in Kafr Qassem, Judgement of 3 April 1959, Appeal
No. 279-283/58, Psakim (Judgements of the District Courts of Israel), Vol. 44, p. 362; publication of the English version of the judgement in Palestine Yearbook of International Law, Vol. 2, 1985, p. 69-116.

Sakhwil case

High Court, Sakhwil et al. v. Commander of the Judea and Samaria Region, Judgement of 6 November 1979, Case H.C. 434/79, published in Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 10, 1980, p. 345.

Swarka case

Military Court, Military Prosecutor v. Swarka et al., Judgement of 1974, Case EA/412/71, published in Selected Judgements of Military Courts, Vol. 3, 1974, p. 206 and Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, Vol. 7, 1977, pp. 264–265.

Italy

Ercole case

Tribunal at Livorno, In re Valerio Ercole, Judgement, No. 439, 13 April 2000.
Court of Appeals at Florence, In re Valerio Ercole, Judgement, No. 652, 22 February 2001.

Hass and Priebke case
Military Tribunal of Rome (Tribunale Militare di Roma):
In re Hass and Priebke, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, No. 322, 22 July 1997 (Rassegna della Giustizia Militare, Nos. 1–2–3, 1999, p. 103).
Military Appeals Court (Corte Militare di Appello):
In re Hass and Priebke, Judgement on Appeal, No. 24, 7 March 1998 (Rassegna della Giustizia Militare, Nos. 4–5–6, 1999, pp. 25–130).
Supreme Court of Cassation (Corte Suprema di Cassazione, Sezione I Penale):
In re Hass and Priebke, Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, No. 1295, 16 November 1998 (Rassegna della Giustizia Militare, Nos. 4–5–6, 1999, pp. 145–196).

Kappler case
Military Tribunal of Rome, In re Kappler, Judgement, 20 July 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1953, p. 471, Case No. 151.

Priebke case
Military Tribunal of Rome:
In re Priebke, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, No. 305, 1 August 1996 (Rassegna della Giustizia Militare, Nos. 1–2–3, 1999, pp. 27–78).
Supreme Court of Cassation (Corte Suprema di Cassazione, Sezione I Penale):
In re Priebke, Judgement Cancelling Verdict of First Instance (Trial of Second Instance), 15 October 1996 (Rassegna della Giustizia Militare, Nos. 1–2–3, 1999, pp. 79–82).

Schintlholzer case
Military Tribunal of Verona, In re Alois Schintlholzer ed altro, Judgement of 15 November 1988, published in Rassegna della Giustizia Militare, Bimestrale di Diritto e Procedura Penale Militare, 1989, p. 344.

Japan

Apology for the Kamishisuka Slaughter of Korean case
Tokyo District Court:
X. and al. v. The State of Japan, Claim for Apology for the Kamishisuka Slaughter of Korean case, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 27 July 1995, published in Hanrei Jiho, No. 1563, p. 125.
Tokyo High Court:
Judgement on Appeal, 7 August 1996, published in Horitsu Shinbun, No. 1244, p. 6, English version of judgement published in Japanese Annual of International Law, Vol. 40, 1997, p. 116.

Dutch Nationals Claims case
Tokyo District Court, Civil Division No. 6, Sjoerd Lapré et al. v. Japan, Claims for compensation from Japan arising from injuries suffered by former POWs and civilian internees of the Netherlands, Judgement of 30 November 1998, Claim No. 1218 (Civil), 1994, published in Hanrei Taiumzu, Vol. 991, pp. 262, publication of the English version of the judgement in The Japanese Annual of International Law, Vol. 42, 1999, p. 143.

Ex-Allied Nationals Claims case
Tokyo District Court, Civil Division No. 31, Arthur Titherington et al. v. Japan, Claims for compensation from Japan arising from injuries suffered by former POWs and civilian internees of the ex-allied Powers, Judgement of 26 November 1998, Claim No. 1382 (Civil), 1995.

Filippino "Comfort Women" Claims case
Tokyo District Court, Henson et. al. v. Japan, Judgement of 9 October 1998, published in Shomu Geppo, Vol. 45, 1597, publication of the English version of the judgement in The Japanese Annual of International Law, Vol. 42, 1999, p. 170.
Ko Otsu Hei incidents case
Yamaguchi Lower Court:
Shimonoseki Branch, Section 1, Ko Otsu Hei incidents case, Judgement of 27 April 1998, published in Hanrei Jiho, No. 1642, 21 August 1998, p. 24.
Hiroshima High Court:
Appeal of the Ko Otsu Hei incidents case, Judgement of 29 March 2001, published as "The Kanpu-Judgement" in Hanrei Jiho No. 1759, (2001).
Religious Organisation Hokekyoji case
Chiba District Court, Religious Organisation Hokekyoji et al. v. Prefectural Governor of Chiba, 10 April 1956, published in Gyoseijiken Saibanreishu, Vol. 7, p. 988.
Shimoda case
District Court of Tokyo, Ryuichi Shimoda et Aal. v. The State, Judgement of 7 December 1963, published in ILR, Vol. 32, 1966, p. 626.
Siberian Detainees case
Tokyo District Court:
Compensation claim of the Siberian detainees, Tomoya Kanbayashi et al. v. Japan, Judgement in Trial of First Instance, 4 April 1989, Case Nos. 1981 (WA) 4024, 1981 (WA) 8983, 1982 (WA) 731 and 1985 (WA) 12166, published in Japanese Annual of International Law, Vol. 32 (1989), p. 125.
Tokyo High Court:
Judgement in Trial of Second Instance, 5 March 1993, published in Japanese Annual of International Law, Vol. 37 (1994), p. 129.
Supreme Court:
Judgement in Trial of Third Instance, 13 March 1997, published in Hanrei Jiho, No. 1607, p. 11.
Suikosha case
District Court of Tokyo, Tokyo Suikosha v. Tokyo Mesonic Lodge Association et al., Judgement of 28 February 1966, published in Kakyusaibansho Minji Saibanreishu, 1966, Vol. 17, p. 108.
Takada case
District Court of Tokyo, Takada Sadakichi v. State, Judgement of 28 January 1959, published in Gyoseijiken Saibanreishu, 1959, Vol. 10, p. 139.
Zhang Baoheng and Others case
Fukuoka District Court, Zhang Baoheng and Others v. Mitsui Mining Company and the State of Japan, Judgement of 26 April 2002.

Malaysia
Ali case
Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (UK), Mohamed Ali and another v. Public Prosecutor, Judgement of 29 July 1968, published in Law Reports, Vol. 1, Appeal Cases, 1969, pp. 430–455.

Mexico
Cavallo extradition case
Federal Court of the First Circuit, Decision, 11 January 2001.

Netherlands

Ahlbrecht case
Special Court of Cassation, In re SS Member Ahlbrecht, Judgement of 17 February 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1951, p. 196, Case No. 92.

Ahmed case
Council of State (Raad van State), Administrative Law Division, Case between A.M. Ahmed, of Somali nationality, and the State Secretary of Justice, Case No. R02.92.2322, Judgement of 20 December 1996.

Awochi case
Temporary Court-Martial in Batavia, Trial of Washio Awochi, published in WCR, Vol. XIII, 1949, p. 122.

Burghof case
Special Court of Cassation, In re Burghof, Judgement of 17 October 1949, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 551, Case No. 195.

Chantirakumar case
Council of State (Raad van State), Administrative Law Division, Case between S. Chantirakumar, of Sri Lankan nationality, and the State Secretary of Justice, Case Nos. R02.93.5977 and R02.93.6246, Judgement of 2 September 1997.

Esau case
Special Criminal Court at Hertogenbosch, In re Esau, Judgement of 27 April 1948, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 482, Case No. 177.
Special Court of Cassation, Judgement on Appeal of 21 February 1949, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 482, Case No. 177.

Enkelstroth case
Special Court (War Criminals) at Arnhem, In re Enkelstroth, Judgement of 20 February 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1953, p. 685, Case No. 222.

Fiebig case
Special Criminal Court at The Hague, In re Fiebig, published in AD, Judgement of 28 June 1949, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 487, Case No. 180.

Hamoud case
Council of State (Raad van State), Administrative Law Division, Case between M. Hamoud, stateless, and the State Secretary of Justice, Case No. R02.94.0802, Judgement of 11 September 1997.

J. T. case
District Court of The Hague, J. T. v. State of the Netherlands, Judgement of 13 April 1949, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 378, Case No. 127.

Knesević case
Supreme Court, Prosecution v. Darko Knesević, Judgement of 11 November 1997, Case No. 3717, Besch, Nederlandse Jurisprudentie 1998, p. 463; unofficial English translation published in YIHL, Vol. 1, 1998, pp. 601–607.

Koshiro case
(East Indies) Temporary Court-Martial of Makassar, In re Koshiro, Judgement of 5 February 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1955, p. 210, Case No. 97.

Motomura case
(East Indies) Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar, In re Motomura and Others, Judgement of 18 July 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1951, p. 309, Case No. 133.

Notomi Sueo case
(East Indies) Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar, In re Notomi Sueo and Others, Judgement of 4 January 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1951, p. 208, Case No. 96.

Pilz case
District Court of The Hague (Special Criminal Chamber), In re Pilz, Judgement of 21 December 1949 and Special Court of Cassation, Judgement of 5 July 1950, International Law Reports (ILR), Vol. 17, p. 391, Case No. 123.
Rauter case
Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague:
In re Rauter, Judgement of 4 May 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1953, p. 434, Case No. 131.
Special Court of Cassation:
In re Rauter, Judgement of 12 January 1949, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 526, Case No. 193.
Red Cross Emblem case
Supreme Court (Minor Offences Division), In re Ernest Andreas Josephus Maria van A., Judgement of 15 May 1979, published in Nederlandse Jurisprudentie, 1979, p. 1543, Case No. 484.
Rohrig and Others case
Special Court of Cassation, In re Rohrig, Brunner and Heinze, Judgement of 15 May 1950, published in ILR, Vol. 17, 1956, p. 393, Case No. 125.
Silbertanne murders case
Special Court of Cassation, In re "Silbertanne" murders, Judgement of 24 June 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 397, Case No. 170.
Wingten case
Special Court of Cassation, In re Wingten, Judgement of 6 July 1949, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 484, Case No. 178.
Zimmerman case
Special Court of Cassation, In re Zimmerman, Judgement of 21 November 1949, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 552, Case No. 196.
Zühlke case
Special Court in Amsterdam:
Trial of Willy Zühlke, Judgement of 3 August 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1948, p. 415-416, Case No. 122 and p. 417, Case No. 123.
Special Court of Cassation:
Trial of Willy Zühlke, Judgement of 6 December 1948, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1948, p. 493, Case No. 156, p. 494, Case No. 157, p. 499, Case No. 158, p. 533, Case No. 175; both Judgements published in WCR, Vol. XIV, pp. 139 ff., Case No. 89.

Nigeria
Nwaoga case
Supreme Court, Pius Nwaoga v. State, Judgement of 3 March 1972, published in ILR, Vol. 52, 1979, p. 494.

Norway
Bruns case
Eidsivating Court of Appeal (sitting as the Court of first instance):
In re Richard Wilhelm Hermann Bruns and Others, Judgement of 20 March 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 391, Case No. 167, and in WCR, Vol. III, pp. 15 ff., Case No. 12.
Supreme Court:
In re Richard Wilhelm Hermann Bruns and Others, Judgement, 3 July 1946, published in WCR, Vol. III, pp. 15 ff., Case No. 12.

Flesch case
Frostating Court of Appeal (sitting as the Court of first instance):
In re Gerhard Friedrich Ernst Flesch, Judgement, 2 December 1946, published in WCR, Vol. VI, pp. 111 ff., Case No. 36.
Supreme Court:
In re Gerhard Friedrich Ernst Flesch, Decision, 12 February 1948, published in WCR, Vol. VI, pp. 111 ff., Case No. 36.
Hans case
Court of Appeal, In re Hans, Judgement of 17 January 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1951, p. 305, Case No. 130.
Klinge case
Supreme Court, Public Prosecutor v. Klinge, Judgement of 27 February 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 262, Case No. 113.

Pakistan
Pakistan Armed Forces Nursing Services Act
Federal Shariat Court (FSC), In re The Pakistan Armed Forces Nursing Services Act 1952, etc., Judgement of 13 October 1983, published in All Pakistan Legal Decisions (PLD), Vol. XXXVII, 1985, FSC 365.

Philippines
Kuroda case
Supreme Court, Kuroda v. Jalandoni andet al., G.R. No. L-2662, Judgement of 26 March 1949.
Margen case
Supreme Court, The People of the Philippines v. Dario Margen et al., Judgement of 30 March 1950, published in Reports of Cases Decided by the Supreme Court of the Philippines from 11 November 1949 to 31 March 1950, Vol. 85, pp. 839–842.

Poland
Greiser case
Supreme National Tribunal of Poland at Poznan, In re Greiser, Judgement of 7 July 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 387, Case No. 166.
Hoess trial
Supreme National Tribunal of Poland, Trial of Obersturmbannfürher Rudolf Franz Ferdinand Hoess, Judgement of 11–29 March 1947, published in WCR, Vol. VII, 1948, p. 11.

Russia
Law on Removed Cultural Property case
Constitutional Court, Decision concerning verification of the constitutionality of the Federal Law on cultural property transferred into the USSR in consequence of World War II, and being found in the territory of the Russian Federation, Decision of 20 July 1999, N 12-P, published in Sobranya Zokonodatyelstva RF, No. 30, 26 July 1999, p. 3989, YIHL, Vol. 2, 1999, pp. 403–408.
Khamzaev case
Basmanny District Court, Abdullah Khamzaev v. Ministry of Defence and Russian Government, Judgement of 11 May 2001.

Situation in Chechnya case
Constitutional Court, Legality of the Presidential Decrees and Federal Government's Resolution on the Situation in Chechnya, Judgement of 31 July 1995, published in Human Rights Law Journal, Vol. 17, No. 3-6, 15 October 1996, pp. 133–139.

Senegal
Hissène Habré case
Dakar Regional Court:
Indictment, 3 February 2000.
Dakar Court of Appeal (Chambre d'accusation):
Ministère Public et François Diouf v. Hissène Habré, Judgement No. 135, 4 July 2000.
Court of Cassation (First Chamber for Criminal Matters):
Souleymane Guengueng and Others v. Hissène Habré, Judgement No. 14, 20 March 2001.

South Africa
Azapo case
Cape Provincial Division:
The Azanian Peoples' Organization (Azapo) and Others v. Truth and Reconciliation Commission and Others, Cape Provincial Division, Case No. 4895/96, Judgement of 6 May 1996.
Constitutional Court:
The Azanian Peoples' Organization (Azapo) v. The President of the Republic of South Africa, Case CCT 17/96, Judgement of 25 July 1996.
Werner case
Appeal Division, Rex v. Werner and Another, Judgement of 20 May 1947.

Spain
Pinochet case
Sala de lo Penal de la Audiencia Nacional, Sección 1ª, Auto confirmando la jurisdicción de España para conocer de los crímenes de genocidio y terrorismo cometidos durante la dictadura chilena, Judgement of 5 November 1998, published in La Ley, Revista Jurídica Española, 1998, No. 11.191, pp. 1850–1853.

Switzerland
Grabež case
Military Tribunal at Lausanne, Prosecutor v. Goran Grabež, Judgement of 18 April 1997, published in AJIL, Vol. 92, 1998, p. 78.
Musema case
Federal Court, Judgement 1A.36/1997, 28 April 1997, published in Arrêts du Tribunal Fédéral (ATF), Vol. 123, Part II, p. 175.
Niyonteze case
Military Tribunal at Lausanne:
Division 2, Prosecutor v. Fulgence Niyonteze, Burgomaster (Mayor) of a municipality in Rwanda, Judgement, 30 April 1999.
Military Court of Appeals:
Geneva, Judgement, 26 May 2000.
Military Court of Cassation:
Yverdon-les-Bains, Judgement, 27 April 2001.

Spring case
Federal Court, Second Division for Administrative Law, J. Spring v. Swiss Confederation, Judgement of 21 January 2000, published in (Arrêts du Tribunal Fédéral) Vol. 126, Part II, p. 145.

United Kingdom

Almelo case
Military Court at Almelo (Netherlands), Trial of Otto Sandrock and Three Others (Almelo trial), Judgement of 24–26 November 1945, published in WCR, Vol. I, 1946, p. 35.

Auschwitz and Belsen case
Military Court at Lüneberg, In re Kramer and Others (Auschwitz and Belsen concentration camps case), Judgement of 17 November 1945, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 267, Case No. 114.

Essen Lynching case
Military Court at Essen, The Essen Lynching Case, Judgement of 21–22 December 1945, published in WCR, Vol. I, 1946, p. 88.

Heering case
Military Court at Hannover, Trial of Arno Heering, Judgement of 25–26 January, 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XI, 1949, p. 79.

Le Paradis case
Court No. 5 of the Curiohaus, Hamburg-Altona, Trial of Fritz Knoechlein, Judgement of 11–25 October 1948, published in AD, 1946, p. 248.

Moehle case
Military Court at Hamburg, Moehle case, Judgement of 16 October 1946, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1946, p. 248.

Mackensen case
Military Court at Hannover, Trial of Willi Mackensen, Judgement of 28 January 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XI, 1949, p. 81.

Peleus case
Military Court at Hamburg, The Peleus Trial, Judgement of 17–20 October 1945, published in WCR, Vol. I, 1946, p. 1.

Pinochet extradition case
UK, House of Lords, Regina v. Bartle and the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis and Others Ex Parte Pinochet Regina v. Evans and Another and the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis and Others Ex Parte Pinochet (On Appeal from a Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division), Lord Browne-Wilkinson, Lord Goff of Chieveley, Lord Hope of Craighead, Lord Hutton Lord Saville of Newdigate, Lord Millett, Lord Phillips of Worth Matravers, Judgement, 24 March 1999.

Rauer case
Military Court at Wuppertal, Trial of Major Karl Rauer and Six Others, Judgement of 18 February 1946, published in WCR, Vol. IV, 1948, p. 113.

Renoth case
Military Court at Elten, Trial of Hans Renoth and Three Others, Judgement of 8–10 January 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XI, 1949, p. 76.

Rhode case
Military Court at Wuppertal, Trial of Werner Rhode and Eight Others, Judgement of 29 May–1 June 1946, published in WCR, Vol. V, 1948, p. 54.

Sandrock case
Military Court at Almelo, In re Sandrock and Others, Judgement of 26 November 1945, published in AD, Vol. 13, 1951, p. 297, Case No. 124.
Sawoniuk case
Old Bailey, London, R. v. Anthony Sawoniuk, Judgement of 1 April 1999.
Supreme Court of Judicature, Court of Appeal (Criminal Division), R. v. Anthony Sawoniuk, Case No. EWCA Crim 9, Judgement on Appeal of 10 February 2000.
August Schmidt case
Military Court at Hamburg, Trial of August Schmidt, Judgement of February 1947, referred to in US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb (High Command Trial) case, published in WCR, Vol. XII, 1949, p. 1.
Student case
Military Court at Lüneberg, In re Student, Judgement of 10 May 1946, published in AD, Vol. 15, 1951, p. 296, Case No. 123.
Von Falkenhorst case
Military Court at Brunswick, Trial of Generaloberst Nickolaus Von Falkenhorst, Judgement of 29 July–2 August 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XI, 1949, p. 18.
Von Ruchteschell case
Military Court at Hamburg, Trial of Helmuth Von Ruchteschell, Judgement of 5–21 May 1947, published in WCR, Vol. IX, 1949, p. 82.
Wickman case
Military Court at Hamburg, Hans Wickman case, Judgement of 26 November 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XV, 1949, p. 133.
Zyklon B case
Military Court at Hamburg, Trial of Bruno Tesch and Two Others (The Zyklon B case), 1–8 March 1946, published in WCR, Vol. I, p. 93, Case No. 9.

United States of America
Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, In re Altstötter and Others (The Justice Trial), Judgement of 4 December 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1951, p. 278, Case No. 126.
Barclays French Bank Settlement case
US District Court of the Eastern District of New York, Fernande Bodner et al. v. Banque Paribas et al., Case No. 97 Civ. 7433 (SJ) (E.D.N.Y.);
Settlement Agreement, 8 July 1999;
Order granting preliminary approval, 10 April 2000;
Supplemental Order, 4 June 2001;
Notice of pendency of class action, proposed settlement of class action and settlement hearing, 4 June 2001.
Baptist Churches case
District Court for the Northern District of California, American Baptist Churches in the USA et al. v. Edwin Meese III as Attorney General of the United States and Alan Nelson as Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, Judgement of 24 March 1989, published in Federal Supplement, Vol. 712, p. 756, Case No. C-85-3255 RFP.

Brandt (The Medical Trial) case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, In re Brandt and Others (The Medical Trial), Judgement of 20 August 1947, published in 14 AD, 1951, p. 296, Case No. 128.

Calley case
Army Court of Military Review:
United States v. William L. Calley, Judgement of 16 February 1973, Court-Martial Reports, Vol. 46, p. 1131.
Court of Military Appeals:
United States v. William L. Calley, Judgement of 21 December 1973, published in United States Court of Military Appeals Reports, Vol. 22, p. 534.

Comfort Women case
District Court of Columbia, Comfort Women case, Hwang Geum Joo et al. v. Japan, Case No. (Civil Action) 00–02233 (HHK), Memorandum Opinion and Judgement, 4 October 2001.

Demjanjuk case
Court of Appeals, John Demjanjuk v. Joseph Petrovsky et al., Judgement of 31 October 1985, published in Federal Reporter, Vol. 776, p. 571, Case No. 85-3435.

Dickinson case
Court of Military Appeal, United States v. Dickinson, 30 September 1955, Court-Martial Reporter, Vol. 20, p. 154.

Dostler case
Military Commission at Rome, The Dostler case, Trial of General Anton Dostler, Commander of the 75th German Army Corps, Judgement of 8–12 October 1945, published in WCR, Vol. I, 1946, pp. 22–34.

Filartiga case
Court of Appeals:
Filartiga v. Peña-Irala, Judgement of 30 June 1980, published in Federal Reporter, 1980, Vol. 630, p. 876 and Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1980, p. 252.
District Court of the Eastern District of New York:
Filartiga v. Peña-Irala, Judgement of 10 January 1984, published in Federal Supplement, 1984, Vol. 577, p. 860

FIS case
District Court for the District of Columbia, Jane Doe et al v. Islamic Salvation Front (FIS) and Anwar Haddam, Judgement of 2 February 1998, published in Federal Supplement, Vol. 993, 1998, p. 3.

Flick case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, In re Flick and Others (The Flick case), Judgement of 22 December 1947, published in AD, Vol. 14, 1951, p. 266, Case No. 122.

Ford v. García case
Federal Court of Florida, Ford v. García, Judgement of 3 November 2000, excerpts published in AJIL, Vol. 95, 2001, p. 395.

Goldstar case
Court of Appeals (Fourth Circuit), Goldstar (Panama) SA v. United States, Judgement of 16 June 1992, published in ILR, Vol. 96, 1994, p. 55.

Griffen case
Army Board of Review, United States v. Griffen, Judgement of 2 July 1968, published in Court-Martial Report, Vol. 39, p. 586.

Hadamar Sanatorium case
Military Commission in Wiesbaden, Trial of Alfons Klein and Six Others (The Hadamar Trial), 8–15 October 1945, published in WCR, Vol. I, p. 46, Case No. 4.

Hagendorf case
Intermediate Military Government Court at Dachau, Trial of Heinz Hagendorf, Judgement of 8–9 August 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XIII, 1949, p. 146.

Holocaust Victim Assets case
District Court for the Eastern District of New York, In re Holocaust Victim Assets Ligitation, Judgement of 26 July 2000, published in Federal Supplement 105, 2000, p. 139.

Isayama case
Military Commission in Shanghai, Trial of Lieutenant General Harukei Isayama and Seven Others, Judgement of 25 July 1946, International Law Studies: Documents on Prisoners of War, Naval War College, R.I., Naval War College Press, Vol. 60, 1979, pp. 345–348.

Jaluit Atoll case
Military Commission in the Far East, The Jaluit Atoll Case, Kwajalein Atoll, Kwajalein Island, Marshall Island, Judgement of 7–13 December 1945, published in WCR, Vol. I, 1946, p. 71.

John Schultz case
Court of Military Appeals, United States v. John G. Schultz, Judgement of 5 August 1952, Court-Martial Reports, Vol. 4, p. 104, Case No. 394.

J. P. Morgan French Bank Settlement case
US District Court of the Eastern District of New York, Anne-Marie Benisti et al. v. Banque Paribas et al., Case No. 98 Civ. 7851 (SJ) (E.D.N.Y.); Settlement Agreement, 29 September 2000;
Order granting preliminary approval, 10 April 2000;
Supplementary Order, 4 June 2001;
Notice of pendency of class action, proposed settlement of class action and settlement hearing, 4 June 2001.

Kamal Bamadhaj case
District Court of Boston, Helen Todd v. Gen. Sintong Panjaitan, Civ. Act. No. 92-12255-PBS (D.Mass.1994)(1994 WL 827111), Judgement of 26 October 1994.

Karadžić case
Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit:
Kadić v. Karadžić and Jane Doe I and Jane Doe II v. Karadžić, Decision of 13 October 1995, Case Nos. 1541, 1544 – August term 1994, 70 F.3d 232 (2d Cir. 1995), published in ILM, Vol. 34, 1995, p. 1595.
District Court, Southern District of New York:
Kadić v. Karadžić, 93 Civ. 1163 (PKL), 16 August 2000.
District Court, Southern District of New York:
Jane Doe I et al. v. Radovan Karadžić, 93 Civ. 878 (PKL), 4 October 2000.

Kikuchi and Mahuchi case
Military Commission at Yokohama, Trial of Jutaro Kikuchi and Masaak Mahuchi, Judgement of 20 April 1946, referred to in WCR, Vol. XIII, 1949, p. 152.

Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, The I. G. Farben Trial, Trial of Carl Krauch and twenty-Two Others, Judgement of 14 August 1947–29 July 1948, published in WCR, Vol. X, 1949, p. 1.

Krupp case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, The Krupp Trial, Trial of Alfried Felix Alwyn Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach and Eleven Others, Judgement of 17 November 1947–30 June 1948, published in WCR, Vol. X, 1949, p. 69.

Leo Handel case
District Court, Central District, California, Leo Handel et al. v. Andrija Artukovic, Judgement of 31 January 1985, Case No. 84-1411 PAR (Kx), published in International Law Reports (ILR), Vol. 79, 1989, p. 397.

Levy case
United States Army Board of Review, United States v. Howard B. Levy, Judgement of 29 August 1968,Court-Martial Reports, Vol. 39, p. 672, Case No. CM 416 463.

List (Hostages Trial) case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, The Hostages Trial, Trial of Wilhelm List and Others, Judgement of 8 July 1947–19 February 1948, published in WCR, Vol. VIII, 1949, p. 34.

Maelzer case
Military Commission in Florence, Trial of Lieutenant General Kurt Maelzer, Trial of 9–14 September 1946, published in WCR, Vol. XI, 1949, p. 53.

Milch case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, United States v. Milch, Judgement of 20 December 1946–17 April 1947, published in WCR, Vol. VII, 1949, p. 27.

Mochizuki case
Carmen Mochizuki et al. v. The United States, Case No. 97-294C, United States Court of Federal Claims, Settlement Agreement, Opinion and Order, 25 January 1999, published in Federal Claims Reporter, Vol. 43, 1999, p. 97.
Order Granting Preliminary Approval of the Settlement Agreement, 11 June 1998, published in Federal Claims Reporter, Vol. 41, 1998, p. 54.

Morrison case
Court of Claims, Morrison v. The United States of America, Judgement of 20 February 1974, Federal Reporter, Vol. 492, p. 1219.

Mushikiwabo case
District Court for the Southern District of New York, Mushikiwabo et al v. Barayagwiza, Judgement of 8 April 1996, Slip opinion, District Court for the Southern District of New York, Civil Docket, Vol. 94, p. 3627.

Pohl case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, United States v. Oswald Pohl and Others, Judgement of 3 November 1947, reprinted in Trials of War Criminals Before the Nuremberg Military Tribunals under Control Council Law No. 10, Vol. V, 1997, p. 958.

Princz case
District Court for the District of Columbia:
Princz v. Federal Republic of Germany, Judgement of 23 December 1992, published in Federal Supplement, Vol. 813, 1992, p. 22.
Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia:
Princz v. Federal Republic of Germany, Judgement of 1 July 1994, published in Federal Reporter, Vol. 26, 1994, p. 1166.

Quirin case
Supreme Court, Ex Parte Quirin et al., Judgement of 31 July 1942, published in AD, Vol. 10, 1945, p. 564, Case No. 168.

Sawada case
Military Commission at Shanghai, Trial of Lieutenant-General Shigeru Sawada and Three Others, Judgement of 27 February–15 April 1946, published in WCR, Vol. V, 1948, p. 1.
Schmid case
General Military Government Court at Dachau, In re Max Schmid, Judgement of 19 May 1947, WCR, Vol. XIII, 1949, p. 151.
Schultz case
Court of Military Appeals, United States v. Frank C. Schultz, Judgement of 7 March 1969, Court-Martial Reports, Vol. 39, p. 133, Case No. 21,055.
Skorzeny case
General Military Court of the US Zone of Germany, Trial of Otto Skorzeny and Others, Judgement of 18 August–9 September 1947, published in WCR, Vol. IX, 1949, p. 90.
Thiele case
Military Commission at Augsburg, Trial of Gunther Thiele and Georg Steinert, Judgement of 13 June 1945, published in WCR, Vol. III, 1948, p. 56.
Von Leeb (The High Command Trial) case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, The German High Command Trial, Trial of Wilhelm Von Leeb and Thirteen Others, Judgement of 30 December 1947–28 October 1948, published in WCR, Vol. XII, 1949, p. 1.
Ward case
Supreme Court, Ward v. State of Texas, Judgement of 1 June 1942, US Reports, Vol. 316, 1942, p. 547.
Weizsaecker case
Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, In re Weizsaecker and Others (Ministries Trial), Judgement of 14 April 1949, published in AD, Vol. 16, 1955, p. 344.
Yamashita case
Supreme Court, In re Tomoyuki Yamashita, Judgement of 4 February 1946, published in AJIL, Vol. 40, 1946, p. 432.
Yochio and Others case
Military Commission at the Mariana Islands, Trial against Tachibana Yochio and 13 others, Judgement, 2–15 August 1946, referred to in WCR, Vol. XIII, 1949, p. 152.

Yugoslavia, Federal Republic of Ademi case
Communal Court of Mitrovica, The Public Prosecutor v. Lulzim Ademi, Case No. P/29/99, Judgement of 30 August 2000.
Trajković case
District Court of Gnjilan:
The Public Prosecutor v. Momcilo Trajković, Case No. P 68/2000, Judgement of 6 March 2001.
Supreme Court of Kosovo:
The Public Prosecutor v. Momcilo Trajković, Case No. AP. 145/2001, Decision Act of 30 November 2001.
International Prosecutor for the Office of the Public Prosecutor of Kosovo:
The Public Prosecutor v. Momcilo Trajković, Case No. PP 68/2000, K. 31/99, Opinion on Appeals of Convictions of 30 November 2001.

INTERNATIONAL CASE–LAW

African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (ACiHPR)

Abubakar v. Ghana
Communication No. 103/93, Alhassan Abubakar v. Ghana, Decision, 20th Session, Grand Bay, 21–31 October 1996.

AI v. Malawi
Communication No. 68/92, Amnesty International (on behalf of Orton and Vera Chirwa) v. Malawi, Decision, 17th Session, Lomé, 13–22 March 1995.

Amnesty International and Others v. Sudan
Communication Nos. 48/90, 50/91, 52/91 and 89/93, Amnesty International and Others v. Sudan, Decision, 26th Session, Kigali, 1–15 November 1999.

Association of Members of the Episcopal Conference of East Africa v. Sudan Communication No. 89/93, Association of Members of the Episcopal Conference of East Africa v. Sudan, Decision, 26th Session, Kigali, 1–15 November 1999.

Avocats Sans Frontières v. Burundi
Communication No. 231/99, Avocats Sans Frontières (on behalf of Gaëtan Bwampamye) v. Burundi, Decision, 28th Session, Cotonou, 23 October–6 November 2000.

Centre For Free Speech v. Nigeria
Communication No. 206/97, Centre For Free Speech v. Nigeria, Decision, 26th Session, Kigali, 15 November 1999.

Civil Liberties Organisation v. Chad
Communication No. 74/92, Civil Liberties Organisation v. Chad, Decision, 18th Session, Praia, 11 October 1995.

Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (129/94)
Communication No. 129/94, Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria, Decision, 17th Session, Lomé, 13–22 March 1995.

Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (151/96)
Communication No. 151/96, Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria, Decision, 26th Session, Kigali, 15 November 1999.

Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria
Communication No. 218/98, Civil Liberties Organisation, Legal Defence Centre, Legal Defence and Assistance Project v. Nigeria, Decision, 29th Session, Tripoli, 23 April–7 May 2001.

Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (60/91)
Communication No. 60/91, Constitutional Rights Project (on behalf of Waheb Akamu, G. Adeaga, and Others) v. Nigeria, Decision, 17th Session, Lomé, 13–22 March 1995.

Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (87/93)
Communication No. 87/93, Constitutional Rights Project (on behalf of Zamani Lakwot and 6 Others) v. Nigeria, Decision, 17th Session, Lomé, 13–22 March 1995.
Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (148/96)
Communication No. 148/96, Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria, Decision, 26th Session, Kigali, 15 November 1999.
International Pen and Others v. Nigeria
Communications Nos. 137/94, 139/94, 154/96 and 161/97, International Pen, Constitutional Rights Project, Interrights, Civil Liberties Organisation (on behalf of Ken Saro-Wiwa Jr.) v. Nigeria, Decision, 24th Session, Banjul, 22–31 October 1998.
Krishna Achutan v. Malawi
Communication No. 64/92, Krishna Achutan (on behalf of Aleke Banda) v. Malawi, Decision, 16th Session, Banjul, 25 October–30 November 1994.
Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania
Communication No. 54/91, Malawi African Association v. Mauritania (combined with Communications No. 61/91, Amnesty International v. Mauritania, No. 98/93, Ms. Sarr Diop and Others v. Mauritania, Nos. 164/97–196/97, Collectif des Veuves et Ayants-droit v. Mauritania and No. 210/98, Association Mauritanienne des Droits de l'Homme v. Mauritania), Decision, 27th Session, Algiers, 11 May 2000.
Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria
Communication No. 224/98, Media Rights Agenda (on behalf of Niran Malaolu) v. Nigeria, Decision, 28th Session, Cotonou, 23 October–6 November 2000.
Mouvement Burkinabé des Droits de l'Homme et des Peuples v. Burkina Faso Communication No. 204/97, Mouvement Burkinabé des Droits de l'Homme et des Peuples v. Burkina Faso, Decision, 29th Session, Tripoli, 23 April–7 May 2001.
Pagnoulle v. Cameroon
Communication No. 39/90, Annette Pagnoulle (on behalf of Abdoulaye Mazou) v. Cameroon, Decision, 21st Session, Nouakchott, 15–24 April 1997.
RADDH v. Zambia
Communication No. 71/92, Rencontre Africaine pour la Défense des Droits de l'Homme v. Zambia, Decision, 20th Session, Grand Bay, 21–31 October 1996.
Union Inter-Africaine des Droits de l'Homme and Others v. Angola
Communication No. 159/96, Union Inter-Africaine des Droits de l'Homme, Fédération Internationale des Ligues des Droits de l'Homme, Rencontre Africaine des Droits de l'Homme, Organisation Nationale des Droits de l'Homme au Sénégal and Association Malienne des Droits de l'Homme v. Angola, Decision, 22nd Session, Banjul, 2–11 November 1997.

Arbitral Tribunals

Cysne case
Special Arbitral Tribunal, Cysne Case (Portugal v. Germany), Decision of 30 June 1930, UNRIAA, Volume II, p. 1035.
Naulilaa case
Special Arbitral Tribunal, The Naulilaa Case (Portugal v. Germany), Decision of 31 July 1928, UNRIAA, Volume II, p. 1012.

Eritrea-Ethiopia Claims Commission

Prisoners of War, Eritrea's Claim
Partial Award, Prisoners of War, Eritrea's Claim 17, The Hague, 1 July 2003.

Prisoners of War, Ethiopia's Claim
Partial Award, Prisoners of War, Ethiopia's Claim 4, The Hague, 1 July 2003.

European Commission of Human Rights (ECiHR)

Can case
Elvan Can v. Austria, Application No. 9300/81, Report adopted on 12 July 1984, annexed to Elvan Can v. Austria, Judgement of the ECtHR of 30 September 1985, Series A No. 96, p. 13; full text in: European Court of Human Rights publications, Series B No. 79, p. 12.

Chrysostomos and Papachrysostomou v. Turkey
Metropolitan Chrysostomos and Archimandrite Georgios Papachrysostomou v. Turkey, Applications Nos. 15299/89 and 15300/89, Report adopted on 8 July 1993, Decisions and Reports 86-B, p. 4.

Donnelly v. UK
Donnelly and 6 Others v. the United Kingdom, Applications Nos. 5577–5583/72, Decision of 15 December 1976 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 4, p. 85.

Dujardin and Others v. France
Laurence Dujardin and Others v. France, Application No. 16734/90, Decision of 2 September 1991 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 72(1992), pp. 236 ff.

Ensslin, Baader and Raspe v. FRG
Gudrun Ensslin, Andreas Baader and Jan Raspe v. Federal Republic of Germany, Applications Nos. 7572/76, 7586/76 and 7587/76, Decision of 8 July 1978 on the admissibility of the applications, Decisions and Reports 14, p. 64.

France and Others v. Turkey
France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden and the Netherlands v. Turkey, Applications Nos. 9940–9944/82 (joined), Decision of 6 December 1983 on the admissibility of the applications, Decisions and Reports 40, p. 143.

Greek case
Denmark, Norway, Sweden and the Netherlands v. Greece, Application Nos. 3321/67, 3322/67, 3323/67 and 3344/67, Report adopted on 5 November 1969, Yearbook of the European Convention on Human Rights, Vol. 12, 1969-II, p. 1.

Haase v. FRG
Dieter Haase v. Federal Republic of Germany, Application No. 7412/76, Report adopted on 12 July 1977, Decisions and Reports 11, p. 78.

Hazar and Acik v. Turkey
Nesrin Hazar, Gür Hazar and Rüstü Acik v. Turkey, Applications Nos. 16311/90, 16312/90 and 16313/90, Decision of 11 October 1991 on the admissibility of the applications, Decisions and Reports 72, p. 200.

Kröcher and Möller v. Switzerland
Gabriele Kröcher and Christian Möller v. Switzerland, Application No. 8463/78, Report adopted 16 December 1982, Decisions and Reports 26, p. 24.

Kurt v. Turkey
Koçeri and Üzeyir Kurt v. Turkey, Application No. 24276/94, Report adopted on 5 December 1996, annexed to ECtHR Judgement of 25 May 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III.

McFeeley and Others v. UK
Thomas McFeeley and Others v. the United Kingdom, Application No. 8317/78, Decision of 15 May 1980 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 20, p. 44.

McQuiston and Others v. UK
McQuiston and Others v. the United Kingdom, Application No. 11208/84, Decision of 4 March 1986 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 46, p. 182.

McVeigh, O'Neill and Evans v. UK
Bernard Leo McVeigh, Oliver Anthony O'Neill and Arthur Walter Evans v. the United Kingdom, Applications Nos. 8022/77, 8025/77 and 8027/77 (joined), Report adopted on 18 March 1981, Decisions and Reports 25, p. 15.

Ofner and Hopfinger v. Austria
Herbert Ofner and Alois Hopfinger v. Austria, Applications Nos. 524/59 and 617/59 (joined), Report of 23 November 1962, Yearbook of the European Convention on Human Rights, 1963.

Sakik, Türk, Alinak, Zana, Dicle and Dogan v. Turkey
S. Sakik, A. Türk, M. Alinak, L. Zana, M. H. Dicle and O. Dogan v. Turkey, Applications Nos. 23879/94, 23880/94, 23881/94, 23882/94 and 23883/94 (joined), Decision of 25 May 1995 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 81-A, p. 86.

Sargin and Yagci v. Turkey
Nihat Sargin and Nabi Yagci v. Turkey, Applications Nos. 14116/88 and 14117/88 (joined), Decision of 11 May 1989 on the admissibility of the applications, Decisions and Reports 61, p. 250.

Second Greek case
Denmark, Norway and Sweden v. Greece, Application No. 4448/70, Decision of 16 July 1970 on the admissibility of the application, Yearbook of the European Convention on Human Rights 1970, p. 120.

Selçuk and Asker v. Turkey
Selçuk and Asker v. Turkey, Applications Nos. 23184/94 and 23185/94, Report adopted on 28 November 1996 (not yet published).

Treholt v. Norway
Arne Treholt v. Norway, Application No. 14610/89, Decision of 9 July 1991 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 71, p. 168.

Van Droogenbroeck v. Belgium
Van Droogenbroeck v. Belgium, Application No. 7906/77, Decision of 5 July 1979 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 17, p. 59.

W. v. Ireland
W. v. Ireland, Application No. 9360/81, Decision of 28 February 1983 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 33, p. 211.

X v. Austria
X v. Austria, Application No. 6185/73, Decision of 29 May 1975 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 2, p. 68.

X v. FRG
X v. Federal Republic of Germany, Application No. 6946/75, Decision of 6 July 1976 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 6, p. 114.

X v. FRG
X v. Federal Republic of Germany, Application No. 10098/82, Decision of 7 May 1984 on the admissibility of the application, 8 EHRR 1986, p. 225.

X v. UK
X v. the United Kingdom, Application No. 8158/78, Decision of 10 July 1980 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 21, p. 95.
X v. UK
X v. the United Kingdom, Application No. 9054/80, Decision of 8 October 1982 on the admissibility of the application, Decisions and Reports 30, p. 113.

European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR)
Adolf v. Austria
Adolf v. Austria, Judgement of 26 March 1982, Series A No. 49.
A v. UK
A v. the United Kingdom, Judgement (Chamber) of 23 September 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.
Andersson v. Sweden
Margareta and Roger Andersson v. Sweden, Judgement of 25 February 1992, Series A No. 226-A.
Akdeniz and Others v. Turkey
Akdeniz and Others v. Turkey, Judgement (Merits and just Satisfaction) of 31 May 2001 (not yet published).
Akdivar and Others v. Turkey
Akdivar and Others v. Turkey, Judgement of 16 September 1996, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-IV.
Aksoy v. Turkey
Aksoy v. Turkey, Judgement of 18 December 1996, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI.
Albert and Le Compte case
Albert and Le Compte v. Belgium, Judgement of 10 February 1983, Series A No. 58.
Allenet de Ribemont v. France
Allenet de Ribemont v. France, Judgement of 10 February 1995, Series A No. 308.
A. P., M. P. and T. P. v. Switzerland
A. P., M. P. and T. P. v. Switzerland, Judgement of 29 August 1997, Reports of Judgements and Decisions 1997-V.
Averill v. UK
Averill v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 6 June 2000, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2000-VI.
Avsar v. Turkey
Avsar v. Turkey, Judgement of 10 July 2001, Reports of Judgements and Decisions 2001-VII.
Aydin v. Turkey
Aydin v. Turkey, Judgement of 25 September 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VI.
B. v. UK
B. v. UK, Judgement of 8 July 1987, Series A No. 21.
Belilos case
Belilos v. Switzerland, Judgement of 29 April 1988, Series A No. 132.
Belziuk v. Poland
Belziuk v. Poland, Judgement of 25 March 1998, Reports of Judgements and Decisions 1998-II.

Benthem case
Benthem v. the Netherlands, Judgement of 23 October 1985, Series A No. 97.
Boddaert v. Belgium
Boddaert v. Belgium, Judgement of 12 October 1992, Series A No. 235-D.
Borgers v. Belgium
Borgers v. Belgium, Judgement of 30 October 1991, Series A No. 214-B.
Bouamar case
Bouamar v. Belgium, Judgement of 29 February 1988, Series A No. 129.
Brannigan and McBride v. UK
Brannigan and McBride v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 26 May 1993, Series A No. 258-B.
Brogan and Others case
Brogan and Others v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 29 November 1988, Series A No. 145-B.
Bulut v. Austria
Bulut v. Austria, Judgement, 22 February 1996, Reports of Judgements and Decisions 1996-II.
Can v. Austria
Can v. Austria, Judgement of 30 September 1985, Series A No. 96.
Campbell and Cosans case
Campbell and Cosans v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 25 February 1982, Series A No. 48.
Campbell and Fell case
Campbell and Fell v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 28 June 1984, Series A No. 80.
Coëme and Others v. Belgium
Guy Coëme, Jean-Louis Mazy, Jean-Louis Stalport (originally, then his heirs), Auguste Merry Hermanus and Camille Javeau v. Belgium, Judgement of 22 June 2000, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2000-VII.
Colozza case
Colozza v. Italy, Judgement of 12 February 1985, Series A No. 89.
Corigliano case
Corigliano v. Italy, Judgement of 10 December 1982, Series A No. 57.
Cyprus case
Cyprus v. Turkey (Merits), Judgement of 10 May 2001, Reports of Judgements and Decisions 2001-IV.
De Cubber case
De Cubber v. Belgium, Judgement of 26 October 1984, Series A No. 86.
De Jong, Baljet and Van den Brink case
De Jong, Baljet and Van den Brink v. the Netherlands, Judgement of 22 May 1984, Series A No. 77.
Demiray v. Turkey
Demiray v. Turkey, Judgement of 21 November 2000, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2000-XII.
Deweer case
Deweer v. Belgium , Judgement of 27 February 1980, Series A No. 35.
De Wilde, Ooms and Versyp v. Belgium
De Wilde, Ooms and Versyp v. Belgium ("Vagrancy" case), Judgement of 18 June 1971, Series A No. 12.

Ekbatani v. Sweden
Ekbatani v. Sweden, Judgement of 26 May 1988, Series A No. 134.
Engel v. Netherlands
Engel v. the Netherlands, Judgement of 8 June 1976, Series A No. 22.
Ergi v. Turkey
Ergi v. Turkey, Judgement of 28 July 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV.
Eriksson case
Eriksson v. Sweden, Judgement of 22 June 1989, Series A No. 156.
Farmakopoulos v. Belgium
Farmakopoulos v. Belgium, Judgement of 27 March 1992, Series A No. 235-A.
F. C. B. v. Italy
F. C. B. v. Italy, Judgement of 28 August 1991, Series A No. 208-B.
Findlay v. UK
Findlay v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 25 February 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-I.
Fox, Campbell and Hartley
Fox, Campbell and Hartley v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 30 August 1990, Series A No. 182.
Funke case
Funke v. France, Judgement of 25 February 1993, Series A No. 256-A.
Golder v. UK
Golder v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 21 February 1975, Series A No. 18 (1975)
Gül v. Switzerland
Gül v. Switzerland, Judgement (Chamber) of 19 February 1996, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-I.
Hadjianastassiou v. Greece
Hadjianastassiou v. Greece, Judgement of 16 December 1992, Series A No. 252.
Herczegfalvy v. Austria
Herczegfalvy v. Austria, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction) of 24 September 1992, Series A No. 244.
Hokkanen v. Finland
Hokkanen v. Finland, Judgement of 23 September 1994, Series A No. 299-A.
Holm v. Sweden
Holm v. Sweden, Judgement of 25 November 1993, Series A No. 279-A.
Hussain v. UK
Hussain v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 21 February 1996, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-I.
Imbrioscia v. Switzerland
Imbrioscia v. Switzerland, Judgement of 24 November 1993, Series A No. 275.
Ireland v. UK
Ireland v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 18 January 1978, Series A No. 25.
Jabari v. Turkey
Jabari v. Turkey, Judgement of 11 July 2000, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2000-VIII.
J. J. v. the Netherlands
J. J. v. the Netherlands, Judgement of 27 March 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II.

Johnston and Others v. Ireland
Johnston and Others v. Ireland, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction) of 18 December 1986, Series A No. 112.
K. v. Austria
K. v. Austria, Judgement of 2 June 1993, Series A No. 255-B.
Kalogeropoulou and Others v. Greece and Germany
Aikaterini Kalogeropoulou and Others v. Greece and Germany, Case No. 59021/00, Decision on admissibility, 12 December 2002 (not yet published).
Kamasinski case
Kamasinski v. Austria, Judgement of 19 December 1989, Series A No. 168.
Kaya v. Turkey
Kaya v. Turkey, Judgement of 19 February 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-I.
Kemmache v. France
Kemmache v. France, Judgement of 27 November 1991, Series A No. 218.
K.-H. W. v. Germany
K.-H. W. v. Germany, Judgement of 22 March 2001 (not yet published).
Kokkinakis v. Greece
Kokkinakis v. Greece, Judgement of 25 May 1993, Series A No. 260-A.
Kolompar v. Belgium
Kolompar v. Belgium, Judgement of 24 September 1992, Series A No. 235-C.
König v. Germany
König v. Federal Republic of Germany (Merits), Judgement of 28 June 1978, Series A No. 27.
Kremzow v. Austria
Kremzow v. Austria, Judgement of 21 September 1993, Series A No. 268-B.
Kurt v. Turkey
Koçeri Kurt v. Turkey, Judgement of 25 May 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-III.
Lamy case
Lamy v. Belgium, Judgement of 30 March 1989, Series A No. 151.
Lawless case
G. R. Lawless v. Ireland (Merits), Judgement of 1 July 1961, Series A No. 3.
Letellier v. France
Letellier v. France, Judgement of 26 June 1991, Series A No. 207.
Loizidou v. Turkey
Preliminary Objections:
Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections), Judgement of 23 March 1995, Series A No. 310.
Merits:
Loizidou v. Turkey (Merits and Just Satisfaction), Judgement of 18 December 1996, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-VI.
Luedicke, Belkacem and Koç case
Luedicke, Belkacem and Koç v. Feredal Republic of Germany, Judgement of 28 November 1978, Series A No. 29.
McCann and Others v. UK
McCann and Others v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 27 September 1995, Series A No. 324.
McElhinney v. Ireland
McElhinney v. Ireland, Judgement (Merits) of 21 November 2001, Reports of Judgements and Decisions 2001-XI.

Matznetter v. Austria
Matznetter v. Austria, Judgement of 10 November 1969, Series A No. 10.
Megyeri v. Germany
Megyeri v. Germany, Judgement of 12 May 1992, Series A No. 237-A.
Mentes and Others v. Turkey
Mentes and Others v. Turkey, Judgement of 28 November 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VIII.
Moustaquim v. Belgium
Moustaquim v. Belgium, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction) of 18 February 1991, Series A No. 193.
Murray v. UK
Murray v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 28 October 1994, Series A No. 300-A.
Navarra v. France
Navarra v. France, Judgement of 23 November 1993, Series A No. 273-B.
Neumeister v. Austria
Neumeister v. Austria, Judgement (Merits) of 27 June 1968, Series A No. 8.
Olsson v. Sweden
Olsson v. Sweden (No. 2), Judgement of 27 November 1992, Series A No. 250.
Pakelli case
Pakelli v. Federal Republic of Germany, Judgement of 25 April 1983, Series A No. 64.
Piersack case
Piersack v. Belgium, Judgement of 1 October 1982, Series A No. 53.
Poitrimol v. France
Poitrimol v. France, Judgement of 23 November 1993, Series A No. 277-A.
Quaranta v. Switzerland
Quaranta v. Switzerland, Judgement of 24 May 1991, Series A No. 205.
Rieme v. Sweden
Rieme v. Sweden, Judgement of 22 April 1992, Series A No. 226-B.
Ringeisen case
Ringeisen v. Austria, Judgement of 16 July 1971, Series A No. 13.
Sahiner v. Turkey
Sahiner v. Turkey, Judgement of 25 September 2001 (not yet published).
Sánchez-Reisse case
Sánchez-Reisse v. Switzerland, Judgement of 21 October 1986, Series A No. 107.
Schiesser v. Switzerland
Schiesser v. Switzerland, Judgement of 4 December 1979, Series A No. 34.
Scopelliti v. Italy
Scopelliti v. Italy, Judgement of 23 November 1993, Series A No. 278.
Selçuk and Asker v. Turkey
Selçuk and Asker v. Turkey, Judgement of 24 April 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-II.
Serves v. France
Serves v. France, Judgement (Chamber) of 20 October 1997, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1997-VI.
Singh v. UK
Singh v. the United Kingdom, Judgement (Chamber) of 21 February 1996, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1996-I.

Stefanelli v. San Marino
Stefanelli v. San Marino, Judgement of 8 February 2000, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2000-II.
Stögmüller case
Stögmüller v. Austria, Judgement of 10 November 1969, Series A No. 9.
S. W. v. UK
S. W. v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 22 November 1995, Series A, No. 335-B
Tekin v. Turkey
Tekin v. Turkey, Judgement of 9 June 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-IV.
Timurtas v. Turkey
Timurtas v. Turkey, Judgement of 13 June 2000, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2000-VI.
Tomasi v. France
Tomasi v. France, Judgement of 27 August 1992, Series A No. 241-A.
Toth v. Austria
Toth v. Austria, Judgement of 12 December 1991, Series A No. 224.
Tyrer case
Tyrer v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 25 April 1978, Series A No. 26.
Valasinas v. Lithuania
Valasinas v. Lithuania, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction) of 24 July 2001, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 2001-VIII.
Van der Leer v. Netherlands
Van der Leer v. the Netherlands, Judgement of 21 February 1990, Series A No. 170-A.
Van der Mussele v. Belgium
Van der Mussele v. Belgium, Judgement of 23 November 1983, Series A No. 70.
Van Droogenbroeck case
Van Droogenbroeck v. Belgium, Judgement of 24 June 1982, Series A No. 50.
Vermeire v. Belgium
Vermeire v. Belgium, Judgement (Merits) of 29 November 1991, Series A No. 214-C.
Wemhoff case
Wemhoff v. Federal Republic of Germany, Judgement of 27 June 1968, Series A No. 7.
Woukam Moudefo case
Woukam Moudefo v. France, Judgement of 11 October 1988, Series A No. 141-B.
X v. UK
X v. the United Kingdom, Judgement of 5 November 1981, Series A No. 46.
Yasa v. Turkey
Yasa v. Turkey, Judgement of 2 September 1998, Reports of Judgments and Decisions 1998-VI.

Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACiHR)
Case 1954 (Uruguay)
Uruguay, Case 1954, Cribari, Resolution No. 17/81 of 6 March 1981, IACiHR Annual Report 1981–1982, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.57, Doc. 6 rev.1, 20 September 1982, p. 93.

Case 6718 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 6718, Pedro Gómez and Others (Santa Marta), Report No. 23/83 of 4 October 1983, IACiHR Annual Report 1983–1984, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.63, Doc. 10, 24 September 1984, p. 37.

Case 6724 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 6724, Loyola and Others, Resolution No. 14/85 of 5 March 1985, IACiHR Annual Report 1984–1985, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.66, Doc. 10 rev.1, 1 October 1985, p. 79.

Case 7481 (Bolivia)
Bolivia, Case 7481, Caracoles Community, Resolution No. 30/82 of 8 March 1982, IACiHR Annual Report 1981–1982, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.57, Doc. 6 rev.1, 20 September 1982, p. 36.

Case 9213 (US)
Report on the admissibility:
United States, Case 9213, Richmond Hill Insane Asylum v. United States, Report on the admissibility of the petition, Annual Report, 1986–1987, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.71, Doc. 9 rev.1, 22 September 1987, pp. 198–207; Report to conclude the case:
Report No. 3/96 to conclude Case 9213, 1 March 1996, IACiHR Annual Report 1995, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.91, Doc. 7 rev., 28 February 1996, p. 201.

Case 9466 (Peru)
Peru, Case 9466, Teodoro Huancahuari, Resolution No. 21/87 of 30 June 1987, IACiHR Annual Report 1986–1987, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.71, Doc. 9 rev.1, 22 September 1987, p. 131.

Case 9619 (Honduras)
Honduras, Case 9619, Romero and Others (Colomoncagua Attack), Resolution No. 5/87 of 28 March 1987, IACiHR Annual Report 1986–1987, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.71, Doc. 9 rev.1, 22 September 1987, p. 75.

Case 9786 (Peru)
Peru, Case 9786, Juan Geldres Orozco and Benigno Contreras, Resolution No. 33/88 of 14 September 1988, IACiHR Annual Report 1988–1989, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.76, Doc. 10, 18 September 1989, p. 33.

Case 9844 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 9844, Rivas Hernández, Resolution No. 28/88 of 13 September 1988, IACiHR Annual Report 1987–1988, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.74, Doc. 10 rev.1, 16 September 1988, p. 140.

Case 9850 (Argentina)
Argentina, Case 9850, Hector Geronimo Lopez Aurelli, Report No. 74/90 of 4 October 1990, Resolution No. 22/88 of 23 March 1988, IACiHR Annual Report 1990–1991, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.79.rev.1, Doc. 12, 22 February 1991.

Case 10.000 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.000, Wilfredo Najarro Rivas, Report No. 2/91 of 13 February 1991, Annual Report 1990–1991, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.79.rev.1, Doc. 12, 22 February 1991, p. 96.

Case 10.001 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.001, Walter Chávez Palacios, Report No. 3/91 of 13 February 1991, Annual Report 1990–1991, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.79.rev.1, Doc. 12, 22 February 1991, p. 100.

Case 10.037 (Argentina)
Argentina, Case 10.037, Mario Eduardo Firmenich, Resolution No. 17/89 of 13 April 1989, IACiHR Annual Report 1988–1989, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.76, Doc. 10, 18 September 1989, p. 36.

Case 10.124 (Suriname)
Suriname, Case 10.124, Massacre at Tjongalangapassie, Resolution No. 22/89 of 27 September 1989, IACiHR Annual Report 1988–1989, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.76, Doc. 10, 18 September 1989, p. 143.

Cases 10.147, 10.181, 10.240, 10.262, 10.309 and 10.311 (Argentina)
Argentina, Case 10.147: Alicia Consuelo Herrera; Case 10.181: Rosaria Valenzi de Sánchez; Case 10.240: Case of the Naval Mechanic School; Case 10.262: Fundación Servicio Paz y Justicia (90 cases); Case 10.309: Luis Adolfo Holmquits, Graciela Bustamante de Argañaraz, Gloria Constanza Curia, Fernando Ramiro Curia, Luisa Ana Ibañez, Adriana C. Mitrovich de Torres Correa, Ricardo Torres Correa, Francisco Rafael Díaz, Ramón Oscar Bianchi, María Isabel Jiménez de Soldatti, Rondoletto Family (5), Julio César Campopiano, Ana Cristina Corral, Carlos Severino Soldatti; Case 10.311: Rosa Ana Frigerio, Omar Tristán Roldán, Elena Delia Garaguso, Carlos Alberto Oliva, Laura Susana Martinelli, Liliana Carmen Pereyra, Eduardo Alberto Cagnola, Jorge Candeloro, Marta Haydée García, Omar Alejandro Marocchi, Susana Valor, Eduardo Manuel Martínez, Jorge Carlos Augusto Toledo, Mario Alberto D'Fabio Fernández, Roberto Wilson, Rubén Darío Rodríguez, Juan Carlos Carrizo, Haydee Cristina Monier, Horacio Manuel Carrizo, Alberto Rogelio Carrizo, Luis Alberto Bereciarte, Fernando Hallgarten, Report No. 28/92 of 2 October 1992, IACiHR Annual Report 1992–1993, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83, Doc. 14, 2 March 1993, p. 41.

Case 10.179 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.179, Sebastián Gutiérrez, José Mario Cruz Rivera y Félix Rivera, Resolution No. 26/89 of 28 September 1989, IACiHR Annual Report 1989–1990, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.77, Doc. 7, 17 May 1990, p. 36.

Case 10.190 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.190, José Ángel Alas Gómez, Resolution No. 6/92 of 4 February 1992, IACiHR Annual Report 1992, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.81.rev. 1, Doc. 6, 14 February 1992, p. 99.

Case 10.198 (Nicaragua)
Nicaragua, Case 10.198, Reynaldo Tadeo Aguado Montealegre, Resolution No. 29/89 of 29 September 1989, IACiHR Annual Report 1989–1990, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.77, Doc. 7, 17 May 1990, p. 73.

Case 10.284 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.284, Manuel de Jesús Monguia Choto, Resolution No. 11/92 of 4 February 1992, IACiHR Annual Report 1992, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.81, Doc. 6, 14 February 1992, p. 149.

Case 10.287 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.287, Las Hojas massacres, Report No. 26/92 of 24 September 1992, IACiHR Annual Report 1992–1993, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83, Doc. 14, 12 March 1993, p. 83.

Case 10.447 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.447, Leonardo Ramírez Murcia, Resolution No. 14/92 of 4 February 1992, , IACiHR Annual Report 1992–1993, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.81.rev.1, Doc. 6, 14 February 1992, p. 149.

Case 10.480 (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case 10.480, Lucio Parada Cea and Others, Report No. 1/99 of 27 January 1999, IACiHR Annual Report 1998, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.102, Doc. 6 rev., 16 April 1999, p. 531.

Case 10.508 (Guatemala)
Guatemala, Case 10.508, Roberto Lissardi and Dino Rossi, Report No. 25/94 of 22 September 1994, IACiHR Annual Report 1988–1989, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.88, Doc. 9 rev., 17 February 1995, p. 51.

Case 10.559 (Peru)
Peru, Case 10.559, Chumbivilcas, Report No. 1/96 of 1 March 1996, IACiHR Annual Report 1995, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.91, Doc. 7 rev., 28 February 1996, p. 136.

Case 10.581 (Colombia)
Colombia, Case 10.581, Alirio de Jesús Pedraza, Report No. 33/92 of 25 September 1992, IACiHR Annual Report 1992–1993, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83, Doc. 14 corr. 1, 12 March 1993, p. 61.

Case 10.970 (Peru)
Peru, Case 10.970, Raquel Martí de Mejía, Report No. 5/96 of 1 March 1996, IACiHR Annual Report 1995, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.91, Doc. 7 rev., 28 February 1996, p. 157.

Case 11.006 (Peru)
Peru, Case 11.006, Alan García, Report No. 1/95 of 7 February 1995, IACiHR Annual Report 1994, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.88, Doc. 9 rev., 17 February 1995, p. 71.

Case 11.010 (Colombia)
Colombia, Case 11.010, Hildegard María Feldman, Report 15/95 of 13 September 1995, IACiHR Annual Report 1995, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.91, Doc. 7 rev., 28 February 1996, p. 57.

Case 11.084 (Peru)
Peru, Case 11.084, Jaime Salinas, Report No. 27/94 of 30 November 1994, IACiHR Annual Report 1994, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.88, Doc. 9 rev., 17 February 1995, p. 113.

Case 11.137 (Argentina)
Argentina, Case 11.137, Juan Carlos Abella, Report 55/97 of 18 November 1997, IACiHR Annual Report 1997, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.98, Doc. 7 rev., 13 April 1998, p. 271.

Case 11.139 (US)
US, Case 11.139, William Andrews, Report 57/96 of 6 December 1996, IACiHR Annual Report 1997, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.98, Doc. 6 rev., 13 April 1998.

Case 11.205 and Others
Argentina, Cases 11.205, 11.236, 11.238, 11.239, 11.242, 11.243, 11.244, 11.247, 11.248, 11.249, 11.251, 11.254, 11.255, 11.257, 11.258, 11.261, 11.263, 11.305, 11.320, 11.326, 11.330, 11.499, 11.504, Jorge Luis Bronstein and Others, Report No. 2/97 of 11 March 1997, IACiHR Annual Report 1997, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.98, Doc. 6 rev., 13 April 1998.

Case 11.245 (Argentina)
Argentina, Case 11.245, Jorge A. Giménez, Report No. 12/96 of 1 March 1996, IACiHR Annual Report 1995, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.91, Doc. 7 rev., 28 February 1996, p. 33.

Case 11.589 (Cuba)
Cuba, Case 11.589, Armando Alejandre Jr., Carlos Costa, Mario De La Peña and Pablo Morales, Report No. 86/99 of 29 September 1999, IACiHR Annual Report 1999, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.106, Doc. 6 rev., 13 April 1999.
Cases of Disappeared Persons (Argentina)
Argentina, Cases of Disappeared Persons in Argentina, Resolution No. 1/83 of 8 April 1983, IACiHR Annual Report 1982–1983, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.61, Doc. 22 rev.1, 27 September 1983, p. 46.
Cases of Disappeared Persons (Chile)
Chile, Cases of Disappeared Persons in Chile, Resolution No. 11/83 of 1 July 1983, IACiHR Annual Report 1982–1983, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.61, Doc. 22 rev.1, 27 September 1983, p. 46.
Case of Disappeared Persons (Guatemala)
Guatemala, Case of Disappeared Persons in Guatemala, Resolution No. 25/86 of 9 April 1986, IACiHR Annual Report 1985–1986, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.68, Doc. 8 rev.1 26 September 1986, p. 37.
Case of the Riofrío massacre (Colombia)
Colombia, Case 11.654, Riofrío massacre, Report No. 62/01 of 6 April 2001, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.111, Doc. 20 rev., p. 758.
Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero y Galdámez (El Salvador)
El Salvador, Case No. 11.481 (El Salvador), Monsignor Oscar Arnulfo Romero y Galdámez, Report No. 37/00 of 13 April 2000, IACiHR Annual Report 1999, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.106, Doc. 6 rev., 13 April 1999.

Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACtHR)
Aloeboetoe and Others case
Aloeboetoe and Others v. Suriname, Judgement of 4 December 1991, Series C No. 11 (1991), IACtHR Annual Report 1991, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.25, Doc. 7, 15 January 1992, p. 57.
Bámaca Velásquez case
Bámaca Velásquez v. Guatemala, Judgement of 25 November 2000, Series C No. 70 (2000).
Bámaca Velásquez case (Reparations)
Bámaca Velásquez v. Guatemala, Judgement of 22 February 2002, Series C No. 91 (2002).
Barrios Altos case
Chumbipuma Aguirre and Others v. Peru, Judgement of 14 March 2001, Series C No. 75 (2001).
Caballero Delgado and Santana case
Caballero Delgado and Santana v. Colombia, Judgement of 8 December 1995, Series C No. 22 (1995), IACtHR Annual Report 1996, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.33, Doc. 4, 22 January 1996, p. 135.
Castillo Petruzzi and Others case
Castillo Petruzzi and Others v. Peru, Judgement of 30 May 1999, Series C No. 52 (1999).
Exceptions to the Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies case
Exceptions to the Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies (Articles 46(1), 46(2)(a) and 46(2)(b) ACHR), Advisory Opinion OC-11/90 of 10 August 1990, Ser. A No. 11 (1990), IACtHR Annual Report 1990, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.23, Doc. 12, 16 January 1991, p. 37.

Godínez Cruz case
Godínez Cruz v. Honduras, Judgement of 20 January 1989, Series C No. 5 (1989), IACtHR Annual Report 1989, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.21, Doc. 14, 31 August 1989, p. 15.

Habeas Corpus case
Habeas Corpus in Emergency Situations (Articles 27(2), 25(1) and 7(6) ACHR), Advisory Opinion OC-8/87 of 30 January 1987, Ser. A No. 8 (1987), IACtHR Annual Report 1987, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.17, Doc. 13, 30 August 1987, p. 17.

Judicial Guarantees case
Judicial Guarantees in States of Emergency (Articles 27(2), 25 and 8 ACHR), Advisory Opinion OC-9/87 of 6 October 1987, Ser. A No. 9 (1987), IACtHR Annual Report 1988, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.19, Doc. 13, 31 August 1988, p. 13.

Neira Alegría and Others case
Neira Alegría and Others v. Peru, Judgement of 19 January 1995, Series C No. 20 (1995), IACtHR Annual Report 1996, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.33, Doc. 4, 22 January 1996, p. 41.

Peruvian Prisons case (Provisional Measures)
Peruvian Prisons case, Provisional Measures Requested by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights regarding Peru, Order of 27 January 1993, IACtHR Annual Report 1993, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.29, Doc. 4, 10 January 1994, p. 21.

Street Children v. Guatemala
Street Children v. Guatemala, Judgement of 26 May 2001, Series C No. 77 (2001).

Suárez Rosero case
Suárez Rosero v. Ecuador, Judgement of 12 November 1997, Series C No. 35 (1997).

Velásquez Rodríguez case
Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement of 29 July 1988, Ser. C No. 4 (1988), IACtHR Annual Report 1988, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/III.19, Doc. 13, 31 August 1988, p. 35.

International Court of Justice (ICJ)

Application of the Genocide Convention case (Provisional Measures)
Case Concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)), Request for the Indication of Provisional Measures, Order of 8 April 1993, ICJ Reports 1993, p. 3.

Application of the Genocide Convention case (Preliminary Objections)
Case Concerning Application of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)), Preliminary Objections, Judgement of 11 July 1996, ICJ Reports 1996, p. 595.

Armed Activities on the Territory of the DRC case (Provisional Measures)
Case concerning Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Uganda), Request for Indication of Provisional Measures, Order of 1 July 2000, ICJ Reports 2000, p. 111.

Arrest Warrant case
Case concerning the Arrest Warrant issued against the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Democratic Republic of the Congo by a Belgian Court (Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Belgium), Judgement of 14 February 2002, ICJ Reports 2002, p. 3.

Asylum case
Colombian-Peruvian Asylum case (Colombia v. Peru), Judgement of 20 November 1950, ICJ Reports 1950, p. 266.

Continental Shelf case (Tunisia v. Libya)
Case concerning the Continental Shelf (Tunisia v. Libyan Arab Jamahiriya), Judgement of 24 February 1982, ICJ Reports 1982, p. 18.

Continental Shelf case (Libya v. Malta)
Case concerning the Continental Shelf (Lybian Arab Jamahiriya v. Malta), Judgement of 3 June 1985, ICJ Reports 1985, p. 13.

Corfu Channel case (Merits)
The Corfu Channel case (the United Kingdom v. Albania), Merits, Judgement of 9 April 1949, ICJ Reports 1949, p. 4.

Fisheries case
Fisheries case (the United Kingdom v. Norway), Judgement of 18 December 1951, ICJ Reports 1951, p. 116.

Fisheries Jurisdiction case (FRG v. Iceland)
Fisheries Jurisdiction cases (Federal Republic of Germany v. Iceland), Merits, Judgement of 25 July 1974, ICJ Reports 1974, p. 175.

Fisheries Jurisdiction case (UK v. Iceland)
Fisheries Jurisdiction case (the United Kingdom v. Iceland), Merits, Judgement of 25 July 1974, ICJ Reports 1974, p. 3.

Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project case
Case concerning the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary v. Slovakia), Judgement of 25 September 1997, ICJ Reports 1997, p. 7.

Legality of Use of Force cases
Legality of Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. Belgium; Yugoslavia v. Canada; Yugoslavia v. France; Yugoslavia v. Germany; Yugoslavia v. Italy; Yugoslavia v. the Netherlands; Yugoslavia v. Portugal; Yugoslavia v. Spain; Yugoslavia v. the United Kingdom; and Yugoslavia v. United States of America), Applications instituting proceedings of 29 April 1999.

Namibia case
Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia (South West Africa) notwithstanding Security Council Resolution 276 (1970), Advisory Opinion of 21 June 1971, ICJ Reports 1971, p. 16.

Nicaragua case (Merits)
Case concerning Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Merits, Judgement of 27 June 1986, ICJ Reports 1986, p. 14.

North Sea Continental Shelf cases
North Sea Continental Shelf cases (Federal Republic of Germany v. Denmark; Federal Republic of Germany v. the Netherlands), Judgement of 20 February 1969, ICJ Reports 1969, p. 3.

Nuclear Tests case (Request for an Examination of the Situation)
Request for an Examination of the Situation in Accordance with Paragraph 63 of the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests case (New Zealand v. France), Order of 22 September 1995, ICJ Reports 1995, p. 288.

Nuclear Weapons case
Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion of 8 July 1996, ICJ Reports 1996, p. 226.
Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case
Legality of the Use by a state of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict, Advisory Opinion of 8 July 1996, ICJ Reports 1996, p. 66.

International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR)
Akayesu case
Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Jean Paul Akayesu, Amended Indictment, 30 June 1997, Case No. ICTR-96-4-I.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Jean Paul Akayesu, Judgement, 2 September 1998, Case No. ICTR-96-4-T.
Ntakirutimana and Others case
The Prosecutor v. Elizaphan Ntakirutimana, Gerard Ntakirutimana, Obed Ruzindana and Charles Sikubwabo, Amended Indictment, 20 October 2000, Case No. ICTR-96-10-1.
Kayishema and Ruzindana case
First Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Decision on the Motion filed by the Prosecutor for Confirmation of the Trial Date and Submission of a Superseding Indictment, 10 April 1997, Case No. ICTR-95-1-I.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Clément Kayishema and Obed Ruzindana, Judgement, 21 May 1999, Case No. ICTR-95-1-T
Musema case
The Prosecutor v. Alfred Musema, Judgement, 27 January 2000, Case No. ICTR-96-13-I.
Nsabimana and Nteziryayo case
The Prosecutor v. Sylvain Nsabimana and Alphonse Nteziryayo, Indictment, 18 October 1997, Case No. ICTR-97-29-I.
Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali case
The Prosecutor v. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, Indictment, 26 May 1997, Case No. ICTR-97-21-I.
Rutaganda case
The Prosecutor v. Georges Anderson Nderubumwe Rutaganda, Judgement, 6 December 1999, Case No. ICTR-96-3-T.
Semanza case
The Prosecutor v. Laurent Semanza, Indictment, 21 October 1997, Case No. ICTR-97-20-I.

International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) Aleksovski case
– Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Zlatko Aleksovski, Judgement, Trial Chamber I, 25 June 1999, Case No. IT-95-14/1-T.
– Judgement on Appeal:
The Prosecutor v. Zlatko Aleksovski, Judgement, Appeals Chamber, 24 March 2000, Case No. IT-95-14/1-A.

Blaškić case

Decision on Defence Motion:
The Prosecutor v. Tihomir Blaškić, Decision on Defence Motion to Strike Portions of the Amended Indictment Alleging "Failure to Punish" Liability, Trial Chamber, 4 April 1997, Case No. IT-95-14-PT.
Second Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Tihomir Blaškić, Second Amended Indictment, 25 April 1997, Case No. IT-95-14-AI.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Tihomir Blaškić, Judgement, Trial Chamber I, 3 March 2000, Case No. IT-95-14-T.

Delalić case

Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalić, Zdravko Mucić, aka "Pavo", Hazim Delić, Esad Landžo, aka "Zenga", Indictment, 21 March 1996, Case No. IT-96-21-I.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalić, Zdravko Mucić, aka "Pavo", Hazim Delić, Esad Landžo, aka "Zenga", Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 16 November 1998, Case No. IT-96-21-T.
Judgement on Appeal:
The Prosecutor v. Zejnil Delalić, Zdravko Mucić, aka "Pavo", Hazim Delić, Esad Landžo, aka "Zenga", Judgement, Appeals Chamber, 20 February 2001, Case No. IT-96-21-A.

Dokmanović case

The Prosecutor v. Slavko Dokmanović, Prosecutor's Response to the Trial Chamber's Request for a Brief on the use of cumulative criminal charges in relation to a proposed "substantive" ne bis in idem principle in international criminal law, 21 July 1997, Case No. IT-95-13a-T.

Dukić case

The Prosecutor v. Dorde Dukić, Indictment, 29 February 1996, Case No. IT-96-20-I.

Erdemović case

Sentencing Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Dražen Erdemović, Sentencing Judgement, Trial Chamber I, 29 November 1996, Case No. IT-96-22-T.
Judgement on Appeal:
The Prosecutor v. Dražen Erdemović, Judgement, Appeals Chamber, 7 October 1997, Case No. IT-96-22-A.
Sentencing Judgement bis:
The Prosecutor v. Dražen Erdemović, Sentencing Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 5 March 1998, Case No. IT-96-22-Tbis.

Furundžija case

Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Anto Furundžija, Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 10 December 1998, Case No. IT-95-17/1-T.
Judgement on Appeal:
The Prosecutor v. Anto Furundžija, Judgement, Appeals Chamber, 21 July 2000, Case No. IT-95-17/1-A.

Galić case

Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Stanislav Galić and Dragomir Milošević, Initial Indictment, 24 April 1998, Case No. IT-98-29-I.

Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Stanislav Galić, Judgement, Trial Chamber I, 5 December 2003, Case No. IT-98-29-T.

Hadžihasanović and Others case
Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Enver Hadžihasanović, Mehmed Alagić and Amir Kubura, Initial Indictment, 13 July 2001 (kept confidential until its unsealing on 2 August 2001), Case No. IT-01-47.
Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Enver Hadžihasanović, Mehmed Alagić and Amir Kubura, Amended Indictment, 11 January 2002, Case No. IT-01-47-PT.
Decision on Joint Challenge to Jurisdiction:
The Prosecutor v. Enver Hadžihasanović, Mehmed Alagić and Amir Kubura, Decision on Joint Challenge to Jurisdiction, 12 November 2002, Case No. IT-01-47-PT.

Jelisić case
Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Goran Jelisić aka Adolf and Ranko Cešic, Indictment, 21 July 1995, Case No. IT-95-10-I.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Goran Jelisić, Judgement, Trial Chamber I, 14 December 1999, Case No. IT-95-10-T.

Karadžić and Mladić case
First Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, Indictment, 24 July 1995, Case No. IT-95-5-I.
Second Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, Indictment, 16 November 1995, Case No. IT-95-18-I.
Review of the Indictments:
The Prosecutor v. Radovan Karadžić and Ratko Mladić, Review of the Indictments Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 11 July 1996, Cases No. IT-95-5-R61 and IT-95-18-R61.

Kordić and Čerkez case
Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordić, Tihofil aka Tihomir Blaškić, Mario Čerkez, Ivan aka Ivica Šantic, Pero Skopljak and Zlatko Aleksovski, Indictment, 10 November 1995, Case No. IT-95-14/2-I.
First Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordić and Mario Čerkez, Amended Indictment, 30 September 1998, Case No. IT-95-14/2-AI.
Decision on the Joint Defence Motion:
The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordić and Mario Čerkez, Decision on the Joint Defence Motion to Dismiss the Amended Indictment for Lack of Jurisdiction Based on the Limited Jurisdictional Reach of Articles 2 and 3, 2 March 1999, Case No. IT-95-14/2-AI.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Dario Kordić and Mario Čerkez, Judgement, Trial Chamber III, 26 February 2001, Case No. IT-95-14/2-T.

Krnojelac case
Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Milorad Krnojelac, aka "Mićo", Indictment, 17 June 1997, Case No. IT-97-25-I.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Milorad Krnojelac, Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 15 March 2002, Case No. IT-97-25-T.

Krstić case
Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Radislav Krstić, Indictment, 2 November 1998, Case No. IT-98-33-I.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Radislav Krstić, Judgement, Trial Chamber I, 2 August 2001, Case No. IT-98-33-T.

Kunarac case
Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Dragan Gagović, Gojko Janković, Janko Janjić, Radomir Kovač, Zoran Vuković, Dragan Zelenović, Dragoljub Kunarac, Radovan Stanković, Indictment, 26 June 1996, Case No. IT-96-23/2-I..
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Dragoljub Kunarac, Radomir Kovač and Zoran Vuković, Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 22 February 2001, Case Nos. IT-96-23-T and IT-96-23/1-T.

Kupreškić case
First Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Zoran Kupreškić, Mirjan Kupreškić, Vlatko Kupreškić, Drago Josipović, Dragan Papić, Vladimir Šantić aka "Vlado", Amended Indictment, Trial Chamber II, 9 February 1998, Case No. IT-95-16-AI.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Zoran Kupreškić, Mirjan Kupreškić, Vlatko Kupreškić, Drago Josipović, Dragan Papić, Vladimir Šantić aka "Vlado", Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 14 January 2000, Case No. IT-95-16-T.

Kvočka case
First Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Miroslav Kvočka, Milojica Kos, Mladen Radić, Zoran Žigić, Amended Indictment, 12 June 1998, Case No. IT-98-30/1-AI.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Miroslav Kvočka, Milojica Kos, Mladen Radić, Zoran Žigić, Dragoljub Prcac, Judgement, Trial Chamber I, 2 November 2001, Case No. IT-98-30/1-T.

Martić case
The Prosecutor v. Milan Martić, Review of the Indictment Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Trial Chamber I, 8 March 1996, Case No. IT-95-11-R61.

Mrkšić case
Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Mile Mrkšić, Miroslav Radić, and Veselin Šljivančanin, Indictment, 26 October 1995, Case No. IT-95-13a-I.

Review of the Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Mile Mrkšić, Miroslav Radić, Veselin Šljivančanin and Slavko Dokmanović, Review of the Indictment Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Trial Chamber I, 3 April 1996, Case No. IT-95-13-R61.

Naletilić case

The Prosecutor v. Mladen Naletilić aka as "Tuta" and Vinko Martinović aka as "Stela", Judgement, Trial Chamber, 31 March 2003, Case No. IT-98-34-T.

Nikolić case

Initial Indictment
The Prosecutor v. Dragan Nikolić aka "Jenki" Nikolić, Indictment, 4 November 1994, Case No. IT-94-2-I.
Review of the Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Dragan Nikolić, Review of the Indictment Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, Trial Chamber II, 20 October 1995, Case No. IT-94-2-R61.

Rajić case

Initial Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Ivica Rajić aka Viktor Andrić, Indictment, 23 August 1995, Case No. IT-95-12-I.
Review of the Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Ivica Rajić aka Viktor Andrić, Review of the Indictment Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, 13 September 1996, Case No. IT-95-12-R61.

Stakić case

The Prosecutor v. Milomir Stakić, Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 31 July 2003, Case No. IT-97-24-T.

Tadić case

Interlocutory Appeal:
The Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić aka "Dule", Decision on the Defence Motion for Interlocutory Appeal on Jurisdiction, Appeals Chamber, 2 October 1995, Case No. IT-94-1-AR72.
Second Amended Indictment:
The Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić aka "Dule" aka "Dušan" and Goran Borovnica, Second Amended Indictment, 14 December 1995, Case No. IT-94-1-I.
Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief:
The Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić aka "Dule", Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief, 10 April 1996, Case No. IT-94-1-T.
Response to Prosecutor's Pre-Trial Brief:
The Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić aka "Dule", Response of the Defence to the Prosecutor's Pre-trial Brief, 23 April 1996, Case No. IT-94-1-T.
Judgement:
The Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić aka "Dule", Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 7 May 1997, Case No. IT-94-1-T.
Judgement on Appeal:
The Prosecutor v. Duško Tadić aka "Dule", Judgement, Appeals Chamber, 15 July 1999, Case No. IT-94-1-A.

Vasiljević case

The Prosecutor v. Mitar Vasiljević, Judgement, Trial Chamber II, 29 November 2002, Case No. IT-98-32-T.

International Military Tribunal for Germany (IMT Nuremberg)
Case of the Major War Criminals
Indictment:
Trial of The Major War Criminals before the International Military Tribunal, Indictment, Nuremberg, 20 November 1945, Official Documents, Vol. I, p. 27.
Judgement:
Trial of The Major War Criminals before the International Military Tribunal, Judgement, Nuremberg, 1 October 1946, Official Documents, Vol. I, p. 171.

International Military Tribunal for the Far East (IMT Tokyo)
Case of the Major War Criminals
Indictment:
Trial of The Major War Criminals before the International Military Tribunal, Indictment, Tokyo, 29 April 1946.
Judgement:
Trial of The Major War Criminals before the International Military Tribunal, Judgement, Tokyo, 4–12 November 1948.

International Military Tribunal at Tokyo
Toyoda case
US v. Soemu Toyoda, Judgement of 6 September 1949.

Permanent Court of International Justice (PCIJ)
Chorzów Factory case (Merits)
Case concerning the Factory at Chorzów (Claim for Indemnity), Merits, Judgement of 13 September 1928, Collection of Judgements, Series A No. 17.

United Nations Human Rights Committee (HRC)
Äärelä and Näkkäläjärvi v. Finland
Communication No. 779/1997, Anni Äärelä and Jouni Näkkäläjärvi v. Finland, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 24 October 2001, UN Doc. A/57/40, Vol. II, p. 117.
Altesor v. Uruguay
Communication No. R.2/10, Alice Altesor and Victor Hugo Altesor v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 29 March 1982, UN Doc. A/37/40, p. 122.
Améndola Massiotti and Baritussio v. Uruguay
Communication No. 25/1978, Carmen Améndola Massiotti and Graciela Baritussio v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 26 July 1982, UN Doc. CCPR/C/OP/1, p. 136.
A. P. v. Italy
Communication No. 204/1986, A. P. v. Italy, Decision on admissibility, adopted on 2 November 1987, UN Doc. A/43/40, p. 242.
Arzuaga Gilboa v. Uruguay
Communication No. 147/1983, Lucía Arzuaga Gilboa v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 1 November 1985, UN Doc. A/41/40, p. 128.
Bahamonde v. Equatorial Guinea
Communication No. 468/1991, Angel N. Oló Bahamonde v. Equatorial Guinea, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 20 October 1993, UN Doc. A/49/40, Vol. II, p. 183.

Barzhig v. France
Communication No. 327/1988, Hervé Barzhig v. France, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 11 April 1991, UN Doc. A/46/40, p. 262.

Berry v. Jamaica
Communication No. 330/1988, Albert Berry v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 7 April 1994, UN Doc. A/49/40, Vol. II, p. 20.

Buffo Carballal v. Uruguay
Communication No. 33/1978, Leopoldo Buffo Carballal v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 27 March 1981, UN Doc. A/36/40, p. 125.

Cadoret and Le Bihan v. France
Communications Nos. 221/1987 and 323/1988, Yves Cadoret and Hervé Le Bihan v. France, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 11 April 1991, UN Doc. A/46/40, p. 219.

Camargo v. Colombia
Communication No. 45/1979, Pedro Pablo Camargo (on behalf of the husband of María Fanny Suárez de Guerrero) v. Colombia, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 31 March 1982, UN Doc. A/37/40, p. 137.

Cariboni v. Uruguay
Communication No. 159/1983, Cariboni v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 27 October 1987, UN Doc. A/43/40, p. 184.

C. E. A. v. Finland
Communication No. 316/1988, C. E. A. v. Finland, Decision on admissibility, adopted on 10 July 1991, UN Doc. A/46/40, p. 293.

Celiberti de Casariego v. Uruguay
Communication No. 56/1979, Lilian Celiberti de Casariego v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 29 July 1981, UN Doc. A/36/40, p. 185.

C. L. D. v. France
Communication No. 439/1990, C. L. D. v. France, Decision on admissibility, adopted on 8 November 1991, UN Doc. A/47/40, p. 424.

Currie v. Jamaica
Communication No. 377/1989, Anthony Currie v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 29 March 1994, UN Doc. A/49/40, Vol. II, p. 73.

Daniel Monguya Mbenge v. Zaire
Communication No. 16/1977, Daniel Monguya Mbenge v. Zaire, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 25 March 1983, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 134.

Deidrick v. Jamaica
Communication No. 619/1995, Fray Deidrick v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 9 April 1998, UN Doc. CCPR/C/62/D/619/1995.

Dermit Barbato v. Uruguay
Communication No. 84/1981, Guillermo Ignacio Dermit Barbato and Hugo Haroldo Dermit Barbato v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 21 October 1982, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 124.

Domukovsky and Others v. Georgia
Communication No. 623 627/1995, Victor P. Domukovsky, Zaza Tsiklauri, Petre Gelbakhiani and Irakli Dokvadze v. Georgia, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 6 April 1998, UN Doc. A/53/40, Vol. II, p. 95.

Drescher Caldas v. Uruguay
Communication No. 43/1979, Drescher Caldas v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 21 July 1983, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 192.

Espinoza de Polay v. Peru
Communication No. 577/1994, R. Espinoza de Polay (on behalf of her husband Victor Alfredo Polay Campos) v. Peru, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 6 November 1997, UN Doc. A/53/40, Vol. II, p. 36.

Estrella v. Uruguay
Communication No. 74/1980, Miguel Ángel Estrella v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 29 March 1983, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 150.

Francis v. Jamaica
Communication No. 320/1988, Victor Francis v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 24 March 1993, UN Doc. A/48/40 (Part II), p. 62.

Fuenzalida v. Ecuador
Communication No. 480/1991, José Luis García Fuenzalida v. Ecuador, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 12 July 1996, UN Doc. A/51/40, Vol. II, p. 50.

García Lanza de Netto v. Uruguay
Communication No. 8/1977, Ana María García Lanza de Netto (on behalf of her aunt Beatriz Weismann Lanza and her uncle Alcides Lanza Perdomo, who later joined as submitting parties) v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 3 April 1980, UN Doc. A/35/40, p. 111.

Gómez de Voituret v. Uruguay
Communication No. 109/1981, Teresa Gómez de Voituret v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 10 April 1984, UN Doc. A/39/40, p. 164.

L. Grant v. Jamaica
Communication No. 353/1988, Lloyd Grant v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 31 March 1994, UN Doc. A/49/40, Vol. II, p. 50.

P. Grant v. Jamaica
Communication No. 597/1994, Peter Grant v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 22 March 1996, UN Doc. A/51/40, Vol. II, p. 206.

Gridin v. Russia
Communication No. 770/1997, Dimitry L. Gridin v. Russia, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 20 July 2000, UN Doc. A/55/40, Vol. II, p. 172.

Guesdon v. France
Communication No. 219/1986, Dominique Guesdon v. France, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 25 July 1990, UN Doc. A/45/40, Vol. II, p. 61.

Harward v. Norway
Communication No. 451/1991, Barry Stephen Harward v. Norway, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 15 July 1994, UN Doc. A/49/40, Vol. II, p. 146.

Henry v. Jamaica
Communication No. 230/1987, Raphaël Henry v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 1 November 1991, UN Doc. A/47/40, p. 210.

Hernández Valentini de Bazzano v. Uruguay
Communication No. 5/1977, Moriana Hernández Valentini de Bazzano (on her own behalf as well as on behalf of Luis María Bazzano Ambrosini, Martha Valentini de Massera and José Luis Massera) v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 15 August 1979, UN Doc. A/34/40, p. 124.

Herrera Rubio v. Colombia
Communication No. 161/1983, Herrera Rubio v. Colombia, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 2 November 1987, UN Doc. A/43/40, p. 190.

Hiber Conteris v. Uruguay
Communication No. 139/1983, Hiber Conteris v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 17 July 1985, UN Doc. A/40/40, p. 196.

Johnson v. Jamaica
Communication No. 588/1994, Errol Johnson v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 22 March 1996, UN Doc. A/51/40, Vol. II, p. 174.

Karttunen v. Finland
Communication No. 387/1989, Arvo O. Karttunen v. Finland, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 23 October 1992, UN Doc. A/48/40, p. 362.

Kelly v. Jamaica
Communication No. 253/1987, Paul Kelly v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 8 April 1991, UN Doc. A/46/40, p. 241.

Lafuente Peñarrieta and Others v. Bolivia
Communication No. 176/1984, Lafuente Peñarrieta and Others v. Bolivia, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 2 November 1987, UN Doc. A/43/40, p. 199.

Larrosa Bequio v. Uruguay
Communication No. 88/1981, Gustavo Raúl Larrosa Bequio v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 29 March 1983, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 180.

Little v. Jamaica
Communication No. 283/1988, Aston Little v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 1 November 1991, UN Doc. A/47/40, p. 268.

Lumley v. Jamaica
Communication No. 662/1995, Peter Lumley v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 31 March 1999, UN Doc. A/54/40, Vol. II, p. 142.

Luyeye Magana ex-Philibert v. Zaire
Communication No. 90/1981, Luyeye Magana ex-Philibert v. Zaire, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 21 July 1983, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 197.

Lyashkevich v. Belarus
Communication No. 887/1999, Mariya Staselovich (on her behalf and on behalf of her son Igor Lyashkevich) v. Belarus, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 3 April 2003, UN Doc. A/58/40, Vol. II, p. 169.

Marais v. Madagascar
Communication No. 49/1979, Dave Marais, Jr. v. Madagascar, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 24 March 1983, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 141.

Martínez Machado v. Uruguay
Communication No. 83/1981, Raúl Noel Martínez Machado v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 4 November 1983, UN Doc. A/39/40, p. 148.

Martínez Portorreal v. the Dominican Republic
Communication No. 188/1984, Martínez Portorreal v. the Dominican Republic, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 5 November 1987, UN Doc. A/43/40, p. 207.

Mukong v. Cameroon
Communication No. 458/1991, Alber Womah Mukong v. Cameroon, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 8 July 1992, UN Doc. A/49/40, p. 171.

O. F. v. Norway
Communication No. 158/1983, O. F. v. Norway, Decision on admissibility, adopted on 26 October 1984, UN Doc. A/40/40, p. 204.

Pietraroia v. Uruguay
Communication No. 44/1979, Alba Pietraroia (on behalf of her father, Rosario Pietraroia, also known as Rosario Pietraroia (or Roya) Zapala) v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 27 March 1981, UN Doc. A/36/40, p. 153.

Quinteros v. Uruguay
Communication No. 107/1981, Elena Quinteros and M. C. Almeida de Quinteros v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 21 July 1983, UN Doc. A/38/40, p. 216.

Sala de Tourón v. Uruguay
Communication No. 32/1978, Lucía Sala de Tourón v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 31 March 1981, UN Doc. A/36/40, p. 120.

Saldías López v. Uruguay
Communication No. 52/1979, Delia Saldías de López (on behalf of her husband, Sergio Rubén López Burgos) v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 29 July 1981, UN Doc. A/36/40, p. 176.

Salgar de Montejo v. Colombia
Communication No. 64/1979, Consuelo Salgar de Montejo v. Colombia, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 24 March 1982, UN Doc. A/37/40, p. 168.

Santullo Valcada v. Uruguay
Communication No. 9/1977, Edgardo Dante Santullo Valcada v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 26 October 1979, UN Doc. A/35/40, p. 107.

Sequeria v. Uruguay
Communication No. 6/1977, Miguel A. Millán Sequeria v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 29 July 1980, UN Doc. A/35/40, p. 127.

Soriano de Bouton v. Uruguay
Communication No. 37/1978, Esther Soriano de Bouton v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 27 March 1981, UN Doc. A/36/40, p. 143.

Stephens v. Jamaica
Communication No. 373/1989, Lennon Stephens v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 18 October 1995, UN Doc. A/51/40, Vol. II, p. 1.

Terán Jijón v. Ecuador
Communication No. 277/1988, Juan Terán Jijón v. Ecuador, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 26 March 1992, UN Doc. A/47/40, p. 261.

Teti Izquierdo v. Uruguay
Communication No. 73/1980, Ana María Teti Izquierdo (on behalf of her brother, Mario Alberto Teti Izquierdo) v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 1 April 1982, UN Doc. A/37/40, p. 179.

Thomas v. Jamaica
Communication No. 532/1993, Maurice Thomas v. Jamaica, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 3 November 1997, UN Doc. A/53/40, Vol. II, p. 1.

Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay
Communication No. 4/1977, William Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 23 July 1980, UN Doc. A/35/40, p. 121.

Tshitenge Muteba v. Zaire
Communication No. 124/1982, Tshitenge Muteba v. Zaire, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 24 July 1984, UN Doc. A/39/40, p. 182.

Wight v. Madagascar
Communication No. 115/1982, John Wight v. Madagascar, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 1 April 1985, UN Doc. A/40/40, p. 171.

Wolf v. Panama
Communication No. 289/1988, Dieter Wolf v. Panama, Views under Article 5(4) of the Optional Protocol, adopted on 26 March 1992, UN Doc. A/47/40, p. 277.

Z. P. v. Canada
Communication No. 341/1988, Z. P. v. Canada, Decision on admissibility, adopted on 11 April 1991, UN Doc. A/46/40, p. 297.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE UN SECURITY COUNCIL

Number	Date of adoption	Title
188	9 April 1964	Resolution on complaint by Yemen regarding British air attack on Yemeni territory
190	9 June 1964	Resolution urging the Government of South Africa to end the Rivonia trial against the leaders of the anti-apartheid movement
191	18 June 1964	Resolution on persons imprisoned, interned or sentenced to death for their opposition to the policy of apartheid
361	30 August 1974	Resolution on emergency UN humanitarian assistance to Cyprus
378	23 October 1975	Resolution on renewal of the mandate of UNEF
387	31 March 1976	Resolution on South Africa's military activities against Angola
392	19 June 1976	Resolution on killings and violence by the South African apartheid régime in Soweto and other areas
405	14 April 1977	Resolution condemning the armed aggression against Benin of 16 January 1977
417	31 October 1977	Resolution condemning the South African Government for its resort to massive violence and repression against the black people
419	24 November 1977	Resolution on assistance to Benin to repair the damage caused by the aggression of 16 January 1977
427	3 May 1978	Resolution on strengthening of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon and withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon
436	6 October 1978	Resolution on a cease-fire in Lebanon
446	22 March 1979	Resolution on establishment of a commission to examine the situation relating to settlements in the Arab territories occupied by Israel
452	20 July 1979	Resolution on Israeli settlement policies in the occupied territories

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
455	23 November 1979	Resolution on Southern Rhodesia's policies towards Zambia
459	19 December 1979	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon
463	2 February 1980	Resolution calling upon United Kingdom to create conditions in Southern Rhodesia which will ensure free and fair elections
465	1 March 1980	Resolution on Israeli settlement policies in the occupied territories
467	24 April 1980	Resolution condemning the deliberate shelling of the headquarters of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon
469	20 May 1980	Resolution on deportation of Palestinian leaders from territories occupied by Israel
471	5 June 1980	Resolution on assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh
473	13 June 1980	Resolution calling upon South Africa to take measures to eliminate the policy of apartheid and grant to all South African citizens equal rights
475	27 June 1980	Resolution on policies of South Africa towards Angola
476	30 June 1980	Resolution on the status of Jerusalem
496	15 December 1981	Resolution deciding to send a commission of inquiry to Seychelles
507	28 May 1982	Resolution on South Africa's military activities against Seychelles
513	4 July 1982	Resolution on the civilian population in Lebanon
525	7 December 1982	Resolution on death sentences imposed on members of the African National Congress of South Africa
527	15 December 1982	Resolution on South Africa's military actions against Lesotho
533	7 June 1983	Resolution on death sentences imposed on 3 members of the African National Congress
540	31 October 1983	Resolution on the situation between the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq
546	6 January 1984	Resolution on South Africa's military attacks on Angola
552	1 June 1984	Resolution on attacks on commercial ships in the Gulf region
556	23 October 1984	Resolution demanding the immediate eradication of apartheid
560	12 March 1985	Resolution condemning the arbitrary arrests of members of the United Democratic Front in South Africa

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
564	31 May 1985	Resolution on humanitarian assistance to civilian persons in Lebanon
567	20 June 1985	Resolution on South Africa's military activities against Angola
569	26 July 1985	Resolution on sanctions against South Africa
571	20 September 1985	Resolution on South Africa's military activities against Angola
572	30 September 1985	Resolution on international relief to Botswana
579	18 December 1985	Resolution on hostage-taking and abduction
580	30 December 1985	Resolution on South Africa's military activities against Lesotho and compensation for Lesotho
581	13 February 1986	Resolution on South Africa's threats against States in southern Africa
582	24 February 1986	Resolution calling for cease-fire and exchange of prisoners between Iraq and the Islamic Republic of Iran
587	23 September 1986	Resolution on security of the personnel of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon
598	20 July 1987	Resolution requesting the Secretary-General to dispatch observers to supervise the cease-fire between Iraq and the Islamic Republic of Iran
610	16 March 1988	Resolution on death sentences imposed on 6 South Africans
612	9 May 1988	Resolution on chemical weapons use in the conflict between Iraq and the Islamic Republic of Iran
615	17 June 1988	Resolution on death sentences imposed on 6 South Africans
620	26 August 1988	Resolution on chemical weapons use in the conflict between Iraq and the Islamic Republic of Iran
623	23 November 1988	Resolution on death sentence imposed on an anti-apartheid activist in South Africa
638	31 July 1989	Resolution on incidents of hostage-taking and abduction
664	18 August 1990	Resolution on safety of third-State nationals in Iraq and Kuwait
666	13 September 1990	Resolution on the situation regarding foodstuffs in Iraq and Kuwait
667	16 September 1990	Resolution on Iraqi actions against diplomatic missions and their personnel in Kuwait
670	25 September 1990	Resolution on air embargo against Iraq

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
674	29 October 1990	Resolution on protection of third-State nationals in Iraq and Kuwait
677	28 November 1990	Resolution on Iraqi attempt to alter the demographic composition of Kuwait
678	29 November 1990	Resolution authorizing Member States to use all necessary means to implement Security Council resolution 660 (1990) and all relevant resolutions
681	20 December 1990	Resolution on Palestinian civilians under Israeli occupation
686	2 March 1991	Resolution on the end of hostilities in the Gulf region
687	3 April 1991	Resolution on restoration of the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Kuwait
688	5 April 1991	Resolution on repression of the Iraqi civilian population, including Kurds in Iraq
692	20 May 1991	Resolution on establishment of the UN Compensation Fund and the UN Compensation Commission under Security Council Resolution 687 (1991)
699	17 June 1991	Resolution on destruction, removal or rendering harmless of weapons in Iraq
706	15 August 1991	Resolution authorizing States to permit the import of petroleum and petroleum products originating in Iraq sufficient to produce a sum to be determined by the Council
726	6 January 1992	Resolution on the deportation by Israel of 12 Palestinian civilians from the territories occupied by Israel
733	23 January 1992	Resolution calling for a complete embargo on deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Somalia
740	7 February 1992	Resolution on the political settlement of the situation in Yugoslavia
743	21 February 1992	Resolution on establishment of the United Nations Protection Force
746	17 March 1992	Resolution on humanitarian assistance to Somalia
751	24 April 1992	Resolution on establishment of a UN Operation in Somalia
752	15 May 1992	Resolution on political conditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina
757	30 May 1992	Resolution on sanctions against Yugoslavia

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
758	8 June 1992	Resolution on enlargement of the mandate and the strength of the UN Protection Force and humanitarian assistance to Bosnia and Herzegovina
761	29 June 1992	Resolution on deployment of additional elements of the United Nations Protection Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina
764	13 July 1992	Resolution on deployment of additional elements of the UN Protection Force in Bosnia and Herzegovina
770	13 August 1992	Resolution on humanitarian assistance to Sarajevo and other parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina
771	13 August 1992	Resolution on violations of humanitarian law in the territory of the former Yugoslavia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina
776	14 September 1992	Resolution on enlargement of the mandate of the UN Protection Force
779	6 October 1992	Resolution on implementation of the UN peace-keeping plan in Croatia
780	6 October 1992	Resolution on establishment of the Commission of Experts to Examine and Analyse the Information submitted pursuant to Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on the situation in the former Yugoslavia
786	10 November 1992	Resolution on a ban on military flights in the airspace of Bosnia and Herzegovina
787	16 November 1992	Resolution demanding that all forms of interference from outside Bosnia and Herzegovina cease immediately
788	19 November 1992	Resolution on a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of weapons and military equipment to Liberia
794	3 December 1992	Resolution on measures to establish a secure environment for humanitarian relief operations in Somalia
798	18 December 1992	Resolution supporting initiative of the European Council to dispatch a fact-finding mission to Bosnia and Herzegovina
802	25 January 1993	Resolution on the situation in the UN Protected Areas in Croatia
804	29 January 1993	Resolution extending the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission II and demanding a cease-fire

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
808	22 February 1993	Resolution on establishment of an International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia
811	12 March 1993	Resolution demanding a cease-fire and inviting the Secretary-General to organize a meeting between the Angolan Government and UNITA
813	26 March 1993	Resolution on implementation of the peace process in Liberia
814	26 March 1993	Resolution on the expansion of the size and mandate of the UN Operation in Somalia II
819	16 April 1993	Resolution demanding that Srebrenica and the surrounding areas, Bosnia and Herzegovina, be treated as a safe area
820	17 April 1993	Resolution on the peace plan for Bosnia and Herzegovina and the strengthening of the measures imposed by the earlier resolutions on the situation in the former Yugoslavia
822	30 April 1993	Resolution on the conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan
824	6 May 1993	Resolution on treatment of certain towns and surroundings in Bosnia and Herzegovina as safe areas
827	25 May 1993	Resolution on establishment of the International Tribunal for Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991
834	1 June 1993	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission II and the peace process in Angola
836	4 June 1993	Resolution extending the mandate of the UN Protection Force and authorizing the Force to use all necessary measures in reply to bombardments against the safe areas
837	6 June 1993	Resolution on unprovoked armed attacks against the personnel of the UN Operation in Somalia II on 5 June 1993
851	15 July 1993	Resolution on extension of the mandate of UN Angola Verification Mission II and implementation of the Peace Accords for Angola

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
853	29 July 1993	Resolution on the seizure of the district of Agdam and of all other recently occupied areas of Azerbaijan
859	24 August 1993	Resolution on a comprehensive political settlement of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina
864	15 September 1993	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission II and possible arms and oil embargo against UNITA
865	22 September 1993	Resolution on continuation of the process of national reconciliation and political settlement in Somalia
868	29 September 1993	Resolution on security and safety of UN forces and personnel
874	14 October 1993	Resolution on settlement of the conflict in and around Nagorny Karabakh
876	19 October 1993	Resolution condemning violation of the cease-fire agreement and the killing of the Chairman of the Defence Council and Council of Ministers of the Autonomous Republic of Abkhazia
882	5 November 1993	Resolution on renewal of the mandate of the UN Operation in Mozambique and implementation of the General Peace Agreement for Mozambique
884	12 November 1993	Resolution on the conflict in and around Nagorny Karabakh
892	22 December 1993	Resolution on authorization of the phased deployment of additional military observers to the UN Observer Mission in Georgia
896	31 January 1994	Resolution on possible establishment of a peace-keeping force in Abkhazia, Georgia and on political settlement of the Abkhazia conflict
897	4 February 1994	Resolution on continuation of the UN Operation in Somalia II and the process of national reconciliation, reconstruction and political settlement in Somalia
898	23 February 1994	Resolution on establishment of a UN police component of the UN Operation in Mozambique and implementation of the General Peace agreement for Mozambique

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
904	18 March 1994	Resolution on measures to guarantee the safety and protection of the Palestinian civilians in territories occupied by Israel
906	25 March 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia and on political settlement of the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia
908	31 March 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate and increase of the personnel of the UN Protection Force
912	21 April 1994	Resolution on adjustment of the mandate of the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda due to the current situation in Rwanda and settlement of the Rwandan conflict
913	22 April 1994	Resolution on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, particularly in the safe area of Gorazde and political settlement of the situation in the former Yugoslavia
917	6 May 1994	Resolution on expansion of the sanctions until the return of the legitimately elected President to Haiti
918	17 May 1994	Resolution on expansion of the mandate of the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda and imposition of an arms embargo on Rwanda
923	31 May 1994	Resolution on renewal of the mandate of the UN Operation in Somalia II and process of national reconciliation in Somalia
925	8 June 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate and deployment of the two additional battalions of the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda and settlement of the conflict in Rwanda
929	22 June 1994	Resolution on establishment of a temporary multinational operation for humanitarian purposes in Rwanda until the deployment of the expanded UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda
931	29 June 1994	Resolution on an immediate and durable cease-fire in Yemen
935	1 July 1994	Resolution requesting the Secretary-General to establish a Commission of Experts to examine violations of international humanitarian law committed in Rwanda

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
940	31 July 1994	Resolution on authorization to form a multinational force under unified command and control to restore the legitimately elected President and authorities of the Government of Haiti and extension of the mandate of the UN Mission in Haiti
941	23 September 1994	Resolution on violations of international humanitarian law in Banja Luka, Bijeljina and other areas of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces
945	29 September 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission II and continuation of the efforts aimed at the earliest resolution of the Angolan crisis through negotiations within the framework of the Peace Accords
946	30 September 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Operation in Somalia II
947	30 September 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Protection Force and requesting the Secretary-General to report on progress towards implementation of the UN Peace-keeping Plan for Croatia and all relevant Security Council resolutions
950	21 October 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia and peace process in Liberia
952	27 October 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission II and reaching of an agreement for establishing an effective and sustainable cease-fire as a matter of urgency
954	4 November 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Operation in Somalia II for a final period until 31 Mar. 1995 and secure withdrawal of personnel and assets from Somalia
955	8 November 1994	Resolution on establishment of an International Tribunal for Rwanda and adoption of the Statute of the Tribunal
957	15 November 1994	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Operation in Mozambique until the new Government of Mozambique takes office and completion of the residual operations prior to the withdrawal of the UN Operation in Mozambique on or before 31 Jan. 1995

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
959	19 November 1994	Resolution on efforts of the UN Protection Force to ensure implementation of Security Council resolutions on safe areas in Bosnia and Herzegovina
965	30 November 1994	Resolution on extension and expansion of the mandate of the UN Assistance Mission for Rwanda
968	16 December 1994	Resolution on establishment of a UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and on the process of national reconciliation
978	27 February 1995	Resolution on arrest and detention of persons responsible for acts within the jurisdiction of the International Tribunal for Rwanda
985	13 April 1995	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia and establishment of the Security Council Committee on arms embargo against Liberia
987	19 April 1995	Resolution on security and safety of the UN Protection Force
993	12 May 1995	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia and settlement of the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia
994	17 May 1995	Resolution on withdrawal of the Croatian Government troops from the zone of separation in Croatia and full deployment of the UN Confidence Restoration Operation in Croatia
998	16 June 1995	Resolution on establishment of a rapid-reaction force within the UN Protection Force
999	16 June 1995	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan and on the process of national reconciliation
1001	30 June 1995	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia and on national reconciliation in Liberia
1004	12 July 1995	Resolution demanding withdrawal of the Bosnian Serb forces from the safe area of Srebrenica, Bosnia and Herzegovina
1005	17 July 1995	Resolution on supply of an appropriate quantity of explosives for use in the demining operations in Rwanda

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1008	7 August 1995	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission III and monitoring of the compliance with the cease-fire in Angola
1009	10 August 1995	Resolution on compliance by Croatia with the agreement signed on 6 Aug. 1995 between Croatia and the UN Peace Forces/UN Protection Force, including the right of the local Serb population to receive humanitarian assistance
1010	10 August 1995	Resolution on access by international agencies to displaced persons in Srebrenica and Zepa and on release of detained persons in Bosnia and Herzegovina
1011	16 August 1995	Resolution on lifting of restrictions imposed by paragraph 13 of resolution 918 (1994) on the sale or supply of arms and matériel to the Government of Rwanda
1012	28 August 1995	Resolution on establishment of an international commission of inquiry in Burundi
1014	15 September 1995	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia
1019	9 November 1995	Resolution on violations of international humanitarian law in the former Yugoslavia
1031	15 December 1995	Resolution on implementation of the Peace Agreement for Bosnia and Herzegovina and transfer of authority from the UN Protection Force to the multinational Implementation Force (IFOR)
1034	21 December 1995	Resolution on violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia
1036	12 January 1996	Resolution extending the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia
1037	15 January 1996	Resolution on establishment of the UN Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium
1040	29 January 1996	Resolution on deterioration in the situation and efforts to facilitate a comprehensive political dialogue in Burundi
1041	29 January 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia and efforts to restore peace, security and stability in Liberia

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1049	5 March 1996	Resolution requesting the Secretary-General to intensify the preparations for convening a regional conference for peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region
1052	18 April 1996	Resolution calling for an immediate cease-fire by all parties involved in military activities in Lebanon
1055	8 May 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission III and efforts to advance the peace process in Angola
1059	31 May 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia and the security situation in Liberia
1062	28 June 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus and restoration of confidence between the two communities in Cyprus
1064	11 July 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission III and efforts to advance the peace process in Angola
1065	12 July 1996	Resolution extending the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia
1067	26 July 1996	Resolution on the conclusions of the ICAO report on the shooting down of two civilian aircraft by the Cuban Air Force
1071	30 August 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia
1072	30 August 1996	Resolution on a comprehensive political settlement of the crisis in Burundi
1073	28 September 1996	Resolution on the situation in Jerusalem and the areas of Nablus, Ramallah, Bethlehem and the Gaza Strip
1075	11 October 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission III and efforts to advance the peace process in Angola
1076	22 October 1996	Resolution on the political, military and humanitarian situation in Afghanistan
1078	9 November 1996	Resolution requesting the Secretary-General to make all necessary arrangements to convene an international conference for peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1080	15 November 1996	Resolution on establishment of a multinational humanitarian intervention force for the Great Lakes region
1083	27 November 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Liberia
1087	11 December 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Angola Verification Mission III
1088	12 December 1996	Resolution on authorization of the establishment of a multinational stabilization force (SFOR) and extension of the mandate of the UN Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina
1089	13 December 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan
1092	23 December 1996	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Peace-keeping Force in Cyprus
1095	28 January 1997	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL)
1096	30 January 1997	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG)
1097	18 February 1997	Resolution on the 5-point peace plan for eastern Zaire
1099	14 March 1997	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT)
1118	30 June 1997	Resolution on establishment of the UN Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA)
1120	14 July 1997	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia, Baranja and Western Sirmium
1122	29 July 1997	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL)
1124	31 July 1997	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG)
1127	28 August 1997	Resolution on measures against UNITA for non-compliance with its obligations under the Lusaka peace accords
1132	8 October 1997	Resolution on oil and arms embargo against Sierra Leone

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1145	19 December 1997	Resolution on the establishment of a support group of civilian police monitors in the Danube region
1150	30 January 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG)
1151	30 January 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon
1157	20 March 1998	Resolution on modalities of UN presence in Angola
1160	31 March 1998	Resolution on the imposition of an arms embargo against Yugoslavia
1161	9 April 1998	Resolution on the reactivation of the International Commission of Inquiry to investigate violations of the arms embargo against Rwanda
1164	29 April 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Mission of Observers in Angola (MONUA)
1165	30 April 1998	Resolution on the establishment of a 3rd Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal for Rwanda
1166	13 May 1998	Resolution on the establishment of a 3rd Trial Chamber of the International Tribunal for Yugoslavia
1173	12 June 1998	Resolution on measures against UNITA for non-compliance with its obligations under the Lusaka Protocol, relevant Security Council resolutions and the plan of the Special Representative to the Joint Commission
1180	29 June 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA) and the resumption of the withdrawal of its military component
1181	13 July 1998	Resolution on establishment of the UN Observer Mission in Sierra Leone (UNOMSIL)
1187	30 July 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia
1188	30 July 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon
1193	28 August 1998	Resolution on the situation in Afghanistan
1195	15 September 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA)

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1199	23 September 1998	Resolution on the situation in Kosovo, Yugoslavia
1202	15 October 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA)
1203	24 October 1998	Resolution on agreements for the verification of compliance with the provisions of resolution 1199 (1998) on the situation in Kosovo, Yugoslavia
1206	12 November 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Mission of Observers in Tajikistan (UNMOT)
1208	19 November 1998	Resolution on the maintenance of the security and civilian and humanitarian character of refugee camps and settlements in Africa
1212	25 November 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Civilian Police Mission in Haiti (MIPONUH)
1213	3 December 1998	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Angola (MONUA)
1214	8 December 1998	Resolution on the situation in Afghanistan
1225	28 January 1999	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG)
1239	14 May 1999	Resolution on relief assistance to Kosovo refugees and internally displaced persons in Kosovo, the Republic of Montenegro and other parts of Yugoslavia
1244	10 June 1999	Resolution on the deployment of international civil and security presences in Kosovo
1261	25 August 1999	Resolution on children in armed conflicts
1264	15 September 1999	Resolution on establishment of a multinational peace force in East Timor
1265	17 September 1999	Resolution on protection of civilians in armed conflicts
1272	25 October 1999	Resolution on establishment of the UN Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET)
1284	17 December 1999	Resolution on establishment of the UN Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC)

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1291	24 February 2000	Resolution on extension of the mandate and expansion of the UN Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC)
1296	19 April 2000	Resolution on protection of civilians in armed conflicts
1312	31 July 2000	Resolution on establishment of the UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea
1313	4 August 2000	Resolution on extension of the mandate of the UN Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL)
1314	11 August 2000	Resolution on the protection of children in situations of armed conflicts
1315	14 August 2000	Resolution on establishing a special court in Sierra Leone
1320	15 September	Resolution on deployment of troops and military observers within the UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE)
1322	7 October 2000	Resolution on recent events in Jerusalem and other areas throughout the territories occupied by Israel
1325	31 October 2000	Resolution on women and peace and security
1329	30 November 2000	Resolution on increasing the membership of the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Tribunal for Rwanda
1333	19 December 2000	Resolution on measures against the Taliban

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
3 (I)	13 February 1946	Extradition and punishment of war criminals	Without a vote
92 (I)	7 December 1946	Official Seal and Emblem of the United Nations	Without a vote
95 (I)	11 December 1946	Affirmation of the Principles of International Law recognized by the Charter of the Nurnberg Tribunal	Without a vote
167 (II)	20 October 1947	United Nations Flag	52-0-3
170 (II)	31 October 1947	Surrender of war criminals and traitors	42-7-6
177 (II)	21 November 1947	Formulation of the principles recognized in the Charter of the Nurnberg Tribunal and in the judgement of the Tribunal	42-1-8
217 A (III)	10 December 1948	International Bill of Human Rights: A. Universal Declaration on Human Rights	48-0-8
260 A (III)	9 December 1948	Prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide	56-0-0
317 (IV)	2 December 1949	Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others	35-2-15
428 (V)	14 December 1950	Statute of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	48-5-4
794 (VIII)	23 October 1953	Transfer to the United Nations of the functions exercized by the League of Nations under the Slavery Convention of 25 September 1926	50-0-6

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
1653 (XVI)	24 November 1961	Declaration on the prohibition of the use of nuclear and thermonuclear weapons	55-20-26
2106 A (XX)	21 December 1965	International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination	106-0-1
2162 B (XXI)	5 December 1966	Question of general and complete disarmament	91-0-4
2189 (XXI)	13 December 1966	Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples	76-7-20
2198 (XXI)	16 December 1966	Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees	90-0-11
2200 A (XXI)	16 December 1966	International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights	Without a vote
2262 (XXII)	3 November 1967	Question of Southern Rhodesia	92-2-18
2312 (XXII)	14 December 1967	Declaration on Territorial Asylum	Without a vote
2326 (XXII)	16 December 1967	Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples	86-6-17
2338 (XXII)	18 December 1967	Question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity	90-2-22
2391 (XXIII)	26 November 1968	Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity	58-7-36

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
2443 (XXIII)	19 December 1968	Respect for and implementation human rights in occupied territories	60-22-37
2444 (XXIII)	19 December 1968	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	111-0-0
2454 A (XXIII)	20 December 1968	Question of general and complete disarmament	107-0-2
2465 (XXIII)	20 December 1968	Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples	87-7-17
2546 (XXIV)	11 December 1969	Respect for and implementation of human rights in occupied territories	52-13-49
2547 (XXIV)	11 December 1969	Measures for effectively combating racial discrimination and the policies of apartheid and segregation in southern Africa	87-1-23
2548 (XXIV)	11 December 1969	Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples	78-5-16
2583 (XXIV)	15 December 1969	Question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity	74-5-32
2597 (XXIV)	16 December 1969	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	91-0-23
2603 A (XXIV)	16 December 1969	Question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	80-3-36
2603 B (XXIV)	16 December 1969	Question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	120-0-1
2662 (XXV)	7 December 1970	Question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	113-0-2

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
2673 (XXV)	9 December 1970	Protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions in areas of armed conflict	78-10-28
2674 (XXV)	9 December 1970	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	77-2-36
2675 (XXV)	9 December 1970	Basic principles for the protection of civilian populations in armed conflicts	109-0-8
2676 (XXV)	9 December 1970	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	67-30-20
2677 (XXV)	9 December 1970	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	111-0-4
2707 (XXV)	14 December 1970	Question of Territories under Portuguese administration	94-6-16
2708 (XXV)	14 December 1970	Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples	93-5-22
2712 (XXV)	15 December 1970	Question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity	55-4-33
2727 (XXV)	15 December 1970	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	52-20-43
2795 (XXVI)	10 December 1971	Question of Territories under Portuguese administration	105-8-5
2826 (XXVI)	16 December 1971	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	110-0-1
2827 A (XXVI)	16 December 1971	Question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	110-0-1
2827 B (XXVI)	16 December 1971	Question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	101-0-10

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
2840 (XXVI)	18 December 1971	Question of the punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity	71-0-42
2852 (XXVI)	20 December 1971	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	110-1-5
2853 (XXVI)	20 December 1971	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	83-15-14
2854 (XXVI)	20 December 1971	Protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions in areas of armed conflicts	96-2-20
2918 (XXVII)	14 November 1972	Question of Territories under Portuguese administration	96-2-20
2932 A (XXVII)	29 November 1972	General and complete disarmament	99-0-15
2933 (XXVII)	29 November 1972	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	113-0-2
3005 (XXVII)	15 December 1972	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	63-10-49
3020 (XXVII)	18 December 1972	Principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity	105-0-18
3032 (XXVII)	18 December 1972	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	103-0-25
3058 (XXVIII)	2 November 1973	Protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions in areas of armed conflict	Without a vote
3068 (XXVIII)	30 November 1973	International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid	91-4-26

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
3074 (XXVIII)	3 December 1973	Principles of international cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity	94-0-29
3076 (XXVIII)	6 December 1973	Napalm and other incendiary weapons and all aspects of their possible use	103-0-18
3077 (XXVIII)	6 December 1973	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	118-0-0
3102 (XXVIII)	12 December 1973	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	107-0-6
3103 (XXVIII)	12 December 1973	Basic principles of the legal status of the combatants struggling against colonial and alien domination and racist regimes	83-13-19
3113 (XXVIII)	12 December 1973	Question of Territories under Portuguese administration	105-8-16
3166 (XXVIII)	14 December 1973	Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents	Without a vote
3220 (XXIX)	6 November 1974	Assistance and co-operation in accounting for persons who are missing or dead in armed conflicts	95-0-32
3255 A (XXIX)	9 December 1974	Napalm and other incendiary weapons and all aspects of their possible use	108-0-13
3255 B (XXIX)	9 December 1974	Napalm and other incendiary weapons and all aspects of their possible use	98-0-27
3256 (XXIX)	9 December 1974	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
3318 (XXIX)	14 December 1974	Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict	110-0-14
3319 (XXIX)	14 December 1974	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
3452 (XXX)	9 December 1975	Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subject to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment	Without a vote
3465 (XXX)	11 December 1975	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
3500 (XXX)	15 December 1975	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	Without a vote
31/19	24 November 1976	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	Without a vote
31/64	10 December 1976	Incendiary and other specific conventional weapons which may be the subject of prohibitions or restrictions of use for humanitarian reasons	Without a vote
31/65	10 December 1976	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
31/72	10 December 1976	Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques	96-8-3
32/14	7 November 1977	Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights	113-3-18
32/44	8 December 1977	Respect for human rights in armed conflicts	Without a vote
32/77	12 December 1977	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
32/91 A	13 December 1977	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	132-1-1
32/152	19 December 1977	Incendiary and other specific conventional weapons which may be the subject of prohibitions or restrictions of use for humanitarian reasons	115-0-21
33/59 A	14 December 1978	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
33/70	14 December 1978	United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
33/113 A	18 December 1978	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	140-1-1
33/183	24 January 1979	Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa B. International mobilization against apartheid	122-4-0
34/72	11 December 1979	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	124-0-13
34/82	11 December 1979	United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
34/90 A	12 December 1979	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	111-2-31
34/90 C	12 December 1979	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	140-1-4
34/93 A	12 December 1979	Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa A. Situation in South Africa	109-12-21

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
34/93 H	12 December 1979	Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa H. Political prisoners in South Africa	109-12-21
34/140	14 December 1979	Drafting of an international convention against activities of mercenaries	Without a vote
34/146	17 December 1979	International Convention against the Taking of Hostages	Without a vote
34/169	17 December 1979	Code of conduct for law enforcement officials	Without a vote
34/180	18 December 1979	Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women	130-0-10
35/122 A	11 December 1980	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	141-1-1
35/122 B	11 December 1980	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied	140-1-3
35/144 A	12 December 1980	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
35/144 B	12 December 1980	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
35/144 C	12 December 1980	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	78-17-36
35/153	12 December 1980	United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
36/9	28 October 1981	Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights	120-17-9
36/55	25 November 1981	Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief	Without a vote
36/93	9 December 1981	United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
36/96 A	9 December 1981	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	147-0-1
36/96 B	9 December 1981	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	109-1-33
36/147 A	16 December 1981	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	142-1-3
36/147 B	16 December 1981	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	142-1-3
36/147 C	16 December 1981	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	111-2-31

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
36/147 D	16 December 1981	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	143-1-2
36/147 G	16 December 1981	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	140-1-2
37/7	28 October 1982	World Charter for Nature	111-1-18
37/79	9 December 1982	United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
37/88 A	9 December 1982	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	134-1-1
37/88 B	9 December 1982	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	134-1-1
37/88 C	9 December 1982	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	112-2-21
37/88 D	9 December 1982	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	133-1-1

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
37/98 A	13 December 1982	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	95-1-46
37/98 B	13 December 1982	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
37/98 C	13 December 1982	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	124-15-1
37/98 D	13 December 1982	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons D. Provisional Procedures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol	86-119-33
37/98 E	13 December 1982	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons E. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	83-22-33
37/123 A	16 December 1982	The situation in the Middle East	87-22-31
37/194	18 December 1982	Principles of Medical Ethics	Without a vote
38/9	10 November 1983	Armed Israeli aggression against the Iraqi nuclear installations and its grave consequences for the established international system concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and international peace and security	123-2-12
38/66	15 December 1983	United Nations Conference on Prohibitions or Restrictions of Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
38/69	15 December 1983	Israeli nuclear armament	99-2-39
38/79 A	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	110-2-29
38/79 B	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	146-1-1
38/79 C	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	147-1-1
38/79 D	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	115-2-27
38/79 E	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	146-1-1
38/79 F	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	144-1-1
38/79 G	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	116-2-28

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
38/79 H	15 December 1983	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	145-1-1
38/101	16 December 1983	Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador	84-14-45
38/180 A	19 December 1983	The situation in the Middle East	85-23-31
38/187 A	20 December 1983	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Prohibition of chemical and bacteriological weapons	98-1-49
38/187 B	20 December 1983	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
39/46	10 December 1984	Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment	Without a vote
39/56	12 December 1984	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
39/65 A	12 December 1984	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	118-16-14
39/65 C	12 December 1984	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
39/65 E	12 December 1984	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons E. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	87-18-30

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
39/95 A	14 December 1984	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	120-2-15
39/95 B	14 December 1984	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	140-1-3
39/95 D	14 December 1984	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	115-2-28
39/95 E	14 December 1984	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	143-1-1
39/119	14 December 1984	Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador	93-11-40
40/33	29 November 1985	United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice ("The Beijing Rules")	Without a vote
40/84	12 December 1985	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
40/92 A	12 December 1985	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Prohibition of Chemical and Biological Weapons	93-15-41
40/92 B	12 December 1985	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
40/92 C	12 December 1985	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	112-16-22
40/137	13 December 1985	Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan	80-22-40
40/139	13 December 1985	Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador	100-2-42
40/140	13 December 1985	Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala	91-8-47
40/161 B	16 December 1985	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	137-1-6
40/161 C	16 December 1985	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	138-1-6
40/161 D	16 December 1985	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	109-2-34 (as regards the resolution as a whole); 136-1-7 (as regards operative paragraph 21)
40/161 E	16 December 1985	Report of the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories	126-1-19 (as regards the resolution as a whole); 110-2-33 (as regards operative paragraph 1)
41/35 A	10 November 1986	Policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa, A. Situation in South Africa and assistance to liberation movements	130-8-18

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
41/50	3 December 1986	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
41/58 A	3 December 1986	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (biological) and Toxin Weapons and on their Destruction	Without a vote
41/58 B	3 December 1986	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Prohibition of chemical and bacteriological weapons	100-11-43
41/58 C	3 December 1986	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	137-0-14
41/58 D	3 December 1986	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons D. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
41/157	4 December 1986	Situation of human rights in El Salvador	110-0-40
42/30	30 November 1987	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effect	Without a vote
42/37 A	30 November 1987	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
42/37 C	30 November 1987	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and to support the conclusion of a Chemical Weapons Convention	Without a vote
42/96	7 December 1987	Use of mercenaries as a means to violate rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination human	125-10-19
43/21	3 November 1988	The uprising (intifadah) of the Palestinian people	130-2-16
43/67	7 December 1988	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
43/74 A	7 December 1988	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and to support the conclusion of a Chemical Weapons Convention	Without a vote
43/74 B	7 December 1988	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (biological) Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
43/74 C	7 December 1988	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
43/107	8 December 1988	Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	125-10-21
43/173	9 December 1988	Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment	Without a vote
44/25	20 November 1989	Convention on the Rights of the Child	Without a vote
44/34	4 December 1989	International Convention against the Recruitment, Use, Financing and Training of Mercenaries	Without a vote
44/81	8 December 1989	Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	125-10-21
44/115 A	15 December 1989	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
44/115 B	15 December 1989	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol and to support the conclusion of a Chemical Weapons Convention	Without a vote
44/128	15 December 1989	Elaboration of a 2nd Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights Aiming at the Abolition of the Death Penalty	59-26-48
44/165	15 December 1989	Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
45/57 A	4 December 1990	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
45/57 B	4 December 1990	Chemical and Bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction and Preparations for the Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention	Without a vote
45/57 C	4 December 1990	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol	Without a vote
45/58	4 December 1990	General and complete disarmament J. Prohibition of attacks on nuclear facilities	Without a vote
45/64	4 December 1990	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
45/111	14 December 1990	Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners	Without a vote
45/112	14 December 1990	United Nations Guidelines for the Prevention of Juvenile Delinquency (The Riyadh Guidelines)	Without a vote
45/113	14 December 1990	United Nations Rules for the Protection of Juveniles Deprived of Their Liberty	Without a vote
45/170	18 December 1990	The situation of human rights in occupied Kuwait	144-1-0

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
46/35 A	6 December 1991	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons A. Third Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	113-2-14
46/35 B	6 December 1991	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons B. Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol	Without a vote
46/35 C	6 December 1991	Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons C. Chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons	Without a vote
46/40	6 December 1991	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
46/134	17 December 1991	Situation of human rights in Iraq	129-1-17
46/136	17 December 1991	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
46/182	19 December 1991	Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian emergency assistance of the United Nations	Without a vote
46/216	20 December 1991	International cooperation to mitigate the environmental consequences on Kuwait and other countries in the region resulting from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait	135-0-1
46/242	25 August 1992	The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina	136-1-5

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
47/37	25 November 1992	Protection of the environment in times of armed conflict	Without a vote
47/39	30 November 1992	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
47/44	9 December 1992	The role of science and technology in the context of international security, disarmament and other related fields	Without a vote
47/52 E	9 December 1992	General and complete disarmament E. Second Review Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Prohibition of Military or any other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques	Without a vote
47/56	9 December 1992	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
47/80	16 December 1992	"Ethnic cleansing" and racial hatred	Without a vote
47/121	18 December 1992	The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina	102-0-57
47/133	18 December 1992	Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance	Without a vote
47/141	18 December 1992	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
47/145	18 December 1992	Situation of Human Rights in Iraq	126-2-26
47/147	18 December 1992	Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
47/151	18 December 1992	International cooperation to mitigate the environmental consequences on Kuwait and other countries in the region resulting from the situation between Iraq and Kuwait	159-0-2
47/190	22 December 1992	Report of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development	Without a vote
47/191	22 December 1992	Institutional arrangements to follow up the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development	Without a vote
48/30	9 December 1993	United Nations Decade of International Law	Without a vote
48/37	9 December 1993	Question of responsibility for attacks on United Nations and associated personnel and measures to ensure that those responsible for such attacks are brought to justice	Without a vote
48/65	16 December 1993	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
48/75 K	16 December 1993	General and complete disarmament K. Moratorium on the export of anti-personnel landmines	Without a vote
48/79	16 December 1993	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
48/88	20 December 1993	The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina	109-0-57
48/92	20 December 1993	Use of mercenaries as a means to violate human rights and to impede the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	108-14-39
48/104	20 December 1993	Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women	Without a vote
48/116	20 December 1993	Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	Without a vote
48/143	20 December 1993	Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
48/144	20 December 1993	Situation of human rights in Iraq	116-2-43
48/152	20 December 1993	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
48/153	20 December 1993	Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia: violations of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	Without a vote
48/157	20 December 1993	Protection of children affected by armed conflicts	Without a vote
49/10	3 November 1994	The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina	97-0-61
49/50	9 December 1994	United Nations Decade of International Law	Without a vote
49/59	9 December 1994	Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel	Without a vote
49/75 D	15 December 1994	General and complete disarmament D. Moratorium on the exports of anti-personnel land-mines	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
49/79	15 December 1994	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
49/86	15 December 1994	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
49/113	19 December 1994	Dissemination of the principles of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development	Without a vote
49/126	19 December 1994	Agenda for development	Without a vote
49/169	23 December 1994	Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	Without a vote
49/196	23 December 1994	Situation of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	150-0-14
49/198	23 December 1994	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	101-13-49
49/199	23 December 1994	Situation of human rights in Cambodia	Without a vote
49/205	23 December 1994	Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
49/206	23 December 1994	Situation of human rights in Rwanda	Without a vote
49/207	23 December 1994	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
49/215	23 December 1994	Assistance in mine clearance	Without a vote
50/22 C	25 April 1996	The situation in the Middle East	64-2-65
50/44	11 December 1995	United Nations Decade of International Law	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
50/70 O	12 December 1995	General and complete disarmament O. Moratorium on the exports of anti-personnel landmines	Without a vote
50/74	12 December 1995	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
50/79	12 December 1995	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
50/82	14 December 1995	Assistance in mine clearance	Without a vote
50/178	22 December 1995	Situation of human rights in Cambodia	Without a vote
50/189	22 December 1995	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
50/192	22 December 1995	Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflicts in the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
50/193	22 December 1995	Situation of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	144-1-20
50/197	22 December 1995	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	94-15-54
50/200	22 December 1995	Situation of human rights in Rwanda	Without a vote
51/30 B	5 December 1996	Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance: special economic assistance to individual countries or regions B. Assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Liberia	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
51/30 G	13 December 1996	Strengthening of the coordination of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance of the United Nations, including special economic assistance: special economic assistance to individual countries or regions G. Assistance for humanitarian relief and the economic and social rehabilitation of Somalia	Without a vote
51/45 P	10 December 1996	Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol	165-0-7
51/45 S	10 December 1996	General and complete disarmament S. An international agreement to ban anti-personnel landmines	155-0-10
51/45 T	10 December 1996	General and complete disarmament T. Status of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
51/49	10 December 1996	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May be Deemed to be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
51/54	10 December 1996	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
51/77	12 December 1996	The rights of the child	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
51/83	12 December 1996	Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	117-17-39
51/98	12 December 1996	Situation of human rights in Cambodia	Without a vote
51/108	12 December 1996	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
51/112	12 December 1996	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	100-16-50
51/114	12 December 1996	Situation of human rights in Rwanda	Without a vote
51/115	12 December 1996	Rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
51/134	13 December 1996	Israeli practices affecting the human rights of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territory, including Jerusalem	149-2-8
51/137	13 December 1996	Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel	Without a vote
51/157	16 December 1996	United Nations Decade of International Law	Without a vote
52/38 A	9 December 1997	General and complete disarmament: Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction	142-0-18
52/38 H	9 December 1997	General and complete disarmament: Contributions towards banning anti-personnel landmines	147-0-15
52/38 T	9 December 1997	General and complete disarmament: Status of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
52/42	9 December 1997	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
52/47	9 December 1997	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
52/107	12 December 1997	The rights of the child	Without a vote
52/140	12 December 1997	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	93-16-58
52/145	12 December 1997	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
52/167	16 December 1997	Safety and security of humanitarian personnel	Without a vote
53/26	17 November 1998	Assistance in mine action	Without a vote
53/77 L	4 December 1998	General and complete disarmament L. Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol	168-0-5
53/77 N	4 December 1998	General and complete disarmament: Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction	147-0-21
53/77 R	4 December 1998	General and complete disarmament R. Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
53/81	4 December 1998	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
53/87	7 December 1998	Safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel	Without a vote
53/116	9 December 1998	Traffic in women and girls	Without a vote
53/128	9 December 1998	The rights of the child	Without a vote
53/164	9 December 1998	Situation of human rights in Kosovo	122-3-34
54/54 B	1 December 1999	General and complete disarmament B. Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction	139-1-20
54/54 E	1 December 1999	General and complete disarmament E. Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
54/58	1 December 1999	Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects	Without a vote
54/61	1 December 1999	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
54/78	6 December 1998	Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, and the occupied Syrian Golan	149-3-3
54/151	17 December 1999	Use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	110-16-35
54/183	17 December 1999	Situation of human rights in Kosovo	108-4-45
54/192	17 December 1999	Safety and security of humanitarian personnel and protection of United Nations personnel	Without a vote
54/263	25 May 2000	Optional protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography	Without a vote
55/2	8 September 2000	United Nations Millennium Declaration	Without a vote
55/24	14 November 2000	The situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina	Without a vote
55/25	15 November 2000	United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime	Without a vote
55/33 H	20 November 2000	General and Complete Disarmament H. Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production, Stockpiling and Use of Chemical Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
55/33 J	20 November 2000	General and Complete Disarmament J. Measures to uphold the authority of the 1925 Geneva Protocol	163-0-5

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of Adoption	Title	Voting Record
55/33 V	20 November 2000	General and Complete Disarmament V. Implementation of the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-personnel Mines and on Their Destruction	143-0-22
55/40	20 November 2000	Convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxin Weapons and on Their Destruction	Without a vote
55/73	4 December 2000	New international humanitarian order	Without a vote
55/116	4 December 2000	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	85-32-49
56/4	5 November 2001	Observance of the International Day for Preventing the Exploitation of the Environment in War and Armed Conflict	Without a vote
56/83	12 December 2001	Responsibility of States for internationally wrongful acts	Without a vote

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY ECOSOC

Number	Date	Title	Voting Record
608 (XXI)	30 April 1956	Slavery	12-1-5
663 (XXIV)	31 July 1957	World social situation 663 C Recommendations of the first UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the treatment of Offenders	Unanimously
1158 (XLI)	5 August 1966	Question of punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity	22-0-2
1186 (XLI)	18 November 1966	Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees: Measures to extend the personal scope of the Convention of 28 July 1951 relating to the status of refugees	Without a vote
2075 (LXII)	13 May 1977	Report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on its 4th session	Without a vote
2076 (LXII)	13 May 1977	Extension of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners to persons arrested or imprisoned without charge	Without a vote
1979/38	10 May 1979	Disappeared persons	Without a vote
1980/4	16 April 1980	Measures to prevent the exploitation of prostitution	Without a vote
1980/41	2 May 1980	Conditions in which women are detained	Without a vote
1982/24	4 May 1982	Women and children under apartheid	35-1-6

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting Record
1982/25	4 May 1982	Women and children refugees	Without a vote
1984/19	24 May 1984	Physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex	Without a vote
1986/29	23 May 1986	Physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex	Without a vote
1989/65	24 May 1989	Effective prevention and investigation of extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions	Without a vote
1990/5	24 May 1990	Physical violence against detained women that is specific to their sex	Without a vote
1991/23	30 May 1991	Refugee and displaced women and children	Without a vote
1998/9	28 July 1998	Situation of women and girls in Afghanistan	Without a vote

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE UN COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
3 (XXI)	9 April 1965	Question of punishment of war criminals and of persons who have committed crimes against humanity	Unanimously (as regards to the resolution as a whole), 19-0-2 (as regards subparagraph (b) of operative paragraph 1)
1 (XXXIII)	15 February 1977	Question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East	23-3-6
1 (XXXIV)	14 February 1978	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	23-2-7
1 (XXXV)	21 February 1979	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	20-2-9
1 (XXXVI)	13 February 1980	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	28-3-8
29 (XXXVI)	11 March 1980	Human rights situation in Democratic Kampuchea	20-4-6
1 A (XXXVII)	11 February 1981	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	31-3-8

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1982/1	11 February 1982	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	Without a vote
1983/1	15 February 1983	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	29-1-12
1983/5	15 February 1983	The right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation	28-9-4
1983/23	4 March 1983	Report of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on its 35th session: discrimination against indigenous populations	Without a vote
1983/29	8 March 1983	Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories: situation of human rights in El Salvador	23-6-10
1984/1	20 February 1984	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	29-1-11
1984/52	14 March 1984	Situation of human rights in El Salvador	24-5-13
1985/1	19 February 1985	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	28-5-8
1985/36	13 March 1985	Situation of human rights in Guatemala	32-0-1
1986/1	20 February 1986	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	29-7-6

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1986/24	10 March 1986	Situation in southern Africa	31-5-7
1986/39	12 March 1986	Situation of human rights in El Salvador	39-0-4
1986/40	12 March 1986	Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan	28-9-5
1986/43	12 March 1986	Situation in southern Lebanon	25-1-17
1987/2	19 February 1987	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	29-1-12
1987/6	19 February 1987	Situation in Kampuchea	29-8-3
1987/50	11 March 1987	Question of human rights in Cyprus	25-3-15
1987/51	11 March 1987	Situation of human rights in El Salvador	36-0-7
1987/54	11 March 1987	Situation of human rights in southern Lebanon	26-1-15
1987/58	11 March 1987	Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan	26-8-7
1987/60	12 March 1987	Question of human rights in Chile	Without a vote
1987/61	12 March 1987	Situation in Sri Lanka	Without a vote
1988/1	15 February 1988	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	31-1-11
1988/6	22 February 1988	Situation in Kampuchea	31-7-3
1988/7	22 February 1988	The use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	30-11-1
1988/13	29 February 1988	The adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other forms of assistance given to colonial and racist régimes in southern Africa	32-7-4
1988/47	8 March 1988	Prosecution and punishment of all war criminals and persons who have committed crimes against humanity	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1988/65	10 March 1988	Situation of human rights in El Salvador	Without a vote
1988/66	10 March 1988	Situation of human rights in southern Lebanon	26-1-15
1989/2	17 February 1989	Question of violations of human rights in occupied Palestine	32-1-9
1989/9	23 February 1989	Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination	Without a vote
1989/20	6 March 1989	Situation in Kampuchea	35-7-1
1989/21	6 March 1989	Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	32-10-1
1989/65	8 March 1989	Situation of human rights in southern Lebanon	30-1-12
1989/67	8 March 1989	Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1989/68	8 March 1989	Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador	Without a vote
1990/7	19 February 1990	Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	Without a vote
1990/53	6 March 1990	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1990/54	6 March 1990	Situation of human rights in southern Lebanon	41-1-1
1990/77	7 March 1990	Situation of human rights in El Salvador	Without a vote
1991/4	15 February 1991	Situation in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1991/7	22 February 1991	Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	Without a vote
1991/51	6 March 1991	Assistance to Guatemala in the field of human rights	Without a vote
1991/66	6 March 1991	Situation of human rights in southern Lebanon	41-1-0

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1991/67	6 March 1991	Situation of human rights in Kuwait under Iraqi occupation	41-1-0
1991/75	6 March 1991	Situation of human rights in El Salvador	Without a vote
1991/78	6 March 1991	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1992/6	21 February 1992	Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	Without a vote
1992/19	28 February 1992	Situation of human rights in South Africa	Without a vote
1992/60	3 March 1992	Situation of human rights in Kuwait under Iraqi occupation	47-1-1
1992/68	4 March 1992	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1992/70	4 March 1992	Situation of human rights in Lebanon	49-1-1
1992/71	5 March 1992	Situation of human rights in Iraq	35-1-16
1992/S-1/1	14 August 1992	The situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
1992/S-2/1	1 December 1992	The situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia	45-1-1
1993/2 A	19 February 1993	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	26-16-5
1993/5	19 February 1993	Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	Without a vote
1993/7	23 February 1993	Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
1993/8	23 February 1993	Rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1993/11	26 February 1993	Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat racism and Racial Discrimination and launching of a Third Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination	Without a vote
1993/33	5 March 1993	Human rights and forensic science	Without a vote
1993/45	5 March 1993	Right to freedom of opinion and expression	Without a vote
1993/60	10 March 1993	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	35-9-8
1993/66	10 March 1993	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1993/67	10 March 1993	Situation of human rights in Southern Lebanon	50-1-0
1993/83	10 March 1993	Effects of armed conflicts on children's lives	Without a vote
1994/7	18 February 1994	Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	35-1-15
1994/37	4 March 1994	Torture and other cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment	Without a vote
1994/39	4 March 1994	Question of enforced disappearances	Without a vote
1994/58	4 March 1994	Assistance to Guatemala in the filed of human rights	Without a vote
1994/59	4 March 1994	Assistance to the republic of Georgia in the field of human rights	Without a vote
1994/60	4 March 1994	Assistance to Somalia in the field of human rights	Without a vote
1994/67	19 March 1994	Civil defence forces	Without a vote
1994/72	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia: violations of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1994/74	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in Iraq	34-1-18
1994/75	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina	41-1-10
1994/77	9 March 1994	Rape and abuse of women in the territory of the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
1994/79	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in Sudan	35-9-9
1994/83	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in Southern Lebanon	48-1-3
1994/84	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1994/85	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in Myanmar	Without a vote
1994/87	9 March 1994	Situation of human rights in Zaire	Without a vote
1994/94	9 March 1994	Effects of armed conflicts on children's lives	Without a vote
1995/5	17 February 1995	Use of mercenaries as a means of impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	34-1-15
1995/7	16 January 1995	Question of Western Sahara	Without a vote
1995/8	17 February 1995	Violations of human rights in southern Africa: report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of experts	Without a vote
1995/29	3 March 1995	Minimum humanitarian standards	Without a vote
1995/35	3 March 1995	Special process dealing with the problem of missing persons in the territory of the former Yugoslavia	Without a vote
1995/51	3 March 1995	Assistance to Guatemala in the field of human rights	Without a vote
1995/55	3 March 1995	The situation of human rights in Cambodia	Without a vote
1995/56	3 March 1995	Assistance to Somalia in the field of human rights	Without a vote
1995/67	7 March 1995	Human rights situation in Southern Lebanon and the western Bekaa	48-1-4
1995/69	8 March 1995	Situation of human rights in Zaire	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1995/72	8 March 1995	Situation of human rights in Myanmar	Without a vote
1995/73	8 March 1995	Extra-judicial, summary or arbitrary executions	Without a vote
1995/74	8 March 1995	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1995/76	8 March 1995	Situation of human rights in Iraq	31-1-21
1995/77	8 March 1995	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	33-7-10
1995/79	8 March 1995	Rights of the child	Without a vote
1995/89	8 March 1995	Situation of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, in the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	44-0-7
1995/91	8 March 1995	Situation of human rights in Rwanda	Without a vote
1996/1	27 March 1996	Situation of human rights in Burundi	Without a vote
1996/13	11 April 1996	Human Rights and the environment	Without a vote
1996/41	19 April 1996	A permanent forum for indigenous people in the United Nations System	Without a vote
1996/53	19 April 1996	Right to freedom of opinion and expression	Without a vote
1996/54	19 April 1996	Situation of human rights in Cambodia	Without a vote
1996/71	23 April 1996	Situation of human rights in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	Without a vote
1996/73	23 April 1996	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	Without a vote
1996/74	23 April 1996	Extra-judicial, summary or arbitrary executions	Without a vote
1996/75	23 April 1996	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1996/76	23 April 1996	Situation of human rights in Rwanda	Without a vote
1996/80	23 April 1996	Situation of human rights in Myanmar	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1996/84	24 April 1996	Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran	Without a vote
1996/85	24 April 1996	Rights of the child	Without a vote
1997/2	26 March 1997	Human rights in the occupied Syrian Golan	26-1-23
1997/38	11 April 1997	Torture and other cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment	Without a vote
1997/57	15 April 1997	Situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro)	Without a vote
1997/58	15 April 1997	Situation of human rights in Zaire	Without a vote
1997/59	15 April 1997	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	Without a vote
1997/62	24 April 1997	Human rights in Cuba	19-10-24
1997/65	16 April 1997	Situation of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1997/77	18 April 1997	Situation of human rights in Burundi	Without a vote
1997/78	18 April 1997	Rights of the child	Without a vote
1998/1	27 March 1998	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	31-1-20
1998/6	27 March 1998	The use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination	35-9-8
1998/38	17 April 1998	Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment	Without a vote
1998/52	17 April 1998	The elimination of violence against women	Without a vote
1998/53	17 April 1998	Impunity	Without a vote
1998/60	17 April 1998	Situation of human rights in Cambodia	Without a vote
1998/62	21 April 1998	Human rights situation in Southern Lebanon and western Bekaa	52-1-0
1998/63	21 April 1998	Situation of human rights in Myanmar	Without a vote

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
1998/67	21 April 1998	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	31-6-16
1998/70	21 April 1998	The question of human rights in Afghanistan	Without a vote
1998/73	22 April 1998	Hostage-taking	Without a vote
1998/75	22 April 1998	Abduction of children from northern Uganda	24-1-27
1998/79	22 April 1998	Situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Republic of Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia	41-0-12
1998/82	24 April 1998	Situation of human rights in Burundi	Without a vote
1999/1	6 April 1999	Situation of human rights in Sierra Leone	Without a vote
1999/10	23 April 1999	Situation of human rights in Burundi	Without a vote
1999/33	26 April 1999	The right to restitution, compensation and rehabilitation for victims of grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms	Without a vote
1999/36	26 April 1999	Right to freedom of opinion and expression	Without a vote
1999/S-4/1	27 September 1999	Situation of human rights in East Timor	Without a vote
2000/26	18 April 2000	Situation of human rights in Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), the republic of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina	44-1-18
2000/58	25 April 2000	Situation in the Republic of Chechnya	25-7-19
2000/S-5/1	19 October 2000	Grave and massive violations of the human rights of the Palestinian people by Israel	19-16-7
2001/7	18 April 2001	Question of the violation of human rights in the occupied Arab territories, including Palestine	28-2-22

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date	Title	Voting record
2001/12	18 April 2001	Situation of human rights in parts of south-eastern Europe	41-0-11
2001/18	20 April 2001	Situation of human rights in the Sudan	28-0-25
2001/24	20 April 2001	Situation in the Republic of Chechnya of the Russian Federation	22-12-19
2001/38	23 April 2001	Hostage-taking	Without a vote
2001/40	23 April 2001	Question of arbitrary detention	Without a vote
2001/42	23 April 2001	Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance	Without a vote
2001/46	23 April 2001	Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances	Without a vote
2001/66	25 April 2001	Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide	Without a vote
2002/37	22 April 2002	Integrity of the judicial system	34-0-19
2002/60	25 April 2002	Missing persons	Without a vote
2002/79	25 April 2002	Impunity	Without a vote

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE UN SUB-COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Number	Date of adoption	Title
15 (XXXIV)	10 September 1981	Question of the human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment
1982/17	7 September 1982	Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation and of apartheid, in all countries, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories
1983/12	5 September 1983	Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms: the situation in Guatemala
1983/18	5 September 1983	Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms: the situation in El Salvador
1984/23	29 August 1984	Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms: the situation in Guatemala
1984/26	30 August 1984	Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms: the situation in El Salvador
1985/8	28 August 1985	Consideration of the future work of the Sub-Commission [on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities] and of the draft provisional agenda for the 39th session of the Sub-Commission
1985/18	29 August 1985	The situation in El Salvador
1985/26	29 August 1985	Question of the human rights of persons subjected to any form of detention or imprisonment
1985/27	30 August 1985	The situation in Chile
1985/28	30 August 1985	The situation in Guatemala
1987/18	2 September 1987	Situation in El Salvador
1987/19	2 September 1987	Violations of human rights in Cyprus
1988/10	31 August 1988	The situation in the Palestinian and Arab territories occupied by Israel

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1988/13	1 September 1988	The situation of human rights in El Salvador
1988/27	1 September 1988	Respect for the right to life: elimination of chemical weapons
1989/4	31 August 1989	Situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel
1989/9	31 August 1989	Situation of human rights in El Salvador
1989/24	31 August 1989	Human rights in times of armed conflicts
1989/39	1 September 1989	Respect for the right to life: elimination of chemical weapons
1990/12	30 August 1990	Situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel
1991/4	23 August 1991	Situation in South Africa
1991/6	23 August 1991	Situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel
1992/9	26 August 1992	Situation in South Africa
1992/10	26 August 1992	Situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel
1992/13	27 August 1992	Situation of human rights in El Salvador
1992/18	27 August 1992	Situation of human rights in Guatemala
1992/20	27 August 1992	Situation in East Timor
1993/8	20 August 1993	Punishment of the crime of genocide
1993/11	20 August 1993	Situation in South Africa
1993/15	20 August 1993	Situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel
1993/16	20 August 1993	Situation of human rights in Guatemala
1993/17	20 August 1993	Situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina
1993/20	20 August 1993	Situation of human rights in Iraq
1993/23	23 August 1993	Situation of human rights in Peru
1994/1	9 August 1994	Situation in Rwanda
1995/3	18 August 1995	Situation of human rights in Iraq
1995/5	18 August 1995	Situation of human rights in Rwanda
1995/8	18 August 1995	Situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia
1995/24	24 August 1995	Injurious effect of anti-personnel land-mines
1996/3	19 August 1996	Situation of human rights in Rwanda
1996/4	19 August 1996	Situation of human rights in Burundi
1996/5	19 August 1996	Situation of human rights in Iraq
1996/15	23 August 1996	Injurious effects of anti-personnel land-mines
1996/16	29 August 1996	International peace and security as an essential condition for the enjoyment of human rights, above all the right to life
1997/34	28 August 1997	Respect for humanitarian and human rights law provisions in United Nations peacekeeping operations

(cont.)

(cont.)

Number	Date of adoption	Title
1997/36	28 August 1997	International peace and security as an essential condition for the enjoyment of human rights, above all the right to life
1998/18	21 August 1998	Systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, including internal armed conflict
1998/26	22 August 1998	Housing and property restitution in the context of the return of refugees and internally displaced persons
1999/16	26 August 1999	Systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices
2000/24	18 August 2000	Role of universal or extraterritorial competence in preventive action against impunity
2001/16	16 August 2001	International protection for refugees and displaced persons
2001/22	16 August 2001	International cooperation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity
2001/24	16 August 2001	The Social Forum

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY OTHER INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS

Organisation of African Unity (African Union)

African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights

No.	Date	Title
1 (XI)	2–9 March 1992	Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial
2 (XIV)	1–10 December 1993	Resolution on the promotion and the respect of International Humanitarian Law and Human and Peoples' Rights
4 (XVII)	13–22 March 1995	Resolution on anti-personnel mines

Assembly of Heads of State and Government

No.	Date	Title
197 (XXXVI)	9–11 July 1990	Resolution on the adoption of the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child
250 (XXXII)	8–10 July 1996	Resolution on the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights

Conference of African Ministers of Health

No.	Date	Title
7 (V)	24–29 April 1995	Resolution on health and prison
14 (V)	26–28 April 1995	Resolution on health and war

Council of Ministers

Resolutions

No.	Date	Title
1448 (LVIII)	21–26 June 1993	Resolution on refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa
1526 (LX)	6–11 June 1994	Resolution on respect for international humanitarian law and support for humanitarian action in armed conflicts
1588 (LXII)	21–23 June 1995	Resolution on refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa
1589 (LXII)	21–23 June 1995	Resolution on the regional Conference on assistance to refugees, returnees and displaced persons in the Great Lakes region
1593 (LXII)	21–23 June 1995	Resolution on the 1980 United Nations Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons and problems posed by the proliferation of anti-personnel mines in Africa
1628 (LXIII)	26–28 February 1996	Resolution on the revision of the 1980 United Nations Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons and Problems Posed by the Proliferation of Anti-Personnel Mines in Africa
1649 (LXIV)	1–5 July 1996	Resolution on Burundi
1650 (LXIV)	1–5 July 1996	Resolution on Liberia
1653 (LXIV)	1–5 July 1996	Resolution on refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa
1659 (LXIV)	1–5 July 1996	Resolution on the plight of African children in situation of armed conflicts
1662 (LXIV)	1–5 July 1996	Resolution on the international humanitarian law, water and armed conflict in Africa
2004 (LXVI)	28–31 May 1997	Resolution on the report of the Secretary-General on the situation in Angola

Decisions

No.	Date	Title
362 (LXVI)	28–31 May 1997	Report of the Commission of Twenty on the situation of refugees, returnees and displaced persons in Africa
363 (LXVI)	28–31 May 1997	Report of the Secretary-General on the question of antipersonnel landmines and the international efforts to reach a total ban

Council of Europe

Parliamentary Assembly

Resolutions

No.	Date	Title
722	1 February 1980	Situation of human rights in Latin America
751	15 May 1981	Refugees from El Salvador
774	29 April 1982	Europe and Latin America – the challenge of human rights
816	21 March 1984	Situation in Cyprus
822	10 May 1984	Situation in Turkey
823	28 June 1984	Activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC)
828	26 September 1984	Enforced disappearances
835	30 January 1985	Situation in Latin America
849	30 September 1985	War between Iraq and Iran
854	20 November 1985	Deteriorating situation in Afghanistan
881	1 July 1987	Activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) (1984–86)
904	30 June 1988	Protection of humanitarian medical missions
921	6 July 1989	Activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) (1987–88)
950	1 October 1990	Gulf crisis
954	29 January 1991	Gulf conflict
984	30 June 1992	Crisis in the former Yugoslavia
991	7 October 1992	Activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (1989–1991)
994	3 February 1993	Massive and flagrant violations of human rights in the territory of former Yugoslavia
1010	28 September 1993	Situation of the refugees and displaced persons in Serbia, Montenegro and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia
1011	28 September 1993	Situation of women and children in the former Yugoslavia

(cont.)

No.	Date	Title
1019	25 January 1994	Humanitarian situation and needs of the refugees, displaced persons and other vulnerable groups in the countries of the former Yugoslavia
1022	27 January 1994	Humanitarian situation and needs of the displaced Iraqi Kurdish population
1047	10 November 1994	Conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh
1050	10 November 1994	Rwanda and the prevention of humanitarian crises
1055	2 February 1995	Russia's request for membership in the light of the situation in Chechnya
1066	27 September 1995	Situation in some parts of the former Yugoslavia
1077	24 January 1996	Albanian asylum-seekers from Kosovo
1085	24 April 1996	Activities of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC), 1992–95
1119	22 April 1997	Conflicts in Transcaucasia

Recommendations

No.	Date	Title
855	2 February 1979	Statutory limitation of war crimes and crimes against humanity
868	5 June 1979	The missing political prisoners in Chile
945	2 July 1982	International humanitarian law
974	5 November 1983	Situation in Cyprus
1056	5 May 1987	National refugees and missing persons in Cyprus
1176	5 February 1992	Crisis in Yugoslavia: displaced populations
1150	24 April 1991	Situation of the Iraqi Kurdish population and other persecuted minorities
1189	1 July 1992	Establishment of an international court to judge war crimes
1198	5 November 1992	Crisis in former Yugoslavia
1218	27 September 1993	Establishing an international court to try serious violations of international humanitarian law
1239	14 April 1994	Cultural situation in the former Yugoslavia
1266	26 April 1995	Turkey's military intervention in northern Iraq and on Turkey's respect of commitments concerning constitutional and legislative reforms
1287	24 January 1996	Refugees, displaced persons and reconstruction in certain countries of the former Yugoslavia

(cont.)

No.	Date	Title
1297	25 April 1996	The implementation of the Dayton Agreements for peace in Bosnia-Herzegovina
1305	24 September 1996	Humanitarian situation of the displaced persons in Georgia
1368	22 April 1998	Latest developments in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and the situation in Kosovo
1376	24 June 1998	Crisis in Kosovo and situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia
1377	25 June 1998	Humanitarian situation of the Kurdish refugees and displaced persons in South-East Turkey and North Iraq
1384	24 September 1998	Crisis in Kosovo and situation in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia
1385	24 September 1998	Kosovo refugees, asylum seekers and displaced persons
1427	23 September 1999	Respect for international humanitarian law in Europe
1495	24 January 2001	Environmental impact of the war in Yugoslavia on Southeast Europe

European Parliament

Date	Title
15 October 1982	Resolution on the situation in Lebanon
18 November 1982	Resolution on the events in Argentina
16 December 1982	Resolution on the discovery of mass graves in Argentina
11 January 1983	Resolution on the problem of missing persons in Cyprus
19 May 1983	Resolution on the statement by the Argentine military junta concerning the fate of the persons who have disappeared since the last coup d'état
13 October 1983	Resolution on the situation in Argentina
12 December 1985	Resolution on mass population transfers in Ethiopia and the expulsion of MSF
12 December 1985	Resolution on the situation in Afghanistan
12 March 1988	Resolution on the situation in Kosovo
20 May 1988	Resolution on the situation in Cyprus
15 December 1988	Resolution on human rights violations in Turkey
25 May 1989	Resolution on May Day events and the continuing aggravation of the domestic political climate in Turkey
12 July 1990	Resolution on the violation of human rights in Cyprus
11 March 1993	Resolution on the Rape of Women in former Yugoslavia
12 March 1993	Resolution on Human Rights in the world and Community human rights policy for the years 1991/92
15 December 1994	Resolution on the situation in Chechnya

(cont.)

Date	Title
16 February 1995	Resolution on the humanitarian situation in Chechnya and the neighbouring republics of Ingushetia, Daghestan and Northern Ossetia
16 February 1995	Resolution on the human rights situation in Chechnya
16 March 1995	Resolution on human rights in Chechnya
16 November 1995	Resolution on the failure of the international conference on anti-personnel landmines and laser weapons
24 October 1996	Resolution on the Ottawa Conference on anti-personnel landmines
14 November 1996	Resolution on the situation in Abkhazia
16 July 1998	Resolution on Kosovo
8 October 1998	Resolution on the situation in Kosovo
14 January 1999	Resolution on the situation in Sierra Leone
16 March 2000	Resolution on violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Chechnya

League of Arab States

Council

No.	Date	Title
1778	20 July 1961	Measures adopted to assist Tunisia
1984	31 March 1964	The British Aggression Against Hurayb in Yemen
2676	15 September 1970	Geneva Protocol of 1925 relative to the Prohibition of the Use of Poisonous Gases in Times of War
4237	31 March 1983	Israeli Practices Against Civilians in the Occupied Arab Territories
4238	31 March 1983	Poisoning Arab Students and Professors in the Occupied Palestinian Territories
4430	28 March 1985	Israeli Occupation of Parts of South Lebanon and the Western Bekaa and Rashia, and the Arbitrary and Inhuman Practices contrary to International Laws, Charters and Morals
4646	6 April 1987	Developments of the Iraq/Iran War
4938	13 September 1989	The Iraq/Iran Situation
5038	31 August 1990	The Situation of Civilians as a Result of the Iraqi Occupation of Kuwaiti Territory
5039	31 August 1990	The Detention by Iraq of Nationals of Third Countries
5169	29 April 1992	Israeli Occupation of Parts of South Lebanon and the Western Bekaa and Implementation of Security Council Resolution No. 425
5231	13 September 1992	Bosnia and Herzegovina

(cont.)

No.	Date	Title
5324	21 September 1993	Israeli Occupation of Parts of South Lebanon and the Western Bekaa and Implementation of Security Council Resolution No. 425
5414	15 September 1994	Follow-up of the Intifada's Developments
5633	31 March 1997	The Occupied Arab Syrian Golan Heights
5635	31 March 1997	Lebanese Hostages and Prisoners in Israeli Places of Detention and Prisons

Organization of American States

General Assembly

No.	Date	Title
783 (XV-O/85)	9 December 1985	Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture
1270 (XXIV-O/94)	10 June 1994	Respect for International Humanitarian Law
1335 (XXV-O/95)	9 June 1995	Respect for International Humanitarian Law
1408 (XXVI-O/96)	7 June 1996	Respect for International Humanitarian Law
1411 (XXVI-O/96)	7 June 1996	The Western Hemisphere as an Antipersonnel-Land-Mine-Free Zone
1550 (XXVIII-O/98)	2 June 1998	Assaults upon Freedom of the Press and Crimes against Journalists
1565 (XXVIII-O/98)	2 June 1998	Promotion of and Respect for International Humanitarian Law
1602 (XXVIII-O/98)	3 June 1998	Respect for International Humanitarian Law

Organization of the Islamic Conference

Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs

No.	Date	Title
49/19-P	31 July–5 August 1990	Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam
1/5-EX	17–18 June 1992	Resolution on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina
1/6-EX	1–2 December 1992	Resolution on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina
1/22-P	10–12 December 1994	Resolution on the Palestinian cause and the Arab–Israeli conflict

(cont.)

No.	Date	Title
6/22-P	10–12 December 1994	Resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina
36/23-P	9–12 December 1995	Resolution on the elimination of anti-personnel mines and mine clearing operations
27/24-P	9–13 December 1996	Resolution on anti-personnel mines and mine clearing operations
28/25-P	15–17 March 1998	Resolution on anti-personnel mines and mine clearing operations

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE RED CROSS AND RED CRESCENT

4th International Conference of the Red Cross, Karlsruhe, 22–27 September 1887
Resolution VIII. Measures which have been or should be taken by the Societies in order to spread knowledge of the 1864 Geneva Convention in the army, in circles especially interested in its implementation and among the general public
15th International Conference of the Red Cross, Tokyo, 20–29 October 1934
Resolution IX. Teaching the principles of the Geneva Convention and of the Red Cross to youth
19th International Conference of the Red Cross, New Delhi, 28 October–7 November 1957
Resolution XIII. Draft rules for the limitation of the dangers incurred by the civilian population in time of war
Resolution XX. Reunion of dispersed families
Resolution XXIX. Young people and the Geneva Conventions
Resolution XXX. Practical means of spreading knowledge of the Geneva Conventions among young people
20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965
Resolution IX. Reading of principles
Resolution XXI. Implementation and dissemination of the Geneva Conventions
Resolution XXIII. Tracing of burial places
Resolution XXIV. Treatment of prisoners of war
Resolution XXV. Application of the Geneva Conventions by the United Nations Emergency Forces
Resolution XXVI. Repression of violations of the Geneva Conventions
Resolution XXVIII. Protection of civilian populations against the dangers of indiscriminate warfare Resolution XXX. Protection of civil medical and nursing personnel
Resolution XXXI. Protection of victims of non-international conflicts
Resolution XXXIII. Instruction of medical personnel in the Geneva Conventions
21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969
Resolution IX. Dissemination of the Geneva Conventions
Resolution X. Implementation of the Fourth Geneva Convention
Resolution XI. Protection of prisoners of war
Resolution XII. War crimes and crimes against humanity
Resolution XIII. Reaffirmation and development of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts
Resolution XIV. Weapons of mass destruction
Resolution XVI. Protection of civilian medical and nursing personnel Resolution XVII. Protection of victims of non-international armed conflicts Resolution XVIII. Status of combatants in non-international armed conflicts

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL OF DELEGATES OF THE INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS AND RED CRESCENT MOVEMENT

Session of 8–15 November 1973, Teheran
Resolution on action in the struggle against racism and racial discrimination
Session of 13–14 October 1983, Geneva
Resolution 4. Red Cross and human rights
Session of 27 November 1987, Rio de Janeiro
Resolution 2. Worldwide campaign for the protection of war victims
Resolution 4. Information and dissemination of international humanitarian law as a contribution to peace
Resolution 5. Formal commitment by the Movement to obtain the full implementation of the Geneva Conventions
Session of 28–30 November 1991, Budapest
Resolution 5. Use of the emblem by National Societies
Resolution 8. Dissemination of international humanitarian law and of the principles and ideals of the Movement
Resolution 9. The International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and refugees
Resolution 11. Protection of victims of war
Resolution 12. Humanitarian assistance in situations of armed conflict Resolution 13. Protection of the civilian population against famine in situations of armed conflict Resolution 14. Child soldiers
Session of 29–30 October 1993, Birmingham
Resolution 2. The International Conference for the Protection of War Victims
Resolution 3. Mines
Resolution 4. Child soldiers
Resolution 5. Armed protection of humanitarian assistance
Resolution 7. The Movement, refugees and displaced persons Resolution 9. Respect for and dissemination of the Fundamental Principles: Final report
Resolution 11. Principles of humanitarian assistance
Session of 1–2 December 1995, Geneva
Resolution 5. Children in armed conflicts and Plan of action concerning children in armed conflict Resolution 9. Armed protection of humanitarian assistance
Resolution 10. Anti-personnel landmines
Session of 25–27 November 1997, Seville
Resolution 2. The emblem
Resolution 4. National implementation of international humanitarian law
Resolution 5. International criminal court
Resolution 8. Peace, international humanitarian law and human rights

Session of 29–30 October 1999, Geneva
Resolution 2. Emblem
Resolution 8. Children affected by armed conflict Resolution 10. Movement strategy on landmines
Resolution 11. International criminal court