Customary International Humanitarian Law

Volume II: Practice

Part 2

Edited by

JEAN-MARIE HENCKAERTS AND LOUISE DOSWALD-BECK

ICRC

CAMBRIDGE

INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE RED CROSS

CUSTOMARY INTERNATIONAL HUMANITARIAN LAW

VOLUME II

PRACTICE
Part 2

Edited by
Jean-Marie Henckaerts and Louise Doswald-Beck
With contributions by Carolin Alvermann, Angela Cotroneo, Antoine Grand and Baptiste Rolle

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

PUBLISHED BY THE PRESS SYNDICATE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE
The Pitt Building, Trumpington Street, Cambridge, United Kingdom

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge, CB2 2RU, UK
40 West 20th Street, New York, NY 10011–4211, USA
477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia
Ruiz de Alarcón 13, 28014 Madrid, Spain
Dock House, The Waterfront, Cape Town 8001, South Africa

http://www.cambridge.org

First published 2005
Reprinted 2005

Printed by Rotolito Lombarda, Italy

Typeface Trump Medieval 10/13 pt. System LaTeX 2$_\varepsilon$ [TB]

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Volume II Part 2 ISBN 0 521 83155 5
Only available as:
ISBN 0 521 83937 8 Volume II hardback, Parts 1 and 2
ISBN 0 521 53925 0 set including Volume I hardback

PART V

TREATMENT OF CIVILIANS AND PERSONS HORS DE COMBAT

CHAPTER 32

FUNDAMENTAL GUARANTEES

A. Humane Treatment

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that "persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause, shall in all circumstances be treated humanely".

2. Article 75(1) AP I provides that "persons who are in the power of a Party to the conflict and who do not benefit from more favourable treatment under the Conventions or under this Protocol shall be treated humanely in all circumstances". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]
3. According to Article 4(1) AP II, "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities, whether or not their liberty has been restricted, . . . shall in all circumstances be treated humanely". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[2]
4. Article 5 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "every individual shall have the right to the respect of the dignity inherent in a human being".

Other Instruments
5. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75(1) AP I.
6. Under Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the parties committed themselves to respect and ensure respect for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 75(1) AP I.
7. Article 4(1) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "persons hors de combat and those who do not take a direct part in hostilities . . . shall be . . . treated humanely".
8. According to Section 7.1 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, "persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations, including civilians, members of armed forces who have laid down their weapons and persons placed hors de combat by reason of sickness, wounds or detention, shall, in all circumstances, be treated humanely".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
9. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) incorporates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and, in respect of occupied territories, states that protected persons "shall be treated, at all times, with humanity".[3]
10. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) considers that, in the course of armed conflicts not of an international character, "all persons who do not

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[2] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[3] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 8.001 and 4.010.

directly participate in the hostilities shall be treated with humanity in all circumstances".[4]

11. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the general rule is that persons are to be treated humanely". It also states that "an obligation is imposed on all parties to deal humanely with protected persons".[5]

12. Belgium's Law of War Manual states, with reference to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, that in internal armed conflicts, "persons who do not take a direct part in hostilities, including members of the armed forces who have laid down their arms and persons placed hors de combat, must be treated humanely".[6]

13. Benin's Military Manual provides that all persons hors de combat and who do not take a direct part in hostilities shall be treated humanely.[7]

14. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations instructs combatants to "treat humanely ... all persons hors de combat ".[8]

15. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations instructs combatants to "treat humanely ... all persons hors de combat ".[9]

16. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual instructs combatants to "treat humanely ... all regular combatants hors de combat ".[10]

17. According to Canada's LOAC Manual, "AP I provides that all persons in the power of a party to the conflict are entitled to at least a minimum humane treatment".[11] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual incorporates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[12]

18. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "persons hors de combat and who do not participate directly in hostilities ... shall be protected and treated in all circumstances with humanity".[13]

19. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that humane treatment is one of the fundamental aspects of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[14] It stipulates that "in Colombia's application of AP II, the State demonstrates that it respects the fundamental guarantees of humane treatment of persons not participating directly in hostilities".[15]

20. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual and Instructors' Manual underline the importance of humane treatment of the enemy.[16]

[4] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[5] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 945 and 953.
[6] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 17 and Chapter IX, § 2.
[7] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 4 and Fascicule III, p. 4.
[8] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(1).
[9] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 31.
[10] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), § 421(1).
[11] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-7, § 63.
[12] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-2, § 10(a).
[13] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 1.
[14] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 42.
[15] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 43.
[16] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 12; Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 22.

21. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations instructs combatants to "treat humanely . . . all persons hors de combat ".[17]
22. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL instructs soldiers to treat humanely and show respect for persons and their property.[18]
23. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic requires that all persons in the power of a party, whether combatants or civilians, be treated humanely, according to the laws of war.[19]
24. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended instructs combatants to "treat humanely . . . all persons hors de combat ".[20]
25. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that persons hors de combat shall be treated humanely.[21]
26. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "combatants placed hors de combat, certain categories of military personnel, as well as the entire civilian population, must be particularly protected and treated with humanity".[22]
27. Germany's Military Manual states that combatants must be treated humanely.[23]
28. India's Army Training Note orders troops not to "ill treat any one, and in particular, women and children".[24]
29. With reference to Israel's Law of War Booklet, the Report on the Practice of Israel states that as a general policy, all individuals falling in the power of a party to a conflict should, at a minimum, be treated in accordance with the principles of humanity.[25]
30. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "persons not involved in the fighting because they are not taking part in hostilities, or because they are wounded or have surrendered, or have been detained, must be treated humanely".[26]
31. According to Madagascar's Military Manual, one of the seven fundamental rules of IHL is that "persons placed hors de combat and who do not take a direct part in hostilities shall, in all circumstances, be protected and treated with humanity, without any adverse distinction".[27]
32. Mali's Army Regulations provides that "the refusal to treat with humanity all persons hors de combat " is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[28]
33. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations instructs combatants to "treat humanely . . . all regular combatants hors de combat ".[29]

[17] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32.
[18] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), §§ 1–3.
[19] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), pp. 6 and 7.
[20] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis.
[21] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), §§ 2.1 and 3.2.
[22] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), pp. 4 and 5.
[23] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 704.
[24] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 4/24, § 10.
[25] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.6, referring to Law of War Booklet (1986), p. 12.
[26] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, pp. 5–6, see also Précis No. 3, p. 14.
[27] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 1.
[28] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[29] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(1).

34. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that protected persons shall be treated humanely. With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that persons protected by common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions "shall in all circumstances be treated humanely".[30]
35. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides for the punishment of "a war law violation which contains inhuman treatment".[31]
36. New Zealand's Military Manual stipulates that "protected persons must be humanely treated at all times". It qualifies "inhuman treatment of protected persons" as a grave breach.[32] The manual adds that, in non-international armed conflicts, persons protected by common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions "shall in all circumstances be treated humanely".[33]
37. Nicaragua's Military Manual reproduces common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[34]
38. In Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces, respect for the integrity of persons and their human dignity is one of the ten basic rules.[35]
39. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines provides that "members of the AFP and PNP shall treat suspects and enemies who are out of combat . . . humanely and with respect".[36]
40. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that it is one of the fundamental principles and rules of IHL that "persons hors de combat (e.g. those who surrender or the wounded) and those not taking a direct part in hostilities . . . shall be protected and treated humanely".[37]
41. Russia's Military Manual provides that war victims "shall be granted such a status that would guarantee humane treatment".[38]
42. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations instructs combatants to "treat humanely . . . all persons hors de combat ".[39]
43. Senegal's IHL Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[40]
44. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[41]
45. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "foreigners of enemy nationality who are in the territory of one of the parties to the conflict or in occupied territory must in all cases be treated humanely".[42] It adds that AP II

[30] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VIII–2 and XI-1.
[31] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-44.
[32] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1137 and 1812.
[33] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1807(1).
[34] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1982), Articles 6 and 14.
[35] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), Rule 3.
[36] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2a(3).
[37] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 32.
[38] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 7.
[39] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(1).
[40] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 4.
[41] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[42] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 146.

and common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are applicable during internal armed conflicts and contain "some minimal guarantees for persons involved in the conflict".[43]

46. Togo's Military Manual provides that all persons hors de combat and who do not take a direct part in hostilities shall be treated humanely.[44]

47. The UK LOAC Manual states that "in the event of a civil war, Common Article 3 to the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides: a. that persons out of the fighting . . . because they are wounded . . . must be treated humanely", notably they "may not be subjected to any form of violence".[45]

48. The US Field Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[46]

49. According to the US Air Force Pamphlet, common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions "represents the first attempt to provide protection for victims of all internal armed conflicts. Its general provisions insure humane treatment to civilians and others who are hors de combat."[47]

50. The US Soldier's Manual states that the "humane treatment of non-combatants may produce valuable information, gain active support and deny support for the enemy. Mistreatment serves only the interests of the enemy." The manual specifies that non-combatants include civilians, medical personnel, chaplains, detained or captured persons and the wounded and sick.[48]

51. The US Instructor's Guide provides that the rules of IHL "are based on one general principle: treat all non-combatants . . . humanely".[49]

National Legislation

52. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[50]

53. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(1) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(1) AP II, are punishable offences.[51]

54. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions

[43] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 4.
[44] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 11, Fascicule II, pp. 4 and 5 and Fascicule III, pp. 4 and 5.
[45] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 12, p. 42, § 2.
[46] US, Field Manual (1956), § 11.
[47] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 11-3.
[48] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 5.
[49] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 4, 8 and 17.
[50] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[51] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[52]

55. Paraguay's Law on the Status of Military Personnel provides that respect for human dignity is one of the duties imposed on military personnel because of the constitutional responsibility of the armed forces.[53]

56. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[54]

National Case-law

57. In its judgement in the Videla case in 1994, Chile's Appeal Court of Santiago held that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions obliged parties to non-international armed conflicts "to extend humanitarian treatment to persons taking no active part in the hostilities or who have placed themselves hors de combat for various reasons".[55]

58. In its judgement in the Situation in Chechnya case in 1995, Russia's Constitutional Court recognised the applicability of AP II to the conflict in Chechnya and while noting that amendments to domestic legislation to ensure its application had not been adopted, it stated that "nevertheless, provisions of [AP II] regarding the humane treatment of all persons who did not directly take part in hostilities or who ceased to take part in hostilities, of wounded, sick and civilian population . . . must be respected by both parties to the armed conflict".[56]

Other National Practice

59. The Report on the Practice of Colombia refers to a draft working paper in which the Colombian government stated that "persons taking no active part in the hostilities . . . shall in all circumstances be treated humanely".[57]

60. During the Iran–Iraq War, the Iranian authorities emphasised that Iraqi combatants who were hors de combat were well treated on the basis of Islamic law.[58]

61. On the basis of the reply by Iraq's Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that, during the Iran–Iraq War, members of the opposing forces who were hors de combat were well treated.[59]

[52] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[53] Paraguay, Law on the Status of Military Personnel (1997), Article 15(j).
[54] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[55] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago (Third Criminal Chamber), Videla case, Judgement, 26 September 1994.
[56] Russia, Constitutional Court, Situation in Chechnya case, Judgement, 31 July 1995, § 5.
[57] Report on the Practice of Colombia, 1998, Chapter 4.1, referring to Presidential Council, Proposal of the Government to the Coordinator Guerrillerra Simón Bolívar to humanise war, Draft Internal Working Paper, Part entitled "El Derecho Internacional Humanitario", § 1.
[58] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 2.1.
[59] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Reply by the Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, July 1997, Chapter 2.1.

62. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the protection of persons who are hors de combat is a basic tenet of the IDF.[60]
63. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[61]
64. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that:

> We support in particular the fundamental guarantees contained in Article 75 [AP I] such as the principle that all persons who are in the power of a party to a conflict and who do not benefit from more favorable treatment under the Conventions be treated humanely in all circumstances and enjoy, at a minimum, the protections specified in the Conventions.[62]

65. According to the Report on US Practice, "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II ".[63]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
66. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[64]

Other International Organisations
67. No practice was found.

International Conferences
68. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

69. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions

[60] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 2.1.
[61] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[62] US, Remarks by Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 427.
[63] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[64] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[65]

70. In its judgement in the Aleksovski case in 1999, the ICTY held that:

> A reading of paragraph (1) of common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] reveals that its purpose is to uphold and protect the inherent human dignity of the individual. It prescribes humane treatment without discrimination based on "race, colour, religion or faith, sex, birth, or wealth, or any other similar criteria". Instead of defining the humane treatment which is guaranteed, the States parties chose to proscribe particularly odious forms of mistreatment that are without question incompatible with humane treatment ... Hence, while there are four sub-paragraphs which specify the absolutely prohibited forms of inhuman treatment from which there can be no derogation, the general guarantee of humane treatment is not elaborated, except for the guiding principle underlying the Convention, that its object is the humanitarian one of protecting the individual qua human being and, therefore, it must safeguard the entitlements which flow therefrom.[66]

71. In a case concerning Peru in 1996, the IACiHR reinforced the principle that the right to humane treatment must be respected at all times, even during emergency or conflict situations, by State agents responsible for law enforcement.[67]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

72. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and that "humane treatment shall be given in all circumstances".[68]

73. In 1978, the ICRC indicated to a National Red Crescent Society that there are persons and objects that must be respected and protected in all circumstances, inter alia, combatants who have laid down their arms.[69]

74. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in the hostilities ... must be respected and protected in all circumstances".[70]

---

[65] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.
[66] ICTY, Aleksovski case, Judgement, 25 June 1999, § 49.
[67] IACiHR, Case 10.559 (Peru), Report, 1 March 1996, Section V(2).
[68] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 31 and 187.
[69] ICRC archive document.
[70] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.

75. In a press release issued in 1991 in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC reminded the parties that "combatants placed hors de combat must be treated humanely".[71]
76. In a communication to the press issued in 1993, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Somalia "respect and protect all those not or no longer participating in hostilities".[72]
77. In a declaration issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross reminded the parties of their obligation to treat with humanity non-combatants and persons hors de combat. It recalled the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[73]
78. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "persons not or no longer taking part in hostilities . . . shall be protected and respected in all circumstances, regardless of the party to which they belong".[74]
79. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in confrontations . . . shall be protected and respected in all circumstances".[75]
80. In a communication to the press issued in 2001, the ICRC reminded the parties to the conflict in Afghanistan of "the requirement that persons not taking part in hostilities must be treated with humanity in all circumstances . . . Threats to their lives, their physical integrity and their dignity are prohibited."[76]

VI. Other Practice

81. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "persons hors de combat and those who do not take part in hostilities . . . shall in all circumstances be protected and treated humanely".[77]

[71] ICRC, Press Release No. 1658, Gulf War: ICRC reminds States of their obligations, 17 January 1991, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 26; see also Press Release No. 1659, Middle East Conflict: ICRC appeals to belligerents, 1 February 1991, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 27.
[72] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.
[73] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1o. de Enero de 1994, 3 January 1994.
[74] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.
[75] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994 § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier (eds.), How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.
[76] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 01/47, Afghanistan: ICRC calls on all parties to conflict to respect international humanitarian law, 24 October 2001.
[77] ICRC archive document.

Civilians

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

82. Article 5 GC IV provides that an individual protected person suspected of or engaged in activities hostile to the security of the State in the territory of a Party to the conflict or an individual protected person detained as a spy or saboteur, or as a person under definite suspicion of activity hostile to the security of the Occupying Power, "shall nevertheless be treated with humanity".

83. Article 27, first paragraph, GC IV provides that protected persons "shall at all times be humanely treated".

84. Upon ratification of GC IV, China stated that:

> Although the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of August 12, 1949, does not apply to civilian persons outside enemy-occupied areas and consequently does not completely meet humanitarian requirements, it is found to be in accord with the interest of protecting civilian persons in occupied territory and in certain other cases.[78]

85. Article 8(b) of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Civilian Personnel provides that "all Vietnamese civilian personnel captured and detained in South Vietnam shall be treated humanely at all times, and in accordance with international practice".

Other Instruments

86. Article 22 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "the unarmed citizen is to be spared in person, property, and honor as much as the exigencies of war will admit".

87. Article 7 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "it is forbidden to maltreat inoffensive populations".

88. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75(1) AP I.

89. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75(1) AP I.

[78] China, Reservations made upon ratification of GC IV, 28 December 1956, § 4.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

90. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that persons not entitled to claim rights and benefits under GC IV "shall always be treated with humanity".[79]

91. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) stipulates that "when ... people in the power of a party to the conflict ... do not benefit from a better protection than the one provided by the Conventions and the Protocol, they shall be treated ... with humanity".[80]

92. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that civilians "are to be treated with compassion and respect".[81]

93. Australia's Defence Force Manual stipulates that the inhabitants of an occupied territory "must be humanely treated at all times and be especially safeguarded against all acts of violence or threats of violence and against insults and public curiosity".[82]

94. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that, in internal armed conflicts, the following must be respected: "humanitarian treatment of persons who do not take a direct part in hostilities, including members of the armed forces who have laid down their arms and persons placed hors de combat ". It also provides that "the population in occupied territory must be treated with humanity".[83]

95. Benin's Military Manual provides that the soldier must treat civilians humanely.[84]

96. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual instructs the soldier to treat civilian persons in his or her power humanely.[85]

97. Canada's LOAC Manual states that, in occupied territories, "protected persons must be treated humanely at all times".[86] With regard to non-international armed conflict, the manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[87]

98. Canada's Code of Conduct instructs: "Treat all civilians humanely". It explains that "in your daily interaction with the civilian population, they must at all times be humanely treated".[88] It also provides a list of 11 fundamental rules, among which is "treat all civilians humanely".[89]

[79] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.003.
[80] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.15.
[81] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 603.
[82] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1218.
[83] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 17 and Chapter IX, § 2.
[84] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 16, Fascicule II, p. 19 and Fascicule III, p. 5.
[85] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), § 532.
[86] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-4, § 37.
[87] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-2, § 10(a).
[88] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 4, § 2.
[89] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Chapter 3, § 4.

99. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual and Instructors' Manual provide that civilians must be treated humanely.[90]
100. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that civilians must be respected and treated humanely.[91]
101. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL requires soldiers to treat captured civilians with humanity.[92]
102. France's LOAC Manual incorporates the content of Article 5 GC IV.[93]
103. Germany's Military Manual provides that civilians not benefiting from the protection of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols shall be treated humanely.[94]
104. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territories, civilians shall be treated with humanity in all circumstances.[95]
105. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that civilians must be treated humanely. It adds that "the occupying Power must treat the inhabitants humanely".[96]
106. Madagascar's Military Manual instructs the armed forces to "treat humanely civilians who are in your power".[97]
107. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "protected persons must be humanely treated" in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[98]
108. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct provides that "male civilians hostile to the Federal Forces are to be dealt with firmly but fairly. They must be humanely treated."[99]
109. Nigeria's Military Manual provides that "civilians shall . . . be treated humanely".[100]
110. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines instruct soldiers to "treat all civilians . . . in your power with humanity".[101]
111. Romania's Soldiers' Manual instructs soldiers to "treat humanely [civilian] persons in your power" and "protect them from ill-treatment".[102]
112. Russia's Military Manual states that the civilian population "shall be granted such a status that would guarantee humane treatment".[103]

[90] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 10; Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 8.
[91] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), Rule No. 15.
[92] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL Manual (1993), Instruction No. 5.
[93] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 64.
[94] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 518.
[95] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(a).
[96] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), §§ 15 and 104 and p. 29.
[97] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 82, Rule 23 and p. 85, Rule 6.
[98] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1114 and 1321(2).
[99] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(j).
[100] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 39, § 5(k).
[101] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 6.
[102] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), pp. 14–15.
[103] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 7.

113. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that in occupied territory, "the Occupying Power shall treat the inhabitants humanely".[104]
114. Switzerland's military manuals provide that the enemy civilian population is to be treated with humanity.[105]
115. Togo's Military Manual stipulates that the soldier shall "treat [civilians] humanely and protect them".[106]
116. Uganda's Code of Conduct instructs: "Never abuse, insult, shout or beat any member of the public".[107]
117. The UK Military Manual provides that civilians "must be humanely treated". This also applies in occupied territories.[108]
118. The UK LOAC Manual explains that "an obligation is imposed on belligerents to deal humanely with protected persons". With regard to enemy aliens, the manual specifies that "[GC III] ensures the humane treatment of those who remain".[109]
119. The US Field Manual recalls Article 27 GC IV, which provides that in occupied territories, civilians must be treated humanely.[110]
120. The US Soldier's Manual states that "inhumane treatment of civilians [is a violation] of the law of war for which you can be prosecuted".[111]
121. The US Instructor's Guide provides that "persons taking no direct part in hostilities shall in all circumstances be treated humanely".[112]
122. The US Rules of Engagement for Operation Desert Storm instructs forces to "treat all civilians and their property with respect and dignity".[113]
123. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that Articles 27–34 GC IV "provide for humane treatment of the individuals protected". It also states that "Articles 27 and 38 require protected persons in the territory of a belligerent to be humanely treated".[114]

National Legislation
124. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, "civilian persons belonging to the adverse party, who are in the hands of the Republic of Azerbaijan are respected and treated humanely".[115]

[104] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.8.i.
[105] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 4 and 146; Military Manual (1984), p. 34; Teaching Manual (1986), p. 43.
[106] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 17 and Fascicule II, p. 19.
[107] Uganda, Code of Conduct (1986), Rule 1.
[108] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 39 and 547.
[109] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 35, §§ 9 and 11, see also Annex A, p. 49, § 20.
[110] US, Field manual (1956), § 266.
[111] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p 20.
[112] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 4, 8 and 17.
[113] US, Rules of Engagement for Operation Desert Storm (1991), § H.
[114] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1996), §§ 11-3, 14-4 and 14-5.
[115] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 14.

125. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[116]
126. Under El Salvador's Penal Code, "the civilian ... who commits any inhumane act against the civilian population before, during or after the war" is guilty of a crime.[117]
127. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, the civilian "who commits an inhumane act against the civilian population before, during or after the war" is punishable.[118]
128. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, anyone who treats a civilian person inhumanely, is guilty, upon conviction, of a war crime.[119]
129. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 5 and 27 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[120]
130. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... is liable to imprisonment".[121]
131. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of "any person who commits an act of harassment that harms civilians or causes a loss of unity between the military and civilians".[122]

National Case-law
132. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
133. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense noted some specific Iraqi war crimes, including inhumane treatment of Kuwaiti and third country civilians.[123]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
134. No practice was found.

[116] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[117] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 363.
[118] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Violación de los deberes de humanidad".
[119] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 158(1).
[120] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[121] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[122] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 273(1).
[123] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 634.

Other International Organisations
135. No practice was found.

International Conferences
136. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the application of GC I, II and III in the Middle East in which it called for "the total application" of these conventions by the parties to the conflict, in particular, "those provisions which relate to the treatment of . . . civilian victims of the conflict".[124]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

137. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

138. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in the hostilities, such as . . . civilians, must be respected and protected in all circumstances" and that "civilians and all non-combatants must be respected and protected".[125]
139. In a communication to the press issued in 1993, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Somalia "to respect and protect all those not participating or no longer participating in hostilities, such as . . . civilians".[126]
140. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "persons not or no longer taking part in hostilities, such as . . . civilians, shall be protected and respected in all circumstances, regardless of the party to which they belong" and that "civilians do not constitute a military danger and must be respected and humanely treated".[127]
141. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in confrontations, such as . . . civilians, shall be protected and respected in all circumstances" and that "civilian persons who refrain from acts of hostility must be respected and treated humanely".[128]

[124] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. IV.
[125] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.
[126] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.
[127] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, pp. 502–503.
[128] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

VI. Other Practice

142. No practice was found.

Wounded and sick

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
143. Article 12, first paragraph, GC I provides that wounded and sick members of the armed forces in the field "shall be treated humanely".
144. Article 12, first paragraph, GC II provides that wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the armed forces at sea "shall be treated humanely".
145. Article 10(2) AP I provides that "in all circumstances [all the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] shall be treated humanely". Article 10 AP I was adopted by consensus.[129]
146. Article 7(2) AP II provides that "in all circumstances [all the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] shall be treated humanely". Article 7 AP II was adopted by consensus.[130]

Other Instruments
147. In the 1991 Hague Statement on Respect for Humanitarian Principles, the Presidents of the six republics of the former Yugoslavia undertook "to apply the following fundamental principles: wounded and ill persons must be helped and protected in all circumstances".
148. Article 2.1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "all the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, whether or not they have taken part in the armed conflict, shall be respected and protected. In all circumstances, they shall be respected and protected."
149. In Article IX of the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala, the parties recognised the need "to respect the human rights of the wounded".
150. According to Section 9.1 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, "members of the armed forces and other persons in the power of the United Nations force who are wounded or sick shall be . . . treated humanely".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
151. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that the sick and wounded must be respected and protected in all circumstances.[131]

[129] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 69.
[130] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 109.
[131] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.001.

152. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides for the protection of and respect for the wounded, sick and shipwrecked in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[132]
153. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "sick, wounded and shipwrecked combatants are to be . . . treated humanely".[133]
154. Benin's Military Manual provides that the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked . . . shall be treated humanely".[134]
155. Bosnia and Herzegovina's Military Instructions provides that the wounded and sick must be treated humanely.[135]
156. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that all persons hors de combat must be treated with humanity.[136]
157. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that "the sick, wounded and shipwrecked shall be treated humanely . . . and protected".[137]
158. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked are to be . . . treated humanely".[138]
159. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be treated humanely".[139]
160. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic provides that the rule for "wounded and sick . . . is to treat [them] in a human way".[140]
161. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "wounded and sick personnel falling into enemy hands must be treated humanely".[141]
162. According to France's LOAC Teaching Note, wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons must be protected and treated humanely.[142]
163. Germany's Soldiers' Manual provides that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be treated with humanity.[143]
164. Germany's Military Manual states that wounded and sick persons shall be treated humanely.[144]
165. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be treated humanely.[145]
166. According to Madagascar's Military Manual, the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be . . . treated with humanity".[146]

[132] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 2.03 and 7.05.
[133] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 990.
[134] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 9.
[135] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Military Instructions (1992), Item 14, § 1.
[136] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(1).
[137] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 44, § 163, see also p. 41, § 152.
[138] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-2, § 17.
[139] Colombia, Instructors' Manual ( 1999), p. 24.
[140] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 6.
[141] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.4.
[142] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 4.
[143] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 5.
[144] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 608 and 1057.
[145] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 10.
[146] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 77, Rule 21.

167. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that the sick, wounded and shipwrecked shall be treated humanely.[147]
168. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct provides that "all military and civilian wounded . . . must be respected and protected in all circumstances".[148]
169. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that the wounded and sick who are in the power of a belligerent must be humanely treated.[149]
170. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines states that "members of the AFP and PNP shall treat enemies who are hors de combat (e.g. wounded) humanely and with respect".[150]
171. Russia's Military Manual provides that belligerents are obliged to ensure the legal protection of war victims, namely the wounded, sick and shipwrecked.[151]
172. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that soldiers in combat shall treat with humanity all persons placed hors de combat.[152]
173. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to IHL conventions and the 1948 UDHR is that all the wounded and sick shall be treated with humanity.[153]
174. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that "all wounded, sick and shipwrecked . . . shall be treated humanely".[154]
175. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that the wounded and sick shall be treated humanely.[155]
176. Sweden's Military Manual provides that the wounded and sick, whether civilian or combatant, shall be humanely treated.[156]
177. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that the wounded and sick shall be humanely treated. It adds that the "enemy sick and wounded who have laid down their arms or are hors de combat shall be respected".[157]
178. Togo's Military Manual provides that wounded, sick and shipwrecked combatants "shall be treated humanely".[158]
179. The UK Military Manual and LOAC Manual provide that "the wounded and sick . . . must be humanely treated".[159]
180. The US Field Manual restates Article 12 GC II.[160]

147 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(1).
148 Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(l).
149 Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
150 Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2a(3).
151 Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 7.
152 Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), § 1.
153 Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 24.
154 South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 31.
155 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 5.5b, and 7.3.a.(11).
156 Sweden, Military Manual (1976), p. 16.
157 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 69 and 70(1).
158 Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, pp. 9 and 12.
159 UK, Military Manual (1958), § 339; LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 2.
160 US, Field Manual (1956), § 215.

181. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "one of the important principles relating to wounded and sick requires . . . humane treatment".[161]
182. According to the US Naval Handbook, "wounded and sick personnel falling into enemy hands must be treated humanely".[162]

National Legislation
183. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[163]
184. Under El Salvador's Penal Code, "the civilian who violates the duties of humanity . . . against the wounded . . . or persons placed in hospitals or places designed for the wounded . . . before, during or after the war" is guilty of a crime.[164]
185. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, the civilian who commits an inhumane act against the wounded and sick or persons placed in medical institutions or camps for the wounded and sick is punishable.[165]
186. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 12 GC I and 12 GC II, and of AP I, including violations of Article 10 AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 7 AP II, are punishable offences.[166]
187. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[167]

National Case-law
188. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
189. In 1992, the Presidency of the Republika Srpska of Bosnia and Herzegovina made an urgent appeal "to make protection and treatment of all wounded and sick persons possible".[168]

[161] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 3-4(d).
[162] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-4.
[163] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[164] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 363.
[165] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Violación de los deberes de humanidad".
[166] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[167] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[168] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Appeal of the Presidency concerning the International Committee of the Red Cross Operations, Pale, 7 June 1992.

190. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that all wounded and sick and shipwrecked be respected and protected".[169]
191. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that the wounded and sick in internal armed conflicts should be treated humanely.[170]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
192. In resolutions adopted in 1985 and 1986 on the conflict in El Salvador, the UN General Assembly recommended that the UN Special Representative report on the observance of rules pertaining to the humanitarian treatment of and respect for wounded combatants.[171]

Other International Organisations
193. No practice was found.

International Conferences
194. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the application of GC I, II and III in the Middle East in which it called for "the total application" of these conventions by the parties to the conflict, in particular, "those provisions which relate to the treatment of . . . the sick and wounded".[172]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

195. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

196. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be treated humanely".[173]

[169] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 423.
[170] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[171] UN General Assembly, Res. 40/139, 13 December 1985, § 3; Res. 41/157, 4 December 1986, § 4.
[172] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. IV.
[173] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 504.

197. In 1978, the ICRC indicated to a National Red Crescent Society that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked must be respected and protected in all circumstances.[174]

198. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in the hostilities, such as the wounded, sick [and] shipwrecked . . . must be respected and protected in all circumstances".[175]

199. In a communication to the press issued in 1993, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Somalia "to respect and protect all those not participating or no longer participating in hostilities, such as . . . wounded [and] sick".[176]

200. In a declaration issued in 1994, in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross reminded the parties of their obligation to provide treatment and protection to wounded persons in their power.[177]

201. In a press release issued in 1994, the ICRC reminded all parties to the conflict in Afghanistan that the wounded and sick must benefit from a special protection and be respected in all circumstances.[178]

202. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "persons not or no longer taking part in hostilities, such as the wounded [and] the sick . . . shall be protected and respected in all circumstances, regardless of the party to which they belong".[179]

203. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in confrontations, such as the wounded [and] the sick . . . shall be protected and respected in all circumstances".[180]

VI. Other Practice

204. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi

[174] ICRC archive document.

[175] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.

[176] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.

[177] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1 de Enero de 1994, 3 January 1994.

[178] ICRC, Press Release No. 1764, Afghanistan: ICRC calls for respect for the civilian population, 8 February 1994.

[179] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 502.

[180] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides that "in every circumstance, the wounded and sick, whether or not they have taken part in acts of violence, shall be . . . treated humanely".[181]

Persons deprived of their liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

205. Article 4, second paragraph, of the 1899 HR provides that POWs "must be humanely treated".

206. Article 4, second paragraph, of the 1907 HR provides that POWs "must be humanely treated".

207. Article 2, second paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that POWs "shall at all times be humanely treated and protected, particularly against acts of violence, from insults and from public curiosity".

208. Article 13 GC III provides that "prisoners of war must at all times be humanely treated . . . Likewise, prisoners of war must at all times be protected, particularly against acts of violence or intimidation and against insults and public curiosity".

209. Article 27, first paragraph, GC IV provides that protected persons "shall at all times be humanely treated".

210. Paragraph I(3) of the Annex to the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement (establishing a Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission) provides that:

> no . . . affront to their dignity or self-respect [of prisoners of war] shall be permitted in any manner for any purpose whatsoever . . . This Commission shall ensure that prisoners of war shall at all times be treated humanely in accordance with the specific provisions of the Geneva Convention [GC III], and with the general spirit of that Convention.

211. Article 10(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "all persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person".

212. Article 5 of the 1969 ACHR provides that "all persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person".

213. Article 8(a) of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Civilian

[181] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 12, IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 335.

Personnel provides that "all captured military personnel of the parties . . . shall be treated humanely at all times, and in accordance with international practice".

214. Article 5(3) AP II provides that "persons . . . whose liberty has been restricted in any way whatsoever for reasons related to the armed conflict shall be treated humanely". Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[182]

Other Instruments

215. Article 76 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "prisoners of war shall . . . be treated with humanity".

216. Article 23(2) of the 1874 Brussels Declaration provides that POWs must be treated humanely.

217. Article 63 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that POWs must be treated humanely.

218. According to Article XXV of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, "every individual who has been deprived of his liberty has the right to . . . humane treatment during the time he is in custody".

219. Rule 1 of the 1987 European Prison Rules states that "the deprivation of liberty shall be effected in material and moral conditions which ensure respect for human dignity and are in conformity with these rules".

220. Principle 1 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "all persons under any form of detention or imprisonment shall be treated in a humane manner and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person".

221. Paragraph 1 of the 1990 Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "all prisoners shall be treated with the respect due to their inherent dignity and value as human beings".

222. In the 1991 Hague Statement on Respect for Humanitarian Principles, the Presidents of the six republics of the former Yugoslavia undertook "to apply the following fundamental principles: . . . all arrested persons, and notably combatants who have surrendered, must be treated with humanity; all detaining authorities must ensure the protection of the prisoners".

223. Article 4(6) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that all persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict shall be treated humanely.

224. According to Section 8 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, "the United Nations force shall treat with humanity and respect for their dignity detained members of the armed forces and other persons who no longer take part in military operations by reason of detention".

[182] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

225. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that POWs shall be treated humanely.[183]

226. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) stipulates that "prisoners of war shall at all times be treated humanely".[184]

227. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that POWs "must be treated humanely and not subjected to cruel, degrading or unfair treatment".[185]

228. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the fundamental principle underlying the treatment of PW is that they are . . . entitled to humane and decent treatment throughout their captivity . . . The fundamental rules for the treatment of PW are . . . they must be treated humanely and honourably".[186]

229. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that:

> POWs shall be treated at all times with humanity. Any unlawful act or omission by the Detaining Power causing death or seriously endangering the health of a prisoner of war in its custody is prohibited and will be regarded as a serious breach of the Convention [GC III]. POWs shall at all times be protected, particularly against acts of violence or intimidation and against insults and public curiosity.[187]

230. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers provides that "prisoners of war must be treated humanely and protected".[188]

231. Benin's Military Manual provides that all captured combatants shall be treated humanely.[189]

232. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations stipulates that "from the moment of their capture, prisoners must be treated humanely. They must be protected against any acts of violence, insults and public curiosity."[190]

233. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "from the moment of their capture, prisoners must be treated humanely. They must be protected against any acts of violence, insults and public curiosity."[191]

234. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that captured enemy combatants shall be treated humanely.[192]

235. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "PWs must at all times be treated humanely and must be protected, particularly against any acts of violence or intimidation, as well as against insults and public curiosity".[193] With regard to

[183] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.013.
[184] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.12.
[185] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 716, see also § 701.
[186] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 1001–1002.
[187] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 44.
[188] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 10.
[189] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 16, Fascicule II, pp. 9 and 11 and Fascicule III, p. 5.
[190] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 36(1).
[191] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 33.
[192] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), §§ 152 and 532 and p. 96.
[193] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 19.

internees, it states that "in many respects the articles contained in [GC IV] as to the treatment of internees are comparable to provisions of [GC III] concerned with the treatment of PWs".[194] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual provides that "the wounded and sick among [persons whose liberty has been restricted] are to be treated humanely".[195]

236. Canada's Code of Conduct states that Canadian forces must "treat all detained persons humanely in accordance with the standard set by the Third Geneva Convention".[196] The Code specifies that "the concept of humane treatment towards those under your control and the standard of treatment which applies to all detained persons ... is a long standing rule".[197] It further states that "humane treatment includes not only the proper provision of necessities of life but also the type of treatment provided to detained persons".[198]

237. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual and Instructors' Manual provide that enemy combatants who surrender must be treated humanely.[199]

238. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "from the moment of their capture, prisoners must be treated humanely. They must be protected against any acts of violence, insults and public curiosity."[200]

239. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that POWs and captured medical and religious personnel must be respected and treated humanely.[201]

240. Croatia's Soldiers' Manual states that captured combatants must be treated humanely.[202]

241. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL requires soldiers to treat captured combatants with humanity.[203]

242. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic requires that all prisoners and detainees, i.e. any persons in the power of the armed forces, whatever their status, be treated humanely.[204]

243. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that captured enemy combatants and internees shall be treated humanely.[205]

244. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that enemy combatants who lay down their arms and surrender shall be treated humanely.[206]

245. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "captured combatants shall be treated humanely".[207]

[194] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-6, § 49.
[195] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 25.
[196] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6.
[197] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 3.
[198] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 5.
[199] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 18; Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 22.
[200] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 33.
[201] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), Rule No. 15.
[202] Croatia, Soldiers' Manual (1992), p. 4.
[203] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), Instruction No. 4.
[204] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), pp. 6 and 7.
[205] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.8.
[206] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 8.
[207] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.

246. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "every captured combatant . . . has the right to respect for his dignity. He shall be treated humanely."[208]
247. France's LOAC Manual provides that "prisoners of war must be spared and treated with humanity . . . They shall be protected from acts of violence, insults and intimidation."[209]
248. Germany's Military Manual states that "unlawful combatants do, however, have a legitimate claim to certain fundamental guarantees, including the right to humane treatment". It also states that civilian "internees shall be treated humanely".[210] The manual further provides that captured combatants shall be treated with dignity and their person and honour respected.[211]
249. Hungary's Military Manual provides that captured combatants and internees shall be treated humanely.[212]
250. India's Army Training Note states that "Prisoners of War must at all times be humanely treated".[213]
251. With reference to Israel's Law of War Booklet, the Report on the Practice of Israel states that all individuals falling under the power of a party to a conflict should, at a minimum, be treated in accordance with the principles of humanity.[214]
252. Italy's IHL Manual provides that POWs shall be treated with humanity in all cases.[215]
253. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual stipulates that "captured enemy combatants shall be . . . treated humanely".[216]
254. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "those who have surrendered must be treated humanely as POWs or prisoners depending on the nature of the conflict".[217]
255. According to Madagascar's Military Manual, "prisoners of war are entitled to humane treatment".[218]
256. Mali's Army Regulations provides that "from the moment of their capture, prisoners must be treated humanely. They must be protected against any acts of violence, insults and public curiosity."[219]
257. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "from the moment of their capture, prisoners must be treated humanely. They must be protected against any acts of violence, insults and public curiosity."[220]

[208] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3. [209] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 102.
[210] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 302 and 595.
[211] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 704; see also Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 7, § 3.
[212] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), pp. 75 and 99.
[213] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 3/7, § 15(a).
[214] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.6, referring to Law of War Booklet (1986), pp. 12 and 14.
[215] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. II, Chapter I, §§ 2 and 84.
[216] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), §§ 15 and 74 and p. 29.
[217] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, pp. 6, 7 and 14.
[218] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 22, Rule 15, p. 32, Rule 21, p. 78, Rule 26 and p. 85, Rule 7.
[219] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 37.
[220] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(3).

258. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "prisoners of war must at all times be treated humanely".[221]

259. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands states that POWs "have the right to humane treatment. They cannot be exposed to acts of violence, insults and public curiosity."[222]

260. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, all detainees must at all times be treated humanely and protected against insults and public curiosity and particularly against any acts of violence or intimidation.[223]

261. Nicaragua's Military Manual states that prisoners have the right to be protected against all forms of violence, in both internal and international armed conflicts.[224]

262. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct states that "soldiers who surrender . . . are entitled in all circumstances to humane treatment and respect for their person and their honor".[225]

263. Nigeria's Military Manual states that "enemy prisoners . . . shall be treated humanely".[226]

264. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "prisoners of war must at all times be humanely treated . . . Prisoners of war must be protected from violence, threats and the curiosity of the public."[227]

265. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces requires that detained persons be treated humanely.[228]

266. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines instructs soldiers that "prisoners must be treated humanely".[229]

267. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines states that "members of the AFP and PNP shall treat enemies who are hors de combat (e.g. surrendered/captured) humanely and with respect".[230]

268. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that enemy combatants who surrender shall be treated humanely.[231]

269. Russia's Military Manual provides that the humane treatment of war victims, namely prisoners of war, must be guaranteed.[232]

270. Senegal's IHL Manual provides, with regard to the rights of persons deprived of their liberty, that "all wounded and sick shall be treated humanely in any circumstances".[233]

221 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-3, § 2.
222 Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-41.
223 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 915, 1137(1) and 1814.
224 Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Articles 6 and 14(18).
225 Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(e).
226 Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 39, § 5(j).
227 Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 37.
228 Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (undated), p. 19.
229 Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 6.
230 Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2a(3).
231 Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 7.
232 Russia, Military Manual (1990), §§ 7 and 8(e).
233 Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 24.

271. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "soldiers who have surrendered or who are in the control of the enemy . . . must be protected".[234]
272. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that captured enemy combatants, those who surrender and prisoners of war must be respected and treated with humanity.[235]
273. Switzerland's military manuals provide that prisoners have the right to be treated humanely and protected against all forms of violence.[236]
274. Togo's Military Manual provides that all captured combatants shall be treated humanely.[237]
275. The UK Military Manual provides that prisoners of war "must at all times be humanely treated".[238] According to the manual, all violations of the Geneva Conventions that do not amount to grave breaches are also war crimes. In the non-exhaustive list of such war crimes, the manual includes "ordering punishment drill for internees" and "exposing prisoners of war to public insults or mob violence".[239]
276. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "PW must at all times be humanely treated".[240]
277. The US Field Manual states that "prisoners of war must at all times be humanely treated". The manual stipulates that "protected persons who are confined pending proceedings or serving a sentence involving loss of liberty shall during confinement be humanely treated".[241]
278. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook provides that "a prisoner of war is always to be humanely treated, and must be protected against violence, intimidation, insults and public curiosity".[242]
279. The US Soldier's Manual provides that all captured combatants, whether POWs or not, shall be treated humanely.[243]
280. The US Instructor's Guide states that "American soldiers must treat all prisoners of war, other captured or detained personnel . . . humanely". It reminds commanders that "the Hague and the Geneva conventions and the customary law of war explicitly require you to treat captured and detained personnel humanely".[244]
281. The US Operational Law Handbook recognises that soldiers have a duty to treat all POWs humanely.[245]

[234] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 30.
[235] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996),Vol. I, §§ 7.3.a.(7), 8.4.a.(1), 10.6.b.(2), 10.6.c. and 10.8.f.(2).
[236] Switzerland, Military Manual (1984), p. 24; Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 97; Teaching Manual (1986), p. 43.
[237] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 16, Fascicule II, pp. 9 and 11 and Fascicule III, p. 5.
[238] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 133(b).
[239] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626.
[240] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 29, § 5.
[241] US, Field manual (1956), §§ 89 and 276.
[242] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-1(a).
[243] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), pp. 12–15.
[244] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp 4 and 24.
[245] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-191.

282. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 13 GC III and provides that "prisoners of war must at all times be humanely treated".[246]
283. The US Naval Handbook provides that "combatants that have surrendered or otherwise fallen into enemy hands are entitled to prisoner-of-war status and, as such, must be treated humanely".[247] It stipulates that "all interned persons must be treated humanely".[248]
284. The US Rules of Engagement for Operation Desert Storm instruct forces to "treat all prisoners humanely and with respect and dignity".[249]
285. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that prisoners must be treated humanely.[250]

National Legislation
286. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, prisoners of war must be humanely treated and their person and honour respected.[251]
287. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[252]
288. Under El Salvador's Penal Code, "the civilian who violates the duties of humanity against prisoners of war or hostages . . . before, during or after the war" is guilty of a crime.[253]
289. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, the civilian who commits an inhumane act against prisoners of war is punishable.[254]
290. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, the person who treats a prisoner of war inhumanely is guilty, upon conviction, of a war crime.[255]
291. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 13 GC III and 27 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 5(3) AP II, are punishable offences.[256]
292. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code punishes any soldier "who maltreats an enemy who has surrendered".[257]

[246] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 13-2, 14-2 and 14-7.
[247] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-7.
[248] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-8.
[249] US, Rules of Engagement for Operation Desert Storm (1991), § I.
[250] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 253(3).
[251] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 22.
[252] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[253] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 363.
[254] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Violación de los deberes de humanidad".
[255] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 158(1).
[256] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[257] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 53.

293. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[258]
294. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended punishes the violation of "respect for [a POW's] dignity".[259]
295. Vietnam's Penal Code provides that "whoever has mistreated ... soldiers who have surrendered shall be punished".[260]

National Case-law
296. In its judgement in the Brocklebank case in 1996, in the context of events that occurred during UN operations in Somalia, the Canadian Military Court of Appeal stated that it was a general principle of law that a person who had custody of a prisoner had the duty to protect him or her.[261]
297. In the Maelzer case in 1946, the US Military Commission in Florence convicted the accused of having exposed prisoners of war in his custody to acts of violence, insults and public curiosity in violation of Article 2, second paragraph, of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention. The prisoners had, among other things, been forced to march through the streets of Rome in a parade emulating ancient triumphal marches.[262]

Other National Practice
298. It is reported that during Algeria's war of independence, "the ALN has always tried to treat French prisoners as humanely as possible".[263]
299. In 1992, the Presidency of the Republika Srpska of Bosnia and Herzegovina made an urgent appeal to "treat all imprisoned persons humanely".[264]
300. The Report on the Practice of Malaysia notes that it has been the policy of the Malaysian security forces not to mistreat captured enemies as part of a strategy to give a positive image of themselves, particularly in relation to communist sympathisers.[265]
301. The US Directives on the Combined Screening of Detainees in Vietnam issued in 1967 stated that "detainees are entitled to humane treatment in accordance with the provisions of the Geneva Conventions".[266]

[258] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[259] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58(8).
[260] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 275.
[261] Canada, Military Court of Appeal, Brocklebank case, Judgement, 2 April 1996.
[262] US, Military Commission in Florence, Maelzer case, Trial of 9-14 September 1946.
[263] El Moudjahid, Vol. 1, p. 440.
[264] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Appeal of the Presidency concerning the International Committee of the Red Cross Operations, Pale, 7 June 1992.
[265] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 2.1.
[266] US, Military Assistance Command, Vietnam, Directive No. 381-46, Military Intelligence: Combined Screening of Detainees, 27 December 1967.

302. An instruction card issued to all US troops engaged in Vietnam directed soldiers always to treat prisoners humanely, adding that "all persons in your hands, whether suspects, civilians, or combat captives, must be protected against violence, insults, curiosity, and reprisals of any kind".[267]
303. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that "Iraqi prisoners of war will not be mistreated and will be provided humane and safe detention".[268]
304. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[269]
305. In a statement in 1991, the Federal Executive Council of the SFRY (FRY) reiterated that "it is essential . . . to ensure humane treatment of all detainees and particularly of the participants in the armed conflicts who surrender".[270]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

306. In a resolution on Bosnia and Herzegovina adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council demanded that "the Bosnian Serb party respect fully the rights of [all persons detained against their will]".[271]
307. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council called upon the government of Rwanda to take further steps to resolve the humanitarian problems in its prisons.[272]
308. In a resolution adopted in 1970 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the UN General Assembly urged that "combatants in all armed conflicts not covered by Article 4 GC III be accorded the same humane treatment defined by the principles of international law applied to POWs".[273]
309. In resolutions on El Salvador adopted in 1985 and 1986, the UN General Assembly, considering that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions

[267] US, The enemy in your hands, Reproduction of 3x5 instruction card issued to all troops, Major General G. S. Prugh, Law at War: Vietnam 1964–1973, Department of the Army, Vietnam Studies, 1975, Appendix H.
[268] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, 21 January 1991, UN Doc. S/22122, Annex I, p. 2.
[269] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[270] SFRY (FRY), Statement by the Federal Executive Council regarding the Need for Respect for the Norms of International Humanitarian Law in the Armed Conflicts in Yugoslavia, Belgrade, 31 October 1991.
[271] UN Security Council, Res. 1010, 10 August 1995, § 2; see also Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, § 3.
[272] UN Security Council, Res. 1011, 16 August 1995, § 6.
[273] UN General Assembly, Res. 2676 (XXV), 9 December 1970, § 5.

and AP II were applicable, recommended that the Special Representative report on the observance of rules pertaining to the humanitarian treatment of and respect for prisoners of war.[274]

310. In a resolution adopted in 1980 in the context of the conflict in Kampuchea, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged the parties to treat enemy combatants who surrendered or who were captured humanely.[275]

311. In several resolutions on Afghanistan adopted between 1989 and 1992, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded that all parties treat their prisoners according to the recognised principles of IHL and protect them from acts of violence, including ill-treatment.[276]

312. In resolutions adopted in 1991 and 1992 in the context of the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, the UN Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Iraq for not treating prisoners of war and detained civilians according to recognised IHL principles and insisted that it abstain from acts of violence against them, including ill-treatment.[277]

313. In 1992, in a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission of Human Rights noted that the field commanders who were members of the nation-wide Shura (Council) stated that they would treat their prisoners humanely.[278]

Other International Organisations

314. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the follow-up of the Intifada's developments, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to ask the International Organisations concerned with Human Rights . . . to treat the prisoners and those put under arrest in accordance with the provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949".[279]

International Conferences

315. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the treatment of prisoners of war in which it recognised that "the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war". The Conference called upon all authorities involved in an armed conflict "to ensure that every prisoner of war is given the treatment

[274] UN General Assembly, Res. 40/139, 13 December 1985, § 3; Res. 41/157, 4 December 1986, § 4.
[275] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 29 (XXXVI), 11 March 1980, § 5.
[276] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/67, 8 March 1989, § 11; Res. 1990/53, 6 March 1990, § 5; Res. 1991/78, 6 March 1991, § 6; Res. 1992/68, 4 March 1992, § 6.
[277] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1991/67, 6 March 1991, § 5; Res. 1992/60, 3 March 1992, § 3.
[278] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1992/33, 17 February 1992, § 51.
[279] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5414, 15 September 1994, § 4.

and full measure of protection prescribed by the Geneva Convention of 1949 on the protection of prisoners of war".[280]

316. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it recognised that, irrespective of GC III, "the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war".[281]

317. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the status of combatants in non-international armed conflicts in which it stated that:

> Combatants and members of resistance movements who participate in non-international armed conflicts and who conform to the provisions of Article 4 of the Third Geneva Convention . . . should when captured be protected against any inhumanity and brutality and receive treatment similar to that which that Convention lays down for prisoners of war.[282]

318. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the application of GC I, II and III in the Middle East in which it called for "the total application" of these conventions by the parties to the conflict, in particular, "those provisions which relate to the treatment of prisoners of war".[283]

319. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all the parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "all persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict are fully respected and protected".[284]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

320. In its General Comment on Article 10 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1992, the HRC held that:

> Treating all persons deprived of their liberty with humanity and with respect for their dignity is a fundamental and universally applicable rule. Consequently, the application of this rule, as a minimum, cannot be dependent on the material resources available in the State party. This rule must be applied without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.[285]

[280] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October, 1965, Res. XXIV.
[281] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September, 1969, Res. XI.
[282] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. XVIII.
[283] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Res. IV.
[284] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(d).
[285] HRC, General Comment No. 21 (Article 10 ICCPR), 10 April 1992, § 4.

321. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC held that:

In those provisions of the Covenant that are not listed in article 4, paragraph 2, there are elements that in the Committee's opinion cannot be made subject to lawful derogation under article 4. Some illustrative examples are presented below.

(a) All persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person. Although this right, prescribed in article 10 of the Covenant, is not separately mentioned in the list of non-derogable rights in article 4, paragraph 2, the Committee believes that here the Covenant expresses a norm of general international law not subject to derogation. This is supported by the reference to the inherent dignity of the human person in the preamble to the Covenant and by the close connection between articles 7 and 10.[286]

322. In 1982, in Améndola Massiotti and Baritussio v. Uruguay, the HRC found that:

The Human Rights Committee, acting under article 5 (4) of the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, is of the view that the facts as found by the Committee, in so far as they continued or occurred after 23 March 1976 (the date on which the Covenant and the Optional Protocol entered into force for Uruguay) disclose the following violations of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in particular of:

In the case of Carmen Améndola Massiotti

Articles 7 and 10 (1), because the conditions of her imprisonment amounted to inhuman treatment.[287]

323. In Drescher Caldas v. Uruguay in 1983, the HRC found that holding a detainee incommunicado for six weeks after arrest was incompatible with the standard of humane treatment required by Article 10(1) of the 1966 ICCPR.[288]

324. In Martínez Machado v. Uruguay in 1983, the HRC found a violation of Article 10(1) of the 1966 ICCPR because the detainee in question, arrested for security reasons, was held incommunicado for more than five months.[289]

325. In Arzuaga Gilboa v. Uruguay in 1985, the HRC found that holding the plaintiff incommunicado for a period of 15 days was a violation of Article 10(1) of the 1966 ICCPR.[290]

326. In 1998, in Deidrick v. Jamaica, the HRC found that:

With regard to the deplorable conditions of detention at St. Catherine's District Prison, the Committee notes that author's counsel has made precise allegations, related thereto, i.e. that the author is locked-up in his cell 23 hours a day, no mattress or bedding are provided, that there is lack of artificial light and no integral sanitation, inadequate medical services, deplorable food and no recreational facilities etc.

[286] HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, § 13(a).
[287] HRC, Améndola Massiotti and Baritussio v. Uruguay, Views, 26 July 1982, § 13.
[288] HRC, Drescher Caldas v. Uruguay, Views, 21 July 1983, § 14.
[289] HRC, Martínez Machado v. Uruguay, Views, 4 November 1983, p. 148.
[290] HRC, Arzuaga Gilboa v. Uruguay, Views, 1 November 1985, § 14.

All of this has not been contested by the State party, except in a general manner saying that these conditions affect all prisoners. In the Committee's opinion, the conditions described above, which affect the author directly are such as to violate his right to be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, and are therefore contrary to the Covenant. It finds that holding a prisoner in such conditions of detention constitutes inhuman treatment in violation of article 10, paragraph 1, and of article 7 [of the 1966 ICCPR].[291]

327. In 1999, in Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (151/96), the ACiHPR stated that "deprivation of light, insufficient food and lack of access to medicine or medical care [of persons deprived of their liberty] also constitute violations of Article 5" of the ACHPR.[292]

328. In 1969, in the Greek case, the ECiHR concluded that accommodation in the Lakki camp violated article 3 of the 1950 ECHR because of "the conditions of gross overcrowding and its consequences"; the dormitories could hold 100 to 150 persons.[293]

329. In 1980, the IACiHR recommended that Argentina:

provide humanitarian treatment to those detained for reasons of security or public order, which treatment should in no case be inferior to that given to common prisoners, bearing in mind in both cases the internationally accepted Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.[294]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

330. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "prisoners of war shall be spared and treated humanely".[295]

331. In an appeal issued in 1979 with respect to the conflict in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe, the ICRC stated that all parties to the conflict must "give humane treatment to all captured enemy combatants".[296]

332. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in the hostilities, such as . . . prisoners of war . . ., must be respected and protected in all circumstances".[297]

[291] HRC, Deidrick v. Jamaica, Views, 9 April 1998, § 9.3.
[292] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (151/96), Decision, 15 November 1999, § 27.
[293] ECiHR, Greek case, Report, 5 November 1969, §§ 14 and 21.
[294] IACiHR, Report on Argentina, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.49 Doc. 19, 11 April 1980, Conclusions, Section B, § 8.
[295] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 496.
[296] ICRC, Conflict in Southern Africa: ICRC appeal, 19 March 1979, § 5, IRRC, No. 209, 1979, p. 88.
[297] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.

333. In an appeal issued in 1991 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the ICRC enjoined the military and civilian authorities of the parties involved to take all the necessary steps to "treat all captured combatants humanely".[298]

334. In 1991, the President of the ICRC appealed personally to the highest authorities of the parties to a non-international armed conflict to treat captured enemy combatants humanely.[299]

335. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC urged the parties to the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh "to ensure that combatants who surrender or who are no longer able to take part in the fighting are treated humanely".[300]

336. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina to "treat all captured combatants humanely".[301]

337. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC appealed to the parties to the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina to treat captured combatants and any captured civilians humanely, and to instruct all combatants in the field to respect captured persons.[302]

338. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC urged all the parties involved in the conflict in Afghanistan to "treat all captured combatants humanely".[303]

339. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC urged all the parties involved in the conflict in Tajikistan to ensure the protection of civilians and military victims, in compliance with the basic rules of IHL and, in particular, to treat all captured combatants humanely.[304]

340. In a communication to the press in 1993, the ICRC stated that its delegates in Bosnia and Herzegovina were once more witnessing "blatant violations of the basic principles of international humanitarian law" and cited as an example that "prisoners are not treated humanely".[305]

341. In a communication to the press issued in 1993, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Somalia "to respect and protect all those not or no longer participating in hostilities, such as prisoners" and to "treat all prisoners humanely".[306]

[298] ICRC, Appeal in behalf of civilians in Yugoslavia, Geneva, 4 October 1991.
[299] ICRC archive documents.
[300] ICRC, Press Release No. 1670, Nagorno-Karabakh: ICRC calls for respect for humanitarian law, 12 March 1992.
[301] ICRC, Press Release No. 1705, Bosnia and Herzegovina: ICRC calls for protection of civilians, 10 April 1992.
[302] ICRC, Press Release No. 1725, Bosnia and Herzegovina: ICRC issues solemn appeal to all parties to the conflict, 13 August 1992.
[303] ICRC, Press Release No. 1726, Afghanistan: New ICRC appeal for compliance with humanitarian rules 14 August 1992; see also Press Release No. 1712, Afghanistan: ICRC appeal for respect for humanitarian rules, 5 May 1992.
[304] ICRC, Press Release, Tajikistan: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, ICRC Dushanbe, 23 November 1992.
[305] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/16, Bosnia-Herzegovina: The ICRC appeals for humanity, 16 June 1993.
[306] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.

342. In a press release issued in 1994 during the non-international conflict in Yemen, the ICRC appealed to the parties to treat persons captured or arrested in connection with the conflict according to the principles and relevant provisions of international humanitarian law.[307]

343. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "persons not or no longer taking part in hostilities, such as . . . prisoners . . . shall be protected and respected in all circumstances, regardless of the party to which they belong". It further stated that "captured combatants and persons who have laid down their arms no longer represent any danger and must be respected; . . . subjecting them or threatening to subject them to ill-treatment . . . is a violation of international humanitarian law at all times".[308]

344. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "persons not participating or no longer participating in confrontations, such as . . . prisoners . . . shall be protected and respected in all circumstances". It further states that combatants and other persons who are captured, and those who have laid down their arms, shall not, in particular, be "ill-treated".[309]

345. In a press release issued in 1994 regarding the situation in Bihac (Bosnia and Herzegovina), the ICRC appealed to the parties to respect IHL and reminded them that captured combatants must be treated humanely.[310]

346. In a press release in 1994, the ICRC requested all concerned parties to the conflict in Chechnya to treat humanely all captured combatants and civilians detained in connection with the conflict.[311]

347. In a press release in 1995, the ICRC appealed to all the parties involved in Turkey's military operations in northern Iraq "to accord humane treatment to captured combatants and arrested civilians".[312]

348. In a communication to the press in 1996, the ICRC appealed to the parties to the conflict in Chechnya to ensure that all captured combatants and civilians were treated humanely.[313]

[307] ICRC, Press Release No. 1775, Yemen: ICRC active on both sides appeals to belligerents, 12 May 1994.
[308] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § II, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 504.
[309] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier (eds.), How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.
[310] ICRC, Press Release No. 1792, Bihac: urgent appeal, 26 November 1994.
[311] ICRC, Press Release No. 1793, Chechnya: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, 28 November 1994.
[312] ICRC, Press Release No. 1797, ICRC calls for compliance with international law in Turkey and Northern Iraq, 22 March 1995.
[313] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 96/10, Chechen conflict: ICRC Appeal, 8 March 1996.

VI. Other Practice

349. In 1979, in a letter to the ICRC; an armed group confirmed its commitment to IHL and to "grant humane treatment to prisoners of war".[314]
350. On several occasions in the context of the conflict in Lebanon, Amnesty International called upon both the governmental party and the militias to guarantee the physical safety of all detainees.[315]
351. In 1990, an armed opposition group issued strict orders to treat all prisoners "correctly".[316]
352. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "all persons deprived of their liberty shall be treated humanely".[317]
353. In 1996, a separatist entity proposed good treatment of detainees on the basis of reciprocity, that is, it would agree to respect international standards on the treatment of prisoners if the ICRC could prove that the other party did the same.[318]
354. According to the Report on the Practice of Indonesia, the leader of an armed opposition group during the insurgencies of the 1950s and 1960s in Western Java stated that the Indonesian armed forces treated the rebels humanely.[319]

B. Non-discrimination

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
355. Article 1(3) of the 1945 UN Charter provides that one of the purposes of the UN is "to achieve international co-operation . . . in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion".
356. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that:

Persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness,

[314] ICRC archive document.
[315] Amnesty International, Annual Report 1984, London, pp. 405-406; Annual Report 1988, London, p. 308; Annual Report 1989, London, p. 298; Annual Report 1991, London, p. 170.
[316] ICRC archive document.
[317] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 4(4), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 332.
[318] ICRC archive document.
[319] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 5.7.

wounds, detention, or any other cause, shall in all circumstances be treated humanely, without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, religion or faith, sex, birth or wealth, or any other similar criteria.

357. Article 14 of the 1950 ECHR stipulates that the rights and freedoms contained in the Convention shall be secured "without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status". Article 15(1) provides that "in time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation any High Contracting Party may take measures derogating from its obligations under this Convention to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, provided that such measures are not inconsistent with its other obligations under international law."

358. Article 2 of the 1965 Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination provides that "States Parties condemn racial discrimination and undertake to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating racial discrimination in all its forms and promoting understanding among all races". Article 5 provides that State parties undertake "to guarantee the right of everyone, without distinction as to race, colour, or national or ethnic origin, to equality before the law".

359. Article 2(1) of the 1966 ICCPR stipulates that:

Each State Party to the present Covenant undertakes to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the present Covenant, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

360. Article 4(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that during war, public danger and other emergencies, in which derogations from the obligations of the Convention are allowed, a State party is nonetheless not permitted to take measures "inconsistent with its other obligations under international law" and involving "discrimination on the ground of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin".

361. Article 26 of the 1966 ICCPR provides that:

All persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to the equal protection of the law. In this respect, the law shall prohibit any discrimination and guarantee to all persons equal and effective protection against discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

362. Article 2(2) of the 1966 ICESCR provides that:

The States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in the present Covenant will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

363. Article 3 of the 1966 ICESCR provides that "the States Parties to the present Covenant undertake to ensure the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights set forth in the present Covenant".

364. Article 1 of the 1969 ACHR provides that:

> The States Parties to this Convention undertake to respect the rights and freedoms recognized herein and to ensure to all persons subject to their jurisdiction the free and full exercise of those rights and freedoms, without any discrimination for reasons of race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, economic status, birth, or any other social condition.

365. Article 27 of the 1969 ACHR provides that during war, public danger and other emergencies, in which derogations from the obligations of the Convention are allowed, a State party is nonetheless not permitted to take measures "inconsistent with its other obligations under international law" and involving "discrimination on the ground of race, color, sex, language, religion or social origin".

366. The preamble to AP I states that:

> The provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and of this Protocol must be fully applied in all circumstances to all persons who are protected by those instruments, without any adverse distinction based on the nature or origin of the armed conflict or on the causes espoused by or attributed to the Parties to the conflict.

367. Article 9(1) AP I states that the provisions of the Protocol shall apply "without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or on any other similar criteria". Article 9 AP I was adopted by consensus.[320]

368. Article 75(1) AP I provides that persons who are in the power of a party shall be treated humanely and enjoy the protection provided "without any adverse distinction based upon race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or on any other similar criteria". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[321]

369. Article 2(1) AP II provides that "this Protocol shall be applied without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or on any other similar criteria". Article 2 AP II was adopted by consensus.[322]

[320] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 69.
[321] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[322] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 85.

370. Article 4(1) AP II specifies that "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities . . . shall in all circumstances be treated humanely, without any adverse distinction". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[323]

371. Article 2 of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women provides that "State Parties condemn discrimination against women in all its forms".

372. Article 2 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that:

> Every individual shall be entitled to the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms recognized and guaranteed in the present Charter without distinction of any kind such as race, ethnic group, colour, sex, language, religion, political or any other opinion, national and social origin, fortune, birth or other status.

373. Article 2(1) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

> States Parties shall respect and ensure the rights set forth in the present Convention to each child within their jurisdiction without discrimination of any kind, irrespective of the child's or his or her parent's or legal guardian's race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, disability, birth or other status.

374. Under Article 7(1)(h) of the 1998 ICC Statute, the following is a crime against humanity subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack:

> Persecution against any identifiable group or collectivity on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender as defined in paragraph 3, or other grounds that are universally recognized as impermissible under international law, in connection with any act referred to in this paragraph or any crime within the jurisdiction of the Court.

375. Article 1 of the 2000 Protocol 12 to the 1950 ECHR provides that:

1. The enjoyment of any right set forth by law shall be secured without discrimination on any ground such as sex, race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, association with a national minority, property, birth or other status.
2. No one shall be discriminated against by any public authority on any ground such as those mentioned in paragraph 1.

Other Instruments

376. Article 2 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status".

[323] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

377. Article 7 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "all are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination."

378. According to Article 1 of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam, "all men are equal in terms of basic human dignity and basic obligations and responsibilities, without any discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, language, sex, religious belief, political affiliation, social status or other considerations".

379. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

380. In paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the parties committed themselves to respect and ensure respect for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Paragraph 2.3 requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

381. Article 18(e) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "persecution on political, racial, religious or ethnic grounds" constitutes a crime against humanity.

382. Article 2(10) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote the "right to equal protection of the law and against any form of discrimination on the basis of race, ethnicity, gender, belief, age, physical condition or civil status and against any incitement to such discrimination". Article 4(1) of Part IV of the Agreement stipulates that "persons hors de combat and those who do not take a direct part in hostilities . . . shall be . . . treated . . . without any adverse distinction founded on race, color, faith, sex, birth, social standing or any other similar criteria".

383. Section 7.1 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that:

> Persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations, including civilians, members of armed forces who have laid down their weapons and persons placed hors de combat by reason of sickness, wounds or detention, shall, in all circumstances, be treated humanely and without any adverse distinction based on race, sex, religious convictions or any other ground.

384. Article 21 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights prohibits "any discrimination based on any ground such as sex, race, colour, ethnic or social origin, genetic features, language, religion or belief, political or any other opinion, membership of national minority, property, birth, disability, age or sexual orientation".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

385. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[324]

386. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) stipulates that the provisions of the chapter regarding non-international armed conflicts are applicable "without any adverse distinction for reasons of race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other analogous condition or criteria, to persons affected by an armed conflict".[325]

387. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that, with regard to non-international armed conflicts, "the general rule is that persons are to be treated humanely without adverse discrimination on the ground of race, sex, language, religion, political discrimination or similar criteria".[326] The manual stipulates that inhabitants of an occupied territory "must be treated with the same consideration, without any adverse distinction based, in particular, on race, religion or political opinion".[327]

388. Belgium's Law of War Manual states, with reference to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, that in internal armed conflicts "persons who do not take a direct part in hostilities, including members of the armed forces who have laid down their arms and persons placed hors de combat must be treated . . . without any adverse distinction".[328]

389. Benin's Military Manual provides that persons placed hors de combat "shall in any circumstances be protected . . . without any adverse distinction".[329]

390. The Military Instructions of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that the wounded and sick hors de combat must be treated without any discrimination.[330]

391. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that it is a custom of war to treat all persons hors de combat humanely and without distinction.[331]

392. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations and Instructors' Manual provide that each soldier must treat "all persons placed hors de combat without distinction".[332]

393. Canada's LOAC Manual establishes non-discrimination as an operational principle of the law of armed conflict, stating that "the LOAC is to be applied without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, religion or faith,

[324] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 8.001.
[325] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.02.
[326] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 945.
[327] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1218.
[328] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 17 and Chapter IX, § 2.
[329] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 4.
[330] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Military Instructions (1992), Item 14, § 1.
[331] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(1).
[332] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 31; Instructors' Manual (1992), § 421(1).

gender, birth or wealth, or any other similar criteria".[333] The manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and specifies that:

> AP II applies without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, gender, language, religion, or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or any other similar criteria.
>
> AP II provides that all persons not participating in the conflict or who have ceased to do so are entitled to respect ... and to be treated ... without adverse distinction.[334]

394. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "persons placed hors de combat or who do not participate directly in the hostilities ... shall be protected ... without any adverse distinction".[335]

395. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual and Instructors' Manual provide that:

> All persons are born free and equal before the law, receive the same protection and treatment from the authorities and possess the same rights, freedoms and opportunities without any discrimination based on sex, race, family or nationality, origin, language, religion or political or philosophical opinion.[336]

396. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations stipulates that persons placed hors de combat "shall be treated without distinction".[337]

397. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces provides that "according to the law, we are all equal, without distinction based on sex, race, ideology or religion".[338]

398. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended exhorts combatants to "treat humanely and without distinction all persons hors de combat".[339]

399. France's LOAC Manual restates Article 75(1) AP I.[340] It further emphasises that one of the three main principles common to IHL and human rights is the principle of non-discrimination, according to which "individuals are treated without any distinction based on race, sex, nationality, philosophical, religious or political opinion".[341]

400. With reference to Israel's Law of War Booklet, the Report on the Practice of Israel states that:

> As a general policy ... all individuals falling in the power of a party to a conflict should, at a minimum, be treated in accordance with the principles of humanity, without any adverse distinction based upon race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or on any other similar criteria.[342]

[333] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 2-2, § 14.
[334] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-2, §§ 10–12, p. 17-3, §§ 18 and 19.
[335] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 1.
[336] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 12; Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 12.
[337] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32.
[338] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 7.
[339] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975); Article 9 bis.
[340] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 51.
[341] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 51–52.
[342] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.6, referring to Law of War Booklet (1986), p. 12.

401. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "persons not involved in the fighting because they are not taking part in hostilities, or because they are wounded or have surrendered, or have been detained, must be treated . . . without adverse discrimination".[343]

402. Madagascar's Military Manual states that one of the seven fundamental rules of IHL is that "persons placed hors de combat and those who do not take a direct part in hostilities . . . shall in all circumstances be protected and treated humanely, without any adverse distinction".[344]

403. Mali's Army Regulations provides that the refusal to treat without distinction all persons hors de combat is a serious breach of its rules.[345]

404. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that as a custom of war, soldiers are required to treat without distinction all regular combatants placed hors de combat.[346]

405. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that protected persons shall be treated humanely "without adverse distinction based on race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, nationality or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or on any other similar criteria".[347] With respect to non-international armed conflict, the manual restates the principle of non-discrimination contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II.[348]

406. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides in respect of protected persons that "any discrimination based on race, religion, sex . . . is prohibited".[349]

407. New Zealand's Military Manual states that the principle of non-discrimination is one of the key principles of the law of armed conflict. It states that "the law is to be applied without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, religion or faith, sex, birth or wealth, or any other similar criteria".[350] It further provides that "all protected persons must be treated with the same consideration, without any adverse distinction based, in particular, on race, religion or political opinion".[351] The manual also emphasises the principle of non-discrimination with regard to non-international armed conflicts, and provides that AP II "is to apply without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, sex, language, religion or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status or any other similar criteria". It adds that "all persons not participating in the conflict or who have ceased so to do are entitled, whether under restriction or not, to respect for their persons, honour and

[343] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, pp. 5–6.
[344] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 1.
[345] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[346] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(1).
[347] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VIII-2/VIII–3.
[348] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. XI-1 and XI-4.
[349] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-38.
[350] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 206.
[351] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1321.2.

convictions, and religious practices and are, in all circumstances, to be treated humanely and without adverse distinction.[352]

408. Nicaragua's Military Manual reproduces common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[353]

409. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces states that non-discrimination, i.e. respect for all without any distinction on the grounds of nationality, race, religion, social condition or political opinion, is one of the three common principles of the Geneva Conventions which represent the minimum level of protection to which every human being is entitled.[354]

410. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that all persons placed hors de combat must be treated without distinction.[355]

411. Senegal's IHL Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[356]

412. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are part of customary international law.[357]

413. Togo's Military Manual provides that persons placed hors de combat "shall in any circumstances be protected ... without any adverse distinction".[358]

414. The UK LOAC Manual incorporates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[359]

415. The US Field Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[360] It provides that the wounded and sick in the hands of one party to the conflict shall be cared for "without any adverse distinction founded on sex, race, nationality, religion, political opinions, or any other similar criteria".[361] The manual also states that:

> Without prejudice to the provisions relating to their state of health, age and sex, all protected persons shall be treated with the same consideration by the Party to the conflict in whose power they are, without any adverse distinction based, in particular, on race, religion or political opinion.[362]

416. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions "insure humane treatment to civilians and others who are hors de combat, without regard to race, colour, religion, sex, birth, or wealth".[363] It also stipulates that under GC IV, "any distinction in treatment based upon race, religion or political opinion is specially

[352] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1810.
[353] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 6.
[354] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (1994), § 24.
[355] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(1).
[356] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 4.
[357] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[358] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 4.
[359] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 12, p. 42, § 2(a).
[360] US, Field Manual (1956), § 11.
[361] US, Field Manual (1956), § 215.
[362] US, Field Manual (1956), § 266.
[363] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 11-3.

forbidden".[364] The Pamphlet quotes Article 1 of the 1945 UN Charter and adds that the set of documents elaborated by the UN and the Geneva Conventions safeguard such fundamental freedoms as "freedom from discrimination based on race, sex, language, or religion".[365]

417. The US Instructor's Guide restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[366]

National Legislation

418. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the crimes against humanity defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including persecution.[367]

419. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[368]

420. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the crimes against humanity defined in Article 7 of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[369]

421. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, "persecution against any identifiable group or collectivity on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender or other grounds that are universally recognized as impermissible under international law", when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, is a crime against humanity.[370]

422. Croatia's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of "any person who, on the basis of race, sex, skin colour, nationality or ethnic origin, violates basic human rights and freedoms accepted by the international community".[371]

423. Finland's Revised Penal Code, under the heading "Offences against humanity", provides for the punishment of "any persons who, in their private or public functions, discriminate on grounds of race, national or ethnic origin, language, colour, sex, age, family ties, sexual preferences, state of health, religion, political orientation, political or industrial activity or other comparable circumstance".[372]

424. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3 and of AP I, including violations of Articles 9(1) and 75(1) AP I, as well as any

[364] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-4.
[365] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 11-4.
[366] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 8.
[367] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.20.
[368] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[369] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[370] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
[371] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 174.
[372] Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Section 9.

"contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 2(1) and 4(1) AP II, are punishable offences.[373]

425. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law includes "persecution on national, racial, religious or political grounds" in its definition of crimes against humanity.[374]

426. Kenya's Constitution provides that every person in Kenya is entitled to the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual whatever his or her race, tribe, place of origin or residence or other local connection, political opinions, colour, creed or sex.[375]

427. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "persecution against any identifiable group or collectivity on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender or other grounds that are universally recognised as impermissible under international law, in connection with any act referred to in this subsection or any other crime as referred to in this Act", is a crime against humanity. Persecution is defined as "the intentional and severe deprivation of fundamental rights contrary to international law by reason of the identity of the group or collectivity".[376]

428. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, crimes against humanity include the crime defined in Article 7(1)(h) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[377]

429. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[378]

430. Poland's Penal Code provides for the repression of incitement and use of violence or unlawful threat against a group or a particular person because he or she belongs to a particular racial group.[379]

431. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(h) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[380]

432. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(h) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[381]

433. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[382]

[373] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[374] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b).
[375] Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 70.
[376] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 4(1)(h) and 4(2)(c).
[377] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 10(2).
[378] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[379] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 119.
[380] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[381] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[382] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).

434. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as "persecution on political, racial, national or religious grounds".[383]

435. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as "persecution on political, racial, national or religious grounds".[384]

436. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that racial and other discrimination is a war crime.[385]

National Case-law

437. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

438. On the basis of the reply by Iraq's Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that, during the Iran–Iraq War, members of the opposing forces who were hors de combat were treated without distinction based on military rank or category.[386]

439. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[387]

440. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that:

> We support in particular the fundamental guarantees contained in article 75 [AP I], such as the principle that all persons who are in the power of a party to a conflict and who do not benefit from more favourable treatment under the Conventions be treated humanely in all circumstances and enjoy, at a minimum, the protections specified in the Conventions without any adverse distinction based upon race, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, or any similar criteria.[388]

441. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions]".[389]

383 US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.

384 US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945), Regulation 2(b).

385 SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 154.

386 Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Reply by the Ministry of Defence to a questionnaire, July 1997, Chapter 2.1.

387 Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.

388 US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 427.

389 Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

442. A memorandum on the responsibilities and obligations applicable to contacts with the local population issued by the Ministry of Defence of a State engaged in an international military operation in 1992 included a prohibition on discrimination founded on race, religion, sex or any other similar criteria.[390]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

443. In a resolution on the former Yugoslavia adopted in 1995, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights demanded that "those who have engaged in incitement to ethnic or religious hatred be brought to justice and held individually accountable for their acts".[391]

444. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[392]

Other International Organisations

445. In an opinion adopted in 1995 in the context of Turkey's military intervention in northern Iraq, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe observed that "ICRC efforts have been directed towards a pragmatic approach, whose operational objectives are . . . to assess on the spot the medical and sanitary needs of the wounded and sick, civilian or combatant, regardless of their origin".[393]

International Conferences

446. The 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1973 adopted a resolution on the elimination of racial discrimination in which it condemned "all forms of racism and racial discrimination at all levels".[394]

447. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed dismay and condemnation that "gross and systematic violations and situations that constitute serious obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights continue to occur in all parts of the world, [including] . . . all forms of racism, racial discrimination and . . . discrimination against women".[395]

[390] ICRC archive document.
[391] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, § 9.
[392] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.
[393] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Doc. 7295, 25 April 1995, §§ 10 and 11.
[394] 22nd International Conference of the Red Cross, Teheran, 8-15 November 1973, Res. X.
[395] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(30).

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

448. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[396]

449. In its General Comment on non-discrimination under the 1966 ICCPR in 1989, the HRC held that:

> The Committee believes that the term "discrimination" as used in the Covenant should be understood to imply any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference which is based on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, and which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by all persons, on an equal footing, of all rights and freedoms.[397]

450. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC held that:

> According to article 4, paragraph 1, one of the conditions for the justifiability of any derogation from the Covenant is that the measures taken do not involve discrimination solely on the ground of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin. Even though article 26 or the other Covenant provisions related to non-discrimination (article 2, 3, 14, paragraph 1, 23, paragraph 4, 24, paragraph 1, and 25) have not been listed among the non-derogable provisions in article 4, paragraph 2, there are elements or dimensions of the right to non-discrimination that cannot be derogated from in any circumstances. In particular, this provision of article 4, paragraph 1, must be complied with if any distinctions between persons are made when resorting to measures that derogate from the Covenant.[398]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

451. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "any discriminatory distinction of treatment is prohibited if based upon race, colour, sex, language, religion or belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or any other similar criteria".[399]

452. At its Teheran Session in 1973, the Council of Delegates adopted a resolution on action in the struggle against racism and racial discrimination in which it noted that "racism and racial discrimination constitute a serious violation of basic human rights" and of the Red Cross principle of impartiality. The resolution recalled the "provisions of the Geneva Conventions forbidding

396 ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.
397 HRC, General Comment No. 18 (Non-discrimination), 10 November 1989, § 7.
398 HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, § 8.
399 Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 199.

any discrimination of a racial character" and stressed the necessity "to engage still more actively in the struggle for the elimination of racism and racial discrimination".[400]

453. In an appeal issued in 1979 with respect to the conflict in Rhodesia/Zimbabwe, the ICRC specifically requested that Transitional Government in Salisbury "allow the ICRC to provide medical care without discrimination to all wounded and sick war victims".[401]

454. In a communication to the press issued in 1993, the ICRC stated that its delegates in Bosnia and Herzegovina were once more witnessing "blatant violations of the basic principles of international humanitarian law" and cited the "adverse discrimination . . . practiced in the medical care given to sick and wounded civilians and combatants" as an example.[402]

455. In a declaration issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross reminded the parties of their obligation to treat without any distinction non-combatants and persons hors de combat. It recalled the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[403]

VI. Other Practice

456. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "a state violates international law if, as a matter of state policy, it practices, encourages, or condones . . . (f) systematic racial discrimination".[404]

457. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "all persons, even if their liberty has been restricted . . . shall in all circumstances be treated . . . without any adverse distinction".[405]

458. The SPLM Constitution provides that a member of the SPLM has the duty and obligation to "combat racism, tribalism, political sectarianism, religious intolerance and all other forms of discrimination in the New Sudan".[406]

[400] International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement, Council of Delegates, Teheran, 8–15 November 1973, Resolution on action in the struggle against racism and racial discrimination.

[401] ICRC, Conflict in Southern Africa: ICRC appeal, 19 March 1979, § 6, IRRC, No. 209, 1979, p. 88.

[402] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/16, Bosnia-Herzegovina: The ICRC appeals for humanity, 16 June 1993.

[403] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1 de Enero de 1994, 3 January 1994.

[404] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 702(f).

[405] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(1), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 331.

[406] SPLM, Constitution, March 1996, Article 7(2).

Civilians

Note: For practice concerning non-discrimination towards returning displaced persons, see Chapter 38, section D.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

459. Article 13 GC IV provides that the general protection of populations against certain consequences of war is applicable "without any adverse distinction based, in particular, on race, nationality, religion or political opinion".

460. Article 27, third paragraph, GC IV stipulates that:

> Without prejudice to the provisions relating to their state of health, age and sex, all protected persons shall be treated with the same consideration by the Party to the conflict in whose power they are, without any adverse distinction based, in particular, on race, religion or political opinion.

461. Article 54, first paragraph, GC IV provides that, should judges and public officials in the occupied territories abstain from fulfilling their functions for reasons of conscience, "the occupying power may not . . . take any measures of coercion or discrimination against them".

462. Article 69(1) AP I provides that the occupying power shall provide food, medical and other supplies necessary for the survival of the civilian population in the occupied territory "without any adverse distinction". Article 69 AP I was adopted by consensus.[407]

463. Article 70(1) AP I provides that the relief actions of the occupying power and of relief societies are to be "conducted without any adverse distinction". Article 70 AP I was adopted by consensus.[408]

464. Article 18(2) AP II states that the relief actions of the occupying power and of relief societies are to be "conducted without any adverse distinction". Article 18 AP II was adopted by consensus.[409]

Other Instruments

465. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that all civilians shall be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I".

466. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "in the treatment of the civilian population, there shall be no distinction founded on race, religion or faith, or any other similar criteria".

467. Under Article 5(h) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, "persecution on political, racial and religious grounds", "when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population", constitutes a crime against humanity.

[407] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 245.
[408] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 245.
[409] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 150.

468. Under Article 3(h) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, "persecution on political, racial and religious grounds", "when committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack against any civilian population", constitutes a crime against humanity.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

469. Argentina's Law of War Manual restates the provisions of Article 75(1) AP I.[410]

470. Canada's LOAC Manual states that in occupied territories, "protected persons must receive equal treatment without any adverse distinction based on race, religion, or political opinion".[411] It also stipulates that Article 75 AP I "provides that all persons in the power of a party to the conflict are entitled to at least a humane treatment without adverse discrimination on grounds of race, gender, language, religion, political discrimination or similar criteria".[412] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "AP II applies without any adverse distinction founded on race, colour, gender, language, religion or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other status, or any other similar criteria".[413]

471. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that all civilians must be treated humanely and that "subject to favourable considerations based on sex, health or age, [civilians] must be treated with the same consideration and without any adverse distinction based in particular on race, religion or political opinion".[414]

472. Germany's Military Manual provides that, in case of occupation, "any discrimination for reasons of race, nationality, language, religious convictions and practices, political opinion, social origin or position or similar considerations is unlawful".[415]

473. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territories, civilians shall be treated without any distinction based on sex, race, religion or political opinion.[416]

474. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "protected persons must receive equal treatment without any adverse distinction based on race, religion or political opinion".[417]

[410] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.15.
[411] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-4, § 30.
[412] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-7, § 63.
[413] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 18.
[414] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 4, § 2.
[415] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 533.
[416] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(b).
[417] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1114 and 1137.

475. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that civilian persons "benefit from the fundamental guarantees without any discrimination".[418]
476. Sweden's IHL Manual states with regard to civilians within an occupied area that "there may be no discrimination on racial, religious or political grounds or the like".[419]
477. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "all civilian persons shall benefit from an equal treatment. No one can be disadvantaged because of race, colour, language, religion, political or other opinions, social origin, faith, sex, wealth or any other circumstance".[420]
478. The UK Military Manual prohibits discrimination in the treatment of protected civilians and also stipulates that non-discrimination also applies in occupied territories.[421]
479. The UK LOAC Manual prohibits discrimination in the treatment of protected civilians.[422]
480. The US Field Manual restates Article 13 GC IV.[423]
481. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 27 GC IV and provides that "any distinction in treatment based upon race, religion or political opinion is specifically forbidden".[424]

National Legislation
482. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, "civilian persons belonging to the adverse party, who are in the hands of the Azerbaijan Republic, are respected and treated humanely without any adverse distinction founded on race, sex, language, religion, national and social origin or any other similar criteria".[425]
483. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[426]
484. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 13, 27 and 54 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Articles 69(1) and 70(1) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 18(2) AP II, are punishable offences.[427]

418 Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(31).
419 Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6, p. 122.
420 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 148.
421 UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 39, 133 and 547.
422 UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 35, § 9.
423 US, Field Manual (1956), § 252.
424 US Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-4.
425 Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 14.
426 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
427 Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

485. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[428]

National Case-law
486. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
487. According to the Report on the Practice of China, China protects foreigners in China, provided that they obey local laws, and makes no distinction between persons on the basis of whether they are from a country that is neutral or belligerent in relation to China.[429]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
488. In a resolution on Lebanon adopted in 1982, the UN Security Council called for "respect for the rights of the civilian populations without any discrimination".[430]

Other International Organisations
489. No practice was found.

International Conferences
490. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

491. In its judgement in the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found, in relation to living conditions of Greek Cypriots in the Karpas region of northern Cyprus, that there had been a violation of Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR in that the Greek Cypriots had been subjected to discrimination amounting to degrading treatment.[431]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

492. No practice was found.

[428] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[429] Report on the Practice of China, 1997, Chapter 5.
[430] UN Security Council, Res. 513, 4 July 1982, § 1.
[431] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, § 311.

VI. Other Practice

493. No practice was found.

Wounded and sick

Note: For practice concerning distinction among the wounded and sick on medical grounds, see Chapter 34, section B.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

494. Article 12, second paragraph, GC I provides that the protection due to wounded and sick members of the armed forces in the field shall be granted "without any adverse distinction founded on sex, race, nationality, religion, political opinions, or any other similar criteria".

495. Article 12, second paragraph, GC II provides that the protection due to wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the armed forces at sea shall be granted "without any adverse distinction founded on sex, race, nationality, religion, political opinions, or any other similar criteria".

496. Article 30, first paragraph, GC II provides that military hospital ships and the hospital ships of National Red Cross Societies of the parties to the conflict and of neutral States and small craft employed for coastal rescue operations "shall afford relief and assistance to the wounded and sick and the shipwrecked without distinction of nationality".

Other Instruments

497. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provide that "all wounded and sick" and "all wounded and sick at sea" shall be treated in accordance with GC I.

498. Section 9.1 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that "members of the armed forces and other persons in the power of the United Nations force who are wounded or sick . . . shall . . . receive the medical care and attention required by their condition, without adverse distinction".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

499. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that the wounded and sick "shall be treated and cared for . . . without any adverse distinction based on sex, race, nationality, religion, political opinions or on any other similar criteria".[432]

[432] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.001.

500. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides with regard to the wounded and sick that "no regard is to be paid to the nationality of the patient".[433]

501. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "while there is no absolute obligation to accept civilian wounded and sick, once civilian patients have been accepted, discrimination against them, on any grounds other than medical, is not permissible". Concerning wounded, sick and shipwrecked combatants, the manual states that they "are to be protected and respected, treated humanely . . . and cared for by any detaining power without any adverse discrimination".[434]

502. Belgium's Field Regulations provides that wounded and sick soldiers who have laid down their arms shall be treated without distinction based on nationality.[435]

503. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers provides that during search and rescue operations, "no difference shall be made between fellow or enemy wounded and sick".[436]

504. Benin's Military Manual instructs soldiers to "collect and care for the wounded and sick, whether they are friends or enemies".[437]

505. Bosnia and Herzegovina's Military Instructions provides that the wounded and sick must be treated without any discrimination.[438]

506. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "regardless of the party to which they belong, or whether they are combatants or non-combatants, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked are to be respected and protected without any adverse discrimination".[439]

507. Croatia's military manuals provide that wounded and sick persons shall be cared for and protected without distinction.[440]

508. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic provides that enemy sick and wounded and wounded and sick enemy captives shall receive the same medical care as for one's own troops.[441]

509. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that wounded and sick members of the armed forces shall be cared for without any distinction with regard to nationality.[442]

510. France's LOAC Summary Note states that "captured combatants whether they are wounded, sick or shipwrecked shall be cared for . . . and benefit from the same treatment as friendly military personnel".[443]

[433] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 622.
[434] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994) §§ 987 and 990.
[435] Belgium, Field Regulations (1964), Article 23.
[436] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 17.
[437] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 18.
[438] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Military Instructions (1992), Item 14, § 1.
[439] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-2, §§ 19–20.
[440] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 45; Soldiers' Manual (1992), p. 3; Commanders' Manual (1992), Rule No. 71, p. 10; Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), p. 11, Articles 1–3.
[441] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 6.
[442] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.4.
[443] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1

511. Germany's Military Manual states that in conflicts at sea, "hospital ships shall afford assistance to all wounded, sick and shipwrecked without distinction of nationality".[444]
512. With reference to Israel's Law of War Booklet, the Report on the Practice of Israel states that:

The IDF has a strict policy [according to which] all wounded and sick shall be treated, respected and protected, irrespective of whichever party they belong to, and without any distinction based upon race, colour, sex, language, religion, belief, political or other opinion, national or social origin, wealth, birth or other similar criteria.[445]

513. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "the wounded and sick enemy will receive the same care as members of national forces".[446]
514. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations states that wounded and sick persons shall be protected without distinction.[447]
515. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that the wounded and sick "must be treated without any distinction based on race, skin colour, sex, language, religion, political beliefs, nationality, birth or any other criteria".[448]
516. The IFOR Instructions of the Netherlands instructs troops to take care of the wounded whether they are friends or enemies.[449]
517. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that:

People who do not participate directly in hostilities, including persons placed hors de combat because . . . of sickness or wounds . . . shall be treated in all circumstances with humanity without any adverse distinction based on race, colour, language, religion or belief, sex, birth, economic status or any other similar criteria or situation.[450]

518. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct states that wounded and sick persons shall be protected without distinction.[451]
519. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that no discrimination with regard to the wounded or sick "based on sex, race, nationality, religion, political belief, or any other similar criteria" is permitted.[452]
520. Spain's LOAC Manual states that wounded and sick prisoners and one's own troops shall be evacuated under the same conditions.[453]

444 Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1057.
445 Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 5.1, referring to Law of War Booklet (1986), p. 16.
446 Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. IV, Article 93.
447 Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25.
448 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-1, § 2 and p. VI-2.
449 Netherlands, IFOR Instructions (1995), § 1.
450 Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 6.
451 Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(l).
452 Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
453 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, Article 7.3.a.(11).

521. Switzerland's military manuals provide that medical personnel shall collect and care for enemy wounded, as well as those of friendly forces.[454]
522. Togo's Military Manual instructs soldiers to "collect and care for the wounded and sick, whether they are friends or enemies". It recalls the duties of States which have ratified the Geneva Conventions, inter alia, "to care for friends or enemies without distinction".[455]
523. The UK Military Manual states that the wounded and sick "must be cared for . . . without adverse distinction based on sex, race, nationality, religion, political belief or any other similar test".[456]
524. The UK LOAC Manual provides that, in the event of a civil war, "persons out of the fighting . . . because they are wounded must be treated . . . without any adverse discrimination".[457]
525. The US Field Manual provides that sick and wounded captives shall be provided with the same medical care as friendly sick and wounded. It also restates Article 12 GC II.[458]
526. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "one of the important principles relating to wounded and sick requires medical care and humane treatment to friend and foe without distinction founded on sex, race, nationality, religion, political opinions or similar criteria".[459]
527. The US Naval Handbook provides that "wounded and sick personnel falling into enemy hands must be . . . cared for without adverse distinction".[460]
528. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that there is an obligation to treat the wounded and sick humanely, without any discrimination.[461]

National Legislation
529. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[462]
530. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 12 GC I, 12 and 30 GC II, is a punishable offence.[463]
531. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the

[454] Switzerland, Military Manual (1984), p. 15; Teaching Manual (1986), p. 43; Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 70.
[455] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 18 and Fascicule I, p. 11.
[456] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 339.
[457] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 12, p. 42, § 2(a).
[458] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 92 and 215.
[459] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 3-4(d), see also §§ 12-2(a) and 13-2.
[460] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-4.
[461] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Articles 161–166.
[462] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[463] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[464]

532. Spain's Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces specifies that assistance will be lent to both one's own and enemy wounded whenever the circumstances of security and of the mission permit.[465]

National Case-law

533. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

534. In 1992, the Presidency of the Republika Srpska of Bosnia and Herzegovina made an urgent appeal to ensure the protection of all wounded and sick persons "regardless of the side they belong to".[466]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

535. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned the alleged practice of both parties of withholding medical care on the basis of ethnic origin.[467]

Other International Organisations

536. No practice was found.

International Conferences

537. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

538. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

539. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of [464] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).

[465] Spain, Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces (1978), Article 140.
[466] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Appeal of the Presidency concerning the International Committee of the Red Cross Operations, Pale, 7 June 1992.
[467] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Burundi, Initial report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/16, 14 November 1995, § 121.

the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "the wounded, the sick and the shipwrecked must be collected and cared for regardless of the party to which they belong".[468]
540. In a press release issued in 1992, the ICRC urged all parties involved in the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh "to ensure that the wounded and sick are cared for in all circumstances, regardless of the side to which they belong".[469]
541. In a press release issued in 1992, the ICRC urged the parties to the conflict in Tajikistan to ensure that "the wounded and sick are cared for in all circumstances, regardless of the side to which they belong".[470]
542. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "all the wounded and sick, both civilian and military, must be collected and cared for, without distinction".[471]
543. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "all the wounded and sick must be collected and cared for, without distinction".[472]
544. In a press release issued in 1994, the ICRC called on the parties to the conflict in Chechnya to ensure that "the wounded and sick are cared for, regardless of the side to which they belong".[473]
545. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC recalled that "the wounded and sick must be collected and cared for regardless of the party to which they belong".[474]

VI. Other Practice

546. No practice was found.

Persons deprived of their liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
547. Article 14, second paragraph, GC III provides that "women shall be treated with all regard due to their sex and shall in all cases benefit by treatment as favourable as that granted to men".

[468] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.
[469] ICRC, Press Release No. 1670, Nagorno-Karabakh: ICRC calls for respect of humanitarian law, 12 March 1992.
[470] ICRC, Press Release, Tajikistan: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, ICRC Dushanbe, 23 November 1992.
[471] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.
[472] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier (eds.), How Does Law Protect in War!, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.
[473] ICRC, Press Release No. 1793, Chechnya: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, 28 November 1994.
[474] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.

548. Article 16 GC III provides that "all prisoners of war shall be treated alike by the Detaining Power, without any adverse distinction based on race, nationality, religious belief or political opinions, or any other distinction founded on similar criteria".

Other Instruments

549. Rule 6(1) of the 1955 Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "the following rules shall be applied impartially. There shall be no discrimination on grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status".

550. Rule 2 of the 1987 European Prison Rules provides that "the rules shall be applied impartially. There shall be no discrimination on grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, birth, economic or other status".

551. Principle 5 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "these principles shall be applied to all persons within the territory of any given State, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion or religious belief, political or other opinion, national, ethnic or social origin, property, birth or other status".

552. Paragraph 2 of the 1990 Basic Principles for the Treatment of Prisoners provides that "there shall be no discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status".

553. Paragraph 3 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "captured combatants shall enjoy the treatment provided for by [GC III]".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

554. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "all prisoners shall be treated in the same way by the detaining power, without any adverse distinction based on race, nationality, religion, political opinions or any other similar criteria".[475]

555. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "prisoners of war, at all times, shall be treated . . . equally without distinction based on rank, sex, race, nationality, age, religion, political opinion, professional skills, etc.".[476]

[475] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.015.
[476] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.12.

556. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that one of the fundamental rules for the treatment of POW s is that "any discrimination on the grounds of race, nationality, religious belief or political opinions is unlawful".[477]

557. Benin's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war . . . shall be treated alike".[478]

558. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "all POW s are to be treated alike without any adverse distinction based on race, nationality, religious belief, or political opinions, or any other distinction founded on similar criteria".[479] With regard to non-international armed conflict, the manual states that "the wounded and sick among [persons whose liberty has been restricted] are to be treated humanely".[480]

559. Canada's Code of Conduct states that "the standard of treatment which applies to all detained persons, without adverse distinction based on race, nationality, sex, religious belief or political opinion, is a long standing rule".[481]

560. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "when prisoners of war are given medical treatment, no distinction among them will be based on any grounds other than medical ones".[482]

561. Germany's Soldiers' Manual recalls the prohibition of any distinction based on race, nationality, religion or political opinions in the treatment of captured combatants.[483]

562. Germany's Military Manual provides that, with regard to the treatment of POW s, one of the fundamental rules is the unlawfulness of any discrimination on the grounds of race, nationality, religious belief or political opinions or similar criteria.[484]

563. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "prisoners shall be treated with equality, without any distinction based on race, nationality, religion, political beliefs or any other criteria. The only exception is the preferential treatment based on the health situation, age . . .".[485]

564. New Zealand's Military Manual, under the heading "Adverse discrimination prohibited", recalls that "by Article 16 of [GC III], subject to differences in treatment based on rank, sex, or health, all prisoners are to be treated alike without any adverse distinction based on race, nationality, religious belief or political opinions, or any other distinction founded on similar criteria".[486]

565. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that no discrimination with regard to POW s is permitted.[487]

[477] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1002.
[478] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 13.
[479] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 18.
[480] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3 § 25.
[481] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 4, § 3.
[482] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.8.
[483] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 7, § 4.
[484] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 704.
[485] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-3, § 2.
[486] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 914.
[487] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 37.

566. Spain's LOAC Manual lists among the rules for the basic treatment of POW s the prohibition of any "discrimination based on sex, race, nationality or political opinion".[488]

567. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual recalls that "no adverse distinction can be based on race, nationality, religion, political opinions, language, colour, social condition, birth or other similar criteria".[489]

568. Togo's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war . . . shall be treated alike".[490]

569. The UK Military Manual and LOAC Manual prohibit discrimination in the treatment of POW s and restate the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The Military Manual also quotes Article 14 GC III.[491]

570. The US Field Manual provides that "all POW s shall be treated alike without any adverse distinction based on race, nationality, religious belief or political opinions, or any other distinction founded on similar criteria".[492]

571. The US Air Force Pamphlet prohibits any adverse distinction with regard to POW s.[493]

572. The US Naval Handbook provides that "when prisoners of war are given medical treatment, no distinction among them will be based on any grounds other than medical ones".[494]

National Legislation

573. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts:

> Persons detained by an individual, a group of persons, some organisation or military unit from the Republic of Azerbaijan as a party to the conflict, are entitled to respect for their dignity and honour irrespective of their status, nationality, religion, language, political opinions, their belonging to a defined social group or other similar criteria.[495]

574. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[496]

[488] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.4.a.(1).
[489] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 97.
[490] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 13.
[491] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 39 and 133; LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, §§ 2 and 9.
[492] US, Field Manual (1956), § 92.
[493] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 12-2(a) and 13-2.
[494] US, Naval Handbook (1993), § 11-7.
[495] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 18.
[496] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

575. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 14 and 16 GC III, is a punishable offence.[497]
576. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... is liable to imprisonment".[498]

National Case-law
577. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
578. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

579. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

580. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

581. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "all prisoners of war must be treated alike, subject ... to the provisions of [GC III and AP I] relating to rank, sex and age ... [and] to any privileged treatment accorded to them by reason of their state of health, age or professional qualification".[499]

VI. Other Practice

582. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "persons hors de combat and those who do not take part in hostilities ... shall in all circumstances be ... treated ... without any adverse distinction".[500]

[497] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[498] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[499] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 667.
[500] ICRC archive document.

Apartheid

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

583. In Article I of the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, the State Parties declared that "apartheid is a crime against humanity" and that "inhuman acts resulting from the policies and practices of apartheid and similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination, as defined in article II of the Convention, are crimes violating the principles of international law".

584. Article 85(4)(c) AP I provides that "practices of apartheid and other inhuman or degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity, based on racial discrimination" shall be regarded as grave breaches of the Protocol. Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[501]

585. Article 7(1)(j) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "the crime of apartheid" constitutes a crime against humanity.

Other Instruments

586. Article 20 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that:

1. An individual who as a leader or organizer commits or orders the commission of the crime of apartheid shall, on conviction thereof, be sentenced.
2. Apartheid consists of any of the following acts based on policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination committed for the purpose of establishing or maintaining domination by one racial group over any other racial group and systematically oppressing it:
   (a) denial to a member of a racial group of the right to life and liberty of person;
   (b) deliberate imposition on a racial group of living conditions calculated to cause its physical destruction in whole or in part;
   (c) any legislative measures and other measures calculated to prevent a racial group from participating in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the country and the deliberate creation of conditions preventing the full development of such a group;
   (d) any measures, including legislative measures, designed to divide the population along racial lines, in particular by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the members of a racial group, the prohibition of marriages among members of various racial groups or the expropriation of landed property belonging to a racial group or to members thereof;
   (e) exploitation of the labour of the members of a racial group, in particular by submitting them to forced labour;
   (f) persecution of organizations and persons, by depriving them of fundamental rights and freedoms, because they oppose apartheid.

587. Under Article 18(f) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "institutionalized discrimination on racial, ethnic or religious grounds involving the violation of fundamental human rights and freedoms and resulting in seriously disadvantaging a part of the population" is considered a crime against humanity.

[501] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

588. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including crimes against humanity. According to Section 6(1)(j) "the crime of apartheid" constitutes a crime against humanity.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

589. Argentina's Law of War Manual stipulates that the practice of apartheid and similar practices are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[502]

590. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "practices of apartheid and other inhumane and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity based on racial discrimination" are a grave breach of AP I.[503]

591. France's LOAC Manual quotes Article 7(1)(j) of the 1998 ICC Statute, which defines the crime of apartheid as a crime against humanity.[504]

592. Germany's Military Manual provides that "practices of apartheid and other inhuman and degrading practices based on racial discrimination" are a grave breach of IHL.[505]

593. Italy's IHL Manual states that "the practice of apartheid and other inhuman and degrading treatments based on racial discrimination which offends the dignity of the human person is a grave breach of the . . . [Geneva] conventions and their additional protocols".[506]

594. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "practices of apartheid and other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity, based on racial discrimination, are a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols".[507]

595. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "practices of apartheid and other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity, based on racial discrimination", when committed wilfully, are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions or AP I.[508]

596. Russia's Military Manual provides that the "practice of apartheid" is prohibited.[509]

[502] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[503] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-3, § 17(c).
[504] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 32, 51 and 52.
[505] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[506] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 85.
[507] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-6.
[508] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1703.4.
[509] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 5(l).

597. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that "segregation and other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity based on racial discrimination" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[510]
598. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "carrying out practices of apartheid and other inhuman and degrading practices" is a grave breach and is qualified as a war crime.[511]
599. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "practices of apartheid or other inhumane and humiliating treatment based on racial discrimination, implying a serious violation of human dignity", is a grave breach of AP I.[512]

National Legislation
600. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "outrage upon personal self-esteem, based on apartheid or racial discrimination, application of inhuman and other humiliating practices", during an armed conflict, constitute crimes against the peace and security of mankind.[513]
601. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach . . . of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[514]
602. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates into the Criminal Code the crimes against humanity defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including apartheid.[515] In addition, it incorporates into the Criminal Code the war crimes that are grave breaches of AP I, including apartheid.[516]
603. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides a punishment for the crime of apartheid and inhuman and degrading practices based on racial discrimination.[517]
604. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides for the punishment of anyone "indulging in practices of apartheid or other inhuman or degrading practices based on racial discrimination and resulting in outrages upon personal dignity".[518]
605. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended punishes the crime of apartheid and practices based on racial discrimination.[519]

[510] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 38(b).
[511] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1).
[512] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 193(2)(c).
[513] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.4(3).
[514] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[515] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.22.
[516] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.100.
[517] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 111.
[518] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(19), see also Article 1(2)(8) (crime against humanity).
[519] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Article 418.

606. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that the crime of apartheid is a crime against humanity.[520]
607. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of AP I] . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[521]
608. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the crimes against humanity defined in Article 7 of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[522]
609. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on "anyone who, during an armed conflict, orders or carries out against protected persons practices of racial segregation or other inhuman or degrading practices based on racial discrimination and which result in outrages upon personal dignity".[523]
610. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, "crimes of discrimination: tribal, ethnic or religious", when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, are crimes against humanity.[524]
611. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach . . . of [AP I]".[525]
612. Cyprus's AP I Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic any grave breach of the provisions of the Protocol, or takes part or assists or incites another person in the commission of such a breach".[526]
613. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who carries out practices of apartheid.[527]
614. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, "anyone who carries out against protected persons practices of racial segregation and other practices based on racial discrimination and resulting in outrages upon personal dignity" is punishable.[528]
615. Georgia's Criminal Code punishes the carrying out of practices of apartheid or other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity.[529]

[520] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 3(j).
[521] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[522] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[523] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 147.
[524] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
[525] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[526] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1).
[527] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(1).
[528] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Prácticas de segregación racial".
[529] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(1)(i).

616. Hungary's Criminal Code as amended punishes anyone who commits the crime of apartheid.[530]

617. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of AP I are punishable offences.[531]

618. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code provides that apartheid and any other form of racial discrimination involving outrages upon personal dignity constitutes a war crime.[532]

619. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, the practice of apartheid or other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity is a war crime.[533]

620. Mali's Penal Code states that apartheid is a crime against humanity.[534]

621. Moldova's Penal Code punishes "grave breaches of international humanitarian law committed during international and non-international armed conflicts".[535]

622. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit, in an international armed conflict, "the following acts if committed intentionally and in violation of the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol (I): . . . practices of apartheid and other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity, based on racial discrimination".[536]

623. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach . . . of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[537]

624. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, crimes against humanity include the crime defined in Article 7(1)(j) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[538]

625. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides for the punishment of "anyone who during international or internal armed conflicts or in peacetime carries out practices of racial segregation or other practices based on racial discrimination which involve outrages upon personal dignity".[539]

626. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, it is a war crime to carry out against persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977 "practices of apartheid or other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity".[540]

[530] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 157.
[531] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[532] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(17).
[533] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(17).
[534] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 29(j).
[535] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 391.
[536] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(2)(d)(iii), see also Article 4(1)(j) (apartheid as a crime against humanity).
[537] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[538] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 10(2).
[539] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 448.
[540] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(19).

627. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[541]
628. Peru's Penal Code punishes the carrying out of practices of apartheid.[542]
629. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who carries out practices of apartheid.[543]
630. Spain's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who orders or carries out practices of racial segregation or other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity.[544]
631. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who orders or carries out practices of apartheid or other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity based on racial discrimination.[545]
632. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(j) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[546]
633. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of . . . [AP I]".[547]
634. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Articles 7(1)(j) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[548]
635. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of . . . [AP I]".[549]

National Case-law
636. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
637. In 1979, during a debate in the UN General Assembly, Bulgaria stated that under international law, the practice of apartheid was a crime against humanity.[550]

[541] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[542] Peru, Penal Code as amended (1991), Article 319.
[543] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(1).
[544] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611(6).
[545] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(1).
[546] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[547] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[548] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[549] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).
[550] Bulgaria, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/34/PV.55, 6 November 1979, § 85.

638. In 1981, during a debate in the UN General Assembly, Kenya recalled that the practice of apartheid was considered a crime against humanity by international law and the international community.[551]
639. In 1973, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on a draft convention on apartheid, Romania stated that "in light of the references to apartheid in the United Nations instruments and resolutions mentioned in the preamble to the draft Convention, it could be said that apartheid was already regarded in international law as constituting a crime against humanity".[552]
640. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 85 AP I to be part of customary international law.[553]
641. In 1973, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly on a draft convention on apartheid, the USSR stated that apartheid was recognised as a crime against humanity in international law and was thus binding on South Africa.[554]
642. In 1980, during a debate in the UN General Assembly, the UAE stated that apartheid was "a crime against the human conscience and a serious violation of the human principles and values on which civilization is based".[555]
643. In 1981, during a debate in the UN General Assembly, Vietnam declared that the practice of apartheid was considered a crime against humanity by international law.[556]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

644. In two resolutions on South Africa adopted in 1976 and 1980, the UN Security Council affirmed that "the policy of apartheid is a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind".[557]
645. In several resolutions adopted between 1966 and 1979, the UN General Assembly categorised the practice of apartheid, and all forms of racial discrimination, as crimes against humanity. It also condemned the policies of oppression, racial discrimination and segregation in Southern Rhodesia as crimes against [551] Kenya, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/35/PV.108, 5 March 1981, § 101.

[552] Romania, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.2004, 23 October 1973, § 7.
[553] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.6.
[554] USSR, Statement before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/SR.2004, 23 October 1973, § 45.
[555] UAE, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/35/PV.56, 11 November 1980, § 69.
[556] Vietnam, Statement before the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/35/PV.106, 4 March 1981, § 29.
[557] UN Security Council, Res. 392, 19 June 1976, § 3; Res. 473, 13 June 1980, § 3.

humanity and referred to apartheid as "a crime against the conscience and dignity of mankind".[558]

646. In resolutions adopted in 1992 and 1993, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that apartheid was a crime against humanity.[559]

647. In 1974, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights established a Working Group on contemporary forms of slavery to review developments in various fields, including practices of apartheid.[560]

Other International Organisations

648. No practice was found.

International Conferences

649. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed dismay and condemnation that "gross and systematic violations and situations that constitute serious obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights continue to occur in all parts of the world, [including] . . . apartheid".[561]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

650. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

651. The ICRC 's commentary on Article 85 AP I notes that "the practices concerned were already grave breaches of the Conventions, whatever their motive; this is simply a special mention of reprehensible conduct for which the motive is particularly shocking".[562]

652. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the following war crime, when committed wilfully and in violation of international humanitarian law, be subject to the jurisdiction of the [558] UN General Assembly, Res. 2189 (XXI), 13 December 1966, § 6; Res. 2326 (XXII), 16 December 1967, § 5; Res. 2262 (XXII), 3 November 1967, § 2; Res. 33/183 B, 24 January 1979, preamble; Res. 34/93 A, 12 December 1979, preamble.

[559] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/19, 21 February 1992, § 1; Res. 1993/11, 26 February 1993, § 1.

[560] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Report of the Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery on its 26th Session, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/2001/30, 16 July 2001, § 1.

[561] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(30).

[562] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 3515.

Court: "practices of apartheid, and other inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity, based on racial discrimination".[563]

VI. Other Practice

653. No practice was found.

C. Violence to Life

Note: For practice concerning attacks against civilians, see Chapter 1, section A. For practice concerning attacks on persons hors de combat, see Chapter 15, section B.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

654. Article 6 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that:

> The following acts, or any of them, are crimes coming within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility:
>
> ...
>
> (b) "War crimes:" namely, violations of the laws or customs of war. Such violations shall include, but not be limited to, murder ... of civilian population of or in occupied territory, murder ... of prisoners of war or persons on the seas ...
>
> (c) "Crimes against humanity:" namely, murder, extermination ... and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war.

655. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions prohibits at any time and in any place whatsoever "violence to life and person, in particular murder of all kinds" with respect to "persons taking no active part in hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause".

656. Article 12, second paragraph, GC I provides, with respect to wounded and sick members of the armed forces in the field, that "any attempts upon their lives, or violence to their persons, shall be strictly prohibited; in particular, they shall not be murdered or exterminated".

657. Article 12, second paragraph, GC II provides, with respect to wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the armed forces at sea, that "any attempts upon their lives, or violence to their persons, shall be strictly prohibited; in particular, they shall not be murdered or exterminated".

[563] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, § 1(c)(iii).

658. Article 13, first paragraph, GC III provides that "any unlawful act or omission by the Detaining Power causing death . . . of a prisoner of war in its custody is prohibited".
659. Article 42 GC III provides that:

> The use of weapons against prisoners of war, especially against those who are escaping or attempting to escape, shall constitute an extreme measure, which shall always be preceded by warnings appropriate to the circumstances.

660. Article 27, first paragraph, GC IV provides that protected persons shall be "protected especially against all acts of violence".
661. Article 32 GC IV provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties specifically agree that each of them is prohibited from taking any measure of such a character as to cause the . . . extermination of protected persons in their hands. This prohibition applies not only to murder . . . but also to any other measures of brutality whether applied by civilian or military agents.

662. According to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV, "wilful killing" is a grave breach of these instruments.
663. According to Article 2 of the 1948 Genocide Convention, "killing members of the group" constitutes genocide when "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".
664. Article 2 of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone's right to life shall be protected by law". It also states that "deprivation of life shall not be regarded as inflicted in contravention of this Article when it results from the use of force which is no more than absolutely necessary in action lawfully taken for the purpose of quelling a riot or insurrection". Article 15(2) provides that "no derogation from Article 2, except in respect of deaths resulting from lawful acts of war, shall be made under this provision".
665. Paragraph I(3) of the Annex to the 1953 Panmunjon Armistice Agreement (establishing a Neutral Nations Repatriation Commission) provides that "no violence to their persons [of prisoners of war] . . . shall be permitted in any manner for any purpose whatsoever".
666. Article 6(1) of the 1966 ICCPR states that "every human being has the inherent right to life. This right shall be protected by law. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life." This right is non-derogable under Article 4(2) ICCPR.
667. Article 4 of the 1969 ACHR provides that "every person has the right to have his life respected . . . No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life." This right is non-derogable under Article 27(2) ACHR.
668. Article 8(a) and (b) of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Civilian Personnel provides that all captured military personnel and all captured civilian personnel "shall be protected against all violence to life and person, in particular against murder in any form".

669. Article 75(2)(a) AP I provides that "violence to the life . . . of persons", in particular "murder", is prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever. Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[564]

670. Article 4(2)(a) AP II provides that "violence to the life . . . of persons", in particular "murder", is prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever. Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[565]

671. Article 4 of the 1981 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "human beings are inviolable. Every human being shall be entitled to respect for his life and the integrity of his person. No one may be arbitrarily deprived of this right." The ACHPR does not provide for any derogation in a state of emergency.

672. According to Article 1(1) of the 1995 Agreement on Human Rights annexed to the Dayton Accords, "the Parties shall secure to all persons within their jurisdiction the right to life".

673. Pursuant to Article 6(a) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "killing members of the group" constitutes genocide when "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".

674. Pursuant to Article 7(1)(a) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "murder" constitutes a crime against humanity "when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack".

675. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(a)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "wilful killing" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

676. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(c)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "violence to life and person, in particular murder of all kinds," constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

677. Article 3(a) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that:

> The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977, [which include] violence to life . . . in particular murder.

Other Instruments

678. Article 23 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "private citizens are no longer murdered".

679. Article 44 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "all wanton violence committed against persons in the invaded country . . . all killing of such inhabitants, are prohibited".

[564] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[565] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

680. Article 56 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "a prisoner of war is subject to no punishment for being a public enemy, nor is any revenge wreaked upon him by the intentional infliction of . . . death, or any other barbarity".
681. Article 61 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "troops that give no quarter have no right to kill enemies already disabled on the ground, or prisoners captured by other troops".
682. Article 71 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that:

> Whoever intentionally inflicts additional wounds on an enemy already wholly disabled, or kills such an enemy, or who orders or encourages soldiers to do so, shall suffer death, if duly convicted, whether he belongs to the Army of the United States, or is an enemy captured after having committed his misdeed.

683. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution, including murder, massacres and putting hostages to death.
684. Article II of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that:

> 1. Each of the following acts is recognized as a crime:
> . . .
> (b) War crimes. Atrocities or offenses against persons or property constituting violations of the laws or customs of war, including but not limited to, murder . . . of civilian population from occupied territory, murder . . . of prisoners of war or persons on the seas . . .
> (c) Crimes against humanity. Atrocities and offenses, including but not limited to murder, extermination . . . or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population.

685. Article 5(c) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) established individual responsibility for crimes against humanity, including "murder, extermination . . . and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war".
686. Article 2 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person".
687. Principle VI of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles adopted by the ILC provides that:

> The crimes hereinafter set out are punishable as crimes under international law:
> . . .
> (b) War crimes: Violations of the laws or customs of war include, but are not limited to, murder . . . of civilian population of or in occupied territory, murder . . . of prisoners of war, of persons on the seas . . .
> (c) Crimes against humanity: Murder, extermination . . . and other inhuman acts done against any civilian population.

688. Rule 4 of the 1950 UN Command Rules and Regulations gave to Military Commissions of the UN Command in Korea jurisdiction over various offences, including "murder of civilians or prisoners of war".

689. Paragraph 5 of the 1974 UN Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict provides that "all forms of repression . . . of women and children, including . . . shooting . . . committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories shall be considered criminal".

690. The 1990 Basic Principles on the Use of Force and Firearms by Law Enforcement Officials provide that:

> 2. Governments and law enforcement agencies should develop a range of means as broad as possible and equip law enforcement officials with various types of weapons and ammunition that would allow for a differentiated use of force and firearms. These should include the development of non-lethal incapacitating weapons for use in appropriate situations, with a view to increasingly restraining the application of means capable of causing death or injury to persons. For the same purpose, it should also be possible for law enforcement officials to be equipped with self-defensive equipment such as shields, helmets, bullet-proof vests and bullet-proof means of transportation, in order to decrease the need to use weapons of any kind.
> . . .
> 4. Law enforcement officials, in carrying out their duty, shall, as far as possible, apply non-violent means before resorting to the use of force and firearms. They may use force and firearms only if other means remain ineffective or without any promise of achieving the intended result.
> 5. Whenever the lawful use of force and firearms is unavoidable, law enforcement officials shall:
> (a) Exercise restraint in such use and act in proportion to the seriousness of the offence and the legitimate objective to be achieved;
> (b) Minimize damage and injury, and respect and preserve human life;
> . . .
> 8. Exceptional circumstances such as internal political instability or any other public emergency may not be invoked to justify any departure from these basic principles.

691. Article 2(a) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "life is a God-given gift and the right to life is guaranteed to every human being. It is the duty of individuals, societies and states to protect this right from any violation, and it is prohibited to take away life except for a Shari'ah prescribed reason."

692. According to Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "acts of inhumanity, cruelty or barbarity directed against life . . . in particular wilful killing" are considered as exceptionally serious war crimes and as serious violations of the principles and rules of international law applicable in armed conflict.

693. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
694. Under paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the parties committed themselves to respect and ensure respect for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Paragraph 2.3 requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
695. Under Article 2(a) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute wilful killing of persons protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention. Article 5(a) provides that murder, "when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population" constitutes a crime against humanity. Article 4(2)(a) provides that killing members of "a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, when committed with intent to destroy it, in whole or in part, as such" constitutes genocide.
696. Article 2(2)(a) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that killing members of "a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, when committed with intent to destroy it, in whole or in part, as such" constitutes genocide. Article 3(a) provides that murder, "when committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds", constitutes a crime against humanity. Under Article 4(a), the Tribunal is competent to prosecute violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including "violence to life . . . in particular murder".
697. Article 18(a)–(b) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind states that "murder" and "extermination" are crimes against humanity. Article 20(a) provides that "wilful killing", committed in an international armed conflict and in violation of international humanitarian law, is a war crime. Under Article 20(f)(i), "violence to the life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder", committed in violation of IHL applicable in armed conflict not of an international character, is a war crime.
698. Article 2(4) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote the right to life, especially against massacres, and the right not to be subject to campaigns of violence against one's person. Article 3(1) of Part IV further provides that violence to life shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat. Article 4(1) of Part IV adds that "persons hors de combat . . . are entitled to respect for their lives".
699. According to Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, "violence to life" or "murder" of persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations and persons placed hors de combat is prohibited at any time and in any place.

700. Article 1 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone has the right to life".

701. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(a)(i), "wilful killing" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts. According to Section 6(1)(c)(i), "violence to life and person, in particular murder of all kinds," constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

702. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[566]

703. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "wilful killing" is a war crime and a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions. It also stipulates that "violence to life" is prohibited against persons who are in the power of a party to the conflict and who do not benefit from a more favourable treatment under the Geneva Conventions.[567]

704. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that wilful killing is a war crime which warrants the institution of criminal proceedings.[568]

705. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "attempts upon the lives [of the wounded and sick and shipwrecked], and violence against them is prohibited. They shall not be murdered." It further states that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions which warrants institution of criminal proceedings.[569]

706. Belgium's Law of War Manual prohibits, in internal armed conflicts, "attacks on the life and physical integrity" of "persons who do not take a direct part in hostilities, including members of the armed forces who have laid down their arms and persons placed hors de combat ".[570] It further states that wilful killing is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[571]

707. Benin's Military Manual provides that all persons hors de combat and who do not take a direct part in hostilities shall be entitled to respect for their lives and physical integrity.[572]

[566] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 8.001.
[567] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 4.15 and 8.03.
[568] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1305(a).
[569] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 990 and 1315(a) and (n), see also § 945.
[570] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), pp. 16–17.
[571] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[572] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 4 and Fascicule III, p. 4.

708. The Instructions to the Muslim Fighter issued by the ARB iH in Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1993 states that:

> Killing of women, children and priests who do not participate at all in the war and who do not directly or indirectly assist the enemy is forbidden . . . These are general rules which are binding for our soldiers. However, if the commanding officer assesses that the situation and the general interest demand a different course of action, then the soldiers are duty-bound to obey their commanding officer . . . It is also left to the military command's discretion to decide whether it is more useful or in the general interest to free, exchange or liquidate enemy prisoners of war.[573]

709. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits attacks on the lives and physical integrity of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including murder.[574]

710. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits attacks on the lives and physical integrity of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including murder.[575]

711. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "an obligation is given to safeguard the life of [prisoners of war]".[576]

712. Canada's LOAC Manual states that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and provides that the following acts are prohibited: assassination, attempts upon the lives of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, killing of prisoners of war, and murder of persons protected by GC IV, AP I and AP II.[577] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[578]

713. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL states that "persons hors de combat and who no longer participate directly in hostilities have the right to respect for their lives and physical integrity".[579] It also states that "captured persons and civilian persons who are in the power of the adverse Party have the right to respect for their life".[580]

714. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, the lives of all persons hors de combat shall be respected.[581] With regard to internal armed conflict, the manual contains the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[582]

[573] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Instructions to the Muslim Fighter (1993), § c.
[574] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[575] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[576] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), § 142.
[577] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 6-3, § 25, p. 9-2, § 18, p. 10-3, § 26, p. 11-4, § 33, p. 11-7, § 63(a), p. 17-3, § 21 and p. 16-2, § 12, see also p. 16-4, § 21(j) (genocide as a violation of the Hague Conventions and customary law).
[578] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-2, § 10(a).
[579] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 1.
[580] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 4.
[581] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), pp. 20, 22 and 29.
[582] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 42.

715. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual and Instructors' Manual provide that the right to life is a human right which the armed forces must respect.[583]

716. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits attacks on the lives and physical integrity of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including murder.[584]

717. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that wilful killing is a grave breach of IHL and a war crime.[585]

718. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL requires that the armed forces protect the lives and physical and mental integrity of persons hors de combat, the wounded and sick, who must not be killed or wounded.[586]

719. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that the "killing without just cause" of prisoners of war, civilian inhabitants of occupied territories, the wounded and sick, enemies hors de combat and the shipwrecked is a war crime.[587]

720. In El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces, one of the ten basic rules is to respect human life. In a chapter devoted to the "right to life", the manual contains the following provisions: "human life is the most sacred thing of any person; nobody can deprive someone arbitrarily of his life".[588]

721. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended prohibits attacks on the lives and physical integrity of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including murder.[589]

722. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that all persons hors de combat have the right to respect for their lives.[590] It further states that "wilful killing" is a war crime.[591]

723. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "it is prohibited to . . . kill or injure an adversary . . . who is hors de combat". It further states that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the law of armed conflict and is a war crime.[592]

724. France's LOAC Manual provides that "attacks upon the life and physical and mental well-being of persons, such as murder" constitute war crimes.[593] The manual also states that wilful killing and attempts on the physical integrity or health of the wounded and sick are war crimes.[594] It further stipulates that one of the three main principles common to IHL and human rights is the principle of inviolability, which guarantees every human being the right to respect for his or her life.[595] It also provides that the execution of hostages is [583] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 10; Instructors' Manual (1999), pp. 8 and 21.

[584] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[585] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), Annex 9, p. 56.
[586] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), §§ 1–3.
[587] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5.
[588] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), pp. 3 and 6.
[589] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[590] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[591] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[592] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), pp. 2 and 7.
[593] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 45, see also p. 44 (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[594] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 45.
[595] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 50–52.

expressly prohibited by the law of armed conflict and has been a war crime since 1949.[596]

725. Germany's Military Manual provides that attempts on the lives of civilians and the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, or violence to their persons, are prohibited.[597] It lists "wilful killing" among the grave breaches of IHL.[598]

726. Germany's Soldiers' Manual provides that any attack on the lives or persons of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked is prohibited".[599]

727. Hungary's Military Manual states that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and a war crime.[600]

728. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "it is strictly forbidden to cause (by act or omission) the death of a prisoner of war after he has surrendered or to put him in a situation that endangers his health and physical integrity".[601]

729. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territories, civilians shall not be subject to brutality and violence against their lives.[602] It also provides that wilful killing and attacks on the physical and mental integrity of any person in the power of a belligerent, genocide and wilful killing of prisoners of war, the wounded and sick are war crimes.[603]

730. Kenya's LOAC Manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[604]

731. South Korea's Military Regulation 187 provides that "killing non-combatants" is a war crime.[605]

732. Madagascar's Military Manual states that one of the seven fundamental rules of IHL is that persons hors de combat and who do not take a direct part in hostilities are entitled to respect for their lives and their mental and physical integrity.[606]

733. Mali's Army Regulations prohibits attacks on the lives and physical integrity of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including murder.[607]

734. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits attacks on the lives and physical integrity of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including murder.[608]

735. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "every attempt on the life of the wounded and sick is prohibited. In particular, they may not

[596] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 101.
[597] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 502, 601 and 608.
[598] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[599] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 5.
[600] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 90.
[601] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 51.
[602] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. 1, § 41(e).
[603] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. 1, § 84.
[604] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, pp. 5 and 6.
[605] South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), Article 4.2.
[606] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 22 and p. 91, Rule 1.
[607] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[608] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).

be killed or exterminated".[609] It further restates the prohibition of violence directed against a protected person's life, health, physical or psychological well-being, such as murder as found in Article 75 AP I.[610] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates the prohibition of violence to life and person, in particular murder, as found in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II.[611]

736. New Zealand's Military Manual prohibits killing and provides that "self-preservation or military necessity can never provide an excuse for the murder of prisoners of war".[612] It further states that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[613] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that violence to life and person of those protected by common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, in particular murder of all kinds, is prohibited at any time and in any place.[614]

737. Nicaragua's Military Manual states that, in both internal and international armed conflicts as well as in situations of internal troubles, the right to life is inviolable and inherent to the human being.[615]

738. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct provides that soldiers who surrender, pregnant women and children must not be killed.[616]

739. Nigeria's Military Manual refers to Article 12 GC I, which "prohibits any attempt upon the lives [of the wounded and sick], or violence to their persons, and in particular to wound or to exterminate them".[617]

740. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that attempts on the lives of the wounded and sick and unlawful acts or omissions endangering the lives of POW s are prohibited.[618] It also specifies that wilful killing of all protected persons is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and is considered as a serious war crime.[619]

741. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces states that one of the 10 basic rules is to respect human life. It adds that "human life is sacred for every person" and that the lives of the wounded or of persons who surrender must be respected. These rules must be respected by the armed and police forces.[620]

609 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VI-1/VI-2.
610 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-3.
611 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. XI-1 and XI-4.
612 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 919(1).
613 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1137(1), 1702(1) and 1704(2-c), see also § 1704(5) (genocide as an offence against the law of armed conflict and a war crime).
614 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1807(1).
615 Nicaragua, Military Manual (1982), Articles 3, 7.1, 8 and 14(31).
616 Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(a), (b) and (c).
617 Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 13, § 4.
618 Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), §§ 35 and 37.
619 Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(a), see also § 6(12) and (20) (killing of spies, saboteurs and partisans, and genocide).
620 Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), p. 3, § 2 and p. 7.

742. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces states that respect for a person's life and mental and physical integrity is one of the three principles common to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, which represent the minimum level of protection to which every human being is entitled.[621]

743. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines provides that "prisoners must be respected. It is prohibited to . . . kill them."[622]

744. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that persons hors de combat and who do not take a direct part in hostilities and captured combatants have the right to respect for their lives.[623] It also states that the "killing and injuring of an adversary who surrenders or who is hors de combat is prohibited".[624]

745. Russia's Military Manual prohibits violence to the lives and physical integrity, in particular murder of all kinds, of war victims, namely the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, POW s and the civilian population.[625]

746. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits attacks on the lives and physical integrity of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including murder.[626]

747. Senegal's IHL Manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and prohibits attacks on life.[627]

748. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[628]

749. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that a person who has participated in hostilities and who does not benefit from POW status and who does not benefit from a better treatment under GC IV is entitled to a minimum of guarantees, inter alia, "the prohibition at all times and in all places of the following acts, whether they are committed by civilians or soldiers: attacks on life, health and physical integrity, in particular homicide".[629] According to the manual, "wilful killing" committed by medical personnel is a war crime.[630] It also states that soldiers must respect the lives of surrendered or captured combatants.[631]

750. Switzerland's Military Manual and Teaching Manual provide that enemy civilians shall not be murdered.[632]

751. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that it is prohibited to make an attempt on the lives of the wounded and sick.[633] It further provides that wilful killing of protected persons (wounded and sick, medical personnel, prisoners

621 Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (1994), § 24.
622 Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), § 6(4).
623 Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 33, § 1.
624 Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 32, § 2.
625 Russia, Military Manual (1990), §§ 7 and 8.
626 Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(2).
627 Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 4 and 23.
628 South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 40.
629 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.c.
630 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.2.a.(2).
631 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 7.3.a.(7) and 10.8.f.(2).
632 Switzerland, Military Manual (1984), p. 34; Teaching Manual (1986), p. 43.
633 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 69 and 147.

of war, inhabitants of occupied territory and enemy civilians on national territory) is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions. Examples provided include "killing prisoners of war or letting them die of starvation".[634]

752. Togo's Military Manual provides that all persons hors de combat and who do not take a direct part in hostilities shall be entitled to respect for their lives and physical integrity.[635]

753. Uganda's Code of Conduct provides: "Never kill any member of the public or any captured prisoners, as the guns should only be reserved for armed enemies or opponents."[636]

754. Uganda's Operational Code of Conduct states that "the offence of disobeying lawful orders shall include . . . unauthorised killing of prisoners of war".[637] It also stipulates that "the following crimes shall cause an immediate arrest of an officer by any soldier . . . murder".[638]

755. The UK Military Manual provides that "a commander may not put his prisoners of war to death" that "it is unlawful for a commander to kill prisoners of war on grounds of self-preservation" and that "any attempts on [the lives of the wounded and sick] . . . are strictly prohibited".[639] The manual also states that it is prohibited to "take any measure of such a character as to cause . . . extermination of protected persons".[640] It further states that wilful killing of persons protected by the 1949 Geneva Conventions is a grave breach of these instruments.[641]

756. The UK LOAC Manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and provides that "murder or violence to the person are strictly prohibited".[642]

757. The US Field Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[643]

758. The US Air Force Pamphlet stipulates that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[644]

759. The US Soldier's Manual states that "an order to commit a crime such as murder . . . is in violation of the laws of war".[645]

760. The US Instructor's Guide provides that violating life and person, in particular murder, is a capital offence prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever. It specifically prohibits murder of prisoners.[646] It also states that "killing, without proper legal trial, spies or other captured persons who have committed hostile acts" is a war crime.[647]

634 Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 192.
635 Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 4 and Fascicule III, p. 4.
636 Uganda, Code of Conduct (1986), Rule 4.
637 Uganda, Operational Code of Conduct (1986), Rule 17(i).
638 Uganda, Operational Code of Conduct (1986), Rule 26(a).
639 UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 137 and 339.
640 UK, Military Manual (1958), § 549.
641 UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(a).
642 UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 2.
643 US, Field Manual (1956), § 502.
644 US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-2(b).
645 US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 26.
646 US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 8 and 9.
647 US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 14.

761. The US Naval Handbook provides that the "killing without just cause" of prisoners of war, civilian inhabitants of occupied territories, the wounded and sick, enemies hors de combat and the shipwrecked is a war crime.[648]

National Legislation

762. Albania's Military Penal Code criminalises killing as a war crime.[649]

763. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice provides that acts of "wilful killing" of protected persons is a criminal offence.[650]

764. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "murder" committed during an armed conflict constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[651]

765. Australia's War Crimes Act provides that "murder and massacres" and "putting hostages to death" are war crimes.[652]

766. Australia's War Crimes Act as amended identifies murder and manslaughter as "serious war crimes".[653]

767. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[654]

768. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute: "genocide by killing"; crimes against humanity, including murder when committed "as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against a civilian population"; and war crimes, including "wilful killing" of a person protected under the Geneva Conventions or AP I in international armed conflicts, and murder of persons who are hors de combat in non-international armed conflicts.[655]

769. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, "violence to life" and "murder" are acts prohibited against civilian persons and prisoners of war.[656]

770. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that "wilful killing" of protected persons is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[657]

771. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that murder of the civilian population, murder of prisoners of war and the killing of detainees is a

[648] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[649] Albania, Military Penal Code (1995), Articles 73–75.
[650] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 289, introducing a new Article 873 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[651] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.1(1), see also Article 392 (systematic execution without trial as a crime against humanity) and Article 393 (killing as part of a genocide campaign).
[652] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3.
[653] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Sections 6(1) and 7(1).
[654] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[655] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.3, 268.8, 268.24 and 268.70.
[656] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 17 and 21.
[657] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 115.4, see also Article 103 (genocide as a crime against peace and the security of humanity).

war crime.[658] It adds that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[659]

772. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[660]

773. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that "wilful killing" of persons that have laid down their arms or are defenceless, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, sanitary and religious personnel, prisoners of war, the civilian population in an occupied territory or in the conflict zone, or other persons enjoying international protection, is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[661]

774. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that "wilful killing" constitutes a crime under international law.[662]

775. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that killing of civilians, prisoners of war, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked is a war crime.[663] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[664]

776. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[665]

777. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that ordering and committing acts of murder of the wounded, sick, shipwrecked, medical personnel, prisoners of war and the civilian population is a war crime.[666]

778. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that "wilful killing" is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[667]

779. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects

[658] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(d).
[659] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[660] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[661] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(3).
[662] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(1), see also Article 1(1)(1) (killing as a part of a genocide campaign) and Article 1(1)(2) (killing as a crime against humanity).
[663] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 154(1), 155 and 156.
[664] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433(1), 434 and 435.
[665] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[666] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 410(a), 411(a) and 412(a).
[667] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(a) and (C)(a), see also Article 2(a) (genocide) and Article 3(a) (crimes against humanity).

who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 . . . which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[668]

780. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions] . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[669]

781. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes defined in Articles 6, 7 and 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[670]

782. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that acts of planned slaughter and murder constitute war crimes.[671]

783. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on anyone who, during an armed conflict, carries out or orders the carrying out of the killing of a protected person.[672]

784. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended provides that in times of war, violence to or serious injury of the civilian population is an offence.[673]

785. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, killing members of an ethnical, racial or religious group, as such, with intent to destroy the group, in whole or in part, constitutes a crime of genocide.[674] Moreover, "murder", when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, is a crime against humanity.[675] The Act further defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[676]

786. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[677]

787. Under the Penal Code as amended of Côte d'Ivoire, organising, ordering or carrying out, in time of war or occupation, murder and attacks on the physical integrity of the civilian population constitute a "crime against the civilian population". The same applies in relation to prisoners of war and internees.[678]

668 Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.
669 Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
670 Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
671 China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3, §1.
672 Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 135.
673 DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 472.
674 Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 1.
675 Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
676 Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
677 Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
678 Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Articles 138(1) and 139(1).

788. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that the killing of the civilian population, the wounded, sick, shipwrecked, medical or religious personnel or prisoners of war is a war crime.[679]

789. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person, in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[680]

790. Egypt's Penal Code and Military Criminal Code prohibit homicide of the wounded.[681]

791. El Salvador's Penal Code includes murder as part of a genocide campaign in its list of crimes against humanity.[682]

792. Under Estonia's Penal Code, the killing of civilians, prisoners of war and interned civilians is a war crime.[683]

793. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, the organisation, ordering or killing of civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked or prisoners and interned persons constitutes a war crime.[684]

794. Finland's Revised Penal Code provides for the punishment of acts of killing perpetrated as a part of the crime of genocide.[685]

795. Under France's Penal Code, "killing members of the group" constitutes genocide when "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".[686]

796. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, in international or internal armed conflicts, it is a crime to wilfully kill persons not taking part in hostilities, persons hors de combat, the wounded and sick, prisoners of war, civilians and the civilian population in an occupied territory or zone of combat, refugees and stateless persons, as well as other persons enjoying international protection.[687] The Code also states that, any war crime provided for by the 1998 ICC Statute, which is not explicitly mentioned in the Code, such as violence to life of those placed hors de combat by detention in non-international armed conflicts, is a war crime.[688]

797. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in connection with an international or

[679] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158, 159 and 160.
[680] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).
[681] Egypt, Penal Code (1937), Article 251 bis ; Military Criminal Code (1966), Article 137.
[682] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 361.
[683] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), §§ 97 and 99, see also § 89 (killing as a crime against humanity) and § 90 (killing and physical elimination as part of a genocide campaign).
[684] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Articles 282(a), 283(a) and 284(a), see also Article 281 (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[685] Finland, Revised Penal Code (1995), Chapter 11, Section 6.
[686] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 211-1, see also Article 212-1 (massive and summary executions as a crime against humanity).
[687] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(2)(a), see also Article 407 (killing as a part of a genocide campaign) and Article 408 (killing as a crime against humanity).
[688] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 413(d).

non-international armed conflict, "kills a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law".[689]

798. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, the killing of a member of a national, ethnic, racial or religious group, as a part of a genocide campaign, constitutes a "crime against the freedom of peoples".[690]

799. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[691]

800. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are punishable offences.[692] In addition, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3, of Articles 12 GC I, 12 GC II, 13 GC III, 27 and 32 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(2)(a) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2)(a) AP II, are also punishable offences.[693]

801. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law includes in its definition of war crimes the following acts: "murder of [the] civilian population of or in occupied territories; murder of . . . prisoners of war and persons on the seas . . . ".[694]

802. Under Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, wilful killing of a protected person is a war crime.[695]

803. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[696]

804. Kenya's Constitution provides that no person shall be deprived of life intentionally, except as the result of a lawful act of war.[697]

805. Under Latvia's Criminal Code, committing an act of murder constitutes a war crime.[698]

806. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, "wilful killing" constitutes a war crime.[699]

[689] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(1), see also § 6(1)(1) (killing as a part of a genocide campaign) and § 7(1)(1) (killing as a crime against humanity).
[690] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 155(1)(a).
[691] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[692] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[693] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[694] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b) (this section also considers killing as a crime of genocide, and murder and extermination as crimes against humanity).
[695] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(1).
[696] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[697] Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 71.
[698] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Section 74, see also Section 71 (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[699] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(1).

807. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, the killing of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war, civilians or of other persons in occupied or annexed territories and combat zones is a war crime.[700]
808. Under Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches, "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[701]
809. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi, commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[702]
810. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[703]
811. Under Mali's Penal Code, wilful killing is a war crime.[704]
812. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[705]
813. Mexico's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of the killing, as a part of a genocide campaign, of a member of a national, ethnic, racial or religious group.[706]
814. Moldova's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone ordering and carrying out the killing of protected persons or executing them without due process.[707]
815. Under Mozambique's Military Criminal Law, killing any member of the civilian population is a criminal offence.[708]
816. Myanmar's Defence Service Act provides that:

> Any person subject to this law who commits an offence of murder against any person not subject to military law, or culpable of homicide not amounting to murder against such a person . . . shall not be deemed to be guilty of an offence against this act and shall not be tried by a court-martial unless he commits any of the said offences . . . while in active service.[709]

817. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands includes "murder and massacres" and "putting hostages to death" in its list of war crimes.[710]

[700] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 333.
[701] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1(1).
[702] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[703] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[704] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(a), see also Article 29(a) (killing and extermination as crimes against humanity) and Article 30(a) (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[705] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[706] Mexico, Penal Code as amended (1931), Article 149 bis.
[707] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 137, see also Article 135(a) (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[708] Mozambique, Military Criminal Law (1987), Article 85(a).
[709] Myanmar, Defence Services Act (1959), Section 72.
[710] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.

818. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit "in the case of an international armed conflict, one of the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions", including "intentional killing".[711] Furthermore, it is also a crime to commit, "in the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, a violation of Article 3 common to all of the Geneva Conventions", including "violence to life and person, in particular killing of all kinds" of persons taking no active part in the hostilities.[712]

819. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions ... is guilty of an indictable offence".[713]

820. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, genocide includes the crimes defined in Article 6(a) of the 1998 ICC Statute, crimes against humanity include the crimes defined in Article 7(1)(a) of the Statute, and war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(a)(i) and (c)(i) of the Statute.[714]

821. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of the wilful killing of prisoners of war, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked and civilians.[715]

822. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, wilful killing of persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977 is a war crime.[716]

823. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation ... whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[717]

824. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[718]

825. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[719]

826. Paraguay's Penal Code provides for the punishment for "anyone who, in violation of international law in times of war, armed conflict or military [711] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(1)(a), see also Article 3(1)(a) (killing members of a group as part of a genocide campaign) and Article 4(1)(a) and (b) (intentional killing and extermination as crimes against humanity).

[712] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 6(1)(a).
[713] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[714] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Sections 9(2), 10(2) and 11(2).
[715] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 54.
[716] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(1), see also Article 208.1 (killing as part of a genocide campaign) and Article 208.2 (summary and systematic executions as crimes against humanity).
[717] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[718] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[719] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).

occupation, commits against the civilian population, the wounded and sick, or prisoners of war an act of . . . homicide."[720]

827. Under the War Crimes Trial Executive Order of the Philippines applicable to acts committed during the Second World War, "murder of civilian population of or in occupied territory; murder . . . of prisoners of war or internees or persons on the seas or elsewhere" are violations of the laws and customs of war.[721] It adds that "murder, extermination [of] . . . civilian populations before or during [the Second World War]" constitutes a war crime whether or not in violation of the local laws.[722]

828. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, kills persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection.[723]

829. Portugal's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in violation of international law, in times of war, armed conflict or occupation, commits wilful killing of the civilian population, the wounded and sick or prisoners of war.[724]

830. Romania's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who kills the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, members of civil medical services, the Red Cross or similar organisations, prisoners of war, or any person in the hands of the adverse party.[725]

831. Russia's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of the killing or extermination of a national, ethnic, racial or religious group when conducted as a part of a genocide campaign.[726]

832. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[727]

833. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[728]

834. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, the killing of civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical and religious personnel is a war crime.[729]

[720] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 320(1), see also Article 319 (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[721] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), Part II(b)(2).
[722] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), Part II(b)(3).
[723] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 123(1), see also Article 118(1) (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[724] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Article 241(1)(a).
[725] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358.
[726] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 357.
[727] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[728] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[729] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 374(1), 375 and 376.

835. Spain's Military Criminal Code punishes military personnel for "wilful killing" of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war or the civilian population.[730]

836. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, (a) a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions; or (b) a breach of common Article 3 of the Conventions, is guilty of an indictable offence".[731]

837. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides that in international or internal armed conflicts, "wilful killing" of protected persons is a crime.[732]

838. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(a) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(a) of the Statute, and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(i) and (c)(i) of the Statute.[733]

839. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda, commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[734]

840. Ukraine's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of the "wilful killing" of civilians or prisoners of war.[735]

841. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[736]

842. Under the UK War Crimes Act, proceedings for murder, manslaughter or culpable homicide may be brought against a person in the UK irrespective of his or her nationality if that offence, inter alia, constituted a violation of the laws and customs of war.[737]

843. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(a) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(a) of the Statute and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(i) and (c)(i) of the Statute.[738]

844. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I established military commissions which had jurisdiction

730 Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 76.
731 Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1).
732 Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(2)(a), see also Article 398 (killing and extermination as a part of a genocide campaign).
733 Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
734 Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
735 Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 408, see also Article 442 (killing and extermination as a part of a genocide campaign).
736 UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
737 UK, War Crimes Act (1991), Article 1.
738 UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).

over offences such as extermination, murder of prisoners of war or persons on the seas, hostages or civilians of or in an occupied territory.[739]

845. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as the murder of the civilian population of or in occupied territory, prisoners of war or internees or persons on the seas or elsewhere.[740]

846. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[741]

847. Under Uzbekistan's Criminal Code, ordering or carrying out the physical extermination of prisoners of war or the civilian population constitutes a violation of the laws and customs of war.[742]

848. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[743]

849. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in time of war, orders or directly commits the killing of civilians, the wounded or prisoners of war.[744]

850. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, the killing of prisoners or civilians is a war crime.[745]

851. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) considers that, during war or enemy occupation, "any person who ordered, assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of murders" committed war crimes.[746]

852. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that the killing of civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical and religious personnel is a war crime.[747]

853. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions".[748]

[739] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.
[740] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945), Regulation 2(b).
[741] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[742] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Article 152, see also Article 153 (extermination as a part of a genocide campaign).
[743] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[744] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 279, see also Article 278 (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[745] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 21(1).
[746] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).
[747] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Articles 142(1), 143 and 144, see also Article 141 (killing as a part of a genocide campaign).
[748] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).

National Case-law

854. Numerous cases were brought after the Second World War in Australia, China, Israel, Netherlands, Norway and US, in which the defendants were found guilty of having summarily executed or murdered prisoners of war, ordinary civilians, and individuals suspected of espionage.[749]

855. In its judgement in the Sergeant W. case in 1966, the Court-Martial of Brussels in Belgium sentenced to imprisonment a sub-officer who wilfully killed a civilian while serving in the Congolese army within the framework of military technical cooperation between Congo and Belgium. The Court held that the act committed was murder under the Belgian and Congolese Penal Codes and also a clear violation of the laws and customs of war and of the laws of humanity.[750]

856. In its judgement in the Videla case in 1994, Chile's Appeal Court of Santiago held that the Geneva Conventions "protect the human rights of the contestants in the event of external war or a conflict between organized armed forces within the State, which latter situation effectively prevailed in the country in 1974". The Court stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions obliged parties to non-international armed conflicts "to extend humanitarian treatment to persons taking no active part in the hostilities or who have placed themselves hors de combat for various reasons, and prohibits at any time and in any place violence to life and person". The Court found that the acts charged constituted grave breaches under Article 147 GC IV and that the prison order issued against the defendant should therefore be upheld.[751]

857. In 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court held that the prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II were consistent with the Constitution, since they were not only in harmony with the principles and values of the Constitution, but also practically reproduced specific constitutional provisions.[752]

[749] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Ohashi case, Judgement, 23 March 1946; Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Baba Masao case, Judgement, 2 June 1947; China, War Crimes Military Tribunal of the Ministry of National Defence at Nanking, Takashi Sakai case, Judgement, 29 August 1946; Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961; Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962; Netherlands, Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar, Motomura case, Judgement, 18 July 1947; Netherlands, Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar, Notomi Sueo case, Judgement, 4 January 1947; Netherlands, Temporary Court-Martial at Amboina, Motosuke case, Judgement, 28 January 1948; Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Silbertanne murders case, Judgement, 24 June 1946; Netherlands, Special Court (War Criminals) at Arnhem, Enkelstroth case, Judgement, 20 February 1948; Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Burghof case, Judgement, 17 October 1949; Norway, Court of Appeal, Bruns case, Judgement, 20 March 1946; Norway, Court of Appeal, Hans case, Judgement, 17 January 1947; UK, Military Court at Almelo, Sandrock case, Judgement, 26 November 1945; US, Military Commission at Rome, Dostler case, Judgement, 12 October 1945; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 19 February 1948.

[750] Belgium, Court-Martial of Brussels, Sergeant W. case, Judgement, 18 May 1966.

[751] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago, Videla case, Judgement, 26 September 1994, §§ 6-20.

[752] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.

858. In its judgement in the Jaluit Atoll case in 1945, the US Military Commission in the Far East found five accused guilty of "wilfully, feloniously, with malice aforethought without justifiable cause, and without trial or other due process, assault and kill, by shooting and stabbing to death, three American fliers . . . then . . . captured and unarmed prisoners of war in the custody of the . . . accused".[753]

859. In its judgement in the Schultz case in 1969, a US Court of Military Appeal upheld a court-martial conviction of a soldier for killing a person who, the soldier believed, had signalled enemy guerrillas with a light. While the Court recognised that this act could have been considered as an unauthorised communication with the enemy, it held that the victim was entitled to protection against summary execution once he had been taken prisoner. The Court referred to GC IV and identified murder, manslaughter and assaults as "crimes universally recognized as properly punishable under the law of war".[754]

Other National Practice

860. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in the former Yugoslavia, Botswana stated that if the information relative to the execution of captives were confirmed, these acts would constitute the most blatant and flagrant violations of IHL and accepted norms of international morality.[755]

861. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Rwanda, Brazil stated that the international community could not "stand still and allow the continuation of mass killings in Rwanda".[756]

862. During the Chinese civil war, the PLA 's policy forbade the killing of prisoners of war.[757]

863. In 1952, during the Korean War, the Chinese government denounced the killing and injuring of prisoners of war by the US army, stating that "it destroyed the principle of humanity and essentially violated the Geneva Conventions".[758]

[753] US, Military Commission in the Far East, The Jaluit Atoll case, Judgement, 7–13 December 1945.

[754] US, Court of Military Appeals, Schultz case, Judgement, 7 March 1969.

[755] Botswana, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3591, 9 November 1995, p. 5.

[756] Brazil, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3388, 8 June 1994, p. 4.

[757] China, Political Report on the United Government to the Seventh Plenary Session of National Representatives of the Chinese Communist Party by Mao Zedong, 24 April 1945, Selected Works of Mao Zedong, Vol. IV, Foreign Language Press, Beijing, pp. 47–51, p. 1039; Instruction on Implementing the Works of Land Reform and Consolidation of the Party by Deng Xiaoping, 6 June 1948, Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping, Vol. 1, The People's Press, Beijing, p. 122.

[758] China, Letter from Foreign Minister Zhou Enlai to the Chairman of the UN General Assembly Protesting the US Criminal Activity of Killing POWs on Fengyan Island, 21 December 1952, Documents on Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, World Knowledge Press, Beijing, pp. 115–116.

864. In a press release issued in 1980, the Colombian Ministry of National Defence denounced the killing of an army officer after he had been taken prisoner by the FARC.[759]

865. The Report on the Practice of Colombia refers to a draft working paper in which the Colombian government stated that it was prohibited in particular to kill persons taking no active part in the hostilities.[760]

866. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Costa Rica stated that:

> The human right to life has found support both within the United Nations Treaties, Declarations and Resolutions as well as in Regional and International Agreements.
> ...
> Through the evolution from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to the present time, the principles and articles, build upon each other to construct a strong structure where it is conclusive that the use of nuclear weapons violates the international law governing the Human Rights to Life and Health.[761]

867. In 1967, in a note submitted to the ICRC, Egypt qualified the "extermination of great numbers of the wounded" as a "flagrant violation of the elementary principle of humanity, and a serious breach of the laws of war and the Geneva Conventions of 1949".[762]

868. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, France stated that the right to life was not absolute and that an armed conflict necessarily entailed attempts on life. It added that Article 15(2) of the 1950 ECHR and the travaux préparatoires of Article 6 of the 1966 ICCPR recognised this.[763]

869. The instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, state that persons not participating in hostilities (particularly the civilian population) have the right to respect for their lives.[764]

870. In its oral pleadings before the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Indonesia affirmed that "the right to life is one of the four non–derogable rights

[759] Colombia, Ministry of National Defence, Press Bulletin No. 041, 25 August 1980, reprinted in IACiHR, Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Colombia, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.53 Doc. 22, 1981, p. 198.

[760] Report on the Practice of Colombia, 1998, Chapter 4.1, referring to Presidential Council, Proposal of the Government to the Coordinator Guerrillerra Simón Bolívar to humanise war, Draft Internal Working Paper, Part entitled "El Derecho Internacional Humanitario", § 2.

[761] Costa Rica, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 4 July 1995, pp. 6 and 7.

[762] Egypt, Note to the International Committee of the Red Cross, 7 July 1967, annexed to Letter dated 17 July 1967 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/8064, 17 July 1967, §§ 1 and 2(c).

[763] France, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 38; see also Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, Verbatim Record CR 95/23, 2 November 1995, § 44.

[764] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1995, Section 6, § 62.

which constitute the 'irreducible core' of human rights . . . A non–derogable right is one which cannot be suspended by the State even in times of public emergency."[765]

871. In 1973, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the protection of human rights in times of armed conflict, Israel accused Syria of killing and maltreating Israeli prisoners of war.[766]

872. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Malaysia stated that "the right to life is one of the four non-derogable rights which constitute the 'irreducible core' of human rights".[767]

873. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case in 1994, Mexico stated that both conventional and customary international law guaranteed the right to life.[768]

874. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Nauru indicated that the right to life was non-derogable and thus could not be suspended by the State even in times of public emergency.[769]

875. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the Netherlands stated that:

> The use of nuclear weapons cannot be considered in itself to be a violation of the right to life, as enshrined, inter alia, in Article 6 [1966 ICCPR] or in Article 2 [1950 ECHR]. According to the Netherlands Government, these articles do not create an absolute right to life. Thus, the travaux préparatoires of Article 6 [1966 ICCPR] make it clear that instead of listing the circumstances in which the deprivation of life would not be considered contrary to the right to life, the drafters decided to agree on the formulation that "No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life" . . . One of the instances mentioned in this connection by drafters as an example of a deprivation of life which is not arbitrary was "the performance of lawful acts of war".[770]

876. In 1968, during the Nigerian civil war, following the killing of an unarmed Biafran soldier, the Nigerian army officer responsible was executed for committing murder and for violating the code of conduct of Nigerian soldiers.[771]

877. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Rwanda, Nigeria noted with great concern the continuation of large-scale killings.[772]

765 Indonesia, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 3 November 1995, Verbatim Record CR 95/25, § 51.
766 Israel, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/SR.1453, 4 December 1973, p. 316, § 62.
767 Malaysia, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 19 June 1995, p. 14; see also Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 1994, p. 12.
768 Mexico, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 9 June 1994, p. 8.
769 Nauru, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 15 June 1995, p. 21.
770 Netherlands, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, § 27; see also Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons (WHO) case, 6 June 1994, § 34.
771 The Times, Execution of Nigerian Officer Filmed, London, 4 September 1968.
772 Nigeria, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3388, 8 June 1994, p. 5.

878. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Rwanda, Oman expressed regret at "the killing of thousands of innocent civilians in Rwanda".[773]

879. In its oral pleadings before the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Qatar stated that:

> The right to life is one of the four non-derogable rights which constitute the "irreducible core" of human rights. This means that the right to life cannot be suspended by a State, even in times of public death. Although it is expected that in times of war human beings might perish, such killings should not exceed the limits of law.[774]

880. In 1994, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Rwanda, Russia expressed serious concern at "the deliberate mass extermination of innocent people".[775]

881. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, Russia affirmed that the existence of the right to life did not mean that it was not possible to deprive a person of life through legitimate use of force, as confirmed, for instance, in Article 2(2) of the 1950 ECHR.[776]

882. In a declaration issued in 1990, the Rwandan Minister of Justice denied the reported allegations of existing threats to physically exterminate certain political prisoners.[777]

883. Rwanda's Ecole Supérieure Militaire teaches its students that the lives of captured enemy combatants shall be safeguarded.[778]

884. In its report on "gross violations of human rights" committed between 1960 and 1993, the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission stated that:

> Those combatants who were killed or seriously injured while they were unarmed or out of combat, executed after they had been captured, or wounded when they clearly could have been arrested were held to be victims of gross violations of human rights, and those responsible were held accountable.[779]

885. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the UK stated that it was entirely appropriate that the human rights agreements should, in effect, refer to the law of armed conflict in order to determine whether or not any particular instance of the deprivation of life in wartime was arbitrary.[780]

886. In 1992, in reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV committed in the [773] Oman, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3377, 16 May 1994, p. 7.

[774] Qatar, Oral pleadings before the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, Verbatim Record CR 95/29, 10 November 1995, § 30.
[775] Russia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3388, 8 June 1994, p. 6.
[776] Russia, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 19 June 1995, p. 9.
[777] Rwanda, Declaration of the Minister of Justice, Kigali, 29 November 1990.
[778] Rwanda, Ecole Supérieure Militaire, Cours de tactique, Leçon No. 22, p. 17.
[779] South Africa, Truth and Reconciliation Commission Report, 1998, Vol. 1, p. 76, § 102.
[780] UK, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 16 June 1995, p. 68.

former Yugoslavia, the US described acts of "wilful killing" perpetrated by the parties to the conflict.[781]

887. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense listed Iraqi war crimes, including the murder of civilians.[782] It also noted specific Iraqi war crimes, including wilful killing in violation of Articles 32 and 147 GC IV.[783]

888. In its written statement submitted to the ICJ in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1995, the US held that none of the instruments asserting the right to life prohibited, directly or indirectly, the taking of life for legitimate purposes, including in the exercise of the right to self-defence. It added that these provisions were clearly understood by their drafters as to exclude the lawful taking of life.[784]

889. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000, the US Congress expressed its sense concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during the Second World War, in particular the beating to death of many US military and civilian prisoners.[785]

890. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II ".[786]

891. According to the Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, Zimbabwe considers that civilians of any description should be protected from murder.[787]

892. In 1988, in connection with a non-international armed conflict, government officials denied in a meeting with the ICRC that it was the government's policy to execute prisoners. It was, however, admitted that it might have occurred in a few instances.[788]

[781] US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention, annexed to Letter dated 22 September 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24583, 23 September 1992, pp. 4–6; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Second Submission), annexed to Letter dated 22 October 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24705, 23 October 1992, pp. 4–10; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Third Submission), annexed to Letter dated 5 November 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24791, 10 November 1992, pp. 3–11; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Fourth Submission), annexed to Letter dated 7 December 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24918, 8 December 1992, pp. 3–11.

[782] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 632.

[783] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 634.

[784] US, Written statement submitted to the ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, 20 June 1995, p. 20.

[785] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON.RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.

[786] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

[787] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1997, Chapter 5.6.

[788] ICRC archive document.

893. In 1989, in connection with a non-international armed conflict, the government of a State denied in a note verbale to the ICRC the allegations that it was its policy to execute prisoners.[789]
894. In 1992, in the context of a non-international armed conflict, a State wrote to the ICRC to denounce the killing of wounded soldiers by the armed forces of an opposition group.[790]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
895. In a number of resolutions on South Africa adopted between 1976 and 1985, the UN Security Council condemned the wanton killing and maiming of defenceless demonstrators.[791]
896. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council expressed "its grave alarm at continuing reports of widespread and flagrant violations of international humanitarian law occurring within the territory of the former Yugoslavia, and especially in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, including reports of mass killings".[792]
897. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council referred to the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina and expressed its grave concern "at reports ... of grave violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in and around Srebrenica, and in the areas of Banja Luka and Sanski Most, including reports of mass murder".[793]
898. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council expressed deep concern at the deterioration in security and the humanitarian situation in Burundi, including killings and massacres.[794]
899. In 1998, in two statements by its President, the UN Security Council expressed its support for "the steps of the Secretary-General to launch investigations into alleged mass killings of prisoners of war and civilians in Afghanistan, the outcome of which will be submitted to the General Assembly and the7break; Security Council as soon as it becomes available".[795]
900. In 1998, in a statement by its President, the UN Security Council condemned as gross violations of IHL atrocities carried out against the civilian population, including widespread slaughter.[796]

[789] ICRC archive document. [790] ICRC archive document.
[791] UN Security Council, Res. 392, 19 June 1976, preamble and § 1; Res. 417, 31 October 1977, preamble and § 3; Res. 473, 13 June 1980, preamble; Res. 556, 23 October 1984, preamble and § 2; Res. 560, 12 March 1985, § 2; Res. 569, 26 July 1985, preamble and § 2.
[792] UN Security Council, Res. 827, 25 May 1993, preamble.
[793] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble.
[794] UN Security Council, Res. 1072, 30 August 1996, preamble.
[795] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/9, 6 April 1998; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/22, 14 July 1998.
[796] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/13, 20 May 1998.

901. In a resolution on South Africa adopted in 1986, the UN General Assembly strongly condemned the use of capital punishment against freedom fighters and patriots and demanded that death sentences be annulled.[797]

902. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly expressed its concern at reports regarding "grave violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in and around Srebrenica, and in the areas of Banja Luka and Sanski Most, including reports of mass murder". It expressed "its outrage at the instances of massive and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including . . . killings".[798]

903. In a resolution adopted in 1980 in the context of the conflict in Kampuchea, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged the parties to "spare the lives of those enemy combatants who surrender or are captured".[799]

904. In several resolutions on Afghanistan adopted between 1989 and 1992, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded that all parties treat their prisoners according to the recognised principles of IHL and protect them from acts of violence, including executions.[800]

905. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that it condemned:

> in the strongest terms all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law during the conflict, in particular in areas which were under the control of the self-proclaimed Bosnian and Croatian Serb authorities, in particular massive and systematic violations, including, inter alia, systematic ethnic cleansing.[801]

906. In 1995, in reports to the UN Security Council, the UN Secretary-General concluded that there was significant prima facie evidence that violations of IHL had occurred during and after the Bosnian Serb offensive on Srebrenica. The Secretary-General mentioned information presented by UNPROFOR, by the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights and by the US government on massacres near Nova Kasaba where civilians and captured soldiers were detained.[802]

907. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[803]

797 UN General Assembly, Res. 41/35 A, 10 November 1986, §§ 6–9.
798 UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, p. 4.
799 UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 29 (XXXVI), 11 March 1980, § 5.
800 UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/67, 8 March 1989, § 11; Res. 1990/53, 6 March 1990, § 5; Res. 1991/78, 6 March 1991, § 6; Res. 1992/68, 4 March 1992, § 6.
801 UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 1.
802 UN Secretary-General, Report submitted pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1010, UN Doc. S/1995/755, 30 August 1995; Report submitted pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1019, UN Doc. S/1995/988, 27 November 1995, § 21.
803 UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

908. In 1992, in a report on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights reported the discovery of mass graves near Vukovar and stated that according to expert forensic opinion, bodies bore signs of trauma sustained around the time of death.[804]

909. In 1992, in a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that the leader of a party to the conflict in Afghanistan had issued a written order which provided that "no person is allowed to . . . murder a prisoner of war".[805]

910. In 1993, in a report on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the government of Turkey to ensure full respect for the right to life of members of the armed opposition who had been captured or had laid down their arms "in accordance with the international instruments governing the use of force and firearms by law enforcement officials".[806]

911. In 1994, in a report on the situation of human rights in Rwanda, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights pointed out that many of the alleged acts, such as murder, political assassination, execution of hostages and other inhumane acts committed against unarmed soldiers by the armed forces of the two parties constituted war crimes in violation of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and their common Article 3. The Rapporteur also noted that the FPR had told the ICRC that it considered itself bound by the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[807]

912. On several occasions, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions made urgent appeals to the Israeli government to ensure the right to life and physical security of all persons hors de combat in Lebanon. The Special Rapporteur also called on all parties to conflicts, whether international or internal, to respect the norms and standards of international human rights and IHL which were enacted to protect the lives of the civilian population and of combatants who were captured or who had laid down their arms.[808]

913. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights

[804] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1992/S-1/10, 27 October 1992, Annex II.

[805] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1992/33, Report, 17 February 1992, § 51.

[806] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/7, 7 December 1993, §§ 595, 604, 610 and 706.

[807] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Rwanda, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/7, 28 June 1994, § 54.

[808] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/61, 14 December 1994, §§ 394-396; Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/4, 25 January 1996, § 589; Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/60, 24 December 1996, § 39.

reported with regard to attacks by Bosnian Serb forces on people fleeing after the fall of Srebrenica that "a number of accounts describe physical assaults on men who had surrendered and thus had the status of prisoners of war. Such assaults sometimes led to their death." The Rapporteur concluded that "prisoners of war were . . . in all likelihood executed in flagrant violation of international humanitarian law".[809]

914. In 1995, in a joint report, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Torture and the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions reported, under the section "Violations of the right to life", that members of the security forces captured in combat were often executed by Colombian rebel groups.[810]

915. In 1997, in a report on the situation of human rights in Zaire (DRC), the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that "none of the parties involved – the rebels, FAR, the interahamwe or the Government – were properly respecting the provisions of Article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 1949, which should unquestionably have governed the situation".[811] In the section relative to violations of common Article 3, the Rapporteur noted killings by Zairean troops and rebel forces of "soldiers who had laid down their arms or were not participating in military operations".[812]

916. Following allegations by both Iran and Iraq of the killing of prisoners of war and the execution of captured soldiers during the Iran–Iraq War, the UN Secretary-General sent a mission of enquiry which reported that Iran had denied allegations that captured combatants had been executed and that Iraq had denied the allegation that orders had been issued by Iraqi authorities to treat "Khomeini Guards" as "war criminals in the battlefield". The mission also informed the UN Security Council that the Iraqi authorities had pointed out that such orders "would contradict humanitarian law and would thus be against Iraqi principles".[813]

917. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador found that "the execution of an individual, whether a combatant or a non-combatant, who is in the power of a guerrilla force and who does not put up any resistance is not a combat operation" and that the executions carried out

[809] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Fifth periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/9, 22 August 1995, §§ 33 and 53.

[810] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Torture and Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions, Joint report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1995/111, 16 January 1995, § 33.

[811] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Zaire, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/6, 28 January 1997, § 171.

[812] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Zaire, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/6, 28 January 1997, §§ 190, 191 and 198.

[813] UN Secretary-General, Prisoners of war in Iran and Iraq: the report of a mission dispatched by the Secretary-General, January 1985, UN Doc. S/16962, 22 February 1985, §§ 72–73.

during the internal conflict in El Salvador were in violation of IHL and human rights law.[814]

Other International Organisations

918. The report of the Political Affairs Committee accompanying a resolution on Afghanistan adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe in 1985 expressed alarm at reports of the systematic execution of captured combatants.[815]

919. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Chechnya, the European Parliament called upon the Russian authorities to ensure that the right to life of the Chechen people was protected.[816]

920. In the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council reaffirmed its conviction that "acts of brutality [and] murder... represent a total contravention of all the Charters, Laws and Conventions of the International Community of Nations".[817]

921. In a resolution on Tunisia adopted in 1961, the Council of the League of Arab States strongly condemned:

> the tyrannical French aggression against Tunisia... and the genocidal war against the defenceless Tunisian people, including the old, the women and the children, burning villages and houses and killing internees and unarmed civilians in all kinds of ways, which stands in contradiction with France's commitment to the International Conventions and Charters that prohibit genocidal practices, such as the Geneva Convention of 12 August 1949 relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Times of War, the Declaration of Human Rights and the United Nations Charter.[818]

International Conferences

922. In the Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants declared that they refused "to accept that wounded are shown no mercy, children massacred...".[819]

923. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "strict [814] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, p. 151.

[815] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Political Affairs Committee, Deteriorating situation in Afghanistan, Report, Doc. 5495, 15 November 1985, p. 7.
[816] European Parliament, Resolution on violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Chechnya, 16 March 2000, § 2.
[817] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, p. 6.
[818] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 1778, 20 July 1961, preamble.
[819] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § I(1), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, p. 298.

orders are given to prevent all serious violations of international humanitarian law, including massacres . . . and threats to carry out such actions".[820]

924. The Final Declaration adopted by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002 expressed deep concern about "the number and expansion of conflicts in Africa" and alarm at "the spread of violence, in particular in the form of . . . murder . . . which seriously violate[s] the rules of International Humanitarian Law".[821]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

925. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[822]

926. In its advisory opinion in the Nuclear Weapons case in 1996, the ICJ held that:

> In principle, the right not arbitrarily to be deprived of one's life [contained in Article 6 of the 1966 ICCPR] applies also in hostilities. The test of what is an arbitrary deprivation of life, however, then falls to be determined by the applicable lex specialis, namely, the law applicable in armed conflict which is designed to regulate the conduct of hostilities. Thus whether a particular loss of life, through the use of a certain weapon in warfare, is to be considered an arbitrary deprivation of life contrary to Article 6 of the ICCPR, can only be decided by reference to the law applicable in armed conflict and not deduced from the terms of the Covenant itself.[823]

927. In the Ntakirutimana and Others case before the ICTR in 2000, a Rwandan prefect was indicted for, inter alia, failure to prevent massacres from taking place and for failure subsequently to punish those responsible.[824]

928. In the interlocutory appeal in the Tadić case in 1995, the ICTY Appeals Chamber referred to a Nigerian newspaper article in which it was reported that "on 27 June 1968, two officers of the Nigerian Army were publicly executed by a firing squad in Benin City in Mid-Western Nigeria for the murder of four civilians near Asaba".[825] The Appeals Chamber stated that Article 3 of the

[820] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(b).

[821] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, preamble.

[822] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.

[823] ICJ, Nuclear Weapons case, Advisory Opinion, 8 July 1996, § 25.

[824] ICTR, Ntakirutimana and Others case, Amended Indictment, 20 October 2000, § 5.

[825] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, § 106, referring to New Nigerian, 28 June 1968, p. 1.

ICTY Statute also covered violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[826]

929. In the second amended indictment in the Tadić case in 1995, the Prosecutor of the ICTY charged the accused with grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (wilful killing) and violations of the laws or customs of war (murder).[827]

930. In its judgement in the Tadić case in 1997, the ICTY stated that:

> The customary international humanitarian law regime governing conflicts not of an international character extends protection, from acts of murder, torture and other acts proscribed by Common Article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions], to . . . persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause.[828]

931. In the Mrkšić case before the ICTY in 1995, the accused was charged with grave breaches under Article 2(a) of the Statute of the Tribunal (wilful killing), violations of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 of the Statute (murder) and crimes against humanity under Article 5(a) (killing of civilians and wounded soldiers who had been removed by the accused from Vukovar hospital).[829]

932. In the Erdemović case in 1995, the accused pleaded guilty to a crime against humanity (the massacre of hundreds of Muslims at the Branjevo farm at Pilica). In its sentencing judgement in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber convicted Dražen Erdemović of the violation of the laws and customs of war.[830]

933. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY held that:

> There can be no line drawn between "wilful killing" [wording of the grave breaches provisions of the Geneva Conventions] and "murder" [wording of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] which affects their content . . . Thus, as it is prohibited to kill protected persons during an international armed conflict, so it is prohibited to kill those taking no active part in hostilities which constitute an internal armed conflict.

The Tribunal found some of the accused guilty of grave breaches of GC IV (wilful killing) and violations of the laws and customs of war (murder).[831]

934. In its judgement in the Jelisić case in 1999, the ICTY held that "the charges for murder and cruel treatment are based on Article 3 common to the [1949] Geneva Conventions whose customary character has been noted on several occasions by this Tribunal and the Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda". The Court

[826] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, §§ 89, 134 and 136.
[827] ICTY, Tadić case, Second Amended Indictment, 14 December 1995, §§ 6, 11 and 12.
[828] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement, 7 May 1997, § 615.
[829] ICTY, Mrkšić case, Initial Indictment, 26 October 1995, § 26; see also Mrkšić case, Review of the Indictment, 3 April 1996, Disposition.
[830] ICTY, Erdemović case, Sentencing Judgement, 29 November 1996, Part IV; Erdemović case, Judgement on Appeal, 7 October 1997, § 20; Erdemović case, Sentencing Judgement bis, 5 March 1998, § 23.
[831] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 422–423, 452 and 454 and Part IV.

found Goran Jelisić guilty of murders as violations of the laws and customs of war, as well as crimes against humanity.[832]

935. In its judgment in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY found Drago Josipović and Vladimir Šantić "guilty of a crime against humanity (murder)".[833]

936. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY found the accused guilty of violations of the laws and customs of war and held that the offence of violence to life and person > appears in Article 3(1)(a) common to the Geneva Conventions. It is a broad offence which, at first glance, encompasses murder and which is accordingly defined by the cumulation of the elements of these specific offences. The offence is to be linked to those of Article 2(a) (wilful killing) of the [ICTY] Statute.[834]

937. In the Kordić and Čerkez case before the ICTY in 1998, the accused were charged with "murder" as a crime against humanity and violation of laws or customs of war and "wilful killing" (as recognised by Articles 2(a), 7(1) and 7(3) of the Statute of the Tribunal).[835] In its judgement in 2001, the Tribunal found the accused guilty of "murder" as a crime against humanity, and "wilful killing" as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[836]

938. In its General Comment on Article 6 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that:

> 2. The Committee observes that war and other acts of mass violence continue to be a scourge of humanity and take the lives of thousands of innocent human beings every year . . . The Committee considers that States have the supreme duty to prevent wars, acts of genocide and other acts of mass violence causing arbitrary loss of life. Every effort they make to avert the danger of war, especially thermonuclear war, and to strengthen international peace and security would constitute the most important condition and guarantee for the safeguarding of the right to life . . .
> 3. The protection against arbitrary deprivation of life which is explicitly required by the third sentence of article 6 (1) is of paramount importance. The Committee considers that States parties should take measures not only to prevent and punish deprivation of life by criminal acts, but also to prevent arbitrary killing by their own security forces. The deprivation of life by the authorities of the State is a matter of the utmost gravity. Therefore, the law must strictly control and limit the circumstances in which a person may be deprived of his life by such authorities.
> 4. States parties should also take specific and effective measures to prevent the disappearance of individuals, something which unfortunately has become all too frequent and leads too often to arbitrary deprivation of life. Furthermore, States should establish effective facilities and procedures to investigate

[832] ICTY, Jelisić case, Judgement, 14 December 1999, §§ 41 and 138.
[833] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, Disposition, §§ 5 and 6.
[834] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 182 and Part VI.
[835] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, First Amended Indictment, 30 September 1998, Counts 1–2, 7–9 and 14–16.
[836] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, Section V, Disposition, Counts 7–8 and 14–15.

thoroughly cases of missing and disappeared persons in circumstances which may involve a violation of the right to life.[837]

939. In Camargo v. Colombia in 1982, the HRC held that:

The requirements that the right [to life] shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life mean that the law must strictly control and limit the circumstances in which a person may be deprived of his life by the authorities of a State.

. . .

In the present case it is evident from the fact that seven persons lost their lives as a result of the deliberate action of the police that the deprivation of life was intentional. Moreover, the police action was apparently taken without warning to the victims and without giving them any opportunity to surrender to the police patrol or to offer any explanation of their presence or intentions. There is no evidence that the action of the police was necessary in their own defence or that of others, or that it was necessary to effect the arrest or prevent the escape of the persons concerned. Moreover, the victims were no more than suspects of the kidnapping which had occurred some days earlier and their killing by the police deprived them of all the protections of due process of law laid down by the Covenant.

. . .

For these reasons it is the Committee's view that the action of the police resulting in the death of Mrs. Maria Fanny Suarez de Guerrero was disproportionate to the requirements of law enforcement in the circumstances of the case and that she was arbitrarily deprived of her life contrary to article 6(1) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.[838]

940. In 1995, in its decision in Civil Liberties Organisation v. Chad (74/92), the ACiHPR stated that:

In the present case, Chad has failed to provide security and stability in the country, thereby allowing serious and massive violations of human rights. The national armed forces are participants in the civil war and there have been several instances in which the Government has failed to intervene to prevent the assassination and killing of specific individuals. Even where it cannot be proved that violations were committed by government agents, the government had a responsibility to secure the safety and the liberty of its citizens, and to conduct investigations into murders. Chad therefore is responsible for the violations of the [ACHPR].[839]

941. In its admissibility decision in the Dujardin and Others v. France case in 1991, concerning the killing of four disarmed gendarmes by about 50 assailants (two were executed after having been wounded), the ECiHR held that the proclamation of a general amnesty law was not contrary to the right to life as protected under the Convention, as long as "a balance is maintained between the legitimate interests of the State and the interests of individual members of the public in having the right to life protected by law".[840]

[837] HRC, General Comment No. 6 (Article 6 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, §§ 2–4.
[838] HRC, Camargo v. Colombia, 31 March 1982, Views, §§ 13.1–13.3.
[839] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation v. Chad (74/92), Decision, 11 October 1995, § 22.
[840] ECiHR, Dujardin and Others v. France, Admissibility Decision, 2 September 1991, p. 9.

942. In its judgement in McCann and Others v. UK in 1995, the ECtHR found that, in relation to the conduct and planning of an operation which resulted in the killing of three IRA suspects, it had to examine not only whether the force used by the soldiers was strictly proportionate to the aim of protecting persons against unlawful violence, but also whether the anti-terrorist operation was planned and controlled by the authorities so as to minimise, to the greatest extent possible, recourse to lethal force. The Court found that the failure to make allowances for erroneous intelligence assessments and the automatic recourse to lethal force constituted a use of force that exceeded the level that was absolutely necessary in defence of persons from unlawful violence and therefore amounted to a violation of Article 2 of the 1950 ECHR.[841]

943. In three separate judgements in 1998, the ECtHR held that the responsibility of a State could be engaged where agents of the State failed to take all feasible precautions in the choice of means and methods of a security operation mounted against an opposing group with a view to avoiding and, in any event, to minimising, incidental loss of civilian life.[842]

944. In its judgement in Kurt v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR asserted that presumptions deduced from the circumstances of detention, combined with allegations of an officially tolerated practice of disappearance, were not in themselves sufficient to establish that the disappeared person had died in custody and did not therefore support a finding of violation of the right to life.[843]

945. In Kaya v. Turkey in 2000, the ECtHR stated that:

> 91. . . . The authorities were aware, or ought to have been aware, of the possibility that this risk [of falling victim to an unlawful attack] derived from the activities of persons or groups acting with the knowledge or acquiescence of elements in the security forces. A 1993 report by a Parliamentary Investigation Commission . . . stated that it had received information that a Hizbullah training camp was receiving aid and training from the security forces and concluded that some officials might be implicated in the 908 unsolved killings in the south-east region. The Susurluk report, published in January 1998, informed the Prime Minister's Office that the authorities were aware of killings being carried out to eliminate alleged supporters of the PKK . . . The Government insisted that this report did not have any judicial or evidential value. However, even the Government described the report as providing information on the basis of which the Prime Minister was to take further appropriate measures. It may therefore be regarded as a significant document.
> . . .
> 108. The Court is not satisfied that the investigation carried out into the killing of Hasan Kaya and Metin Can was adequate or effective. It failed to establish significant elements of the incident or clarify what happened to the two men and has not been conducted with the diligence and determination necessary for there to be any realistic prospect of identifying and apprehending the perpetrators. It has remained from the early stages within the jurisdiction of the National Security Court prosecutors, who investigate primarily terrorist or separatist offences.

[841] ECtHR, McCann and Others v. UK, Judgement, 27 September 1995, §§ 194 and 210–214.
[842] ECtHR, Ergi v. Turkey, Judgement, 28 July 1998, §§ 79, 81 and 85; Yasa v. Turkey, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 104.
[843] ECtHR, Kurt v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 May 1998, §§ 107–108.

109. The Court concludes that there has been in this respect a violation of Article 2 of the [ECHR].[844]

946. In Avsar v. Turkey in 2001, the ECtHR stated that:

394. For an investigation into alleged unlawful killing by state agents to be effective, it may generally be regarded as necessary for the persons responsible for and carrying out the investigation to be independent from those implicated in the events . . . The investigation must also be effective in the sense that it is capable of leading to a determination of whether the force used in such cases was or was not justified in the circumstances . . . and to the identification and punishment of those responsible . . . This is not an obligation of result, but of means. The authorities must have taken the reasonable steps available to them to secure the evidence concerning the incident, including inter alia eye witness testimony, forensic evidence, and where appropriate, an autopsy which provides a complete and accurate record of injury and an objective analysis of clinical findings, including the cause of death . . . Any deficiency in the investigation which undermines its ability to establish the cause of death or the person responsible will risk falling foul of this standard.
. . .
408. The Court concludes that the investigation by the gendarmes, public prosecutor and before the criminal court did not provide a prompt or adequate investigation of the circumstances surrounding the killing of Mehmet Serif Avsar and therefore was in breach of the State's procedural obligation to protect the right to life. This rendered recourse to civil remedies equally ineffective in the circumstances. It accordingly dismisses the criminal and civil proceedings limb of the Government's preliminary objection . . . and holds that there has been a violation of Article 2 [of the 1950 ECHR] in this respect.[845]

947. In its judgement in K.-H. W. v. Germany in 2001, the ECtHR took the view that "even a private soldier could not show total, blind obedience to orders which flagrantly infringed" GDR legal principles and international human rights, particularly the right to life, which the Court found to be "the supreme value in the hierarchy of human rights".[846]
948. In a resolution adopted in 1968 concerning the law applicable to emergency situations, the IACiHR declared that:

The suspension of constitutional guarantees or state of siege is compatible with the system of representative democratic government only if enacted under the following conditions:

. . .

e. When it does not in any manner presuppose the suspension of the right to life.[847]

[844] ECtHR, Kaya v. Turkey, Judgement, 28 March 2000, §§ 91 and 108–109.
[845] ECtHR, Avsar v. Turkey, Judgement, 10 July 2001, §§ 394 and 408.
[846] ECtHR, K.-H. W. v. Germany, Judgement, 22 March 2001, § 75.
[847] IACiHR, Resolution adopted at the 1968 Session, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.19 Doc. 32, Inter-American Yearbook on Human Rights, 1968, pp. 59–61.

949. The IACiHR has repeatedly stated that the right to life may never be suspended and that governments may not use, under any circumstances, illegal or summary execution to restore public order. It has also made clear that States are under an obligation to investigate alleged cases of summary or extrajudicial executions.[848]

950. In reviewing individual cases brought against El Salvador between 1985 and 1992, the IACiHR noted a number of them concerning the killing of persons detained or in the custody of the armed forces and declared that "such acts constituted serious violations of the right to life (Article 4 ACHR)".[849]

951. In a case brought before the IACiHR in 1992 concerning the killing of 74 persons by members of the Salvadoran security forces, the petitioners argued that the application of an amnesty decree constituted a clear violation of the obligation of the Salvadoran government to investigate and punish the violation of the victim's rights, and more particularly a violation of Article 27 of the 1969 ACHR, which prohibited the suspension of the guarantees indispensable to the protection of non-derogable rights such as the right to life protected under Article 4. The Commission declared that the government of El Salvador had failed to comply with the obligation to guarantee the free and full exercise of human rights and fundamental guarantees of all persons subject to its jurisdiction. The Commission also recommended that the government of El Salvador submit those responsible to justice in order to establish their responsibility so that they might receive the sanctions demanded by such serious actions.[850]

952. In 1993, in a report on the situation of human rights in Peru, the IACiHR reminded Peru that the summary execution of persons by the forces of order cannot be justified in any context. It also recommended that Peru, in the context of a prison to which members of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement were transferred, separate members of rival armed groups so as to avoid violence threatening the safety or lives of the inmates.[851]

953. In 1997, in a report concerning a case in Argentina, the IACiHR stated that:

> 157. Before addressing petitioner's specific claims, the Commission thinks it useful to clarify the reasons why it has deemed it necessary at times to apply directly rules of international humanitarian law or to inform its interpretations of relevant provisions of the [ACHR] by reference to these rules. A basic understanding of the interrelationship of these two branches of international law – human rights and humanitarian law – is instructive in this regard.
>
> . . .

[848] IACiHR, Annual Report 1980–1981, Doc. OEA. Ser.L/V/II.54, 16 October 1981, p. 112; Case 10.559 (Peru), Report, 1 March 1996, Section V(2).

[849] IACiHR, Case 6724 (El Salvador), Resolution, 5 March 1985, §§ 1–2; Case 10.190 (El Salvador), Resolution, 4 February 1992, preamble and § 1; Case 10.284 (El Salvador), Resolution, 4 February 1992, § 1.

[850] IACiHR, Case 10.287 (El Salvador), Report, 24 September 1992, Sections I(5), VI(4) and VI(5)(a).

[851] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Peru, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II. 83 Doc. 31, 1993, pp. 29 and 38.

327. As for the facts linked directly to the attack on the La Tablada barracks and its recapture, the Commission concludes that those events constituted a non-international armed conflict . . . As such, the conduct during the hostilities is governed by the rules on internal armed conflicts, which the Commission is competent to apply . . .
328. Based on its application of said norms of humanitarian law, the Commission found that there was not sufficient evidence to determine that the State used illegal methods and means of combat to retake the barracks at La Tablada in January 1989. It also determined that the civilians who took up arms and attacked those barracks became military targets for such time as they actively participated in the conflict. Therefore, the deaths of and wounds inflicted on the attackers, while they were active participants in the conflict, were legitimately related to the combat, and do not constitute violations of the [ACHR] or of the applicable provisions of humanitarian law.[852]

954. In 2001, in the Case of the Ríofrío massacre (Colombia), the IACiHR stated that:

Article 4 of the [ACHR] establishes that every person has the right to have his life respected and no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life. It is also important to note that intentional mistreatment, and particularly extrajudicial execution of civilians under the control of one of the parties in any kind of armed conflict is absolutely prohibited in all circumstances in light of the basic considerations of humanity reflected in common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions.[853]

955. In 1988, in the Velásquez Rodríguez case, the IACtHR stated that:

The duty to investigate facts of this type continues as long as there is uncertainty about the fate of the person who has disappeared. Even in the hypothetical case that those individually responsible for crimes of this type cannot be legally punished under certain circumstances, the State is obligated to use the means at its disposal to inform the relatives of the fate of the victims and, if they have been killed, the location of their remains.[854]

956. In its judgement in the Neira Alegría and Others case in 1995, involving the disappearance of three prisoners following a riot in which control and jurisdiction of the prison was handed over to the army, the IACtHR held that:

60. In the terms of Article 5(2) of the Convention, every person deprived of her or his liberty has the right to live in detention conditions compatible with her or his personal dignity, and the State must guarantee to that person the right to life and to humane treatment. Consequently, since the State is the institution responsible for detention establishments, it is the guarantor of these rights of the prisoners.
. . .
76. Given the circumstances that surrounded the crushing of the riot at the San Juan Bautista Prison; the fact that eight years after the riot occurred there is still no knowledge of the whereabouts of the three persons to whom this > case refers, as was acknowledged by the Minister of Foreign Affairs stating that the victims were not among the survivors and that "three of the [non-identified bodies] undoubtedly correspond to those three persons"; and the disproportionate use of force; it may be reasonably concluded that they were arbitrarily deprived of their lives by the Peruvian forces in violation of Article 4(1) of the [of the 1969 ACHR].[855]

[852] IACiHR, Case 11.137 (Argentina), Report, 18 November 1997, §§ 157 and 327–328.
[853] IACiHR, Case of the Ríofrío massacre (Colombia), Report, 6 April 2001, § 54.
[854] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, § 181.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

957. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "violence to life . . . of persons in general is prohibited", that "murder is prohibited" and that "wilful killing" is a grave breach of the law of war.[856]

958. On 18 September 1982, the ICRC addressed an appeal to the international community in which it condemned the fact that, according to reports from its delegates in Beirut:

> hundreds of women, children, adolescents and elderly persons have been killed in Beirut in the district of Chatila, the streets of which are strewn with their bodies. The ICRC is also aware that wounded persons have been killed in hospital beds and that others, including doctors, have been abducted . . . The ICRC solemnly appeals to the international community to intervene to put an immediate stop to the intolerable massacre perpetrated on whole groups of people and to ensure that . . . the basic right to life is observed.[857]

959. In an appeal launched in 1983 in the context of the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC pointed to grave violations of IHL committed by both countries, including "summary execution of captive soldiers".[858]

960. In an interview in 1989, a representative of the Executive Committee of the Union of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies of the USSR denounced as a "monstrous crime in terms of international law" the plan of an Afghan faction to execute several Soviet prisoners and to show their corpses as proof of the USSR 's interference in the conflict in Afghanistan.[859]

961. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "civilians and all non-combatants must be respected and protected, and violence to life and person . . . [is] specifically prohibited".[860]

[855] IACtHR, Neira Alegría and Others case, Judgement, 19 January 1995, §§60 and 76.
[856] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 190, 191 and 776(a).
[857] ICRC, Annual Report 1982, Geneva, 1983, p. 57.
[858] ICRC, Conflict between Iraq and Iran: ICRC Appeal, IRRC, No. 235, 1983, p. 221.
[859] Executive Committee of the Union of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies of the USSR, "Plan to Murder Soviet POWs Denounced", Interview with Komsomolskaya Pravda Correspondent, Bulletin ISL of the USSR Embassy in Afghanistan, 2 April 1989.
[860] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.

962. In an appeal issued in 1991 in the context of the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the ICRC enjoined the military and civilian authorities of the parties involved to take all the necessary steps "to spare the lives of those who surrender".[861]

963. In a declaration issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross stated that "persons hors de combat and those who do not take a direct part in hostilities have the right to respect for their lives".[862]

964. In a communication to the press issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict in Rwanda, the ICRC stated that:

> Armed militiamen shot to death, in the presence of members of the armed forces, six wounded people who were being taken by Rwandese Red Cross volunteers to a field hospital set up ... by the [ICRC]. This outrageous act has compelled the ICRC and the Rwandese Red Cross to suspend the collection of casualties in the capital, where the most elementary rules of humanity are being flouted.
>
> The ICRC and the Rwandan Red Cross called on all combatants and the militia to stop the massacres.[863]

965. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "attacks on civilians' life" are prohibited and that killing captured combatants and persons who have laid down their arms "constitutes a crime and is absolutely forbidden".[864]

966. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that "violence to [the] lives of [civilian persons who refrain from acts of hostility]" is prohibited and that "combatants and other persons who are captured, and those who have laid down their arms ... shall not, in particular, be killed".[865]

967. In 1996, in a note on respect for IHL in an internal armed conflict, the ICRC stated that the authorities must "make sure that the lives of those detained are protected".[866]

968. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the war crime of wilful killing, when committed in an international armed conflict, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court. It also proposed

[861] ICRC, Appeal in behalf of civilians in Yugoslavia, Geneva, 4 October 1991.
[862] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1o. de enero de 1994, 3 January 1994, § 2(A), see also § 2(D).
[863] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 94/16, Rwanda: six wounded killed in a Red Cross ambulance, 14 April 1994.
[864] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.
[865] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier (eds.), How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.
[866] ICRC archive document.

that "violence to the life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular murder", as a serious violation of IHL applicable in non-international conflicts, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[867]

969. In a communication to the press issued in 2001, the ICRC reminded the parties to the conflict in Afghanistan that "persons not taking part in hostilities must be . . . spared the effects of the violence . . . Threats to their lives . . . are prohibited."[868]

VI. Other Practice

970. In 1979, in a letter to the ICRC, an armed opposition group confirmed its commitment to IHL and to respect the lives of civilians.[869]

971. In a special communiqué issued in 1980, UNITA denounced the death sentences imposed on captured persons as violations of human rights. The communiqué also referred to the international law of armed conflicts.[870]

972. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "persons hors de combat and those who do not take part in hostilities are entitled to respect for their lives and their moral and physical integrity" and that "captured combatants and civilians under the authority of an adverse party are entitled to respect for their lives".[871]

973. In 1983, when ICRC delegates inquired about the execution of four prisoners detained by an armed opposition group, the group's representative stated that "in war time, such behaviour is normal and engenders no consequences". The ICRC delegates replied that such practices are against IHL and are of serious concern.[872]

974. In 1984, in a letter to the ICRC, an armed opposition group denounced the practice of the forces of the regime in place which "always tried to arrest our partisans and after torturing and getting their confessions by force martyred them".[873]

975. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "a state violates international law if, as a matter of state policy, it practices, encourages, or condones (a) genocide, . . . (c) the murder . . . of individuals".[874]

[867] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, §§ 1(i) and 3(i).
[868] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 01/47, Afghanistan: ICRC calls on all parties to conflict to respect international humanitarian law, 24 October 2001.
[869] ICRC archive document.
[870] UNITA, Special Communiqué No. 12/80: UNITA draws international attention to violations of human rights and appeals to humanitarian organisations, 4 August 1980.
[871] ICRC archive document. [872] ICRC archive document. [873] ICRC archive document.
[874] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 702(a) and (c).

976. In 1986, various opposing factions in an internal conflict acknowledged that captured combatants were executed.[875]
977. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "violence to life . . . in particular murder" shall remain prohibited. It further states that "every human being has the inherent right to life. The right shall be protected by law. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her life."[876]
978. In a widely circulated communiqué in 1994, the general staff of an armed opposition group called for the extermination of another group by any available means. The events in that State were universally condemned.[877]
979. The SPLM Human Rights Charter provides that "persons taking no active part in fighting, whether civilians or sick, wounded or captured soldiers, shall be protected from execution or other abuses, including during combat".[878]

D. Torture and Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
980. Article 28 of the 1906 GC provides that "in the event of their military penal laws being insufficient, the signatory governments also engage to take, or to recommend to their legislatures, the necessary measures to repress, in time of war, individual acts of . . . ill treatment of the sick and wounded of the armies".
981. Article 5 of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that "no pressure shall be exercised on prisoners to obtain information regarding the situation in their armed forces or their country. Prisoners who refuse to reply may not be threatened, insulted, or exposed to unpleasantness or disadvantages of any kind whatsoever."
982. Article 6 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that:

> The following acts, or any of them, are crimes coming within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal for which there shall be individual responsibility:
> . . .
> (b) "War crimes:" namely, violations of the laws or customs of war. Such violations shall include, but not be limited to, . . . ill-treatment . . . of civilian population of or in occupied territory, . . . ill-treatment of prisoners of war or persons on the seas . . .

[875] ICRC archive document.
[876] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Articles 3(1) and 8(1), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, pp. 331 and 333.
[877] ICRC archive document.
[878] SPLM, Human Rights Charter, May 1996, § 4.2.

(c) "Crimes against humanity:" namely . . . inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war.

983. According to Article 2 of the 1948 Genocide Convention, "causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group" constitutes genocide when "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".
984. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions explicitly prohibits "violence to life and person, in particular . . . cruel treatment and torture [and] outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment" with respect to persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause.
985. Article 12, second paragraph, GC I provides that violence to wounded and sick members of the armed forces in the field shall be strictly prohibited, in particular torture.
986. Article 12, second paragraph, GC II provides that violence to wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the armed forces at sea shall be strictly prohibited, in particular torture.
987. Article 17, fourth paragraph, GC III provides that:

> No physical or mental torture, nor any other form of coercion, may be inflicted on prisoners of war to secure from them information of any kind whatever. Prisoners of war who refuse to answer may not be threatened, insulted, or exposed to unpleasant or disadvantageous treatment of any kind.

988. Article 87, third paragraph, GC III provides that "any form of torture or cruelty is forbidden".
989. Article 89 GC III provides that "in no case shall disciplinary punishments be inhuman, brutal or dangerous to the health of prisoners of war".
990. Article 32 GC IV provides that:

> The High Contracting Parties specifically agree that each of them is prohibited from taking any measure of such a character as to cause the physical suffering . . . of protected persons in their hands. This prohibition applies not only to . . . torture . . . but also to any other measures of brutality whether applied by civilian or military agents.

991. According to Articles 50 GC I, 51 GC II, 130 GC III and 147 GC IV, "torture or inhuman treatment" and "wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health" are grave breaches of these instruments.
992. Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR provides that "no one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment". Article 15(2) adds that Article 3 is non-derogable "in time of war or other public emergency threatening the life of the nation".

993. Article 7 of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment". Article 4(2) states that there can be no derogation from Article 7.
994. Article 5(2) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment". Article 27(2) "does not authorize any suspension" of Article 5(2).
995. Article 8(a) and (b) of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the Return of Captured Military Personnel and Foreign Civilians and Captured and Detained Vietnamese Civilian Personnel provides that all captured military personnel, captured foreign civilians and captured civilian personnel "shall be protected against . . . torture and cruel treatment, and outrages upon personal dignity".
996. Article 75(2) AP I prohibits "torture of all kinds, whether physical or mental", "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[879]
997. Article 4(2) AP II prohibits "cruel treatment such as torture" and "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[880]
998. Article 5 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment and treatment shall be prohibited".
999. Article 2(2) of the 1984 Convention against Torture states, after having regard to Article 7 of the 1966 ICCPR, that "no exceptional circumstances whatsoever, whether a state of war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency, may be invoked as a justification of torture".
1000. The 1985 Inter-American Convention against Torture, after recalling the prohibition of torture contained in Article 5 of the 1969 ACHR, states in Article 1 that State parties undertake to prevent and punish torture. Article 5 further stipulates that:

> The existence of circumstances such as a state of war, threat of war, state of siege or of emergency, domestic disturbance or strife, suspension of constitutional guarantees, domestic political instability, or other public emergencies or disasters shall not be invoked or admitted as justification for the crime of torture.

1001. The preamble to the 1987 European Convention for the Prevention of Torture refers to Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR which provides for the absolute prohibition of torture.
1002. Article 37(a) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that States Parties shall ensure that "no child shall be subjected to torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

[879] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[880] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

1003. According to Article 1(2) of the 1995 Agreement on Human Rights annexed to the Dayton Accords, the parties shall secure to all persons within their jurisdiction the right not to be subjected to torture.
1004. Pursuant to Article 6(b) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group" constitutes genocide when "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".
1005. Pursuant to Article 7(1)(f) of the 1998 ICC Statute, torture constitutes a crime against humanity "when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack".
1006. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(a)(ii) and (iii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "torture or inhuman treatment" and "wilfully causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or health" constitute war crimes in international armed conflicts.
1007. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(c)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "cruel treatment and torture" constitute war crimes in non-international armed conflicts.
1008. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "committing outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.
1009. According to Article 3(a) and (e) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, the Tribunal has jurisdiction over violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and of AP II, including "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular . . . cruel treatment such as torture" and "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment".

Other Instruments
1010. Article 16 of the 1863 Lieber Code states that military necessity does not admit "torture to extort confessions".
1011. Article 56 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "a prisoner of war is subject to no punishment for being a public enemy, nor is any revenge wreaked upon him by the intentional infliction of any suffering, or disgrace, by cruel imprisonment . . . or any other barbarity".
1012. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution, including torture of civilians, ill-treatment of prisoners of war and internment of civilians under inhuman conditions.
1013. Article II(1) of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10, provides that "ill treatment . . . of civilian population from occupied territory" is a war crime and that "torture . . . or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population" is a crime against humanity.

1014. Article 5(c) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) established individual responsibility for crimes against humanity, including "inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war".
1015. Article 5 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".
1016. Principle VI of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles adopted by the ILC provides that:

> The crimes hereinafter set out are punishable as crimes under international law:
> ...
> (b) War crimes: Violations of the laws or customs of war include, but are not be limited to, ... ill-treatment ... of civilian population of or in occupied territory, ... ill-treatment of prisoners of war, of persons on the seas ...
> (c) Crimes against humanity: ... inhuman acts done against any civilian population.

1017. Rule 4 of the 1950 UN Command Rules and Regulations gave Military Commissions of the UN Command in Korea jurisdiction over offences such as ill-treatment of civilians or prisoners of war.
1018. Paragraph 5 of the 1974 UN Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict provides that "all forms of repression and cruel and inhuman treatment of women and children, including ... torture ... committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories shall be considered criminal".
1019. Article 2 of the 1975 UN Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment provides that:

> Any act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment is an offence to human dignity and shall be condemned as a denial of the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations and as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

1020. Article 5 of the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials provides that "no law enforcement official may inflict, instigate or tolerate any act of torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".
1021. Principle 6 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that:

> No person under any form of detention or imprisonment shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. No circumstance whatever may be invoked as a justification for torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

1022. According to Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "acts of inhumanity, cruelty or barbarity directed against life ... in particular ... torture" are considered as an exceptionally serious war crime and as a serious violation of the principles and rules of international law applicable in armed conflict.

1023. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

1024. Under Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the parties committed themselves to respect and ensure respect for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Paragraph 2.3 requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

1025. Under Article 2(b) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute torture of persons protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention.

1026. Article 5(f) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that torture constitutes a crime against humanity when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population.

1027. According to Article 3(f) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, torture constitutes a crime against humanity, when committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds.

1028. Under Article 4(a) and (e) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including "cruel treatment such as torture" and "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment".

1029. Article 18(c) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "torture" is a crime against humanity.

1030. Article 20(a)(ii)–(iii) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "torture or inhuman treatment" and "wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health" are crimes against the peace and security of mankind.

1031. Article 20(d) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "outrages upon personal dignity in violation of international humanitarian law, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment" are war crimes.

1032. Article 20(f)(i) and (v) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind stipulates that "cruel treatment such as torture" and "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment" constitute war crimes in armed conflicts not of an international character.

1033. Article 2(7) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines states that the Agreement seeks to confront, remedy and prevent the most serious human rights violations, including "the right not to be subjected to physical or mental torture, solitary confinement . . . and other inhuman, cruel or degrading treatment, detention and punishment".

1034. Article 3(1) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines further provides that physical or mental torture and cruel or degrading treatment shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat.

1035. According to Section 7(2) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, cruel treatment such as torture of persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations and persons placed hors de combat is prohibited at any time and in any place.

1036. Section 8(d) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that detained persons "shall under no circumstances be subjected to any form of torture or ill-treatment".

1037. Article 4 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "no one shall be subject to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

1038. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(a)(ii), "torture or inhuman treatment" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts. According to Section 6(1)(c)(i), "cruel treatment and torture" constitute war crimes in non-international armed conflicts. According to Section 6(1)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii), "committing outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment", constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1039. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "you cannot exercise on prisoners physical or mental torture nor any form of coercion to obtain any type of information".[881] It further states that "it is especially prohibited to submit [the wounded and sick] to torture".[882] This prohibition also applies to civilians in occupied territories.[883] The manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[884]

1040. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that mental and physical torture against all protected persons is prohibited in international as well as non-international armed conflicts.[885] It stipulates that torture and inhuman

[881] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.016.
[882] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.001.
[883] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.012.
[884] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 8.001.
[885] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 3.10, 3.25, 4.15, 4.29 and 7.04.

treatment and wilful causing of grievous suffering or serious injury to the body or health of protected persons are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[886]

1041. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that civilians shall "not be subjected to harsh, cruel or degrading treatment". It also states that after the capture of a combatant, "no physical or mental pressure may be exerted in order to extract further information". With regard to POWs, the manual provides that "no torture or other forms of physical or mental coercion may be employed". It also states that crimes of torture or inhuman treatment of protected persons warrant the institution of criminal proceedings.[887]

1042. Australia's Defence Force Manual prohibits physical and mental torture, inhuman treatment or brutality and states that "torturing or inhumanely treating protected persons", "wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health of protected persons" and "mistreating PW . . . torturing, subjecting them to inhuman treatment" are grave breaches which warrant the institution of criminal proceedings.[888]

1043. Belgium's Manual for Soldiers states that POWs and enemy soldiers who are no longer able to fight shall not be subjected to mental or physical torture. The manual considers this prohibition to be a general principle and specifies that it also applies to prisoners of war.[889]

1044. According to Belgium's Law of War Manual, "the Detaining Power cannot exercise mental or physical torture on prisoners".[890] It adds that torture and inhuman treatment are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[891]

1045. Benin's Military Manual provides that "nobody shall be subjected to physical or mental torture . . . nor to inhuman or degrading treatment".[892]

1046. The Instructions to the Muslim Fighter issued by the ARBiH in Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1993 state that "Islam likewise forbids the torture and brutalisation of prisoners of war".[893]

1047. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that soldiers are prohibited to submit the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to "inhuman treatment or torture of any kind".[894] It also provides that "prisoners must be protected against any act of violence, insults and public curiosity".[895]

1048. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "no physical or mental torture, or any other form of coercion, shall be inflicted on PWs or detainees to force them

[886] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[887] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), §§ 603, 709, 713 and 1305(a).
[888] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 945, 953, 1022, 1219, 1221 and 1315(a)–(b) and (n).
[889] Belgium, Manual for Soldiers (undated), pp. 7, 10 and 62, slide 5/1.
[890] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), pp. 46 and 55.
[891] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[892] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 5 and Fascicule III, p. 4.
[893] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Instructions to the Muslim Fighter (1993), § c.
[894] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[895] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 36(1).

to provide information of any kind".[896] It stipulates that "any form of torture or cruelty, are forbidden".[897] It also states that belligerents are forbidden to use physical or moral coercion against protected persons.[898] It further states that "the following acts are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever, whether committed by civilian or by military agents . . . torture of all kinds, whether physical or mental".[899] The manual adds that torture is an act against humanity and that "torture and inhumane treatment along with wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked" is a grave breach of GC I, GC II and AP I.[900] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. It adds that AP II contains a "statement of fundamental guarantees prohibiting at any time and anywhere . . . cruel treatment, such as torture".[901]

1049. Canada's Code of Conduct states as a general rule the prohibition of "any form of abuse, including torture".[902] Regarding the 1984 Convention against Torture, the manual explains that "it is a service and a criminal offence to torture a PW or detained person. Any form of physical or psychological abuse is prohibited."[903] It further states that "where interrogation or debriefing is conducted by qualified and authorized personnel, no physical or mental torture, or any other form of coercion, shall be inflicted on PWs or detainees to force them to provide information of any kind".[904] The manual also provides a list of 11 fundamental rules, among which is "any form of abuse, including torture, is prohibited".[905]

1050. China's PLA Rules of Discipline which regulated the behaviour of the Red Army during the Chinese civil war, and were later used by the PLA, provided that prisoners of war were not to be maltreated.[906]

1051. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "nobody shall be subjected to mental or physical torture . . . cruel or degrading treatment".[907]

1052. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that persons hors de combat, the wounded and sick and detained persons shall not be subjected to torture or cruel or humiliating treatment.[908] It adds that the civilian population shall not

[896] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 24.
[897] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-7, § 61.
[898] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-4, §§ 32–33.
[899] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), pp. 11-7/11-8, § 63.
[900] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-1, § 4, p. 16-2, § 12 and p. 16-3, § 17.
[901] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-2, § 10 and p. 17-3, § 21.
[902] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6.
[903] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 6.
[904] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 11.
[905] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Chapter 3, § 6.
[906] China, PLA Rules of Discipline (1947), Point 8.
[907] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 5.
[908] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 29

be tortured.[909] The manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[910]

1053. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits torture and inhuman treatment of the wounded and sick, shipwrecked, prisoners of war and civilians.[911]

1054. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that "torture, inhumane treatment, acts causing great suffering or serious injury and degrading and inhumane practices" are grave breaches of IHL and war crimes.[912]

1055. According to Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL, detainees must be protected against all acts of violence, including physical or mental torture and cruel or humiliating treatment.[913]

1056. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic prohibits torture, threats or other forms of coercion of detained persons to obtain military information. It further states that "inhuman treatment of civilians is a violation of the law of war".[914]

1057. Ecuador's Naval Handbook provides with regard to prisoners of war and civilians that "torture or inhumane treatment, subjection to public insult or curiosity" are representative war crimes.[915]

1058. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that physical or mental torture is prohibited.[916]

1059. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces lists respect for the integrity of persons and their human dignity and the prohibition of torture among the ten basic rules. It also states that torture is a violation of human rights.[917]

1060. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended prohibits any kind of cruel treatment and torture of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians.[918]

1061. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "no one shall be subject to physical or psychological torture . . . nor cruel or degrading treatment".[919] The manual lists torture, inhuman treatment and inhuman and degrading practices among war crimes.[920]

1062. France's LOAC Teaching Note includes torture among prohibited criminal acts and behaviour which are criminally prosecuted. It provides that "every

[909] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 30.
[910] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 42.
[911] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[912] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), Annex 9, p. 56.
[913] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), §§ 4–5.
[914] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), pp. 8 and 9.
[915] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5(1)–(2).
[916] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 10.
[917] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), Rules 3 and 7, pp. 3, 14 and 18.
[918] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[919] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.2.
[920] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.

captured combatant shall be protected from torture".[921] It further stipulates that "torture, . . . inhuman and degrading treatment, attacks on physical integrity or on health" are grave breaches and war crimes under the law of armed conflict.[922]

1063. France's LOAC Manual provides that the "authorities are responsible for the . . . physical integrity of persons in their power".[923] The manual refers to Article 7 of the 1998 ICC statute and stipulates that torture and inhuman and degrading treatment are crimes against humanity.[924] It further provides that torture is prohibited by the law of armed conflict and in particular by the 1984 Convention against Torture.[925] It also states that one of the three main principles common to IHL and human rights law is the principle of inviolability, which guarantees every human being the right to respect for his or her physical and mental integrity.[926]

1064. Germany's Military Manual provides that one of the fundamental rules governing the treatment of POWs is the prohibition on treating them inhumanely or dishonourably.[927] It adds that when questioned, "no physical or mental torture, nor any form of coercion, may be inflicted on prisoners of war".[928] It further states that "torture and inhumane treatment . . . [and] wilfully causing great suffering, serious injury to body or health" are grave breaches of IHL.[929]

1065. Hungary's Military Manual provides that "torture, inhumane treatment, acts causing great suffering or serious injury and degrading and inhumane practices" are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and war crimes.[930]

1066. India's Army Training Note prohibits ill-treatment, harassment of civilians and torture.[931]

1067. Indonesia's Directive on Human Rights in Trikora states that "respect for personal and human dignity consists of no acts of torture, no acts of cruelty, ill-treatment or inhuman punishment".[932]

1068. Indonesia's Field Manual specifies that although the government has the right to use legitimate force against rebels, the fundamental principles of the Geneva Conventions still apply and the Indonesian armed forces have to ensure that the personal dignity of POWs is respected in all circumstances.[933]

1069. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "the rationale behind the law of war is that even in the midst of the inferno, there are grave deeds that

[921] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), pp. 2 and 3.
[922] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[923] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 32.
[924] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 45.
[925] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 51 and 52.
[926] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 122.
[927] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 704.
[928] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 713.
[929] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[930] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 90.
[931] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 4/23, §§ 10–12.
[932] Indonesia, Directive on Human Rights in Trikora (1995), § 4(a).
[933] Indonesia, Field Manual (1979), Section 1, § 4 and Section 3, § 5.

must not be committed . . . torture of prisoners".[934] The manual specifies that a combatant hors de combat is entitled to special rights, i.e. protection against physical and mental harm and that "torture and imprisonment under inhuman conditions are absolutely forbidden".[935]

1070. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territories, civilians shall not be subject to brutality and torture. It also stipulates that the ill-treatment of prisoners of war is a war crime.[936]

1071. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "no physical or mental torture, nor any form of coercion may be used to obtain [information]". It stipulates that "no physical or mental torture of prisoners is permitted". The manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[937]

1072. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "no mental or physical torture of prisoners of war is allowed". It also states that one of the seven fundamental rules of IHL is that nobody shall be subject to mental or physical torture or to humiliating or degrading treatment.[938]

1073. Mali's Army Regulations provides that attacks on the physical integrity, in particular torture, of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians are a grave breach of the laws and customs of war. It adds that from the moment of their capture, "prisoners of war must be treated humanely. They must be protected against all acts of violence, against insults and public curiosity. They have the right of respect for their honour."[939]

1074. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits the torture and cruel treatment of the sick, wounded and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians.[940]

1075. The Military Manual of the Netherlands restates the prohibition of torture contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, Article 17 GC III, Article 75 AP I and Article 4 AP II.[941]

1076. New Zealand's Military Manual provides, regarding the punishment of POWs, that "cruelty and torture are forbidden".[942] It further provides with regard to internees that "in no case shall disciplinary penalties be inhuman, brutal . . .".[943] The manual restates Article 75(2) AP I.[944] It further stipulates, regarding civilians, that GC IV prohibits the parties from "taking any measure of such character as to cause the physical suffering . . . of protected persons in their hands", including torture.[945] According to the manual, "torture

[934] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 4.
[935] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), pp. 46 and 53.
[936] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, §§ 41(e) and 84.
[937] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, pp. 5–6, and Précis No. 3, pp. 8 and 14.
[938] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-T, § 7, and p. 91, Rule 5.
[939] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[940] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[941] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VII-4, VIII-3, XI-1 and XI-4.
[942] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 931.2.
[943] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1129.2.
[944] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137.2.
[945] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1321.4.

or inhuman treatment of protected persons" is a grave breach of GC I and GC II.[946] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates the prohibition of torture and cruel treatment contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[947]

1077. Nicaragua's Military Manual prohibits torture and cruel treatment.[948] It also states that prisoners have the right to be protected against all forms of violence, in both internal and international armed conflicts.[949]

1078. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that it is particularly prohibited to torture the wounded and sick.[950] It specifies that torture or inhuman treatment and wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and serious war crimes.[951]

1079. Nigeria's Military Manual recalls the content of Article 12 GC I and prohibits subjecting the wounded and sick to torture. It adds that military forces "are not allowed to make recourse to physical or mental torture or any form of coercion".[952]

1080. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces lists the prohibition of torture as one of the ten basic rules. The manual also prohibits the ill-treatment of unresisting wounded persons.[953]

1081. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines provides that "prisoners must be respected" and that "it is forbidden to . . . torture or mistreat them".[954]

1082. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines instructs soldiers that "no physical or mental torture of prisoners of war is permitted".[955]

1083. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians "shall not be subjected to physical or mental torture . . . or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment".[956]

1084. Russia's Military Manual states that prohibited methods of warfare include "torture aimed at obtaining information of any kind".[957] It further prohibits the torture and cruel treatment of victims of war, namely the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, POWs and the civilian population.[958]

1085. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that it is prohibited for soldiers in combat to make an attack on the integrity or dignity of the wounded, sick, shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians, including cruel treatment or any type of torture.[959]

[946] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1702.1.
[947] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1807.1, see also § 1812.1.
[948] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Articles 7(1) and 14(31).
[949] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Articles 6 and 14(18).
[950] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[951] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(a).
[952] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), Chapter 2, §§ 4 and 9.
[953] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), Rule 7 and pp. 7–9.
[954] Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), § 4(a).
[955] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 7.
[956] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 34, § 2.
[957] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 5(b).
[958] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 8(a).
[959] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), § 2.

1086. Senegal's IHL Manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. It points out that one of the fundamental guarantees common to the IHL conventions and the 1948 UDHR is the prohibition of torture and humiliating, cruel and degrading treatment.[960]

1087. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that "inhuman and degrading practices are grave breaches of AP I".[961] It further states that "torture or inhuman treatment and . . . wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health" are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[962] Regarding the treatment of prisoners of war, the manual states that "it is forbidden to obtain further information through . . . physical or mental torture or coercion".[963]

1088. Spain's LOAC Manual lists the obligations of the detaining power, inter alia, that "it is prohibited to use physical or mental torture to obtain information" from prisoners of war.[964] According to the manual, POWs have the right "not to be subjected to any form of pressure or torture".[965] It adds that it is prohibited at all times and in all places to subject POWs to torture, whether physical or mental, whether committed by military or civilian agents.[966] Regarding the penal and disciplinary regime for POWs, the manual states that "it is prohibited . . . generally speaking, all forms of torture and cruelty".[967] The manual contains the provisions of Article 75 AP I.[968] Under the manual, torture or inhuman treatment, wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health and any deliberate act or omission endangering the health or physical and mental integrity committed by medical personnel are war crimes.[969]

1089. Sweden's Military Manual provides that military persons and civilians in the power of a party to the conflict shall not be tortured or mistreated.[970]

1090. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are part of customary international law.[971] It provides that "torture or inhuman treatment" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[972] The manual also states that "protected persons may not be exposed to any form of physical or mental coercion".[973]

1091. Switzerland's military manuals provide that enemy civilians shall have their human dignity and honour respected and not be tortured or subjected to inhuman treatment or mental and physical cruelty.[974] The Basic Military

[960] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3, 4 and 23.
[961] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 38(b).
[962] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 40.
[963] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 62.
[964] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.4.h.(1), see also § 8.3.b.(2).
[965] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 6.4.h.(2).
[966] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.c.
[967] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.7.b.
[968] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.c.
[969] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.2.a.(2).
[970] Sweden, Military Manual (1976), p. 28.
[971] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[972] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 93.
[973] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[974] Switzerland, Military Manual (1984), p. 34; Teaching Manual (1986), p. 43; Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 106, 147–147.

Manual provides that "torture or inhuman treatment . . . wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health" are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[975] It also provides for the punishment of the ill-treatment of enemy combatants who surrender.[976]

1092. Togo's Military Manual provides that "nobody will be subjected to physical or mental torture . . . nor to inhuman or degrading treatment".[977]

1093. Uganda's Code of Conduct requires members of the armed forces not to abuse, insult, shout at or beat any member of the public.[978]

1094. The UK Military Manual prohibits measures against protected persons (POWs, civilians) which would cause physical suffering, including torture and brutal treatment.[979] The manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[980] It provides that "torture or inhuman treatment" of prisoners of war is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[981]

1095. The UK LOAC Manual provides that the "wounded and sick of the opposing forces must not be tortured".[982] With respect to prisoners of war, the Manual states that "a PW is not required to provide any further information and no physical or mental torture nor any form of coercion may be used to obtain it" and adds that "in no case, may disciplinary punishments be inhumane, brutal or dangerous to health".[983] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[984]

1096. The US Field Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[985] The manual provides that "in no case shall disciplinary penalties be inhuman, brutal or dangerous for the health of internees".[986] The manual specifies that "torture or inhuman treatment" is a war crime under the Geneva Conventions.[987]

1097. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that both human rights law and IHL "safeguard such fundamental rights as freedom from torture or cruel and inhuman punishment". It further refers to Article 12 GC II, which provides that sick and wounded members of the opposing forces shall not be subjected to torture.[988]

1098. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook prohibits "torture, threats, or other coercion against prisoners of war to obtain further information".[989]

[975] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 192(a).
[976] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 194.
[977] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 11, Fascicule II, p. 5 and Fascicule III, p. 4.
[978] Uganda, Code of Conduct (1986), Rule 1.
[979] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 42, 205, 282 and 549.
[980] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 131. [981] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(a).
[982] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 2.
[983] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 29, § 9 and p. 32, § 19(d), see also Annex A, p. 48, § 18(f) and p. 49, § 19(e).
[984] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 12, p. 42, § 2. [985] US, Field Manual (1956), § 11.
[986] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 93, 163, 215, 271 and 326. [987] US, Field Manual (1956), § 502.
[988] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 11-5 and 12-2(a).
[989] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-2(a).

1099. The US Soldier's Manual and Instructor's Guide provide that no physical or mental torture, nor any other form of coercion, may be inflicted on detainees.[990] The Soldier's Manual provides that inhumane treatment of civilians is a violation of the law of war for which every soldier can be prosecuted and that "inhumane treatment of any person is a capital offence prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever".[991]

1100. The US Naval Handbook provides with regard to prisoners of war and civilians that "torture or inhumane treatment, subjection to public insult or curiosity" are representative war crimes.[992]

National Legislation

1101. Albania's Military Penal Code criminalises mistreatment of protected persons as a war crime.[993]

1102. Argentina's Code of Military Justice as amended provides that the ill-treatment of prisoners of war is an offence.[994]

1103. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who "mistreats or puts in serious danger the health or physical or mental integrity of any protected person, [or] subjects them to torture or inhuman treatment".[995] It also provides for the punishment of members of the armed forces who subject detainees to humiliating or degrading treatment.[996]

1104. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "torture and inhuman treatment", and "wilfully causing great suffering or other actions threatening physical or mental health", during an armed conflict, constitute crimes against the peace and security of mankind.[997]

1105. Australia's War Crimes Act provides that the following are war crimes:

> (iv) Torture of civilians,
> . . .
> (ix) internment of civilians under inhuman conditions
> . . .
> (xxx) Ill-treatment of wounded and prisoners of war, including –
>
> (a) transportation of wounded and prisoners of war under improper conditions;
> (b) public exhibition or ridicule of prisoners of war.[998]

[990] US, Soldiers' Manual (1984), p. 5; Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 10.
[991] US, Soldiers' Manual (1984), pp. 16 and 20.
[992] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.1.
[993] Albania, Military Penal Code (1995), Articles 73–75.
[994] Argentina, Code of Military Justice as amended (1951), Article 746.
[995] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 289, introducing a new Article 873 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[996] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[997] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.1(2)–(3) and Article 390.2(1), see also Article 392 (torture or cruel treatment of civilians as crimes against humanity) and Article 393 (inflicting severe damage to health as part of a genocide campaign).
[998] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3.

1106. Australia's War Crimes Act as amended identifies "causing grievous bodily harm" and "wounding" as serious war crimes.[999]

1107. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1000]

1108. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute: "genocide by causing serious bodily or mental harm", including torture; crimes against humanity, including torture; and war crimes, including torture and inhumane treatment in international armed conflicts, cruel treatment and torture in non-international armed conflicts, and outrages upon personal dignity in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[1001]

1109. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, all kinds of torture and outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, carried out against civilians are prohibited. It also prohibits cruel treatment and torture, as well as attacks upon personal dignity, including humiliating and degrading treatment of prisoners of war.[1002]

1110. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code punishes anyone who inflicts "severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, upon a person detained or whose liberty was restricted in any other way".[1003]

1111. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act mentions torture in the list of crimes against humanity. It also provides that ill-treatment of civilians and of prisoners of war is a war crime.[1004] In addition, it states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[1005]

1112. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[1006]

1113. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that wilfully causing grievous bodily harm to, or inhumane treatment of, persons who have laid down their arms or are defenceless, of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, medical and religious personnel, prisoners of war, the civilian population in an occupied

[999] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Sections 6(1) and 7(1).
[1000] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[1001] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.4, 268.13, 268.25, 268.26, 268.58, 268.72, 268.73 and 268.74.
[1002] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 17(2) and 21(1)–(2).
[1003] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 113.
[1004] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Article 3(2)(a) and (d).
[1005] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[1006] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).

territory or in the conflict zone or other persons enjoying international protection is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1007]

1114. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that torture or other inhuman treatment and wilfully causing great suffering or serious damage to physical integrity or health constitute crimes under international law.[1008]

1115. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that subjecting civilians, prisoners of war, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked to torture or inhuman treatment and causing great suffering to physical and mental health is a war crime.[1009] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[1010]

1116. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[1011]

1117. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that ordering and committing acts of torture and inhuman treatment, causing great suffering or other injuries to the body and health of the wounded, sick, shipwrecked, medical personnel, prisoners of war and the civilian population, is a war crime.[1012]

1118. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that torture or inhuman treatment, wilfully causing great suffering or injuries to physical and mental health, is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[1013]

1119. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 . . . which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[1014]

1120. Cameroon's Penal Code as amended states that torture may not be justified in any circumstance, including a state of war or internal political instability.[1015]

[1007] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(1).
[1008] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(2), see also Article 1(1)(2)–(3) (genocide).
[1009] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 154(1), 155 and 156.
[1010] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433(1), 434 and 435.
[1011] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[1012] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 410(a), 411(a) and 412(a).
[1013] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(b)–(c), (B)(t) and (C)(a)–(b), see also Article 2(b) (genocide) and Article 3(f) (crimes against humanity).
[1014] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.
[1015] Cameroon, Penal Code as amended (1967), Article 132 bis.

1121. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions] . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1016]

1122. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes defined in Articles 6, 7 and 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[1017]

1123. Under Chile's Code of Military Justice, seriously injuring prisoners of war and committing acts of serious violence against civilians, the wounded, sick and POWs are considered an "offence against international law".[1018]

1124. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that "torturing of non-combatants . . . inflicting on them inhuman treatment [and] ill-treating prisoners of war or wounded persons" constitute war crimes.[1019]

1125. Under China's Criminal Code as amended, it is a criminal offence to cruelly injure innocent civilians and ill-treat prisoners of war during armed conflict and in areas of military operations.[1020]

1126. Colombia's Penal Code punishes anyone who, during an armed conflict, carries out or orders the carrying out of acts of torture, serious wounding of protected persons or inhuman and degrading treatment.[1021]

1127. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, "causing serious bodily or mental harm" to the members of an ethnical, racial or religious group, as such, with intent to destroy the group, in whole or in part, constitutes a crime of genocide.[1022] Moreover, "torture", when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, is a crime against humanity.[1023] The Act further defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1024]

1128. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1025]

1129. Under Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, organising, ordering or carrying out, in time of war or occupation, acts of torture or inhuman treatment of the civilian population constitutes a "crime against the civilian population".[1026] It adds that torture or inhuman treatment or causing great

[1016] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[1017] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1018] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Articles 261(1) and 262.
[1019] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3(16), (19) and (29).
[1020] China, Criminal Code as amended (1997), Articles 446 and 448.
[1021] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Articles 136, 173 and 146.
[1022] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 1.
[1023] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
[1024] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[1025] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[1026] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(1).

injuries and suffering to prisoners of war and internees is a "crime against prisoners of war".[1027]

1130. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that it is a war crime to subject the civilian population, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical or religious personnel to acts of torture, inhuman treatment or causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health.[1028]

1131. Cuba's Military Criminal Code punishes anyone who severely ill-treats a wounded or sick prisoner.[1029]

1132. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[1030]

1133. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended provides that "a person who violates the provisions . . . of international law by inhumanly maltreating . . . members of the enemy's armed forces who have laid down their weapons" commits a crime.[1031]

1134. The Code of Military Justice of the Dominican Republic punishes any member of the armed forces who mistreats prisoners of war or causes them severe injuries.[1032]

1135. El Salvador's Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who maltreats prisoners of war.[1033]

1136. Under El Salvador's Penal Code, "anyone who, during an international or a civil war, . . . causes damage to physical or mental health . . . of the civilian population . . . [or] maltreats prisoners of war" commits a crime.[1034]

1137. The Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador provide for the punishment of anyone who "in a situation of international or internal armed conflict, subjects another person to any type of torture or causes physical and mental suffering".[1035]

1138. Under Estonia's Penal Code, acts of torture, mistreatment, inhumane treatment or serious attacks on the physical and mental integrity of combatants who have laid down their arms, civilians, prisoners of war and interned civilians constitute war crimes.[1036]

1139. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, the organisation, ordering or carrying out of "torture or inhuman

[1027] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 139(1).
[1028] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158, 159, 160 and 176.
[1029] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Article 42(1)–(2).
[1030] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).
[1031] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 259(a)(1) and 263(1).
[1032] Dominican Republic, Code of Military Justice (1953), Article 201(1).
[1033] El Salvador, Code of Military Justice (1934), Article 69(1).
[1034] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 362, see also Article 361 (causing physical or psychological damages as part of a genocide campaign).
[1035] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Tortura en conflicto armado".
[1036] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), §§ 97, 98 and 101, see also § 89 (torture as a crime against humanity) and § 90 (torture as part of a genocide campaign).

treatment or other acts entailing dire suffering or physical or mental injury" to civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked or prisoners and interned persons constitutes a war crime.[1037]

1140. Under France's Penal Code, "causing serious bodily or mental harm" to members of a group constitutes genocide when "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".[1038]

1141. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, in international or internal armed conflicts, it is a crime to torture or treat inhumanely or to cause great suffering or injuries that threaten the physical and mental health of a person.[1039]

1142. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, > treats a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law cruelly or inhumanely by causing him or her substantial physical or mental harm or suffering, especially by torturing ... that person, [or] ... treats a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law in a gravely humiliating and degrading manner.[1040]

1143. Greece's Military Penal Code contains penalties for members of the Greek armed forces who insult, threaten or commit violent or inhumane acts against POWs.[1041]

1144. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, inflicting "serious bodily or mental injury to the members of a [national, ethnic, racial or religious group]", as part of a genocide campaign, constitutes a "crime against the freedom of peoples".[1042]

1145. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[1043]

1146. Iraq's Military Penal Code states that causing suffering to wounded persons is an offence.[1044]

1147. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are punishable offences.[1045] In addition,

[1037] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Articles 282(a), 283(a) and 284(a), see also Article 281 (torture as part of a genocide campaign).
[1038] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 211-1, see also Article 212-1 (torture and inhuman treatment as crimes against humanity).
[1039] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(2)(b)–(c), see also Article 407 (torture as part of a genocide campaign).
[1040] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(3) and (9), see also § 6(1)(2) (torture as part of a genocide campaign) and § 7(1)(5) and (8) (torture as a crime against humanity).
[1041] Greece, Military Penal Code (1995), Articles 160–163.
[1042] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 155(1)(b).
[1043] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[1044] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Article 115(c).
[1045] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).

any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3, of Articles 12 GC I, 12 GC II, 17, 87 and 89 GC III, and 32 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(2) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2) AP II, are punishable offences.[1046]

1148. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law includes the ill-treatment of the civilian population, of prisoners of war and of persons on the seas in its definition of war crimes.[1047]

1149. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of any member of the military who tortures or ill-treats prisoners of war while escorting, guarding or holding them in custody. It also punishes acts of violence or threats of injuries to prisoners of war, as well as forcing them to provide information which would compromise the interests of their country.[1048]

1150. Under Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, torture and inhuman treatment, wilfully causing great suffering, and attempts on physical and mental health are war crimes.[1049]

1151. Kazakhstan's Penal Code provides that inhuman treatment of prisoners of war or the civilian population is a punishable offence.[1050]

1152. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1051]

1153. Kenya's Constitution provides that no person shall be subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading punishment or other treatment.[1052]

1154. Kuwait's Constitution states that fundamental rights, including the prohibition on torture or humiliating treatment, apply equally in war time.[1053]

1155. Under Latvia's Criminal Code, acts of torture constitute a war crime.[1054]

1156. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, torture or inhuman treatment, wilfully causing great suffering or inflicting grave injures to the physical and mental integrity or health of protected persons, constitute war crimes.[1055]

1157. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, torture and inhumane treatment of protected persons is a war crime.[1056]

[1046] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1047] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b) (this section also includes causing serious bodily or mental harm as a crime of genocide).
[1048] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Articles 209, 211 and 212(1).
[1049] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(2)–(4).
[1050] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Article 159.
[1051] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[1052] Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 74(1).
[1053] Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Article 31.
[1054] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Section 74, see also Section 71 (torture as part of a genocide campaign).
[1055] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(2)–(4).
[1056] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 335.

1158. Under Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes, "acts of violence and cruelty committed against prisoners of war, detainees, deportees, accused, witnesses or persons compelled to work" constitute war crimes.[1057]

1159. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides that torture or inhuman treatment, wilfully causing great suffering or injuries to the physical and mental integrity or health of protected persons, constitute grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[1058]

1160. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1059]

1161. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[1060]

1162. Under Mali's Penal Code, torture and inhuman treatment, wilfully causing great suffering or injuries to the physical and mental integrity or health of protected persons is a war crime.[1061]

1163. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1062]

1164. Mexico's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of acts of torture and causing suffering to a member of a national, ethnic, racial or religious group, as part of a genocide campaign.[1063] It adds that "compelling the accused to confess by [using] incommunicado, intimidation or torture" is a crime committed against the administration of justice.[1064]

1165. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended provides penalties for persons who mistreat or otherwise cause physical or mental injuries to prisoners and detainees.[1065]

1166. Moldova's Penal Code punishes the ordering or commission of acts of torture and inhuman treatment of the wounded, sick, prisoners, civilians, civilian medical personnel or members of the Red Cross and other similar organisations.[1066]

1167. Mozambique's Military Criminal Law provides that cruel acts against the civilian population, the wounded and sick or prisoners is a criminal offence.[1067]

[1057] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 2(3).
[1058] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1(1)–(2).
[1059] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[1060] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[1061] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Articles 31(b)–(c) and 31(i)(21), see also Article 29(f) and (k) (torture and inhuman treatment as crimes against humanity).
[1062] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[1063] Mexico, Penal Code as amended (1931), Article 149 bis.
[1064] Mexico, Penal Code as amended (1931), Article 225(XII).
[1065] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Article 324.
[1066] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 137.
[1067] Mozambique, Military Criminal Law (1987), Article 83(b).

1168. Myanmar's Defence Service Act provides for the punishment of "any person subject to this law who . . . is guilty of any disgraceful conduct of a cruel, indecent or unnatural kind".[1068]

1169. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands includes "torture of civilians" "internment of civilians under inhuman conditions" and "ill-treatment of . . . prisoners of war" in its list of war crimes.[1069]

1170. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit "in the case of an international armed conflict, one of the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions", including "torture . . . or inhuman treatment [and] intentionally causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health".[1070] Furthermore, it is also a crime to commit, "in the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, a violation of Article 3 common to all of the Geneva Conventions", including "cruel treatment and torture" of persons taking no active part in the hostilities.[1071]

1171. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1072]

1172. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, genocide includes the crimes defined in Article 6(b) of the 1998 ICC Statute, crimes against humanity include the crimes defined in Article 7(1)(f) of the Statute and war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(a)(ii), (b)(xxi) and (c)(i) and (ii) of the Statute.[1073]

1173. Nicaragua's Military Penal Law provides for the punishment of persons found guilty of seriously mistreating prisoners.[1074]

1174. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of acts of torture, inhuman and degrading treatment and causing grave injuries and suffering to prisoners of war, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked and civilians.[1075]

1175. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who "tortures, causes grave physical and mental suffering, . . . degrades the personality of the victim or diminishes the victim's physical or mental capacity, as well as causes physical pain or psychological damage". It also provides a sanction

[1068] Myanmar, Defence Services Act (1959), Section 45(a).
[1069] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.
[1070] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(1)(b) and (c), see also Article 3(1)(b) (causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of a group as part of a genocide campaign), Article 4(1)(f) and (k) (torture and inhumane acts which intentionally cause great suffering or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health as crimes against humanity) and Article 8 (torture committed by a public servant or other person working in the service of the authorities in the course of his duties).
[1071] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 6(1)(a).
[1072] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[1073] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Sections 9(2), 10(2) and 11(2).
[1074] Nicaragua, Military Penal Law (1980), Article 80.
[1075] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Articles 54 and 55(3).

for the civilian not subject to military jurisdiction who "before, during or after hostilities, inhumanely treats the civilian population".[1076]

1176. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, "torture or other inhuman treatment" and "wilfully causing great suffering or injury to the physical integrity or health" of persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977, constitute war crimes.[1077]

1177. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation, ... whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1078]

1178. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[1079]

1179. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[1080]

1180. Paraguay's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in violation of the international laws of war, armed conflict or military occupation, subjects civilians, prisoners of war and the wounded and sick to inhumane treatment.[1081]

1181. Under Peru's Code of Military Justice, the ill-treatment of prisoners of war or of unresisting wounded persons is a violation of the law of nations.[1082]

1182. Peru's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of acts of torture.[1083]

1183. Under the War Crimes Trial Executive Order of the Philippines, applicable to acts committed during the Second World War, "ill-treatment of ... the civilian population of or in occupied territory" or "ill-treatment of prisoners of war or internees or persons on the seas or elsewhere; improper treatment of hostages" are violations of the laws and customs of war.[1084] It adds that "inhumane acts committed against civilian populations before or during ... [the Second World War]" also constitute war crimes whether or not in violation of the local laws.[1085]

[1076] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Articles 445 and 456.
[1077] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(2)–(3), see also Article 208.1 (wilfully causing great injury to the physical integrity as part of a genocide campaign) and Article 208.2 (torture or inhuman acts as crimes against humanity).
[1078] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[1079] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[1080] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).
[1081] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 320(2), see also Article 309 (torture by a public official) and 319(2) (inhuman treatment as part of a genocide campaign).
[1082] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Articles 94 and 95(1).
[1083] Peru, Penal Code as amended (1991), Article 321.
[1084] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), Part II(b)(2).
[1085] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), Part II(b)(3).

1184. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, causes "serious harm to [the] health [of persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection], subjects them to torture or cruel or inhumane treatment".[1086]
1185. Portugal's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in times of war, armed conflict or occupation, commits torture or cruel, degrading or inhumane treatment or injures the physical or mental integrity of the civilian population, the wounded and sick or prisoners of war.[1087]
1186. Romania's Law on the Punishment of War Criminals provides that "criminals of war" are persons who:

> inhumanely treated prisoners and hostages of war, . . . ordered or committed acts of cruelty with regard to the population of the territory affected by war, . . . [treated inhumanely the supervised] prisoners [in camps], including those interned, deported, imprisoned for political purposes, or who have been convicted and are doing forced labour.[1088]

1187. Romania's Penal Code provides for the punishment of inhuman treatment or torture of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, members of civil medical services, the Red Cross or similar organisations, prisoners of war, or of all persons in the hands of the adverse party.[1089]
1188. Under Russia's Criminal Code, the cruel treatment of civilians or prisoners of war is a "crime against the peace and security of mankind".[1090]
1189. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1091]
1190. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[1092]
1191. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended provides that "a person who, during the war, violates the provisions . . . of international law by inhumanly maltreating . . . members of the enemy's armed forces who have laid down their weapons" commits a crime.[1093]
1192. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, subjecting civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical and religious personnel to acts of

[1086] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 123(2), see also Article 118(1) (causing serious harm to health as part of a genocide campaign).
[1087] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Article 241(1)(b)–(c).
[1088] Romania, Law on the Punishment of War Criminals (1945), Article I(a)–(b) and (e).
[1089] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358.
[1090] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 356(1), see also Article 357 (causing injuries as part of a genocide campaign).
[1091] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[1092] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[1093] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Articles 259(a)(1) and 263(1).

torture and inhuman treatment or the infliction of great suffering and injury to their physical and mental health is a war crime.[1094]

1193. Spain's Military Criminal Code punishes military personnel who ill-treat or wilfully torture surrendered or helpless enemy combatants. It also punishes the soldier who treats inhumanely or causes serious injury to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war or the civilian population.[1095]

1194. Spain's Penal Code punishes anyone who, during an armed conflict, commits the following acts against a protected person: ill-treatment, torture, inhuman treatment or causing great suffering.[1096]

1195. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, (a) a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions; or (b) a breach of common Article 3 of the Conventions, is guilty of an indictable offence".[1097]

1196. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides that causing severe suffering to persons enjoying special protection under international law is a crime against international law.[1098]

1197. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who commits acts of torture, inhuman treatment, causes great suffering or threatens the physical or mental state of protected persons.[1099]

1198. Thailand's Prisoners of War Act provides for the punishment of "whoever threatens, insults or subjects a prisoner of war to humiliating or degrading treatment" or "whoever inflicts physical or mental torture or any other form of coercion on prisoners of war to secure information of any kind whatsoever, or threatens, insults, or exposes a prisoner of war who refuses to answer to any unpleasant or disadvantageous treatment of any kind". This prohibition also extends to persons protected by common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[1100]

1199. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(b) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(f) of the Statute, and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(ii), (b)(xxi) and (c)(i) and (ii) of the Statute.[1101]

1200. Ukraine's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of cruel treatment and ill-treatment of prisoners of war or civilians.[1102]

[1094] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 374(1), 375 and 376.
[1095] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Articles 69, 76 and 77(5).
[1096] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Articles 609 and 612(3).
[1097] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1).
[1098] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Article 22(6).
[1099] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(2)(b)–(c), see also Article 398 (causing harm to health as part of a genocide campaign).
[1100] Thailand, Prisoners of War Act (1955), Sections 13–14 (prisoners of war) and Section 18 (persons protected by common Article 3).
[1101] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[1102] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Articles 434 and 438(1), see also Article 442 (causing grave injuries as part of a genocide campaign).

1201. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1103]

1202. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[1104]

1203. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(b) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(f) of the Statute, and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(ii), (b)(xxi) and (c)(i) and (ii) of the Statute.[1105]

1204. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as torture and ill-treatment of prisoners of war or persons on the seas, ill-treatment of hostages or civilians of or in an occupied territory.[1106]

1205. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as ill-treatment of the civilian population of or in occupied territory, prisoners of war or internees or persons on the seas or elsewhere or improper treatment of hostages.[1107]

1206. In 1961, the US Congress adopted an act on foreign assistance to other nations in which it defined torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment as "gross violations of internationally recognized human rights" that would call into question whether or not a country should receive military aid.[1108]

1207. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[1109]

1208. Under Uzbekistan's Criminal Code, ordering or carrying out acts of torture constitutes a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1110]

1209. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an

[1103] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[1104] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[1105] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[1106] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.
[1107] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945), Regulation 2(b).
[1108] US, Foreign Assistance Act as amended (1961), Sections 116 and 502 B.
[1109] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[1110] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Article 152.

offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[1111]

1210. Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who commits grave attempts against persons who surrender or against women, the elderly or children in the territories occupied by national forces ... and other acts of cruelty".[1112]

1211. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of "anyone who maltreats prisoners of war or soldiers".[1113]

1212. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, the following acts constitute war crimes: "torture or maltreatment of prisoners or causing them intentionally great suffering" or "committing grave attempts to the physical and mental integrity and health of prisoners of war and civilians".[1114]

1213. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) considers that, during war or enemy occupation, "any person who ordered, assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of ... torture" committed a war crime.[1115]

1214. Under the Penal Code of the SFRY (FRY), subjecting civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical and religious personnel to acts of torture, inhuman treatment, infliction of great suffering and injury to their physical and mental health is a war crime.[1116]

1215. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions".[1117]

National Case-law

1216. Numerous cases were brought after the Second World War in Australia, China, Israel, Netherlands, Norway and US, in which the defendants were found guilty of having tortured or ill-treated prisoners of war and civilians.[1118]

1217. In the Tanaka Chuichi case before an Australian military court in 1946, the accused had ill-treated Sikh prisoners of war, had cut their hair and beards and had forced some of them to smoke a cigarette, acts contrary to their culture

[1111] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[1112] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(2).
[1113] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 275.
[1114] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 21(2)–(3).
[1115] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).
[1116] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Articles 142(1), 143, 144 and 150, see also Article 141 (causing grave injuries as part of a genocide campaign).
[1117] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).
[1118] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Baba Masao case, Judgement, 2 June 1947; China, War Crimes Military Tribunal of the Ministry of National Defence at Nanking, Takashi Sakai case, Judgement, 29 August 1946; Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961; Israel, Supreme Court, Eichmann case, Judgement, 29 May 1962; Netherlands, Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar, Motomura case, Judgement, 18 July 1947; Netherlands, Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar, Notomi Sueo case, Judgement, 4 January 1947; Norway, Court of Appeal, Bruns case, Judgement, 20 March 1946; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 19 February 1948.

and religion. The Court found the accused guilty of violations of, inter alia, the 1929 Geneva POW Convention.[1119]

1218. In the Drago case in 1997, the Cantonal Court in Tuzla in Bosnia and Herzegovina convicted a person of causing serious bodily harm, ill-treatment and inhuman acts against detained civilians and military personnel. In its judgement, the Court referred to the Geneva Conventions and AP I and to the protection afforded to certain categories of persons in international armed conflicts.[1120]

1219. In the Brocklebank case in 1996, the Court Martial Appeal Court of Canada acquitted a Canadian soldier accused of torture and negligent performance of a military duty in respect of acts committed while serving as a member of the peacekeeping mission in Somalia.[1121]

1220. In its judgement in the Benado Medwinsky case in 1980, Chile's Appeal Court of Santiago in denounced the torture inflicted on the plaintiff. It held that the state of emergency could not justify the torture in question, which was an assault on the life and physical integrity of the person.[1122]

1221. In its judgement in the Videla case in 1994 concerning the abduction, torture and murder of Lumi Videla in 1974, Chile's Appeal Court of Santiago stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions obliged parties to non-international armed conflicts "to extend humanitarian treatment to persons taking no active part in the hostilities or who have placed themselves hors de combat for various reasons, and prohibits at any time and in any place . . . cruel treatment and torture, humiliating and degrading treatment". The Court found that the acts charged constituted grave breaches under Article 147 GC IV and that the prison order issued against the defendant should therefore be upheld.[1123]

1222. In 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court held that the prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II coincided with the protection of human dignity and life and the prohibition of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment established by Articles 11 and 12 of the Constitution.[1124]

1223. In its judgement in the Eichmann case in 1961, the District Court of Jerusalem held that the following behaviour caused serious bodily or mental harm and, therefore, amounted to a violation of Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law: "detention [of Jews] in ghettos, transit camps and concentration camps in conditions which were designed to cause their degradation, deprivation of their rights as human beings and to suppress them and cause them inhumane suffering and torture".[1125]

[1119] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Tanaka Chuichi case, Judgement, 12 July 1946.
[1120] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cantonal Court in Tuzla, Drago case, Judgement, 13 October 1997.
[1121] Canada, Court Martial Appeal Court, Brocklebank case, Judgement, 2 April 1996.
[1122] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago, Benado Medwinsky case, Judgement, 29 July 1980.
[1123] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago (Third Criminal Chamber), Videla case, Judgement, 26 September 1994.
[1124] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.
[1125] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961.

1224. In its judgement in the General Security Service case in 1999 dealing with the interrogation methods of the General Security Service, Israel's High Court held that:

> A reasonable investigation is necessarily one free of torture, free of cruel, inhuman treatment of the subject and free of any degrading handling whatsoever... There is a prohibition on the use of "brutal or inhuman means" in the course of an investigation... This conclusion is in perfect accord with (various) International Law treaties – to which Israel is a signatory – which prohibit the use of torture, "cruel, inhuman treatment" and "degrading treatment"... These prohibitions are "absolute". There are no exceptions to them and there is no room for balancing.[1126]

1225. In its judgement in the Heering case in 1946, the UK Military Court at Hanover found that acts of "ill-treatment of prisoners of war in violation of the laws and usages of war causing their death, for example by forced marches with insufficient food or medical supplies," amounted to war crimes.[1127]

1226. In the Filartiga case in 1984, a civil lawsuit filed in a US court against an official from Paraguay who had allegedly tortured the applicant – a national of Paraguay – in Paraguay, the US government, acting as amicus curiae, submitted that the practice of official torture amounted to a violation of customary international law.[1128]

Other National Practice

1227. In 1990, it was reported that the government in Afghanistan had admitted that it practised torture and that it needed to reform its policy.[1129]

1228. In 1993, Azerbaijan's Ministry of the Interior ordered that troops "in zones of combat, during military operations... must not subject an enemy taken prisoner to acts of violence or torture".[1130]

1229. During the Chinese civil war, the PLA's policy forbade the killing, torture and insulting of prisoners of war.[1131] The same policy was adopted in the context of the conflict between China and Japan.[1132] In an interview conducted by a British journalist in 1937, the Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party stated that "we still leniently treat the captured ordinary Japanese soldiers and those lower ranking officers who were forced to fight, they shall not be insulted [1126] Israel, High Court, General Security Service case, Joint Judgement, 6 September 1999, § 23.

[1127] UK, Military Court at Hanover, Heering case, Judgement, 25–26 January 1946.
[1128] US, District Court of the Eastern District of New York, Filartiga case, Judgement, 10 January 1984.
[1129] AFP, Communiqué, 28 June 1990.
[1130] Azerbaijan, Ministry of the Interior, Command of the Troops of the Interior, Order No. 42, Baku, 9 January 1993, § 2.
[1131] China, Political Report on the United Government to the 7th Plenary Session of National Representatives of the Chinese Communist Party by Mao Zedong, 24 April 1945, Selected Works of Mao Zedong, Vol. 4, The People's Press, Beijing, p. 1039.
[1132] China, Instruction on Implementing the Works of Land Reform and Consolidation of the Party by Deng Xiaoping, 6 June 1948, Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping, Vol. 1, The People's Press, Beijing, p. 122.

or condemned and would be set free after being informed of the consistency of the interests of the Japanese and the Chinese people".[1133]

1230. In a note submitted to the ICRC in 1967, Egypt qualified "torture of captives, wounded and civilians by barbaric means" as a "flagrant violation of the elementary principle of humanity, and a serious breach of the laws of war and the Geneva Conventions of 1949".[1134]

1231. The instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, state that "captured combatants and civilians in the hands of the enemy, as well as inhabitants of occupied territory, shall be subject neither to torture (physical or mental), nor to cruel or degrading treatment".[1135]

1232. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[1136]

1233. According to the Explanatory Memorandum to the Act Implementing the 1984 Convention against Torture presented to the parliament of the Netherlands, torture is an "offence under civil criminal law, but, if committed in times of armed conflict, it is considered a violation of the international law of armed conflict and therefore an offence under section 8 of the Criminal Law in Wartime Act".[1137]

1234. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that:

> We support the principle that [all persons who are in the power of a party to a conflict and who do not benefit from more favorable treatment under the Conventions] not be subjected to violence to life, health, or physical or mental well-being . . . The basic core of Protocol II is, of course, reflected in common article 3 of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions and therefore is, and should be, a part of generally accepted customary law: This specifically includes its prohibitions [of] . . . degrading treatment.[1138]

1235. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that:

[1133] China, Mao Zedong Talking with British Journalist Bertram on 25 October 1937, Selected Works of Mao Zedong, Vol. II, Foreign Language Press, Beijing, 1967, pp. 47–59.

[1134] Egypt, Note to the International Committee of the Red Cross, 7 July 1967, annexed to Letter dated 17 July 1967 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/8064, 17 July 1967, p. 3, §§ 1 and 1(B).

[1135] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1995, Section 6, § 63.

[1136] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.

[1137] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Explanatory Memorandum to the Act Implementing the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, 1986–1987 Session, Doc. 20 042, No. 3, pp. 3–4.

[1138] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 427 and 430–431.

Iraqi prisoners of war will not be mistreated and will be provided humane and safe detention.
...
The Government of Iraq appears to have subjected [captured American and coalition military personnel] to unlawful treatment for propaganda purposes and coercion – both physical and mental – in order to secure information and statements from them. If these broadcasts are authentic, Iraq has committed serious violations of the Third Geneva Convention.
...
The Government of the United States protests the apparently unlawful coercion and misuse of prisoners of war for propaganda purposes, the failure to respect their honor and well-being, and the subjection of such individuals to public humiliation.
...
The mistreatment of prisoners of war is a war crime, and the inhumane treatment of prisoners of war is a grave breach of the Convention.
...
The Government of the United States again reminds the Government of Iraq that prisoners of war must at all times be humanely treated.[1139]

1236. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that "the Government of the United States reminds the Government of Iraq that Iraqi individuals who are guilty of ... other war crimes such as the exposure of POWs to mistreatment, coerced statements, public curiosity and insult, are personally liable".[1140]

1237. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that "all US POWs suffered physical abuse at the hands of their Iraqi captors, in violation of Articles 13, 14 and 17 GPW. Most POWs were tortured, a grave breach, in violation of Article 130 GPW". The report further dealt with specific crimes, including "inhumane treatment of Kuwaiti and third country civilians ... in violation of Articles 27, 32 and 147 GC [IV]", and mentioned "torture and other inhumane treatment of POWs, in violation of Articles 13, 17, 22, 25, 26, 27, and 130 GC [III]".[1141]

1238. In 1992, in reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV committed in the former Yugoslavia, the US described acts of "torture of prisoners" perpetrated by the parties to the conflict.[1142]

[1139] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 19 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991, p. 4.

[1140] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 21 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22130, 22 January 1991, p. 4.

[1141] US, Department of Defense, Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, pp. 630, 632, 634 and 635.

[1142] US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention, annexed to Letter dated 22 September 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24583, 23 September 1992, pp. 6–7; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Second

1239. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[1143]

1240. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that military necessity will not justify derogation of the right not to be subjected to torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.[1144]

1241. Order No. 579 issued in 1991 by the YPA Chief of Staff of the SFR (FRY) provides that YPA units shall:

> apply all means to prevent any attempt of . . . mistreatment of the civilian population and all persons who are not taking part in armed conflict, persons who surrender or hoist the white flag in order to surrender, the wounded and sick, religious and medical personnel and all other protected persons.[1145]

1242. The Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe states that Zimbabwe believes that civilians of any description should be protected from torture or other forms of inhumane treatment.[1146]

1243. In 1988, in connection with a non-international armed conflict, government officials of a State denied that it was the government's policy to torture prisoners. They did, however, admit that it might have occurred in a few instances.[1147]

1244. In 1989, the government of a State denied allegations that it had a policy of torturing prisoners. It also denounced, with reference to humanitarian principles and the Geneva Conventions, the intention of an armed opposition group to cut off one leg of all of its prisoners.[1148]

1245. In 1990, in a report on the activities of the governmental army in the context of a non-international armed conflict, the ICRC concluded that the army had behaved in an alarming way towards its detainees, by indulging in ill-treatment.[1149]

1246. In 1994, a State denied allegations concerning its practice of torturing detainees and insisted that torture of prisoners was a crime and that perpetrators should be punished.[1150]

Submission), annexed to Letter dated 22 October 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24705, 23 October 1992, p. 10; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Third Submission), annexed to Letter dated 5 November 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24791, 10 November 1992, pp. 11–16; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Fourth Submission), annexed to Letter dated 7 December 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24918, 8 December 1992, pp. 12–13.

[1143] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

[1144] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3 and 5.7.

[1145] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Political Department, Order No. 579, 14 October 1991, § 2.

[1146] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 5.6.

[1147] ICRC archive document.

[1148] ICRC archive document.

[1149] ICRC archive document.

[1150] ICRC archive document.

1247. In 1994, in the context of a non-international armed conflict, a State denied accusations of torture by a separatist entity and issued specific orders forbidding the torture of captured enemy combatants.[1151]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1248. In a resolution adopted in 1990 in the context of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, the UN Security Council condemned the mistreatment and oppression of Kuwaiti and third-State nationals.[1152]

1249. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council demanded that all detainees in camps, prisons and detention centres in Bosnia and Herzegovina receive humane treatment.[1153]

1250. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council expressed grave alarm at the widespread violations of IHL occurring within the territory of the former Yugoslavia, especially in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including abuse of civilians in detention centres, and demanded that all parties and others concerned immediately cease such actions.[1154]

1251. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council expressed deep concern at the deterioration in security and in the humanitarian situation, including torture, in Burundi.[1155]

1252. In 1993, in a statement by its President regarding the treatment of Bosnian Muslims in detention camps by Bosnian Croats, the UN Security Council emphasised that "inhuman treatment and abuses in detention centres violates international humanitarian law".[1156]

1253. In numerous resolutions, the UN General Assembly has condemned the inhuman and degrading treatment of political prisoners, detainees and captured combatants in South Africa, declaring that they should be treated as POWs under international law and accorded the protections laid down in GC III.[1157]

1254. In a resolution adopted in 1974 on the protection of women and children in emergency and armed conflict, the UN General Assembly stated that "all the necessary steps shall be taken to ensure the prohibition of measures such as . . . torture, degrading treatment and violence particularly against the part of the civilian population that consists of women and children". It added that "all forms of . . . cruel and inhuman treatment of women and children, including . . . torture . . . shall be considered criminal".[1158]

[1151] ICRC archive document.
[1152] UN Security Council, Res. 674, 29 October 1990, preamble and § 5.
[1153] UN Security Council, Res. 770, 13 August 1992, § 3.
[1154] UN Security Council, Res. 771, 13 August 1992, preamble and § 3.
[1155] UN Security Council, Res. 1072, 30 August 1996, preamble.
[1156] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/26437, 14 September 1993.
[1157] UN General Assembly, Res. 2547 (XXIV), 11 December 1969, §§ 2–3 and 7; Res. 3103 (XXVIII), 12 November 1974, § 4; Res. 34/93 H, 12 December 1979, §§ 1 and 4; Res. 41/35, 10 November 1986, §§ 6–9 and 13.
[1158] UN General Assembly, Res. 3318 (XXIX), 14 December 1974, §§ 4 and 5.

1255. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly expressed "its outrage at the instances of massive and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including . . . torture".[1159]

1256. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN General Assembly strongly condemned the overwhelming number of human rights violations committed by the authorities of the FRY, the police and the military authorities in Kosovo, including torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, in breach of IHL, including common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II.[1160]

1257. In resolutions on Afghanistan adopted between 1989 and 1992, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded that all parties treat their prisoners according to the recognised principles of IHL and protect them from acts of violence, including torture.[1161]

1258. In resolutions adopted in 1991 and 1992, the UN Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Iraq for not treating prisoners of war and detained civilians according to recognised IHL principles and insisted that it abstain from acts of violence against them, including torture.[1162]

1259. In a resolution adopted in 1994, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded immediate, firm and resolute action by the international community to stop all human rights violations during the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, including torture.[1163]

1260. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned in the strongest terms all violations of human rights and IHL during the conflict in the former Yugoslavia and, in particular, massive and systematic violations, including beatings and torture.[1164]

1261. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all parties to the hostilities in Sudan to protect all civilians from violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including ill-treatment and torture.[1165]

1262. In resolutions adopted in 1988 and 1989 on the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, after reaffirming that GC IV was applicable to the situation, stated that the torture and inhuman treatment of detainees was a war crime under international law.[1166]

[1159] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, pp. 4–5.
[1160] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 8.
[1161] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/67, 8 March 1989, § 11; Res. 1990/53, 6 March 1990, § 5; Res. 1991/78, 6 March 1991, § 6; Res. 1992/68, 4 March 1992, § 6.
[1162] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1991/67, 6 March 1991, § 5; Res. 1992/60, 3 March 1992, § 3.
[1163] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 5.
[1164] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 1.
[1165] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, § 15.
[1166] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1988/10, 31 August 1988, § 3; Res. 1989/4, 31 August 1989, § 3.

1263. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[1167]

1264. In 1992, in a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that the leader of a party to the conflict in Afghanistan had issued a written order which provided that "no person is allowed to insult, threaten, harass . . .[a] prisoner of war".[1168]

1265. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in Sudan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that he had received eye-witness accounts and reports indicating that "if a prisoner is captured and he refuses to change sides, he is cruelly tortured and executed".[1169]

Other International Organisations

1266. In 1993, in a report to EC foreign ministers, the EC Investigative Mission into the Treatment of Muslim Women in the Former Yugoslavia stated that "the mission believes there is now a strong case for clearly identifying [torture and degrading and humiliating treatment] as war crimes, irrespective of whether they occur in national or international conflicts".[1170]

1267. In a resolution adopted in 1985, the Council of the League of Arab States condemned Israel for indulging "in all kinds of violence, persecution and torture against the civilian population" and decided to "call upon the international community to exercise pressure on Israel to stop these practices immediately, in accordance with the provisions of the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949".[1171]

1268. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to strongly condemn Israel for . . . its inhuman practices against the peaceful inhabitants".[1172]

1269. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to strongly condemn Israel for . . . its inhuman practices against the peaceful people".[1173]

[1167] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.
[1168] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1992/33, 17 February 1992, § 51.
[1169] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Sudan, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/62, 20 February 1996, § 9.
[1170] EC, Report of the investigative mission into the treatment of Muslim women in the former Yugoslavia, annexed to Letter dated 2 February 1993 from Denmark to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/25240, 3 February 1993, Annex I, § 42.
[1171] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 4430, 28 March 1985, § 2.
[1172] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5169, 29 April 1992, § 2.
[1173] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5324, 21 September 1993, § 2.

International Conferences

1270. The 21st International Conference of the Red Cross in 1969 adopted a resolution on the protection of prisoners of war in which it recognised that irrespective of GC III, "the international community has consistently demanded humane treatment for prisoners of war, including . . . protection at all times from physical and mental torture [and] abuse".[1174]

1271. The 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1977 adopted a resolution on torture in which it reaffirmed that "torture is contrary to the fundamental principles of the Red Cross" and underlined the need to "make known and ensure respect for those provisions in the Geneva Conventions and Protocols which prohibit torture and those resolutions of the International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent which condemn inhuman and degrading treatment". The Conference therefore condemned "all forms of torture" and urged governments and appropriate international organisations "to ensure application of the international instruments and laws forbidding torture and to do their utmost to eliminate its practice".[1175]

1272. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on torture in which it noted that "torture is condemned and forbidden by international humanitarian law, international instruments relating to human rights and the general principles of international law", but that "despite such prohibition torture is practised to an alarming extent in many countries". The Conference therefore urged governments and international organisations concerned to "make greater efforts to ensure universal respect for these prohibitions" and requested that the UN "expedite the adoption of an international convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and including provision for the effective supervision and enforcement of its application".[1176]

1273. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on torture in which it welcomed with satisfaction "the adoption by the General Assembly of the United Nations, on 10 December 1984, of the Convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" and invited "States to ratify it". The Conference also encouraged States and regional organisations to draft "regional conventions against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, providing efficient supervisory mechanisms".[1177]

1274. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed dismay and condemnation that

[1174] 21st International Conference of the Red Cross, Istanbul, 6–13 September 1969, Res. XI.
[1175] 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross, Bucharest, 15–21 October 1977, Res. XIV, preamble and §§ 1 and 2.
[1176] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. XIV, preamble and §§ 1 and 2.
[1177] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. X, §§ 1 and 2.

"gross and systematic violations and situations that constitute serious obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights continue to occur in all parts of the world, [including] . . . torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment".[1178]

1275. In the Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants declared that they "refuse to accept that . . . prisoners [are] tortured".[1179]

1276. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "strict orders are given to prevent all serious violations of international humanitarian law, including . . . torture . . . and threats to carry out such actions".[1180]

1277. The Final Declaration adopted by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002 expressed deep concern about "the number and expansion of conflicts in Africa" and alarm at "the spread of violence, in particular in the form of . . . torture . . . which seriously violate[s] the rules of International Humanitarian Law".[1181]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1278. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[1182]

1279. In the Tadić case before the ICTY in 1995, the accused was charged with grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (torture, inhuman treatment and wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health), crimes against humanity (inhumane acts) and violations of the laws and customs of war (cruel treatment).[1183] In its judgement in 1997, the Tribunal found the accused guilty of crimes against humanity (inhumane acts) and violations of the laws and customs of war (cruel treatment).[1184]

1280. In the Mrkšić case before the ICTY in 1995, the accused was charged with grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (wilfully causing great suffering),

[1178] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(30).
[1179] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § I(1), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, p. 298.
[1180] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(b).
[1181] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, preamble.
[1182] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.
[1183] ICTY, Tadić case, Second Amended Indictment, 14 December 1995, §§ 6, 11 and 12.
[1184] ICTY, Tadić case, Judgement, 7 May 1997, p. 300.

violations of the laws and customs of war (cruel treatment) and crimes against humanity (inhumane acts).[1185]

1281. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that the prohibition of torture was absolute and non-derogable in any circumstances.[1186] It found the accused guilty of grave breaches of GC IV (wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, torture and inhuman treatment) and violations of the laws and customs of war (cruel treatment and torture).[1187]

1282. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that, in any case, the proposition was warranted that a general prohibition against torture had evolved in customary international law. It added that:

> This prohibition has gradually crystallised from the Lieber Code and The Hague Conventions, in particular articles 4 and 46 of the Regulations annexed to Convention IV of 1907, read in conjunction with the "Martens clause" laid down in the preamble to the same Convention. Torture was not specifically mentioned in the London Agreement of 8 August 1945 establishing the International Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, but it was one of the acts expressly classified as a crime against humanity under article II (1)(c) of Allied Control Council Law No. 10. As stated above, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Protocols of 1977 prohibit torture.
>
> . . .
>
> That these treaty provisions have ripened into customary rules is evinced by various factors. First, these treaties and in particular the Geneva Conventions have been ratified by practically all States of the world. Admittedly those treaty provisions remain as such and any contracting party is formally entitled to relieve itself of its obligations by denouncing the treaty (an occurrence that seems extremely unlikely in reality); nevertheless the practically universal participation in these treaties shows that all States accept among other things the prohibition of torture. In other words, this participation is highly indicative of the attitude of States to the prohibition of torture. Secondly, no State has ever claimed that it was authorised to practice torture in time of armed conflict, nor has any State shown or manifested opposition to the implementation of treaty provisions against torture. When a State has been taken to task because its officials allegedly resorted to torture, it has normally responded that the allegation was unfounded, thus expressly or implicitly upholding the prohibition of this odious practice. Thirdly, the International Court of Justice has authoritatively, albeit not with express reference to torture, confirmed this custom-creating process: in the Nicaragua case it held that common article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, which inter alia prohibits torture against persons taking no active part in hostilities, is now well-established as belonging to the corpus of customary international law and is applicable both to international and internal armed conflicts.
>
> . . .
>
> It therefore seems incontrovertible that torture in time of armed conflict is prohibited by a general rule of international law. In armed conflicts this rule may be applied both as part of international customary law and – if the requisite conditions are met – as treaty law, the content of the prohibition being the same.[1188]

[1185] ICTY, Mrkšić case, Initial Indictment, 26 October 1995, § 26.
[1186] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 454.
[1187] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, Part IV.

The Tribunal further stated that no loopholes had been left in international human rights law with respect to the prohibition of torture. It also held that the prohibition even covered potential breaches, that it imposed an obligation erga omnes and that it had acquired the status of jus cogens. The Tribunal found Anto Furundžija guilty of a violation of the laws and customs of war (torture).[1189]

1283. In its judgement in the Jelisić case in 1999, the ICTY Trial Chamber found Goran Jelisić guilty of causing bodily harm, a violation of the laws and customs of war (cruel treatment) and a crime against humanity (inhumane acts).[1190]

1284. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber, after considering charges of crimes against humanity (inhumane acts) and violations of the laws and customs of war (cruel treatment), found the accused guilty of committing a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5(i) of the 1993 ICTY Statute.[1191]

1285. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of committing grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, inhuman treatment and cruel treatment), crimes against humanity (inhumane acts) and violations of the laws and customs of war (cruel treatment).[1192]

1286. In its judgement in the Kunarac case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that "torture is prohibited under both conventional and customary international law and it is prohibited both in times of peace and during an armed conflict. The prohibition can be said to constitute a norm of jus cogens." The Tribunal found Dragoljub Kunarac and Zoran Vuković guilty of crimes against humanity (torture) and violations of the laws and customs of war (torture).[1193]

1287. In its judgement in the Kordić and Čerkez case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber found Dario Kordić and Mario Čerkez guilty of crimes against humanity (inhumane acts) and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions (inhumane treatment).[1194]

1288. In 1993, the CAT recalled in the context of Afghanistan that no exceptional circumstances could be invoked as a justification of torture.[1195]

1289. In its Annual Report 1980–81, the IACiHR reminded Peru that torture of persons by the forces of order cannot be justified.[1196]

[1188] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, §§ 137–139.
[1189] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, Part IX.
[1190] ICTY, Jelisić case, Judgement, 14 December 1999, § 138.
[1191] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, §§ 822 and 832.
[1192] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, Part VI, Disposition.
[1193] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, §§ 466, 883, 886 and 888.
[1194] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, Part V.
[1195] CAT, Report to the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/48/44, 24 June 1993, §§ 50–62.
[1196] IACiHR, Annual Report 1980–1981, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.54 Doc. 9 rev. 1, p. 112.

1290. In a case concerning Argentina in 1997, the IACiHR considered that the intentional mistreatment of wounded persons would constitute a particularly serious violation of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[1197]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1291. The ICRC Commentary on the Third Geneva Convention states, with reference to Article 17, that:

> The Detaining Power may not . . . exert any pressure on prisoners, and this prohibition even refers to the information specified in the first paragraph of the Article. The holding of prisoners incommunicado, which was practised by certain Detaining Powers in "interrogation camps" during the last war, is also implicitly forbidden by this paragraph, but even more so by Article 126 [GC III].[1198]

1292. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "torture of all kinds, whether physical or mental" and "humiliating and degrading treatment (e.g. enforced prostitution, any form of indecent assault or other outrages upon personal dignity)" are prohibited. It adds that the following acts constitute grave breaches of the law of war "torture or inhuman treatment, causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, [and] inhuman and degrading practices involving outrages upon personal dignity".[1199]

1293. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "civilians and all non-combatants must be respected and protected, and violence to life and person . . . [and] outrages upon personal dignity . . . are specifically prohibited".[1200]

1294. In a declaration issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross reminded the parties of their obligation to respect the physical and moral integrity of non-combatants and persons hors de combat. It also stated that combatants and civilians have the right to the protection of their dignity. The statement recalled the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[1201]

1295. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that attacks on the "physical integrity or personal dignity" of civilians were prohibited. It added, with respect to captured combatants and persons who have laid down their arms, that "subjecting them

[1197] IACiHR, Case 11.137 (Argentina), Report, 18 November 1997, § 189.
[1198] Jean S. Pictet (ed.), Commentary on the Third Geneva Convention, ICRC, Geneva, 1960, p. 163.
[1199] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 192, 195 and 776(a)–(c).
[1200] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.
[1201] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1o. de Enero de 1994, 3 January 1994.

or threatening to subject them to ill-treatment" was a violation of IHL at all times. It further stated that "persons deprived of their freedom, both civilians and military personnel, must always be treated humanely and shall never be tortured".[1202]

1296. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated that, with respect to civilian persons who refrain from acts of hostility, that "violence to their lives and person [and] outrages upon their personal dignity" are prohibited. It added that, with respect to combatants and other persons who are captured, and those who have laid down their arms, that they shall not, in particular, be "ill-treated". It furthermore stated, with respect to detained combatants and civilian persons that "any form of torture or ill-treatment is strictly prohibited".[1203]

1297. In a note on respect for IHL issued in 1996 in the context of an internal armed conflict, the ICRC stated that "officers must be instructed that, whatever the circumstances, any form of ill-treatment is illegal and prohibited".[1204]

1298. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the war crime of "torture or inhuman treatment and wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health" be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court with respect to international armed conflicts. It also proposed that the war crime of "violence to health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular cruel treatment such as torture" be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court with respect to non-international armed conflicts.[1205]

1299. In 1998, in a letter to the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, the Afghan Red Crescent Society noted that the Constitution of Afghanistan, following its adoption of the 1984 Convention against Torture, contained legal provisions outlawing the practice of torture.[1206]

1300. In a communication to the press in 2001, the ICRC reminded the parties to the conflict in Afghanistan that the physical integrity and dignity of persons not taking part in hostilities must not be threatened.[1207]

[1202] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

[1203] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

[1204] ICRC archive document.

[1205] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, §§ 1(ii)–(iii) and 3(i).

[1206] Afghan Red Crescent Society, Letter to the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, 14 June 1998, § 202(2).

[1207] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 01/47, Afghanistan: ICRC calls on all parties to conflict to respect international humanitarian law, 24 October 2001.

VI. Other Practice

1301. In 1979, in a meeting with the ICRC, the leader of an armed opposition group noted that he considered it legitimate to torture prisoners in order to obtain information.[1208]

1302. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "no one shall be subjected to physical or mental torture . . . or cruel or degrading treatment".[1209]

1303. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "a state violates international law if, as a matter of state policy, it practices, encourages, or condones . . . (d) torture or other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment".[1210]

1304. In 1987, in a meeting with the ICRC, the leader of an armed opposition group criticised the inhuman treatment of prisoners by other parties to the conflict and insisted that their own commanders had been instructed to treat captured combatants humanely.[1211]

1305. In 1990, an armed opposition group undertook to refrain from torturing its prisoners and insisted that commanders responsible for such actions had been sanctioned.[1212]

1306. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "torture . . . as well as cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment or punishment and other outrages upon personal dignity" shall remain prohibited.[1213]

Definitions

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1307. Article 1 of the 1984 Convention against Torture defines torture as follows:

"Torture" means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from

[1208] ICRC archive document. [1209] ICRC archive document.
[1210] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 702(d).
[1211] ICRC archive document. [1212] ICRC archive document.
[1213] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(2)(a), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 331.

him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.

1308. Article 2 of the 1985 Inter-American Convention against Torture defines torture as:

any act intentionally performed whereby physical or mental pain or suffering is inflicted on a person for purposes of criminal investigation, as a means of intimidation, as personal punishment, as a preventive measure, as a penalty or for any other purpose. Torture shall also be understood to be the use of methods upon a person intended to obliterate the personality of the victim or to diminish his physical or mental capacities, even if they do not cause physical pain or mental anguish. The concept of torture shall not include physical or mental pain or suffering that is inherent in or solely the consequence of lawful measures, provided that they do not include the performance of the acts or use of the methods referred to in this article.

1309. Article 7(2)(e) of the 1998 ICC Statute defines torture, when a crime against humanity, as "the intentional infliction of severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, upon a person in the custody or under the control of the accused; except that torture shall not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to, lawful sanctions".

Other Instruments

1310. Article 1(1) of the 1975 UN Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment defines torture as:

any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted by or at the instigation of a public official on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or confession, punishing him for an act he has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating him or other persons. It does not include suffering arising only from, inherent in, or incidental to, lawful sanctions to the extent consistent with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.

1311. Principle 6 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that:

No person under any form of detention or imprisonment shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.*

. . .

* The term "cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" should be interpreted so as to extend the widest possible protection against abuses, whether physical or mental, including the holding of a detained or imprisoned person in conditions which deprive him, temporarily or permanently of the use of any of his natural senses, such as sight or hearing, or of his awareness of place and the passing of time.

1312. The 2000 ICC Elements of Crimes defines torture, when a war crime, in part as follows:

1. The perpetrator inflicted severe physical or mental pain or suffering upon one or more persons.
2. The perpetrator inflicted the pain or suffering for such purposes as: obtaining information or a confession, punishment, intimidation or coercion or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind.

1313. The 2000 ICC Elements of Crimes defines inhuman treatment, when a war crime, in part as follows: "The perpetrator inflicted severe physical or mental pain or suffering upon one or more persons".

1314. The 2000 ICC Elements of Crimes defines outrages upon personal dignity, when a war crime, in part as follows:

1. The perpetrator humiliated, degraded or otherwise violated the dignity of one or more persons.
2. The severity of the humiliation, degradation or other violation was of such degree as to be generally recognized as an outrage upon personal dignity.

The Elements of Crimes further specifies, in footnote 49, that:

For this crime, "persons" can include dead persons. It is understood that the victim need not personally be aware of the existence of the humiliation or degradation or other violation. This element takes into account relevant aspects of the cultural background of the victim.

1315. Section 5(2)(d) of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation 2000/15 defines torture, when a crime against humanity, as "the intentional infliction of severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, upon a person in the custody or under the control of the accused; except that torture shall not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to, lawful sanctions".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1316. Australia's Defence Force Manual defines torture as including "any measures of such character as to cause the physical suffering or extermination of protected persons".[1214]

1317. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

Torture is any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as:

[1214] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1219.

a. obtaining from that person or a third person information or confession;
b. punishing that person or a third person for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed;
c. intimidating or coercing that person or a third person; or
d. for any reason based on discrimination of any kind;

when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity.[1215]

1318. France's LOAC Manual refers to the 1984 Convention against Torture and defines torture as:

any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind.[1216]

1319. The US Field Manual restates Article 32 GC IV, which provides that States have agreed not to take any "measures of such character as to cause the physical suffering . . . of protected persons in their hands".[1217]

1320. According to the US Instructor's Guide, "beating a prisoner or applying electric shocks, dunking his head into a barrel of water, and putting a plastic bag over his head to make him talk" are acts of torture and inhumane treatment.[1218]

National Legislation

1321. The US Torture Victim Protection Act defines torture as "any act, directed against an individual in the offender's custody or physical control, by which severe pain or suffering . . . whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on that individual".[1219]

National Case-law

1322. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

1323. In 1994, an official of a State, discussing that State's ratification of the 1984 Convention against Torture, considered that the limit between torture and (deserved) ill-treatment was that which was accepted by the public.[1220]

[1215] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), Glossary, p. 18.
[1216] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 122.
[1217] US, Field Manual (1956), § 271.
[1218] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 10.
[1219] US, Torture Victim Protection Act (1991), Section 3.
[1220] ICRC archive document.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1324. In 1998, in a report on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during wartime, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

> As prohibited by customary norms, the crime of torture requires the intentional infliction of severe mental or physical pain or suffering, and a nexus to government action or inaction. In most, if not all cases described in this report, rape and serious sexual violence during armed conflict may also be prosecuted as torture.[1221]

Other International Organisations

1325. No practice was found.

International Conferences

1326. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1327. In its judgement in the Akayesu case in 1998, the ICTR Trial Chamber defined the essential elements of torture as:

(i) The perpetrator must intentionally inflict severe physical or mental pain or suffering upon the victim for one or more of the following purposes:
  (a) to obtain information or a confession from the victim or a third person;
  (b) to punish the victim or a third person for an act committed or suspected of having been committed by either of them;
  (c) for the purpose of intimidating or coercing the victim or the third person;
  (d) for any reason based on discrimination of any kind.
(ii) The perpetrator was himself an official, or acted at the instigation of, or with the consent or acquiescence of, an official or person acting in an official capacity.[1222]

1328. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber compared the three existing definitions of torture, that is, under the 1975 UN Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, Article 1(1) of the 1984 Convention against Torture, and the 1985 Inter-American Convention on Torture. It concluded that "the definition of torture contained in the Torture Convention includes the definitions contained in both the Declaration on Torture and the Inter-American Convention and thus reflects a consensus which the Trial Chamber considers to be representative of customary international law".[1223] The Trial Chamber also stated that "whenever rape and other forms of sexual violence meet the aforementioned criteria, then they shall constitute torture, in the same manner as any other acts that meet this criteria".[1224] It further concluded that:

[1221] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, §§ 53 and 55.

[1222] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 594.

> The Trial Chamber thus finds that the offence of wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health constitutes an act or omission that is intentional, being an act which, judged objectively, is deliberate and not accidental, which causes serious mental or physical suffering or injury. It covers those acts that do not meet the purposive requirements for the offence of torture, although clearly all acts constituting torture could also fall within the ambit of this offence[.]
> ...
> In sum, the Trial Chamber finds that inhuman treatment is an intentional act or omission, that is an act which, judged objectively, is deliberate and not accidental, which causes serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constitutes a serious attack on human dignity. The plain, ordinary meaning of the term inhuman treatment in the context of the Geneva Conventions confirms this approach and clarifies the meaning of the offence. Thus, inhuman treatment is intentional treatment which does not conform with the fundamental principle of humanity, and forms the umbrella under which the remainder of the listed "grave breaches" in the Conventions fall. Hence, acts characterised in the Conventions and Commentaries as inhuman, or which are inconsistent with the principle of humanity, constitute examples of actions that can be characterised as inhuman treatment.
> ...
> In this framework of offences, all acts found to constitute torture or wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health would also constitute inhuman treatment. However, this third category of offence is not limited to those acts already incorporated into the other two and extends further to other acts which violate the basic principle of humane treatment, particularly the respect for human dignity. Ultimately, the question of whether any particular act which does not fall within the categories of the core group is inconsistent with the principle of humane treatment, and thus constitutes inhuman(e) treatment, is a question of fact to be judged in all the circumstances of the particular case.
> ...
> In light of the foregoing, the Trial Chamber finds that cruel treatment constitutes an intentional act or omission, that is an act which, judged objectively, is deliberate and not accidental, which causes serious mental or physical suffering or injury or constitutes a serious attack on human dignity. As such, it carries an equivalent meaning and therefore the same residual function for the purposes of common article 3 of the Statute, as inhuman treatment does in relation to grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions. Accordingly, the offence of torture under common article 3 of the [1949] Geneva Conventions is also included within the concept of cruel treatment. Treatment that does not meet the purposive requirement for the offence of torture in common article 3, constitutes cruel treatment.[1225]

1329. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber spelled out some specific elements that pertained to torture as "considered from the specific viewpoint of international criminal law relating to armed conflicts". Thus, the Trial Chamber considered that the elements of torture in an armed conflict required that torture:

[1223] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 459.
[1224] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 496.
[1225] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 511, 543–544 and 552.

(i) consists of the infliction by act or omission of severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental; in addition
(ii) this act or omission must be intentional;
(iii) it must aim at obtaining information or a confession, or at punishing, intimidating, humiliating or coercing the victim or a third person; or at discriminating, on any ground, against the victim or a third person;
(iv) it must be linked to an armed conflict;
(v) at least one of the persons involved in the torture process must be a public official or must at any rate act in a non-private capacity, e.g. as a de facto organ of a State or any other authority-wielding entity.

As is apparent from this enumeration of criteria, the Trial Chamber considers that among the possible purposes of torture one must also include that of humiliating the victim.[1226]

This finding was confirmed in the same case by the Appeals Chamber in 2000.[1227]

1330. In its judgement in the Kordić and Čerkez case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber found that:

The crime of wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health constitutes an intentional act or omission which causes serious mental or physical suffering or injury, provided the requisite level of suffering or injury can be proven. This crime is distinguished from that of inhuman treatment in that it requires a showing of serious mental or physical injury. Thus, acts where the resultant harm relates solely to an individual's human dignity are not included within this offence.[1228]

The Trial Chamber also confirmed the definition of inhumane treatment and cruel treatment as set out in the Delalić case.[1229] In relation to "other inhumane acts", it held that:

It is not controversial that the category "other inhumane acts" provided for in Article 5 is a residual category, which encompasses acts not specifically enumerated. Trial Chambers have considered the threshold to be reached by these other acts in order to be incorporated in this category, reaching similar conclusions as to the serious nature of these acts. The Tadić Trial Chamber found that "inhumane acts" are acts "similar in gravity to those listed in the preceding subparagraphs". In the words of the Kupreškić Trial Chamber, in order to be characterised as inhumane, acts "must be carried out in a systematic manner and on a large scale. In other words, they must be as serious as the other classes of crimes provided for in the other provisions of Article 5." The Tadić Trial Chamber, in relation to the requisite

[1226] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 162.
[1227] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement on Appeal, 21 July 2000, § 111.
[1228] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, § 245.
[1229] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, § 256.

nature of "other inhumane acts", held that they "must in fact cause injury to a human being in terms of physical or mental integrity, health or human dignity."[1230]

1331. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that it was "of the view that treatment may be cruel whatever the status of the person concerned".[1231]

1332. In its judgement in the Kunarac case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber departed from the findings on the definition of torture confirmed in the Furundžija case. In general terms it held that:

> The Trial Chamber is therefore wary not to embrace too quickly and too easily concepts and notions developed in a different legal context. The Trial Chamber is of the view that notions developed in the field of human rights can be transposed in international humanitarian law only if they take into consideration the specificities of the latter body of law.[1232]

More specifically with regard to torture, the Trial Chamber stated that:

> Three elements of the definition of torture contained in the Torture Convention are, however, uncontentious and are accepted as representing the status of customary international law on the subject:
>
> (i) Torture consists of the infliction, by act or omission, of severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental.
> (ii) This act or omission must be intentional.
> (iii) The act must be instrumental to another purpose, in the sense that the infliction of pain must be aimed at reaching a certain goal . . .
>
> . . . On the other hand, [the following] elements remain contentious:
>
> (i) The list of purposes the pursuit of which could be regarded as illegitimate and coming within the realm of the definition of torture.
>
> . . .
>
> (iii) The requirement, if any, that the act be inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity.
>
> The Trial Chamber is satisfied that the following purposes have become part of customary international law: (a) obtaining information or a confession, (b) punishing, intimidating or coercing the victim or a third person, (c) discriminating, on any ground, against the victim or a third person. There are some doubts as to whether other purposes have come to be recognised under customary international law. The issue does not need to be resolved here, because the conduct of the accused is appropriately subsumable under the above-mentioned purposes . . .
>
> . . .
>
> The Trial Chamber concludes that the definition of torture under international humanitarian law does not comprise the same elements as the definition of torture generally applied under human rights law. In particular, the Trial Chamber is of the view that the presence of a state official or of any other authority-wielding person in the torture process is not necessary for the offence to be regarded as torture under international humanitarian law . . .

[1230] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, § 269.
[1231] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 186.
[1232] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, § 471.

. . . On the basis of what has been said, the Trial Chamber holds that, in the field of international humanitarian law, the elements of the offence of torture, under customary international law are as follows:

(i) The infliction, by act or omission, of severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental.
(ii) The act or omission must be intentional.
(iii) The act or omission must aim at obtaining information or a confession, or at punishing, intimidating or coercing the victim or a third person, or at discriminating, on any ground, against the victim or a third person.[1233]

1333. In its General Comment on Article 7 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1992, the HRC stated that the prohibition of torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment "relates not only to acts that cause physical pain but also to acts that cause mental suffering to the victim". It also noted that "prolonged solitary confinement of the detained or imprisoned person may amount to acts prohibited by Article 7".[1234] On the basis of these considerations, the HRC has found a breach of Article 7 ICCPR on numerous occasions.[1235]

1334. In Améndola Massiotti and Baritussio v. Uruguay in 1982, the HRC held that the following conditions of imprisonment amounted, as inhuman treatment, to a violation of Article 7 of the 1966 ICCPR:

During the rainy period the water was 5 to 10 cm deep on the floor of the cells. In three of the cells, each measuring 4m by 5m, 35 prisoners were kept. The prison had no open courtyard and the prisoners were kept indoors under artificial light all day. On 1 August 1977 Carmen Améndola Massiotti was transferred to Punta Rieles prison. There she was kept in a hut measuring 5m by 10m. The place was overcrowded with 100 prisoners and the sanitary conditions were insufficient. She was subjected to hard labour and the food was very poor.[1236]

1335. In Deidrick v. Jamaica in 1998, the HRC held that:

With regard to the deplorable conditions of detention at St. Catherine's District Prison, the Committee notes that author's counsel has made precise allegations, related thereto, i.e that the author is locked-up in his cell 23 hours a day, no mattress or bedding are provided, that there is lack of artificial light and no integral sanitation, inadequate medical services, deplorable food and no recreational facilities etc. All of this has not been contested by the State party, except in a general manner saying that these conditions affect all prisoners. In the Committee's opinion, the conditions described above, which affect the author directly are such as to violate

[1233] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, §§ 483–484 and 496–497.
[1234] HRC, General Comment No. 20 (Article 7 ICCPR), 10 April 1992, §§ 5–6.
[1235] See, e.g., HRC, Marais v. Madagascar, Views, 24 March 1983, § 17(4) (three years in a cell measuring 1m by 2m); Larrosa Bequio v. Uruguay, Views, 29 March 1983, § 10(3) (one visitor in seven months); Gómez de Voituret v. Uruguay, Views, 10 April 1984, § 12(2) (solitary confinement for several months); Espinoza de Polay v. Peru, Views, 6 November 1997, § 8(6) (total isolation for a year).
[1236] HRC, Améndola Massiotti and Baritussio v. Uruguay, Views, 26 July 1982, §§ 10–13.

his right to be treated with humanity and with respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, and are therefore contrary to the [1966 ICCPR]. It finds that holding a prisoner in such conditions of detention constitutes inhuman treatment in violation of article 10, paragraph 1, and of article 7.[1237]

1336. In its decision in Krishna Achutan v. Malawi in 1994, the ACiHPR held that:

The conditions of overcrowding and acts of beating and torture that took place in prisons in Malawi contravened [Article 5 of the 1981 ACHPR]. Aspects of the treatment . . . such as excessive solitary confinement, shackling within a cell, extremely poor quality food and denial of access to adequate medical care, were also in contravention of this article.[1238]

1337. In its decision in International Pen and Others v. Nigeria in 1998 concerning the trial and execution of Ken Saro-Wiwa and other co-defendants, the ACiHPR found a violation of Article 5 of the 1981 ACHPR. It held that the detention of Mr Saro-Wiwa in leg irons and handcuffs with no evidence of attempts to escape constituted actions which humiliated the individual or forced him to act against his will or conscience.[1239]

1338. In its decision in Civil Liberties Organisations v. Nigeria in 1999, the ACiHPR dealt with the allegation that the conditions of detention of persons convicted Nigeria constituted inhuman and degrading treatment. The Commission stated that "deprivation of light, insufficient food and lack of access to medicine or medical care can . . . constitute violations of Article 5" of the ACHPR.[1240]

1339. In its report in the Greek case in 1969, the ECiHR stated that the notion of inhuman treatment:

covers at least such treatment as deliberately causes severe suffering, mental or physical, which, in the particular situation, is unjustifiable. The word torture is often used to describe inhuman treatment, which has a purpose, such as the obtaining of information or confessions, or the infliction of punishment, and it is generally an aggravated form of inhuman treatment. Treatment or punishment may be said to be degrading if it grossly humiliates the victim before others or drives the detainee to act against his/her will or conscience.[1241]

The ECiHR also concluded that the conditions of detention in several camps amounted to breaches of Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR, notably the combination of "complete absence of heating in winter, . . . lack of hot water, . . . poor lavatory

[1237] HRC, Deidrick v. Jamaica, Views, 9 April 1998, § 9.3.
[1238] ACiHPR, Krishna Achutan v. Malawi, Decision, 25 October–30 November 1994; see also AI v. Malawi, Decision, 13–22 March 1995.
[1239] ACiHPR, International Pen and Others v. Nigeria, Decision, 22–31 October 1998.
[1240] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisations v. Nigeria (151/96), Decision, 15 November 1999, §§ 25–26.
[1241] ECiHR, Greek case, Report, 5 November 1969, § 186.

facilities, [and] unsatisfactory dental treatment", as well as "the conditions of gross overcrowding and its consequences".[1242]

1340. In its admissibility decisions in two cases in 1978 and 1980, the ECiHR found that solitary confinement did not, in itself, constitute a form of inhuman treatment. Although prolonged periods of solitary confinement were undesirable, regard had to be had to the particular situation, the stringency of the measure, its duration, the objective pursued and its effects on the person concerned.[1243]

1341. In Kröcher and Möller v. Switzerland in 1982, the ECiHR stated that "complete sensory isolation coupled with total social isolation, can destroy the personality and constitutes a form of treatment which cannot be justified by the requirements of security or any other reason". The ECiHR considered, however, that there was "a distinction between this and removal from association with other prisoners for security, disciplinary or protective reasons" which would not constitute inhuman treatment or degrading treatment or punishment.[1244]

1342. In its judgement in Selçuk and Asker v. Turkey in 1996, the ECiHR stated that the burning of the applicants' homes in their presence and the deliberate destruction of their belongings which caused them a great deal of anguish and suffering, particularly in view of the fact that one of the applicants was both elderly and infirm, constituted inhuman and degrading treatment.[1245] The ECtHR upheld this finding in 1998, adding that even if it had been found that the acts in question were carried out without any intention of punishing the applicants, but only to prevent their homes being used by terrorists, this would not provide a justification for the ill-treatment.[1246]

1343. In its judgement in the Campbell and Cosans case in 1982, the ECtHR considered the issue of corporal punishment against schoolchildren and stated that "provided it is sufficiently real and immediate, a mere threat of conduct prohibited by Article 3 (art. 3) may itself be in conflict with that provision. Thus, to threaten an individual with torture might in some circumstances constitute at least 'inhuman treatment'."[1247]

1344. In its judgement in Aydin v. Turkey in 1997, the ECtHR held that:

> Rape of a detainee by an official of the State must be considered to be an especially grave and abhorrent form of ill-treatment given the ease with which the offender can exploit the vulnerability and weakened resistance of his victim. The Court is satisfied that the accumulation of acts of physical and mental violence inflicted on the applicant and the especially cruel act of rape to which she was subjected [1242] ECiHR, Greek case, Report, 5 November 1969, Part B, Chapter IV(B)(VI), Section A, § 34, Section C, §§ 16–17 and Section D, § 21.

[1243] ECiHR, Ensslin, Baader and Raspe v. FRG, Admissibility Decision, 8 July 1978, pp. 109–110; X v. UK, Admissibility Decision, 10 July 1980, pp. 99–100.
[1244] ECiHR, Kröcher and Möller v. Switzerland, Report, 16 December 1982, § 62.
[1245] ECiHR, Selçuk and Asker v. Turkey, Report, 28 November 1996, §§ 171–178.
[1246] ECtHR, Selçuk and Asker v. Turkey, Judgement, 24 April 1998, §§ 78–80.
[1247] ECtHR, Campbell and Cosans case, Judgement, 25 February 1982, § 26.

amounted to torture, indeed the Court would have reached that conclusion on either of these grounds taken separately.[1248]

1345. In its judgement in the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found that, in relation to the living conditions of Greek Cypriots in the Karpas region of northern Cyprus, there had been a violation of Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR in that the Greek Cypriots had been subjected to discrimination amounting to degrading treatment.[1249]

1346. In its Second General Report in 1992, the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture stated that:

> The principle of proportionality requires that a balance be struck between the requirements of the case and the application of a solitary confinement-type regime, which is a step that can have very harmful consequences for the person concerned. Solitary confinement can, in certain circumstances, amount to inhuman and degrading treatment; in any event, all forms of solitary confinement should be as short as possible.[1250]

1347. In its judgement in the Velásquez Rodríguez case in 1988, the IACtHR stated that "prolonged isolation and deprivation of communication are in themselves cruel and inhuman punishment, harmful to the psychological and moral integrity of the person and a violation of the right of any detainee to respect for his inherent dignity as a human being".[1251]

1348. In a case concerning El Salvador in 1989, the IACiHR found that the mutilation of suspected guerrillas amounted to inhumane treatment and therefore constituted a violation of Article 5 of the 1969 ACHR.[1252]

1349. In a case concerning Peru in 1996, the IACiHR found that rape perpetrated by a public official constituted torture under Article 5 of the 1969 ACHR.[1253]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1350. No practice was found.

1351. In its judgement in the Castillo Petruzzi and Others case in 1999, the IACtHR found that the victims were held incommunicado for 36, respectively 37 days. The Court referred to the Velásquez Rodríguez case and repeated that "prolonged isolation and deprivation of communication are in themselves cruel and inhuman punishment, harmful to the psychological and moral integrity of the person and a violation of the right of any detainee to respect for his inherent dignity as a human being". It concluded by saying [1248] ECtHR, Aydin v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 September 1997, §§ 83–86.

[1249] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, § 311.
[1250] European Committee for the Prevention of Torture, Second General Report, Doc. CPT/Inf. (92)3, 13 April 1992, § 56.
[1251] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, § 156, see also § 187.
[1252] IACiHR, Case 10.179 (El Salvador), Resolution, 28 September 1989, § 8.
[1253] IACiHR, Case 10.970 (Peru), Report, 1 March 1996, Section V(A)(3)(a).

that "the terms of confinement that the military tribunals imposed upon the victims . . . constituted cruel, inhuman and degrading forms of punishment that violated Article 5 of the [1969 ACHR]".[1254]

VI. Other Practice

1352. No practice was found.

E. Corporal Punishment

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1353. Article 87, third paragraph, GC III provides that corporal punishment is forbidden.

1354. Under Article 32 GC IV, corporal punishment is prohibited.

1355. Article 100, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "the disciplinary regime in places of internment shall be consistent with humanitarian principles, and shall in no circumstances include regulations imposing on internees any physical exertion dangerous to their health or involving physical or moral victimization". The second paragraph provides that punishment drill is prohibited.

1356. Under Article 75(2)(iii) AP I, corporal punishment is prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever, whether committed by civilian or by military agents. Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1255]

1357. Under Article 4(2)(a) AP II, any form of corporal punishment is prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever. Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1256]

1358. Article 3 of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that the Court is competent to prosecute violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II, which include "any form of corporal punishment".

Other Instruments

1359. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

1360. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

1361. According to Article 4(a) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, the Tribunal has jurisdiction over violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva

[1254] IACtHR, Castillo Petruzzi and Others case, Judgement, 30 May 1999, § 194 and 198.
[1255] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[1256] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

Conventions and of AP II, including "violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons, in particular . . . any form of corporal punishment".

1362. Article 20(f)(i) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "any form of corporal punishment" committed in violation of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict not of an international character is a war crime.

1363. Article 3(1) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides, inter alia, that corporal punishment shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat.

1364. According to Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, any form of corporal punishment, against persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations and persons placed hors de combat are prohibited at any time and in any place.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1365. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that corporal punishment of prisoners of war and civilians is prohibited, in both international and internal armed conflicts.[1257]

1366. Australia's Defence Force Manual states, with regard to inhabitants of occupied territory, that corporal punishment is prohibited.[1258]

1367. Benin's Military Manual states that "no one shall be subjected . . . to corporal punishment".[1259]

1368. Canada's LOAC Manual prohibits corporal punishment of POWs, civilians and protected persons in international and non-international armed conflicts.[1260]

1369. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "nobody shall be subjected to corporal punishment".[1261]

1370. According to Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL, detainees must be protected against all acts of violence, including corporal punishment.[1262]

1371. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that no one shall be subjected to corporal punishment.[1263]

1372. France's LOAC Manual refers to Article 75 AP I and provides that corporal punishment is a war crime.[1264]

[1257] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 3.25, 4.15 and 7.04.
[1258] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1219.
[1259] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 5 and Fascicule III, p. 4.
[1260] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-7, § 61, p. 11-4, § 33, p. 11-8, § 63-a(iii) and p. 17-3, § 21.
[1261] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 5.
[1262] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), §§ 4–5.
[1263] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.2.
[1264] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 45.

1373. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War refers to GC III and provides that corporal punishment of POWs is prohibited.[1265]
1374. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territories, civilians shall not be subject to corporal punishment.[1266]
1375. According to Madagascar's Military Manual, one of the seven fundamental rules of IHL is that nobody shall be subjected to corporal punishment.[1267]
1376. The Military Manual of the Netherlands restates the prohibition of corporal punishment contained in Article 75 AP I and Article 4 AP II.[1268]
1377. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "corporal punishments [of POWs] ... are forbidden".[1269] It restates Article 75(2) AP I, according to which "corporal punishment" is prohibited "at any time and in any place whatsoever, whether committed by civilian or by military agents".[1270] Regarding civilians, the manual stipulates that GC IV prohibits the parties from "taking any measure of such character as to cause the physical suffering ... of protected persons in their hands", including corporal punishment.[1271] In the case of non-international armed conflict, the manual prohibits at any time and anywhere "any form of corporal punishment".[1272]
1378. Nicaragua's Military Manual states that the prohibition of corporal punishment is a fundamental guarantee.[1273]
1379. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians "shall not be subjected to ... corporal punishments".[1274]
1380. Spain's LOAC Manual states that corporal punishment of prisoners of war or persons protected by GC IV is prohibited at any time and in any place, whether carried out by military or by civilian agents.[1275]
1381. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are part of customary international law.[1276]
1382. Switzerland's military manuals provide that enemy civilians shall not be subjected to corporal punishment.[1277]
1383. Togo's Military Manual provides that "no one shall be subjected ... to corporal punishment".[1278]

[1265] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 53.
[1266] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(e).
[1267] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 5.
[1268] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VIII-3 and XI-4.
[1269] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 931.2.
[1270] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137.2.
[1271] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1321.4.
[1272] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1812.1.
[1273] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(31).
[1274] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 34, § 2.
[1275] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 8.2.c and 8.7.b.
[1276] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[1277] Switzerland, Military Manual (1984), p. 34; Teaching Manual (1986), p. 43; Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 147.
[1278] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 5 and Fascicule III, p. 4.

1384. The UK Military Manual prohibits measures against protected persons which will cause physical suffering and states that "this prohibition applies . . . to corporal punishments".[1279] It further states that "corporal punishments . . . are forbidden".[1280] The manual states that, in occupied territories, the prohibition of measures of such character as to cause the physical suffering or extermination of protected persons in the hands of the occupant "applies . . . to corporal punishment".[1281] It recalls that "corporal punishment is excluded" with regard to the punishment of war criminals.[1282]

1385. The UK LOAC Manual forbids corporal punishment.[1283]

1386. The US Field Manual forbids corporal punishment of POWs and civilians.[1284]

National Legislation

1387. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, it is prohibited to carry out corporal punishment against civilian persons and prisoners of war.[1285]

1388. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[1286]

1389. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 87 GC III and 32 and 100 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(2)(iii) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2)(a) AP II, are punishable offences.[1287]

1390. Mozambique's Military Criminal Law provides that carrying out corporal punishments is a criminal offence.[1288]

1391. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[1289]

[1279] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 42.
[1280] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 205.
[1281] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 549.
[1282] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 638.
[1283] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 35, § 9.
[1284] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 163 and 271.
[1285] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 17(1) and 21(1).
[1286] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[1287] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1288] Mozambique, Military Criminal Law (1987), Article 85(a).
[1289] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

1392. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, subjects to corporal punishment persons hors de combat, protected persons and person enjoying international protection.[1290]

National Case-law

1393. In 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court held that prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II were consistent with the Constitution, since they were not only in harmony with the principles and values of the Constitution, but also practically reproduced specific constitutional provisions.[1291]

Other National Practice

1394. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[1292]

1395. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[1293]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1396. In 1997, in a report on torture, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights took the view that:

> Corporal punishment [a variety of methods of punishment, including flagellation, stoning, amputation of ears, fingers, toes or limbs, and branding or tattooing] is inconsistent with the prohibition of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment enshrined, inter alia, in the [1948 UDHR, 1966 ICCPR], the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.[1294]

Other International Organisations

1397. No practice was found.

[1290] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 124.
[1291] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.
[1292] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[1293] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[1294] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Torture, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/7, 10 January 1997, §§ 5–6.

International Conferences

1398. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1399. In the Semanza case before the ICTR in 1997, the accused was charged with causing corporal punishment in a situation of non-international armed conflict in violation of Article 4(2)(a) AP II and Articles 22 and 23 of the ICTR Statute.[1295]

1400. In its General Comment on Article 7 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1992, the HRC stated that the prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment "must extend to corporal punishment, including excessive chastisement ordered as punishment for a crime or as an educative or disciplinary measure".[1296]

1401. In its judgement in the Tyrer case in 1978 dealing with judicial corporal punishment, the ECtHR held that in that context, the offender was placed in a position where his dignity and physical integrity were compromised and that "the judicial corporal punishment inflicted on Mr. Tyrer amounted to degrading punishment within the meaning of Article 3 [of the 1950 ECHR]".[1297]

1402. In its judgement in the A. v. UK case in 1998, the ECtHR considered the corporal punishment carried by a stepfather (and not by a public official) and held that it could amount to inhumane treatment. The ECtHR stated that:

> Ill-treatment must attain a minimum level of severity if it is to fall within the scope of Article 3. The assessment of this minimum is relative: it depends on all the circumstances of the case, such as the nature and context of the treatment, its duration, its physical and mental effects and, in some instances, the sex, age and state of health of the victim . . . The Court considers that treatment of this kind reaches the level of severity prohibited by Article 3.[1298]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1403. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "corporal punishment is prohibited".[1299]

1404. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that corporal punishment, as a serious violation of international

[1295] ICTR, Semanza case, Indictment, 21 October 1997, Count 7.
[1296] HRC, General Comment No. 20 (Article 7 ICCPR), 10 April 1992, § 5.
[1297] ECtHR, Tyrer case, Judgement, 25 April 1978, § 2 (decision).
[1298] ECtHR, A. v. UK, Judgement, 23 September 1998, §§ 20–21.
[1299] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 193.

humanitarian law applicable in non-international armed conflicts, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[1300]

VI. Other Practice

1405. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "no one shall be subjected to . . . corporal punishment".[1301]
1406. In 1985, Amnesty International reported that the People's Assembly of the People's Republic of Mozambique reintroduced corporal punishment for a number of offences, including for persons found to be members of RENAMO.[1302]

F. Mutilation and Medical, Scientific or Biological Experiments

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
1407. Common Article 3(1)(a) of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that mutilation of persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause is prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever.
1408. Article 12 GC I provides that wounded and sick members of the armed forces in the field shall not be subjected to biological experiments. According to Article 50, conducting biological experiments on the wounded and sick is a grave breach of GC I.
1409. Article 12 GC II provides that wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the armed forces at sea shall not be subjected to biological experiments. According to Article 51, conducting biological experiments on the wounded, sick and shipwrecked is a grave breach of GC II.
1410. Article 13 GC III provides that "no prisoner of war may be subject to physical mutilation or to medical or scientific experiments of any kind which are not justified by the medical, dental or hospital treatment of the prisoner concerned and carried out in his interest". According to Article 130, conducting biological experiments on prisoners of war is a grave breach of GC III.
1411. Under Article 32 GC IV, "mutilation and medical or scientific experiments not necessitated by the medical treatment of a protected person" are prohibited. According to Article 147, conducting biological experiments on protected persons is a grave breach of GC IV.

[1300] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, § 3(i).
[1301] ICRC archive document.
[1302] Amnesty International, Reports of the use of torture in the People's Republic of Mozambique, AI Index: AFR 41/102/85, April 1985, pp. 6–8.

1412. Article 7 of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "no one shall be subjected without his free consent to medical or scientific experimentation".

1413. Article 11 AP I provides that:

1. The physical or mental health and integrity of persons who are in the power of the adverse Party or who are interned, detained or otherwise deprived of liberty as a result of a situation referred to in Article 1 shall not be endangered by any unjustified act or omission. Accordingly, it is prohibited to subject the persons described in this Article to any medical procedure which is not indicated by the state of health of the person concerned and which is not consistent with generally accepted medical standards which would be applied under similar medical circumstances to persons who are nationals of the Party conducting the procedure and who are in no way deprived of liberty.
2. It is, in particular, prohibited to carry out on such persons, even with their consent:
   (a) physical mutilations;
   (b) medical or scientific experiments;
   (c) removal of tissue or organs for transplantation, except where these acts are justified in conformity with the conditions provided for in paragraph 1.
3. Exceptions to the prohibition in paragraph 2 (c) may be made only in the case of donations of blood for transfusion or of skin for grafting, provided that they are given voluntarily and without any coercion or inducement, and then only for therapeutic purposes, under conditions consistent with generally accepted medical standards and controls designed for the benefit of both the donor and the recipient.
4. Any wilful act or omission which seriously endangers the physical or mental health or integrity of any person who is in the power of a Party other than the one on which he depends and which either violates any of the prohibitions in paragraphs 1 and 2 or fails to comply with the requirements of paragraph 3 shall be a grave breach of this Protocol.
5. The persons described in paragraph 1 have the right to refuse any surgical operation. In case of refusal, medical personnel shall endeavour to obtain a written statement to that effect, signed or acknowledged by the patient.
6. Each Party to the conflict shall keep a medical record for every donation of blood for transfusion or skin for grafting by persons referred to in paragraph 1, if that donation is made under the responsibility of that Party. In addition, each Party to the conflict shall endeavour to keep a record of all medical procedures undertaken with respect to any person who is interned, detained or otherwise deprived of liberty as a result of a situation referred to in Article 1. These records shall be available at all times for inspection by the Protecting Power.

Article 11 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1303]

1414. Article 75(2) AP I prohibits, inter alia, acts of mutilation. Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1304]

[1303] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 69.
[1304] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

1415. According to Article 85 AP I, conducting biological experiments on protected persons is a grave breach of this instrument. Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1305]

1416. Upon ratification of AP I, Canada stated that:

> The Government of Canada does not intend to be bound by the prohibitions contained in Article 11, sub-paragraph 2 (c), with respect to Canadian nationals or other persons ordinarily resident in Canada who may be interned, detained or otherwise deprived of liberty as a result of a situation referred to in Article 1, so long as the removal of tissue or organs for transplantation is in accordance with Canadian laws and applicable to the population generally and the operation is carried out in accordance with normal Canadian medical practices, standards or ethics.[1306]

1417. Upon ratification of AP I, Ireland stated that:

> For the purposes of investigating any breach of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 or of the Protocols Additional to the Geneva Conventions of 1949 adopted at Geneva on 8 June 1977, Ireland reserves the right to take samples of blood, tissue, saliva or other bodily fluids for DNA comparisons from a person who is detained, interned or otherwise deprived of liberty as a result of a situation referred to in Article 1, in accordance with Irish law and normal Irish medical practice, standards and ethics. Ireland declares that nothing in Article 11 paragraph 2(c) shall prohibit the donation of tissue, bone marrow or of an organ from a person who is detained, interned or otherwise deprived of liberty as a result of a situation referred to in Article 2 to a close relative who requires a donation of tissue, bone marrow or an organ from such a person for medical reasons, so long as the removal of tissue, bone marrow or organs for transplantation is in accordance with Irish law and the operation is carried out in accordance with normal Irish medical practice, standards and ethics.[1307]

1418. Article 4(2) AP II prohibits, inter alia, acts of mutilation. Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1308]

1419. Article 5(2)(e) AP II provides that:

> It is prohibited to subject the persons described in this Article to any medical procedure which is not indicated by the state of health of the person concerned, and which is not consistent with the generally accepted medical standards applied to free persons under similar medical circumstances.

Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1309]

1420. According to Article 8(2)(a)(ii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "biological experiments" committed against persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.

[1305] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291, § 72.
[1306] Canada, Reservations and statements of understanding made upon ratification of AP I, 20 November 1990, § 1.
[1307] Ireland, Declarations and reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 19 May 1999, §§ 2–3.
[1308] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[1309] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.

1421. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(b)(x) and (e)(xi) of the 1998 ICC Statute, the following is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts:

> subjecting persons who are in the power of an adverse party [or another party to the conflict] to physical mutilation or to medical or scientific experiments of any kind which are neither justified by the medical, dental or hospital treatment of the person concerned nor carried out in his or her interest, and which cause death or seriously endanger the health of such person or persons.

1422. Article 3 of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that the Court is competent to prosecute violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II, which include "mutilation".

Other Instruments

1423. Article 56 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "a prisoner of war is subject to no punishment for being a public enemy, nor is any revenge wreaked upon him by the intentional infliction of any suffering . . . by mutilation . . . or any other barbarity".

1424. Principle 22 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "no detained or imprisoned person shall, even with his consent, be subjected to any medical or scientific experimentation which may be detrimental to his health".

1425. According to Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, biological experiments are considered to be an exceptionally serious war crime and a serious violation of the principles and rules of international law applicable in armed conflict.

1426. Under Article 2(b) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute individuals who have carried out biological experiments on persons protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention.

1427. According to Article 4(a) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, the Tribunal has jurisdiction to try acts in violation of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including "mutilation".

1428. Article 18(k) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "inhumane acts which severely damage physical or mental integrity, health or human dignity, such as mutilation and severe bodily harm" constitute crimes against humanity. Article 20(a)(ii) states that biological experiments are war crimes. Article 20(f)(i) states that "mutilation" committed in violation of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict not of an international character is a war crime.

1429. Article 3(1) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that mutilation shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat. Article 4(9) adds that every possible measure shall be taken to prevent the mutilation of the wounded and sick.

1430. According to Section 7(2) of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, mutilation of persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations and persons placed hors de combat is prohibited at any time and in any place.

1431. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(x) and (e)(xi), the following is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts:

> subjecting persons who are in the power of an adverse party [or another party to the conflict] to physical mutilation or to medical or scientific experiments of any kind which are neither justified by the medical, dental or hospital treatment of the person concerned nor carried out in his or her interest, and which cause death or seriously endanger the health of such person or persons.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1432. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) stipulates that prisoners of war "cannot be subjected to physical mutilation and to medical and scientific experiments of any kind not justified by medical treatment".[1310] It adds that "it is especially prohibited to subject [the wounded and sick] . . . to biological experiments". The prohibition also applies to civilians.[1311]

1433. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that it is prohibited to subject the wounded and sick to medical procedures not indicated by their state of health.[1312] This prohibition extends to mutilation or scientific experiments on prisoners of war and civilians in occupied territories.[1313] Such acts are identified as a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1314]

1434. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "performing physical mutilations, conducting medical or scientific experimentation and removing tissue or organs for transplantation without consent" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1315]

1435. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that performing physical mutilations, conducting medical or biological experiments or scientific experimentation and removing tissue and organs for transplantation without consent on the wounded and sick, POWs and protected persons is prohibited and is considered a war crime. The manual refers to persons protected under the Geneva Conventions or the Additional Protocols.[1316]

[1310] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.013.
[1311] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 3.001 (wounded and sick) and 4.012 (civilians).
[1312] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.04.
[1313] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.12 (POWs) and § 4.29 (civilians in occupied territory).
[1314] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[1315] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1305(m).
[1316] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 953, 990, 1008, 1219 and 1315(m).

1436. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that carrying out medical and biological experiments on protected persons is a grave breach of Geneva Conventions.[1317]

1437. The Instructions to the Muslim Fighter issued by the ARBiH in Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1993 stated that "Islam likewise forbids the . . . mutilation of enemy wounded".[1318]

1438. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that it is prohibited to mutilate the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians.[1319]

1439. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that it is a violation of GC I to "subject the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, even with their consent, to physical mutilations, medical or scientific experiments, or the removal of tissue for transplantation, except where justified by their medical needs".[1320] It prohibits similar acts with regard to persons protected by GC IV.[1321] The manual further provides that it is a war crime and a grave breach of AP I to subject a person to a medical procedure that > is not indicated by the state of health of that person, and . . . is not consistent with generally accepted medical standards applicable in similar circumstances to persons who are nationals of the party conducting the procedure and who are in no way deprived of liberty [and to subject a person] to medical or scientific experiments, [or] the removal of tissue for transplantation, except for donations of blood or of skin for grafting given voluntarily and in conformity with generally accepted medical standards, unless justified by the medical needs of the person.[1322]

1440. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "nor may [the wounded and sick] be subjected to any medical procedure not called for by their condition or inconsistent with accepted medical standards".[1323]

1441. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended provides that soldiers in combat are prohibited to subject the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to mutilations.[1324]

1442. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that biological experiments are war crimes under the law of armed conflicts.[1325]

1443. France's LOAC Manual provides that mutilation is a war crime.[1326]

1444. Germany's Military Manual provides that:

> It is prohibited to subject wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons to any medical procedure which is not consistent with generally accepted standards. In particular,

[1317] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[1318] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Instructions to the Muslim Fighter (1993), § c.
[1319] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[1320] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-2, § 21.
[1321] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-4, § 33.
[1322] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-2, § 15(a)–(b).
[1323] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.4.
[1324] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[1325] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[1326] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 45.

it is prohibited to carry out physical mutilation, medical or other scientific experiments or removal of tissue or organs for transplantation.
...
The wounded and sick have the right to refuse any surgical operation and similar manipulation, in which case medical personnel shall request a written statement to that effect, signed or acknowledged by the patient. Simple diagnostic measures, such as the taking of blood, shall be permitted, as shall measures necessary to prevent, combat and cure contagious diseases and epidemics.[1327]

The manual further states that conducting biological experiments is a grave breach of IHL.[1328]

1445. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "the rationale behind the law of war is that even in the midst of the inferno, there are grave deeds that must not be committed (... medical experiments)".[1329]

1446. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territories, civilians shall not be subjected to "mutilations, medical or scientific experiments not indicated by their state of health".[1330]

1447. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that soldiers in combat are prohibited to subject the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to mutilations.[1331]

1448. The Military Manual of the Netherlands restates the prohibition of mutilation contained in Articles 75 AP I and 4 AP II.[1332] It further states that "it is prohibited to subject the wounded and sick to mutilation and – even with their permission – to medical or scientific experiments". The manual lists "unnecessary medical treatment, mutilation and medical or scientific experiments" among grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[1333]

1449. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that the sick, wounded and shipwrecked "must not be subject to any medical procedure which is not required by their state of health or which is inconsistent with accepted medical standards".[1334] The manual further states that GC IV prohibits the parties from "taking any measure of such character as to cause the physical suffering ... of protected persons in their hands", including mutilation and medical or scientific experiments not necessitated by the medical treatment of a protected person.[1335] The manual considers biological experiments as a grave breach of GC I and II.[1336] It adds that:

[1327] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 606 and 608.
[1328] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[1329] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 4.
[1330] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(e).
[1331] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[1332] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VIII-3 and XI-4.
[1333] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VI-2 and IX-5.
[1334] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003.3, see also § 1003.1 and 4.
[1335] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1321.4.
[1336] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1702.1.

AP I, Art. 11, makes a number of medical practices grave breaches of the Protocol . . . It is a grave breach to carry out on persons detained by an adverse Party, even with their consent, physical mutilations, medical or scientific experiments or removal of tissue or organs for transplantation, except where such action is justified by the medical needs of the person affected.[1337]

1450. Nigeria's Military Manual recalls the content of Article 12 GC I, which "expressly prohibits [subjecting the wounded and sick] to . . . biological experiments".[1338]

1451. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that biological experiments on all persons protected by the Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[1339] With regard to the wounded and sick, it adds that "it is particularly prohibited to . . . abandon them to scientific experiments".[1340]

1452. Russia's Military Manual prohibits medical or scientific experiments carried out on war victims, namely the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, POWs and the civilian population.[1341]

1453. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that it is prohibited for soldiers in combat to mutilate the wounded, sick, shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians.[1342]

1454. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to the IHL conventions and the 1948 UDHR is the prohibition of medical acts on persons deprived of their liberty which are not justified by the state of health of the person concerned and are not in accordance with the generally accepted and recognised medical norms.[1343]

1455. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that one type of grave breach "relates to combat activities and medical experimentation. It requires both wilfulness and that death or serious injury to body or health is caused (Article 85(3))."[1344] The manual also provides that "physical experimentation and medical experiments (Article 22)" are grave breaches of AP I.[1345]

1456. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "it is not permitted to subject [POWs] to scientific experiments not justified by medical reasons or which are not in the interests of the prisoner".[1346] The manual further states that subjecting protected persons to medical procedures not required by their state of health and carrying out medical, biological or scientific experiments, committed by medical personnel, are war crimes.[1347] It adds that in occupied territories, "medical or scientific experiments not required by health" are absolutely prohibited.[1348] The manual also provides that subjecting "prisoners, internees

[1337] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1703.2.
[1338] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 13, § 4.
[1339] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(a).
[1340] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[1341] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 8(d).
[1342] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), § 2.
[1343] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 24.
[1344] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 36(a).
[1345] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 37(e), see also § 40.
[1346] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.4.a.(1).
[1347] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.2.a.(2).
[1348] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.2.a.(3).

and any other detained person to acts which endanger their physical or mental integrity, such as mutilations, medical or scientific experiments, removal of tissues and organs and any medical procedure not indicated by their state of health and not applied in accordance with generally accepted medical standards" are grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and constitute war crimes.[1349]

1457. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "biological experiments" are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[1350]

1458. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "medical and scientific experiments" run counter to the obligation of humane treatment and prohibits medical and scientific experiments other than those required for medical reasons. It adds that conducting biological experiments on persons protected by the Geneva Conventions constitutes a grave breach of these instruments.[1351]

1459. The UK Military Manual prohibits measures that cause physical suffering, including mutilations or scientific and medical experiments on protected persons. This rule also applies in occupied territories.[1352] The manual specifies that biological experiments and "wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or to health" are grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions.[1353]

1460. The UK LOAC Manual provides that neither wounded and sick members of the opposing forces nor civilians may be subjected to biological experiments.[1354]

1461. The US Field Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[1355] The manual provides that "no prisoner of war may be subjected to physical mutilation or to medical or scientific experiments of any kind which are not justified by the medical, dental or hospital treatment of the prisoner concerned and carried out in his interest".[1356] The manual also provides that wounded and sick members of the armed forces shall not be subjected to biological experiments.[1357] It stipulates that medical or scientific experiments not necessitated by the medical treatment of a protected person are prohibited.[1358] The manual also provides that "biological experiments, wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health" are war crimes under the Geneva Conventions.[1359]

1462. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Articles 12 GC I, 12 GC II and 13 GC III and prohibits medical, scientific and biological experiments.[1360]

[1349] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 11.8.b.(1).
[1350] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 93.
[1351] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 97, 147 and 192.
[1352] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 42, 282 and 549.
[1353] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(a).
[1354] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 2 and Section 9, p. 35, § 9.
[1355] US, Field Manual (1956), § 11.
[1356] US, Field Manual (1956), § 89.
[1357] US, Field Manual (1956), § 215.
[1358] US, Field Manual (1956), § 271.
[1359] US, Field Manual (1956), § 502.
[1360] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 12-2(a), 13-2 and 14-4.

1463. The US Instructor's Guide provides that subjecting captured persons to medical or scientific experiments is a capital offence prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever.[1361]
1464. The US Naval Handbook provides that "nor may [the wounded and sick] be subjected to any medical procedure not called for by their condition or inconsistent with accepted medical standards".[1362]

National Legislation
1465. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who submits protected persons to biological experiments and causes them great suffering or subjects them to "medical procedures which are not indicated by their state of health and which are not consistent with generally accepted medical standards which would, under similar medical circumstances, be applied by the responsible party to its own free nationals".[1363]
1466. Armenia's Penal Code contains a list of crimes against the peace and security of mankind, including, when committed during an armed conflict, "biological experiments", as well as > medical procedure which is not indicated by the state of health of persons under the power of the enemy, ... detrimental to the physical or mental health of these persons or violating generally accepted medical standards, even with the consent of these persons, inflicting physical injuries, subjecting people to medical or scientific experiments or the removal of tissue or organs for transplantation.[1364]

1467. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[1365]
1468. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "biological experiments" in international armed conflicts, as well as "mutilation" and "medical or scientific experiments" in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[1366] Furthermore, the Act incorporates in the Criminal Code, as war crimes, other grave breaches of AP I, including any "medical procedure" which "seriously endangers a person's physical or mental health or integrity" or which "is not justified by the state of health of the person", and "removal of blood, tissue or organs for transplantation".[1367]
1469. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international

[1361] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 8. [1362] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-4.
[1363] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 289, introducing a new Article 873 in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[1364] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.1(2) and Article 390.5.
[1365] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[1366] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.27, 268.47, 268.48, 268.71, 268.92 and 268.93.
[1367] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.95 and 268.96.

armed conflicts, medical or scientific experiments on prisoners of war are prohibited.[1368]

1470. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that medical, biological or other experiments and the removal of internal organs are violations of the laws and customs of war.[1369]

1471. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[1370]

1472. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[1371]

1473. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that subjecting, even with their consent, persons that have laid down their arms or which are defenceless, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, medical and religious personnel, prisoners of war, the civilian population in an occupied territory or in the conflict zone or other persons enjoying international protection to medical, scientific or biological experiments is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1372]

1474. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols provides that the following acts constitute crimes under international law:

> biological experiments, . . . acts and omissions not justified in the law which are likely to endanger the physical or mental health and integrity of persons protected by one of the Conventions relative to the protection of wounded, sick and shipwrecked persons, in particular any medical procedure which is not indicated by the state of health of such persons or not consistent with generally accepted medical standards . . . [and] acts which consist in carrying out . . . physical mutilations, medical or scientific experiments or the removal of tissue or organs for transplantation, except in the cases of donations of blood for transfusion or of skin for grafting, provided that such donations are voluntary, consented to and intended for therapeutic purposes.[1373]

1475. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that subjecting civilians, prisoners of war, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked to biological, medical and scientific experiments, removal of tissues and organs

[1368] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 21(1).
[1369] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 115.2.
[1370] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[1371] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[1372] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(2).
[1373] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(2) and (9)–(10).

for transplant are war crimes.[1374] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[1375]

1476. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[1376]

1477. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that ordering or carrying out biological experiments or torture on the wounded, sick, shipwrecked, medical personnel, prisoners of war and the civilian population is a war crime.[1377]

1478. Under Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes, the following acts constitute war crimes in both international and non-international armed conflicts "subjecting persons falling into the hands of the enemy to mutilations or medical or scientific experiments of any kind which are neither required by medical, dental or hospital procedures nor required by their state of health".[1378]

1479. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 . . . which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[1379]

1480. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions or of AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[1380]

1481. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[1381]

1482. Colombia's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, during an armed conflict, inflicts on a protected person biological experiments or subjects a protected person to any medical act which is not indicated and not in conformity with the generally recognised medical norms.[1382]

1483. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1383]

[1374] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 154(1), 155 and 156.
[1375] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433(1), 434 and 435.
[1376] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[1377] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 410(a), 411(a) and 412(a).
[1378] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(b) and (j) and (D)(k).
[1379] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.
[1380] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[1381] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1382] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 141.
[1383] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.

1484. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I]".[1384]

1485. Under Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, organising, ordering or carrying out, in time of war or occupation, biological experiments on the civilian population constitutes a "crime against the civilian population".[1385]

1486. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that it is a war crime to subject the civilian population, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war, medical or religious personnel to medical, to scientific and biological experiments and to removal of tissues and organs for transplantation.[1386]

1487. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[1387]

1488. Cyprus's AP I Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic any grave breach of the provisions of the Protocol, or takes part or assists or incites another person in the commission of such a breach".[1388]

1489. The Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador provide for the punishment of "anyone who during an international or internal armed conflict conducts biological experiments that cause harm to the physical and mental health of protected persons".[1389] It also punishes the carrying out of "medical procedures not indicated by the state of health of protected persons, or which are not in conformity with the generally accepted medical norms".[1390]

1490. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that carrying out biological experiments is a war crime against the civilian population.[1391]

1491. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, in international or internal armed conflicts, it is a crime to subject protected persons to medical experiments. It adds that it also constitutes a crime to subject persons under the authority of a party (in detention or deprived of liberty) to > any medical procedure which is not indicated by the state of health of the person concerned and which is not consistent with generally accepted medical standards which would be applied under similar medical circumstances to persons who are nationals of the party conducting the procedure, in particular, subjecting such persons, even with their consent:

[1384] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[1385] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(1).
[1386] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158, 159 and 160.
[1387] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).
[1388] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1).
[1389] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Experimentos biológicos".
[1390] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Actos médicos dañinos".
[1391] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(a).

(a) to acts causing physical mutilations;
(b) carrying out medical and scientific experiments;
(c) removal of tissue or organs for transplantation.[1392]

1492. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, mutilates a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law or who exposes a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law to the risk of death or of serious injury to health

a) by carrying out experiments on such person and who has not consented in advance or whether the experiments concerned are neither medically necessary nor carried out in his or her interest,
b) by removing tissue or organs from such a person for transplantation purposes, save where blood or skin is taken for therapeutic purposes consistent with generally recognized medical principles and where the person has freely and expressly consented in advance, or
c) by using on such persons methods of treatment which are not medically recognized, without there being any medical necessity for doing so and without the person having freely and expressly consented in advance.[1393]

1493. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[1394]

1494. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of AP I are punishable offences.[1395] In addition, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3, of Articles 12 GC I, 12 GC II, 13 GC III and 32 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(2) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 4(2) and 5(2)(e) AP II, are also punishable offences.[1396]

1495. Under Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code, the following acts constitute war crimes:

biological experiments, ... mutilations, medical and scientific experiments, removal of tissues and organs for transplantations not indicated by the state of health of [protected persons, internees and persons deprived of their liberty in connection with an armed conflict] and which are not in conformity with generally accepted medical standards applied in similar circumstances to operations on own nationals.[1397]

[1392] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 411(2)(b) and 412.
[1393] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(3) and (8).
[1394] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[1395] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[1396] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1397] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(2) and (20).

1496. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1398]

1497. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, the following acts constitute war crimes:

> biological experiments, . . . mutilations, medical and scientific experiments, removal of tissues and organs for transplantations not indicated by the state of health of [protected persons, internees and persons deprived of their liberty in connection with an armed conflict] and which are not in conformity with medical standards respected in similar medical circumstances during operations on own nationals.[1399]

1498. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, carrying out biological experiments on protected persons and removal of organs or tissues for transplantation constitute war crimes.[1400]

1499. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides that carrying out biological experiments on protected persons is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1401]

1500. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1402]

1501. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[1403]

1502. Under Mali's Penal Code, carrying out medical experiments is a war crime. It adds that mutilation of and carrying out any medical and scientific experiments on enemy persons which are not justified by their state of health is a war crime in international armed conflicts.[1404]

1503. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1405]

1504. Moldova's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who subjects the wounded, sick, prisoners, civilians, civilian medical personnel or personnel of Red Cross and other similar organisations to "medical, biological or scientific experiments not justified by their state of health".[1406]

[1398] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[1399] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(2) and (20).
[1400] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 335.
[1401] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1(2).
[1402] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[1403] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[1404] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(a) and (i)(10).
[1405] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[1406] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 137.

1505. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit "in the case of an international armed conflict, one of the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions", including "biological experiments",[1407] as well as grave breaches of AP I, including:

> any intentional act or omission which jeopardises the health of anyone who is in the power of a party other than the party to which he or she belongs, and which:
> (i) entails any medical treatment which is not necessary as a consequence of the state of health of the person concerned and is not consistent with generally accepted medical standards which would be applied under similar medical circumstances to persons who are nationals of the party responsible for the acts and who are in no way deprived of their liberty;
> (ii) entails the carrying out on the person concerned, even with his consent, of physical mutilations;
> (iii) entails the carrying out on the person concerned, even with his consent, of medical or scientific experiments; or
> (iv) entails removing from the person concerned, even with his consent, tissue or organs for transplantation.[1408]

Likewise, it is a crime, whether in time of international or non-international armed conflict, to subject > persons who are in the power of an adverse party to the conflict to physical mutilation or medical or scientific experiments of any kind, which are neither justified by the medical, dental or hospital treatment of the person concerned nor carried out in his or her interest, and which cause death to or seriously endanger the health of such persons.[1409]

Furthermore, it is also a crime to commit, "in the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, a violation of Article 3 common to all of the Geneva Conventions", including "mutilation" of persons taking no active part in the hostilities.[1410]

1506. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[1411]

1507. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(b)(x) and (e)(xi) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1412]

1508. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code punishes the carrying out on prisoners of war of "medical and scientific experiments not justified by their state of health and without their consent".[1413]

[1407] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(1)(b).
[1408] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(2)(b).
[1409] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(3)(c) and 6(3)(c).
[1410] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 6(1)(a).
[1411] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[1412] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[1413] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 54.

1509. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who "during an international or internal armed conflict conducts biological experiments . . . on protected persons". It also punishes "carrying out medical procedures not justified by the state of health of the protected persons and which are not in conformity with generally accepted medical standards".[1414]

1510. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, the following acts, committed against persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977, constitute war crimes: mutilations, medical, scientific or biological experiments, removal of tissues and organs for transplantation, as well as > acts and omissions which are not legally justified and which may endanger the physical and mental integrity of persons protected by one of the conventions relative to the protection of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, including any act which is not justified by the state of health of these persons or not in conformity with generally accepted medical standards.[1415]

1511. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation, . . . whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1416]

1512. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[1417]

1513. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[1418]

1514. Paraguay's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in violation of the international laws of war, armed conflict or military occupation, carries out medical and scientific experiments against the civilian population, the wounded and sick or prisoners of war.[1419]

1515. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, carries out scientific experiments on persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection.[1420]

1516. Romania's Penal Code punishes the carrying out of medical and scientific experiments on the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, members of civil medical [1414] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Articles 446–447.

[1415] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(2) and Article 208.3(9)–(10).
[1416] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[1417] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[1418] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).
[1419] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 320(2).
[1420] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 123(2), see also Article 118(1) (causing serious harm to health as part of a genocide campaign).

services, the Red Cross or similar organisations, prisoners of war, or on all persons in the hands of the adverse party, or subjecting them to mutilations or medical procedures not justified by their state of health.[1421]

1517. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1422]

1518. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[1423]

1519. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, subjecting civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical and religious personnel to biological, medical and other scientific experiments or removal of tissues and organs for transplantation is a war crime.[1424]

1520. Spain's Military Criminal Code provides for the punishment of military personnel who carry out medical or scientific experiments on the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war or the civilian population.[1425]

1521. Spain's Penal Code punishes anyone who, in time of armed conflict, subjects any protected person to biological experiments or medical treatment not justified by their state of health and not recognised by medical standards.[1426]

1522. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, (a) a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions; or (b) a breach of common Article 3 of the Conventions, is guilty of an indictable offence."[1427]

1523. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of anyone carrying out, in an international or internal armed conflict, medical, scientific or biological experiments on protected persons or subjecting them to mutilations, removal of tissues and organs for transplantation or any other medical procedure not indicated by their state of health and not conforming to generally accepted medical standards.[1428]

1524. Thailand's Prisoners of War Act provides for the punishment of "whoever subjects a prisoner of war to medical, biological, or scientific experiments of any kind which are not justified by the medical treatment of the prisoner

[1421] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358.
[1422] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[1423] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[1424] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 374(1), 375 and 376.
[1425] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 76.
[1426] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 609.
[1427] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1).
[1428] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 403(2)(b) and 404.

concerned". This prohibition also extends to persons protected by common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[1429]

1525. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(x) and (e)(xi) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1430]

1526. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1431]

1527. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions or of [AP I]".[1432]

1528. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(x) and (e)(xi) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1433]

1529. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[1434]

1530. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[1435]

1531. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, subjecting prisoners of war or civilians to any scientific experiment is a war crime.[1436]

1532. Under the Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY), subjecting civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical and religious personnel to biological, medical and other scientific experiments or removal of tissues and organs for transplantation is a war crime.[1437]

1533. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions or [AP I]".[1438]

National Case-law

1534. In its judgement in the Videla case in 1994 concerning the abduction, torture and murder of Lumi Videla in Chile in 1974, Chile's Appeal Court

[1429] Thailand, Prisoners of War Act (1955), Section 12 (prisoners of war) and Section 18 (persons protected by common Article 3).
[1430] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[1431] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[1432] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[1433] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[1434] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[1435] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[1436] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 21(2).
[1437] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Articles 142–144.
[1438] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).

of Santiago stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions obliged parties to non-international armed conflicts "to extend humanitarian treatment to persons taking no active part in the hostilities or who have placed themselves hors de combat for various reasons, and prohibits at any time and in any place . . . mutilation".[1439]

1535. Colombia's Constitutional Court held in 1995 that the prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II were consistent with the Constitution, since they were not only in harmony with the principles and values of the Constitution, but also practically reproduced specific constitutional provisions.[1440]

1536. In the Hoess trial in 1947, the Supreme National Tribunal of Poland convicted individuals charged with committing "medical war crimes", including "castration experiments, experiments intended to produce sterilization, premature termination of pregnancy and other experiments on pregnant or childbearing women, experiments of artificial insemination, experiments aimed at cancer research".[1441]

1537. In its judgement in the Milch case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg found the accused guilty of conducting medical experiments on prisoners of war and inhabitants of occupied territories without their consent.[1442]

1538. In the Brandt (The Medical Trial) case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg convicted 16 persons of carrying out medical experiments on prisoners of war and civilians which amounted to cruel and inhuman treatment and which were war crimes and crimes against humanity. The Tribunal found the accused guilty of committing medical experiments which included, but was not limited to:

> High Altitude Experiments, Freezing Experiments, Malaria Experiments, Mustard Gas Experiments, Ravensbrueck Experiments Concerning Sulphanilamide and Other Drugs; Bone, Muscle, and Nerve Regeneration and Bone Transplantation, Sea-Water Experiments, Epidemic Jaundice, Sterlization Experiments, Typhus (Fleckfieber) and Related Experiments, Poison Experiments, Incendiary Bomb Experiments, Jewish Skeleton Collection.

The Tribunal also held that:

> Obviously all of these experiments involving brutalities, tortures, disabling injuries and death were performed in complete disregard of international conventions, the laws and customs of war, the general principle of criminal law as derived from the criminal laws of all civilized nations . . . Manifestly inhuman experiments under such conditions are contrary to "the principles of the laws of nations as they result from the usages established among civilized peoples, from the laws of humanity, and from the dictates of public conscience."[1443]

[1439] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago (Third Criminal Chamber), Videla case, Judgement, 26 September 1994.
[1440] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.
[1441] Poland, Supreme National Tribunal at Poznan, Hoess trial, Judgement, 11–29 March 1947.
[1442] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Milch case, Judgement, 17 April 1947.
[1443] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Brandt (The Medical Trial) case, Judgement, 20 August 1947.

1539. In its judgement in the Schultz case in 1969, the US Court of Military Appeals identified maiming among "crimes universally recognized as properly punishable under the law of war".[1444]

Other National Practice

1540. In 1994, in a note to foreign embassies and all international humanitarian organizations in Azerbaijan, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Azerbaijan denounced cases of removal of organs for transplantation by the adverse party.[1445]

1541. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that:

> We support the principle reflected in article 11 [AP I] that the physical or mental health and integrity of persons under the control of a party to the conflict not be endangered by any unjustified act or omission and not be subjected to any medical procedure which is not indicated by the state of health of the person concerned and which is not consistent with generally accepted medical standards.[1446]

1542. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[1447]

1543. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000, the US Congress expressed its sense concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during the Second World War, in particular experiments conducted on living prisoners of war. The resolution asked the government of Japan to apologise for these crimes and pay immediate reparations to the victims.[1448]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1544. In 1992, in reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV committed in the former Yugoslavia, the US described acts of mutilation perpetrated by the parties to the conflict.[1449]

[1444] US, Court of Military Appeals, Schultz case, Judgement, 7 March 1969.
[1445] Azerbaijan, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Note 151, Baku, 26 March 1994.
[1446] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 423.
[1447] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[1448] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON. RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.
[1449] US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Third Submission), annexed to Letter dated 5 November 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24791,

Other International Organisations
1545. No practice was found.

International Conferences
1546. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1547. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[1450]
1548. In the Semanza case before the ICTR in 1997, the accused was charged with causing mutilations in a situation of non-international armed conflict in violation of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, Article 4(2)(a) AP II and Articles 22 and 23 of the 1994 ICTR Statute.[1451]
1549. In its General Comment on Article 7 ICCPR in 1992, the HRC held that:

> Article 7 expressly prohibits medical or scientific experimentation without the free consent of the person concerned. The Committee notes that the reports of States parties generally contain little information on this point. More attention should be given to the need and means to ensure observance of this provision. The Committee also observes that special protection in regard to such experiments is necessary in the case of persons not capable of giving valid consent, and in particular those under any form of detention or imprisonment. Such persons should not be subjected to any medical or scientific experimentation that may be detrimental to their health.[1452]

1550. In 1992, in Herczegfalvy v. Austria, the ECtHR stated that:

> 83. In this case it is above all the length of time during which the handcuffs and security bed were used . . . which appears worrying. However, the evidence before the Court is not sufficient to disprove the Government's argument that, according to the psychiatric principles generally accepted at the time, medical necessity justified the treatment in issue [i.e. treatment with antibiotics and neuroleptics] . . .
> 84. No violation of Article 3 (art. 3) [of the 1950 ECHR] has thus been shown.[1453]

10 November 1992, pp. 8 and 13; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Fourth Submission), annexed to Letter dated 7 December 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24918, 8 December 1992, p. 12.

[1450] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.
[1451] ICTR, Semanza case, Indictment, 21 October 1997, Count 7.
[1452] HRC, General Comment No. 20 (Article 7 ICCPR), 10 March 1992, § 7.
[1453] ECtHR, Herczegfalvy v. Austria, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction), 24 September 1992, §§ 83–84.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1551. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "mutilation is prohibited, unless indicated by the state of health of the individual or medical ethics (e.g. removal of tissue or organs for transplantation)".[1454]

1552. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the following crimes, when committed in an international armed conflict, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court:

> biological experiments . . . subjecting persons who are in the power of the adverse Party or who are interned, detained or otherwise deprived of liberty, to any medical procedure which is not indicated by the state of health of the person concerned and which is not consistent with generally accepted medical standards which would be applied in similar medical circumstances to persons who are nationals of the Party conducting the procedure and who are in no way deprived of liberty, in particular to carry out on such persons, even with their consent:
> a) physical mutilations;
> b) medical or scientific experiments;
> c) removal of tissue or organs for transplantation.[1455]

In addition, the ICRC proposed that the crime of "mutilation", when committed in a non-international armed conflict, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[1456]

VI. Other Practice

1553. In 1987, in a meeting with the ICRC, the leader of an armed opposition group criticised the inhuman treatment of prisoners by other parties to the conflict but later admitted to mutilating certain prisoners to dissuade them from fighting.[1457]

1554. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "mutilation" shall remain prohibited.[1458]

[1454] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 194.
[1455] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, § 1(a)(ii) and (d).
[1456] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, § 3(i).
[1457] ICRC archive document.
[1458] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(2)(a), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 331.

G. Rape and Other Forms of Sexual Violence

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1555. Common Article 3(1)(c) of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that "outrages upon personal dignity" are prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat.

1556. Article 27, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "women shall be especially protected against any attack on their honour, in particular against rape, enforced prostitution, or any form of indecent assault".

1557. Article 1 of the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others provides that:

> The Parties to the present Convention agree to punish any person who . . .
> (1) Procures, entices or leads away, for purposes of prostitution, another person, even with the consent of that person;
> (2) Exploits the prostitution of another person, even with the consent of that person.

1558. Article 75(2)(b) AP I provides that "enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault" shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever. Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1459]

1559. Article 4(2)(e) AP II provides that "enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault" shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever. Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1460]

1560. Article 76(1) AP I provides that women "shall be protected in particular against rape, forced prostitution and any other form of indecent assault". Article 76 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1461]

1561. Article 77(1) AP I provides that children "shall be protected against any form of indecent assault". Article 77 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1462]

1562. Article 27 of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that:

> States Parties to the present Charter shall undertake to protect the child from all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse and shall in particular take measures to prevent: (a) the inducement, coercion or encouragement of a child to engage in any sexual activity; (b) the use of children in prostitution or other sexual practices; (c) the use of children in pornographic activities, performances and materials.

1563. Pursuant to Article 6(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group" constitutes genocide when

[1459] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[1460] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[1461] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.
[1462] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 251.

"committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group".

1564. Pursuant to Article 7(1)(g) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilization, or any other form of sexual violence of comparable gravity" constitutes a crime against humanity "when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack".

1565. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "committing rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy . . . enforced sterilization, or any other form of sexual violence" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

1566. Article 1 of the 2000 Optional Protocol on Child Trade, Prostitution and Pornography provides that the States parties shall prohibit child prostitution and child pornography.

1567. Article 1 of the 2000 Protocol on Trafficking in Persons states that "the purposes of this Protocol are . . . (a) to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, paying particular attention to women and children". Article 5 of the same Protocol provides that:

1. Each State Party shall adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences the conduct set forth in article 3 of this Protocol [i.e. trafficking in persons] , when committed intentionally.
2. Each State Party shall also adopt such legislative and other measures as may be necessary to establish as criminal offences:
   (a) Subject to the basic concepts of its legal system, attempting to commit an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article;
   (b) Participating as an accomplice in an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article; and
   (c) Organizing or directing other persons to commit an offence established in accordance with paragraph 1 of this article.

1568. Article 3 of the 2002 SAARC Convention on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Women and Children for Prostitution provides that:

1. The State Parties to the Convention shall take effective measures to ensure that trafficking in any form is an offence under their respective criminal law and shall make such an offence punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account its grave nature.
2. The State Parties to the Convention, in their respective territories, shall provide for punishment of any person who keeps, maintains or manages or knowingly finances or takes part in the financing of a place used for the purpose of trafficking and knowingly lets or rents a building or other place or any part thereof for the purpose of trafficking.
3. Any attempt or abetment to commit any crime mentioned in paras 1 and 2 above or their financing shall also be punishable.

1569. Article 3(e) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone states that "the Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977", which include rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault.

Other Instruments

1570. Article 44 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "all rape [of persons in the invaded country] is prohibited".

1571. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution, including rape and the abduction of girls and women for the purpose of enforced prostitution.

1572. Article II(1)(c) of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that "rape, or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population" is a crime against humanity.

1573. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

1574. Under Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the parties committed themselves to respect and ensure respect for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Paragraph 2.3 requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

1575. The preamble to the 1993 UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women expresses concern about the fact that "women in situations of armed conflict are especially vulnerable to violence". Article 2 of the Declaration provides that:

> Violence against women shall be understood to encompass, but not be limited to, the following:
> (a) Physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring in the family, including battering, sexual abuse of female children in the household, dowry-related violence, marital rape, female genital mutilation and other traditional practices harmful to women, non-spousal violence and violence related to exploitation;
> (b) Physical, sexual and psychological violence occurring within the general community, including rape, sexual abuse, sexual harassment and intimidation at work, in educational institutions and elsewhere, trafficking in women and forced prostitution;
> (c) Physical, sexual and psychological violence perpetrated or condoned by the State, wherever it occurs.

1576. Article 5(g) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that rape, when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population, constitutes a crime against humanity.

1577. According to Article 3(g) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, rape, when committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds, constitutes a crime against humanity. Article 4(c) provides that the Tribunal is competent to prosecute violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault.
1578. Under Article 18(j) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "rape, enforced prostitution and any form of sexual abuse" constitute crimes against humanity.
1579. Article 20(d) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind states that "rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault" committed in violation of international humanitarian law applicable in international conflict are war crimes.
1580. Article 20(f)(v) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind stipulates that "rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault" constitutes a war crime in conflicts not of an international character.
1581. Article 2(7) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote the right not to be subject to rape and sexual abuse.
1582. According to Section 7.2, 7.3 and 7.4 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, rape, enforced prostitution or any form of sexual assault and humiliation against persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations and persons placed hors de combat, with a specific reference to women and children, are prohibited at any time and in any place.
1583. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi), "committing rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy . . . enforced sterilization, or any other form of sexual violence" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1584. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) stipulates that "women will be especially protected against attempts on their honour, particularly against rape, enforced prostitution and indecent assault".[1463]
1585. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that "women shall be subject to special respect and protected particularly against all forms of indecent assault". It provides that forced prostitution and any other form of indecent assault are prohibited in international and internal armed conflicts and in occupied territories.[1464]

[1463] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.010.

1586. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that the Geneva Conventions provide "particular protection for women and children, specifically against acts of rape or indecency".[1465]

1587. Australia's Defence Force Manual stipulates that "women receive special protection under LOAC against any attack on their honour, in particular against rape, forced prostitution and any other form of indecent assault".[1466]

1588. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that women must be specially protected against any attack on their honour, in particular against rape, enforced prostitution or any other form of indecent assault. It states that this provision also applies in occupied territories. According to the manual, rape is a crime against humanity.[1467]

1589. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "women and children in particular must not be subjected to rape, enforced prostitution, and any form of indecent assault".[1468]

1590. The PLA Rules of Discipline provides that women are not to be assailed with obscenities.[1469]

1591. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic provides that "women in combat zones shall be protected against sexual assault and forced prostitution".[1470]

1592. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces lists the prohibition of sexual violence against women as one of the ten basic rules. It stipulates that it is prohibited to commit sexual abuse and that soldiers "do not permit others to commit" such acts. According to the manual, sexual abuse is a violation of human rights.[1471]

1593. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual instructs soldiers not to mistreat women.[1472]

1594. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that acts of rape are criminally prosecuted.[1473] It states that rape is a grave breach of the law of armed conflict.[1474]

1595. France's LOAC Manual restates Article 7(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1475] It adds that "forced prostitution and any attempts on decency" and "rape" are crimes against humanity.[1476]

[1464] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 4.13, 4.15, 4.27 and 7.04.
[1465] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 603.
[1466] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 946, 1010 and 1218.
[1467] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-3, § 21, p. 11-4, § 30, p. 11-8, § 63, p. 12-4, § 37, p. 16-1, § 4 and p. 17-3, § 21(e).
[1468] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 4, § 2.
[1469] China, PLA Rules of Discipline (1947), Point 8.
[1470] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.
[1471] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), Rule 6, pp. 3, 13 and 18.
[1472] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 3.
[1473] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 2.
[1474] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[1475] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 43.
[1476] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 45.

1596. Germany's Military Manual provides that "any attack on the honour of women, in particular rape, enforced prostitution, or any other form of indecent assault, is prohibited".[1477]

1597. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "the rationale behind the law of war is that even in the midst of the inferno, there are grave deeds [such as rape] that must not be committed". It recalls the definition of crimes against humanity contained in the 1998 ICC Statute, stating that "crimes against humanity were defined as the systematic harming of a civilian population, which includes deeds such as: . . . rape".[1478]

1598. Madagascar's Military Manual states that "women . . . shall be subject to special respect and protected against any indecent assault".[1479]

1599. The Military Manual of the Netherlands restates the prohibition of sexual violence found in common Article 3 to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, Articles 75–77 AP I and Article 4 AP II.[1480]

1600. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that female civilians and female prisoners must be specially protected against rape and other forms of sexual assault.[1481] It further specifies that "women must be specially protected against any attack on their honour, in particular against rape, enforced prostitution or any other form of indecent assault".[1482] The manual restates Article 75(2) AP I.[1483] In the case of non-international armed conflict, the manual prohibits, at any time and anywhere, "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment, rape, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault".[1484]

1601. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that fundamental guarantees for the wounded and sick, POWs and civilians include protection against "degrading treatments and indecent assaults".[1485]

1602. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct provides that "women will be protected against any attack on their person, honor and in particular against rape or any form of indecent assault".[1486]

1603. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces lists the prohibition of sexual violence against women and children as one of the ten basic rules.[1487]

1604. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to the IHL conventions and the 1948 UDHR is the prohibition of rape, forced prostitution and any form of sexual assault.[1488]

[1477] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 504.
[1478] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), pp. 4 and 68.
[1479] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 27.
[1480] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VIII-3, XI-1 and XI-4.
[1481] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 916.
[1482] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1114, see also § 1321.2 (civilians).
[1483] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137.2.
[1484] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1812.1.
[1485] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(32).
[1486] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(i).
[1487] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), Rule 6.
[1488] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 23.

1605. Spain's LOAC Manual stipulates that "women are subject to special respect and shall be protected in particular against all forms of indecent assault".[1489] It prohibits "attacks on personal dignity, especially degrading and humiliating treatment, enforced prostitution and any form of indecent assault".[1490]

1606. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I and the general protection of women contained in 76(1) AP I are part of customary international law.[1491] It further specifies that "women shall be especially protected against any form of insulting treatment".[1492]

1607. Switzerland's military manuals provide that women must be particularly respected and protected against rape, enforced prostitution and any other form of indecent assault.[1493]

1608. Uganda's Operational Code of Conduct provides that rape is a crime that entails a specific punishment.[1494]

1609. The UK Military Manual states that "women must be specially protected against any attack on their honour, in particular against rape, enforced prostitution or any form of indecent assault". The manual states that the rule also applies in occupied territories.[1495] It further specifies that forcing women into prostitution, even if it is not considered a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions, qualifies as a war crime.[1496]

1610. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the question of honour of women is specific; there must be no rape, no enforced prostitution and no indecent assault".[1497]

1611. The US Field Manual restates Article 27 GC IV.[1498]

1612. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides with regard to national or occupied territories that "women are to be protected against sexual attack and enforced prostitution".[1499]

1613. The US Soldier's Manual states that "women in war zones must be protected against rape and forced prostitution".[1500]

1614. The US Instructor's Guide provides with regard to the treatment of non-combatants that "women must be protected from attacks on their honour, to include any form of sexual assault".[1501]

[1489] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.c.(1).
[1490] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.c.
[1491] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[1492] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[1493] Switzerland, Military Manual (1984), p. 34; Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 146; Teaching Manual (1986), p. 43.
[1494] Uganda, Operational Code of Conduct (1986), Rule 26(d).
[1495] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 39 and 547.
[1496] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626.
[1497] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 35, § 9.
[1498] US, Field Manual (1956), § 266.
[1499] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-4.
[1500] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 21.
[1501] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 8 and 13.

1615. The US Operational Law Handbook states that the "law of war specifically prohibits any attacks on [women's] honour, including any form of sexual assault".[1502]

1616. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides for the protection of women against attacks on their honour, especially rape and forced prostitution.[1503]

National Legislation

1617. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who subjects any protected person to enforced prostitution or any form of indecent assault.[1504]

1618. Under Armenia's Penal Code, the "application of . . . humiliating practices" during an armed conflict constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[1505] It is also the case of acts of genocide, including "violently preventing births" within a national, ethnic, racial or religious group.[1506]

1619. Australia's War Crimes Act provides that rape and "abduction of girls and women for the purpose of enforced prostitution" are war crimes.[1507]

1620. Under Australia's War Crimes Act as amended, rape, indecent assault and "abduction, or procuring, for immoral purposes" are considered serious war crimes.[1508]

1621. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including: "genocide by imposing measures intended to prevent births"; crimes against humanity, including "rape", "sexual slavery", "enforced prostitution", "forced pregnancy", "enforced sterilisation" and "sexual violence"; and war crimes, including "rape", "sexual slavery", "enforced prostitution", "forced pregnancy", "enforced sterilisation" and "sexual violence", in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[1509]

1622. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, rape of civilian persons, degrading and humiliating treatment of women, forced prostitution and attacks on their dignity are prohibited. It further prohibits the rape of prisoners of war and adds that "women and young girls are especially protected against attacks on their honour".[1510]

[1502] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-192(2)(a).
[1503] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 253.
[1504] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[1505] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.4(3).
[1506] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 393.
[1507] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3.
[1508] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Sections 6(1) and 7(1).
[1509] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.6, 268.14-268.19, 268.59-268.64 and 268.82-268.87.
[1510] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 17(2), 21(1) and 22(1).

1623. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that "committing rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, enforced sterilization and other acts related to sexual violence" are war crimes.[1511]

1624. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[1512]

1625. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that "rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilization, or any other form of sexual violence of comparable gravity" constitutes a crime under international law.[1513]

1626. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that forced prostitution and rape of civilians is a war crime.[1514] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[1515]

1627. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that "rape, sexual slavery, forced prostitution, forced pregnancy, forced sterilisation or any other form of sexual violence" constitutes a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1516]

1628. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes defined in Articles 6, 7 and 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[1517]

1629. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that rape and "kidnapping females and forcing them to become prostitutes" is a war crime.[1518]

1630. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on anyone who, during an armed conflict, carries out or orders the "carrying out of forced sexual acts on protected persons" and "forced prostitution or sexual slavery".[1519]

1631. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, "imposing measures intended to prevent births" within an ethnical, racial or religious group, as such, with intent to destroy the group, in whole or in part, constitutes a crime of genocide.[1520] Moreover, "rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilisation and any other form of [1511] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 116.0.17, see also Article 108 (gender violations: rape, gender enslavement, enforced prostitution and any other forms of sexual violence).

[1512] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[1513] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(2)(7).
[1514] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(1).
[1515] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 433(1).
[1516] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(B)(u), see also Articles 4(C)(f) and 2(d) (genocide) and Article 3(g) (crimes against humanity).
[1517] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1518] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3(3) and (17).
[1519] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Articles 139 and 141.
[1520] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 1.

sexual violence of comparable gravity" when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, is a crime against humanity.[1521] The Act further defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1522]

1632. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that forced prostitution and rape are war crimes.[1523]

1633. Under El Salvador's Penal Code, "adopting measures aimed at preventing reproduction" of a national, racial or religious group, with the intent to destroy partially or totally such group, is a crime of genocide.[1524]

1634. Estonia's Penal Code provides that rape of a civilian person is a war crime.[1525]

1635. Under Ethiopia's Penal Code "compulsion to acts of prostitution, debauchery and rape" are war crimes against the civilian population.[1526]

1636. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, any war crime provided for by the 1998 ICC Statute, which is not explicitly mentioned in the Code, such as "rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, . . . enforced sterilisation, or any other form of sexual violence also constituting a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions" in international and non-international armed conflicts, is a war crime.[1527]

1637. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code, provides for the punishment of anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "sexually coerces, rapes, forces into prostitution or deprives a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law of his or her reproductive capacity, or confines a woman forcibly made pregnant with the intent of affecting the ethnic composition of any population".[1528]

1638. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, taking measures aiming at prevention of births within a national, ethnic, racial or religious group, as a part of a genocide campaign, constitutes a "crime against the freedom of peoples".[1529]

1639. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3

[1521] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
[1522] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[1523] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 158.
[1524] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 361.
[1525] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 97, see also § 89 (rape and subjection to prostitution as crimes against humanity) and § 90 (coercive measures preventing childbirth within a group as part of a genocide campaign).
[1526] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(f).
[1527] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 413(d).
[1528] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(4), see also § 6(1)(4) (genocide) and § 7(1)(6) (crimes against humanity).
[1529] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 155(1)(d).

and Article 27 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Articles 75(2), 76(1) and 77(1) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2)(e) AP II, are punishable offences.[1530]

1640. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law includes "imposing measures intended to prevent births among Jews" in its definition of genocide.[1531]

1641. South Korea's Military Criminal Code provides that the rape of women in combat or in an occupied zone is punishable by the death penalty.[1532]

1642. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, "rape of women or forcing them to engage in prostitution" constitutes a war crime.[1533]

1643. Mali's Penal Code provides that "rape, sexual slavery, forced prostitution, forced pregnancies, forced sterilisation or any other form of sexual violence which is a grave breach of the 1949 Geneva Conventions" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.[1534]

1644. Mozambique's Military Criminal Law criminalises sexual intercourse with a woman against her will, as well as the rape of minors under 12 years old.[1535]

1645. Myanmar's Defence Service Act provides that:

> Any person subject to this law who commits an offence . . . of rape in relation to [any person not subject to military law] shall not be deemed to be guilty of an offence against this act and shall not be tried by a court-martial unless he commits any of the said offences . . . while in active service.[1536]

1646. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands includes "rape" and "abduction of girls and women for the purpose of enforced prostitution" in its list of war crimes.[1537]

1647. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, enforced sterilisation, or any other form of sexual violence which can be deemed to be of a gravity comparable to a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions", "forced pregnancy", as well as "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment" of persons taking no active part in the hostilities, constitute crimes, whether committed in time of international or non-international armed conflict.[1538]

[1530] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1531] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b).
[1532] South Korea, Military Criminal Code (1962), Article 84(1).
[1533] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[1534] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(i)(22), see also Article 29(g) (sexual violence as a crime against humanity) and Article 30(d) (prevention of births as part of a genocide campaign).
[1535] Mozambique, Military Criminal Law (1987), Article 85(b)–(c).
[1536] Myanmar, Defence Services Act (1959), Section 72.
[1537] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.
[1538] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(3)(a) and (b), 5(5)(j), 6(1)(c) and 6(2)(a) and (b), see also Article 3(1)(d) (imposition of measures intended to prevent births within a group as part of a genocide campaign) and Article 4(1)(g) (rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilisation, or any other form of sexual violence of comparable gravity as crimes against humanity).

1648. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, genocide includes the crimes defined in Article 6(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute, crimes against humanity include the crimes defined in Article 7(1)(g) of the Statute, and war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the Statute.[1539]

1649. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, it is a crime of genocide to adopt "measures aimed at preventing birth" within a group, with the intent to destroy partially or totally a national, ethnic, racial or religious group or a group defined on the basis of any other arbitrary criterion.[1540]

1650. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[1541]

1651. Under Paraguay's Military Penal Code, rape is a crime.[1542]

1652. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, forced prostitution and rape are war crimes.[1543]

1653. Spain's Military Criminal Code provides for the punishment of military personnel who commit rape of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war or the civilian population.[1544]

1654. Under Spain's Penal Code, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, acts of rape, sexual assault and enforced prostitution are criminal offences.[1545]

1655. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(g) of the Statute, and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the Statute.[1546]

1656. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit genocide as defined in Article 6(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute, a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(g) of the Statute, and a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the Statute.[1547]

1657. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) considers that, during war or enemy occupation, "any person who ordered, assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of . . . abduction for prostitution, or raping" committed war crimes.[1548]

[1539] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Sections 9(2), 10(2) and 11(2).
[1540] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.1.
[1541] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[1542] Paraguay, Military Penal Code (1980), Articles 289–290.
[1543] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(1).
[1544] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 76.
[1545] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 612(3).
[1546] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[1547] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[1548] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).

1658. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that forced prostitution and rape are war crimes.[1549]

National Case-law

1659. In its judgement in the Takashi Sakai case in 1946, the War Crimes Military Tribunal of the Chinese Ministry of National Defence found the accused guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity inasmuch as he had incited or permitted his subordinates to commit, inter alia, acts of rape.[1550]

1660. In 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court held that the prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II practically reproduced specific constitutional provisions.[1551]

1661. In its judgement in the John Schultz case in 1952, the US Court of Military Appeals listed rape as a "crime universally recognized as properly punishable under the law of war".[1552]

1662. In the civil action brought against Radovan Karadžić in the US in 1995, a US Court of Appeals held that rape committed in the course of hostilities violated the laws of war and was a war crime.[1553]

1663. In its memorandum opinion concerning the admissibility of the claim in the Comfort Women case in 2001, the US District Court of Columbia stated that "Japan's use of its war-time military to impose 'a premeditated master plan' of sexual slavery upon the women of occupied Asian countries might be characterized properly as a war crime or a crime against humanity".[1554]

Other National Practice

1664. In response to a report by the Australian Joint Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs, Defence and Trade, which recommended that the Australian government establish a mechanism for investigating and identifying those responsible for serious crimes, including rape, committed in the former Yugoslavia, the Australian government replied that this mechanism was already in place subsequent to the enactment of the International War Crimes Tribunal Act of 1995.[1555]

[1549] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142(1).
[1550] China, War Crimes Military Tribunal of the Ministry of National Defence, Takashi Sakai case, Judgement, 29 August 1946.
[1551] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.
[1552] US, Court of Military Appeals, John Schultz case, Judgement, 5 August 1952.
[1553] US, Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Karadžić case, Decision, 13 October 1995.
[1554] US, District Court of Columbia, Comfort Women case, Memorandum Opinion and Judgement, 4 October 2001.
[1555] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Legal Office, Australian Practice in International Law, 1995, Chapter XII, printed in Australian Yearbook of International Law, 1996, pp. 626–628.

1665. In 1991, three political parties in the German parliament tabled a resolution that referred to rape as a crime in the context of the Sudanese civil war.[1556]

1666. In 1992, in a written reply to questions in parliament concerning the systematic rape of Muslim women and girls by Serb forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the German government stated that it had made "vigorous and repeated representations to the 'Yugoslav' government, both bilaterally and within the framework of the European Community, in connection with these rapes and other grave human rights violations". It reaffirmed that rape was "already prohibited in armed conflict and deemed a war crime under the existing provisions of international humanitarian law" and cited Article 27 GC IV and Article 4(2)(e) AP II in support of its position. The government further stated that "should the reports of systematic mass rape of predominantly Muslim women and girls be confirmed, this would, moreover, meet the statutory definition for systematic harm to an ethnical group within the meaning of the 1948 Genocide Convention".[1557]

1667. In a letter to parliament in 1993, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Netherlands condemned the maltreatment and rape of women in the former Yugoslavia.[1558]

1668. In 1995, the Commission on Human Rights of the Philippines proposed that rape and sexual violence in situations of conflict be recognised as war crimes.[1559]

1669. In 1993, during a debate in the House of Lords in 1993, the UK Minister of State, FCO, stated that "rape probably already comes within the definition of a war crime".[1560]

1670. In 1994, in a briefing note on Britain's peacemaking role in the former Yugoslavia, the UK Minister of State, FCO, in reply to the question as to whether he considered rape as a war crime, stated that:

In international armed conflicts, a war crime can be defined as any serious violation of the laws and customs of war, including grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention specifically prohibits rape; and Article 3, which applies to non-international armed conflicts and which [1556] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Proposal by the CDU/CSU and FDP, Entwicklungspolitische Chancen in Umbruchsituationen nutzen – entwicklungspolitische Herausforderungen and den Beispielen Äthiopien einschließlich Eritrea, Somalia, Sudan und Angola, BT-Drucksache 12/1814, 11 December 1991, p. 4.

[1557] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Answer by the government to questions by members of Parliament, Systematische Vergewaltigung als Mittel der serbischen Kriegsführung u.a. in Bosnien, BT-Drucksache 12/4048, 29 December 1992, pp. 2–3.

[1558] Netherlands, Lower House of Parliament, Letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs concerning the situation in Yugoslavia, 1992–1993 Session, Doc. 22 181, No. 36, 25 February 1993, p. 1.

[1559] Philippines, Commission on Human Rights, Philippine Human Rights Plan 1996–2000, 1995, Vol. 2, § 14.

[1560] UK, House of Lords, Statement by the Minister of State, FCO, Hansard, 24 May 1993, Vol. 225, col. 575.

is common to all four Conventions, refers to "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment". This would clearly include rape.[1561]

1671. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that ... women be protected against rape and indecent assault".[1562]

1672. In 1992, in reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV committed in the former Yugoslavia, the US described acts of sexual violence and rape perpetrated by the parties to the conflict.[1563]

1673. In 1992, in its final report on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense listed some specific Iraqi war crimes, in particular "inhumane treatment of Kuwaiti and third country civilians, to include rape".[1564]

1674. In 1998, in response to the situation in Kosovo, but also referring to the other conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, the US Congress adopted a resolution by unanimous consent stating that:

Whereas there is reason to believe that as President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Slobodan Miloševic was responsible for the conception and direction of a war of aggression ... and that mass rape and forced impregnation were among the tools used to wage this war ...

it is the sense of Congress that ... the United States should publicly declare that it considers that there is reason to believe that Slobodan Miloševic, President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), has committed war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide.[1565]

1675. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000, the US Congress expressed its sense concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during the Second World War, in particular the rape of civilian women on the island of Guam and in Nanjing.[1566]

[1561] UK, House of Lords, Briefing Note by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on Britain's peacemaking role in former Yugoslavia, Hansard, 9 June 1994, Vol. 555, col. 1321.

[1562] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 427.

[1563] US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention, annexed to Letter dated 22 September 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24583, 23 September 1992, pp. 7–8; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Second Submission), annexed to Letter dated 22 October 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24705, 23 October 1992, pp. 7, 10–11 and 13; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Third Submission), annexed to Letter dated 5 November 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24791, 10 November 1992, Annex, pp. 9 and 16–18; Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Fourth Submission), annexed to Letter dated 7 December 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24918, 8 December 1992, pp. 6–8, 10 and 12.

[1564] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 634.

[1565] US, Congress, S. Con. Resolution 105 on the Sense of Congress Regarding the Culpability of Slobodan Miloševic, 17 July 1998, Congressional Record (Senate), pp. S8456–S8458.

[1566] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON. RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.

1676. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[1567]

1677. In an exceptional report submitted to CEDAW in 1993, the FRY reported its position that abuses of women in war zones were crimes contrary to IHL and apologised for an earlier statement which might have given the false impression that rape was considered normal behaviour in times of war.[1568]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1678. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Security Council stated that it was "appalled by reports of massive, organised and systematic detention and rape of women, in particular Muslim women, in Bosnia and Herzegovina" and strongly condemned "these acts of unspeakable brutality".[1569]

1679. In a resolution adopted in 1993 in the context of the conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council stated that it condemned "massive, organized and systematic detention and rape of women".[1570]

1680. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council expressed grave alarm at the widespread and flagrant violations of IHL occurring within the territory of the former Yugoslavia, especially Bosnia and Herzegovina, including "reports of massive, organised and systematic rape of women".[1571]

1681. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Security Council stated that rape was a "grave violation of international humanitarian law".[1572]

1682. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council expressed grave concern and condemned in the strongest possible terms the violations of IHL and human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including "evidence of a consistent pattern of rape".[1573]

1683. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on children in armed conflicts, the UN Security Council urged all parties to armed conflicts "to take special measures to protect children, in particular girls, from rape and other forms of sexual abuse and gender-based violence in situations of armed conflict".[1574]

[1567] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[1568] FRY, Statement before CEDAW, UN Doc. A/48/39, 12 April 1994, §§ 761 and 769.
[1569] UN Security Council, Res. 798, 18 December 1992, preamble and § 2.
[1570] UN Security Council, Res. 820, 17 April 1993, § 6.
[1571] UN Security Council, Res. 827, 25 May 1993, preamble.
[1572] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble.
[1573] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, preamble and § 2.
[1574] UN Security Council, Res. 1261, 25 August 1999, § 10.

1684. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on women and peace and security, the UN Security Council called on "all parties to armed conflict to take special measures to protect women and girls from gender-based violence, particularly rape and other forms of sexual abuse, and all other forms of violence in situations of armed conflict".[1575]

1685. In 1998, in a statement by its President on Sierra Leone, the UN Security Council condemned as gross violations of IHL "atrocities against the civilian population, particularly women and children", including widespread rape.[1576]

1686. In 1998, in a statement by its President on children and armed conflict, the UN Security Council strongly condemned the sexual abuse of children.[1577]

1687. In 1993, in a resolution proclaiming the UN Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, the UN General Assembly stated that:

> States should condemn violence against women and should not invoke any custom, tradition or religious consideration to avoid their obligations with respect to its elimination. States should pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating violence against women and, to this end, should:
> (a) Consider, where they have not yet done so, ratifying or acceding to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women or withdrawing reservations to that Convention;
> (b) Refrain from engaging in violence against women;
> (c) Exercise due diligence to prevent, investigate and, in accordance with national legislation, punish acts of violence against women, whether those acts are perpetrated by the State or by private persons;
> (d) Develop penal, civil, labour and administrative sanctions in domestic legislation to punish and redress the wrongs caused to women who are subjected to violence . . .[1578]

1688. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the UN General Assembly strongly condemned the practice of rape and abuse of women and children in areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia and emphasised "the particularly heinous nature of the crime of rape". It considered that "the abhorrent practice of rape and abuse of women and children" constituted a war crime.[1579]

1689. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN General Assembly expressed "its outrage that the systematic practice of rape continues to be used as a weapon of war against women and children and as an instrument of ethnic cleansing" and recognized that "rape in this context constitutes a war crime".[1580]

[1575] UN Security Council, Res. 1325, 31 October 2000, § 10.
[1576] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/13, 20 May 1998, § 1.
[1577] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/18, 29 June 1998, § 2.
[1578] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/104, 20 December 1993, Article 4.
[1579] UN General Assembly, Res. 48/143, 20 December 1993, §§ 1–3.
[1580] UN General Assembly, Res. 49/196, 23 December 1994, § 16.

1690. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on rape and abuse of women in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, the UN General Assembly stated that it:

> Strongly condemns the abhorrent practice of rape and abuse of women and children in the areas of armed conflict in the former Yugoslavia, which constitutes a war crime;
>
> ... Expresses its outrage that the systematic practice of rape has been used as a weapon of war and an instrument of ethnic cleansing against women and children in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina;
>
> ... Reaffirms that rape in the conduct of armed conflict constitutes a war crime and that under certain circumstances it constitutes a crime against humanity and an act of genocide as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, and calls upon States to take all measures required for the protection of women and children from such acts and to strengthen mechanisms to investigate and punish all those responsible and bring the perpetrators to justice.[1581]

1691. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN General Assembly expressed its outrage that "the systematic practice of rape has been used as a weapon of war against women and children and as an instrument of ethnic cleansing, and recognizes that rape in this context constitutes a war crime".[1582]

1692. In a resolution on Rwanda adopted in 1996, the UN General Assembly expressed "its deep concern at the intense suffering of the victims of genocide and crimes against humanity" and recognized "the ongoing suffering of their survivors, particularly the extremely high number of traumatized children and women victims of rape and sexual violence".[1583]

1693. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the rights of the child, the UN General Assembly reaffirmed that:

> Rape in the conduct of armed conflict constitutes a war crime and that under certain circumstances it constitutes a crime against humanity and an act of genocide, as defined in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, and calls upon all States to take all measures required for the protection of women and children from all acts of gender-based violence, including rape, sexual exploitation and forced pregnancy, and to strengthen mechanisms to investigate and punish all those responsible and bring the perpetrators to justice.[1584]

1694. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed its outrage that "the systematic practice of rape continues to be used as [1581] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/192, 22 December 1995, §§ 1–3; see also Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995 and Res. 51/115, 12 December 1996, §§ 1 and 3.

[1582] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 15.
[1583] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/114, 12 December 1996, § 3.
[1584] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/77, 12 December 1996, § 28; see also Res. 52/107, 12 December 1997, Section IV, § 12.

a weapon of war against women and children and as an instrument of 'ethnic cleansing'" and recognized that "rape in these circumstances constitutes a war crime".[1585]

1695. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned "in the strongest terms" all violations of human rights and international humanitarian law during the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, in particular massive and systematic violations, including rape, and reaffirmed that "all persons who plan, commit or authorize such acts will be held personally responsible and accountable" and called for the punishment of those responsible.[1586]

1696. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on abduction of children from northern Uganda, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned in the strongest terms all parties involved in the rape of children.[1587]

1697. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "rape in the conduct of armed conflict constitutes a war crime and that under certain circumstances it constitutes a crime against humanity and an act of genocide" and called upon "all States to take all measures required for the protection of children and women from all acts of gender-based violence, including rape, sexual exploitation and forced pregnancy".[1588]

1698. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights condemned rape as a war crime.[1589]

1699. In a resolution adopted in 1998, following a study by the Special Rapporteur on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, including internal armed conflict, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights reiterated the Rapporteur's view that "the existing international legal frameworks of humanitarian law, human rights law and criminal law clearly prohibit and criminalize sexual violence . . . in all circumstances".[1590]

1700. In 1996, in a report on the impact of armed conflict on children, the expert appointed by the UN Secretary-General recommended that "practical protection measures to prevent sexual violence . . . must be a priority in all assistance programmes in refugee and displaced [persons] camps". The report further stated that:

> Acts of gender-based violence, particularly rape, committed during armed conflicts constitute a violation of international humanitarian law. When it occurs on a massive scale or as a matter of orchestrated policy, this added dimension is recognized . . . as a crime against humanity.

[1585] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 14.
[1586] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, §§ 1–2.
[1587] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/75, 22 April 1998, § 3.
[1588] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, § 13.
[1589] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/8, 18 August 1995, § 7.
[1590] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/18, 21 August 1998, § 3

The report also emphasised that "unwanted pregnancy resulting from forced impregnation should be recognised as a distinct harm".[1591]

1701. In 1998, in report on assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors, which included a section on internally displaced children, the UN Secretary-General noted that UNICEF had been "pressing for an end to the systematic abduction of children from northern Uganda by members of an armed group" to base camps in southern Sudan where they were reportedly "tortured, enslaved, raped and otherwise abused".[1592]

1702. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[1593]

1703. In 1996, in a report on her mission to North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on violence against women, its causes and consequences argued that:

> Even if it is considered that the 1949 Geneva Conventions are not evidence of customary international law because of ratione temporis and that the 1929 Geneva Convention is not applicable because Japan was not a signatory, Japan was a party to the Hague Convention and Annexed Regulations concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land of 1907. The Regulations are not applicable if all belligerents are not parties to the Convention (art. 2) but its provisions would be a clear example of customary international law operating at that time. Article 46 of the Hague Regulations places on States the obligation to protect family honour and rights. Family honour has been interpreted to include the right of women in the family not to be subjected to the humiliating practice of rape.[1594]

The Special Rapporteur also stated that "the abduction and systematic rape of women and girl children in the case of 'comfort women' clearly constituted an inhumane act against the civilian population and a crime against humanity".[1595]

1704. In 1998, in a report on violence against women, its causes and consequences, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

[1591] Expert appointed by the UN Secretary-General on the Impact of Armed Conflict on Children, Report, UN Doc. A/51/306, 26 August 1996, §§ 90(c), 91 and 104.

[1592] UN Secretary-General, Assistance to unaccompanied refugee minors, Report, UN Doc. A/53/325, 26 August 1998, § 20.

[1593] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

[1594] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1, 4 January 1996, § 101.

[1595] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1, 4 January 1996, § 113.

Until recently, violence against women in armed conflict has been couched in terms of "protection" and "honour". Article 27 of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War treats violence against women as a crime of honour rather than as a crime of violence. By using the honour paradigm, linked as it is to concepts of chastity, purity and virginity, stereotypical concepts of femininity have been formally enshrined in humanitarian law. Thus, criminal sexual assault, in both national and international law, is linked to the morality of the victim. When rape is perceived as a crime against honour or morality, shame commonly ensues for the victim, who is often viewed by the community as "dirty" or "spoiled". Consequently, many women will neither report nor discuss the violence that has been perpetrated against them. The nature of rape and the silence that tends to surround it makes it a particularly difficult human rights violation to investigate.

. . .

Perhaps more than the honour of the victim, it is the perceived honour of the enemy that is targeted in the perpetration of sexual violence against women; it is seen and often experienced as a means of humiliating the opposition. Sexual violence against women is meant to demonstrate victory over the men of the other group who have failed to protect their women. It is a message of castration and emasculation of the enemy group. It is a battle among men fought over the bodies of women.[1596]

1705. In 1998, in her final report on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights defined "sexual violence" as:

any violence, physical or psychological, carried out through sexual means or by targeting sexuality. Sexual violence covers both physical and psychological attacks directed at a person's sexual characteristics, such as forcing a person to strip naked in public, mutilating a person's genitals, or slicing off a woman's breasts.[1597]

The Special Rapporteur further stated that the following constituted rape:

The insertion, under conditions of force, coercion or duress, of any object, including but not limited to a penis, into a victim's vagina or anus; or the insertion, under conditions of force, coercion or duress, of a penis into the mouth of the victim. Rape is defined in gender-neutral terms, as both men and women are victims of rape.[1598]

The Special Rapporteur also stated that "sexual slavery" should be understood:

to be the status or condition of a person over whom any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised, including sexual access through rape or other forms of sexual violence.

. . .

[1596] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1998/54, 26 January 1998, Part I, §§ 4 and 5.

[1597] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, § 21.

[1598] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, § 24.

In addition to treaty law, the prohibition of slavery is a jus cogens norm in customary international law. The crime of slavery does not require government involvement or State action, and constitutes an international crime whether committed by State actors or private individuals.[1599]

With regard to the nature of sexual offences, while the Rapporteur asserted that they constituted crimes against humanity, she considered that "acts of sexual slavery and sexual violence may constitute war crimes in certain cases".[1600]

1706. In 2001, in a report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that:

Violence against women during wartime continues to involve horrendous crimes that must shock the conscience of humanity. Despite the significant progress that has been made in recent years to strengthen legal prohibitions against rape and other sexual violence, women and girls throughout the world continue to be the victims of unimaginable brutality. As the case studies illustrate, gender-based violence can take a variety of forms. Since 1997, women and girls have been raped – vaginally, anally and orally – sometimes with burning wood, knives or other objects. They have been raped by government forces and non-State actors, by police responsible for their protection, by refugee camp and border guards, by neighbours, local politicians, and sometimes family members under threat of death. They have been maimed or sexually mutilated, and often later killed or left to die. Women have been subjected to humiliating strip searches, forced to parade or dance naked in front of soldiers or in public, and to perform domestic chores while nude.[1601]

1707. Principle 2 of the Recommended Principles on Human Rights and Human Trafficking which are contained in a report of the UNHCHR of 2002 provides that "States have a responsibility under international law to act with due diligence to prevent trafficking, to investigate and prosecute traffickers and to assist and protect trafficked persons". Principles 12–16 furthermore provide that:

12. States shall adopt appropriate legislative and other measures necessary to establish, as criminal offences, trafficking, its component acts 2 and related conduct.
13. States shall effectively investigate, prosecute and adjudicate trafficking, including its component acts and related conduct, whether committed by governmental or by non-State actors.
14. States shall ensure that trafficking, its component acts and related offences constitute extraditable offences under national law and extradition treaties.

[1599] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, §§ 27–28.

[1600] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, § 56.

[1601] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/73, 23 January 2001, § 44.

States shall cooperate to ensure that the appropriate extradition procedures are followed in accordance with international law.

15. Effective and proportionate sanctions shall be applied to individuals and legal persons found guilty of trafficking or of its component or related offences.
16. States shall, in appropriate cases, freeze and confiscate the assets of individuals and legal persons involved in trafficking. To the extent possible, confiscated assets shall be used to support and compensate victims of trafficking.[1602]

1708. Guideline 4 of the Recommended Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking which are contained in a report of the UNHCHR of 2002 provides that:

States should consider:

1. Amending or adopting national legislation in accordance with international standards so that the crime of trafficking is precisely defined in national law and detailed guidance is provided as to its various punishable elements. All practices covered by the definition of trafficking such as debt bondage, forced labour and enforced prostitution should also be criminalized.
2. Enacting legislation to provide for the administrative, civil and, where appropriate, criminal liability of legal persons for trafficking offences in addition to the liability of natural persons. Reviewing current laws, administrative controls and conditions relating to the licensing and operation of businesses that may serve as cover for trafficking such as marriage bureaux, employment agencies, travel agencies, hotels and escort services.
3. Making legislative provision for effective and proportional criminal penalties (including custodial penalties giving rise to extradition in the case of individuals). Where appropriate, legislation should provide for additional penalties to be applied to persons found guilty of trafficking in aggravating circumstances, including offences involving trafficking in children or offences committed or involving complicity by State officials.
4. Making legislative provision for confiscation of the instruments and proceeds of trafficking and related offences. Where possible, the legislation should specify that the confiscated proceeds of trafficking will be used for the benefit of victims of trafficking. Consideration should be given to the establishment of a compensation fund for victims of trafficking and the use of confiscated assets to finance such a fund.

...

11. Making legislative provision for the punishment of public sector involvement or complicity in trafficking and related exploitation.[1603]

Other International Organisations

1709. In a declaration adopted in 1993, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe stated that it condemned the systematic practice of rape in

[1602] UNHCHR, Recommended Principles and Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking, Report to ECOSOC, UN Doc. E/2002/68/Add.1, 20 May 2002, Recommended Principles on Human Rights and Human Trafficking, Principles 2 and 12–16.

[1603] UNHCHR, Recommended Principles and Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking, Report to ECOSOC, UN Doc. E/2002/68/Add.1, 20 May 2002, Recommended Guidelines on Human Rights and Human Trafficking, Guideline 4.

Bosnia and Herzegovina and reaffirmed that the use of sexual violence as an instrument of warfare constituted a war crime.[1604]

1710. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the massive and flagrant violations of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe declared its "profound consternation . . . at the perpetration of crimes against humanity such as . . . the systematic rape of women belonging to minority groups, and in particular to the Muslim population".[1605]

1711. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the European Parliament expressed its view that the ICTY should "consider acts of violence against women committed in former Yugoslavia".[1606]

1712. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the rape of women in the former Yugoslavia, the European Parliament demanded that the systematic abuse of women be considered a war crime and a crime against humanity and called for the revision of existing military codes of conduct to set up new guidelines on the collection of evidence on the incidence of rape.[1607]

1713. In 1993, the EC Investigative Mission into the Treatment of Muslim Women in the Former Yugoslavia stated that "the mission believes there is now a strong case for clearly identifying [rape as a war crime], irrespective of whether they occur in national or international conflicts".[1608]

1714. In 2001, ECOWAS adopted a declaration on the fight against trafficking in persons in which the members committed themselves to:

> Adopt, as quickly as possible, such legislative and other measures as that are necessary to establish as criminal offences the trafficking in persons within, between, or from, their territory; to organize, direct, or participate as an accomplice, in this trafficking.[1609]

1715. In the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council stated that it followed with grave concern and deep regret the degradation of the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including the "carrying out of the worst crimes of . . . rape" perpetrated by the irregular Serbian troops.[1610]

[1604] Council of Europe, Committee of Ministers, Declaration on the Rape of Women and Children in the Territory of Former Yugoslavia, 18 February 1993, § 4.

[1605] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 994, 3 February 1993, § 1.

[1606] EU, European Parliament, Resolution on human rights in the world and Community human rights policy for the years 1991–92, 26 April 1993, §§ 7 and 8.

[1607] European Parliament, Resolution on the rape of women in the former Yugoslavia, 11 March 1993, §§ 1, 3 and 4.

[1608] EC, Report of the investigative mission into the treatment of Muslim women in the former Yugoslavia, annexed to Letter dated 2 February 1993 from Denmark to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/25240, 3 February 1993, Annex I, § 42.

[1609] ECOWAS, Declaration on the Fight against Trafficking in Persons (Decl. A/DC12/12/01), 25th Ordinary Session of Authority of Heads of State and Government, Dakar, 20–21 December 2001, § 5.

[1610] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, p. 8.

1716. In 2002, the OAS Inter-American Commission of Women adopted a resolution on fighting the crime of trafficking in persons, especially women, adolescents, and children, in which it acknowledged "that trafficking in women and children for labour-related and sexual exploitation purposes and other contemporary forms of slavery constitute a violation of human rights". It also reaffirmed that:

> That trafficking in women, adolescents, and children for exploitation in the Americas is an offense that must be prevented, suppressed, and punished through the adoption of a multidimensional approach involving the judicial system, the national and border police, immigration authorities, health and labor ministries, consulates, and civil society, as well as the victims and their families.[1611]

International Conferences

1717. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on urgent action in the former Yugoslavia, the 89th Inter-Parliamentary Conference categorically condemned "the systematic rape of women and girls in the former Yugoslavia, especially in Bosnia and Herzegovina", urged the belligerent parties "immediately to cease violence against women and girls" and declared that "systematic rape of women and girls in armed conflicts is a war crime and must be designated as a crime against humanity under international law".[1612]

1718. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed its dismay at and strongly condemned as abhorrent practices the "massive violations of human rights especially in the form of... systematic rape of women in war situations" and reiterated its call that "perpetrators of such crimes be punished and such practices immediately stopped".[1613]

1719. In the Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993, the participants declared that they refused "to accept that... women [are] raped" and that they were "alarmed by the marked increase in acts of sexual violence directed notably against women and children". They reiterated that "such acts constitute grave breaches of international humanitarian law".[1614]

1720. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on respect for international humanitarian law and support for humanitarian action in armed conflicts, the 90th

[1611] OAS, Inter-American Commission of Women, Res. CIM/RES. 225 (XXXI-0/02), Fighting the Crime of Trafficking in Persons, especially Women, Adolescents, and Children, 31 October 2002, preamble.

[1612] 89th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, New Delhi, 12–17 April 1993, Resolution on the need for urgent action in the former Yugoslavia, particularly as regards the protection of minorities and the prevention of further loss of life in order that peaceful coexistence and respect for human rights can be restored for all peoples, §§ 12 and 13.

[1613] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(28).

[1614] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § I(1) and (3), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, p. 298.

Inter-Parliamentary Conference condemned "the renewed outbreak of systematic sexual violence against women and children which constitutes a grave violation of international humanitarian law".[1615]

1721. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on the protection of the civilian population in period of armed conflict, which contained a section on women, stating that the Conference:

> (a) expresses its outrage at practices of sexual violence in armed conflicts, in particular the use of rape as an instrument of terror, forced prostitution and any other form of indecent assault;
> ...
> (c) strongly condemns sexual violence, in particular rape, in the conduct of armed conflict as a war crime, and under certain circumstances a crime against humanity, and urges the establishment and strengthening of mechanisms to investigate, bring to justice and punish all those responsible;
> (d) underlines the importance of providing appropriate training to prosecutors, judges and other officials in handling such cases, in order to preserve the dignity and interests of the victims.[1616]

1722. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "strict orders are given to prevent all serious violations of international humanitarian law, including ... gender-based violence in particular rape and other forms of sexual violence ... and threats to carry out such actions".[1617]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1723. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[1618]

1724. In the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali case before the ICTR in 1997, the accused were charged with "rape as a part of a widespread and systematic attack on a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds", thereby committing crimes against humanity and a serious violation of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II.[1619]

[1615] 90th Inter-Parliamentary Conference, Canberra, 13–18 September 1993, Resolution on respect for international humanitarian law and support for humanitarian action in armed conflicts, preamble.
[1616] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § B(a), (c) and (d).
[1617] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(b).
[1618] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.
[1619] ICTR, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali case, Indictment, 26 May 1997, Counts 5 and 6.

1725. In the Akayesu case before the ICTR in 1997, the accused was charged with crimes against humanity (rape) and violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4(2)(e) AP II (outrages upon personal dignity, in particular rape, degrading and humiliating treatment and indecent assault). It provided that "in this indictment, acts of sexual violence include forcible sexual penetration of the vagina, anus or oral cavity by a penis and/or of the vagina or anus by some other object, and sexual abuse, such as forced nudity".[1620]

1726. In its judgement in the Akayesu case in 1998, the ICTR Trial Chamber recognised for the first time that acts of sexual violence can be prosecuted as constituent elements of a genocidal campaign. Jean-Paul Akayesu, then Mayor of Taba commune, was charged with genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes and with having known that acts of sexual violence were being committed and having facilitated the commission of such acts by permitting them to be carried out on communal premises.[1621] The Trial Chamber considered that:

> Rape is a form of aggression and that the central elements of the crime of rape cannot be captured in a mechanical description of objects and body parts . . . Like torture, rape is used for such purposes as intimidation, degradation, humiliation, discrimination, punishment, control or destruction of a person. Like torture, rape is a violation of personal dignity, and rape in fact constitutes torture when inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity . . .
>
> The Chamber defines rape as a physical invasion of a sexual nature, committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive. Sexual violence, which includes rape, is considered to be any act of a sexual nature which is committed on a person under circumstances which are coercive.[1622]

The ICTR Trial Chamber further held that:

> Rape and sexual violence . . . constitute genocide in the same way as any other act as long as they are committed with the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a particular group, targeted as such . . . Sexual violence was an integral part of the process of destruction, specifically targeting Tutsi women and specifically contributing to their destruction and to the destruction of the Tutsi group as a whole.[1623]

1727. In the Musema case before the ICTR in 1996, the accused was charged with "the rape of Tutsi civilians, as part of a widespread and systematic attack against a civilian population on political, ethnic or racial grounds" and stated that the accused had "thereby committed a crime against humanity".[1624]

[1620] ICTR, Akayesu case, Amended Indictment, 30 June 1997, Counts 13 and 15 and § 10(A).
[1621] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 12(B).
[1622] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 596–598.
[1623] ICTR, Akayesu case, Judgement, 2 September 1998, § 731.
[1624] ICTR, Musema case, Amended Indictment, 12 July 1996, Count 7.

1728. In its judgement in the Musema case in 2000, the ICTR Trial Chamber found that the evidence presented – considering both the murders as well as acts of serious bodily and mental harm, including rape and other forms of sexual violence – amounted to genocide. The Trial Chamber stated that "acts of rape and sexual violence were an integral part of the plan conceived to destroy the Tutsi group. Such acts targeted Tutsi women, in particular, and specifically contributed to their destruction and therefore that of the Tutsi group as such." The Trial Chamber found that "the Accused had knowledge of a widespread or systematic attack on the civilian population. The Chamber finds that the rape of Nyiramusugi by the Accused was consistent with the pattern of this attack and formed a part of this attack." The Trial Chamber found Musema guilty of crimes against humanity (rape).[1625]

1729. In its review of the indictment in the Nikolić case in 1995, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that it considered that "rape and other forms of sexual assault inflicted on women in circumstances such as those described by the witnesses, may fall within the definition of torture submitted by the Prosecutor".[1626]

1730. In the Kvočka case before the ICTY in 1998, the accused was charged with "sexual assault . . . of Bosnian Muslim, Bosnian Croat and other non-Serb detainees".[1627]

1731. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "there can be no doubt that rape and other forms of sexual assault are expressly prohibited under international humanitarian law" and that it considered "rape to constitute a physical invasion of a sexual nature, committed on a person under circumstances that are coercive". It also considered that:

> The rape of any person [is] a despicable act which strikes at the very core of human dignity and physical integrity. The condemnation and punishment of rape becomes all the more urgent where it is committed by, or at the instigation of, a public official, or with the consent or acquiescence of such an official . . . It is difficult to envisage circumstances in which rape, by, or at the instigation of a public official, or with the consent or acquiescence of an official, could be considered as occurring for a purpose that does not, in some way, involve punishment, coercion, discrimination or intimidation. In the view of this Trial Chamber this is inherent in situations of armed conflict.

It then stated that whenever rape and other forms of sexual violence meet the conditions, they shall constitute torture, in the same manner as any other acts that meet these criteria.[1628]

1732. In its judgement in the Furundžija case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber noted that a prohibition of rape and serious sexual assault in armed conflict under customary international law has [1625] ICTR, Musema case, Judgement, 27 January 2000, §§ 907, 933 and 966.

[1626] ICTY, Nikolić case, Review of the Indictment, 20 October 1995, § 33.
[1627] ICTY, Kvočka case, Indictment, 12 June 1998, § 28, see also § 35.
[1628] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 476, 479, 495–496.

gradually crystallised out of the express prohibition of rape in article 44 of the Lieber Code and the general provisions contained in article 46 of the regulations annexed to Hague Convention IV, read in conjunction with the "Martens clause" laid down in the preamble to that Convention. While rape and sexual assaults were not specifically prosecuted by the Nuremberg Tribunal, rape was expressly classified as a crime against humanity under article II (1)(c) of Control Council Law No. 10. The Tokyo International Military Tribunal convicted Generals Toyoda and Matsui of command responsibility for violations of the laws or customs of war committed by their soldiers in Nanking, which included widespread rapes and sexual assaults. The former Foreign Minister of Japan, Hirota, was also convicted for these atrocities. This decision and that of the United States Military Commission in Yamashita, along with the ripening of the fundamental prohibition of "outrages upon personal dignity" laid down in common article 3 into customary international law, has contributed to the evolution of universally accepted norms of international law prohibiting rape as well as serious sexual assault. These norms are applicable in any armed conflict.[1629]

The Tribunal also defined rape and serious sexual assault:

Thus, the Trial Chamber finds that the following may be accepted as the objective elements of rape:

(i) the sexual penetration, however slight:
  (a) of the vagina or anus of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator or any other object used by the perpetrator; or
  (b) of the mouth of the victim by the penis of the perpetrator;
(ii) by coercion or force or threat of force against the victim or a third person.

. . .

As pointed out above, international criminal rules punish not only rape but also any serious sexual assault falling short of actual penetration. It would seem that the prohibition embraces all serious abuses of a sexual nature inflicted upon the physical and moral integrity of a person by means of coercion, threat of force or intimidation in a way that is degrading and humiliating for the victim's dignity. As both these categories of acts are criminalised in international law, the distinction between them is one that is primarily material for the purposes of sentencing.[1630]

The Tribunal found the accused guilty of a violation of the laws and customs of war (outrages upon dignity, including rape).[1631]

1733. In the judgement on appeal in the Furundžija case in 2000, the ICTY Appeals Chamber stated that:

With regard to the issue of the reaffirmation by the International Tribunal of rape as a war crime, the Appeals Chamber finds that the international community has long recognised rape as a war crime. In the Delalić and Others Judgement, one of the accused was convicted of torture by means of rape, as a violation of the laws or customs of war. This recognition by the international community of rape as a war crime is also reflected in the Rome Statute where it is designated as a war crime.[1632]

[1629] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, § 168.
[1630] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, §§ 185 and 186.
[1631] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement, 10 December 1998, Part IX.

1734. In its judgement in the Kunarac case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

The Chamber further considers that it is unnecessary to discuss any additional requirements for the application of rape charges based on treaty law, since common Article 3 alone is sufficient in principle to form the basis of these charges under Article 3 [of the ICTY Statute], as is observed below.
. . .
Rape has been charged against the three accused as a violation of the laws or customs of war under Article 3 and as a crime against humanity under Article 5 of the Statute. The Statute refers explicitly to rape as a crime against humanity within the Tribunal's jurisdiction in Article 5(g). The jurisdiction to prosecute rape as an outrage against personal dignity, in violation of the laws or customs of war pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, including upon the basis of common Article 3 to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, is also clearly established.
. . .
The Trial Chamber considers that the Furundžija definition, although appropriate to the circumstances of that case, is in one respect more narrowly stated than is required by international law. In stating that the relevant act of sexual penetration will constitute rape only if accompanied by coercion or force or threat of force against the victim or a third person, the Furundžija definition does not refer to other factors which would render an act of sexual penetration non-consensual or non-voluntary on the part of the victim, which, as foreshadowed in the hearing and as discussed below, is in the opinion of this Trial Chamber the accurate scope of this aspect of the definition in international law.[1633]

The Tribunal found the accused guilty of "crimes against humanity (rape)" and "violations of the laws or customs of war (rape)".[1634]

1735. In its General Recommendation on Violence against Women in 1992, CEDAW provided that:

1. Gender-based violence is a form of discrimination that seriously inhibits women's ability to enjoy rights and freedoms on a basis of equality with men.
   . . .
6. The [1979 Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women] in article 1 defines discrimination against women. The definition of discrimination includes gender-based violence, that is, violence that is directed against a woman because she is a woman or that affects women disproportionately. It includes acts that inflict physical, mental or sexual harm or suffering, threats of such acts, coercion and other deprivations of liberty. Gender-based violence may breach specific provisions of the Convention, regardless of whether those provisions expressly mention violence.
   . . .

[1632] ICTY, Furundžija case, Judgement on Appeal, 21 July 2000, § 210.
[1633] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, §§ 406, 436 and 438.
[1634] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, §§ 883, 886 and 888.

16. Wars, armed conflicts and the occupation of territories often lead to increased prostitution, trafficking in women and sexual assault of women, which require specific protective and punitive measures.[1635]

1736. In a letter to the Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, the Chair of CEDAW emphasised that rape and other attacks on women's physical and mental integrity violated international human rights guarantees and constituted grave breaches of GC IV and of customary international law. The Special Rapporteur replied that he shared the Committee's preoccupation with the reported occurrence of mass rape and other attacks on the physical and mental integrity of women in the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.[1636]

1737. In 1998, CEDAW stated in relation to Indonesia that:

The Committee is concerned that the information provided on the situation of women in areas of armed conflict reflects a limited understanding of the problem. The Government's remarks are confined to the participation of women in armed forces and do not address the vulnerability of women to sexual exploitation in conflict situations.[1637]

1738. In 2000, CEDAW stated in relation to India that:

The Committee is concerned that women are exposed to the risk of high levels of violence, rape, sexual harassment, humiliation and torture in areas where there are armed insurrections.

. . . The Committee recommends a review of prevention of terrorism legislation and the Armed Forces Special Provisions Act . . . so that special powers given to the security forces do not prevent the investigation and prosecution of acts of violence against women in conflict areas and during detention and arrest.[1638]

1739. In 1997, in its recommendations on Myanmar, the CRC expressed grave concern with regard to "numerous documented cases of rape of young girls by soldiers" and strongly recommended that:

all reported cases of abuse, rape and/or violence against children committed by members of the armed forces be rapidly, impartially, thoroughly and systematically investigated. Appropriate judicial sanctions should be applied to perpetrators and wide publicity should be given to such sanctions.[1639]

1740. In S. W. v. UK in 1995, the ECtHR stated that:

43. The decisions of the Court of Appeal and then the House of Lords did no more than continue a perceptible line of case-law development dismantling the [1635] CEDAW, General Recommendation No. 19 (Violence against women), 29 January 1992, §§ 1, 6 and 16.

[1636] CEDAW, Report on its 12th Session, UN Doc. A/48/38, 28 May 1993, Annex 1, p. 115 and Annex II, p. 116.
[1637] CEDAW, Report on its 18th and 19th Session, UN Doc. A/53/38/rev.1, 1998, § 295.
[1638] CEDAW, Report on its 22nd and 23d Session, UN Doc. A/55/38, 2000. §§ 71–72.
[1639] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.69, 24 January 1997, §§ 40–41.

immunity of a husband from prosecution for rape upon his wife . . . There was no doubt under the law as it stood on 18 September 1990 that a husband who forcibly had sexual intercourse with his wife could, in various circumstances, be found guilty of rape. Moreover, there was an evident evolution, which was consistent with the very essence of the offence, of the criminal law through judicial interpretation towards treating such conduct generally as within the scope of the offence of rape. This evolution had reached a stage where judicial recognition of the absence of immunity had become a reasonably foreseeable development of the law . . .

44. The essentially debasing character of rape is so manifest that the result of the decisions of the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords – that the applicant could be convicted of attempted rape, irrespective of his relationship with the victim – cannot be said to be at variance with the object and purpose of Article 7 (art. 7) of the Convention, namely to ensure that no one should be subjected to arbitrary prosecution, conviction or punishment . . . What is more, the abandonment of the unacceptable idea of a husband being immune against prosecution for rape of his wife was in conformity not only with a civilised concept of marriage but also, and above all, with the fundamental objectives of the Convention, the very essence of which is respect for human dignity and human freedom.
45. Consequently, . . . Mr Justice Rose did not render a decision permitting a finding of guilt incompatible with Article 7 (art. 7) of the [ECHR].[1640]

1741. In its judgement in Aydin v. Turkey in 1997, the ECtHR stated that:

83. While being held in detention the applicant was raped by a person whose identity has still to be determined. Rape of a detainee by an official of the State must be considered to be an especially grave and abhorrent form of ill-treatment given the ease with which the offender can exploit the vulnerability and weakened resistance of his victim. Furthermore, rape leaves deep psychological scars on the victim which do not respond to the passage of time as quickly as other forms of physical and mental violence. The applicant also experienced the acute physical pain of forced penetration, which must have left her feeling debased and violated both physically and emotionally.

. . .

86. Against this background the Court is satisfied that the accumulation of acts of physical and mental violence inflicted on the applicant and the especially cruel act of rape to which she was subjected amounted to torture in breach of article 3 of the Convention. Indeed the court would have reached this conclusion on either of these grounds taken separately.[1641]

1742. In 2001, in Valasinas v. Lithuania, the ECtHR stated that:

117. The Court considers that, while strip-searches may be necessary on occasions to ensure prison security or prevent disorder or crime, they must be conducted in an appropriate manner. Obliging the applicant to strip naked in the presence of a woman, and then touching his sexual organs and food with bare hands showed a clear lack of respect for the applicant, and diminished in effect his human dignity. It must have left him with feelings of anguish and inferiority capable of humiliating and debasing him. The Court concludes, therefore, that the search of 7 May 1998 amounted to degrading treatment within the meaning of Article 3 of the Convention.

[1640] ECtHR, S. W. v. UK, Judgement, 22 November 1995, §§ 43–45.
[1641] ECtHR, Aydin v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 September 1997, § 83.

118. Accordingly, there has been a violation of Article 3 [of the 1950 ECHR] in this respect.[1642]

1743. In a case concerning Peru in 1996, the IACiHR stated that:

Current international law establishes that sexual abuse committed by members of security forces, whether as a result of a deliberate practice promoted by the State or as a result of failure by the State to prevent the occurrence of this crime, constitutes a violation of the victims' human rights, especially the right to physical and mental integrity.

In the context of international humanitarian law, Article 27 of the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 concerning the protection due to civilians in times of war explicitly prohibits sexual abuse. Article 147 of that Convention which lists acts considered as "serious offenses" or "war crimes" includes rape in that it constitutes "torture or inhuman treatment". The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) has declared that the "serious offense" of "deliberately causing great suffering or seriously harming physical integrity or health" includes sexual abuse.

Moreover, Article 76 of Additional Protocol I to the 1949 Geneva Conventions expressly prohibits rape or other types of sexual abuse. Article 85(4), for its part, states that when these practices are based on racial discrimination they constitute "serious offenses". As established in the Fourth Convention and Protocol I, any act of rape committed individually constitutes a war crime.

In the case of non-international conflicts, both Article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions and Article 4(2) of Protocol II additional to the Conventions, include the prohibition against rape and other sexual abuse insofar as they are the outcome of harm deliberately influenced on a person. The ICRC has stated that the prohibition laid down in Protocol II reaffirms and complements the common Article 3 since it was necessary to strengthen the protection of women, who can be victims of rape, forced prostitution or other types of abuse.

Article 5 of the Statute of the [ICTY] established for investigating the serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yogoslavia, considers rape practiced on a systematic and large scale a crime against humanity.

In the context of international human rights law, the American Convention on Human Rights stipulates in its Article 5 that:

1. Every person has the right to have his physical, mental and moral integrity respected.
2. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment . . .

The letter of the Convention does not specify what is to be understood by torture. However, in the inter-American sphere, acts constituting torture are established in the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture . . .

[1642] ECtHR, Valasinas v. Lithuania, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction), 24 July 2001, §§ 117–118.

Accordingly, for torture to exist three elements have to be combined:

1. it must be an intentional act through which physical and mental pain and suffering is inflicted on a person;
2. it must be committed with a purpose;
3. it must be committed by a public official or by a private person acting at the instigation of the former.

Regarding the first element, the Commission considers that rape is a physical and mental abuse that is perpetrated as a result of an act of violence. The definition of rape contained in Article 170 of the Peruvian Criminal Code confirms this by using the phrasing "[h]e who, with violence or serious threat, obliges a person to practice the sex act . . ." The Special Rapporteur against Torture has noted that sexual abuse is one of the various methods of physical torture. Moreover, rape is considered to be a method of psychological torture because its objective, in many cases, is not just to humiliate the victim but also her family or community. In this connection, the above-mentioned Special Rapporteur has stated that, particularly in Peru, " . . . rape would appear to be a weapon used to punish, intimidate and humiliate."

Rape causes physical and mental suffering in the victim. In addition to the violence suffered at the time it is committed, the victims are commonly hurt or, in some cases, are even made pregnant. The fact of being made the subject of abuse of this nature also causes a psychological trauma that results, on the one hand, from having been humiliated and victimized, and on the other, from suffering the condemnation of the members of their community if they report what has been done to them.

. . .

The second element establishes that for an act to be torture it must have been committed intentionally, i.e. to produce a certain result in the victim.

. . .

The third requirement of the definition of torture is that the act must have been perpetrated by a public official or by a private individual at the instigation of the former.

As concluded in the foregoing, the man who raped [the victim] was member of the security forces who had himself accompanied by a large group of soldiers.

Accordingly, the Commission, having established that the three elements of the definition of torture are present in the case under consideration, concludes that the Peruvian State is responsible for violation of Article 5 of the American Convention.[1643] [emphasis in original]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1744. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "humiliating and degrading treatment (e.g. enforced prostitution, any form of indecent assault or other outrages upon personal dignity) is prohibited".[1644]

[1643] IACiHR, Case 10.970 (Peru), Report, 1 March 1996, Section V(A)(3)(a).

[1644] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 192 and 195.

1745. In 1992, in a memorandum on the issue of rape as a war crime, the ICRC stated that the definition of grave breaches in Article 147 GC IV, in particular wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health, "obviously covers not only rape, but also any other attack on a woman's dignity".[1645]
1746. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the war crime of rape and enforced prostitution, as serious violations of international humanitarian law applicable in international and non-international conflicts, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[1646]
1747. In its pledge to promote the respect of women in armed conflicts, made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1999, the ICRC expressed grave concern about "the occurrence of sexual violence in armed conflict" and stated that "sexual violence, in all its forms, is prohibited under international humanitarian law and should be vigorously prevented". The ICRC pledged to place focus "on actively disseminating the prohibition of all forms of sexual violence to parties to an armed conflict".[1647]

VI. Other Practice

1748. In 1979, in a letter to the ICRC, an armed opposition group confirmed its commitment to IHL and denounced the "rape of spouses in the presence of their husbands and relatives".[1648]
1749. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that rape is and shall remain prohibited.[1649]
1750. In 1995, the IIHL stated that any declaration on minimum humanitarian standards should be based on "principles . . . of jus cogens, expressing basic humanitarian consideration[s] which are recognized to be universally binding". According to the IIHL, women were a category calling for special mention, as they were exposed to additional forms of violence. It stated that an article should be inserted in the declaration which could read "women shall be especially protected against any attack on their honour, in particular against rape, [1645] ICRC, Aide-Memoire, Geneva, 3 December 1992.

[1646] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, §§ 1(a)(iii) and 3(iv).
[1647] ICRC, Pledge made at the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999.
[1648] ICRC archive document.
[1649] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(2)(a), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 331.

enforced prostitution, or any other form of indecent assault. They are entitled to treatment which takes into account their special needs."[1650]

1751. In 1993, in a report on Kashmir, Asia Watch and Physicians for Human Rights stated that "Indian security forces and militant forces in Kashmir use rape as a weapon: to punish, intimidate, coerce, humiliate and degrade their female victims". They further stated that "Indian government authorities have rarely investigated charges of rape by security forces in Kashmir" and that they were "unaware of any efforts by the militant groups to prevent their forces from committing rape".[1651]

1752. The Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights adopted in 1993 stated that "crimes against women, including rape . . . and domestic violence, are rampant. Crimes against women are crimes against humanity, and the failure of governments to prosecute those responsible implies complicity."[1652]

1753. In December 2000, a Japanese NGO simulated a "Women's International War Crimes Tribunal on Japan's Military Sexual Slavery" which had jurisdiction over crimes committed against women, including sexual slavery.[1653]

H. Slavery, Slave Trade and Forced Labour

Note: For practice concerning compensation for forced labour, see Chapter 42, section B.

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1754. Article 6 of the 1899 HR provides that:

The State may utilize the labour of prisoners of war according to their rank and aptitude. Their tasks shall not be excessive, and shall have nothing to do with the military operations.

Prisoners may be authorized to work for the public service, for private persons, or on their own account.

Work done for the State shall be paid for according to the tariffs in force for soldiers of the national army employed on similar tasks.

When the work is for other branches of the public service or for private persons, the conditions shall be settled in agreement with the military authorities.

[1650] IIHL, Comments on the Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards submitted to the UN Secretary- General, § 18, reprinted in Report of the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/80, 28 November 1995, p. 10.

[1651] Physicians for Human Rights and Asia Watch, Press Release, Rape in Kashmir: A Crime of War, India, 9 May 1993.

[1652] World Conference on Human Rights, Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Asia-Pacific, Bangkok, 24–28 March 1993, Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/PC/83, 19 April 1993, § 6.

[1653] VAWW-NET Japan, Women's International War Crimes Tribunal on Japan's Military Sexual Slavery, 7–12 December 2000.

The wages of the prisoners shall go towards improving their position, and the balance shall be paid them at the time of their release, after deducting the cost of their maintenance.

1755. Article 6 of the 1907 HR provides that:

The State may utilize the labour of prisoners of war according to their rank and aptitude, officers excepted. The tasks shall not be excessive and shall have no connection with the operations of the war.

Prisoners may be authorized to work for the public service, for private persons, or on their own account.

Work done for the State is paid for at the rates in force for work of a similar kind done by soldiers of the national army, or, if there are none in force, at a rate according to the work executed.

When the work is for other branches of the public service or for private persons the conditions are settled in agreement with the military authorities.

The wages of the prisoners shall go towards improving their position, and the balance shall be paid them on their release, after deducting the cost of their maintenance.

1756. In Articles 1 and 2 of the 1926 Slavery Convention, the contracting parties agreed to "prevent and suppress the slave trade" and "to bring about, progressively and as soon as possible, the complete abolition of slavery in all its forms". They also provided that:

(1) Slavery is the status or condition of a person over whom any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised.
(2) The slave trade includes all acts involved in the capture, acquisition or disposal of a person with intent to reduce him to slavery; all acts involved in the acquisition of a slave with a view to selling or exchanging him; all acts of disposal by sale or exchange of a slave acquired with a view to being sold or exchanged, and, in general, every act of trade or transport in slaves.

1757. Article 31 of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that "work done by prisoners of war shall have no direct connection with the operations of the war".

1758. Article 1 of the 1930 Forced Labour Convention provides that "Each Member of the International Labour Organisation which ratifies this Convention undertakes to suppress the use of forced or compulsory labour in all its forms within the shortest possible period". Article 2 adds that "the term 'forced or compulsory labour' shall mean all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily".

1759. Article 6 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that "deportation to slave labor or for any other purpose of civilian population of or in occupied territory" is a war crime and that "enslavement" is a crime against humanity.

1760. Articles 49–68 GC III regulate the labour of prisoners of war.

1761. Article 50 GC III lays down the categories of work that prisoners of war may be compelled to do.

1762. Article 52 GC III provides that prisoners of war shall not be compelled to carry out unhealthy, dangerous or humiliating work.

1763. Article 40, first and second paragraphs, GC IV provides that:

> Protected persons may be compelled to work only to the same extent as nationals of the Party to the conflict in whose territory they are.
>
> If protected persons are of enemy nationality, they may only be compelled to do work which is normally necessary to ensure the feeding, sheltering, clothing, transport and health of human beings and which is not directly related to the conduct of military operations.

1764. Article 51, second paragraph, GC IV provides that:

> The Occupying Power may not compel protected persons to work unless they are over eighteen years of age, and then only on work which is necessary either for the needs of the army of occupation, or for the public utility services, or for the feeding, sheltering, clothing, transportation or health of the population of the occupied country.

1765. Article 95, first paragraph, GC IV provides that:

> The Detaining Power shall not employ internees as workers, unless they so desire. Employment which, if undertaken under compulsion by a protected person not in internment, would involve a breach of Articles 40 or 51 of the present Convention, and employment on work which is of a degrading or humiliating character are in any case prohibited.

1766. Article 4(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "no one shall be held in slavery or servitude". Article 4(2) provides that "no one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour". According to Article 15(2), Article 4(1) is non-derogable.

1767. Article 1 of the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery provides that "each of the States Parties . . . shall take all practicable and necessary legislative and other measures to bring about progressively and as soon as possible the complete abolition or abandonment" of slavery and institutions and practices similar to slavery, such as debt bondage, serfdom and inheritance or transfer of women or children.

1768. Article 1 of the 1957 Convention concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour provides that:

> Each Member of the [ILO] which ratifies this Convention undertakes to suppress and not to make use of any form of forced or compulsory labour:
>
> (a) As a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system;
> (b) As a method of mobilising and using labour for purposes of economic development;
> (c) As a means of labour discipline;
> (d) As a punishment for having participated in strikes;
> (e) As a means of racial, social, national or religious discrimination.

1769. Article 2 of the 1957 Convention concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour states that "each Member . . . undertakes to take effective measures to secure the immediate and complete abolition of forced or compulsory labour as specified in article 1 of this Convention".
1770. Article 8 of the 1966 ICCPR provides that:

1. No one shall be held in slavery; slavery and the slave-trade in all their forms shall be prohibited.
2. No one shall be held in servitude.
3. (a) No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour.

According to Article 4(2) ICCPR, the prohibition of slavery and servitude is non-derogable.
1771. Article 6(1) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "no one shall be subject to slavery or to involuntary servitude, which are prohibited in all their forms, as are the slave trade and traffic in women". Article 27(2) states that this prohibition is non-derogable.
1772. Article 4(2)(f) AP II provides that "slavery and the slave trade in all their forms" are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever. Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1654]
1773. Article 5(1)(e) AP II provides that persons deprived of their liberty for reasons related to the armed conflict, whether they are interned or detained "shall, if made to work, have the benefit of working conditions and safeguards similar to those enjoyed by the local civilian population". Article 5 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1655]
1774. Article 5 of the 1981 ACHPR states that "all forms of exploitation and degradation of man, particularly slavery, slave trade . . . shall be prohibited".
1775. Article 29(a) of the 1990 African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child provides that "States Parties to the present Charter shall take appropriate measures to prevent: (a) the abduction, the sale of, or traffic in children for any purpose or in any form, by any person, including parents or legal guardians of the child".
1776. According to Article 1(3) of the 1995 Agreement on Human Rights annexed to the Dayton Accords, the parties shall "secure to all persons within their jurisdiction the right not to be held in slavery".
1777. Article 7(1)(c) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that enslavement, when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, constitutes a crime against humanity. Article 7(2)(c) defines "enslavement" as "the exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person and includes the exercise of such power in the course of trafficking in persons, in particular women and children".

[1654] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[1655] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 92.

1778. Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "sexual slavery [and] enforced prostitution" constitute war crimes in international and non-international armed conflicts respectively.

1779. Article 1 of the 1999 Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labour provides that States "shall take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency". Article 3 provides that the term "the worst forms of child labour" comprises:

(a) all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom and forced or compulsory labour, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;
(b) the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances;
(c) the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties;
(d) work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children.

1780. Article 1 of the 2000 Optional Protocol on Child Trade, Prostitution and Pornography provides that the States parties shall prohibit the sale of children. It also contains detailed implementation measures to be adopted.

1781. Articles 1, 3 and 5 of the 2000 Protocol on Trafficking in Persons provides that States parties shall criminalise, inter alia, attempts to commit trafficking in persons, participation as an accomplice in trafficking in persons and organization or direction of other persons to commit trafficking in persons.

Other Instruments

1782. Article 23 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "private citizens are no longer . . . enslaved".

1783. Article 42 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that:

> In a war between the United States and a belligerent which admits of slavery, if a person held in bondage by that belligerent be captured by or come as a fugitive under the protection of the military force of the United States, such person is immediately entitled to the rights and privileges of a freeman. To return such person into slavery would amount to enslaving a free person, and neither the United States nor any officer under their authority can enslave any human being. Moreover, a person so made free by the law of war is under the shield of the law of nations.

1784. Article 58 of the 1863 Lieber Code stipulates that "the United States cannot retaliate by enslavement; therefore death must be the retaliation for this crime against the law of nations."

1785. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution, including forced labour of civilians in connection with the military operations of the enemy and the employment of prisoners of war on unauthorised works.

1786. Article II(1) of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that "deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose, of civilian population from occupied territory" is a war crime and that "enslavement . . . or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population" is a crime against humanity.

1787. Article 5(c) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) established individual responsibility for crimes against humanity, including "enslavement".

1788. Article 4 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "no one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade shall be prohibited in all their forms".

1789. Principle VI of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles adopted by the ILC provides that "deportation to slave labour or for any other purpose of civilian population of or in occupied territory" is a war crime and that "enslavement . . . and other inhuman acts done against any civilian population" is a crime against humanity.

1790. Article 2(11) of the 1954 ILC Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind includes enslavement in its list of crimes against humanity.

1791. Article 11(a) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "human beings are born free, and no one has the right to enslave, humiliate, oppress or exploit them, and there can be no subjugation but to Allah the Almighty".

1792. Article 21 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind includes "establishing or maintaining over persons a status of slavery, servitude or forced labour" as systematic or massive violations of human rights. The commentary explains that slavery is defined in the following treaties: the 1926 Slavery Convention, 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, 1966 ICCPR, 1930 Forced Labour Convention and the 1957 Convention concerning the Abolition of Forced Labour.

1793. Article 5(c) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that enslavement, when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population, constitutes a crime against humanity.

1794. Article 3(c) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that enslavement, when committed as part of a widespread and systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds, constitutes a crime against humanity.

1795. Article 18(d) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind includes enslavement among crimes against humanity.

1796. Article 2(8) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote the right not to be held in involuntary servitude or to perform forced or compulsory labour.
1797. According to Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, enslavement of persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations and persons placed hors de combat is prohibited at any time and in any place.
1798. Article 5 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "no one shall be held in slavery or servitude" and that "trafficking in human beings is prohibited".
1799. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi), "sexual slavery [and] enforced prostitution" constitute war crimes in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1800. According to Canada's LOAC Manual, enslavement is a crime against humanity.[1656]
1801. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "offences against civilian inhabitants of the occupied territory, including . . . forced labour" are representative war crimes.[1657]
1802. France's LOAC Manual restates Article 4 of the 1948 UDHR and Article 7(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute, which include enslavement in the list of crimes against humanity.[1658]
1803. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War recalls the definition of crimes against humanity contained in the 1998 ICC Statute by stating that "crimes against humanity were defined as the systematic harming of a civilian population, which includes deeds such as: . . . enslavement".[1659]
1804. The Military Manual of the Netherlands restates the rules on labour carried out by POWs as found in Articles 49–52, 54, 60, 64 GC III and Article 51 GC IV.[1660] The manual further restates the prohibition of slavery and slave trade as found in Article 4 AP II.[1661]
1805. New Zealand's Military Manual refers to AP II and prohibits at any time and anywhere "slavery and the slave trade in all their forms".[1662]

[1656] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-1, § 4(c).
[1657] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5(2).
[1658] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 43 and 51.
[1659] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 68.
[1660] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VI-9/VII-10 and VIII-5.
[1661] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-4.
[1662] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1812.1.

1806. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War gives a list of examples of war crimes, inter alia, "compelling prisoners of war to perform prohibited work" and "using and, in particular, deporting civilians for forced labour".[1663]
1807. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to the IHL conventions and the 1948 UDHR is the prohibition of slavery and the slave trade in any form.[1664]
1808. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that the "compelling of civilians to perform prohibited labour" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[1665]
1809. The UK Military Manual provides that "compelling prisoners of war to perform prohibited work", "using and, in particular, deporting civilians for forced labour" are examples of punishable violations of the laws of war or war crimes.[1666]
1810. The US Field Manual states that compelling prisoners of war and civilians to perform prohibited labour is a war crime.[1667]
1811. The US Air Force Pamphlet restates Article 51 GC IV and provides that "wilfully compelling civilians or PWs to perform prohibited labour" is an act involving individual criminal responsibility.[1668]
1812. The US Instructor's Guide states that:

> In addition to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the following acts are further examples of war crimes: . . . compelling prisoners of war to perform prohibited labor such as removing mines or digging defensive positions [and] compelling civilians to perform prohibited labor such as carrying mortars.[1669]

1813. The US Naval Handbook provides that "international law strictly prohibits the use of the seas for the purpose of transporting slaves".[1670] It also stipulates that it is prohibited to subject prisoners of war to "unhealthy, dangerous, or otherwise prohibited labour".[1671] It adds that imposing "forced labor" on civilian inhabitants of occupied territory is a war crime.[1672]

National Legislation
1814. Albania's Military Penal Code provides that sentencing a person to slave labour is a war crime.[1673]
1815. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "enslavement" constitutes a crime against humanity.[1674]

[1663] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(11) and (13).
[1664] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 23. [1665] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 39(i).
[1666] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626(k) and (m).
[1667] US, Field Manual (1956), § 504(k) and (m).
[1668] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), §§ 14-6(b) and 15-3(c)(9).
[1669] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 13. [1670] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 3.6.
[1671] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.(1). [1672] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.(2).
[1673] Albania, Military Penal Code (1995), Articles 73–75.
[1674] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 392.

1816. Australia's War Crimes Act provides that "forced labour of civilians in connection with the military operations of the enemy" is a war crime.[1675]

1817. Under Australia's War Crimes Act as amended, the deportation of a person to, or the internment of a person in, a death camp or a slave labour camp is a serious war crime.[1676]

1818. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute: crimes against humanity, including "enslavement"; and war crimes, including "sexual slavery" and "enforced prostitution", in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[1677]

1819. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, forcing persons under 18 years to work is prohibited.[1678]

1820. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that "making [protected persons] carry out forced labour" is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1679]

1821. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that "deportation to slave labour . . . of civilian population in the territory of Bangladesh" constitutes a war crime. It adds that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[1680]

1822. Under the Criminal Code of Belarus, the deportation of the civilian population to forced labour is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1681]

1823. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended, provides that enslavement constitutes a crime under international law.[1682]

1824. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that compelling civilians to carry out forced labour is a war crime.[1683] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[1684]

1825. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that enslavement is a crime against humanity.[1685]

[1675] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3.
[1676] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Section 6.
[1677] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.10, 268.60, 268.61, 268.83 and 268.84.
[1678] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 17.
[1679] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 115.2.
[1680] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(d) and (e).
[1681] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(2).
[1682] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(2)(3).
[1683] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(1).
[1684] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 433(1).
[1685] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 3(c).

1826. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the crimes against humanity and war crimes defined in Articles 7 and 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[1686]

1827. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that "scheming to enslave the inhabitants of occupied territory" and "forcing prisoners of war to engage in work not allowed by the International Conventions" constitute war crimes.[1687]

1828. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended provides that compelling civilians to carry out forced labour is an offence.[1688]

1829. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, "enslavement", when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, is a crime against humanity.[1689] The Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1690]

1830. Under Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, organising, ordering or carrying out, in time of war or occupation, detention of the civilian population in forced labour camps constitutes a "crime against the civilian population".[1691]

1831. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that subjecting the civilian population to forced labour is a war crime.[1692] It also punishes any person who "places another person in slavery, or keeps a person in such a state or a similar state, buys, sells or hands him or her over to another person, or is an intermediary in the purchase, sale or handing over of a person, or encourages another person to sell the freedom of a person in his or her care".[1693]

1832. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that "systematic deportation, transfer or detention in concentration or forced labour camps" is a war crime against the civilian population.[1694]

1833. Under France's Penal Code, enslavement is a crime against humanity.[1695]

1834. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 49–68 GC III and 40, 51 and 95 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2)(f) AP II, are punishable offences.[1696]

1835. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law includes deportation to forced labour of the civilian population of or in occupied territories in its definition of war crimes.[1697]

[1686] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1687] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3(23) and (30).
[1688] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 526.
[1689] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
[1690] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[1691] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(3).
[1692] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 158(1).
[1693] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 175.
[1694] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(c).
[1695] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 212–1.
[1696] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1697] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b), this section also includes enslavement as a crime against humanity.

1836. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of any member of the military who compels prisoners of war to carry out labour which is directly linked to military operations or which is especially prohibited by law or international conventions.[1698]

1837. Kenya's Constitution provides that no person shall be held in slavery or servitude.[1699]

1838. Latvia's Criminal Code provides that assignment to forced labour of prisoners of war and civilians in the occupied territories is a war crime.[1700]

1839. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, the unlawful internment of civilians in labour camps is an offence.[1701]

1840. Under Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes, any constraint to work and provide services destined for war purposes outside or in the territory of Luxembourg constitutes a war crime.[1702]

1841. Mali's Penal Code provides that enslavement of a group of the civilian population is a crime against humanity.[1703]

1842. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands includes "forced labour of civilians in connection with the military operations of the enemy" and "the employment of prisoners of war on unauthorised works" in its list of war crimes.[1704]

1843. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "enslavement" committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, is a crime against humanity. Enslavement is defined as "the exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person, including the exercise of such power in the course of trafficking in persons, in particular women and children".[1705]

1844. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, crimes against humanity include the crimes defined in Article 7(1)(c) of the 1998 ICC Statute, and war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the Statute.[1706]

1845. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code punishes the compelling of prisoners of war to carry out work related to the war effort.[1707]

1846. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, enslavement is a crime against humanity.[1708]

1847. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of [1698] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Articles 182 and 212(2).

[1699] Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 73(1).
[1700] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Section 74.
[1701] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[1702] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 2(1).
[1703] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 29(a).
[1704] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.
[1705] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 4(1)(c) and 4(2)(b).
[1706] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Sections 10(2) and 11(2).
[1707] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 55(2).
[1708] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.2.

12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[1709]

1848. Paraguay's Penal Code provides that during war, armed conflict or military occupation, it is a war crime to subject the civilian population, the wounded and sick and prisoners of war to forced labour.[1710]

1849. Under the War Crimes Trial Executive Order of the Philippines, "enslavement [of] . . . civilian populations before or during [the Second World War]" constitutes a war crime.[1711]

1850. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, subjecting civilians to forced labour is a war crime.[1712]

1851. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(c) of the 1998 ICC Statute, and war crimes as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the Statute.[1713]

1852. Ukraine's Criminal Code penalises the deportation of the civilian population to forced labour.[1714]

1853. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(c) of the 1998 ICC Statute, and war crimes as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxii) and (e)(vi) of the Statute.[1715]

1854. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as enslavement of the civilian population.[1716]

1855. The US Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II established military commissions which had jurisdiction over offences such as enslavement of the civilian population.[1717]

1856. Under Uzbekistan's Criminal Code, ordering or subjecting civilians to forced labour is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1718]

1857. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) considers that, during war or enemy occupation, "any person who ordered, assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of . . . forced labour of the population of Yugoslavia" committed war crimes.[1719]

[1709] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[1710] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997) Article 320(4).
[1711] Philippines, War Crimes Trial Executive Order (1947), Part II(b)(3).
[1712] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(1).
[1713] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[1714] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 408(1).
[1715] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[1716] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region I (1945), Regulation 5.
[1717] US, Regulations Governing the Trials of Accused War Criminals in the Pacific Region II (1945), Regulation 2(b).
[1718] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Clause 152.
[1719] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).

1858. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that subjecting civilians to forced labour is a war crime.[1720]

National Case-law

1859. In the Rudolph and Minister of Employment and Immigration case in 1992, the Canadian Federal Court of Appeal upheld an order for the removal from Canada of the accused, a German national who during the Second World War had requested and supervised the deportation and use of foreign civilians as slave labourers in the production of V2 rockets, on the ground that he had committed outside Canada an act that constituted a war crime.[1721]

1860. Colombia's Constitutional Court held in 1995 that the prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II were perfectly consistent with the Constitution, since they were not only in harmony with the principles and values of the Constitution, but also practically reproduced specific constitutional provisions. The Court said that the prohibition of Article 4(2)(f) was almost identical to Article 17 of the Constitution.[1722]

1861. In its judgement in the Roechling case in 1948, the General Tribunal at Rastadt of the Military Government for the French Zone of Occupation in Germany held the accused guilty of forcing prisoners of war to work in the German metallurgical industry, whose output was directly connected with the operations of war. The Tribunal considered that the use of the term "operations of war" should be understood as envisaging a prohibition of the employment of prisoners of war in work capable of increasing the war potential of the enemy.[1723]

1862. In its judgement in the Eichmann case in 1961, the District Court of Jerusalem held that "enslavement" caused serious bodily or mental harm and amounted to a violation of Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law.[1724]

1863. In its judgement in the Koshiro case in 1947, the Temporary Court-Martial of Makassar of the Netherlands found that forcing prisoners of war to build ammunition depots and fill them with ammunition amounted to "employing prisoners of war on war work" and qualified it as a violation of Article 6 of the 1907 HR and of Article 31 of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention.[1725]

1864. In its judgement in the Rohrig and Others case in 1950, a Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands found the accused guilty of having deported [1720] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142(1), see also Article 155 (enslavement).

[1721] Canada, Federal Court of Appeal, Rudolph and Minister of Employment and Immigration case, Judgement, 1 May 1992.
[1722] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.
[1723] France, General Tribunal at Rastadt of the Military Government for the French Zone of Occupation in Germany, Roechling case, Judgement, 30 June 1948.
[1724] Israel, District Court of Jerusalem, Eichmann case, Judgement, 12 December 1961.
[1725] Netherlands, Temporary Court-Martial of Makassar, Koshiro case, Judgement, 5 February 1947.

civilians from the Netherlands to Germany and having put them to forced labour in the construction of the fortifications of the German "West Wall".[1726]

1865. In its judgement in the Greiser case in 1947, the Supreme National Tribunal of Poland at Poznan found the accused guilty of deporting the civilian population to forced labour camps.[1727]

1866. In its judgement in the Student case in 1946, the UK Military Court at Lüneberg found the accused guilty of forcing prisoners of war to unload arms, ammunition and warlike stores from German aircraft.[1728]

1867. In its judgement in the Pohl case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, in considering charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity, held that:

> Slavery may exist even without torture. Slaves may be well fed, well clothed, and comfortably housed, but they are still slaves if without lawful process they are deprived of their freedom by forceful restraint. We might eliminate all proof of ill-treatment, overlook the starvation, beatings, and other barbarous acts, but the admitted fact of slavery – compulsory uncompensated labour – would still remain. There is no such thing as benevolent slavery. Involuntary servitude, even if tempered by humane treatment, is still slavery.[1729]

1868. In the List (Hostages Trial) case in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg found the defendants guilty of committing acts of "deportation to slave labour of prisoners of war and members of the civilian populations in territories occupied by the German Armed Forces".[1730]

1869. In the Milch case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg found the accused guilty of war crimes in that he was responsible for the slave labour and deportation to slave labour of the civilian populations of countries and territories occupied by the German armed forces, and in the enslavement, deportation, ill-treatment and terrorisation of such persons. The Tribunal found the accused guilty of crimes against humanity for the same war crimes insofar as they related to foreign nationals. Judge Fitzroy D Phillips referred to the definition of crimes in the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 and stated in his concurring opinion that the law treats as separate crimes and different types of crime deportation to slave labour (as a war crime) and enslavement (as a crime against humanity).[1731]

1870. In its judgement in the Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, without attempting to define what constituted "work in direct relation to war operations" within the meaning of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention, held that the use of prisoners of war in coal

[1726] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation, Rohrig and Others case, Judgement, 15 May 1950.
[1727] Poland, Supreme National Tribunal of Poland at Poznan, Greiser case, Judgement, 7 July 1946.
[1728] UK, Military Court at Lüneberg, Student case, Judgement, 10 May 1946.
[1729] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Pohl case, Judgement, 3 November 1947.
[1730] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 19 February 1948.
[1731] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Milch case, Judgement, 17 April 1947.

mines under the existing conditions amounted to a violation of the Convention and, therefore, was a war crime. With regard to the deportation of the civilian inhabitants of occupied territories to slave labour, the Tribunal held that:

> The use of concentration camp labour and forced foreign workers at Auschwitz, with the initiative displayed by the officials of Farben in the procurement and utilization of such labour, is a crime against humanity and, to the extent that non-German nationals were involved, also a war crime, to which the slave labour programme of the Reich will not warrant the defence of necessity.[1732]

1871. In its judgement in the Krupp case in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg referred to the statement of the law applicable to the deportation to slave labour and enslavement made by Judge Phillips in the Milch case and found the accused guilty of forcing French prisoners of war to work in the armament industry.[1733]

1872. In its judgement in the Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial) in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg found that forcing the civilian inhabitants of occupied territories to construct fortifications was prohibited work.[1734]

Other National Practice

1873. In a statement before the CRC in 1997, the representative of Myanmar, responding to the comment that "children should work as 'porters' for the army – apparently on a systematic basis", stated that he was aware that the law permitting the recruitment of child labour, in particular for portering duties, was incompatible with the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child and ILO standards and consideration was being given to repealing it.[1735]

1874. In a report submitted in 1992 pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV committed in the former Yugoslavia, the US described acts of hard and forced labour perpetrated by the parties to the conflict.[1736]

1875. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000, the US Congress expressed its sense concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during the Second World War, in particular the enslavement of millions of Koreans.[1737]

1876. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in [1732] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krauch (I. G. Farben Trial) case, Judgement, 29 July 1948.

[1733] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Krupp case, Judgement, 30 June 1948.
[1734] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb case (The High Command Trial), Judgement, 28 October 1948.
[1735] Myanmar, Statement before the CRC, UN Doc. CRC/C/SR.359, 21 March 1997, §§ 17 and 43.
[1736] US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention (Third Submission), annexed to Letter dated 5 November 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24791, 10 November 1992, p. 14.
[1737] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON. RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.

armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[1738]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

1877. In two resolutions adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council expressed its grave concern and condemned in the strongest possible terms the violations of IHL and human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including evidence of a consistent pattern of forced labour. It referred to forced labour as a "grave violation of international humanitarian law".[1739]

1878. In 1993, in a statement by its President following the death of persons detained by Bosnian Serb forces when the vehicle transporting them for work at the front was ambushed, the UN Security Council reminded the parties concerned that "they must not compel detainees to do work of a military nature or destined to serve a military purpose".[1740]

1879. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and FRY, the UN General Assembly expressed its concern regarding "grave violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in and around Srebrenica, and in the areas of Banja Luka and Sanski Most, including . . . forced labour".[1741]

1880. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN General Assembly expressed "deep concern at the government of Sudan's failure to take measures to halt the use of large numbers of women and children in the slave trade, in situations of servitude and for forced labour". It urged the government to investigate and put an immediate end to these practices.[1742]

1881. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights urged the government of Sudan, following Sudan's letter to the Centre for Human Rights of 22 March 1996, to carry out its investigations without delay into cases of slavery, servitude, the slave trade, forced labour and similar institutions and practice, as reported by the Special Rapporteur.[1743]

1882. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the widespread use of forced labour "including for work on infrastructure projects

[1738] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[1739] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble; Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, preamble and § 2.
[1740] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/25557, 8 April 1993.
[1741] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, preamble.
[1742] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/112, 12 December 1996, §§ 1–3 and 12.
[1743] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, § 10.

and as porters for the army". It specifically condemned this practice in relation to women and children.[1744]

1883. In 1996, in the report on her mission to North Korea, South Korea and Japan on the issue of military sexual slavery in wartime, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences stated that she was > aware of the position of the government of Japan whereby the application of the term "slavery", defined as "the status or condition of a person over whom any or all powers attaching to the right of ownership are exercised" in accordance with Article 1(1) of the 1926 Slavery Convention, was inaccurate in the case of "comfort women" under existing provisions of international law.

>
> ... the practice of "comfort women" should be considered a clear case of sexual slavery and slave-like practice in accordance with the approach adopted by relevant international human rights bodies and mechanisms.[1745]

1884. In 2001, in a report on violence against women perpetrated and/or condoned by the State during times of armed conflict, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences stated that:

> During wartime, women are often trafficked across borders to sexually service combatants to the armed conflict. Armed conflict increases the risk of women and girls being abducted and forced into sexual slavery and/or forced prostitution. Although most conflicts are now internal ones, women and girls may be transported across international borders, often to camps of soldiers or rebels located in the territory of a neighbouring State. At least some of these abductions result in women and girls being sold to others and trafficked to other regions or countries. The Governments which host and support the rebel forces also assume a specific obligation to stop the trafficking in human beings and to hold accountable those found responsible for such crimes.[1746]

1885. In 1998, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights on systematic rape, sexual slavery and slavery-like practices during armed conflict, including internal armed conflict, having carried out a comprehensive study of the question of rape and other forms of sexual violence during armed conflict, stated that:

> In all respects and in all circumstances, sexual slavery is slavery and its prohibition is a jus cogens norm. The "comfort stations" that were maintained by the Japanese military during the Second World War (see appendix) and the "rape camps" that have been well documented in the former Yugoslavia are particularly egregious examples of sexual slavery. Sexual slavery also encompasses situations where women and girls are forced into "marriage", domestic servitude or other forced labour that ultimately involves forced sexual activity, including rape by their captors. For instance, in addition to the cases documented in Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia, there are reports from Myanmar of women and girls who have been raped and otherwise sexually abused after being forced into "marriages" or forced to work as porters or minefield sweepers for the military. In Liberia, there are similar reports of women and girls who have been forced by combatants into working as cooks and who are also held as sexual slaves.

[1744] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/63, 21 April 1998, § 3(a), (c) and (d).

[1745] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1, 4 January 1996, §§ 7–8.

[1746] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/2001/73, 23 January 2001, § 53.

...

Sexual slavery also encompasses most, if not all forms of forced prostitution. The terms "forced prostitution" or "enforced prostitution" appear in international and humanitarian conventions but have been insufficiently understood and inconsistently applied. "Forced prostitution" generally refers to conditions of control over a person who is coerced by another to engage in sexual activity.

...

Older definitions of forced prostitution focus either in vague terms on "immoral" attacks on a woman's "honour", or else they are nearly indistinct from definitions that seem more accurately to describe the condition of slavery. Despite these limitations, as the crime is clearly criminalized within the Geneva Conventions and the Additional Protocols thereto, it remains a potential, albeit limited alternative tool for future prosecutions of sexual violence in armed conflict situations.

...

As a general principle it would appear that in situations of armed conflict, most factual scenarios that could be described as forced prostitution would also amount to sexual slavery and could more appropriately and more easily be characterized and prosecuted as slavery.[1747]

1886. In 1974, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights was authorized by ECOSOC to establish a Working Group on contemporary forms of slavery to:

review developments in the fields of slavery, the slave trade and the slavery-like practices, of apartheid and colonialism, the traffic in persons and the exploitation of the prostitution of others, as defined in the 1926 Slavery Convention, the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery and the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others.[1748]

In its report containing recommendations to the Sub-Commission in 2001, the Working Group reaffirmed that "every woman, man and child has a fundamental right to be free from all forms of slavery and servitude" and that "forced labour is a contemporary form of slavery".[1749]

[1747] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Systematic Rape, Sexual Slavery and Slavery-like Practices during Wartime, Final report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1998/13, 22 June 1998, §§ 30–33.

[1748] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, Report on its 26th Session, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/2001/30, 16 July 2001, § 1.

[1749] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Working Group on Contemporary Forms of Slavery, Report on its 26th Session, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/2001/30, 16 July 2001, § 136, Recommendation 1 (General and preamble) and Recommendation 10, § 1 (Forced labour).

Other International Organisations
1887. No practice was found.

International Conferences
1888. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

1889. The indictment in the case of the Major War Criminals before the IMT Nuremberg in 1945 listed "enslavement" among crimes against humanity. It added that:

The defendants conscripted and forced the inhabitants to labor and requisitioned their services for purposes other than meeting the needs of the armies of occupation and to an extent far out of proportion to the resources of the countries involved. All the civilians so conscripted were forced to work for the German war effort. Civilians were required to register and many of those who registered were forced to join the Todt Organization and the Speer Legion, both of which were semi-military organizations involving some military training. These acts violated Articles 46 and 52 of the Hague Regulations, 1907, the laws and customs of war, the general principles of criminal law as derived from the criminal laws of all civilized nations, the internal penal laws of the countries in which such crimes were committed, and Article 6 (b) of the Charter.[1750]

1890. In its judgement in the case of the Major War Criminals in 1945, the IMT Nuremberg stated that "the laws relating to forced labour by the inhabitants of occupied territories are found in Article 52 of The Hague Convention" and that "the policy of the German occupation authorities was in flagrant violation of the terms of this Convention".[1751]
1891. The indictment in the case of the Major War Criminals before the IMT Tokyo in 1946 contained references to forced labour and mentioned violations, including "deportation and enslavement of the inhabitants . . . contrary to [the 1907 HR] and to the Laws and Customs of War: Large numbers of the inhabitants or [occupied] territories were . . . arrested and interned without justification, sent to forced labour . . .".[1752]
1892. In its judgement in the case of the Major War Criminals in 1948, the IMT Tokyo stated with respect to the use of labour by civilians from occupied territories that:

Having decided upon a policy of employing prisoners of war and civilian internees on work directly contributing to the prosecution of the war, and having established

[1750] IMT Nuremberg, Case of the Major War Criminals, Indictment, 20 November 1945, Counts 1, 3(E), 3(H) and 4.
[1751] IMT Nuremberg, Case of the Major War Criminals, Indictment, 20 November 1945, Judgement (Slave Labour Policy).
[1752] IMT Tokyo, Case of the Major War Criminals, Indictment, 29 April 1946, Count 53, Appendix D.

a system to carry that policy into execution, the Japanese went further and supplemented this source of manpower by recruiting labourers from the native population of the occupied territories. This recruiting of labourers was accomplished by false promises, and by force... The labourers were transported to and confined in camps. Little or no distinction appears to have been made between these conscripted labourers on the one hand and prisoners of war and civilian internees on the other hand. They were all regarded as slave labourers to be used to the limit of their endurance.[1753]

1893. In the Kunarac case before the ICTY in 1996, the accused was charged with slavery as a crime against humanity. The accused were charged with detaining nine women in a private apartment where the women were sexually assaulted on a regular basis and forced to work both inside and outside the home.[1754]

1894. In its judgement in the Kunarac case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that "at the time relevant to the indictment, enslavement as a crime against humanity in customary international law consisted of the exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person" and that "the actus reus of the violation is the exercise of any or all of the powers attaching to the right of ownership over a person. The mens rea of the violation consists in the intentional exercise of such powers."[1755] The Tribunal found the accused guilty of crimes against humanity (enslavement).[1756]

1895. In the Krnojelac case before the ICTY in 1997, the accused was charged with "slavery" as a violation of the laws and customs of war pursuant to Article 3 of the Statute, on the basis of both the 1926 Slavery Convention and customary international law, and with "enslavement" as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 5 of the 1993 ICTY Statute. The case revealed that detainees were forced to work, inter alia, in mines, construction, farming, mine detection and trench-digging on the front line. "The detainees were not paid for their work. Work was not voluntary. Even ill or injured detainees were forced to work. Those who refused were sent to solitary confinement."[1757] In its judgement in 2002, the Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of "enslavement as a crime against humanity" and of "slavery as a violation of the laws or customs of war".[1758]

1896. In 1993, in its concluding observations on the report of Sudan, the CRC expressed "its concern regarding the issues of forced labour and slavery".[1759]

1897. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, the CRC expressed its grave concern for "cases of children systematically being [1753] IMT Tokyo, Case of the Major War Criminals, Judgement, 12 November 1948, pp. 416–417.

[1754] ICTY, Kunarac case, Initial Indictment, 26 June 1996.
[1755] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, §§ 539–540.
[1756] ICTY, Kunarac case, Judgement, 22 February 2001, §§ 883 and 886.
[1757] ICTY, Krnojelac case, Initial Indictment, 17 June 1997, §§ 5.36–5.41.
[1758] ICTY, Krnojelac case, Judgement, 15 March 2002, § 525.
[1759] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Sudan, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.6, 18 February 1993, § 12.

forced into labour, including as porters" and strongly recommended the abolition of children's involvement in forced labour.[1760]

1898. In its admissibility decision in Van Droogenbroeck v. Belgium in 1979, the ECiHR (guided by Article 1 of the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery) observed that the distinction between servitude and forced labour was not explicitly stated in the 1950 ECHR and that "it may be considered, however, that in addition to the obligation to perform certain services for others, the notion of servitude embraces the obligation for the 'serf' to live on another person's property and the impossibility of altering his condition".[1761]

1899. In its judgement in Van der Mussele v. Belgium in 1983, the ECtHR noted that the 1950 ECHR "lays down a general and absolute prohibition of forced or compulsory labour" but it "does not define what is meant by 'forced or compulsory labour'". The Court referred to the definitions provided in the 1930 Forced Labour Convention and stated that:

> For there to be forced or compulsory labour, for the purposes of Article [4(2)] of the European Convention, two cumulative conditions have to be satisfied: not only must the labour be performed by the person against his or her will, but either the obligation to carry it out must be "unjust" or "oppressive" or its performance must constitute "an avoidable hardship", in other words be "needlessly distressing" or "somewhat harassing".[1762]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

1900. In 1994, the Red Crescent Society of Azerbaijan denounced the treatment of prisoners by Armenia and Nagorno-Karabakh, including forced labour.[1763]

VI. Other Practice

1901. The Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights adopted in 1993 stated that:

> Crimes against women, including sexual slavery and trafficking are rampant. Crimes against women are crimes against humanity, and the failure of governments to prosecute those responsible implies complicity . . . In crisis situations – ethnic violence, communal riots, armed conflicts, military conflicts, military occupation and displacement of population – women's rights are specifically violated.[1764]

[1760] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.69, 24 January 1997, §§ 21 and 42.
[1761] ECiHR, Van Droogenbroeck v. Belgium, Admissibility Decision, 5 July 1979, p 59.
[1762] ECtHR, Van der Mussele v Belgium, Judgement, 20 November 1983, § 37.
[1763] Red Crescent Society of Azerbaijan, Declaration of the Executive Committee, 21 April 1994.
[1764] World Conference on Human Rights, Regional Preparatory Meeting for the Asia-Pacific, Bangkok, 24–28 March 1993, Bangkok NGO Declaration on Human Rights, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/PC/83, 19 April 1993, § 6.

1902. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "a state violates international law if, as a matter of state policy, it practices, encourages, or condones . . . (b) slavery or slave trade".[1765]
1903. In 1994, the International Commission of Jurists argued that the 1921 International Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children was evidence of customary law in existence at the time of its adoption.[1766]
1904. In December 2000, a Japanese NGO simulated a "Women's International War Crimes Tribunal on Japan's Military Sexual Slavery" which had jurisdiction over crimes committed against women, including sexual slavery and enslavement.[1767]

Compelling persons to serve in the forces of a hostile power

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
1905. Article 52 of the 1899 HR provides that:

> Neither requisitions in kind nor services can be demanded from . . . inhabitants except for the needs of the army of occupation. They must be in proportion to the resources of the country, and of such a nature as not to involve the population in the obligation of taking part in military operations against their country.

1906. Article 44 of the 1899 HR provides that "any compulsion of the population of occupied territory to take part in military operations against its own country is prohibited".
1907. Article 23(h) of the 1907 HR provides that it is "a belligerent is likewise forbidden to compel the nationals of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country, even if they were in the belligerent's service before the commencement of the war".
1908. Article 52 of the 1907 HR provides that:

> Requisitions in kind and services shall not be demanded from . . . inhabitants except for the needs of the army of occupation. They shall be in proportion to the resources of the country, and of such a nature as not to involve the inhabitants in the obligation of taking part in military operations against their own country.

1909. Article 51, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "the Occupying Power may not compel protected persons to serve in its armed or auxiliary forces.

[1765] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 702(b).
[1766] Ustinia Dolgopol and Snehal Paranjape, Comfort Women: an Unfinished Ordeal, International Commission of Jurists, Geneva, 1994.
[1767] VAWW-NET Japan, Women's International War Crimes Tribunal on Japan's Military Sexual Slavery, 7–12 December 2000.

No pressure or propaganda which aims at securing voluntary enlistment is permitted."

1910. Articles 130 GC III and 147 GC IV provide that compelling a prisoner of war or a protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile power is a grave breach of these instruments.

1911. Article 8 of the Protocol to the 1973 Agreement on Ending the War and Restoring Peace in Viet-Nam concerning the return of military personnel and civilians provides that captured military personnel of the parties and captured foreign civilians of the parties "shall not be forced to join the armed forces of the detaining party".

1912. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and (b)(xv) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "compelling a prisoner of war or other protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile power" and "compelling the nationals of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country, even if they were in the belligerent's service before the commencement of the war" constitute war crimes in international armed conflicts.

Other Instruments

1913. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution, including compulsory enlistment of soldiers among the inhabitants of occupied territory.

1914. According to Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "compelling a protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile Power" is considered as an exceptionally serious war crime and as a serious violation of the principles and rules of international law applicable in armed conflict.

1915. Article 2 of the 1993 ICTY Statute gives the Tribunal jurisdiction over grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and expressly includes "compelling a prisoner of war or civilian to serve in the forces of a hostile power".

1916. Under Article 20(a)(v) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "compelling a prisoner of war or other protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile Power" constitutes a war crime.

1917. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(a)(vi) and (b)(xv), "compelling a prisoner of war or other protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile power" and "compelling the nationals of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country, even if they were in the belligerent's service before the commencement of the war" constitute war crimes in international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

1918. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that compelling a protected person to serve in the armed forces of a hostile power is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1768]

1919. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that "compelling PW or other protected persons to serve in the forces of a hostile power" is a crime which warrants the institution of criminal proceedings.[1769]

1920. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "the population [in occupied areas] cannot be compelled to participate in any work which would involve participation in military operations".[1770]

1921. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that compelling a prisoner of war to serve in the armed forces of the enemy is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1771]

1922. Benin's Military Manual prohibits "compelling nationals of the enemy State to take part in military operations against their own country, even if they used to serve you before the outbreak of hostilities". The same prohibition applies to prisoners of war.[1772]

1923. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits "compelling nationals of the adverse party to take part in war operations against their own country".[1773]

1924. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits "compelling nationals of the adverse party to take part in war operations against their own country".[1774]

1925. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the occupying power is prohibited from compelling protected persons to enlist in its armed forces and may not use any pressure or propaganda aimed at securing their voluntary enlistment. To compel the population of occupied territory so to enlist is a grave breach of [GC IV]."[1775] The manual adds that "it is also a breach to compel a PW to serve in the forces of the hostile power" and that "in the case of civilians in the hands of the adverse party, it is also a grave breach . . . to compel a protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile power". It further states that "in accordance with the Hague Rules, a number of acts are 'especially forbidden' . . . compelling enemy nationals to take part in hostilities against their own country, even if they were members of the particular belligerent's forces before the commencement of the conflict".[1776]

[1768] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[1769] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1305(e); see also Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1315(e).
[1770] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1222.
[1771] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[1772] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 12, § 2-1 and Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1773] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[1774] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[1775] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-5, § 42.
[1776] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-2, §§ 13 and 14 and p. 16-3, § 20.

1926. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended prohibits "compelling nationals of the adverse party to take part in war operations against their own country".[1777]

1927. France's LOAC Summary Note stipulates that "compelling [prisoners of war] to serve in enemy armed forces" is a war crime under the law of armed conflict.[1778]

1928. France's LOAC Manual provides that prisoners of war "shall not be compelled to take part in activities with a military character or objective".[1779]

1929. Germany's Military Manual states that "compelling prisoners of war and civilians to serve in the forces of the adversary" is a grave breach of IHL.[1780]

1930. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War stipulates that "the Conventions expressly forbid harnessing prisoners to the war effort of the detaining state".[1781]

1931. Italy's IHL Manual forbids the compelling "of enemy soldiers to participate in military actions against their own country". It provides that "the inhabitants of an occupied territory ... shall not be enrolled into the national armed forces, or ... provide services directly linked to the war".[1782] The manual stipulates that "in no case shall civilian persons be compelled to carry out works which would oblige them to take part in military operations".[1783]

1932. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that captured combatants "shall not be compelled to engage in activities having a military character or purpose".[1784]

1933. South Korea's Military Regulation 187 provides that "forcing war prisoners to serve the enemy army" is an unjustifiable crime.[1785]

1934. Mali's Army Regulations prohibits "compelling nationals of the adverse party to take part in war operations against their own country".[1786]

1935. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits "compelling nationals of the adverse party to take part in war operations against their own country".[1787]

1936. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that compelling a protected person to serve a hostile power is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[1788]

1937. New Zealand's Military Manual refers to Article 23 of the 1907 HR and provides that "a belligerent is forbidden to compel the subjects of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country, even if they were in the service of the belligerent before the commencement of the war". It further provides that:

[1777] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[1778] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[1779] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 102.
[1780] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[1781] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 53.
[1782] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, §§ 11 and 39.
[1783] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 48(11).
[1784] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 7.
[1785] South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), § 4.2.
[1786] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[1787] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[1788] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-5.

The Occupying Power must not compel protected persons to serve in its armed or auxiliary forces but [Article 51 GC IV] lays down expressly that pressure or propaganda which aims at securing voluntary enlistment in those forces is prohibited. To compel the population of occupied territory so to enlist is a grave breach of IV GC.[1789]

According to the manual, it is a grave breach of GC III and GC IV to compel a prisoner of war and a protected civilian to serve in the forces of the hostile power.[1790] It also states that it is a war crime and an offence against the law of armed conflict to compel "enemy nationals to take part in hostilities against their own State, even if they were members of the particular belligerent's forces before the beginning of the conflict".[1791]

1938. Nigeria's Soldiers' Code of Conduct and Military Manual provide that "a belligerent is forbidden to compel the nationals of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country, even if they were in the belligerent's service before the commencement of the war".[1792]

1939. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War states that compelling a prisoner of war and a protected person to serve in the forces of the hostile power is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and is considered a serious war crime.[1793] It further states that "compelling a citizen to take part in war operations directed against his own state" is an illegitimate tactic.[1794]

1940. Under Russia's Military Manual, it is prohibited as a method of warfare "to compel persons belonging to the enemy party to participate in hostilities against their country".[1795]

1941. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits "compelling nationals of the adverse party to take part in war operations against their own country".[1796]

1942. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that "compelling a protected person to serve in the forces of the hostile power" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1797]

1943. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "according to [GC IV], an occupying power may not compel protected persons to serve in its armed forces or auxiliary organizations. It is likewise forbidden to use any pressure to persuade persons to enlist voluntarily in the forces of the occupying power." It adds that "the Convention also states that protected persons may not be compelled to perform any work which would involve them in the obligation of taking part in military operations".[1798] The manual further stipulates that "the status

[1789] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1320.2.
[1790] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1702(2) and 1702(3)(c).
[1791] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1704(2)(i).
[1792] Nigeria, Soldiers' Code of Conduct (undated), p. 4; Military Manual (1994), p. 40, § 6.
[1793] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(a) and (c).
[1794] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 14(a).
[1795] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 5(q).
[1796] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(2).
[1797] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 40.
[1798] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 124.

of protected persons also entails the advantage that this category of refugees cannot be compelled to serve in the armed forces of the occupying power (GC IV, Art. 51)".[1799] It also provides that "compelling a protected person to serve in the armed forces of the hostile power" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1800]

1944. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "protected persons shall not be compelled to do any work which would make it compulsory for them to take part in military operations. It is prohibited to recruit labour force in order to achieve a mobilisation of workers placed under a military or half-military regime."[1801] The manual further specifies that "compelling [prisoners of war and civilians] to serve in the forces of the enemy Power" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1802]

1945. Togo's Military Manual prohibits the "compelling of nationals of the enemy State to take part in military operations against their own country, even if they used to serve you before the outbreak of hostilities". The same prohibition applies to prisoners of war.[1803]

1946. The UK Military Manual provides that "protected persons of enemy nationality . . . must not be required to do work directly related to the conduct of military operations". The compelling of prisoners of war and civilians to serve in the forces of the hostile power is strictly prohibited.[1804] It also states that "compelling a prisoner of war to serve in the forces of the hostile power" is a war crime.[1805] It adds that "compelling a person to serve in the forces of the hostile power" is a war crime under GC IV.[1806]

1947. Under the UK LOAC Manual, it is prohibited "to compel enemy nationals to take part in operations against their own country, even if they were in your service before the outbreak of hostilities".[1807]

1948. The US Field Manual provides that compelling a prisoner of war or a protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile power is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1808]

1949. The US Air Force Pamphlet recalls Article 23 of the 1907 HR, which "forbids compelling nationals of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country", and Article 45 of the 1907 HR, which "forbids compelling the inhabitants of occupied territory to swear allegiance to the hostile power". The Pamphlet also refers to Article 51 GC IV and states that "compulsory military service by protected persons in the armed forces

[1799] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.4, p. 127.
[1800] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 93.
[1801] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 178.
[1802] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 192.
[1803] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 12, § 2-1 and Fascicule III, p. 12.
[1804] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 48, 282 and 556.
[1805] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(b).
[1806] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(c).
[1807] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 4, p. 14, § 5, see also Annex A, p. 46, § 9.
[1808] US, *Field Manual (*1956), §§ 418 and 502.

of the occupant is prohibited".[1809] It adds that "wilfully compelling civilians or PWs to perform prohibited labour" is an act involving individual criminal responsibility".[1810]

1950. According to the US Air Force Commander's Handbook, "a belligerent is likewise forbidden to compel the nationals of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country".[1811]

National Legislation

1951. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who "compels a prisoner of war or a civilian to serve in the armed forces of the adverse party".[1812]

1952. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "compelling a protected person or a prisoner of war to serve in the opponent army", during an armed conflict, constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[1813]

1953. Australia's War Crimes Act provides that "compulsory enlistment of soldiers among the inhabitants of occupied territory" is a war crime.[1814]

1954. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1815]

1955. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "compelling service in hostile forces" and "compelling participation in military operations", in international armed conflicts.[1816]

1956. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that "compelling prisoners of war or other persons protected by international humanitarian law to serve in the forces of a hostile power, as well as compelling citizens of an enemy State to take part in hostilities against their State" are violations of the laws and customs of war.[1817]

1957. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[1818]

1958. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect [1809] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6(a) and (b).

[1810] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-3(c)(9).
[1811] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 32.
[1812] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(3) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[1813] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.2(2).
[1814] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3.
[1815] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[1816] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.30 and 268.53.
[1817] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 115.1.
[1818] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[1819]

1959. Under the Criminal Code of Belarus, the following is a violation of the laws and customs of war:

> Compelling persons that have laid down their arms or are defenceless, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, sanitary and religious personnel, prisoners of war, the civilian population in an occupied territory or in the conflict zone, or other persons enjoying international protection to serve in the forces of a foreign power" is a violation of laws and customs of war.[1820]

1960. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that compelling a prisoner of war, a civilian person or persons protected by AP I and AP II to serve in the forces of a hostile power or adverse party constitutes a crime under international law.[1821]

1961. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that compelling civilians and prisoners of war to serve in the armed forces of the enemy power is a war crime.[1822] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[1823]

1962. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[1824]

1963. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that compelling a captive or a civilian "to serve in the armed forces of an enemy state" is a war crime.[1825]

1964. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that compelling a prisoner of war, a protected person or an enemy national to serve in the forces of the enemy power is a war crime in international armed conflicts.[1826]

1965. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 . . . which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[1827]

[1819] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[1820] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(1).
[1821] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(4).
[1822] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 154(1) and 156.
[1823] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433(1) and 435.
[1824] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[1825] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 411(b) and 412(d).
[1826] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(e) and (B)(o).
[1827] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.

1966. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions] . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1828]
1967. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[1829]
1968. Under Chile's Code of Military Justice, compelling a prisoner of war to fight against his or her own army is an "offence against international law".[1830]
1969. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that "forcing non-combatants to engage in military activities with the enemy" and "conscription by force of inhabitants in the occupied territory" constitute war crimes.[1831]
1970. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on anyone who, during an armed conflict, compels or orders the compelling of a protected person to serve in the armed forces of the enemy.[1832]
1971. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1833]
1972. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1834]
1973. Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended provides that in time of war or occupation, organising, ordering or compelling the civilian population to serve in the enemy armed forces, intelligence services or administration constitutes a "crime against the civilian population".[1835] The same provision applies with regard to prisoners of war.[1836]
1974. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that compelling civilians and prisoners of war to serve in the armed forces or in the administration of the enemy power is a war crime.[1837]
1975. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[1838]

[1828] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[1829] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1830] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 261(1).
[1831] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3(20) and (22).
[1832] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 150.
[1833] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[1834] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[1835] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(4).
[1836] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 139(2).
[1837] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158 and 160.
[1838] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).

1976. The Code of Military Justice of the Dominican Republic punishes any member of the armed forces who compels a prisoner of war to fight against his or her own country.[1839]

1977. El Salvador's Code of Military Justice provides that coercing POWs or other persons in the power of the adverse party to serve in the armed forces of the enemy is a war crime.[1840]

1978. Under Estonia's Penal Code, compelling civilians, prisoners of war and interned civilians to serve in the armed forces of the enemy or to take part in military operations is a war crime.[1841]

1979. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that it is a war crime to forcibly enlist the civilian population, prisoners of war and interned persons in the enemy's armed forces, intelligence services or administration.[1842]

1980. Georgia's Criminal Code provides that it is a crime, in international or internal armed conflicts, to compel a prisoner of war or any other protected person to serve in the armed forces of the enemy.[1843]

1981. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in connection with an international armed conflict "compels a protected person . . . by force or threat of appreciable harm to serve in the forces of a hostile power, [or] compels a national of the adverse party by force or threat of appreciable harm to take part in the operations of war directed against his or her own country".[1844]

1982. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[1845]

1983. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are punishable offences.[1846] In addition, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 51 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[1847]

1984. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "it is prohibited to compel your enemies to participate in actions of war against their own country".[1848] It instructs soldiers that "you cannot implicate prisoners of war in work which would involve their participation in military operations".[1849] It also states that "enemies cannot, in any case, even if they used to serve the State before the outbreak of hostilities, be compelled to enlist

[1839] Dominican Republic, Code of Military Justice (1953), Article 201(1).
[1840] El Salvador, Code of Military Justice (1934), Article 69(1).
[1841] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), §§ 97 and 98.
[1842] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Articles 282(d) and 284(b).
[1843] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(2)(d).
[1844] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(3)(3)–(4).
[1845] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[1846] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[1847] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1848] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 37.
[1849] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 106(3).

in the armed forces of the State, or to render services directly linked to the war".[1850]

1985. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of any member of the military who compels enemy nationals to take part in war actions against their own country.[1851]

1986. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code provides that compelling prisoners of war or protected persons to serve in the armed forces of the enemy is a war crime.[1852]

1987. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1853]

1988. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, compelling prisoners of war or protected persons to serve in the armed forces of the enemy constitutes a war crime.[1854]

1989. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, the compulsory use of civilians and prisoners of war in the armed forces of the enemy is a war crime.[1855]

1990. Luxembourg's Law on the Repression of War Crimes provides that "any enlistment by the enemy (or its agents) in either the regular army, police units or military or paramilitary organisations" is a war crime.[1856]

1991. Under Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches, "compelling a person protected by [GC III] and [GC IV] to serve in the armed forces of the enemy power" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1857]

1992. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1858]

1993. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[1859]

1994. Mali's Penal Code provides that compelling a prisoner of war or a protected person to serve in the armed forces of a foreign power is a war crime. It adds that "compelling by a belligerent the nationals of the adverse party to [1850] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 281.

[1851] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 182.
[1852] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(5).
[1853] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[1854] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(5).
[1855] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 338.
[1856] Luxembourg, Law on the Repression of War Crimes (1947), Article 2(1).
[1857] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1(4).
[1858] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[1859] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).

take part in hostilities against their country, even if they were in the service of the belligerent before the commencement of hostilities," constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.[1860]

1995. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1861]

1996. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended provides for the punishment of persons found guilty of forcing detainees to participate in military campaigns against their own country.[1862]

1997. Moldova's Penal Code provides a punishment for anyone who compels protected persons "to serve in the armed forces of the enemy".[1863]

1998. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands includes "compulsory enlistment of soldiers among the inhabitants of occupied territory" in its list of war crimes.[1864]

1999. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit in an international armed conflict grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including "compelling a prisoner of war or other protected person to serve in the armed forces of a hostile power", as well as "compelling the nationals of the hostile party to take part in the operations of war directed against their own country, even if they were in the belligerent's service before the commencement of the war".[1865]

2000. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1866]

2001. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and(b)(xv) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1867]

2002. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code punishes the compelling of prisoners of war to fight against their own armed forces. It also punishes the compelling of enemy civilians to serve in Nicaragua's armed forces.[1868]

2003. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, it is a war crime to "compel to serve in the armed forces of the enemy power or of the adverse party" persons protected by the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977.[1869]

[1860] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(e) and (i)(15).
[1861] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[1862] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Article 324(V).
[1863] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 137(2)(a).
[1864] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.
[1865] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(1)(e) and 5(5)(f).
[1866] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[1867] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[1868] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Articles 55(1) and 58.
[1869] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(4).

2004. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation, . . . whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1870]

2005. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[1871]

2006. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[1872]

2007. Paraguay's Penal Code states that coercing prisoners of war or other persons in the power of the adverse party to serve in the armed forces of the enemy is a war crime.[1873]

2008. Peru's Code of Military Justice provides that compelling prisoners of war to fight against their own forces is a violation of the law of nations.[1874]

2009. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, compels persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection to "serve in hostile armed forces".[1875]

2010. Portugal's Penal Code provides that in times of war, armed conflict or occupation, compelling the civilian population, the wounded, the sick and prisoners of war to serve in the enemy armed forces is a war crime.[1876]

2011. Romania's Penal Code punishes the compelling of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, members of civil medical services, the Red Cross or similar organisations, prisoners of war, or of all persons in the hands of the adverse party to serve in the armed forces of the foreign power.[1877]

2012. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1878]

2013. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[1879]

[1870] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[1871] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[1872] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).
[1873] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 320(6).
[1874] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Article 95(1).
[1875] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 124.
[1876] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Article 241(e).
[1877] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358(a).
[1878] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[1879] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).

2014. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that compelling civilian persons and prisoners of war to serve in the armed forces or administration of the enemy is a war crime.[1880]

2015. Spain's Military Criminal Code punishes the compelling of prisoners of war and civilians to fight against their own forces.[1881]

2016. Spain's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone found guilty of "compelling a prisoner of war or a civilian person to serve, in whatever form, in the Armed Forces of the Adverse Party".[1882]

2017. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, . . . a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1883]

2018. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides that compelling prisoners of war or civilian persons to serve in the armed forces of the enemy is a crime against international law.[1884]

2019. Under Tajikistan's Criminal Code, "compelling a prisoner of war or any other protected person to serve in the armed forces of the hostile power" is a punishable offence.[1885]

2020. Thailand's Prisoners of War Act provides for the punishment of "whoever coerces a prisoner of war into active service with his enemy's forces".[1886]

2021. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and (b)(xv) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1887]

2022. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1888]

2023. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[1889]

2024. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and (b)(xv) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1890]

[1880] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 374(1) and 376.
[1881] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(5)–(6).
[1882] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611(3).
[1883] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1)(a).
[1884] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Article 22(6).
[1885] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(2)(d).
[1886] Thailand, Prisoners of War Act (1955), Section 15.
[1887] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[1888] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[1889] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[1890] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).

2025. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and violations of Article 23 of the 1907 HR are war crimes.[1891]
2026. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[1892]
2027. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended punishes the compelling of prisoners of war to fight against their own armed forces.[1893]
2028. Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who compels a prisoner of war to fight against his or her own forces.[1894]
2029. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, compelling prisoners of war or civilians to serve in the armed forces of the enemy constitutes a war crime.[1895]
2030. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) considers that, during war or enemy occupation, "any person who ordered, assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of ... compulsory mobilisation" committed a war crime.[1896]
2031. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that compelling civilians and prisoners of war to serve in the forces of a hostile power or administration is a war crime.[1897]
2032. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions".[1898]

National Case-law
2033. In its judgement in the Wagner case in 1946, the Permanent Military Tribunal at Strasbourg in France ruled that the introduction of compulsory military service for Alsatian civilians was a war crime.[1899]
2034. In its judgement in the Weizsaecker case in 1949, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg held that "pressure or coercion to compel [prisoners of war] to enter into the armed forces obviously violated international law" and that the conscription of foreign nationals into the armed forces of a belligerent was a crime against humanity.[1900]

[1891] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[1892] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[1893] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58(8).
[1894] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(15).
[1895] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 21(3).
[1896] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).
[1897] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Articles 142(1) and 144.
[1898] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).
[1899] France, Permanent Military Tribunal at Strasbourg, Wagner case, Judgement, 3 May 1946.
[1900] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Weizsaecker case, Judgement, 14 April 1949.

Other National Practice

2035. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, the prohibition of compelling a prisoner of war to fight against his or her own country (reflected in Article 261 of the Chilean Code of Military Justice), predates the Geneva Conventions and is based on the 1907 HR.[1901]

2036. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that "compelling hostages to serve in the armed forces of Iraq constitute Grave Breaches (that is, major violations of the law of war) under Article 147 GC [IV]".[1902] It also listed some specific Iraqi war crimes including "compelling Kuwaiti and third country nationals to serve in the armed forces of Iraq, in violation of Articles 51 and 147 GC [IV]".[1903]

2037. In 1991, in a document entitled "Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia", the SFRY Ministry of Defence included the following: "The YPA are arrested, while in their identity booklets they state that the military service is completed, and then are forcefully mobilised into Slovenian forces."[1904]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2038. In 1996, in his report on the situation of human rights in Sudan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that "if a prisoner is captured and he refuses to change sides, he is cruelly tortured and executed".[1905]

Other International Organisations

2039. No practice was found.

International Conferences

2040. The Final Declaration adopted by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflicts in 2002 expressed deep concern about "the number and expansion of conflicts in Africa" and alarm at "the spread of violence, in particular [1901] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Chapter 6.5.

[1902] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 618.
[1903] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 634.
[1904] SFRY (FRY), Ministry of Defence, Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia, July 1991, § 3(ii).
[1905] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Sudan, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/62, 20 February 1996, § 9.

in the form of . . . compelling civilians to join in the armed forces . . . which seriously violate[s] the rules of International Humanitarian Law".[1906]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2041. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2042. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "compelling [protected persons] to serve in the forces of an enemy Party" constitutes a grave breach of the law of war.[1907]

2043. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the war crime of "compelling a prisoner of war or another protected person to serve with forces of a hostile Power", when committed in an international armed conflict, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[1908]

VI. Other Practice

2044. In 1979, in a letter to the ICRC, an armed opposition group confirmed its commitment to IHL and denounced the rounding up of the homeless in barracks in order to compel them to join the army and physical liquidation of those who refused to do so.[1909]

I. Hostage-Taking

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2045. Under Article 6(b) of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) "killing of hostages" is a war crime.

2046. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions states that the taking of hostages is and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever.

[1906] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, preamble.
[1907] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 776(j).
[1908] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, § 1(a)(iv).
[1909] ICRC archive document.

2047. Article 34 GC IV states that the taking of hostages is prohibited.
2048. Article 147 GC IV states that hostage-taking is a grave breach of GC IV.
2049. Article 2 of the 1973 Convention on Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons obliges State parties to make punishable attacks upon the person or liberty of an internationally protected person.
2050. Article 75(2)(c) AP I states that the taking of hostages is an act which is and "shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever, whether committed by civilian or by military agents". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1910]
2051. Article 4(2)(c) AP II states that the taking of hostages is prohibited. Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[1911]
2052. The 1979 International Convention against the Taking of Hostages criminalises hostage-taking. Article 1 provides that:

> Any person who seizes or detains and threatens to kill, to injure or to continue to detain another person (hereinafter referred to as "hostage") in order to compel a third party, namely, a State, an international intergovernmental organisation, a natural or juridical person, or a group of persons to do or to abstain from doing any act as an explicit or implicit condition for the release of the hostage, commits the offence of taking of hostages.

2053. Article 12 of the 1979 International Convention against the Taking of Hostages specifies that the Convention is not applicable to acts of hostage-taking committed in armed conflicts if the Geneva Conventions or the Additional Protocols thereto are applicable in so far as the Conventions require States to prosecute or hand over the hostage-takers.
2054. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(a)(viii) and (c)(iii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, the "taking of hostages" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.
2055. Article 3(c) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "the Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977", which include "taking of hostages".

Other Instruments
2056. Article II(1)(b) of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that "killing of hostages" is a war crime.
2057. Principle VI of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles adopted by the ILC provides that "killing of hostages" is a war crime.

[1910] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[1911] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

2058. Under Rule 4 of the 1950 UN Command Rules and Regulations, Military Commissions of the UN Command had jurisdiction over offences such as the improper treatment of hostages.
2059. According to Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "acts of . . . taking of hostages" are considered as an exceptionally serious war crime and as a serious violation of the principles and rules of international law applicable in armed conflict.
2060. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
2061. Under Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the parties committed themselves to respect and ensure respect for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Paragraph 2.3 requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
2062. Under Article 2(h) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute the taking of civilians as hostages.
2063. Under Article 4(c) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including the taking of hostages.
2064. According to Article 20(a)(viii) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, the "taking of hostages" is regarded as a war crime. Under Article 20(f)(iii), "taking of hostages" constitutes a war crime in conflicts not of an international character.
2065. Article 3(1) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that all acts of violence, including hostage-taking, shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat.
2066. According to Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin, the taking hostage of persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations and persons placed hors de combat is prohibited at any time and in any place.
2067. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(a)(viii) and (c)(iii), the "taking of hostages" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
2068. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) and Law of War Manual (1989) prohibit the taking of hostages.[1912]

[1912] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 4.012 and 8.001; Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 4.15, 4.29, 7.04 and 8.03.

2069. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "taking protected persons as hostages" is a crime likely to warrant institution of criminal proceedings.[1913]
2070. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that hostage-taking is prohibited.[1914]
2071. Belgium's Law of War Manual prohibits hostage-taking and adds that it constitutes a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1915]
2072. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers explains that the prohibition on taking hostages is a necessary corollary of the obligation to respect the civilian population.[1916]
2073. Benin's Military Manual states that the taking of hostages is prohibited in international and non-international armed conflicts.[1917]
2074. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits hostage-taking.[1918]
2075. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits hostage-taking.[1919]
2076. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual explicitly forbids civilian hostage-taking.[1920]
2077. Canada's LOAC Manual prohibits the taking of hostages in international and non-international armed conflicts.[1921]
2078. Colombia's Basic Military Manual prohibits the taking of the civilian population as hostages.[1922]
2079. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits hostage-taking.[1923]
2080. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that "hostage-taking" is a grave breach of IHL and a war crime.[1924]
2081. Croatia's Soldiers' Manual explicitly forbids civilian hostage-taking.[1925]
2082. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic provides that "it is a breach of the laws of war to take civilians as hostages".[1926]
2083. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "enemy civilians may not be interned as hostages".[1927]
2084. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended prohibits hostage-taking.[1928]

[1913] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1305(c).
[1914] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 953 and 1315.
[1915] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), pp. 50 and 55.
[1916] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), pp. 10, 14 and 41 and slide 1/7.
[1917] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 17, Fascicule II, p. 19 and Fascicule III, p. 4.
[1918] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[1919] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[1920] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 151, § 421(1).
[1921] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-4, §§ 33(e) and 63(c), p. 16-3, § 14(e) and p. 17-2, §§ 10 and 21.
[1922] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 30.
[1923] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[1924] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), Annex 9, p. 56.
[1925] Croatia, Soldiers' Manual (1992), p. 5.
[1926] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.
[1927] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11-9.
[1928] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).

2085. France's LOAC Summary Note states that the taking of hostages is a war crime under the law of armed conflict.[1929]

2086. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that neither prisoners of war nor any protected persons shall be used as hostages and that hostage-taking is a violation of the laws of armed conflict.[1930]

2087. France's LOAC Manual provides that hostage-taking is a war crime. It adds that hostage-taking is expressly prohibited by the law of armed conflict and has been considered a war crime since 1949.[1931] The manual also states that one of the three main principles common to IHL and human rights is the principle of security, which prohibits the taking of hostages.[1932]

2088. Germany's Military Manual states that "the taking of hostages is prohibited".[1933] It also states that hostage-taking is prohibited in case of occupation.[1934] The manual provides that hostage-taking is a grave breach of IHL.[1935]

2089. Hungary's Military Manual provides that hostage-taking is a grave breach of IHL and a war crime.[1936]

2090. Italy's IHL Manual prohibits hostage-taking and states that the taking of hostages is a war crime.[1937]

2091. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual prohibits hostage-taking.[1938]

2092. Kenya's LOAC Manual lists as one of the soldier's rules for behaviour in combat "do not take hostages".[1939]

2093. South Korea's Military Regulation 187 provides that taking hostages is an "unjustifiable crime".[1940]

2094. Madagascar's Military Manual states that the taking of hostages is prohibited.[1941]

2095. Mali's Army Regulations prohibits hostage-taking.[1942]

2096. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits hostage-taking.[1943]

2097. The Military Manual of the Netherlands restates the prohibition of hostage-taking found in common Article 3 to the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Articles 75 AP I and 4 AP II.[1944] The manual further provides that hostage-taking is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and AP I.[1945]

[1929] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[1930] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), pp. 3, 5 and 7.
[1931] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 45 and 51.
[1932] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 101.
[1933] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 508.
[1934] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 537.
[1935] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[1936] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 90.
[1937] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, §§ 20, 41(f), 48(6) and 84.
[1938] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 17.
[1939] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, pp. 5–6 and Précis No. 3, p. 14, § 2.
[1940] South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), § 4.2.
[1941] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 3-O, § 17, Fiche No. 4-T, § 23 and Fiche No. 5-T, § 8.
[1942] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[1943] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[1944] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VIII-3, XI-1 and XI-4.
[1945] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-5.

2098. New Zealand's Military Manual restates Article 75(2) AP I, which provides for the prohibition of "the taking of hostages" at any time and in any place whatsoever, whether committed by civilian or by military agents.[1946] It also states that "the taking of hostages is now forbidden by treaty".[1947] The manual further provides that it is a grave breach of GC IV "to take a protected civilian hostage" (Article 147).[1948] The manual prohibits hostage-taking in non-international armed conflicts and explains that "it has now become accepted, in international conflicts at least, that the taking of hostages is an offence under customary law and most systems of national law forbid such actions".[1949]

2099. Nicaragua's Military Manual prohibits the taking of hostages, including the threat to commit such acts.[1950]

2100. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that hostage-taking is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and is considered a serious war crime.[1951] The manual also specifies that "killing of hostages" is a war crime.[1952]

2101. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines instructs soldiers: "Do not take hostages."[1953]

2102. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that hostage-taking of civilians and captured combatants is prohibited.[1954]

2103. Russia's Military Manual prohibits "the taking of hostages" as a method of warfare.[1955]

2104. Senegal's IHL Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and prohibits the taking of hostages.[1956]

2105. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that the "taking of hostages" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1957]

2106. Spain's LOAC Manual prohibits the taking of hostages among the civilian population.[1958] The same prohibition applies to prisoners of war.[1959]

2107. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are part of customary international law.[1960] The manual also provides that "taking hostages" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1961]

[1946] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137.2.
[1947] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1607.
[1948] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1702.3(e).
[1949] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1812.1(c), including footnote 35, and § 1807.1.
[1950] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Articles 7(2) and 14(35).
[1951] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(c).
[1952] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(17).
[1953] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 8.
[1954] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), pp. 15 and 34.
[1955] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 5(m).
[1956] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 4 and 23.
[1957] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 40.
[1958] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.3.a.(1), see also § 10.6.b.(4) and 10.8.b.
[1959] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.c.
[1960] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[1961] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 93.

2108. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual prohibits the taking of hostages and any order given to that end.[1962] It specifies that the taking of protected civilians as hostages is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1963]
2109. Togo's Military Manual states that hostage-taking is prohibited in international and non-international armed conflicts.[1964]
2110. The UK Military Manual forbids the taking hostage of the civilian population, whether in an occupied territory or not.[1965] It specifies that "the taking of hostages" among persons protected by GC IV is a grave breach of that Convention.[1966] The manual also mentions the killing of hostages in its list of war crimes.[1967]
2111. The UK LOAC Manual prohibits the taking of hostages, including in non-international armed conflicts.[1968]
2112. The US Field Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and provides that the "taking of hostages" is a war crime under GC IV.[1969]
2113. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that hostage-taking is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1970]
2114. The US Instructor's Guide prohibits hostage-taking and specifies that it is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[1971]
2115. The US Naval Handbook provides that "enemy civilians may not be interned as hostages".[1972]
2116. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) forbids civilian hostage-taking.[1973]

National Legislation
2117. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who takes any protected person hostage.[1974]
2118. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "taking hostages" during an armed conflict constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[1975]
2119. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1976]

[1962] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 147(d)–(e) and 154.
[1963] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 192(1)(c).
[1964] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 18, Fascicule II, p. 19 and Fascicule III, p. 4.
[1965] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 42, 131, 554 and 650.
[1966] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(c). [1967] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626(q).
[1968] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 35, § 9 and Section 12, p. 42, § 2, see also Annex A, p. 48, § 20.
[1969] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 11 and 502(c). [1970] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15-3(c).
[1971] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 8. [1972] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-8.
[1973] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 253(3).
[1974] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[1975] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.2(5).
[1976] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).

2120. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "taking hostages" in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[1977]
2121. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international armed conflicts, the hostage-taking of civilians is prohibited.[1978]
2122. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that the taking hostage of protected persons is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1979]
2123. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the killing of hostages is a war crime.[1980] It adds that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[1981]
2124. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[1982]
2125. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that the capture and detention of persons as hostage who have laid down their arms or who are defenceless, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, medical and religious personnel, prisoners of war, the civilian population in an occupied territory or in the conflict zone or other persons enjoying international protection are a violation of the laws and customs of war.[1983]
2126. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that hostage-taking constitutes a crime under international law.[1984]
2127. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that hostage-taking is a war crime.[1985] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[1986]
2128. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[1987]

[1977] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.34 and 268.75.
[1978] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 17(3).
[1979] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 115.2.
[1980] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(d).
[1981] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[1982] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[1983] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(2).
[1984] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(7).
[1985] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(1).
[1986] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 433(1).
[1987] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).

2129. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that ordering or carrying out the taking of a civilian hostage is a war crime.[1988]

2130. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that hostage-taking is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[1989]

2131. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 . . . which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[1990]

2132. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions] . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[1991]

2133. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[1992]

2134. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that the "killing of hostages" constitutes a war crime.[1993]

2135. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on anyone who, during an armed conflict, orders or carries out the taking of hostages.[1994]

2136. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[1995]

2137. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[1996]

2138. Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended provides that in time of war or occupation, the organising ordering or carrying out of hostage-taking constitutes a "crime against the civilian population".[1997]

2139. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that hostage-taking is a war crime.[1998]

2140. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave

[1988] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Article 412(b).
[1989] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(h) and (C)(c).
[1990] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.
[1991] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[1992] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[1993] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3, § 2.
[1994] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 148.
[1995] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[1996] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[1997] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(5).
[1998] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158 and 171.

breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[1999]

2141. Under El Salvador's Penal Code, "the killing of hostages" during an international or a civil war is a crime.[2000]

2142. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, hostage-taking is prohibited in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[2001]

2143. Estonia's Penal Code provides that hostage-taking of civilians is a war crime.[2002]

2144. Under Ethiopia's Penal Code, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, the organising, ordering or carrying out of hostage-taking of civilians constitutes a war crime.[2003]

2145. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, hostage-taking is a crime in international and internal armed conflicts.[2004]

2146. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "takes hostage a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law".[2005]

2147. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[2006]

2148. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are punishable offences.[2007] In addition, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3 and Article 34 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(2)(c) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2)(c) AP II, are also punishable offences.[2008]

2149. Israel's Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law includes "killing of hostages" in its definition of war crimes.[2009]

2150. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code provides that hostage-taking is a war crime.[2010]

2151. Kazakhstan's Penal Code provides that hostage-taking is a crime.[2011]

[1999] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).
[2000] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 362.
[2001] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Toma de rehenes".
[2002] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 97.
[2003] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(g).
[2004] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(2)(g).
[2005] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(2).
[2006] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[2007] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[2008] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2009] Israel, Nazis and Nazi Collaborators (Punishment) Law (1950), Section 1(b).
[2010] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(6).
[2011] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Article 229.

2152. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2012]

2153. Kyrgyzstan's Criminal Code provides that hostage-taking is a punishable offence.[2013]

2154. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, hostage-taking of protected persons constitutes a war crime.[2014]

2155. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, hostage-taking is a war crime.[2015]

2156. Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches provides that hostage-taking is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2016]

2157. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2017]

2158. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[2018]

2159. Under Mali's Penal Code, hostage-taking is a war crime.[2019]

2160. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2020]

2161. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended criminalises the taking of hostages.[2021]

2162. Moldova's Penal Code punishes the hostage-taking of protected persons.[2022]

2163. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "the taking of hostages" is a crime, whether committed in an international armed conflict (as a grave breach of the 1949 Geneva Conventions) or in a non-international armed conflict (as a violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions).[2023]

2164. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures

[2012] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[2013] Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 224.
[2014] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(6).
[2015] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[2016] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1(8).
[2017] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[2018] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[2019] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(h).
[2020] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[2021] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Article 215.
[2022] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 137(2)(b).
[2023] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(1)(h) and 6(1)(b).

the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[2024]

2165. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(a)(viii) and (c)(iii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2025]

2166. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides that hostage-taking is an offence against the laws and customs of war, in both international and non-international conflicts.[2026]

2167. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code punishes hostage-taking in international and internal armed conflicts.[2027]

2168. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, hostage-taking of persons protected under the 1949 Geneva Conventions or their Additional Protocols of 1977 is a war crime.[2028]

2169. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation, . . . whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2029]

2170. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2030]

2171. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[2031]

2172. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, takes persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection hostage.[2032]

2173. Portugal's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in violation of international law, in times of war, armed conflict or occupation, takes the civilian population, the wounded and sick or prisoners of war hostage.[2033]

2174. Romania's Penal Code punishes the hostage-taking of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, members of civil medical services, the Red Cross or similar

[2024] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[2025] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[2026] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Articles 48 and 49, see also Article 58.
[2027] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 453.
[2028] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(7).
[2029] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[2030] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[2031] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).
[2032] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 123(2).
[2033] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Article 241(1)(d).

organisations, prisoners of war, or of all persons in the hands of the adverse party.[2034]

2175. Russia's Criminal Code punishes "the capture or detention of a person as a hostage committed with a view to compel a State, an organisation or a person to accomplish or to abstain from a certain action as a condition for release of the hostage".[2035]

2176. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2036]

2177. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[2037]

2178. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that hostage-taking is a war crime.[2038]

2179. Under Spain's Military Criminal Code, hostage-taking of nationals of the State with which Spain is at war is an offence against the laws and customs of war.[2039]

2180. Spain's Penal Code punishes anyone who, in time of armed conflict, takes any protected person hostage.[2040]

2181. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, (a) a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions; or (b) a breach of common Article 3 of the [Geneva] Conventions, is guilty of an indictable offence".[2041]

2182. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of hostage-taking in international or non-international armed conflicts.[2042]

2183. Thailand's Prisoners of War Act provides a punishment for "whoever takes a hostage" in a non-international armed conflict.[2043]

2184. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(viii) and (c)(iii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2044]

2185. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets

[2034] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358(b).
[2035] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 206.
[2036] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[2037] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[2038] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(1).
[2039] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(6).
[2040] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611(4).
[2041] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1).
[2042] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(2)(g).
[2043] Thailand, Prisoners of War Act (1955), Section 19.
[2044] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).

or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2045]

2186. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[2046]

2187. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(viii) and (c)(iii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2047]

2188. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[2048]

2189. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[2049]

2190. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, hostage-taking of civilians is a war crime.[2050]

2191. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that hostage-taking is a war crime.[2051]

2192. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions".[2052]

National Case-law

2193. The Report on the Practice of Colombia refers to a decision by the Council of State in which the Council notes that the category of direct attacks on civilians also includes hostage-taking and that "this is especially true when the military operations are disorderly and improvised and an unwillingness to protect the hostages is combined with a total disregard for human rights and the basic principles of the law of nations".[2053]

2194. In 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court held that the prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II were consistent with the Constitution and practically reproduced specific constitutional provisions.[2054]

[2045] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[2046] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[2047] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[2048] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[2049] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[2050] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 21(4).
[2051] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142(1).
[2052] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).
[2053] Colombia, Council of State, Constitutional Case No. 9276, Judgement, 19 August 1994.
[2054] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.

2195. In its judgement in the List (Hostages Trial) case in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg considered the right to take hostages from the innocent civilian population of an occupied territory and stated that:

> Certain rules of customary law . . . lay down the rules applicable to the subject of hostages.
> . . .
> The term "hostages" will be considered as those persons of the civilian population who are taken into custody for the purpose of guaranteeing with their lives the future good conduct of the population of the community from which they were taken.

The Tribunal further stated that:

> The occupant may properly insist upon compliance with regulations necessary to the security of the occupying forces and for the maintenance of law and order. In the accomplishment of this objective, the occupant may, only as a last resort, take and execute hostages . . . The occupant is required to use every available method to secure order and tranquility before . . . taking and execution of hostages.
> . . .
> If attacks upon troops and military installations [continue to] occur . . . hostages may be taken from the population to deter similar acts in the future provided it can be shown that the population generally is a party to the offence, either actively or passively.
> . . .
> It is essential to a lawful taking of hostages under customary law that proclamation be made, giving the names and addresses of hostages taken, notifying the population that upon the recurrence of stated acts of war treason that the hostages will be shot . . . Unless the foregoing requirements are met, the shooting of hostages is . . . a war crime in itself.[2055]

Other National Practice

2196. On the basis of an interview with a retired army general, the Report on the Practice of Botswana considers that should an internal conflict arise, Article 4 AP II would be applied by military personnel.[2056]

2197. According to the Report on the Practice of France, hostage-taking is inadmissible. This entails refusing any distinction as to its object, to forbid such behaviour and to refuse any condition to obtain the liberation of hostages. According to the report, diplomatic, UN and NGO personnel are particularly concerned.[2057]

2198. In 1995, in the context of the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh, all political parties in the German parliament requested the release of hostages.[2058]

[2055] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, List (Hostages Trial) case, Judgement, 19 February 1948.
[2056] Report on the Practice of Botswana, 1998, Interview with a retired army general, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 1.4.
[2057] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 5.3.
[2058] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Proposal by the CDU/CSU, SPD, the Greens and FDP, Initiative zum Karabach-Konflikt, *BT-Drucksache*13/1029, 30 March 1995, p. 1.

2199. In 1976, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Italy stated that the odious practice of taking hostages was clearly condemned under the modern rules of war. It further stated that:

> Each time a hostage had been taken, those responsible have been disowned by the organisations for which they had claimed to act, showing that the practice was condemned in respect of both international and non-international armed conflict . . . The need was therefore not to protect any particular category of persons but simply to devise an effective ban on the practice of taking hostages as such, in view of its inhuman nature, which was an affront to the bases of the social conscience.[2059]

Italy also recalled UN General Assembly Resolution 2645 (XXV) of 1970, Article 34 GC IV and common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and declared that the proposed convention on the taking of hostages was entirely in keeping with the evolution of IHL.[2060]

2200. In 1979, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Italy commented on the outcome of the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Drafting of a Convention against the Taking of Hostages and stated that the taking of hostages was one of the greatest evils of modern times and an act which, even in wartime, was considered an international crime.[2061]

2201. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[2062] The report refers to a booklet prepared by the ICRC and notes that the Jordanian armed forces are instructed not to take civilian hostages.[2063]

2202. In 1995, the Pakistani government condemned the kidnapping of British and American nationals in the context of the conflict in Kashmir, emphasising that it was the responsibility of the Indian government to ensure the safety of visitors to the region.[2064]

2203. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that [all persons who are in the power of a party to a conflict and who do not benefit from more favorable treatment under the Conventions] not be subjected to . . . the taking of hostages". He added that "the basic core of [AP II] is, of course, reflected in common Article 3 of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions and therefore is, and should be, a part

[2059] Italy, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C. 6/31/SR.55, 26 November 1976, § 13.
[2060] Italy, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN; Doc. A/C.6/ 31/SR.55, 26 November 1976, §§ 14 and 15.
[2061] Italy, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/ 34/SR.11, 5 October 1979, § 13.
[2062] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[2063] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 1.1.
[2064] Pakistan, Foreign Office Briefings, Transcript of the press briefing by the Foreign Office spokesman, 13 July 1995, pp. 73–80.

of generally accepted customary law. This specifically includes its prohibitions on . . . hostagetaking."[2065]

2204. In 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, the US protested against "the announcement of the intention of the Government of Iraq to hold prisoners of war as hostages . . . in flagrant violation of the Third Geneva Convention of 1949".[2066]

2205. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

> Whatever the purpose, whether for intimidation, concessions, reprisal, or to render areas or legitimate military objects immune from military operations, the taking of hostages is unequivocally and expressly prohibited by Article 34 GC [IV] . . .
>
> The taking of hostages . . . constitute Grave Breaches (that is, major violations of the law of war) under Article 147 GC [IV].[2067]

The report listed Iraqi war crimes, including the taking of hostages.[2068] It also mentioned some specific Iraqi war crimes:

- the taking of Kuwaiti nationals as hostages . . . in violation of Articles 34 . . . and 147 GC [IV].
- the taking of third nationals in Kuwait as hostages . . . in violation of Articles 34 . . . and 147 GC[IV].
- the taking of third nationals in Iraq as hostages . . . in violation of Articles 34 . . . and 147 GC [IV].[2069]

2206. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[2070]

2207. In 1991, in a document entitled "Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia", the Ministry of Defence of the SFRY included the following example: "Taking hostages among wives and children of YPA soldiers, they brought them

[2065] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 427 and 430–431.

[2066] US, Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991.

[2067] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, pp. 617–618 and 624.

[2068] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 632.

[2069] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 634.

[2070] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

in front of barracks and forced them to call upon their husbands and fathers to surrender."[2071]

2208. In 1974, in a letter to the ICRC, a party to an international armed conflict denounced, on the basis of Article 34 GC IV, the taking of civilian hostages by the other party.[2072]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2209. In a resolution adopted in 1989 on incidents of hostage-taking and abduction, the UN Security Council considered that the taking of hostages and abductions were "offences of grave concern to all States" and "serious violations of international humanitarian law". It also condemned "unequivocally all acts of hostage-taking and abduction" and demanded "the immediate safe release of all hostages and abducted persons, wherever and by whomever they are being held".[2073]

2210. In a resolution adopted in 1990 in connection with the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, the UN Security Council stated that it condemned "the actions by the Iraqi authorities and occupying forces to take third-State nationals hostage" and demanded that they immediately "cease and desist from taking third-State nationals hostage [and] mistreating and oppressing Kuwaiti and third-State nationals".[2074]

2211. In two statements by its President in 1997 and 1998 concerning the situation in Tajikistan, the UN Security Council denounced the taking of relief workers and others as hostages, demanded their immediate release and expressly stressed the inadmissibility of kidnapping.[2075]

2212. In a statement by its President in 1998, the UN Security Council condemned hostage-taking by former members of the deposed junta in Sierra Leone and called for the immediate release of all international personnel and others who had been held hostage.[2076]

2213. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN General Assembly strongly condemned the overwhelming number of human rights violations committed by the authorities of the FRY, the police and the military authorities in Kosovo, including the taking of civilian hostages, in breach of international humanitarian law, including common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II.[2077]

[2071] SFRY (FRY), Ministry of Defence, Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia, July 1991, § 1(v).
[2072] ICRC archive document.
[2073] UN Security Council, Res. 638, 31 July 1989, preamble and §§ 1–2.
[2074] UN Security Council, Res. 664, 18 August 1990, § 1; see also Res. 674, 29 October 1990, § 1; Res. 686, 2 March 1991, § 2(c); Res. 706, 15 August 1991, § 6.
[2075] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1997/6, 7 February 1997; Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/4, 24 February 1998.
[2076] UN Security Council, Statement by the President, UN Doc. S/PRST/1998/5, 26 February 1998.
[2077] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 8.

2214. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the situation of human rights in Iraq, the UN Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned hostage-taking.[2078]

2215. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Commission on Human Rights included the taking of hostages among violations of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia.[2079]

2216. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned hostage-taking during the internal armed conflict in Cambodia. It expressed its "grave concern over the atrocities committed by the Khmer Rouge including the taking and killing of foreign hostages".[2080]

2217. In a resolution on Cambodia adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights endorsed the comments of the Special Representative stating that "in recent history the most serious human rights violations in Cambodia have been committed by the Khmer Rouge" and cited the taking and killing of hostages as an example.[2081]

2218. In a resolution on Lebanon adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights "called upon the government of Israel . . . to refrain from holding Lebanese detainees incarcerated in its prisons as hostages for bargaining purposes and to release them immediately".[2082]

2219. In a resolution on hostage-taking adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned all acts of hostage-taking anywhere in the world and stated that such acts were illegal wherever and by whomever committed and that they were unjustifiable under any circumstances, as their aim was the destruction of fundamental human rights. The Commission demanded the immediate and unconditional release of all hostages.[2083]

2220. In a resolution on hostage-taking adopted in 2001, the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that the Commission:

> recognizes that hostage-taking calls for resolute, firm and concerted efforts on the part of the international community in order, in strict conformity with international human rights standards, to bring such abhorrent practices to an end,
>
> . . .
>
> reaffirms that hostage-taking, wherever and by whomever committed, is an illegal act aimed at the destruction of human rights and is, under any circumstances, unjustifiable, including as a means to promote and protect human rights.[2084]

2221. In 1996, in a report concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, the UN Secretary-General reported that, following a series of hostage-taking incidents, the two sides had agreed to exchange all hostages and to consider

[2078] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/71, 5 March 1992, § 2(d).
[2079] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/S-1/1, 14 August 1992, § 5.
[2080] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/55, 3 March 1995, § 11.
[2081] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/60, 17 April 1998, § 19.
[2082] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/62, 21 April 1998, § 4.
[2083] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/73, 22 April 1998, §§ 1–4.
[2084] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/38, 23 April 2001, preamble and § 1.

kidnapping a crime whose authors would be arrested and prosecuted. In the space of one month, UNOMIG assisted in the exchange of 13 hostages, 11 held by the Abkhaz side, two by the Georgian side.[2085]

2222. In 1997, in a report on the situation in Somalia, the UN Secretary-General, citing violations of human rights and IHL, pointed out that the practice of kidnapping remained common.[2086]

2223. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[2087]

Other International Organisations

2224. In a resolution adopted in 1990 concerning the Gulf War, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe condemned the taking of foreign nationals as hostages. It demanded the immediate release of third State nationals being held as hostages by the Iraqi authorities in Iraq and Kuwait.[2088]

2225. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Chechnya adopted, the European Parliament called upon the Chechen authorities to take all measures in their power to locate and release all civilian hostages kidnapped before and during the current conflict.[2089]

2226. In 1989, in with a resolution on hostages in El Salvador, the Permanent Council of the OAS resolved to make an urgent appeal to safeguard the lives and persons of those being held hostage, and to call for their immediate and unconditional release.[2090]

International Conferences

2227. The 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross in 1977 adopted a resolution in which it condemned "the taking of hostages" and urged "all governments to take the necessary measures to prevent the recurrence of such acts".[2091]

2228. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent proposed that all

[2085] UN Secretary-General, Report concerning the situation in Abkhazia, Georgia, UN Doc. S/1996/284, 15 April 1996, § 33.
[2086] UN Secretary-General, Report on the situation in Somalia, UN Doc. S/1997/135, 17 February 1997, § 32.
[2087] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.
[2088] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 950, 1 October 1990, §§ 2 and 5(ii).
[2089] European Parliament, Resolution on violations of human rights and humanitarian law in Chechnya, 16 March 2000, § 11.
[2090] OAS, Permanent Council, Resolution on Hostages in El Salvador, 1989, § 4.
[2091] 23rd International Conference of the Red Cross, Bucharest, 15–21 October 1977, Res. VIII, §§ 1 and 2.

the parties to an armed conflict ensure that "the prohibition of taking hostages is strictly respected".[2092]

2229. The Final Declaration adopted by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002 expressed deep concern about "the number and expansion of conflicts in Africa" and alarm at "the spread of violence, in particular in the form of ... hostage-taking ... which seriously violate[s] the rules of International Humanitarian Law".[2093]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2230. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[2094]

2231. In the Karadžić and Mladić case before the ICTY in 1995, the accused were charged with grave breaches and violations of the laws and customs of war for having seized 284 UN peacekeepers in Pale, Sarajevo, Goražde and other locations and held them as hostages in order to prevent further air strikes by NATO.[2095] In its review of the indictment in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber upheld the charges and stated that these acts could "be characterised as war crimes (taking UNPROFOR soldiers as hostages and using them as human shields)".[2096]

2232. In its judgement in the Blaškić case in 2000, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that:

> The taking of hostages is prohibited by Article 3(b) common to the Geneva Conventions which is covered by Article 3 of the [ICTY] Statute ... Consonant with the spirit of the Fourth Convention, the Commentary sets out that the term "hostage" must be understood in the broadest sense. The definition of hostages must be understood as being similar to that of civilians taken as hostages within the meaning of grave breaches under Article 2 of the Statute, that is – persons unlawfully deprived of their freedom, often wantonly and sometimes under threat of death.

The Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of a violation of the laws and customs of war recognised by common Article 3(1)(a) (taking of hostages) of the [2092] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(d).

[2093] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, preamble.
[2094] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.
[2095] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Initial Indictment, 24 July 1995, §§ 46–48.
[2096] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Review of the Indictments, 11 July 1996, §§ 13 and 89.

1949 Geneva Conventions and of a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions (taking civilians as hostages).[2097]

2233. In its judgement in the Kordić and Čerkez case in 2001, the ICTY Trial Chamber held that "an individual commits the offence of taking civilians as hostages when he threatens to subject civilians, who are unlawfully detained, to inhuman treatment or death as a means of achieving the fulfilment of a condition". The Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions (taking civilians as hostages).[2098]

2234. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC held that:

> States parties may in no circumstances invoke article 4 of the Covenant as justification for acting in violation of humanitarian law or peremptory norms of international law, for instance by taking hostages.
> . . .
> In those provisions of the Covenant that are not listed in article 4, paragraph 2, there are elements that in the Committee's opinion cannot be made subject to lawful derogation under article 4. Some illustrative examples are presented below.
> . . .
> (b) The prohibitions against taking of hostages, abductions, or unacknowledged detention are not subject to derogation. The absolute nature of these prohibitions, even in times of emergency, is justified by their status as norms of general international law.[2099]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2235. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that the taking of hostages is prohibited and that it constitutes a grave breach of the law of war.[2100]

2236. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "the taking of hostages" is specifically prohibited.[2101]

2237. In 1992, the ICRC reminded a State party to a non-international armed conflict of the prohibition of hostage-taking.[2102]

2238. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC urged all the parties involved in the conflict in Tajikistan to ensure the protection of civilians and military victims,

[2097] ICTY, Blaškić case, Judgement, 3 March 2000, § 187 and Part VI.
[2098] ICTY, Kordić and Čerkez case, Judgement, 26 February 2001, Part V.
[2099] HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, §§ 11 and 13(b).
[2100] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 196 and 776(d).
[2101] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.
[2102] ICRC archive document.

in compliance with the basic rules of IHL and in particular "to refrain from taking hostages".[2103]

2239. In a letter to a representative of a separatist entity in 1993, the ICRC held that persons forcibly evacuated from a conflict zone where fighting is going on must be immediately released, once brought to safer areas. The ICRC further stated that "there is no doubt that those who are not going to be released unconditionally and unilaterally are hostages. We have repeatedly stated that IHL strictly prohibits hostage taking and ask you to act accordingly."[2104]

2240. In a communication to the press in 1993, the ICRC reminded the parties to the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh "to refrain from taking hostages".[2105]

2241. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "hostage-taking" of civilians is, in particular, prohibited.[2106]

2242. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC stated, with respect to civilian persons who refrain from acts of hostility, that "the taking of hostages" is prohibited.[2107]

2243. In a press release in 1994, the ICRC urged parties to the conflict in Chechnya "to refrain from taking hostages".[2108]

2244. In a communication to the press in 1995, the ICRC stated that is was "alarmed by the dramatic events taking place in the town of Budyonnovsk, where Chechen fighters have taken hostage hundreds of civilians" and condemned "the taking of hostages in Budyonnovsk . . . which violates norms of international humanitarian law".[2109]

2245. In 1997, in a working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the war crime of "taking of hostages", when committed in an international armed conflict, together with the crime of hostage-taking, as a serious violation of IHL applicable in non-international armed conflicts, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[2110]

[2103] ICRC, Press Release, Tajikistan: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, ICRC Dushanbe, 23 November 1992.
[2104] ICRC archive document.
[2105] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/25, Nagorny-Karabakh conflict: 60,000 civilians flee fighting in south-western Azerbaijan, 19 August 1993.
[2106] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.
[2107] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.
[2108] ICRC, Press Release No. 1793, Chechnya: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, 28 November 1994.
[2109] ICRC, Communication to the Press, ICRC Moscow, 17 June 1995.
[2110] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, §§ 1(a)(vii) and 3(iii).

VI. Other Practice

2246. In 1979, in a letter to the ICRC, an armed opposition group confirmed its commitment to IHL and denounced the hostage-taking of civilians.[2111]
2247. In 1985, in a report on violations of the laws of war in Nicaragua, Americas Watch reported an incident in which the leader of an armed opposition group threatened to kill 23 captured soldiers unless ten Miskito prisoners were released. The report commented that this behaviour "reflects a serious disregard for the rights of prisoners under [common] Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[2112]
2248. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "the taking of hostages" shall remain prohibited.[2113]
2249. In 1993, a representative of a separatist entity held that the forced displacement of civilians from a specific town was only carried out after timely warning of the possibility to flee and was only justified by the concern to keep the civilians away from the combat zone. It also held that this action was not motivated by the intention to take these civilians as hostages since the authorities of the separatist entity had always refused to resort to such practices.[2114]

J. Human Shields

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
2250. Article 19, second paragraph, GC I provides that "the responsible authorities shall ensure that [fixed establishments and mobile medical units] are, as far as possible, situated in such a manner that attacks against military objectives cannot imperil their safety".
2251. Article 23, second paragraph, GC III provides that "no prisoner of war may at any time be sent to, or detained in areas where he may be exposed to the fire of the combat zone, nor may his presence be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations".
2252. Article 28 GC IV provides that "the presence of a protected person may not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations".
2253. Article 12(4) AP I provides that "under no circumstances shall medical units be used in an attempt to shield military objectives from attack. Whenever

[2111] ICRC archive document.
[2112] Americas Watch, Violations of the Laws of War by Both Sides in Nicaragua: 1981–1985, New York, March 1985, p. 43.
[2113] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(2)(c), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 332.
[2114] ICRC archive document.

possible, the Parties to the conflict shall ensure that medical units are so sited that attacks against military objectives do not imperil their safety." Article 12 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2115]

2254. Article 51(7) AP I provides that:

> The presence or movements of the civilian population or individual civilians shall not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations, in particular in attempts to shield military objectives from attacks or to shield, favour or impede military operations. The Parties to the conflict shall not direct the movement of the civilian population or individual civilians in order to attempt to shield military objectives from attacks or to shield military operations.

Article 51 AP I was adopted by 77 votes in favour, one against and 16 abstentions.[2116]

2255. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(b)(xxiii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "utilizing the presence of a civilian or other protected person to render certain points, areas or military forces immune from military operations" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

Other Instruments

2256. Article 13 of the 1956 New Delhi Draft Rules provides that "parties to the conflict are prohibited from placing or keeping members of the civilian population subject to their authority in or near military objectives, with the idea of inducing the enemy to refrain from attacking those objectives".

2257. Paragraph 6 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that hostilities be conducted in accordance with Article 51(7) AP I.

2258. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(xxiii), "utilizing the presence of a civilian or other protected person to render certain points, areas or military forces immune from military operations" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2259. Argentina's Law of War Manual requires that no prisoner of war nor protected person be used "to render, because of their presence, certain points, areas or regions immune from military operations".[2117]

2260. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that civilians in enemy territory "are not to be used as a shield for combat operations or as a means of obtaining protection for military facilities".[2118]

[2115] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 69.
[2116] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 163.
[2117] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.29, see also § 3.12 (POWs).
[2118] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 609.

2261. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that:

> [The] requirement [to distinguish between military objects and civilian objects] imposes obligations on all parties to a conflict to establish and maintain this distinction. Inherent in this requirement, and to make it effective, is the obligation not to use civilians to protect military objectives. Civilians may not be used as shields . . . Any party who uses civilians in this manner violates international law including its obligations to protect its own civilian population.[2119]

The manual further states that the "civilian population shall not be used to attempt to render military objectives immune from attack or to shield, favour or impede military operations".[2120] It also states that "PW camps must not be located near military objectives with the intention of securing exemption from attack for those objectives".[2121]

2262. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers reiterates the prohibition on using civilians as human shields and contains an illustration of the prohibition on using civilians in order to facilitate an attack.[2122]

2263. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual prohibits the use of human shields as a method of warfare.[2123]

2264. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that prisoners of war or detainees "will not be used as 'human shields' to protect military objectives or cover military operations".[2124]

2265. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that parties in conflict shall "abstain from using [the civilian population] as shields or barricades in order to obtain a military advantage".[2125] It further states that it is prohibited "to use the civilian population as human shields".[2126]

2266. Croatia's Commanders' Manual forbids the use of civilians or populated areas as shields for the protection of military units, movements or positions.[2127]

2267. According to the Military Manual of the Dominican Republic, soldiers "cannot use prisoners as shields to defend against attacks by enemy forces".[2128]

2268. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "deliberate use of non combatants to shield military objectives from enemy attacks is prohibited".[2129]

2269. France's LOAC Summary Note prohibits the use of individual civilians or inhabited areas in order to protect military formations, movements or positions.[2130]

[2119] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 504.
[2120] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 922.
[2121] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1014.
[2122] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 14, see also p. 41 and slide 1/4.
[2123] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 30, § 131.
[2124] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 6, § 12.
[2125] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 22.
[2126] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 30.
[2127] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), Article 47, p. 7.
[2128] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 9.
[2129] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11-2.
[2130] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 4.3.

2270. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that protected persons "cannot be used in any case as human shields". The prohibition is also stated regarding prisoners of war.[2131]

2271. France's LOAC Manual restates Article 51(7) AP I.[2132] It states that "to use protected persons as human shields to protect military objectives is strictly prohibited".[2133]

2272. Germany's Military Manual provides that "none of the parties to the conflict shall use civilians as a shield to render certain points or areas immune from military operations".[2134] It also provides that POWs "shall not be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations".[2135]

2273. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that it is prohibited to exploit the presence of prisoners to render military objectives immune from attack and it is obligatory to provide the prisoners with bomb shelters as well as other means of defence.[2136]

2274. Italy's IHL Manual provides that "it is prohibited to use civilian persons to shelter, owing to their presence, a place, a military objective or a zone of military operations".[2137]

2275. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "neither may the presence of civilian persons be used to render certain points or areas immune from military operations".[2138]

2276. The Military Manual of the Netherlands restates the provisions of Article 51(7) AP I.[2139]

2277. New Zealand's Military Manual states, regarding restrictions on targeting, that "if the enemy is deliberately using civilians to shield military objectives the commander may take this into account in making his decision".[2140] It also restates the provisions of Article 51 AP I.[2141] The manual further states that "the presence of a protected person in a particular place or area must not be used to give that place immunity from military operations (for example by placing trainloads of protected persons in railway sidings alongside ammunition trains)".[2142] It adds that "it is forbidden to use the presence of protected persons to render certain points or areas immune from military operations".[2143]

2278. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "it is prohibited to use protected persons as shields in order to protect military objectives from enemy attacks".[2144]

[2131] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), pp. 3 and 5.
[2132] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 33–34.
[2133] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 101.
[2134] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 506.
[2135] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 714.
[2136] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), pp. 52 and 57.
[2137] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(c).
[2138] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 2.
[2139] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. V-5.
[2140] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 515(3), see also § 622(3).
[2141] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 519.
[2142] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1114, including footnote 28.
[2143] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1231.3.
[2144] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.3.b.(4).

It further states that civilians and civilian goods or protected persons and goods may suffer from the effects of an attack against a proper military object due to their proximity to it and when their presence shields the latter from attacks.[2145] It also states that combatants must position their weapons in the field in order to avoid the use of the civilian population as a shield.[2146]

2279. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "no civilian person can be used to shield, by its presence, certain places or regions from military operations".[2147]

2280. The UK Military Manual provides that "it is forbidden to use the presence of protected persons to render certain points or areas immune from military operations". It also states that:

> In the past prominent inhabitants were placed on engines of trains running on the lines of communication in occupied territories to ensure the safety of the trains. Such a measure exposed innocent inhabitants to the illegitimate acts of train wrecking by private enemy individuals, and also to the lawful operations of raiding parties of the armed forces of the belligerent. It now comes within the prohibition of the [GC IV].[2148]

2281. The UK LOAC Manual states that civilians "may not be used to shield military operations".[2149]

2282. According to the US Air Force Commander's Handbook, "civilians should never be deliberately used to shield military operations or to protect objectives from attack".[2150]

2283. The US Instructor's Guide states that "in addition to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the following acts are further examples of war crimes: . . . using an enemy prisoner of war as point man on patrol".[2151]

2284. The US Naval Handbook prohibits the "deliberate use of non combatants to shield military objectives from enemy attacks".[2152]

National Legislation

2285. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "using protected persons as shields", in international armed conflicts.[2153]

2286. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that in international and non-international

[2145] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 4.4.e.
[2146] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.3.a.(1).
[2147] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 151(1).
[2148] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 548 and 651.
[2149] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Annex A, p. 48, § 20.
[2150] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 3-1(4).
[2151] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 13.
[2152] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-2.
[2153] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.65.

armed conflicts, using prisoners of war "as a shield in the hostilities" is prohibited.[2154]

2287. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that using protected persons "for the protection of one's own Armed Forces or military objectives from military actions" is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[2155]

2288. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2156]

2289. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that using persons who have laid down their arms or who are defenceless, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, medical and religious personnel, prisoners of war, the civilian population in an occupied territory or in the conflict zone or other persons enjoying international protection as a cover for one's own troops and objects against the effects of hostilities is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[2157]

2290. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that "using the presence of a civilian person or any other protected person to prevent certain points, zones or military forces from being military targets" is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[2158]

2291. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[2159]

2292. Under the DRC Code of Military Justice as amended, the use of prisoners of war or of civilians as a method of protection is an offence.[2160]

2293. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2161]

2294. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides for the punishment of anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, "uses a person who is to be protected under international humanitarian law as a shield to restrain a hostile party from undertaking operations of war against certain targets".[2162]

2295. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, the "use of civilians to cover the troops or objects from the hostilities" is a crime.[2163]

[2154] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 21(3).
[2155] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 115.2.
[2156] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2157] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(2).
[2158] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(B)(v).
[2159] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2160] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 524.
[2161] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[2162] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 11(1)(4).
[2163] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 413(b).

2296. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 19 GC I, 23 GC III and 28 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Articles 12(4) and 51(7) AP I, are punishable offences.[2164]

2297. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, the "use of civilians or prisoners of war as a living shield in military operations" is an offence.[2165]

2298. Mali's Penal Code provides that "using the presence of a civilian person or other protected person in order to avoid that certain zones, points or military forces become a target for military operations" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.[2166]

2299. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "utilising the presence of a civilian or other protected person to render certain points, areas or military forces immune from military operations" is a crime when committed in an international armed conflict.[2167]

2300. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crime defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxiii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2168]

2301. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2169]

2302. Under Peru's Code of Military Justice, the "use of prisoners of war as . . . human shields" constitutes a violation of the law of nations.[2170]

2303. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, uses persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection to "shield with their presence an area or an object or his own troops from attack".[2171]

2304. Tajikistan's Criminal Code punishes the "use of [protected persons] to cover the troops or objects from hostilities".[2172]

2305. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxiii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2173]

2306. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxiii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2174]

[2164] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2165] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 338.
[2166] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(i)(23).
[2167] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(5)(k).
[2168] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[2169] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[2170] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Article 95(1).
[2171] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 123(2).
[2172] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 405.
[2173] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[2174] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).

2307. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, the "use of civilians as human shields during war operations" constitutes a war crime.[2175]

National Case-law

2308. In its judgement in the Student case in 1946, the UK Military Court at Lüneberg found the accused guilty of using six British prisoners of war as a screen for the advance of German troops, which resulted in the deaths of some of the prisoners.[2176]

2309. In its judgement in the Von Leeb case (The German High Command Trial) in 1948, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg held that "to use prisoners of war as a shield for the troops is contrary to international law".[2177]

Other National Practice

2310. In 1996, during a debate in the UN Security Council on the situation in Liberia, the representative of Chile said that he especially regretted the "unfortunate recurrence, in a United Nations peacekeeping operation, of the use of human shields, as a result of the fighting in Tubmanburg and Kle".[2178]

2311. The Report on the Practice of Croatia refers to a communiqué of the Ministry of Defence in 1995 which stated that the Croatian authorities had taken into custody and prosecuted the commander of a small Croatian military unit because of his alleged use of seven Danish UN peacekeepers as human shields during the August 1995 military operations.[2179]

2312. In a communiqué issued in August 1990, El Salvador vigorously condemned Iraq's actions on the basis of IHL, in particular Iraq's violation of the rule prohibiting the taking and use of hostages and the denial of an individual's basic rights to liberty and freedom of transit.[2180]

2313. The Report on the Practice of France refers to various statements in which the French President, Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs have condemned the use of civilians, prisoners of war and members of peacekeeping operations as human shields.[2181]

[2175] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 21(4).
[2176] UK, Military Court at Lüneberg, In re Student, Judgement, 10 May 1946.
[2177] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Von Leeb case (The German High Command Trial), Judgement, 28 October 1948.
[2178] Chile, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3621, 25 January 1996, p. 18.
[2179] Report on the Practice of Croatia, 1997, Chapter 1.7, referring to Communiqué of the Ministry of Defence, 10 August 1995.
[2180] El Salvador, Communiqué concerning the situation between Iraq and Kuwait, annexed to Letter dated 30 August 1990 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21708, 5 September 1990.
[2181] Report on the Practice of France, 1999, Chapter 1.7, referring to Message of the President to parliament, 27 August 1990, Politique étrangère de la France, August 1990, p. 105, Communiqué of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, 21 January 1991, Annuaire français de droit international, Vol. 37, 1991, p. 1019, Politique étrangère de la France, 21 August 1990, p. 91, Prime Minister, Answer to questions in parliament regarding Bosnia and Herzegovina, 31 May 1995, Politique étrangère de la France, May 1995, pp. 81–82, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Declaration before

2314. In an address to parliament in 1990, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs stated with respect to EU nationals detained in Kuwait and Iraq that "it is particularly abominable that they will be placed around military defence objects" and that such practice constituted a "breach of international law and rules governing civilised behaviour".[2182]

2315. The Report on the Practice of Iran notes that no instances were found in which the civilian population or objects were used as human shields by the Iranian authorities.[2183]

2316. According to the Report on the Practice of Israel, the IDF strictly prohibits the use of civilians to render certain points, areas or personnel immune from military operations. The report expresses regret that Israel's opponents do not always respect this obligation.[2184]

2317. In January 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, Italy warned Iraq in the strongest terms against carrying out its alleged intention to move POWs to strategic sites and recalled Article 23 GC III.[2185]

2318. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, Jordan has never used civilians as shields to protect areas or installations from enemy attacks.[2186]

2319. In January 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, Kuwait denounced Iraq's announcement that prisoners of war were to be sent to various economic and scientific installations to serve as human shields. The letter stated that such inhuman practices were in violation of GC III and GC IV.[2187]

2320. The Report on the Practice of Kuwait notes that the use of human shields by Iraq to protect certain strategic sites was condemned by Kuwait.[2188]

2321. On the basis of interviews with members of the armed forces, the Report on the Practice of Malaysia states that during the communist insurgency, civilians were never used as human shields.[2189]

2322. According to the records published by the Directorate of Legal Services of the Nigerian army, cited in the Report on the Practice of Nigeria, Nigerian practice does not allow the use of human shields.[2190] parliament, 6 June 1995, Politique étrangère de la France, June 1995, p. 99 and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Declaration before the Senate, 7 June 1995, Politique étrangère de la France, June 1995, p. 106.

2182 Germany, Statement of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, 23 August 1990, Bulletin, No. 102, Presse- und Informationsamt der Bundesregierung, Bonn, 25 August 1990, p. 858.

2183 Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 1.7.

2184 Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Chapter 1.7.

2185 Italy, Letter dated 23 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22137, 23 January 1991.

2186 Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 1.7.

2187 Kuwait, Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22128, 22 January 1991.

2188 Report on the Practice of Kuwait, 1997, Chapter 1.7.

2189 Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Interviews with members of the armed forces, Chapter 1.7.

2190 Report on the Practice of Nigeria, 1997, Chapter 1.7, referring to Records of the Directorate of Legal Services of the Nigerian army.

2323. The Report on the Practice of Rwanda includes several examples of the use of civilians as human shields by combatants of the former government during the hostilities in Kigali in 1994. On the basis of a statement of the Rwandan Minister of Justice at the 53rd Session of the UN Commission on Human Rights condemning the use of the civilian population as human shields during hostilities, the report considers that it is the opinio juris of Rwanda that the use of human shields in combat is prohibited.[2191]

2324. In a statement in 1992, the President of Senegal said that "Iraq has . . . used prisoners of war as human shields, in violation of the Geneva Convention on the treatment of prisoners of war. Deeply shocked and angered, the Government of Senegal has condemned this inhumane policy which runs counter to law."[2192]

2325. The Report on the Practice of Spain cites several occasions in 1990 and 1991 when the Spanish government condemned Iraq for its use of human shields.[2193]

2326. In a statement in February 1996, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Tajikistan denounced the opposition's use of prisoners as human shields. According to the statement, opposition forces hid behind a "living shield" of members of government forces, compelling the command of the armed forces of Tajikistan to abandon positions in order to avoid unjustified loss of life among military personnel. Such practice was qualified as a flagrant violation of the Geneva Conventions.[2194]

2327. Speaking in an emergency debate in the House of Commons at the time of the Gulf crisis in 1990, the UK Prime Minister declared that "every norm of law, of diplomatic convention and of civilised behaviour has been offended by the way in which those citizens have been rounded up . . . and used as a human shield".[2195]

2328. In an emergency debate in the House of Lords at the time of the Gulf crisis in 1990, the UK Minister of State, FCO, declared that he was shocked by the Iraqi government's decision to use human shields, such practice being "abhorrent and a further breach of humanitarian law".[2196]

[2191] Report on the Practice of Rwanda, 1997, Chapter 1.7.
[2192] Senegal, Statement by the President, annexed to Letter dated 29 January 1991 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/22181, 31 January 1991, §§ 5–6.
[2193] Report on the Practice of Spain, 1998, Chapter 1.7, referring to Statement by the Minister of Foreign Affairs before Congress, 28 August 1990 and Press Conference by the Prime Minister on the Gulf War, 15 February 1991, Interview with the Minister of Foreign Affairs in a magazine, January/February 1991.
[2194] Tajikistan, Statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, annexed to Letter dated 9 January 1996 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/1996/95, 8 February 1996.
[2195] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Prime Minister, Hansard, 6 September 1990, Vol. 177, col. 739.
[2196] UK, House of Lords, Statement by the Minister of State, FCO, Hansard, 6 September 1990, Vol. 521, col. 1798.

2329. In 1990, during a debate in the UN Security Council, the UK described Iraq's illegal practices of using human shields as "acts which outrage international law and international opinion".[2197]

2330. In January 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, the UK recalled Article 13 GC III and declared that "there had also been news agency reports that the Iraqi authorities were considering sending captured POWs to strategic sites in Iraq. This would be a serious breach of Iraq's obligations under the Conventions." It added that "scrupulous compliance with the Convention was expected in respect to all British prisoners of war including British servicemen".[2198]

2331. On 21 January 1991, the UK Minister of Foreign Affairs summoned the Iraqi Ambassador to discuss Iraq's obligations under international law in the context of the Gulf War. After the meeting, the spokesperson for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, stated that the Minister:

> had raised press reports concerning the detention of POWs at strategic sites [and] had made it clear that if Iraq did this it would be an outrageous breach of the Geneva Conventions. The British Government would take the gravest view of any such breach. He also reminded the Iraqi Ambassador of the personal liability of those individuals who broke the Convention in this way.[2199]

2332. In 1991, during a debate in the House of Commons on the subject of the Gulf War, the UK Prime Minister stated that:

> There has been a reported threat to use captured airmen as human shields. Such action would be inhuman, illegal and totally contrary to the third Geneva convention. The convention expressly . . . prohibits the sending of a prisoner of war to an area where he may be exposed to fire, or his detention there, and forbids the use of the presence of prisoners of war to render points or areas immune from military operations. There is no doubt about Iraq's obligations under the Geneva convention.[2200]

2333. In 1950 and 1966, during the Korean and Vietnam wars respectively, the US protested against the use of civilians as human shields.[2201]

2334. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we also support the principle that the civilian population not be used to shield military objectives or operations from attack".[2202]

[2197] UK, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.2937, 18 August 1990, p. 21.
[2198] UK, Letter to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22117, 21 January 1991.
[2199] UK, Statement by FCO spokesperson, 21 January 1991, BYIL, Vol. 62, 1991, p. 680.
[2200] UK, House of Commons, Statement by the Prime Minister, Hansard, 21 January 1991, Vol. 184, col. 27.
[2201] US, Statement by the Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, 6 September 1950, reprinted in Marjorie Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Vol. 10, Department of State Publication 8367, Washington, D.C., 1968, pp. 139–141; Statement by the Secretary of Defence, Robert McNamara, 2 February 1966, reprinted in Marjorie Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Vol. 10, Department of State Publication 8367, Washington, D.C., 1968, pp. 426–428.
[2202] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International

2335. In 1990, during a debate in the UN Security Council concerning the crisis in the Gulf, the US stated that "it is contrary to international law and to all the norms of Arab hospitality to use guests as military shields".[2203]

2336. In 1991, in response to an ICRC Memorandum on the Applicability of IHL in the Gulf Region, the US emphasised the duty of a force which has control over a civilian population to ensure it is located in a safe place. It also stated that "in no case may a combatant force utilize individual civilians or the civilian population to shield a military objective from attack".[2204]

2337. In 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US protested against "the announcement of the intention of the Government of Iraq ... to use [prisoners of war] as human shields in flagrant violation of the Third Geneva Convention of 1949".[2205]

2338. In 1991, in a diplomatic note to Iraq concerning operations in the Gulf War, the US stated that:

> Baghdad radio has reported that the Government of Iraq intends to locate United States and other coalition POWs in Iraq at likely strategic targets of coalition forces. The United States strongly protests the Government of Iraq's threat to so endanger POWs.
> ...
> If the Government of Iraq places coalition POWs at military targets in Iraq, then the Government of Iraq will be in violation of the Third Geneva Convention, and Iraqi officials ... will have committed a serious war crime.[2206]

2339. In January 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, the US stated that "Baghdad radio has subsequently reported that the Government of Iraq intends to locate United States and other coalition POWs at strategic sites that may be subject to attack. This is a violation of the Geneva Conventions."[2207]

2340. In January 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, the US stated that "Iraqi authorities ... have reportedly used United States and other allied POWs as 'human shields' in direct violation of the Third Geneva Convention ... Such treatment is outrageous and Iraq must understand that such actions constitute war crimes."[2208]

Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 426.

[2203] US, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.2937, 18 August 1990, p. 12.

[2204] US, Message from the Department of the Army to the legal adviser of the US Army forces deployed in the Gulf, 11 January 1991, Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 1.4.

[2205] US, Letter dated 21 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22122, 21 January 1991.

[2206] US, Department of State, Diplomatic Note to Iraq, Washington, 21 January 1991, annexed to Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/2213022, January 1991, p. 4.

[2207] US, Letter dated 22 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22130, 22 January 1991, p. 2.

[2208] US, Letter dated 30 January 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22173, 30 January 1991, p. 2.

2341. In January 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, the US denounced Iraq's disregard for the norms of the Geneva Conventions, including the deliberate exposure of prisoners of war to the dangers of combat.[2209]
2342. In March 1991, in a letter to the President of the UN Security Council, the US listed some of the practices by which the Iraqi government put civilians at risk by "moving significant amounts of military weapons and equipment into civilian areas with the deliberate purpose of using innocent civilians and their homes as shields against attacks on legitimate military targets".[2210]
2343. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that "US and other hostages in Iraq, including civilians forcibly deported from Kuwait, were placed in or around military targets as 'human shields', in violation of Articles 28 and 38(4) [GC IV]".[2211] It further noted some specific Iraqi war crimes including "using POWs as a shield to render certain points immune from military operations, in violation of Article 23 GPW".[2212]
2344. In 1993, in its report on the protection of natural and cultural resources during times of war, the US Department of Defense stated that "in conflicts such as the Korean and Vietnam War, as well as the 1991 Persian Gulf War, the armed forces of the United States have faced opponents who have elected to use their civilian populations and civilian objects to shield military objectives from attack".[2213]
2345. In 2000, the US Ambassador at Large for War Crimes Issues stated that:

> Articles 51 and 58 of Protocol I quite properly articulate the principle that a party on the defensive cannot intentionally use civilian noncombatants or civilian property to shield military targets. In one sense, this is simply a refinement of the protected status that civilians and their property enjoy under the laws of armed conflict. The law has now been clear that the failure of one party to abide by the full range of the law of armed conflict does not relieve the other party of its legal obligations.[2214]

2346. In 1991, in a document entitled "Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia", the Ministry of Defence of the SFRY included the following example: "During the attack on the tanks of YPA in the Rozna Dolina, the Slovenian troops had

[2209] US, Letter dated 8 February 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22216, 13 February 1991.
[2210] US, Letter dated 5 March 1991 to the President of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/22341, 8 March 1991.
[2211] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 10 April 1992, pp. 618 and 634.
[2212] US, Department of Defense, Final Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 10 April 1992, p. 635.
[2213] US, Department of Defense, Report to Congress on International Policies and Procedures regarding the Protection of Natural and Cultural Resources during Times of War, 19 January 1993, p. 203.
[2214] US, David J. Scheffer, Ambassador at Large for War Crimes Issues, Address to I Corps Soldiers and Commanders Fort Lewis entitled "Ambassadors for Freedom", Washington, 4 May 2000, pp. 5–6.

brought in front of their units women and children, expecting quite rightly that YPA soldiers would not open fire on them".[2215]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2347. In a resolution adopted in 1992, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned the use of human shields by Iraq as an extremely serious violation of international law.[2216]

2348. In a resolution adopted in 1995, the UN Commission on Human Rights vigorously condemned the use of civilians as human shields on the front line in the conflict in the former Yugoslavia.[2217]

2349. In 1996, the UN Secretary-General reported that during the conflict in Liberia, UNOMIL was charged with carrying out investigations of major violations of human rights. In this context, UNOMIL confirmed that, during fighting in Tubmanburg on 30 December 1995, ULIMO-J fighters forced civilians out of the government hospital, where they had taken refuge, and used them as human shields to protect their position in the town. In addition, fighters generally prevented civilians from fleeing the town.[2218]

2350. In 1998, in a report on UNOMSIL in Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General referred to accounts of atrocities compiled by the human rights adviser (to the UN Secretary-General's Special Representative for Sierra Leone) and stated, inter alia, that "elements of the former junta . . . have used civilians as human shields in their military operations".[2219]

2351. The report pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council resolution 837 (1993) on the investigation into the 5 June 1993 attack on UN forces in Somalia noted that:

> No principle is more central to the humanitarian law of war than the obligation to respect the distinction between combatants and non-combatants. That principle is violated and criminal responsibility thereby incurred when organizations deliberately target civilians or when they use civilians as shields or otherwise demonstrate a wanton indifference to the protection of non-combatants.

The report went on to say that central principles such as this one were clearly a part of contemporary customary international law and were applicable as soon as "political ends are sought through military means".[2220]

[2215] SFRY (FRY), Ministry of Defence, Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia, July 1991, § 1(iv).
[2216] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1992/71, 5 March 1992, § 2(d).
[2217] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1995/89, 8 March 1995, § 3.
[2218] UN Secretary-General, Fifteenth progress report on UNOMIL, UN Doc. S/1996/47, 23 January 1996, § 24.
[2219] UN Secretary-General, First progress report on the UNOMSIL, UN Doc. S/1998/750, 12 August 1998, §§ 33 and 36.
[2220] Report pursuant to paragraph 5 of Security Council resolution 837 (1993) on the investigation into the 5 June 1993 attack on United Nations forces in Somalia conducted on behalf of the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/26351, 24 August 1993, Annex, §§ 8–9.

2352. In 1993, in a report on the situation of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights described how civilian detainees were used as human shields to protect the army's advance. According to the report, these civilian detainees were arrested and drafted into the army and forced to dig shelters on the front line. On 14 August 1993, the Special Rapporteur wrote to the government to express his abhorrence of this practice. The Special Rapporteur also reported that the Bosnian Serbs used civilian detainees as human shields, forcing them to stand as a "living wall" on the front.[2221]

Other International Organisations

2353. In a resolution adopted in 1991 in the context of the Gulf War, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe warned Iraq against the criminal use of prisoners of war as human shields in strategic sites, flagrantly violating GC III.[2222]

2354. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the situation of women and children in the former Yugoslavia, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged governments of the member and non-member States grouped together in the Council of Europe "to undertake to protect children from the scourge of war and to condemn the barbaric practice in recent armed conflicts of using women and children as . . . human shields".[2223]

2355. In 1993, in a report on the situation of refugees and displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia, the Rapporteur of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe considered "prisoners being ferried to the front line, for example for use as a human shield" as a war crime.[2224]

2356. In a declaration issued in August 1990, the 12 EC member States stated that the use of civilians as human shields was "particularly heinous as well as taken in contempt of the law of basic humanitarian principles".[2225]

2357. In 1990, during a debate in the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, Italy stated on behalf of the EC that Iraq's "decision to use certain foreign nationals as a human shield was illegal and morally repugnant".[2226]

2358. In 1991, in a statement on the situation of the POWs detained by Iraq, the EC and its member States expressed:

[2221] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Former Yugoslavia, Fifth periodic report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1994/47, 17 November 1993, §§ 36, 37, 39 and 84.

[2222] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 954, 29 January 1991, § 5.

[2223] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 1011, 28 September 1993, § 7(iii).

[2224] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Report on the situation of refugees and displaced persons in the former Yugoslavia, Doc. 6740, 19 January 1993, p. 19.

[2225] EC, Declaration on the situation of foreigners in Iraq and Kuwait, Paris, 21 August 1990, annexed to Letter dated 22 August 1990 from Italy to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/45/433-S/21590, 22 August 1990, § 2.

[2226] EC, Statement by Italy on behalf of the EC before the Third Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.3/45/SR.3, 8 October 1990, § 42.

their deep concern at the unscrupulous use of prisoners of war and at the intention announced by Iraq to concentrate them near military bases and targets. They consider these actions particularly odious because they are contrary to elementary respect for international law and humanitarian principles. They condemn these actions unreservedly.[2227]

2359. In a declaration on the Gulf crisis adopted in November 1990, the European Council denounced "the practice of holding foreign nationals as hostages and keeping some of them in strategic sites".[2228]

2360. In the Final Communiqué of its 36th Session in 1990, the GCC Ministerial Council urged "the Iraqi authorities to meet their established international obligations towards third-country nationals by providing them with appropriate protection, ensuring the safety of their lives and property and safeguarding them from the dangers of exposure to military operations".[2229]

2361. In a resolution adopted in August 1990, the Council of the League of Arab States urged the Iraqi authorities to preserve foreign civilians from the dangers of exposure to military operations.[2230]

2362. In a declaration on the Iraq–Kuwait conflict issued in 1990, the Nordic Foreign Ministers considered the relocation of foreign nationals in the vicinity of potential military targets as "a gross violation of international law and elementary humanitarian considerations". The declaration added that "such conduct displays such deep contempt for fundamental humanitarian principles and obligations under international law that it has aroused the abhorrence of the entire world".[2231]

International Conferences

2363. The Final Declaration adopted by the International Conference for the Protection of War Victims in 1993 stated that the participants refused to accept that "civilian populations should become more and more frequently the principal victims of hostilities and acts of violence perpetrated in the course of armed conflicts, for example where they are . . . used as human shields".[2232]

[2227] EC, Statement on the situation of prisoners of war, annexed to Letter dated 23 January 1991 from Luxembourg to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/45/940-S/22140, 23 January 1991, p. 2.

[2228] EC, Declaration on the Gulf crisis, annexed to Letter dated 30 October 1990 from Italy to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/45/700-S/21920, 1 November 1990, § 3.

[2229] GCC, Ministerial Council, 36th Session, Jeddah, 5–6 September 1990, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 6 September 1990 from Oman to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21719, 6 September 1990, p. 4.

[2230] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5039, The detention by Iraq of nationals of third countries, 31 August 1990, § 2.

[2231] Nordic Foreign Ministers, Declaration on the Iraq–Kuwait conflict, Molde, 12 September 1990, annexed to Letter dated 12 September 1990 from Norway to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/21751, 13 September 1990, § 6.

[2232] International Conference for the Protection of War Victims, Geneva, 30 August–1 September 1993, Final Declaration, § I (3), ILM, Vol. 33, 1994, p. 298.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2364. In the Karadžić and Mladić case before the ICTY in 1995, the accused were charged with grave breaches and violations of the laws and customs of war for having seized UN peacekeepers in the Pale area, having selected some of these hostages to use as "human shields" and having physically secured or otherwise held the peacekeepers against their will at potential NATO air targets, including ammunition bunkers, a radar site and a nearby communications centre in order to render these locations immune from further NATO air strikes.[2233] In its review of the indictment in 1996, the ICTY Trial Chamber upheld the charges and stated that these acts could "be characterised as war crimes (taking UNPROFOR soldiers as hostages and using them as human shields)". The Trial Chamber noted that civilians were used as human shields against other troops.[2234]

2365. In its General Comment on Article 6 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that "the Committee has noted that the right to life has been too often narrowly interpreted. The expression 'inherent right to life' cannot properly be understood in a restrictive manner, and the protection of this right requires that States adopt positive measures".[2235]

2366. In its judgement in Commission Nationale des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés v. Chad in 1999, the ACiHPR stated that:

> The national armed forces are participants in the civil war and there have been several instances in which the Government has failed to intervene to prevent the assassination and killing of specific individuals. Even where it cannot be proved that violations were committed by government agents, the government had a responsibility to secure the safety and the liberty of its citizens, and to conduct investigations into murders. Chad therefore is responsible for the violations of the [ACHPR].[2236]

2367. In its judgement in Demiray v. Turkey in 2000, the ECtHR stated that:

> The text of Article 2 [of the 1950 ECHR], read as a whole, demonstrates that it covers not only intentional killing, but also the situations where it is permitted to use force which may result, as an unintended outcome, in the deprivation of life. Article 2 may also imply in certain well-defined circumstances a positive obligation on the authorities to take preventive operational measures to protect an individual for whom they are responsible.[2237]

[2233] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, First Indictment, 24 July 1995, Counts 15–16.
[2234] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Review of the Indictments, 11 July 1996, §§ 13 and 89.
[2235] HRC, General Comment No. 6 (Article 6 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, § 5.
[2236] ACiHPR, Commission Nationale des Droits de l'Homme et des Libertés v. Chad, Judgement, 2 October 1995, § 22.
[2237] ECtHR, Demiray v. Turkey, Judgement, 21 November 2000, § 41.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2368. In a communication to the press in 1993, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Somalia not "to misuse civilians for military operations".[2238]
2369. In 1996, in a note on respect for IHL in an internal armed conflict, the ICRC stated that "the ICRC was informed on ... instances in which civilians, including women and children, were compelled to walk in front of the troops along the railway track in order to protect the soldiers from the mines possibly laid there" and that civilians "were summoned and compelled to spend the night around [a] military camp as a shield against possible ... attacks". After receiving a protest from the ICRC, the authorities issued instructions to immediately cease such practices.[2239]

VI. Other Practice

2370. No practice was found.

K. Enforced Disappearance

Note: For practice concerning the right of the families to know the fate of their relatives, see Chapter 36.

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
2371. The preamble to the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons states that the "forced disappearance of persons is an affront to the conscience of the Hemisphere and a grave and abominable offence against the inherent dignity of the human being". The Convention also states that "forced disappearance of persons violates numerous non-derogable and essential human rights" and reaffirms that the systematic practice of disappearance "constitutes a crime against humanity". The field of application of the Convention does not include armed conflicts of an international character that are governed by the Geneva Conventions and AP I.
2372. Article 7(1)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "enforced disappearance of persons" constitutes a crime against humanity.
2373. Article 7(2)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute defines enforced disappearance as:

> the arrest, detention or abduction of persons by, or with the authorization, support or acquiescence of, a State or a political organization, followed by a refusal to acknowledge that deprivation of freedom or to give information on the fate or whereabouts of those persons, with the intention of removing them from the protection of the law for a prolonged period of time.

[2238] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.
[2239] ICRC archive document.

2374. The preamble to the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance states that "any act of forced disappearance of a person constitutes a violation of the rules of international law guaranteeing the right to recognition as a person before the law, the right to liberty and security of the person".

2375. Article 1 of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that:

> For the purposes of this Convention, forced disappearance is considered to be the deprivation of a person's liberty, in whatever form or for whatever reason, brought about by agents of the State or by persons or groups of persons acting with the authorization, support or acquiescence of the State, followed by an absence of information, or refusal to acknowledge the deprivation of liberty or information, or concealment of the fate or whereabouts of the disappeared person.

2376. Article 2(1) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that "the perpetrator of and other participants in the offence of forced disappearance or of any constituent elements of the offence, as defined in Article 1 of this Convention, shall be punished".

2377. Article 3(1) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance states that "the systematic or massive practice of forced disappearance constitutes a crime against humanity".

2378. Article 4(1)(a) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides for the obligation of States parties "not to practise, permit or tolerate forced disappearance".

Other Instruments

2379. Article 1 of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance states that:

> 1. Any act of enforced disappearance is an offence to human dignity. It is condemned as a denial of the purposes of the Charter of the UN and as a grave and flagrant violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration on Human Rights and reaffirmed and developed in international instruments in this field.
> 2. Any act of enforced disappearance places the persons subjected thereto outside the protection of the law and inflicts severe suffering on them and their families. It constitutes a violation of the rules of international law guaranteeing, inter alia, the right to recognition as a person before the law, the right to liberty and security of the person and the right not to be subjected to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. It also violates or constitutes a grave threat to the right to life.

2380. Under Section III(2) of the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala, the government of Guatemala undertook to modify the Penal Code so that "enforced or involuntary disappearances . . . may be characterized as crimes of particular gravity and punished as such".

2381. Under Article 18(i) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "forced disappearance of persons" is a crime against humanity.
2382. Article 2(4) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote the right to life, especially against involuntary disappearances.
2383. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including crimes against humanity. According to Section 5(1)(i), "enforced disappearance of persons" constitutes a crime against humanity.
2384. Section 6(2)(i) of the 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 defines enforced disappearance as:

> the arrest, detention or abduction of persons by, or with the authorization, support or acquiescence of, a State or a political organization, followed by a refusal to acknowledge that deprivation of freedom or to give information on the fate or whereabouts of those persons, with the intention of removing them from the protection of the law for a prolonged period of time.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2385. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "it is prohibited to deprive [the civilian population] of its liberty (sequestration, enforced disappearances)".[2240]
2386. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces provides that "detention-disappearance" is a violation of human rights.[2241]
2387. Indonesia's Directive on Human Rights in Irian Jaya and Maluku instructs soldiers: "Do not be involved in or permit the disappearance of people".[2242]
2388. According to Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces, causing the disappearance of a detainee is one of the gravest violations of human rights.[2243]

National Legislation

2389. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "kidnapping followed by disappearance" constitutes a crime against humanity.[2244]

[2240] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 30.
[2241] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 18.
[2242] Indonesia, Directive on Human Rights in Irian Jaya and Maluku (1995), § 8.
[2243] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), p. 19.
[2244] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 392.

2390. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the crimes against humanity defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "enforced disappearances of persons".[2245]
2391. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code, in a provision entitled "Enforced disappearance of persons" provides for the punishment of "the arrest, detention or abduction of persons with the authorization, support or acquiescence of a State or a political organization, followed by a refusal to acknowledge that deprivation of liberty or to give information on the fate or whereabouts of those persons".[2246]
2392. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that the abduction followed by the disappearance of individuals is a crime against the security of mankind.[2247]
2393. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that enforced disappearance of persons is a crime against humanity.[2248]
2394. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the crimes against humanity defined in Article 7 of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[2249]
2395. Under Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act, "enforced disappearances", when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack, are crimes against humanity.[2250]
2396. El Salvador's Penal Code provides for the punishment of the crime of enforced disappearance.[2251]
2397. Under France's Penal Code, abduction of persons followed by their disappearance is a crime against humanity.[2252]
2398. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code, under the heading "Crimes against humanity", punishes anyone who:

causes a person's enforced disappearance, with the intention of removing him or her from the protection of the law for a prolonged period of time,

(a) by abducting that person on behalf of or with the approval of a State or political organisation, or by otherwise severely depriving such person of his or her physical liberty, followed by a failure to give immediately truthful information, upon inquiry, of that person's fate and whereabouts, or
(b) by refusing, on behalf of a State or political organisation or in contravention of a legal duty, to give information immediately on the fate and whereabouts

[2245] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.21.
[2246] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 110.
[2247] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 128.
[2248] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 3(i).
[2249] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2250] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 6.
[2251] El Salvador, Penal Code (1997), Article 364.
[2252] France, Penal Code (1994), Article 212(1).

of the person deprived of his or her physical liberty under the circumstances referred to under letter (a) above, or by giving false information thereon.[2253]

2399. Under Mali's Penal Code, "enforced disappearance" is a crime against humanity.[2254]

2400. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, "enforced disappearance of persons" is a crime against humanity, when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack.[2255] Enforced disappearance is defined as:

the arrest, detention or abduction of persons by, or with the authorisation, support or acquiescence of a State or a political organisation, followed by a refusal to acknowledge that deprivation of freedom or to give information on the fate or whereabouts of those persons, with the intention of removing them from the protection of the law for a prolonged period of time.[2256]

2401. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, "abduction of persons followed by their disappearance" is a crime against humanity.[2257]

2402. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, crimes against humanity include the crimes defined in Article 7(1)(i) and (2)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2258]

2403. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code punishes the carrying out or allowing of enforced disappearances of protected persons when committed by public agents, officials or private individuals.[2259]

2404. Paraguay's Penal Code provides for the punishment of the crime of enforced disappearance.[2260]

2405. Peru's Penal Code punishes the carrying out of acts of enforced disappearance perpetrated by government agents.[2261]

2406. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(i) and (2)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2262]

2407. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a crime against humanity as defined in Article 7(1)(i) and (2)(i) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2263]

[2253] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 7(1)(7).
[2254] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 29(i).
[2255] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 4(1)(i).
[2256] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 4(2)(d).
[2257] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.2.
[2258] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 10(2).
[2259] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Articles 457–457.
[2260] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 236.
[2261] Peru, Penal Code (1988), Article 320.
[2262] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[2263] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).

National Case-law

2408. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

2409. In September 1984, Argentina's National Commission concerning Missing Persons (CONADEP) released a report containing individual chapters for different categories of victims, including disappeared children.[2264]

2410. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on violations of IHL and human rights in the former Yugoslavia, Botswana noted that numerous specific instances of disappearances had been documented and that this confirmed beyond any doubt that massive violations of IHL and human rights had taken place.[2265]

2411. On 7 January 2001, the Chilean President announced that a special Chilean panel investigating crimes committed during the military regime of General Augusto Pinochet had established the fate of about 180 prisoners who went missing between 1973 and 1990. The President said that the fate of more than 600 other prisoners who disappeared without a trace remained unknown. The data was provided by the Civilian-Military Roundtable, an investigative panel created in 1999, which included representatives of the armed forces, police and various churches. The information was handed over to the Supreme Court to enable it to investigate the disappearances and take legal action.[2266]

2412. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on violations of IHL and human rights in the former Yugoslavia, Honduras expressed grave concern at the overwhelming evidence of a consistent pattern of large-scale disappearances.[2267]

2413. In 1995, during a debate in the UN Security Council on violations of IHL and human rights in the former Yugoslavia, Indonesia described the contents of the UN Secretary-General's report on the situation as "some of the most heinous acts committed against humanity since World War II" and made specific reference to large-scale disappearances.[2268]

2414. In 1994, the President of Sri Lanka established a Commission of Inquiry into Involuntary Removal or Disappearances of Persons in certain provinces since 1 January 1988. The Commission was charged with inquiring and reporting on whether any such removals or disappearances had actually occurred; whether there existed any credible material indicating who was responsible

[2264] Argentina, Report of the National Commission concerning Missing Persons (CONADEP), 20 September 1984, reprinted in Argentina: The Truth about the Disappeared, Review of the International Commission of Jurists, Vol. 33, 1984, p. 4.

[2265] Botswana, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3612, 21 December 1995, p. 9.

[2266] AFP, Chile: Special panel establishes the fate of 180 missing, 8 January 2001.

[2267] Honduras, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3612, 21 December 1995, p. 10.

[2268] Indonesia, Statement before the UN Security Council, UN Doc. S/PV.3612, 21 December 1995, p. 12.

and identifying the legal proceedings that could be taken against the persons held to be responsible; the measures necessary to prevent repetition of occurrences; and the relief that should be afforded to the families of those removed or disappeared.[2269]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2415. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on violations of IHL and human rights in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council condemned "in particular in the strongest possible terms the violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights ... as described in the [Secretary-General's report] ... and showing a consistent pattern of ... large-scale disappearances".[2270]

2416. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN General Assembly expressed "its outrage at the instances of massive and systematic violations of human rights and humanitarian law, including ... disappearances".[2271]

2417. In a resolution on Sudan adopted in 2000, the UN General Assembly expressed its deep concern at continuing serious violations of human rights and IHL by all parties, in particular the occurrence of cases of forced and involuntary disappearance.[2272]

2418. In a resolution adopted in 1979, ECOSOC asked the UN Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of disappeared persons as a matter of priority with a view to making appropriate recommendations. It also asked the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights to consider communications on disappeared persons.[2273]

2419. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the question of enforced disappearances, the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that "all acts of enforced disappearances are offences punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account their extreme seriousness under criminal law ... [and that] perpetrators should be prosecuted". The resolution also noted that the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances considered the Vienna Declaration adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 to be an encouraging development "especially in so far as it recognizes that the systematic practice of such acts is of the nature of a crime against humanity".[2274]

[2269] Sri Lanka, Executive order of the President of Sri Lanka on the Establishment of a Commission of Inquiry into Involuntary Removal or Disappearances of Persons in Western, Southern and Sabaragamuwa Provinces, Doc. No. SP/6/N/192/94, 30 November 1994.
[2270] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, § 2.
[2271] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, § 4.
[2272] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 2(ii).
[2273] ECOSOC, Res. 1979/38, 10 May 1979, § 3.
[2274] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/39, 4 March 1994, preamble and §§ 6 and 15.

2420. In a resolution adopted in 1994 on the situation of human rights in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission on Human Rights demanded "immediate, firm and resolute action by the international community to stop all human rights violations, including . . . enforced and involuntary disappearances".[2275]
2421. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned all violations of human rights and IHL during the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, in particular massive and systematic violations, including disappearances, and reaffirmed that "all persons who plan, commit or authorize such acts will be held personally responsible and accountable".[2276]
2422. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed its deep concern at "the increase in enforced or involuntary disappearances in various regions of the world and by the growing number of reports concerning harassment, ill-treatment and intimidation of witnesses of disappearances or relatives of persons who have disappeared". The Commission also welcomed "the fact that acts of enforced disappearance, as defined in the Rome Statute of the ICC, come within the jurisdiction of the Court as crimes against humanity" and reminded governments that "all acts of enforced or involuntary disappearance are crimes punishable by appropriate penalties which should take due account of their extreme seriousness under penal law".[2277]
2423. In 1981, following the discovery of secret graves in Argentina, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights recommended that the ILC be asked to include involuntary disappearances as a crime against humanity when drafting the Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind.[2278]
2424. In 1996, in a statement on the situation of human rights in Colombia, the Chairman of the UN Commission on Human Rights noted that the Commission remained deeply preoccupied by the large number of cases of disappearance as shown in the report of the Working Group on the matter.[2279]
2425. In 1995, in his second report, the Director of MINUGUA recommended that the government of Guatemala "join in the efforts already under way in the international community, at the level of the United Nations and the Organization of American States, to ensure the recognition of enforced disappearance and extra-legal execution as crimes against humanity".[2280]

Other International Organisations
2426. In a resolution adopted in 1980 on the situation of human rights in Latin America, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stated that

[2275] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/72, 9 March 1994, § 5.
[2276] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 1.
[2277] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/46, 23 April 2001, preamble and §§ 5–7.
[2278] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 15 (XXXIV), 10 September 1981, § 3.
[2279] UN Commission on Human Rights, Chairman's statement on the situation of human rights in Colombia, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.60, 23 April 1996, p. 12, § 4.
[2280] MINUGUA, Director, Second report, UN Doc. A/49/929, 29 June 1995, § 178.

it was "profoundly alarmed by the disappearance of large numbers of people in such countries [Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Guatemala and Cuba], including many children, pregnant women and foreign nationals" and invited the member countries of the Council of Europe to "promote, in a world context within the United Nations, the conclusion of an international convention designed to prevent and abolish disappearances, in particular by defining the guilt of those responsible for them".[2281]

2427. In a resolution adopted in 1981 on refugees from El Salvador, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe stated that it was:

> appalled by the dramatic situation of the population suffering from violent and ruthless confrontation in which violence, disappearances and murders follow one another, affecting not only the combatants, but also all those who, one way or another, are caught up in events which do not concern them.[2282]

2428. In a resolution adopted in 1982, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe protested "in particular against the recourse by governments to emergency legislation as a means of covering up their repressive methods and against the practices of forcible disappearance".[2283] > to support the preparation and adoption by the United Nations of a declaration setting forth the following principles:

2429. In a resolution on enforced disappearances adopted in 1984, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe considered that "the recognition of enforced disappearance as a crime against humanity is essential if it is to be prevented and its authors punished".[2284] The Assembly called on the governments of member States of the Council of Europe:

> i. Enforced disappearance is a crime against humanity which:
> 1. cannot be considered a political offence and is therefore subject to the extradition laws;
> 2. is not subject to limitation;
> 3. may not be covered by amnesty laws.[2285]

2430. In a resolution adopted in 1985, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe condemned "the systematic use by military governments and other totalitarian regimes in the subcontinent of brutal methods of repression, including . . . forced disappearances".[2286]

2431. In a resolution adopted in 1983 on missing persons in Argentina, the European Parliament urged Foreign Ministers to request from the Argentine [2281] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 722, 1 February 1980, §§ 5 and 11(e).

[2282] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 751, 15 May 1981, § 7.
[2283] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 774, 29 April 1982, § 5.
[2284] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 828, 26 September 1984, § 12.
[2285] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 828, 26 September 1984, § 13(a).
[2286] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 835, 30 January 1985, § 11.

government detailed information on the fate of those who had disappeared, including children.[2287]

2432. In a resolution adopted in 1993, the European Parliament condemned the many serious human rights abuses in the world, including the alarming number of unresolved politically motivated disappearances, many of which had been perpetrated by paramilitary groups.[2288]

International Conferences

2433. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on forced or involuntary disappearances. In its preamble, the resolution stated that such disappearances implied violations of fundamental human rights such as the right to life, freedom and personal safety, the right not to be submitted to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, the right not to be arbitrarily arrested or detained, and the right to a just and public trial. The resolution condemned "any action resulting in forced or involuntary disappearances, conducted or perpetrated by governments or with their connivance or consent" and recommended that the ICRC and the Central Tracing Agency take appropriate action to "reveal the fate of missing persons or bring their families relief".[2289]

2434. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on obtaining and transmitting personal data as a means of protection and of preventing disappearances in which it condemned "any act leading to the forced or involuntary disappearance of individuals or groups of individuals".[2290]

2435. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed its dismay and condemnation that "gross and systematic violations and situations that constitute serious obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights continue to occur in all parts of the world, [including] ... disappearances".[2291]

2436. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "strict orders are given to prevent all serious violations of international humanitarian law, including ... enforced disappearances ... and threats to carry out such actions".[2292]

[2287] European Parliament, Resolution on missing persons in Argentina, 13 October 1983, p. 132, § 1(c).

[2288] European Parliament, Resolution on Human Rights in the world and Community human rights policy for the years 1991/92, 26 April 1993, Article 4.

[2289] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. II.

[2290] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XIII, § 3.

[2291] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(30).

[2292] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(b).

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2437. In its judgement in the Kupreškić case in 2000, the ICTY, in defining the constituent offences of the category of "other inhumane acts" as crimes against humanity, held that:

Less broad parameters for the interpretation of "other inhumane acts" can instead be identified in international standards on human rights such as those laid down in the Universal Declaration on Human Rights of 1948 and the two United Nations Covenants on Human Rights of 1966. Drawing upon the various provisions of these texts, it is possible to identify a set of basic rights appertaining to human beings, the infringement of which may amount, depending on the accompanying circumstances, to a crime against humanity . . . Similarly, the expression at issue undoubtedly embraces . . . the enforced disappearance of persons (prohibited by General Assembly Resolution 47/133 of 18 December 1992 and the Inter-American Convention of 9 June 1994). Plainly, all these, and other similar acts, must be carried out in a systematic manner and on a large scale. In other words, they must be as serious as the other classes of crimes provided for in the other provisions of Article 5.[2293]

2438. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC held that:

In those provisions of the Covenant that are not listed in article 4, paragraph 2, there are elements that in the Committee's opinion cannot be made subject to lawful derogation under article 4. Some illustrative examples are presented below.

. . .

(b) The prohibitions against taking of hostages, abductions, or unacknowledged detention are not subject to derogation. The absolute nature of these prohibitions, even in times of emergency, is justified by their status as norms of general international law.[2294]

2439. In Quinteros v. Uruguay in 1983, the HRC found that Elena Quinteros was arrested, held in a military detention and subjected to torture, which constituted violations of Articles 7, 9 and 10(1) of the 1966 ICCPR. The Commission further held that:

With regard to the violations alleged by the author on her own behalf, the Committee notes that, the statement of the author that she was in Uruguay at the time of the incident regarding her daughter, was not contradicted by the State party. The Committee understands the anguish and stress caused to the mother by the disappearance of her daughter and by the continuing uncertainty concerning her fate and whereabouts. The author has the right to know what has happened to her daughter. In these respects, she too is a victim of the violations of the [1966 ICCPR] suffered by her daughter in particular, of article 7.[2295]

2440. In Lyashkevich v. Belarus in 2003, the HRC held that:

[2293] ICTY, Kupreškić case, Judgement, 14 January 2000, § 566.
[2294] HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, § 13(b).
[2295] HRC, Quinteros v. Uruguay, Views, 21 July 1983, §§ 12.3–14.

The Committee understands the continued anguish and mental stress caused to the author, as the mother of the condemned prisoner, by the persisting uncertainty of the circumstances that led to his execution, as well as the location of his gravesite. Complete secrecy surrounding the date of execution, and the place of burial and the refusal to hand over the body for burial have the effect of intimidating or punishing families by intentionally leaving them in a state of uncertainty and mental distress. The Committee considers that the authorities' initial failure to notify the author of the scheduled date for the execution of her son, and their subsequent persistent failure to notify her of the location of her son's grave amounts to inhuman treatment of the author, in violation of article 7 of the [1966 ICCPR].[2296]

2441. In 2001, in Mouvement Burkinabé des Droits de l'Homme et des Peuples v. Burkina Faso, the ACiHPR stated that:

Article 5 of the [ACHPR] guarantees respect for the dignity inherent in the human person and the recognition of his legal status. This text further prohibits all forms of exploitation and degradation of man, particularly slavery, slave trade, torture cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment and treatment. The guarantee of the physical integrity and security of the person is also enshrined in Article 6 of the African Charter, as well as in the Declaration on the Protection of all Persons against Forced Disappearances, adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations in Resolution 47/133 of 18th December 1992, which stipulates in article 1(2) that "any act leading to forced disappearance excludes the victim from the protection of the law and causes grave suffering to the victim and his family. It constitutes a violation of the rules of international law, especially those that guarantee to all the right to the recognition of their legal status, the right to freedom and security of their person and the right not be subjected to torture or any other inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment. It also violates the right to life or seriously imperils it". The disappearances of persons suspected or accused of plotting against the instituted authorities, including Mr. Guillaume Sessouma and a medical student, Dabo Boukary, arrested in May 1990 by the presidential guard and who have not been seen since then constitute a violation of the above-cited texts and principles.[2297]

2442. In Kurt v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR found that, following the disappearance of her son, the applicant was victim of inhuman treatment. The Court held that she . . . has been left with the anguish of knowing that her son had been detained and that there is a complete absence of official information as to his subsequent fate. This anguish has endured over a prolonged period of time.

134. Having regard to the circumstances described above as well as to the fact that the complainant was the mother of the victim of a human rights violation and herself the victim of the authorities' complacency in the face of her anguish and distress, the Court finds that the respondent State is in breach of Article 3 [of the 1950 ECHR] in respect of the applicant.[2298]

[2296] HRC, Lyashkevich v. Belarus, Views, 3 April 2003, § 9.2.
[2297] ACiHPR, Mouvement Burkinabé des Droits de l'Homme et des Peuples v. Burkina Faso, Decision, 23 April–7 May 2001, § 44.
[2298] ECtHR, Kurt v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 May 1998, §§ 133–134.

2443. In Timurtas v. Turkey in 2000, the ECtHR, considering the fact that the applicant was the father of the disappeared person, that he proceeded to make many enquiries in order to find out what had happened to his son, that the investigation lacked promptitude and efficiency, and that the applicant's anguish concerning his son's fate continued at the time of the judgement, found that the disappearance amounts to inhuman and degrading treatment contrary to Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR.[2299]

2444. In the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found that there had been a violation of Article 3 of the 1950 ECHR (inhuman treatment) in respect of the relatives of the Greek-Cypriot missing persons. The Court stated that:

> the question whether a family member of a "disappeared person" is a victim of treatment contrary to Article 3 [of the 1950 ECHR] will depend on the existence of special factors which give the suffering of the person concerned a dimension and character distinct from the emotional distress which may be regarded as inevitably caused to relatives of a victim of a serious human-rights violation. Relevant elements will include the proximity of the family tie-in that context, a certain weight will attach to the parent-child bond–, the particular circumstances of the relationship, the extent to which the family member witnessed the events in question, the involvement of the family member in the attempts to obtain information about the disappeared person and the way in which the authorities responded to those enquiries. The Court further recalls that the essence of such a violation does not so much lie in the fact of the "disappearance" of the family member but rather in the authorities' reactions and attitudes to the situation when it is brought to their attention. It is especially in respect of the latter that a relative may claim directly to be a victim of the authorities' conduct.[2300]

2445. In 1980, in a report on the situation of human rights in Argentina, the IACiHR recommended that the government of Argentina hand over children who had disappeared to their natural parents or other close family members.[2301] The Commission insisted that the government give urgent priority to the investigation of cases involving disappeared children who were apprehended with their parents or who were born during the time of their detention.[2302]

2446. In 1987, in a case concerning Peru, the IACiHR declared that the disappearance of a mayor following a charge of membership of the Sendero Luminoso ("Shining Path") constituted a "very serious violation of the right to personal liberty (Article 7) and of the right to life (Article 4) set forth in the American Convention on Human Rights".[2303]

2447. In 1988, in a case concerning El Salvador, the IACiHR "energetically condemned" the official practice of government security forces involving the forced detention and disappearance of individuals.[2304]

[2299] ECtHR, Timurtas v. Turkey, Judgement, 13 June 2000, §§ 96–98.
[2300] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, §§ 156–158.
[2301] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Argentina, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.49, 11 April 1980, p. 7.
[2302] IACiHR, Annual Report 1980–1981, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.54, 16 October 1981, p. 13.
[2303] IACiHR, Case 9466 (Peru), Resolution, 30 June 1987, p. 137, § 2.
[2304] IACiHR, Case 9844 (El Salvador), Resolution, 13 September 1988, p. 144, § 2.

2448. In 1988, in a case concerning Peru, the IACiHR informed the government of Peru that the forced disappearance of two persons, one by the Naval Infantry, the other by the Army Intelligence Service, constituted extremely serious violations of the right to personal freedom and the right to life.[2305]

2449. In 1999, in a report on the human rights situation in Colombia, the IACiHR noted that the forced disappearance of persons violated numerous rights protected under the 1969 ACHR and that the victims of forced disappearances were frequently civilians suspected of playing some role in the armed conflict. The IACiHR added that in any case, State agents were absolutely prohibited from causing the disappearance of combatants as well as civilians.[2306]

2450. In its judgement in the Velásquez Rodríguez case in 1988, the IACtHR stated that:

> 155. The forced disappearance of human beings is a multiple and continuous violation of many rights under the Convention that the States Parties are obligated to respect and guarantee. The kidnapping of a person is an arbitrary deprivation of liberty, an infringement of a detainee's right to be taken without delay before a judge and to invoke the appropriate procedures to review the legality of the arrest, all in violation of Article 7 of the Convention . . .
> 156. Moreover, prolonged isolation and deprivation of communication are in themselves cruel and inhuman treatment, harmful to the psychological and moral integrity of the person and a violation of the right of any detainee to respect for his inherent dignity as a human being. Such treatment, therefore, violates Article 5 of the Convention, which recognizes the right to the integrity of the person . . .
>
> In addition, investigations into the practice of disappearances and the testimony of victims who have regained their liberty show that those who are disappeared are often subjected to merciless treatment, including all types of indignities, torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, in violation of the right to physical integrity recognized in Article 5 of the Convention.
> 157. The practice of disappearances often involves secret execution without trial, followed by concealment of the body to eliminate any material evidence of the crime and to ensure the impunity of those responsible. This is a flagrant violation of the right to life, recognized in Article 4 of the Convention . . .
> 158. The practice of disappearances, in addition to directly violating many provisions of the Convention, such as those noted above, constitutes a radical breach of the treaty in that it shows a crass abandonment of the values which emanate from the concept of human dignity and of the most basic principles of the inter-American system and the Convention.[2307]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2451. No practice was found.

[2305] IACiHR, Case 9786 (Peru), Resolution, 14 September 1988, p. 35, § 2.
[2306] IACiHR, Third report on the human rights situation in Colombia, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.102, 26 February 1999, § 218.
[2307] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, §§ 155–158.

VI. Other Practice

2452. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "a state violates international law if, as a matter of state policy, it practices, encourages, or condones . . . (c) the murder or causing the disappearance of individuals".[2308]

2453. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "practising, permitting or tolerating the involuntary disappearance of individuals" shall remain prohibited.[2309]

Preventive measures

Note: For practice concerning accounting for the dead, see Chapter 35, section E. For practice concerning accounting for missing persons, see Chapter 36. For practice concerning recording and notification of personal details of persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, section F. For practice concerning ICRC access to persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, section G.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2454. Article I of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons provides that:

The State Parties . . . undertake . . . not to practice, permit, or tolerate the forced disappearance of persons, even in states of emergency or suspension of individual guarantees, . . . to cooperate with one another in helping to prevent, punish, and eliminate the forced disappearance of persons [and] to take legislative, administrative, judicial, and any other measures necessary to comply with the commitments undertaken in this Convention.

2455. Article XI of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons states that:

Every person deprived of liberty shall be held in an officially recognized place of detention and be brought before a competent judicial authority without delay . . . The States Parties shall establish and maintain official up-to-date registries of their detainees and . . . shall make them available to relatives, judges, attorneys, any other person having a legitimate interest, and other authorities.

[2308] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 702(c).

[2309] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Articles 3(2)(d) and 4(1), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, pp. 331 and 332.

Other Instruments

2456. Article 2(2) of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that "States shall act at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations to contribute by all means to the prevention and eradication of enforced disappearance".

2457. Article 3 of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that "each State shall take effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent and terminate acts of enforced disappearance in any territory under its jurisdiction".

2458. Article 8(1) of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that "no State shall expel, return (refouler) or extradite a person to another State where there are substantial grounds to believe that he would be in danger of enforced disappearance".

2459. Article 9(1) of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that:

> The right to a prompt and effective judicial remedy as a means of determining the whereabouts or state of health of persons deprived of their liberty and/or identifying the authority ordering or carry out the deprivation of liberty is required to prevent enforced disappearances under all circumstances.

2460. Article 10(1) and (3) of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that:

> Any person deprived of liberty shall be held in an officially recognized place of detention and, in conformity with national law, be brought before a judicial authority promptly after detention.
> ...
> An official up-to-date register of all persons deprived of their liberty shall be maintained in every place of detention.

2461. Article 12(2) of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that:

> Each State shall ... ensure strict supervision, including a clear chain of command, of all law enforcement officials responsible for apprehensions, arrests, detentions, custody, transfers and imprisonment, and of other officials authorized by law to use force and firearms.

2462. Article 20(1) of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that "States shall prevent and suppress the abduction of children of parents subjected to enforced disappearance and of children born during their mother's enforced disappearance".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2463. No practice was found.

National Legislation
2464. No practice was found.

National Case-law
2465. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
2466. In November 1991, Ecuador reported to the CAT that an international commission set up to look into the disappearance of two brothers had recommended, following a finding of negligence and cover-up in the investigation, that the necessary measures be adopted to prevent similar cases occurring in the future.[2310]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
2467. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, the UN Commission on Human Rights invited States:

> to take legislative, administrative, legal and other steps, including when a state of emergency has been declared, to take action at the national and regional levels and in cooperation with the United Nations, if appropriate through technical assistance, and to provide the Working Group with concrete information on the measures taken and the obstacles encountered in preventing enforced, involuntary or arbitrary disappearances and in giving effect to the principles set forth in the [1992] Declaration [on Enforced Disappearance].[2311]

2468. In April 1996, in a statement on the situation of human rights in Colombia, the Chairman of the UN Commission on Human Rights called for the urgent adoption of more effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent and terminate acts of enforced disappearance.[2312]
2469. In a resolution adopted in 1985, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights adopted a draft Declaration against Unacknowledged Detention which stated that:

> Governments shall, (a) disclose the identity, location and condition of all persons detained by members of their police, military or security authorities or others acting with their knowledge, together with the cause of such detention, and (b) seek to locate all other persons who have disappeared. In countries where legislation does not exist to this effect, steps shall be taken to enact such legislation as soon as possible.[2313]

[2310] CAT, Report of the Committee against Torture, New York, 1992, UN Doc. A/47/44, § 60.
[2311] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/46, 23 April 2001, preamble and § 7.
[2312] UN Commission on Human Rights, Chairman's statement on the situation of human rights in Colombia, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/SR.60, 23 April 1996, p. 12, § 4.
[2313] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1985/26, 29 August 1985, § 2.

Other International Organisations

2470. No practice was found.

International Conferences

2471. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on forced or involuntary disappearances in which it urged governments to "endeavour to prevent forced or involuntary disappearances and to cooperate with humanitarian organizations with a view to putting an end to that phenomenon".[2314]

2472. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on obtaining and transmitting personal data as a means of protection and of preventing disappearances in which it urged governments "to endeavour to prevent [forced or involuntary disappearances]".[2315]

2473. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 welcomed "the adoption by the General Assembly of the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance" and called upon all States "to take effective legislative, administrative, judicial or other measures to prevent, terminate and punish acts of enforced disappearances".[2316]

2474. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "strict orders are given to prevent all serious violations of international humanitarian law, including . . . enforced disappearances . . . and threats to carry out such actions".[2317]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2475. In its General Comment on Article 6 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that "States parties should . . . take specific and effective measures to prevent the disappearance of individuals, something which unfortunately has become all too frequent and leads too often to arbitrary deprivation of life".[2318]

2476. In Herrera Rubio v. Colombia in 1987, the HRC found that Colombia had violated the 1966 ICCPR, on the basis that it had failed to take appropriate measures to prevent the disappearance of two persons suspected of subversive activities.[2319]

[2314] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. II.
[2315] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. XIII, § 3.
[2316] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § II(62).
[2317] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(b).
[2318] HRC, General Comment No. 6 (Article 6 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, § 4.
[2319] HRC, Herrera Rubio v. Colombia, Views, 2 November 1987, p. 198, § 11.

2477. In its Annual Report 1980–1981, the IACiHR recommended that arrests only be made by competent and duly identified authorities and that detained persons be kept in premises designed for that purpose.[2320]

2478. In its doctrine concerning judicial guarantees and the right to personal liberty and security published in 1982, the IACiHR recommended that States take all necessary measures to prevent security forces from arresting and detaining persons without the knowledge of the competent authorities and the relatives of the prisoner. Among such measures, the Commission mentioned:

> Close vigilance by the high officials and by the Judicial Branch over the actions of the security forces; periodic visits to the places described as illegal detention centers and imposition of severe sanctions on members of these forces who give an evasive or false reply to requests for information about persons they have detained.[2321]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2479. According to the ICRC, in order to prevent disappearances, the identity of persons arrested must be established as soon as possible after their arrest/capture and a follow-up on their whereabouts must be carried out. Within the framework of its protection activities, the ICRC always registers and follows up on persons deprived of their liberty. The registration of persons deprived of their liberty and the repetition of visits enables the ICRC to keep track of the persons concerned until their release. In registering a person deprived of his/her liberty, the ICRC takes on the responsibility of monitoring that person's situation conscientiously. The regularity of follow-up visits is defined according to a particular person's protection needs. If, during a visit, a person turns out to be absent, the ICRC asks the authorities to explain his/her whereabouts.

VI. Other Practice

2480. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "unacknowledged detention" shall remain prohibited. It adds that "all persons deprived of their liberty shall be held in recognized places of detention".[2322]

[2320] IACiHR, Annual Report 1980–1981, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.54 Doc. 9 rev. 1, 16 October 1981, pp. 113 and 129; see also Report on the situation of human rights in Argentina, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.49 Doc. 19, 11 April 1980, p. 264, Report on the situation of human rights in Chile, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.66 Doc. 17, 9 September 1985, § 126 and Report on the situation of human rights in Peru, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83 Doc. 31, 12 March 1993, p. 60.

[2321] IACiHR, Doctrine concerning judicial guarantees and the right to personal liberty and security, reprinted in Ten years of activities (1971–1981), General Secretariat of the IACiHR, Washington, D.C., 1982, p. 319.

[2322] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Articles 3(2)(d) and 4(1), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, pp. 331 and 332.

Investigation of enforced disappearance

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2481. According to Article 12 of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Enforced Disappearance of Persons, "the States Parties shall give each other mutual assistance in the search for, identification, location, and return of minors who have been removed to another state or detained therein as a consequence of the forced disappearance of their parents or guardians".

2482. Article 4(1)(b) and (d) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance states that:

> The States parties undertake: . . . to investigate immediately and swiftly any complaint of forced disappearance and to inform the family of the disappeared person about his or her fate and whereabouts . . . and to cooperate with each other and with the United Nations to contribute to the . . . investigation, punishment and eradication of forced disappearance.

2483. Article 11 of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that:

> 2. Whenever there are grounds to believe that a forced disappearance has been committed, the State shall refer the matter to that authority without delay for such an investigation, even if there has been no formal complaint. No measure shall be taken to curtail or impede the investigation.
> 3. Each State Party shall ensure that the competent authority has the necessary powers and resources to conduct the investigation . . .
> . . .
> 7. It must be possible to conduct an investigation, in accordance with the procedures described above, for as long as the fate or whereabouts of the disappeared person has not been established with certainty.

Other Instruments

2484. Article 13 of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance provides that:

> 1. Each State shall ensure that any person having knowledge or a legitimate interest who alleges that a person has been subjected to enforced disappearance has the right to complain to a competent and independent State authority and to have that complaint promptly, thoroughly and impartially investigated by that authority. Whenever there are reasonable grounds to believe that an enforced disappearance has been committed, the State shall promptly refer the matter to that authority for such an investigation, even if there has been no formal complaint. No measure shall be taken to curtail or impede the investigation.
> 2. Each State shall ensure that the competent authority shall have the necessary powers and resources to conduct the investigation effectively, including powers to compel attendance of witnesses and production of relevant documents and to make immediate on-site visits.

3. Steps shall be taken to ensure that all involved in the investigation, including the complainant, counsel, witnesses and those conducting the investigation, are protected against ill-treatment, intimidation or reprisal.
4. The findings of such an investigation shall be made available upon request to all persons concerned, unless doing so would jeopardize an ongoing criminal investigation.
5. Steps shall be taken to ensure that any ill-treatment, intimidation or reprisal or any other form of interference on the occasion of the lodging of a complaint or during the investigation procedure is appropriately punished.
6. An investigation, in accordance with the procedures described above, should be able to be conducted for as long as the fate of the victim of enforced disappearance remains unclarified.

2485. Paragraph 2.1.1 of the Plan of Operation for the 1991 Joint Commission to Trace Missing Persons and Mortal Remains set up in the context of the former Yugoslavia states that "each party is responsible for compiling a list of its reported missing, as well as a file on each missing [person]". Paragraph 2.2.2 further adds that "the adverse party/parties shall take all possible measures (administrative steps and public appeals) to obtain information on the person reported missing".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2486. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "in time of peace, States have the obligation to take preventive measures", inter alia, to "create efficient mechanisms enabling disappeared persons to be located".[2323]

National Legislation

2487. No practice was found.

National Case-law

2488. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

2489. In September 1984, the National Commission concerning Missing Persons of Argentina (CONADEP) released a report, stressing that the objective was not to pass judgement but to inquire into the fate of the people who had disappeared.[2324]

2490. The main task of the Commission for Tracing Persons Missing in War Activities in the Republic of Croatia, established by the Croatian government in 1991, was to collect and process the information about civil and other persons missing from the territory of Croatia during the war. In 1993, a new Commission, the Commission for Detained and Missing Persons, replaced the one established in 1991, yet with the same task.[2325]

[2323] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 27.
[2324] Argentina, Report of the National Commission concerning Missing Persons (CONADEP), 20 September 1984, reprinted in Argentina: The truth about the disappeared, Review International Commission of Jurists, Vol. 33, December 1984, p. 2.

2491. In November 1991, Ecuador reported to the CAT that an international commission set up to look into the disappearance of two brothers had recommended, following a finding of negligence and cover-up in the investigation, that the necessary measures be adopted to guarantee an investigation of other cases in the future.[2326]

2492. In 1993, the government of the Philippines created a Task Force on Involuntary Disappearances to assist relatives of the disappeared in discovering the fate of their family members.[2327]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2493. In a resolution adopted in 1985, the UN General Assembly requested that the government of Guatemala investigate and clarify the fate of those who had disappeared.[2328]

2494. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights took note of efforts reported by the government of Sudan to begin investigation of cases of forced disappearance.[2329]

2495. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, the UN Commission on Human Rights reminded governments:

(a) that all acts of enforced or involuntary disappearance are crimes punishable by appropriate penalties which should take due account of their extreme seriousness under penal law;
(b) that they should ensure that their competent authorities proceed immediately to conduct impartial inquiries in all circumstances where there is reason to believe that an enforced disappearance has occurred in territory under their jurisdiction;
(c) that, if such belief is borne out, all the perpetrators of enforced or involuntary disappearances must be prosecuted.[2330]

[2325] Croatia, Directive on the Establishment and Functioning of the Commission for Tracing Persons Missing in War Activities in the Republic of Croatia, 1991; Regulations establishing the Commission for Detained and Missing Persons in Croatia, Official Gazette, No. 46, 17 May 1993.
[2326] CAT, Report of the Committee against Torture, New York, 1992, UN Doc. A/47/44, § 60.
[2327] Philippines, International Week of the Disappeared: The Desaparecidos in Our Midst, Philippine Human Rights Update, Vol. 10, No. 5, May–June 1996; Congress of the Republic of the Philippines, Res. Nos. 95–96, 22 July 1996.
[2328] UN General Assembly, Res. 40/140, 13 December 1985, Article 6.
[2329] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, preamble.
[2330] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/46, 23 April 2001, preamble and §§ 5–7.

2496. In 1998, the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances of the UN Commission on Human Rights reported that the President of the Philippines had in 1993 set up a Fact-Finding Committee on Involuntary Missing Persons.[2331]

Other International Organisations

2497. In a recommendation adopted in June 1979, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe expressed alarm at the dramatic situation of several hundred missing persons arrested or detained by the Chilean security forces, noted that the Chilean authorities had not given satisfactory explanations for the disappearances, nor ordered serious research into the fate of the missing persons, and regretted that the enquiries conducted by the tribunals had given no satisfactory results. It recommended that the Committee of Ministers invite member States to urge the Chilean authorities in the strongest terms to obtain information on the fate of the missing persons.[2332]

2498. In a resolution on enforced disappearances adopted in 1984, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged the "governments of countries where disappearances are reported to follow the example of Bolivia and Argentina, and to set up national inquiry commissions to investigate disappearances".[2333]

2499. In a resolution adopted in November 1982, the European Parliament called on the European Council and Foreign Ministers to make formal representations and vigorous protests to the Argentine government in order to pressure it to provide detailed information concerning the fate of those who had disappeared, particularly EC citizens.[2334]

2500. In a resolution adopted in May 1983, the European Parliament expressed concern that no complete clarification had yet been given about the whereabouts of all those who had disappeared in Argentina, in spite of urgent appeals by "world public opinion". It demanded a full explanation from the Argentine government concerning the fate of all individuals reported missing in Argentina.[2335]

2501. In a resolution adopted in October 1983, the European Parliament urged Foreign Ministers to request detailed information from the Argentine government about the fate of those who had disappeared.[2336]

International Conferences

2502. The 24th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1981 adopted a resolution on forced or involuntary disappearances which urged governments

[2331] UN Commission on Human Rights, Report of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1999/622, 8 December 1998, § 246.
[2332] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Rec. 868, 5 June 1979, p. 2.
[2333] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 828, 26 September 1984, § 9.
[2334] European Parliament, Resolution on the events in Argentina, 18 November 1982.
[2335] European Parliament, Resolution on the statement by the Argentine military junta concerning the fate of the persons who have disappeared since the last coup d'état, 19 May 1983, p. 117.
[2336] European Parliament, Resolution on persons missing in Argentina, 13 October 1983.

"to undertake and complete thorough inquiries into every case of disappearance occurring in their territory".[2337]

2503. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 reaffirmed that "it is the duty of all States, under any circumstances, to make investigations whenever there is reason to believe that an enforced disappearance has taken place on a territory under their jurisdiction and, if allegations are confirmed, to prosecute its perpetrators".[2338]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2504. In its General Comment on Article 6 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that "States should establish effective facilities and procedures to investigate thoroughly cases of missing and disappeared persons in circumstances which may involve a violation of the right to life".[2339]

2505. In Quinteros v. Uruguay in 1983, the HRC dealt with the case of Elena Quinteros who disappeared after having been arrested, held in a military detention and subjected to torture. The Commission stated that "the Government of Uruguay has a duty to conduct a full investigation into the matter".[2340]

2506. In Kurt v. Turkey in 1998, the ECtHR found that there was a violation of Article 13 of the 1950 ECHR. The Court held that:

> 124. . . . Article 5 [of the 1950 ECHR] must be seen as requiring the authorities to take effective measures to safeguard against the risk of disappearance and to conduct a prompt effective investigation into an arguable claim that a person has been taken into custody and has not been seen since.
>
> . . .
>
> 128. Having regard to these considerations, the Court concludes that the authorities have failed to offer any credible and substantiated explanation for the whereabouts and fate of the applicant son after he was detained in the village and that no meaningful investigation was conducted into the applicant insistence that he was in detention and that she was concerned for his life.
>
> . . .
>
> 140. In the instant case the applicant is complaining that she has been denied an "effective" remedy which would have shed light on the whereabouts of her son. She asserted in her petitions to the public prosecutor that he had been taken into custody and that she was concerned for his life since he had not been seen since 25 November 1993. In the view of the Court, where the relatives of a person have an arguable claim that the latter has disappeared at the hands of the authorities, the notion of an effective remedy for the purposes of Article 13 entails, in addition to the payment of compensation where appropriate, a thorough and effective investigation capable of leading to the identification and punishment of those responsible and including effective access for the relatives to the investigatory procedure . . . Seen in these terms, the requirements of Article 13 are broader than a Contracting State obligation

[2337] 24th International Conference of the Red Cross, Manila, 7–14 November 1981, Res. II.
[2338] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § II(62).
[2339] HRC, General Comment No. 6 (Article 6 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, § 4.
[2340] HRC, Quinteros v. Uruguay, Views, 21 July 1983, § 15.

under Article 5 to conduct an effective investigation into the disappearance of a person who has been shown to be under their control and for whose welfare they are accordingly responsible.[2341]

2507. In its judgement in Timurtas v. Turkey in 2000, the ECtHR found that the failure to conduct an effective investigation into a disappearance and the failure to grant the relatives effective access to the investigation was a violation of Article 13 of the 1950 ECHR.[2342]

2508. In its judgement in the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found that there had been a continuing violation of Article 2 of the 1950 ECHR (right to life) concerning the failure of the authorities of the respondent State to conduct an effective investigation into the whereabouts and fate of Greek-Cypriot missing persons who had disappeared in life-threatening circumstances. The Court also found a continuing violation of Article 5 ECHR (right to liberty and security) concerning the failure of the Turkish authorities to conduct an effective investigation into the whereabouts and fate of the Greek-Cypriot missing persons in respect of whom there was an arguable claim that they were in Turkish custody at the time of their disappearance.[2343]

2509. In its Annual Report 1980–1981, the IACiHR stated that the problem of disappearance after detention could not be considered as having been overcome "unless a clear accounting is provided, giving all the circumstances of the status and whereabouts of the persons who have disappeared".[2344]

2510. In its Annual Report 1987–1988, the IACiHR proposed an amendment to the Guatemalan habeas corpus procedure whereby, until the whereabouts of the missing person had been established, the magistrate was required to continue to investigate and the case could not be declared closed.[2345]

2511. In 1991, in a case concerning El Salvador, the IACiHR, finding that the investigations into two disappearances were insufficient, asked the Salvadoran government to accept the jurisdiction of the IACtHR in respect of these cases.[2346]

2512. In its judgement in the Velásquez Rodríguez case in 1988, the IACtHR found that:

The duty to investigate, like the duty to prevent, is not breached merely because the investigation does not produce a satisfactory result. Nevertheless, it must be undertaken in a serious manner and not as a mere formality preordained to be ineffective. An investigation must have an objective and be assumed by the [2341] ECtHR, Kurt v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 May 1998, §§ 124, 128 and 140.

[2342] ECtHR, Timurtas v. Turkey, Judgement, 13 June 2000, §§ 111–113.
[2343] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, §§ 136 and 150 .
[2344] IACiHR, Annual Report 1980–1981, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/VIII.54 Doc. 9 rev. 1, 16 October 1981, p. 12.
[2345] IACiHR, Annual Report 1987–1988, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.74 Doc. 10 rev. 1, 16 September 1988, p. 302.
[2346] IACiHR, Case 10.000 (El Salvador), Report, 13 February 1991, p. 99, § 2; Case 10.001 (El Salvador), Report, 13 February 1991, p. 103, § 2.

State as its own legal duty, not as a step taken by private interests that depends upon the initiative of the victim or his family or upon their offer of proof, without an effective search for the truth by the government. This is true regardless of what agent is eventually found responsible for the violation. Where the acts of private parties that violate the [1969 ACHR] are not seriously investigated, those parties are aided in a sense by the government, thereby making the State responsible on the international plane.

. . .

The duty to investigate facts of this type continues as long as there is uncertainty about the fate of the person who has disappeared. Even in the hypothetical case that those individually responsible for crimes of this type cannot be legally punished under certain circumstances, the State is obligated to use the means at its disposal to inform the relatives of the fate of the victims and, if they have been killed, the location of their remains.[2347]

2513. In its judgement in the Bámaca Velásquez case in 2002, the IACtHR found that the government of Guatemala had failed to investigate the disappearance of the victim and stated that:

Whenever a violation of human rights occurs, it is an obligation of the State to investigate the facts and punish those responsible, and such an obligation must be seriously respected and not be a mere formality.

. . .

The State has an obligation to investigate the facts that generate violations of the American Convention on Human Rights and identify and punish those responsible, as well as publicly reveal the results of such investigation.[2348]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2514. Following the Gulf War in 1991, a Tripartite Commission was established under ICRC auspices to trace people reported missing. The Commission is made up of representatives of Iraq, on the one hand, and of France, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, UK and US, on the other.

VI. Other Practice

2515. In 1994, in report on an insurrection in the Mexican state of Chiapas, the International Commission of Jurists noted that many involuntary disappearances might have occurred and that the competent State authorities and national NGOs were attempting to collect the relevant information.[2349]

[2347] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, §§ 177 and 181.

[2348] IACtHR, Bámaca Velásquez case, Judgement, 22 February 2002, §§ 74 and 106(2), see also §§ 73, 75 and 78.

[2349] International Commission of Jurists, Mexico: Preliminary report of the ICJ mission to Mexico with regard to the insurrection of indigenous peoples in Chiapas, 1–10 February 1994, Review of the International Commission of Jurists, No. 52, 1994, p. 14.

L. Deprivation of Liberty

Note: This section does not include practice on the detention of members of the armed forces as prisoners of war in accordance with Article 3 of the 1907 HR, Article 4(A) GC III and Article 44(1) AP I.

General

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2516. Article 42 GC IV provides that "the internment or placing in assigned residence of protected persons may be ordered only if the security of the Detaining Power makes it absolutely necessary".

2517. According to Article 147 GC IV, "unlawful confinement of a protected person" is a grave breach of this instrument.

2518. Article 5(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone has the right to liberty and security of person".

2519. Article 9(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "every one has the right to liberty and security of person. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention."

2520. Article 7(1) ACHR provides that "every person has the right to personal liberty and security". Article 7(3) provides that "no one shall be subject to arbitrary arrest or imprisonment".

2521. Article 6 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "every individual shall have the right to liberty and to the security of his person . . . In particular, no one may be arbitrarily arrested or detained."

2522. Article 37 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "no child shall be deprived of his or her liberty unlawfully or arbitrarily".

2523. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(a)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "unlawful confinement" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

2524. Article 55(1)(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "in respect of an investigation under this statute, a person . . . shall not be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention".

Other Instruments

2525. Article II(1)(c) of the 1945 Allied Control Council Law No. 10 provides that "imprisonment . . . or other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population" is a crime against humanity.

2526. Article 3 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person". Article 9 provides that "no one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest, detention or exile".

2527. According to Article I of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, "every Human Being has the right to . . . liberty and the security of his person".

2528. Article 20 of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "it is not permitted without legitimate reason to arrest an individual or to restrict his freedom".
2529. Article 2(g) of the 1993 ICTY Statute gives the Tribunal jurisdiction over grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, expressly including the unlawful confinement of civilians.
2530. Under Article 18(j) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, "arbitrary imprisonment" constitutes a crime against humanity.
2531. Article 20(a)(vii) 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "unlawful confinement of protected persons" is a war crime.
2532. Article 2(5) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote the right to liberty, particularly against unwarranted and unjustified arrest and detention, and to effectively avail of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus.
2533. Article 6 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone has the right to liberty and security of person".
2534. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(a)(vii), "unlawful confinement" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2535. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that illegal detention of protected persons is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and of AP I.[2350]
2536. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that unlawful confinement of a protected person is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and warrants the institution of criminal proceedings.[2351]
2537. Canada's LOAC Manual states that it is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions to "unlawfully confine a protected person".[2352]
2538. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "it is prohibited to deprive [the civilian population] of its liberty (sequestration, enforced disappearances)".[2353]
2539. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that "unlawful confinement" is a grave breach of IHL and a war crime.[2354]

[2350] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[2351] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1305(d).
[2352] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-3, § 14(b).
[2353] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 30.
[2354] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), Annex 9, p. 56.

2540. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces states that "any person has the right to liberty".[2355] It further provides that "lengthy detention" is a violation of human rights.[2356]
2541. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "illegal detention" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2357]
2542. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that "protected persons shall not be detained arbitrarily".[2358]
2543. Germany's Military Manual states that "illegal ... confinement of protected civilians" is a grave breach of IHL.[2359]
2544. Hungary's Military Manual states that "unlawful confinement" is a grave breach of IHL and a war crime.[2360]
2545. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "unlawful confinement" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[2361]
2546. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that unlawful confinement of a protected civilian is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2362]
2547. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that "any person has the right to individual liberty".[2363]
2548. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War states that "unlawful confinement" of persons protected under GC IV is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2364]
2549. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that "unlawful confinement of a protected person" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2365]
2550. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "illegal detention" of protected civilians is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2366]
2551. Uganda's National Resistance Army Statute provides for the punishment of a person subject to military law who unnecessarily detains any other person without bringing him or her to trial.[2367]
2552. The UK Military Manual provides that "unlawful confinement" of persons protected by GC IV is a grave breach of the Convention.[2368]

[2355] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 8.
[2356] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 18.
[2357] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[2358] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 5.
[2359] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[2360] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 90.
[2361] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. IX-5.
[2362] New Zealand, *Military Manual (*1992), § 1702(3)(b).
[2363] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 4.
[2364] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(c).
[2365] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 40.
[2366] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 192(1)(c).
[2367] Uganda, National Resistance Army Statute (1992), Article 45(b).
[2368] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(c).

2553. The US Field Manual states that "unlawful confinement of a protected person" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2369]

National Legislation

2554. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who illegally detains any protected person.[2370]

2555. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "unlawful . . . confinement of a protected person, or any other unlawful deprivation of freedom", during an armed conflict, constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[2371]

2556. Under Australia's War Crimes Act as amended, the internment of a person in a death camp or a slave labour camp is a serious war crime.[2372]

2557. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[2373]

2558. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "unlawful confinement" in international armed conflicts.[2374]

2559. Azerbaijans Criminal Code provides that "the arrest or deprivation of liberty of people contrary to the norms of international law" as well as "deprivation of procedural rights" is a war crime.[2375]

2560. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2376]

2561. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[2377]

2562. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that unlawful detention of a civilian person constitutes a crime under international law.[2378]

[2369] US, Field Manual (1956), § 502.
[2370] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[2371] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.2(4), see also Article 392 (illegal arrest as a crime against humanity).
[2372] Australia, War Crimes Act as amended (1945), Section 6.
[2373] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).
[2374] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, § 268.33.
[2375] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Articles 112 and 116.0.18.
[2376] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2377] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[2378] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(1)(6), see also Article 1(2)(5)(crime against humanity).

2563. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "illegal arrests and detention" are war crimes.[2379] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[2380]

2564. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[2381]

2565. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that ordering and committing unlawful detention is a war crime.[2382]

2566. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that illegal detention of persons protected by the Geneva Conventions is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[2383]

2567. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 ... which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[2384]

2568. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions] ... is guilty of an indictable offence".[2385]

2569. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[2386]

2570. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that "making indiscriminate mass arrests" constitutes a war crime.[2387]

2571. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on anyone who, during an armed conflict, carries out or orders the illegal detention of a protected person.[2388]

2572. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who, in the course of hostilities, without order from the authorities and except when the law so provides, arrests, detains or confines any person.[2389]

[2379] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(1).
[2380] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 433(1).
[2381] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[2382] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Article 412(c).
[2383] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(g) and (d), see also Article 3(e) (crimes against humanity).
[2384] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.
[2385] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[2386] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2387] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3(32).
[2388] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 149.
[2389] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 527.

2573. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2390]

2574. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2391]

2575. Under Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, organising, ordering or carrying out, in time of war or occupation, systematic detention of the civilian population in concentration camps constitutes a "crime against the civilian population".[2392]

2576. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that unlawful confinement of civilians is a war crime.[2393]

2577. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[2394]

2578. The Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador provides for the punishment of any civil servant or public employee, agent of the authorities or individual who detains or orders to detain lawfully or unlawfully a person and does not give any reason for detention.[2395] It also punishes the deprivation of liberty of civilians.[2396]

2579. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that illegal detention in concentration camps is a war crime against the civilian population.[2397]

2580. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, the unlawful confinement of a protected person constitutes a crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[2398]

2581. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code punishes anyone who, in connection with an international armed conflict, unlawfully holds a protected person as prisoner.[2399]

2582. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the

[2390] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[2391] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[2392] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(3).
[2393] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 158(1).
[2394] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).
[2395] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Articles entitled "Desparición forzada de personas" and "Desparición forzada cometida por particular", see also Article entitled "Desparición de personas permitida culposamente".
[2396] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Articles entitled "Privación de libertad de personas civiles".
[2397] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(c).
[2398] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(2)(f).
[2399] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(3)(1).

commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[2400]

2583. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are punishable offences.[2401]

2584. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code provides that the illegal detention of persons protected by GC IV is a war crime.[2402]

2585. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2403]

2586. Kenya's Constitution provides that "no person may be deprived of his personal liberty save as may be authorised by law".[2404]

2587. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, the illegal detention of civilian persons protected by GC IV is a war crime.[2405]

2588. Under Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches, the detention of a protected person contrary to the provisions of GC III and GC IV is a grave breach of these instruments.[2406]

2589. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2407]

2590. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[2408]

2591. Under Mali's Penal Code, "illegal detention of protected persons is a war crime".[2409]

2592. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2410]

2593. Moldova's Penal Code punishes "grave breaches of international humanitarian law committed during international and non-international armed conflicts".[2411]

[2400] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[2401] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).
[2402] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(7).
[2403] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[2404] Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 72.
[2405] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(7).
[2406] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1(7).
[2407] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[2408] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[2409] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(g), see also Article 29(e) (illegal imprisonment as a crime against humanity).
[2410] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[2411] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 391.

2594. Myanmar's Defence Service Act provides for the punishment of "any person subject to this law who . . . unnecessarily detains a person in arrest or confinement".[2412]

2595. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit in an international armed conflict grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including "unlawful confinement" of persons protected by the Geneva Conventions.[2413]

2596. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[2414]

2597. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2415]

2598. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of "illegal detention of civilians".[2416]

2599. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code punishes "anyone who, during an international or internal armed conflict, deprives civilian persons of their liberty".[2417]

2600. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, the illegal detention of a person protected by GC IV or the 1977 Additional Protocols is a war crime.[2418]

2601. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation, . . . whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2419]

2602. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2420]

2603. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[2421]

2604. Under Paraguay's Military Penal Code, abduction is a crime.[2422]

2605. Paraguay's Penal Code punishes anyone who, in violation of the international laws of war, armed conflict or military occupation, deprives members

[2412] Myanmar, Defence Services Act (1959), Section 49(a).
[2413] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 5(1)(g), see also Article 4(1)(e) (imprisonment or other severe deprivation of physical liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law as a crime against humanity).
[2414] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[2415] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[2416] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 58.
[2417] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 461.
[2418] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(6).
[2419] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[2420] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[2421] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).
[2422] Paraguay, Military Penal Code (1980), Articles 287–288.

of the civilian population, the wounded and sick or prisoners of war of their freedom.[2423]

2606. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of any person who, in violation of international law, deprives persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection of their liberty.[2424]

2607. Under Portugal's Penal Code, in times of war, armed conflict or occupation, prolonged and unjustified restriction of the liberty of the civilian population, the wounded and sick or prisoners of war is a war crime.[2425]

2608. Romania's Penal Code provides for the punishment of the illegal detention of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, members of civil medical services, the Red Cross or similar organisations, prisoners of war, or of all persons in the hands of the adverse party.[2426]

2609. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2427]

2610. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[2428]

2611. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that unlawful confinement of civilian persons is a war crime.[2429]

2612. Spain's Military Criminal Code states that the illegal detention of protected persons of a State with which Spain is at war is an offence against the laws and customs of war.[2430]

2613. Spain's Penal Code provides for the punishment of the "illegal detention of any protected person".[2431]

2614. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, . . . a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions . . . is guilty of an indictable offence".[2432]

2615. Sweden's Penal Code as amended provides that "depriving civilians of their liberty in contravention of international law" is a crime against international law.[2433]

[2423] Paraguay, Penal Code (1997), Article 320(5).
[2424] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 124.
[2425] Portugal, Penal Code (1996), Article 241(1)(g).
[2426] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358(d).
[2427] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[2428] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[2429] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(1).
[2430] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(6).
[2431] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611(4).
[2432] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1)(a).
[2433] Sweden, Penal Code as amended (1962), Article 22(6).

2616. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of the "unlawful confinement of protected persons".[2434]
2617. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2435]
2618. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2436]
2619. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[2437]
2620. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2438]
2621. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[2439]
2622. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[2440]
2623. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, the "unlawful detention of civilians" is a war crime.[2441]
2624. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "unlawful confinement of civilian persons is a war crime".[2442]
2625. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions".[2443]

National Case-law
2626. With regard to unlawful confinement, several post-Second World War trials found army officers and, occasionally, industrialists guilty of war crimes because of their participation in the wrongful internment of civilians, their illegal detention and internment under inhumane conditions. Examples are [2434] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(2)(f).

[2435] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[2436] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[2437] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[2438] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[2439] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[2440] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[2441] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 21(4).
[2442] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142(1).
[2443] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).

the Dutch Motomura case and the Notomi Sueo case before the Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar in 1947, the Rauter case before the Special Court at The Hague and Special Court of Cassation in 1948 and 1949, and the Zühlke case before the Special Court in Amsterdam and the Special Court of Cassation in 1948.[2444] Other examples are the Auschwitz and Belsen case before the UK Military Court at Lüneburg in 1945 and the Pohl case before the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg in 1947.[2445]

Other National Practice

2627. In 1988, the Human Rights Commission of the Philippines declared that all people residing in the Philippines had the right not to be detained unlawfully and when detained, they could not be held in secret detention places, in solitary confinement or incommunicado or be subjected to other similar forms of detention.[2446]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2628. In a number of resolutions on South Africa adopted between 1976 and 1985, the UN Security Council condemned mass arbitrary arrests and detentions and described the use of detention without trial as totally unacceptable.[2447]

2629. In two resolutions adopted in 1995, the UN Security Council expressed grave concern at and condemned in the strongest possible terms violations of IHL and human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including evidence of a consistent pattern of arbitrary detentions.[2448]

2630. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Security Council expressed deep concern at the deterioration in security and in the humanitarian situation in Burundi, including arbitrary detention.[2449]

2631. In a resolution adopted in 1974 on the protection of women and children in emergency and armed conflict, the UN General Assembly stated that

[2444] Netherlands, Temporary Court-Martial at Makassar, Motomura case, Judgement, 18 July 1947; Temporary Court Martial at Makassar, Notomi Sueo case, Judgement, 4 January 1947; Special Court (War Criminals) at The Hague, Rauter case, Judgement, 4 May 1948, and Special Court of Cassation, Rauter case, Judgement, 12 January 1949; Special Court in Amsterdam Zühlke case Judgement, 3 August 1948, and Special Court of Cassation, Zühlke case, Judgement, 6 December 1948.

[2445] UK, Military Court at Lüneberg, Auschwitz and Belsen case, Judgement, 17 November 1945; US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Pohl case Judgement, 3 November 1947.

[2446] UN Secretary-General, Report on information submitted by Governments pursuant to Sub-Commission Res. 7 (XXVII) of 20 August 1974, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1990/20, 19 July 1990, §§ 2, 11 and 15.

[2447] UN Security Council, Res. 392, 19 June 1976, preamble and § 1; Res. 417, 31 October 1977, preamble and § 3; Res. 473, 13 June 1980, preamble; Res. 556, 23 October 1984, preamble and § 2; Res. 560, 12 March 1985, § 2; Res. 569, 26 July 1985, preamble and § 2.

[2448] UN Security Council, Res. 1019, 9 November 1995, preamble; Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, preamble and § 2.

[2449] UN Security Council, Res. 1072, 30 August 1996, preamble.

all forms of repression "including imprisonment . . . shall be considered criminal".[2450]

2632. In several resolutions adopted between 1981 and 1985, the UN General Assembly condemned, on the basis of Articles 1 and 49 GC IV, the imprisonment of the mayors of towns in the Israeli-occupied territories as an "illegal measure".[2451]

2633. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and SFRY, the UN General Assembly expressed its grave concern at reports of "grave violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights . . . including . . . unlawful detention".[2452]

2634. In a resolution on Sudan adopted in 2000, the UN General Assembly expressed its deep concern at continuing serious violations of human rights and IHL by all parties, in particular arbitrary detention.[2453]

2635. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned "in the strongest terms all violations of human rights and [IHL] . . . in particular massive and systematic violations, including . . . detentions".[2454]

2636. In a resolution on Sudan adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all parties to the hostilities to protect all civilians from violations of human rights and IHL, including arbitrary detention.[2455]

2637. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights called for the immediate and unconditional release and safe return of all children abducted from northern Uganda and held by the LRA.[2456]

2638. In resolutions adopted in 1988 and 1989 on the situation in the Israeli-occupied territories, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, after reaffirming that GC IV was applicable, considered that the administrative detention of thousands of Palestinians was a war crime under international law.[2457]

Other International Organisations

2639. In the Final Communiqué of its 13th Session in 1992, the GCC Supreme Council reaffirmed its conviction that "arbitrary arrests represent a total

[2450] UN General Assembly, Res. 3318 (XXIX), 14 December 1974, § 5.
[2451] UN General Assembly, Res. 36/147 D, 16 December 1981, § 1; Res. 37/88 D, 10 December 1982, § 1; Res. 38/79 E, 15 December 1983, § 1; Res. 39/95, 14 December 1984, § 1; Res. 40/161, 16 December 1985, § 1.
[2452] UN General Assembly, Res. 50/193, 22 December 1995, preamble.
[2453] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 2(ii).
[2454] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 1.
[2455] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, § 15.
[2456] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/75, 22 April 1998, § 5.
[2457] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1988/10, 31 August 1988, § 3; Res. 1989/4, 31 August 1989, § 3.

contravention of all the Charters, Laws and Conventions of the International Community of Nations".[2458]

2640. In a resolution adopted in 1997, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to denounce Israel's persistent violations of human rights in the occupied areas of South Lebanon and the Western Beka', exemplified by the kidnapping and arbitrary imprisonment of civilians".[2459]

International Conferences

2641. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993 expressed dismay and condemnation that "gross and systematic violations and situations that constitute serious obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights continue to occur in all parts of the world, [including] . . . arbitrary detentions".[2460]

2642. The Final Declaration adopted by the African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict in 2002 expressed deep concern about "the number and expansion of conflicts in Africa" and alarm at "the spread of violence, in particular in the form of arbitrary detention . . . which seriously violate[s] the rules of International Humanitarian Law".[2461]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2643. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber considered the issue of legality of the confinement of civilians and held that:

> Clearly, internment is only permitted when absolutely necessary. Subversive activity carried on inside the territory of a party to the conflict, or actions which are of direct assistance to an opposing party, may threaten the security of the former, which may, therefore, intern people or place them in assigned residence if it has serious and legitimate reasons to think that they may seriously prejudice its security by means such as sabotage or espionage.
>
> . . .
>
> The mere fact that a person is a national of, or aligned with, an enemy party cannot be considered as threatening the security of the opposing party where he is living and is not, therefore, a valid reason for interning him or placing him in assigned residence. To justify recourse to such measures, the party must have good reason to think that the person concerned, by his activities, knowledge or qualifications, represents a real threat to its present or future security.[2462]

[2458] GCC, Supreme Council, 13th Session, Abu Dhabi, 21–23 December 1992, Final Communiqué, annexed to Letter dated 24 December 1992 from the UAE to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. A/47/845-S/25020, 30 December 1992, p. 6.

[2459] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 5635, 31 March 1997, § 1.

[2460] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14-25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I (30).

[2461] African Parliamentary Conference on International Humanitarian Law for the Protection of Civilians during Armed Conflict, Niamey, 18–20 February 2002, Final Declaration, preamble.

[2462] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 576–577.

The Tribunal also stated that:

The judicial or administrative body reviewing the decision of a party to a conflict to detain an individual must bear in mind that such measures of detention should only be taken if absolutely necessary for reasons of security. Thus, if these measures were inspired by other considerations, the reviewing body would be bound to vacate them. Clearly, the procedures established in Geneva Convention IV itself are a minimum and the fundamental consideration must be that no civilian should be kept in assigned residence or in an internment camp for a longer time than the security of the detaining party absolutely demands.
...
The confinement of civilians during armed conflict may be permissible in limited cases, but has in any event to be in compliance with the provisions of articles 42 and 43 of Geneva Convention IV.[2463]

The ICTY Trial Chamber found the accused guilty of grave breaches of GC IV (unlawful confinement of civilians).[2464]

2644. In its General Comment on Article 9 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that:

The Committee points out that paragraph 1 [of Article 9 of the 1966 ICCPR] is applicable to all deprivations of liberty, whether in criminal cases or in other cases such as, for example, mental illness, vagrancy, drug addiction, educational purposes, immigration control, etc.... and in particular the important guarantee laid down in paragraph 4, i.e. the right to control by a court of the legality of the detention, applies to all persons deprived of their liberty by arrest or detention. Furthermore, States parties have in accordance with article 2 (3) also to ensure that an effective remedy is provided in other cases in which an individual claims to be deprived of his liberty in violation of the Covenant.
...
Also if so-called preventive detention is used, for reasons of public security, it must be controlled by these same provisions, i.e. it must not be arbitrary, and must be based on grounds and procedures established by law (para. 1), information of the reasons must be given (para. 2) and court control of the detention must be available (para. 4) as well as compensation in the case of a breach (para. 5).[2465]

2645. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC held that:

States parties may in no circumstances invoke article 4 of the Covenant as justification for acting in violation of humanitarian law or peremptory norms of international law, for instance ... through arbitrary deprivations of liberty.
...
It is inherent in the protection of rights explicitly recognized as non-derogable in article 4, paragraph 2, that they must be secured by procedural guarantees, including, often, judicial guarantees. The provisions of the Covenant relating to procedural [2463] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, §§ 580 and 583.

[2464] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, Part IV.
[2465] HRC, General Comment No. 8 (Article 9 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, §§ 1 and 4.

safeguards may never be made subject to measures that would circumvent the protection of non-derogable rights.[2466]

2646. In 1980, in García Lanza de Netto v. Uruguay, the HRC held that there was a violation of Article 9(1) of the ICCPR "because [the applicants] were not released, in the case of Alcides Lanza Perdomo, for five months and, in the case of Beatriz Weismann de Lanza, for 10 months, after their sentences of imprisonment had been fully served".[2467]

2647. In 1980, in Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay, the HRC held that there was a violation of Article 9(1) ICCPR "because [the victim] was not released for six weeks after his release was ordered by the military judge".[2468]

2648. In its decision in Krishna Achutan v. Malawi in 1994, the ACiHPR held that detention of a political figure "at the pleasure of the Head of State", for 12 years without charge or trial, was "arbitrary" and violated the right to liberty and security of person. The fact that the victim had no access to the courts also violated Article 6 of the 1981 ACHPR.[2469]

2649. In its decision in Pagnoulle v. Cameroon in 1997 concerning the five-year imprisonment of a Cameroonian citizen by a military tribunal, the ACiHPR held that his continued detention and house arrest after a five-year sentence had been served was arbitrary and in violation of Article 6 of the 1981 ACHPR.[2470]

2650. In its decision in International Pen and Others v. Nigeria in 1998, the ACiHPR held that the detention of individuals under a decree that permitted the government "to arbitrarily hold people critical of the government for up to three months without having to explain themselves and without the opportunity for the complainant to challenge the arrest and detention before a court of law" was a violation of Article 6 of the 1981 ACHPR.[2471]

2651. In its decision in Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (148/96) in 1999, the ACiHPR stated that "(although it was unnecessary because they were found innocent of any crime), the soldiers were granted state pardons, but still not freed. This constitutes a further violation of Article 6 of the [ACHPR]".[2472]

2652. In the Lawless case in 1961 involving the detention of a suspected IRA activist for five months in a military detention camp under a statute that permitted the internment of persons engaged in activities prejudicial to the security of a State and public order, the ECtHR found no breach of Article 5 of the 1950 ECHR because of Ireland's derogation under Article 15 according to

[2466] HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, §§ 11 and 15.
[2467] HRC, García Lanza de Netto v. Uruguay, Views, 3 April 1980, § 16.
[2468] HRC, Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay, Views, 23 July 1980, § 18.
[2469] ACiHPR, Krishna Achutan v. Malawi, Decision, 25 October–30 November 1994.
[2470] ACiHPR, Pagnoulle v. Cameroon, Decision, 15–24 April 1997, § 17.
[2471] ACiHPR, International Pen and Others v. Nigeria, Decision, 22–31 October 1998.
[2472] ACiHPR, Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (148/96), Decision, 15 November 1999, § 16.

which it found that the detention was strictly required by the exigencies of the situation.[2473]

2653. In a resolution adopted in 1968 concerning the law applicable to emergency situations, the IACiHR declared that:

> The suspension of constitutional guarantees or state of siege is compatible with the system of representative democratic government only if enacted under the following conditions:
>
> . . .
>
> e. When it does not in any manner presuppose the suspension of the right to life, liberty or personal security, the right to protection against arbitrary detention . . .[2474]

2654. In its Annual Report 1980–1981, the IACiHR stated that the deprivation of personal liberty for prolonged or indefinite periods of time without due process or formal charges violated human rights. The Commission thus urged the member states of the OAS that "the detentions carried out under the state of emergency be for brief periods and always subject to review by the judiciary, in cases of abuses committed by the authorities who have ordered them".[2475]

2655. In its doctrine concerning judicial guarantees and the right to personal liberty and security published in 1982, the IACiHR stated that:

> No domestic or international legal norm justifies . . . the holding of detainees in prison for long and unspecified periods, . . . [especially] without any charges being brought against them for violation of the Law of National Security or another criminal law, and without their being brought to trial so that they might exercise the right to a fair trial and to due process of law.[2476]

2656. In its Annual Report 1983–1984, the IACiHR noted in relation to El Salvador that the 1969 ACHR "does not authorise suspension of the judicial guarantees necessary to protect fundamental rights" during emergency situations.[2477]

2657. In its judgement in the Velásquez Rodríguez case in 1988, the IACtHR found that:

> As a result of the disappearance, Manfredo Velásquez was the victim of an arbitrary detention, which deprived him of his physical liberty without legal cause and without a determination of the lawfulness of his detention by a judge or competent [2473] ECtHR, Lawless case, Judgement, 1 July 1961, §§ 35–37; see also Ireland v. UK, Judgement, 18 January 1978, §§ 214–220 and Brannigan and McBride v. UK, Judgement, 26 May 1993, §§ 43 and 66.

[2474] IACiHR, Resolution adopted at the 1968 Session, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.19 Doc. 32, Inter-American Yearbook on Human Rights, 1968, pp. 59–61.

[2475] IACiHR, Annual Report 1980–1981, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.54 Doc. 9 rev. 1, 16 October 1981, p. 119.

[2476] IACiHR, Doctrine concerning judicial guarantees and the right to personal liberty and security, reprinted in Ten years of activities (1971–1981), General Secretariat of the IACiHR, Washington, D.C., 1982, p. 337.

[2477] IACiHR, Annual Report 1983–1984, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.63 Doc. 10, 24 September 1984, p. 98.

tribunal. Those acts directly violate the right to personal liberty recognized by Article 7 of the [1969 ACHR] and are a violation imputable to Honduras of the duties to respect and ensure that right under Article 1(1).[2478]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2658. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "unlawful confinement" constitutes a grave breach of the law of war.[2479]

2659. The Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, adopted and promulgated by the American Law Institute in 1986, provides that "a state violates international law if, as a matter of state policy, it practices, encourages, or condones . . . (e) prolonged arbitrary detention".[2480]

2660. In a note on respect for IHL in an internal armed conflict, the ICRC recommended that "the commanding officers . . . exercise stronger control over the units in order to put an end to unofficial and unacknowledged detention".[2481]

2661. In a working paper on war crimes submitted in 1997 to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the war crime of "unlawful confinement of a protected person", when committed in an international armed conflict, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[2482]

VI. Other Practice

2662. No practice was found.

Deprivation of liberty in accordance with legal procedures

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2663. Article 78, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "decisions regarding such assigned residence or internment [for imperative reasons of security] shall be made according to a regular procedure to be prescribed by the Occupying Power in accordance with the provisions of the present Convention".

2664. Article 5(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "no one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases and in accordance with a procedure prescribed by law".

[2478] IACtHR, Velásquez Rodríguez case, Judgement, 29 July 1988, § 186.
[2479] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 776(e).
[2480] The American Law Institute, Restatement Third. Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, American Law Institute Publishers, St. Paul, 1987, § 702(e).
[2481] ICRC archive document.
[2482] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, § 1(a)(vi).

2665. Article 9(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "no one shall be deprived of his liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedures as are established by law".
2666. Article 7(2) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "no one shall be deprived of his physical liberty except for reasons and under the conditions established beforehand by the constitution of the State Party concerned or by law established pursuant thereto".
2667. Article 6 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "no one may be deprived of his freedom except for reasons and conditions previously laid down by law".
2668. Article 37 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "the arrest, detention or imprisonment of a child shall be in conformity with the law".
2669. Article 7(2) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides, concerning the custody of persons suspected of having committed a forced disappearance, that "such detention and measures shall be exercised in conformity with the legislation of that State, and may be continued only for the period necessary to enable any criminal or extradition proceedings to be instituted".
2670. Article 21(3) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that "arrest, detention or imprisonment shall only be carried out strictly in accordance with the provisions of the law and by the competent authorities or persons authorized for that purpose".
2671. Article 55(1)(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "in respect of an investigation under this statute, a person . . . shall not be deprived of his or her liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedures as are established in this Statute".

Other Instruments
2672. According to Article XXV of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, "no person may be deprived of his liberty except in the cases and according to the procedure established by pre-existing law".
2673. Principle 2 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "arrest, detention or imprisonment shall only be carried out strictly in accordance with the provisions of the law and by competent officials or persons authorized for that purpose".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
2674. According to the UK Military Manual, "the decisions regarding such assigned residence or internment [for imperative reasons of security] can only be made in accordance with a regular procedure to be prescribed by the Occupant in accordance with the obligations of [GC IV]".[2483]

National Legislation

2675. Countless pieces of national legislation require that arrest be carried out in accordance with legal procedures. For instance, India's Code of Criminal Procedure contains elaborate rules regarding arrest by law enforcement agencies and the protection of human rights while arrest is being executed.[2484]

2676. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2485]

2677. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 78 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[2486]

2678. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2487]

National Case-law

2679. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

2680. According to the Report on the Practice of Ethiopia, during the Mengistu regime in Ethiopia, unlawful detention and internment were widely practised. The report also states that "the law seems to allow deprivation of one's liberty on mere suspicion. The individual may also lose his liberty in circumstances where formal arrest is not justified for lack of evidence."[2488]

2681. In 1969, in the context of derogation under Article 15 of the 1950 ECHR, Greece informed the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe that it was beginning to restore application of the Constitution. The Constitution considered personal liberty to be inviolable, so that no one should be arrested or detained without a guarantee of constitutional forms and procedures. However, Greece added that this did not apply to persons charged with crimes against public order, who could be arrested without formalities if necessary.[2489]

[2483] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 555.
[2484] India, Code of Criminal Procedure (1973), Sections 41–60.
[2485] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2486] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2487] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[2488] Report on the Practice of Ethiopia, 1998, Chapter 5.3 and 5.7.
[2489] Greece, Letter to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe, Doc. 2199, 4 October 1969, § A.

2682. In a memorandum order issued in 1988, the President of the Philippines required the armed and police forces to strictly comply with the required legal processes in all cases of arrest and detention, for which they were given specific instructions.[2490]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

2683. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2684. In McVeigh, O'Neill and Evans v. UK in 1981, the ECiHR did not condemn the UK Arrest under Prevention of Terrorism Act, which allows detention based on the "examining officer's appreciation" of the information available to him.[2491]

2685. In its judgement in Fox, Campbell and Hartley in 1990, the ECtHR, when considering the notion of "reasonable suspicion" when conducting an arrest of a person, stated that:

> The "reasonableness" of the suspicion on which an arrest must be based forms an essential part of the safeguard against arbitrary arrest and detention which is laid down in Article 5 § 1 (c) . . . The Court agrees . . . that having a "reasonable suspicion" presupposes the existence of facts or information which would satisfy an objective observer that the person concerned may have committed the offence. What may be regarded as "reasonable" will however depend upon all the circumstances.
> . . .
> As the Government pointed out, in view of the difficulties inherent in the investigation and prosecution of terrorist-type offences in Northern Ireland, the "reasonableness" of the suspicion justifying such arrests cannot always be judged according to the same standards as are applied in dealing with conventional crime. Nevertheless, the exigencies of dealing with terrorist crime cannot justify stretching the notion of "reasonableness" to the point where the essence of the safeguard secured by Article 5 § 1 (c) (art. 5-1-c) is impaired.[2492]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2686. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

2687. No practice was found.

[2490] Philippines, Memorandum Order 209, 13 December 1988, § 1.
[2491] ECiHR, McVeigh, O'Neill and Evans v. UK, Report, 18 March 1981, §§ 195 and 205.
[2492] ECtHR, Fox, Campbell and Hartley, Judgement, 30 August 1990, § 32.

Prompt information of the reasons for deprivation of liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2688. Article 41, first paragraph, GC III provides that "in every camp the text of the present Convention and its Annexes and the contents of any special agreement provided for in Article 6, shall be posted, in the prisoners' own language, at places where all may read them".

2689. Article 99, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "the text of the present Convention and the texts of special agreements concluded under the said Convention shall be posted inside the place of internment, in a language which the internees understand, or shall be in the possession of the Internee Committee".

2690. According to Article 5(2) of the 1950 ECHR, "everyone who is arrested shall be informed promptly, in a language which he understands, of the reasons for his arrest and of any charge against him".

2691. Article 9(2) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "anyone who is arrested shall be informed, at the time of the arrest, of the reasons for his arrest and shall be promptly informed of any charges against him".

2692. Article 7(4) of the 1969 ACHR states that "anyone who is detained shall be informed of the reasons for his detention and shall be promptly notified of the charge or charges against him".

2693. Article 75(3) AP I provides that "any person arrested, detained or interned for actions related to the armed conflict shall be informed promptly, in a language he understands, of the reasons why these measures have been taken". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2493]

Other Instruments

2694. Principle 10 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "anyone who is arrested shall be informed at the time of his arrest of the reasons for his arrest and shall be promptly informed of any charges against him".

2695. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

2696. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

[2493] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2697. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "any person arrested, detained or interned for actions related to the armed conflict shall be informed promptly, in a language that person understands, of the reasons why these measures have been taken".[2494]

2698. India's Police Manual states that the reasons for a detention order should be communicated as soon as possible, but ordinarily not later than five days after arrest, and in exceptional circumstances, for reasons to be recorded in writing, not later than ten days. For Punjab and Chandigarh, this period was extended to 15 days.[2495]

2699. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "any person arrested, detained or interned for actions related to the armed conflict shall be informed promptly, in a language he understands, of the reasons why these measures have been taken".[2496]

2700. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that any person arrested, detained or interned for actions related to the armed conflict shall be informed promptly, in a language he or she understands, of the reasons why these measures have been taken. The manual considers Article 75 AP I to be part of customary international law.[2497]

2701. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "every person arrested, detained or interned for acts committed in connection with the conflict shall be informed, without delay, in a language he or she understands, of the reasons why the measures have been taken".[2498]

National Legislation

2702. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for prompt information of the reasons of detention. For instance, preventive detention is permitted by India's Constitution subject to a number of safeguards, namely that detainees have a right to be informed of the reasons for the detention order.[2499]

2703. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 75(3) AP I, is a punishable offence.[2500]

2704. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the

[2494] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-8, § 64.
[2495] India, Police Manual (1986), pp. 21, 27 and 29.
[2496] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(3).
[2497] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[2498] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 175.
[2499] India, Constitution (1950), Article 22.
[2500] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2501]

2705. Spain's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who in the case of an armed conflict, fails to fulfil his or her obligation to inform protected persons clearly and without delay about their situation.[2502]

2706. The Revised Edition of Zimbabwe's Constitution provides that all arrested persons have the right to be informed of the reasons for their detention as soon as reasonably practicable after the commencement of detention, and in any case not later than seven days thereafter.[2503]

National Case-law

2707. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

2708. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[2504]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

2709. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2710. In its General Comment on Article 9 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that "if so-called preventive detention is used, for reasons of public security, it must be controlled by these same provisions, i.e. . . . information of the reasons must be given (para. 2)".[2505]

2711. In numerous cases, the HRC has found a violation of Article 9(2) of the 1966 ICCPR because no or insufficient information was given on the reasons of detention, or the information was not given promptly.[2506]

2712. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following: "Persons who are arrested shall be informed at the time of arrest, in a language

[2501] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[2502] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 612(3).
[2503] Zimbabwe, Constitution Revised Edition (1996), Section 2, Schedule 2.
[2504] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[2505] HRC, General Comment No. 8 (Article 9 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, § 4.
[2506] See, e.g., HRC, Hernández Valentini de Bazzano v. Uruguay, Views, 15 August 1979, § 10, see also Buffo Carballal v. Uruguay, Views, 27 March 1981, § 13; Pietraroia v. Uruguay, Views, 27 March 1981, § 14; Drescher Caldas v. Uruguay, Views, 21 July 1983, §§ 13.2 and 14; Luyeye Magana ex-Philibert v. Zaire, Views, 21 July 1983, § 8; Hiber Conteris v. Uruguay, Views, 17 July 1985, § 10; Kelly v. Jamaica, Views, 8 April 1991, § 5(8); Harward v. Norway, Views, 15 July 1994, § 9(4)–(5).

which they understand, of the reason for their arrest and shall be informed promptly of any charges against them."[2507]

2713. In its admissibility decision in X v. Austria in 1975, the ECiHR held that all persons arrested shall be informed of the reasons for the arrest and notified of the charges against them in a language they understand.[2508]

2714. In Fox, Campbell and Hartley in 1990, the ECtHR decided that an applicant must be told in "simple, non-technical language that he can understand, the essential legal and factual grounds for his arrest, so as to be able, if he sees fit, to apply to a court to challenge its lawfulness".[2509]

2715. In Van der Leer v. Netherlands in 1990, dealing with a case in which a court authorised the applicant's confinement for six months without holding any hearings and in which the applicant was not informed for ten days of the confinement order and the reasons for it, the ECtHR held the delay to be unacceptable and in breach of Article 5 of the 1950 ECHR.[2510]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2716. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "any person arrested, detained or interned for actions related to the armed conflict shall be informed promptly in a language understandable to him of the reasons for the measure taken".[2511]

2717. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states that:

> Legal practice in most countries recognises preventive custody, i.e., a period during which the police or the public prosecutor can detain a person in custody without having to charge him with a specific accusation; in peacetime this period is no more than two or three days, but sometimes it is longer for particular offences (acts of terrorism) and in time of armed conflict it is often prolonged. Useful indications can be found in national legislation. In any case, even in time of armed conflict, detaining a person for longer than, say, ten days without informing the detainee of the reasons for his detention would be contrary to [Article 75(3) AP I].[2512]

VI. Other Practice

2718. No practice was found.

[2507] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(b).
[2508] ECiHR, X v. Austria, Admissibility Decision, 29 May 1975, p. 70.
[2509] ECtHR, Fox, Campbell and Hartley, Judgement, 30 August 1990, § 40.
[2510] ECtHR, Van der Leer v. Netherlands, Judgement, 21 February 1990, § 31.
[2511] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 201.
[2512] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 3073.

Prompt appearance before a judge or judicial officer

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2719. Article 5(3) of the 1950 ECHR provides that:

> Everyone lawfully arrested or detained [for the purpose of being brought before the competent legal authority on reasonable suspicion of having committed an offence or when it is reasonably considered necessary to prevent his committing an offence or fleeing after having done so] shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power.

2720. Article 9(3) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "anyone arrested or detained on a criminal charge shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power".

2721. Article 7(5) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "any person detained shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power".

2722. Article XI of the 1994 Inter-American Convention on the Forced Disappearance of Persons states that "every person deprived of liberty shall be . . . brought before a competent judicial authority without delay, in accordance with applicable domestic law".

2723. Article 59(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> A person arrested shall be brought promptly before the competent judicial authority in the custodial State which shall determine, in accordance with the law of that State, that:
> (a) The warrant applies to that person;
> (b) The person has been arrested in accordance with the proper process; and > (c) The person's rights have been respected.

Other Instruments

2724. Principle 11 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "a person shall not be kept in detention without being given an effective opportunity to be heard promptly by a judicial or other authority".

2725. Principle 37 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "a person detained on a criminal charge shall be brought before a judicial or other authority provided by law promptly after his arrest".

2726. According to Article 10 of the 1992 UN Declaration on Enforced Disappearance, "any person deprived of liberty shall be held in an officially recognized place of detention and, in conformity with national law, be brought before a judicial authority promptly after detention".

2727. Article 22(1) of the 1998 Draft Convention on Forced Disappearance provides that "States Parties guarantee that any person deprived of liberty shall . . . be brought before a judge or other competent judicial authority without delay, who will also be informed of the place where the person is being deprived of liberty".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2728. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "persons in preventive detention shall be brought before a judge in the 36 hours following [arrest]".[2513]

National Legislation

2729. Countless pieces of domestic legislation contain provisions on the right to be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power. For instance, India's Constitution provides fundamental guarantees for arrested persons, including the right to be produced before a magistrate.[2514]

2730. Myanmar's Defence Service Act provides for the punishment of "any person subject to this law who . . . fails to bring [the case of a detained or confined person] before the proper authority for investigation".[2515]

2731. Uganda's National Resistance Army Statute provides for the punishment of the person subject to military law who fails to bring a detained person's case before the proper authority for investigation.[2516]

National Case-law

2732. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

2733. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

2734. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2735. In its General Comment on Article 9 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that:

Paragraph 3 of article 9 requires that in criminal cases any person arrested or detained has to be brought "promptly" before a judge or other officer authorized by

[2513] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 10.
[2514] India, Constitution (1950), Article 22.
[2515] Myanmar, Defence Services Act (1959), Section 49(a).
[2516] Uganda, National Resistance Army Statute (1992), Article 45(b).

law to exercise judicial power. More precise time-limits are fixed by law in most States parties and, in the view of the Committee, delays must not exceed a few days . . .

Another matter is the total length of detention pending trial. In certain categories of criminal cases in some countries this matter has caused some concern within the Committee, and members have questioned whether their practices have been in conformity with the entitlement "to trial within a reasonable time or to release" under paragraph 3. Pre-trial detention should be an exception and as short as possible.[2517]

2736. On numerous occasions, the HRC has found violations of Article 9(3) of the 1966 ICCPR because of the delay in bringing arrested persons before a judge.[2518] In Martínez Portorreal v. the Dominican Republic in 1987, however, the HRC ruled that 50 hours of detention did not justify a finding as to the alleged violation of Article 9(3) ICCPR.[2519]

2737. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following: "Persons arrested or detained shall be brought promptly before a judge or other officer authorised by law to exercise judicial power and shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or be released."[2520]

2738. In its judgement in Schiesser v. Switzerland in 1979, the ECtHR held that the function of the judicial officer must be that of "reviewing the circumstances militating for and against detention, of deciding, by reference to legal criteria, whether there are reasons to justify detention and of ordering release if there are no such reasons".[2521]

2739. In its judgement in the De Jong, Baljet and Van den Brink case in 1984, the ECtHR held that detention without access to a court for a period exceeding six days was incompatible with Article 5(4) of the 1950 ECHR, which required that "the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily".[2522]

2740. In its judgement in the Brogan and Others case in 1988, the ECtHR held that the delay in bringing the arrested person before a judge under Article 5(3) must not exceed three days. It stated that while it accepted that the context of terrorism in Northern Ireland may, subject to the existence of adequate safeguards, have the effect of prolonging the period during which the authorities could lawfully keep persons suspected of serious terrorist offences in custody before bringing them before a judge, the circumstances could not justify dispensing with prompt judicial control altogether. The flexibility in the

[2517] HRC, General Comment No. 8 (Article 9 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, §§ 2 and 3.
[2518] See, e.g., HRC, García Lanza de Netto v. Uruguay, Views, 3 April 1980, § 8; Buffo Carballal v. Uruguay, Views, 27 March 1981, § 13; Lafuente Peñarrieta and Others v. Bolivia, Views, 2 November 1987, § 16; Terán Jijón v. Ecuador, Views, 26 March 1992, § 5(3); Stephens v. Jamaica, Views, 18 October 1995, § 9(6); P. Grant v. Jamaica, Views, 22 March 1996, § 8(2).
[2519] HRC, Martínez Portorreal v. the Dominican Republic, Views, 5 November 1987, § 10(2).
[2520] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(c).
[2521] ECtHR, Schiesser v. Switzerland, Judgement, 4 December 1979, § 31.
[2522] ECtHR, De Jong, Baljet and Van den Brink case, Judgement, 22 May 1984, § 58.

interpretation of "promptness" in Article 5(3) of the 1950 ECHR was very limited according to the Court. To attach such importance to the special features of the case as to justify so lengthy a period of detention without appearance before a judicial officer would be an unacceptably wide interpretation of the plain meaning of the word "promptly", according to the Court.[2523]

2741. In its judgement in Brannigan and McBride v. UK in 1993, the ECtHR held that the UK had not exceeded its margin of appreciation by derogating from its obligations under Article 5 of the 1950 ECHR to the extent that individuals suspected of terrorist offences were allowed to be held for up to seven days without judicial control because there were real guarantees against abuse and incommunicado detention.[2524]

2742. In its judgement in Aksoy v. Turkey in 1996, concerning the derogation by Turkey from numerous articles of the of the 1950 ECHR, including Article 5, on account of the threat to national security in the south-east of the country, the ECtHR held that it was for each contracting State to determine whether life was threatened by a public emergency and how far it was necessary to go in attempting to overcome the emergency. However, the national authorities did not enjoy an unlimited discretion and it was for the Court to rule whether States had gone beyond the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation. It held that although the investigation of terrorist offences undoubtedly presented the authorities with special problems, it could not accept that it was necessary to hold a suspect for 14 days without judicial intervention.[2525]

2743. In its judgement in the Castillo Petruzzi and Others case in 1999, the IACtHR held that "those Peruvian laws that allow the authorities to hold a person suspected of the crime of treason in preventive custody for 15 days, with the possibility of a 15-day extension, without bringing that person before a judicial authority", were contrary to Article 7(5) of the 1969 ACHR. It consequently found that "the period of approximately 36 days that elapsed between the time of detention and the date on which the alleged victims were brought before a judicial authority is excessive and contrary to the provisions of the [1969 ACHR]".[2526]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2744. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

2745. No practice was found.

[2523] ECtHR, Brogan and Others case, Judgement, 29 November 1988, §§ 55–62.
[2524] ECtHR, Brannigan and McBride v. UK, Judgement, 26 May 1993, §§ 61–66.
[2525] ECtHR, Aksoy v. Turkey, Judgement, 18 December 1996, §§ 78 and 83–84.
[2526] IACiHR, Castillo Petruzzi and Others case, Judgement, 30 May 1999, §§ 110–111.

Decision on the lawfulness of deprivation of liberty

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2746. Article 43, first paragraph, GC IV provides that:

> Any protected person who has been interned or placed in assigned residence shall be entitled to have such action reconsidered as soon as possible by an appropriate court or administrative board designated by the Detaining Power for that purpose. If the internment or placing in assigned residence is maintained, the court or administrative board shall periodically and at least twice yearly, give consideration to his or her case, with a view to the favourable amendment of the initial decision, if circumstances permit.

2747. Article 78 GC IV provides that the occupying power may take a decision to apply safety measures (such as assigned residence or to internment) with regard to protected persons. It adds that such a decision shall be made under a regular procedure and that "it shall be subject to periodical review, if possible every six months, by a competent body set up by the said Power".

2748. Article 5(4) of the 1950 ECHR stipulates that "everyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of his detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his release ordered if the detention is not lawful".

2749. Article 9(4) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "anyone who is deprived of his liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings before a court, in order that that court may decide on the lawfulness of his detention and order his release if the detention is not lawful".

2750. Article 7(6) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "anyone who is deprived of his liberty shall be entitled to recourse to a competent court, in order that the court may decide without delay on the lawfulness of his arrest or detention and order his release if the arrest or detention is unlawful".

2751. Article 37 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child deprived of his or her liberty shall have . . . the right to challenge the legality of the deprivation of his or her liberty before a court or other competent, independent and impartial authority, and to a prompt decision on any such action".

Other Instruments

2752. According to Article XXV of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, "every individual who has been deprived of his liberty has the right to have the legality of his detention ascertained without delay by a court without undue delay or, otherwise, to be released".

2753. Principle 32 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "a detained person or his counsel shall be entitled at any time to take proceedings according to domestic law before a judicial or other authority to challenge the lawfulness of his detention in order to obtain his release without delay, if it is unlawful".

2754. Article 5 of Part II of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that all persons have the right to effectively avail of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2755. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that:

> Any protected person who has been interned or placed in assigned residence shall have the right to obtain that a court or an administrative board, created by the [Detaining Power] for this purpose, reconsider within a brief time limit the decision taken against him. If it maintains the internment or assigned residence, the court or administrative board shall proceed periodically, and at least twice a year, to the examination of the case of the concerned person in order to modify in his favour the initial decision, if circumstances permit.[2527]

2756. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that:

> Any protected person who has been subjected to [enforced residence or internment] will have the right that a competent tribunal or administrative council, especially created by the Detaining Power, reconsider, as promptly as possible, the decision adopted.
>
> If the internment or placing in assigned residence is maintained, the court or administrative board shall periodically and at least twice yearly, give consideration to his or her case, with a view to the favourable amendment of the initial decision, if circumstances permit.[2528]

2757. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

> A person who has been interned or placed in an assigned residence is entitled to have such action reconsidered as soon as possible by an appropriate court or administrative board of the belligerent. If the internment or placing in assigned residence is maintained, the court or administrative board must periodically, and at least twice yearly, reconsider the case with a view to the favourable amendment of the initial decision if circumstances permit.[2529]

2758. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that "the work undertaken by persons who cooperate with those who are deprived of their liberty in order to invoke the right to habeas corpus, or who invoke this right directly in their name, finds its legal basis in their status as human rights defenders".[2530]

[2527] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.017(3).
[2528] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.30(6).
[2529] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11.5, § 43.
[2530] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 62.

2759. Germany's Military Manual provides, regarding aliens placed in assigned residence or internment, that "it shall be possible to have the measures reconsidered by an appropriate court or administrative board".[2531]

2760. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that:

A person who has been interned or placed in an assigned residence is entitled to have such action reconsidered as soon as possible by an appropriate court or administrative board of the belligerent. If the internment or placing in assigned residence is maintained, the court or administrative board must periodically, and at least twice yearly, reconsider the case with a view, if circumstances permit, to the favourable amendment of the initial decision.[2532]

2761. The UK Military Manual provides that:

A person who has been interned or placed in an assigned residence is entitled to have such action reconsidered as soon as possible by an appropriate court or administrative board of the belligerent. If the internment or placing in assigned residence is maintained, the court or administrative board must periodically, and at least twice yearly, reconsider the case with a view to the favourable amendment of the initial decision if circumstances permit.[2533]

The manual further specifies that, in occupied territories, the decisions regarding such assigned residence or internment can only be made in accordance with regular procedure . . . If the decision to intern, or to assign a special place of residence to, a protected person is upheld on appeal, such decision must be subject to periodical review – if possible every six months – by a competent body set up by the Occupant.[2534]

2762. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 43 GC IV.[2535] With respect to situations of occupation, the manual uses the same wording as Article 78 GC IV and specifies that "'competent bodies' to review the internment or assigned residence of protected persons may be created with advisory functions only, leaving the final decision to a high official of the Government".[2536]

2763. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides, regarding the internment or placing in assigned residence of protected persons, that if such internment is maintained, the internee is entitled to a periodic review of his or her case by an appropriate court or administrative board at least twice yearly.[2537] It further states that "persons placed in internment or assigned residence in occupied territory are entitled to a review or reconsideration by a 'competent body'".[2538]

National Legislation

2764. Countless pieces of domestic legislation contain provisions on the right to have the lawfulness of detention reviewed by a court and the release ordered

[2531] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 587.
[2532] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1120(3).
[2533] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 51.
[2534] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 555.
[2535] US, Field Manual (1956), § 282.
[2536] US, Field Manual (1956), § 433.
[2537] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-5.
[2538] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-7.

in case it is not lawful (so-called writ of habeas corpus). For instance, Russia's Constitution provides that "arrest, detention and keeping in custody shall be allowed only by an order of a court of law. No person may be detained for more than 48 hours without an order of a court of law including the right to make a representation against the order of arrest".[2539]

2765. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2540]

2766. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 43 and 78 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[2541]

2767. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... is liable to imprisonment".[2542]

National Case-law

2768. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

2769. In 1989, in a statement before the HRC, Uruguay reported that habeas corpus definitely continued to apply in emergency situations.[2543]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2770. In 1996, in a report to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on States of Emergency stated that the remedy of habeas corpus "is not derogable at any time or under any circumstances".[2544]

Other International Organisations

2771. No practice was found.

International Conferences

2772. No practice was found.

[2539] Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 22(2).
[2540] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2541] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2542] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[2543] Uruguay, Statement before the HRC, UN Doc. CCPR/C/SR.877, 30 March 1989, §§ 44 and 49.
[2544] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on States of Emergency, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1996/19, 18 June 1996, § 13.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2773. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber stated that:

As Geneva Convention IV leaves a great deal to the discretion of the detaining party in the matter of the original internment or placing in assigned residence of an individual, the party's decision that such measures of detention are required must be "reconsidered as soon as possible by an appropriate court or administrative board".[2545]

2774. In its judgement on appeal in the Delalić case in 2001, the ICTY Appeals Chamber held that:

The involuntary confinement of a civilian where the security of the Detaining Power does not make this absolutely necessary will be unlawful. Further, an initially lawful internment clearly becomes unlawful if the detaining party does not respect the basic procedural rights of the detained persons and does not establish an appropriate court or administrative board as prescribed in Article 43 of Geneva Convention IV.[2546]

2775. In its General Comment on Article 9 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC held that "if so-called preventive detention is used, for reasons of public security, it must be controlled by these same provisions, i.e. . . . court control of the detention must be available (para. 4) as well as compensation in the case of a breach (para. 5)".[2547]

2776. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC held that "in order to protect non-derogable rights, the right to take proceedings before a court to enable the court to decide without delay on the lawfulness of detention, must not be diminished by a State party's decision to derogate from the Covenant".[2548]

2777. In numerous cases concerning Uruguay between 1979 and 1981, the HRC found a violation of the right to habeas corpus particularly with regard to a large number of persons who had been imprisoned without court supervision under emergency legislation during the period of military rule.[2549] The HRC has also found a violation of Article 9(4) of the 1966 ICCPR in numerous other cases.[2550]

[2545] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 581.
[2546] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement on Appeal, 20 February 2001, § 320.
[2547] HRC, General Comment No. 8 (Article 9 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, § 4.
[2548] HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, § 16.
[2549] HRC, Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay, Views, 23 July 1980, § 18; Hernández Valentini de Bazzano v. Uruguay, Views, 15 August 1979, § 10; Sequeria v. Uruguay, Views, 29 July 1980, § 16; García Lanza de Netto v. Uruguay, Views, 3 April 1980, § 16; Santullo Valcada v. Uruguay, Views, 26 October 1979, § 12; Altesor v. Uruguay, Views, 29 March 1982, § 15; Buffo Carballal v. Uruguay, Views, 27 March 1981, § 13; Soriano de Bouton v. Uruguay, Views, 27 March 1981, § 12; Pietraroia v. Uruguay, Views, 27 March 1981, § 17; Sala de Tourón v. Uruguay, Views, 31 March 1981, § 6.
[2550] See, e.g., HRC, Dermit Barbato v. Uruguay, Views, 21 October 1982, § 10 (incommunicado detention); Tshitenge Muteba v. Zaire, Views, 24 July 1984, § 12 (incommunicado detention);

2778. In 1998, in its concluding observations on Israel, the HRC stressed that even where there had been a derogation from the 1966 ICCPR, a State party to the Covenant could not depart from the requirement of effective judicial review of detention.[2551]

2779. In 1996, in a communication alleging the expulsion from Zambia of over 500 west Africans after they had been administratively detained, the ACiHPR referred to its decision finding the case admissible as evidence that it had already established that none of the deportees had the opportunity to seize the Zambian courts to challenge their detention or deportation, which was a violation of Article 7 of the 1981 ACHPR as well as of national law.[2552]

2780. In a number of judgements, the ECtHR held that the court charged with making the decision as to the legality of the detention must function in accordance with procedural guarantees,[2553] such as an oral hearing,[2554] adversarial proceedings[2555] and time and facilities to prepare application.[2556] The ECtHR has specified that the tribunal making the determination as to the legality of the detention must have the power to release the person.[2557] The Court has specified, however, that due consideration must be given to the diligence of the national authorities and any delays brought about by the conduct of the detained person, as well as other factors responsible for delays that might be beyond the power of the State organs.[2558]

2781. In its advisory opinion in the Habeas Corpus case in 1987, the IACtHR stated that:

> In order for habeas corpus to achieve its purpose, which is to obtain a judicial determination of the lawfulness of a detention, it is necessary that the detained person be brought before a competent judge or tribunal with jurisdiction over him. Here habeas corpus performs a vital role in ensuring that a person's life and physical integrity are respected, in preventing his disappearance or the keeping of his whereabouts secret and in protecting him against torture or other cruel, inhumane, or degrading punishment or treatment.[2559]

Kelly v. Jamaica, Views, 8 April 1991, § 5(6) (detention of five weeks without access to a judge); Berry v. Jamaica, Views, 7 April 1994, § 11.1 (two and half months without court ruling on legality of detention).

2551 HRC, Concluding observations on Israel, UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add.93, 18 August 1998, § 21.

2552 ACiHPR, RADDH v. Zambia, Decision, 21–31 October 1996.

2553 ECtHR, De Wilde, Ooms and Versyp v. Belgium, Judgement, 18 June 1971, § 76; Ireland v. UK, Judgement, 18 January 1978, §§ 84 and 200.

2554 ECtHR, Sánchez-Reisse case, Judgement, 21 October 1986, § 51; Hussain v. UK, Judgement, 21 February 1996, § 59; Singh v. UK, Judgement (Chamber), 21 February 1996, §§ 69–70.

2555 ECtHR, Toth v. Austria, Judgement, 12 December 1991, § 84; Lamy case, Judgement, 30 March 1989, § 29; Hussain v. UK, Judgement, 21 February 1996, § 59; Singh v. UK, Judgement, 21 February 1996, §§ 65, 68 and 70.

2556 ECtHR, K v. Austria, Judgement, 2 June 1993, § 64; Farmakopoulos v. Belgium, Judgement, 27 March 1992, § 53.

2557 ECtHR, X. v. UK, Judgement, 5 November 1981, § 58; Van Droogenbroeck case, Judgement, 24 June 1982, § 49.

2558 ECtHR, Sánchez-Reisse case, Judgement, 21 October 1986, § 56; Navarra v. France, Judgement, 23 November 1993, § 29; Kolompar v. Belgium, Judgement, 24 September 1992, §§ 42–43.

2559 IACtHR, Habeas Corpus case, Advisory Opinion, 30 January 1987, § 35.

The Court concluded that "writs of habeas corpus and of 'amparo' are among those judicial remedies that are essential for the protection of various rights whose derogation is prohibited by Article 27(2) [1969 ACHR] and that serve, moreover, to preserve legality in a democratic society".[2560]

2782. In its advisory opinion in the Judicial Guarantees case in 1987, the IACtHR interpreted the scope of the prohibition on the suspension of judicial guarantees essential for the protection of non-derogable rights. The Court found that:

> The "essential" judicial guarantees which are not subject to derogation, according to Article 27(2) [1969 ACHR], include habeas corpus (Art. 7(6)), amparo, and any other effective remedy before judges or competent tribunals (Art. 25(1)), which is designed to guarantee the respect of the rights and freedoms whose suspension is not authorized by the [1969 ACHR].[2561]

2783. In its judgement in the Neira Alegría and Others case in 1995, the IACtHR found that the principles it had established in the two advisory opinions on habeas corpus and human rights during states of emergency applied equally in a case where the control and jurisdiction over a prison had been delegated to the armed forces as the result of a riot. The Court found that there had been a consequent violation of the right to habeas corpus.[2562]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

2784. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

2785. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides that:

> The right to an effective remedy, including habeas corpus, shall be guaranteed as a means to determine the whereabouts or the state of health of persons deprived of their liberty and for identifying the authority ordering or carrying out the deprivation of liberty. Everyone who is deprived of his or her liberty by arrest or detention shall be entitled to take proceedings by which the lawfulness of the detention shall be decided speedily by a court and his or her release ordered if the detention is not lawful.[2563]

The Declaration also provides that:

[2560] IACtHR, Habeas Corpus case, Advisory Opinion, 30 January 1987, § 42.
[2561] IACtHR, Judicial Guarantees case, Advisory Opinion, 6 October 1987, § 41(1).
[2562] IACtHR, Neira Alegría and Others case, Judgement, 19 January 1995, §§ 82–84 and 91(2).
[2563] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 4(3), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 331.

If it is considered necessary for imperative reasons of security to subject any person to assigned residence, internment or administrative detention, such decisions shall be subject to a regular procedure prescribed by law affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by the international community, including the right of appeal or to a periodical review.[2564]

M. Fair Trial Guarantees

General

Note: For practice concerning executions, see section C of this chapter. For practice concerning the status of spies, see Chapter 33, section B.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

2786. Article 16 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg), entitled "Fair trial for defendants", provides a list of procedures to be followed "in order to ensure fair trial for the Defendants".

2787. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions prohibits "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples".

2788. Article 49, fourth paragraph, GC I and Article 50, fourth paragraph, GC II provide that:

> In all circumstances, the accused persons shall benefit by safeguards of proper trial and defence, which shall not be less favourable than those provided by Article 105 and those following of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of August 12, 1949.

2789. Articles 102–108 GC III contain detailed provisions to ensure a fair trial in any judicial proceedings against POWs.

2790. According to Article 130 GC III, "if committed against persons or property protected by the Convention . . . wilfully depriving a prisoner of war of the rights of fair and regular trial" is a grave breach of the Convention.

2791. Article 5 GC IV provides that an individual protected person suspected of or engaged in activities hostile to the security of the State in the territory of a party to the conflict or an individual protected person detained as a spy or saboteur, or as a person under definite suspicion of activity hostile to the security of the occupying power "shall nevertheless be treated with humanity, and in case of trial, shall not be deprived of the rights of fair and regular trial prescribed by the present Convention".

[2564] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 11, IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

2792. Article 66 GC IV provides that "in case of a breach of the penal provisions promulgated by it by virtue of the second paragraph of Article 64, the Occupying Power may hand over the accused to its properly constituted, non-political military courts, on condition that the said courts sit in the occupied country". Articles 67–75 GC IV contain more detailed provisions concerning the procedure which must be followed.

2793. Article 78, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "decisions regarding such assigned residence or internment shall be made according to a regular procedure to be prescribed by the Occupying Power in accordance with the provisions of the present Convention".

2794. According to Article 147 GC IV "wilfully depriving a protected person of the rights of fair and regular trial prescribed in the present Convention" is a grave breach of the Convention.

2795. Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "in the determination of his civil rights and obligations or for any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law". Article 6(3) lists the minimum rights to which everyone charged with a criminal offence is entitled.

2796. Article 14(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "in the determination of any criminal charge . . . or . . . rights and obligations in a suit at law, everyone shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law". Article 14(3) then lists the minimum guarantees to which everyone charged with a criminal offence is entitled "in full equality".

2797. Article 8(1) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "every person has the right to a hearing, with due guarantees and within a reasonable time, by a competent . . . tribunal, previously established by law". Article 8(2) lists the minimum guarantees to which everyone is entitled "with full equality".

2798. Article 71(1) AP I provides that "no sentence shall be pronounced by the competent courts of the Occupying Power except after a regular trial".

2799. Article 75(4) AP I provides that:

> No sentence may be passed and no penalty may be executed on a person found guilty of a penal offence related to the armed conflict except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure.

Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2565]

2800. Article 85(4)(e) AP I states that "depriving a person protected by the Conventions or referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article of the rights of fair and regular trial" is a grave breach of the Protocol. Article 85 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2566]

[2565] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

2801. Article 7 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "every individual shall have the right to have his cause heard".

2802. Article 40(2)(b)(iii) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child states that "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (iii) to have the matter determined without delay by a competent . . . authority or judicial body in a fair hearing according to law".

2803. Under Article 8(2)(a)(vi) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or other protected person of the rights of fair and regular trial" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts. Under Article 8(2)(c)(iv), "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all judicial guarantees which are generally recognized as indispensable," constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

2804. Article 64(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "the Trial Chamber shall ensure that a trial is fair and expeditious and is conducted with full respect for the rights of the accused". Article 64(3)(a) adds that "the Trial Chamber assigned to deal with the case shall . . . confer with the parties and adopt such procedures as are necessary to facilitate the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings". Article 64(8)(b) states that "at the trial, the presiding judge may give directions for the conduct of proceedings, including to ensure that they are conducted in a fair and impartial manner".

2805. Article 67(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "in the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled to a . . . fair hearing conducted impartially".

2806. Article 69 of the 1998 ICC Statute states with regard to evidence that:

> The Court may rule on the relevance or admissibility of any evidence, taking into account, inter alia, the probative value of the evidence and any prejudice that such evidence may cause to a fair trial or to a fair evaluation of the testimony of a witness, in accordance with the Rules of Procedure and Evidence.

2807. Article 17(2) of the 1999 Second Protocol to the 1954 Hague Convention provides that "any person . . . shall be guaranteed . . . a fair trial in accordance with domestic law and international law at all stages of the proceedings, and in no cases shall be provided guarantees less favorable to such person than those provided by international law".

2808. Article 3(g) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone states that:

[2566] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.44, 30 May 1977, p. 291.

The Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 for the Protection of War Victims, and of Additional Protocol II thereto of 8 June 1977.

These violations include "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples".

2809. Article 17(2) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, entitled "Rights of the accused", provides that "the accused shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing".

Other Instruments

2810. Article 148 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "the law of war does not allow proclaiming either an individual belonging to the hostile army, or a citizen, or a subject of the hostile government, an outlaw, who may be slain without trial by any captor, any more than the law of peace allows such intentional outlawry".

2811. Article 9 of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo), entitled "Fair trial for accused", provides a list of procedures to be followed "in order to insure fair trial for the accused".

2812. Article 10 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair and public hearing".

2813. Article XVIII of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, entitled "Right to a fair trial", states that "every person may resort to the courts to ensure respect for his legal rights".

2814. Principle V of the 1950 Nuremberg Principles adopted by the ILC provides that "any person charged with a crime under international law has the right to a fair trial on the facts and law".

2815. Article 19 of the 1956 New Delhi Draft Rules provides that:

The accused persons shall be tried only by a regular civil or military court; they shall, in all circumstances, benefit by the safeguards of proper trial and defence at least equal to those provided under Article 105 and those following of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of 12 August 1949.

2816. Paragraph 6 of the 1985 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary states that "the principle of the independence of the judiciary entitles and requires the judiciary to ensure that judicial proceedings are conducted fairly and that the rights of the parties are respected".

2817. Paragraph 1 of the 1989 Principles on the Effective Prevention and Investigation of Extra-legal, Arbitrary and Summary Executions provides that:

Governments shall prohibit by law all extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions and shall ensure that any such executions are recognized as offences under their criminal laws, and are punishable by appropriate penalties which take into account the seriousness of such offences. Exceptional circumstances including a state of war or threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency may not be invoked as a justification of such executions.

2818. Article 19(e) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "a defendant is innocent until his guilt is proven in a fair trial in which he shall be given all the guarantees of defence".
2819. Article 8(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right, "in the determination of any charge against him, to have a fair and public hearing".
2820. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
2821. Paragraph 1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that the parties commit themselves to respect and ensure respect for common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Paragraph 2.3 requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
2822. Under Article 2(f) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute wilful deprivation of a POW or a civilian of the rights of fair and regular trial.
2823. Article 20(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "the Trial Chambers shall ensure that a trial is fair".
2824. Article 21(2) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "in the determination of charges against him, the accused shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing".
2825. Under Article 4(g) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, the Tribunal is competent to prosecute violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples".
2826. Article 19(1) of the 1994 ICTR Statute states that "the Trial Chambers shall ensure that a trial is fair".
2827. Article 20(2) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that "in the determination of charges against him or her, the accused shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing".
2828. Under Section III (2) of the 1994 Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights in Guatemala, the government of Guatemala undertook to modify the Penal Code so that "summary or extra-judicial executions may be characterized as crimes of particular gravity and punished as such".

2829. Article 11(1)(a) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right, "in the determination of any charge against him, to have a fair and public hearing".

2830. Article 20(a)(vi) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "wilfully depriving a protected person or other protected persons of the rights of fair and regular trial" is as a war crime. Article 20(f)(vii) states that "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are generally recognized as indispensable", committed in violation of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict not of an international character, is a war crime.

2831. Article 2(4) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines prohibits "summary executions (salvagings)". Article 2(9) provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote "the right to substantive and procedural due process".

2832. Article 3(2) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "punishing anyone without complying with all the requisites of due process" shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat.

2833. Article 47 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable period of time by . . . [a] tribunal previously established by law".

2834. According to Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and (c)(iv) of the 2000 ICC Elements of Crime, "denying a fair trial" is defined by reference to the Geneva Conventions (III and IV in particular), while "sentencing or execution without due process" is defined by reference to the requirements of independence and impartiality and to "all other judicial guarantees generally recognized as indispensable under international law".

2835. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(a)(vi), "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or other protected person of the rights of fair and regular trial" constitutes a war crime in international armed conflicts. According to Section 6(1)(c)(iv), "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all judicial guarantees which are generally recognized as indispensable," constitutes a war crime in non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

2836. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that protected persons arrested on suspicion of performing acts prejudicial to the occupying power cannot be "deprived . . . of a fair and regular trial".[2567] It further states that a "competent tribunal of the Occupying Power cannot impose any sentence without having proceeded to a regular trial".[2568] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[2569]

2837. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that "depriving [a protected person] of his right to a regular and impartial trial" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2570]

2838. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "wilfully depriving PWs or other protected persons of the right of a fair and regular trial as prescribed by the Geneva Conventions" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2571]

2839. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "wilfully depriving PWs or other protected persons of the right of a fair and regular trial as prescribed by the Geneva Conventions" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2572]

2840. Belgium's Law of War Manual refers to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and prohibits the conviction of protected persons without a prior fair trial.[2573] It further states that depriving a POW or other protected persons of the right to be tried by a regular court is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2574]

2841. Benin's Military Manual provides that every person shall benefit from fundamental judicial guarantees.[2575]

2842. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations states that it is prohibited to "convict persons without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted tribunal affording judicial guarantees provided by law".[2576]

2843. Under Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations, it is prohibited to "convict persons without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted tribunal affording judicial guarantees provided by law".[2577]

2844. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

[2567] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.003.
[2568] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.029(5).
[2569] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 8.001.
[2570] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 8.03.
[2571] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 1305(f).
[2572] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1315.
[2573] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 17.
[2574] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[2575] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 5.
[2576] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[2577] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.

No sentence may be passed and no penalty may be executed on a person found guilty of a penal offence related to the armed conflict except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognised principles of regular judicial procedure.[2578]

The manual also provides that "sentences may be pronounced only after a regular trial".[2579] It further specifies that it is a grave breach of GC III to "deprive a PW of the right to a fair and regular trial"[2580] and that it is a grave breach to "wilfully deprive a protected person of the rights of a fair and regular trial prescribed by [GC IV]".[2581] According to the manual, "denial of a fair and regular trial to any person protected by the Geneva Conventions or AP I" is a grave breach of AP I.[2582] The manual further states that the "Geneva Conventions provide that all persons accused of grave breaches enjoy the safeguards of a proper trial and defence in accordance with international standards". With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[2583]

2845. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that "to protect [non-combatants] means ... to offer the necessary conditions for a fair trial before a competent tribunal, so that the requirement of due process is guaranteed".[2584]

2846. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "whoever is deprived of his liberty has the right to a legal trial".[2585] It adds that "nobody can be tried except in conformity with laws in force before the imputed act and by a judge or a competent tribunal, and in full compliance with all rules for each trial".[2586]

2847. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual provides that "whoever is deprived of liberty has the right to a legal trial".[2587]

2848. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "each person shall benefit from the fundamental judicial guarantees".[2588]

2849. Under Congo's Disciplinary Regulations, it is prohibited to "convict persons without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted tribunal affording judicial guarantees provided by law".[2589]

2850. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "offences against prisoners of war, including ... denying the right to a fair trial for committed offences" and "offences against civilian inhabitants of the occupied territory, including ... denying the right to a fair trial for committed offences" constitute war

[2578] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-8, § 65.
[2579] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-6, § 54.
[2580] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-2, § 13.
[2581] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-2, § 14.
[2582] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-3, § 17.
[2583] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-2, § 10(a)(iv) and p. 17-4, § 28.
[2584] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 21.
[2585] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 9.
[2586] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 10.
[2587] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 11.
[2588] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 5.
[2589] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).

crimes.[2590] It further provides that "individuals captured as spies or as illegal combatants . . . may not be summarily executed" and that they "have the right to be fairly tried for violations of the law of armed conflict".[2591]

2851. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces lists as one of the ten basic rules that "any person has the right to be heard" in trial.[2592]

2852. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that "only a fairly constituted tribunal can pronounce and impose a judgement or a sentence against captured enemy combatants".[2593]

2853. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended provides that it is prohibited to "convict persons without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted tribunal affording judicial guarantees provided by law".[2594]

2854. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "every person, whether combatant or non-combatant, shall benefit from the fundamental judicial guarantees".[2595] It further states that "deprivation of the fundamental judicial guarantees" is a grave breach of GC III.[2596]

2855. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that "violations of the fundamental judicial guarantees" are grave breaches of the law of armed conflict.[2597]

2856. France's LOAC Manual provides that "practices of massive and systematic summary executions" constitute war crimes.[2598] It further states that one of the three main principles common to IHL and human rights is the "principle of inviolability" which guarantees to every human being the fundamental judicial guarantees.[2599] The manual refers to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and stipulates that the "passing of sentences and carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples" is prohibited.[2600]

2857. Germany's Military Manual provides that civilians "shall have the right to a regular and fair judicial procedure".[2601] It further states that "prevention of a fair and regular trial" is a grave breach of IHL.[2602]

2858. According to Indonesia's Directive on Human Rights in Trikora, "the protection of personal integrity consists of: the protection of the civil and political rights of citizens from cruel treatment and punishment without judicial procedure" and "due process of law . . . and fair trial guarantees".[2603]

[2590] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5(1)–(2).
[2591] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), §§ 11.7 and 11.8.
[2592] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), pp. 3 and 15.
[2593] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 10.
[2594] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[2595] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § III.
[2596] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.4.
[2597] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 7.
[2598] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 44.
[2599] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 52.
[2600] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 101.
[2601] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 518.
[2602] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 1209.
[2603] Indonesia, Directive on Human Rights in Trikora (1995), §§ 1(b) and 4(a).

2859. Italy's IHL Manual provides that the violation "of the right to a regular and impartial trial for acts committed in connection with an armed conflict" constitutes a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[2604]

2860. Kenya's LOAC Manual refers to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and states that persons hors de combat "may not be sentenced without proper trial".[2605]

2861. South Korea's Military Regulation 187 states that "executing the death penalty for spies and persons who have taken part in hostilities through summary trial not full trial" is an "unjustifiable crime".[2606]

2862. Madagascar's Military Manual refers to one of the "seven fundamental rules of IHL" which states that "every person shall benefit from the fundamental judicial guarantees".[2607]

2863. Mali's Army Regulations provides that it is prohibited to "convict persons without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted tribunal affording judicial guarantees provided by law".[2608]

2864. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that it is prohibited to "convict persons without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted tribunal affording judicial guarantees provided by law".[2609]

2865. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that spies caught in flagrante delicto cannot, in any circumstances, be punished without due process.[2610] It prohibits punishments "without a previous judgement . . . through a fair trial".[2611] It further states that "wilfully depriving a protected person of the rights of a fair and regular trial" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols.[2612] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates the fundamental requirement of fair trial found in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 6 AP II.[2613]

2866. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

> No sentence may be passed and no penalty may be executed on a person found guilty of a penal offence related to the conflict except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court, respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure.[2614]

[2604] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 85.
[2605] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 6.
[2606] South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), Article 4.2; see also Military Operations Law of War Compliance Regulation (1993), § D.
[2607] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 5.
[2608] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[2609] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25.
[2610] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-6.
[2611] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-2.
[2612] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. IX-5 and IX-6.
[2613] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-1 and XI-5.
[2614] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4).

The manual further provides that it is a grave breach "to deprive [a POW] of his rights to a fair and regular trial" and to "wilfully deprive a protected civilian of the rights of fair and regular trial".[2615] It also states that depriving "any person protected by the Conventions or the Protocol of a fair and regular trial" and "punishment of a spy without a proper trial" is a grave breach of AP I.[2616] With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[2617]

2867. Nicaragua's Military Manual states that "in no case may summary executions be carried out".[2618]

2868. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "wilfully depriving prisoners of war and civilians of the rights to a fair and regular trial" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions and is considered as a serious war crime.[2619] It further states that "in any case, it must be ensured that no punishment is imposed on a prisoner of war without a fair trial".[2620]

2869. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces lists the right of a detainee to a fair trial as one of the ten basic rules.[2621]

2870. Peru's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces states that the right to judicial guarantees is one of the main civil rights which must be respected by armed forces.[2622]

2871. Russia's Military Manual prohibits the punishment of war victims, namely the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, POWs and civilian population, "without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, with all the judicial guarantees which are recognised as indispensable by civilised nations".[2623]

2872. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that it is prohibited to "convict persons without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted tribunal affording judicial guarantees provided by law".[2624]

2873. Senegal's IHL Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[2625]

2874. South Africa's LOAC Manual provides that depriving a "protected person of the rights to a fair and regular trial" constitutes a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2626]

2875. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the guarantee of judicial proceedings" is one of the minimum guarantees provided to prisoners of war.[2627]

[2615] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1702(2) and 1702(3)(d).
[2616] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1703(4)(e) and 1704(4).
[2617] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1807(1)(d).
[2618] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 3.
[2619] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6(b) and (c).
[2620] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 44.
[2621] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Security Forces (1991), Rule 8.
[2622] Peru, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (1994), § 27(4).
[2623] Russia, Military Manual (1990), §§ 7 and 8(e).
[2624] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(2).
[2625] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 4.
[2626] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 40.
[2627] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.c.

2876. Sweden's Military Manual provides that in occupied territories, POWs or civilians shall be granted all fundamental judicial guarantees.[2628]

2877. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the principle of the right to have a sentence pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognised principles of regular judicial procedure as contained in Article 75 AP I is part of customary international law.[2629] It further states that "wilfully depriving [a protected person] of the rights of a fair and regular trial" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2630]

2878. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "a spy caught in flagrante delicto shall not be punished without previous judgement".[2631] It also provides that when captured, "saboteurs . . . cannot be punished without prior judgement".[2632] The manual notes that "in judicial proceedings, some minimum guarantees in accordance with the regime of the rule of law shall be granted to those accused of possible war crimes and who no longer benefit from prisoner-of-war status".[2633] It adds that "Article 75 AP I contains a series of provisions that guarantee to the accused a fair trial".[2634] It further provides that:

> A person found guilty of a criminal offence committed in connection with the armed conflict shall be sentenced only in accordance with a judgement . . . This judgement shall be rendered by an impartial and regularly constituted tribunal which follows the generally recognised principles of a regular judicial procedure.[2635]

According to the manual, it is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions to deprive POWs and civilians of "their right to be tried by an impartial and regularly constituted tribunal, in accordance with the conventions".[2636] In an article entitled "Judicial guarantees", the manual states that "prisoners of war prosecuted for war crimes shall benefit from the rights prescribed by [GC III]".[2637]

2879. Togo's Military Manual provides that every person shall benefit from fundamental judicial guarantees.[2638]

2880. The UK Military Manual provides that if civil inhabitants "commit or attempt to commit hostile acts, they are liable to punishment, after a proper trial".[2639] It further provides that "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognised as [2628] Sweden, Military Manual (1976), pp. 16 and 26.

[2629] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[2630] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 4.2, p. 93.
[2631] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 43.
[2632] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 46.
[2633] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 66.
[2634] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 153.
[2635] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 175.
[2636] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 192(b), see also § 193(2)(e).
[2637] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 201.
[2638] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 5.
[2639] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 88.

indispensable by civilised peoples" is prohibited at any time.[2640] The manual specifies that "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war of the rights to a fair and regular trial prescribed in the Convention" is a grave breach of GC III".[2641] In cases of occupation, the manual states that "sentences may be pronounced only after a regular trial".[2642] The manual further emphasises that wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or persons protected under GC IV of the rights of fair and regular trial required by GC III and GC IV is a grave breach of those instruments.[2643] The manual also states that "in addition to the 'grave breaches' of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions, ... the following are examples of punishable violations of the laws of war, or war crimes: ... killing without trial of spies, saboteurs, partisans and others who have committed hostile acts".[2644]

2881. The UK LOAC Manual recalls that "Protocol I contains fundamental guarantees to ... ensure that persons are not punished without properly conducted trials".[2645] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual refers to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and states that persons hors de combat "may not be sentenced without proper trial".[2646]

2882. The US Field Manual restates common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Articles 102 and 108 GC III.[2647] With respect to occupied territories, it uses the same wording as Articles 5, 66 and 71 GC IV.[2648] The manual provides that "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a protected person of the rights of a fair and regular trial" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2649] It also provides that "in addition to the 'grave breaches' of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, the following acts are representative of violations of the law of war ('war crimes'): ... killing without trial spies or other persons who have committed hostile acts".[2650]

2883. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that GC III "provides specific safeguards and guarantees of fair judicial proceedings".[2651] It further states that "protected persons in occupied territory who are detained for spying or sabotage ... are guaranteed the right to a fair trial".[2652] The manual specifies that "wilfully killing without trial persons in custody who have committed hostile acts" and "deliberate deprivation of fair trial rights to any protected persons" are acts involving individual criminal responsibility.[2653]

2884. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook provides that "a prisoner of war must be tried by the same courts as try members of the armed forces of the detaining power, and must be given the same procedural rights as members

[2640] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 131(1)(d). [2641] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 282.
[2642] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 570. [2643] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 625(b)–(c).
[2644] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626(l).
[2645] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 35, § 10.
[2646] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 12, p. 42, § 2(a)(4).
[2647] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 11, 178 and 184.
[2648] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 248, 436 and § 441.
[2649] US, Field Manual (1956), § 502. [2650] US, Field Manual (1956), § 504(l).
[2651] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8. [2652] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-2.
[2653] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 15–3(c)(10)–(11).

of that state's armed forces".[2654] It adds that "even terrorists, spies, and illegal partisans have the right to be tried and cannot be summarily executed".[2655] With respect to war crimes trials, the manual states that "these trials must meet certain minimum standards of fairness and due process, now set out in detail in the 1949 Geneva Conventions" and that the "failure to accord captured personnel the right to a fair trial is itself a serious violation of the law of armed conflict".[2656]

2885. The US Soldier's Manual prohibits sentencing protected persons without a proper trial.[2657]

2886. The US Instructor's Guide states that "in addition to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the following acts are further examples of war crimes: ... killing, without proper legal trial, spies or other captured persons who have committed hostile acts".[2658]

2887. The US Naval Handbook provides that "the following acts are representative war crimes ... denial of a fair trial" for prisoners of war and civilian inhabitants of an occupied territory.[2659] It adds that the "failure to provide a fair trial for the alleged commission of a war crime is itself a war crime".[2660] The manual specifies that "individuals captured as spies or as illegal combatants ... may not be summarily executed" and that they "have the right to be fairly tried for violations of the law of armed conflict".[2661]

National Legislation

2888. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who deprives a prisoner of war or a civilian of "his or her right to a regular and impartial trial".[2662]

2889. Under Armenia's Penal Code, "depriving a protected person or a prisoner of war of the right to a fair and regular trial", during an armed conflict, constitutes a crime against the peace and security of mankind.[2663]

2890. Australia's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "a person who, in Australia or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[2664]

2891. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including [2654] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-2(c).

[2655] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-2(e).
[2656] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), §§ 8-3(a) and(b).
[2657] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), pp. 5 and 20.
[2658] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 13 and 14.
[2659] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5(1) and (2).
[2660] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5(2) and (3).
[2661] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.7.
[2662] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 291, introducing a new Article 875(3) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[2663] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 390.2(3).
[2664] Australia, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 7(1).

"denying a fair trial" in international armed conflicts and "sentencing or execution without due process" in non-international armed conflicts.[2665]

2892. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War prohibits, with regard to civilian persons and prisoners of war, the "passing of sentences and carrying out of executions without a previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees provided by international law".[2666]

2893. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2667]

2894. The Geneva Conventions Act of Barbados provides that "a person who commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 . . . may be tried and punished by any court in Barbados that has jurisdiction in respect of similar offences in Barbados as if the grave breach had been committed in Barbados".[2668]

2895. The Criminal Code of Belarus provides that depriving persons who have laid down their arms or are defenceless, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, sanitary and religious personnel, prisoners of war, civilian population in an occupied territory or in the conflict zone, or other persons enjoying international protection of their right to be judged by a regular and impartial tribunal is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[2669]

2896. Belgium's Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended provides that "denying a prisoner of war [or] a protected civilian person the right to a fair and impartial trial" constitutes a crime under international law.[2670]

2897. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "depriving civilians and prisoners of war of their right to a fair and impartial trial" is a war crime.[2671] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[2672]

2898. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Botswana, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions".[2673]

[2665] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.31 and 268.76.
[2666] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Articles 17 and 21(4).
[2667] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2668] Barbados, Geneva Conventions Act (1980), Section 3(2).
[2669] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 135(1).
[2670] Belgium, Law concerning the Repression of Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols as amended (1993), Article 1(3)(5).
[2671] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 154(1) and 156.
[2672] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433(1) and 435.
[2673] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).

2899. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that depriving a captive or a civilian person of his or her "right to be tried by a regular court and under a regular procedure" is a war crime.[2674]

2900. Burundi's Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes provides that "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or any other protected persons of their right to a regular and impartial trial" is a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[2675]

2901. Cambodia's Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial provides that "the Extraordinary Chambers shall have the power to bring to trial all suspects who committed or ordered the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Convention[s] of 12 August 1949 ... which were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979".[2676]

2902. Canada's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "every person who, whether within or outside Canada, commits a grave breach [of the Geneva Conventions or of AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[2677]

2903. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[2678]

2904. Colombia's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who during an armed conflict "orders or deprives protected persons of their right to a fair and regular trial".[2679]

2905. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2680]

2906. The Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act of the Cook Islands punishes "any person who in the Cook Islands or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I]".[2681]

2907. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that denying the civilian population and prisoners of war their "rights to a fair and impartial trial" is a war crime.[2682]

2908. Cyprus's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic, any grave breach or takes part, or assists or incites another person in the commission of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions".[2683]

[2674] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Articles 411(c) and 412(e).
[2675] Burundi, Draft Law on Genocide, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes (2001), Article 4(A)(f) and (C)(d).
[2676] Cambodia, Law on the Khmer Rouge Trial (2001), Article 6.
[2677] Canada, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1985), Section 3(1).
[2678] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2679] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 149.
[2680] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[2681] Cook Islands, Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols Act (2002), Section 5(1).
[2682] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 158 and 160.
[2683] Cyprus, Geneva Conventions Act (1966), Section 4(1).

2909. Cyprus's AP I Act punishes "any person who, whatever his nationality, commits in the Republic or outside the Republic any grave breach of the provisions of the Protocol, or takes part or assists or incites another person in the commission of such a breach".[2684]

2910. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, anyone who, "in the context of an international or internal armed conflict, deprives a protected person of the right to a regular and impartial trial" is punishable.[2685]

2911. Estonia's Penal Code provides, with respect to civilians, prisoners of war and interned civilians, that the "deprivation of the right to a fair trial" is a war crime.[2686]

2912. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that denying civilians, wounded and sick, prisoners of war or internees of their "right to a fair trial" constitutes a crime.[2687]

2913. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, it is a crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts to "wilfully deprive a prisoner of war or any other protected person of their right to a fair trial".[2688]

2914. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code provides a punishment for anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict:

> imposes on or enforces against a person protected under international humanitarian law a severe punishment, particularly the death penalty or imprisonment, without such person having been convicted by an impartial and regularly constituted court affording the judicial guarantees required under international law.[2689]

2915. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, the person who deprives "the civilian population and prisoners of war of their right to be tried in a regular and impartial procedure" is guilty, upon conviction, of a war crime.[2690]

2916. India's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "if any person within or without India commits or attempts to commit, or abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions he shall be punished".[2691]

2917. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and of AP I are punishable offences.[2692] In addition, any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of common Article 3, Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 102–108 GC III and 5 GC IV,

[2684] Cyprus, AP I Act (1979), Section 4(1).
[2685] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Incumplimiento del debido proceso".
[2686] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), §§ 97 and 99.
[2687] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 292.
[2688] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 411(2)(e).
[2689] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(7).
[2690] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Article 158(3)(b).
[2691] India, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[2692] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 3(1).

and of AP I, including violations of Articles 71(1), 75(4) and 78(2) AP I, are also punishable offences.[2693]

2918. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code punishes any "commander who, with the exception of the cases of imminent danger for the security of the armed force or for the military defence of the State, orders that, without prior regular judgement, a person caught in the act of spying shall be immediately executed".[2694]

2919. Jordan's Draft Military Criminal Code provides that "depriving protected persons of their right to a fair trial" is a war crime.[2695]

2920. Kenya's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or outside Kenya commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2696]

2921. Kenya's Constitution provides that "if a person is charged with a criminal offence, the case shall be afforded a fair hearing".[2697]

2922. Under the Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice of Lebanon, "depriving protected persons of their right to a fair trial" constitutes a war crime.[2698]

2923. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, the imposition of "criminal penalties without a previous judgement by an independent court or guarantees of defence during the trial" constitutes a war crime.[2699]

2924. Under Luxembourg's Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches, depriving a person protected by GC III and GC IV of the right to a fair and regular trial is a grave breach of these instruments.[2700]

2925. Malawi's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Malawi commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2701]

2926. Malaysia's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside the Federation, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any of the . . . [Geneva] conventions".[2702]

2927. Mali's Penal Code provides that "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or any other protected person of his/her right to a fair and impartial trial" is a war crime.[2703]

[2693] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2694] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 183.
[2695] Jordan, Draft Military Criminal Code (2000), Article 41(A)(19).
[2696] Kenya, Geneva Conventions Act (1968), Section 3(1).
[2697] Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(1).
[2698] Lebanon, Draft Amendments to the Code of Military Justice (1997), Article 146(19).
[2699] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[2700] Luxembourg, Law on the Punishment of Grave Breaches (1985), Article 1(5).
[2701] Malawi, Geneva Conventions Act (1967), Section 4(1).
[2702] Malaysia, Geneva Conventions Act (1962), Section 3(1).
[2703] Mali, Penal Code (2001), Article 31(f).

2928. The Geneva Conventions Act of Mauritius punishes "any person who in Mauritius or elsewhere commits, or is an accomplice in the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2704]

2929. Moldova's Penal Code punishes the "passing of sentences without a trial by a regularly constituted court not affording all the judicial guarantees provided by law".[2705]

2930. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit in an international armed conflict one of the following: grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, including "intentionally depriving a prisoner of war or other protected person of the right to a fair and regular trial"; and "intentionally . . . depriving a person protected by the Geneva Conventions or Article 85, paragraph 2, of Additional Protocol (I) of the right to a fair and regular trial".[2706] Furthermore, it is also a crime to commit, "in the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, a violation of Article 3 common to all the Geneva Conventions", including "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are generally recognised as indispensable".[2707]

2931. New Zealand's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that "any person who in New Zealand or elsewhere commits, or aids or abets or procures the commission by another person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions or of [AP I] is guilty of an indictable offence".[2708]

2932. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and (c)(iv) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2709]

2933. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of denying prisoners of war and civilians their right to a regular and impartial trial.[2710]

2934. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code punishes anyone who "during an international or internal armed conflict, deprives a protected person of the right to a regular and impartial trial".[2711]

2935. According to Niger's Penal Code as amended, depriving a prisoner of war, a civilian person protected by GC IV or a person protected by the Additional Protocols of 1977 of "the right to a regular and impartial trial" constitutes a war crime.[2712]

2936. Nigeria's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any person who "whether in or outside the Federation, . . . whatever his nationality, commits, or aids, abets

[2704] Mauritius, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Section 3(1).
[2705] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 137(2)(d).
[2706] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Articles 5(1)(f) and 5(2)(d)(v).
[2707] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 6(1)(d).
[2708] New Zealand, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1958), Section 3(1).
[2709] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[2710] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Articles 55(5) and 58.
[2711] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Article 462.
[2712] Niger, Penal Code as amended (1961), Article 208.3(5).

or procures any other person to commit any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2713]

2937. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[2714]

2938. Papua New Guinea's Geneva Conventions Act punishes any "person who, in Papua New Guinea or elsewhere, commits a grave breach of any of the Geneva Conventions".[2715]

2939. Poland's Penal Code provides for the punishment of "any person who, in violation of international law, deprives persons hors de combat, protected persons and persons enjoying international protection of their right to a fair and impartial trial".[2716]

2940. Under Romania's Penal Code, the "imposition of sanctions on wounded, sick and shipwrecked, members of civil medical services, Red Cross or similar organisations, prisoners of war, or all persons in the hands of the adverse party without a previous judgment by a regular court affording all judicial guarantees" constitutes a crime.[2717]

2941. The Geneva Conventions Act of the Seychelles punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who whether in or outside Seychelles, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, any such grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2718]

2942. Singapore's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his citizenship or nationality, who, whether in or outside Singapore, commits, aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any such grave breach of any [Geneva] Convention".[2719]

2943. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that "depriving civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners of war and medical and religious personnel of their right to a fair and regular trial" is a war crime.[2720]

2944. Spain's Military Criminal Code provides for the punishment of military personnel who deprive prisoners of war and civilians of their right to a regular and impartial trial.[2721]

2945. Under Spain's Penal Code, depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian person of his/her right to a regular and impartial trial is an offence.[2722]

[2713] Nigeria, Geneva Conventions Act (1960), Section 3(1).
[2714] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[2715] Papua New Guinea, Geneva Conventions Act (1976), Section 7(2).
[2716] Poland, Penal Code (1997), Article 124.
[2717] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 358(e).
[2718] Seychelles, Geneva Conventions Act (1985), Section 3(1).
[2719] Singapore, Geneva Conventions Act (1973), Section 3(1).
[2720] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Articles 374(1), 375 and 376.
[2721] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(5)–(6).
[2722] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 611(3).

2946. Sri Lanka's Draft Geneva Conventions Act provides that "a person, whatever his nationality, who, in Sri Lanka or elsewhere, commits or aids, abets or procures any other person to commit, (a) a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] Conventions; or (b) a breach of common Article 3 of the Conventions, is guilty of an indictable offence".[2723]

2947. Tajikistan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or any other protected person of the rights of a fair and regular trial".[2724]

2948. Thailand's Prisoners of War Act punishes whoever deprives a prisoner of war of "an impartial trial or a trial according to the rules set up in the Convention" in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[2725]

2949. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and (c)(iv) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2726]

2950. Uganda's Geneva Conventions Act punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether within or without Uganda commits or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of any grave breach of the [Geneva] Conventions".[2727]

2951. The UK Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside the United Kingdom, commits, or aids, abets or procures the commission by any other person of, a grave breach of any of the [Geneva] conventions or of [AP I]".[2728]

2952. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(a)(vi) and (c)(iv) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[2729]

2953. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[2730]

2954. Vanuatu's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "any grave breach of the Geneva Conventions that would, if committed in Vanuatu, be an offence under any provision of the Penal Code Act Cap. 135 or any other law shall be an offence under such provision of the Penal Code or any other law if committed outside Vanuatu".[2731]

2955. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) states that "depriving civilians and prisoners of war of their right to a regular and fair trial" is a war crime.[2732]

[2723] Sri Lanka, Draft Geneva Conventions Act (2002), Section 3(1).
[2724] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 403(2)(e).
[2725] Thailand, Prisoners of War Act (1955), Sections 16 and 18.
[2726] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).
[2727] Uganda, Geneva Conventions Act (1964), Section 1(1).
[2728] UK, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1957), Section 1(1).
[2729] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[2730] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[2731] Vanuatu, Geneva Conventions Act (1982), Section 4(1).
[2732] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Articles 142(1) and 144.

2956. Zimbabwe's Geneva Conventions Act as amended punishes "any person, whatever his nationality, who, whether in or outside Zimbabwe, commits any such grave breach of [any of the Geneva] Conventions or [AP I]".[2733]

National Case-law

2957. In the Ohashi case before the Australian Military Court at Rabaul in 1946, the Judge Advocate stated that the notion of "fair trial" supposed the following:

- consideration by a tribunal comprised of one or more persons who will endeavour to judge the accused fairly upon the evidence using their own common knowledge of ordinary affairs and if they are soldiers their military knowledge, honestly endeavouring to discard any preconceived belief in the guilt of the accused or any prejudice against him/her;
- the accused should know the exact nature of the charge against him/her;
- the accused should know what is alleged against him/her by way of evidence;
- he should have full opportunity to give his own version of the case and produce evidence to support it;
- the court should satisfy itself that the accused is guilty before awarding punishment. It would be sufficient if the court believed it to be more likely than not that the accused was guilty;
- the punishment should not be one which outrages the sentiments of humanity.[2734]

2958. In its judgement in the Videla case in 1994, which concerned the abduction, torture and murder of Lumi Videla in 1974, Chile's Appeal Court of Santiago held that the Geneva Conventions "protect the human rights of the contestants in the event of external war or a conflict between organized armed forces within the State, which latter situation effectively prevailed in the country in 1974". The Court stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions obliged parties to non-international armed conflicts "to extend humanitarian treatment to persons taking no active part in the hostilities or who have placed themselves hors de combat for various reasons, and prohibits at any time and in any place . . . the passing of summary sentences". The Court found that the acts charged constituted grave breaches under Article 147 GC IV and upheld the prison order issued against the accused.[2735]

2959. In its judgement in the Almelo case in 1945, the UK Military Court at Almelo held that "killing captured members of the opposing forces or civilian inhabitants of occupied territories suspected of espionage or treason unless their guilt had been established by a court of law" amounts to a war crime. On this basis, it found the accused guilty of the killing without trial of a British soldier who was alleged to be a spy.[2736]

[2733] Zimbabwe, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1981), Section 3(1).
[2734] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Ohashi case, Statement by the Judge Advocate, 23 March 1946.
[2735] Chile, Appeal Court of Santiago (Third Criminal Chamber), Videla case, Judgement, 26 September 1994, §§ 6–20.

2960. In the Dostler case before the US Military Commission at Rome in 1945, the accused, the commander of a German army corps, was found guilty of having ordered the shooting of 15 American prisoners of war in violation of the 1907 HR and of long-established laws and customs of war. The Defence submitted that the US soldiers had worn no distinctive emblem and that their mission had been undertaken for the purpose of sabotage. The Defence considered, therefore, that they were not entitled to the privileges of a lawful belligerent, though it was admitted that they were entitled to a lawful trial even if they were treated as spies.[2737]

2961. In the Sawada case before the US Military Commission at Shanghai in 1946, the accused was charged with "knowingly, unlawfully and wilfully" denying the status of prisoner of war to eight members of the US forces who were "tried and sentenced by a Japanese Military Tribunal in violation of the laws of war". The Military Commission considered that "false and fraudulent charges" and "false and fraudulent evidence" contributed to the criminal character of the trial.[2738]

2962. In the Isayama case in 1946, the US Military Commission at Shanghai tried Lieutenant-General Harukei Isayama and other members of the Japanese Military Tribunal on charges that members of the Japanese Military Tribunal did "permit, authorize and direct an illegal, unfair, unwarranted and false trial [of prisoners of war] . . . upon false and fraudulent evidence and without affording said prisoners of war a fair hearing". The Commission found that the accused had falsified the records of interrogation of 14 US airmen, that the US airmen were not afforded the opportunity to obtain evidence or to call witnesses on their own behalf, that they were not permitted to be represented by legal counsel and that they were executed in violation of international law. The Commission found Lieutenant-General Isayama and the seven other accused guilty of all counts alleged.[2739]

2963. In its judgement in the Rhode case in 1947, the UK Military Court at Wuppertal found that "executions in the absence of a fair trial" amounted to war crimes.[2740]

2964. In its judgement in the Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg held that:

> The trials of the accused . . . did not approach a semblance of fair trial or justice. The accused . . . were arrested and secretly transported to Germany and other countries for trial. They were held incommunicado. In many instances they were denied [2736] UK, Military Court at Almelo, Almelo case, Judgement, 24–26 November 1945.

[2737] US, Military Commission at Rome, Dostler case, Judgement, 12 October 1945.
[2738] US, Military Commission at Shanghai, Sawada case, Judgement, 15 April 1946.
[2739] US, Military Commission at Shanghai, Isayama case, Judgement, 25 July 1946.
[2740] UK, Military Court at Wuppertal, Rhode case, Judgement, 1 June 1946.

the right to introduce evidence, to be confronted by witnesses against them, or to present witnesses on their own behalf. They were tried secretly and denied the right of counsel of their own choice, and occasionally denied the aid of any counsel. No indictment was served in many instances and the accused learned only a few moments before the trial of the nature of the alleged crime for which he was to be tried. The entire proceedings from the beginning to end were secret and no public record was allowed to be made of them.

The Tribunal concluded that the trial was "unfair".[2741]

Other National Practice

2965. It is reported that, during the Algerian war of independence, the ALN stated that prisoners were only executed after having been tried and found guilty of violating the laws and customs of war.[2742]

2966. At the CDDH, Belgium stated that the guarantees contained in Article 6 AP II were based on customary international law and human rights law.[2743]

2967. During the Chinese civil war, the Chinese Communist Party issued instructions concerning the treatment of captured combatants which provided that "those must-be-killed notorious criminals shall be executed by shooting after being tried and convicted by court, and shall not be beaten to death or by other illegal manners which would make us lose the sympathy of the society". According to Deng Xiaoping, POWs considered "notorious criminals" were executed, but only following trial and conviction by a court.[2744]

2968. The instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, state that " every person has the right to a fair trial by a regularly constituted tribunal respecting the fundamental judicial guarantees".[2745]

2969. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[2746]

2970. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 85 AP I to be part of customary international law.[2747]

2971. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that . . . no sentence be passed and penalty

[2741] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case, Judgement, 4 December 1947.
[2742] Le problème des prisonniers de guerre, El Moudjahid, Vol. 1, p. 474.
[2743] Belgium, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VIII, CDDH/I/SR.33, 19 March 1975, p. 323, § 41.
[2744] China, Instruction on Implementing the Works of Land Reform and Consolidation of the Party by Deng Xiaoping, 6 June 1948, Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping, Vol. 1, The People's Press, Beijing, p. 122.
[2745] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1995, Section 6, § 64.
[2746] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[2747] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.6.

executed except pursuant to conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure". He added that "the basic core of Protocol II is, of course, reflected in common article 3 of the 1949 [Geneva] Conventions and therefore is, and should be a part of generally accepted customary law. This specifically includes its prohibitions on . . . punishment without due process."[2748]

2972. In 1992, in reports submitted pursuant to paragraph 5 of UN Security Council Resolution 771 (1992) on grave breaches of GC IV committed in the former Yugoslavia, the US described acts of "summary executions" perpetrated by the parties to the conflict.[2749]

2973. In a concurrent resolution adopted in 2000, the US Congress expressed its sense concerning the war crimes committed by the Japanese military during the Second World War, in particular summary executions of many US military and civilian prisoners.[2750]

2974. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[2751]

2975. In 1990, an ICRC report on the army's activities in one region of a State concluded that the army behaved in an alarming way towards its detainees, by engaging in summary executions.[2752]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

2976. In a resolution adopted in 1995 on violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, the UN Security Council condemned:

> in the strongest possible terms the violations of international humanitarian law and of human rights by Bosnian Serb and paramilitary forces in the areas of Srebrenica, žepa, Banja Luka and Sanski Most as described in the report of the Secretary-General of 27 November 1995 and showing a consistent pattern of summary executions.[2753]

[2748] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 427–428 and 430–431.

[2749] US, Former Yugoslavia: Grave Breaches of the Fourth Geneva Convention, annexed to Letter dated 22 September 1992 to the UN Secretary-General, UN Doc. S/24583, 23 September 1992, p. 4.

[2750] US, House of Representatives (Senate concurring), Concurrent Resolution, H.CON.RES. 357, 106th Congress, 2nd Session, 19 June 2000.

[2751] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

[2752] ICRC archive document.

[2753] UN Security Council, Res. 1034, 21 December 1995, preamble and § 2.

2977. In a resolution adopted in 1998 on the situation of human rights in Kosovo, the UN General Assembly called upon the government of the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro) "to respect all human rights and fundamental freedoms fully ... especially in regard to respect for ... free and fair trials".[2754] It also strongly condemned "the overwhelming number of human rights violations ... including summary executions".[2755]

2978. In a resolution adopted in 2000 on the situation of human rights in Sudan, the UN General Assembly called upon the government of Sudan "to ensure that all accused persons are held in ordinary custody and receive prompt, just and fair trials under internationally recognized standards".[2756]

2979. In numerous resolutions, the UN Commission on Human Rights has denounced summary executions and/or extra-judicial killings committed during the armed conflicts in Afghanistan,[2757] El Salvador,[2758] Georgia,[2759] Guatemala,[2760] Sudan,[2761] former Yugoslavia[2762] and Zaire.[2763]

2980. In resolutions adopted in 1991 and 1992 in the context of the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait, the UN Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Iraq for not treating prisoners of war and detained civilians according to recognised IHL principles and insisted that it abstain from acts of violence against them, including summary executions.[2764]

2981. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the government of Croatia "to pursue vigorously prosecutions against those suspected of past violations of international humanitarian law and human rights, while ensuring that the rights to a fair trial ... are afforded to all persons suspected of such crimes".[2765]

2982. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all parties to hostilities to protect all civilians from violations of human rights and IHL, including summary executions.[2766]

[2754] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 5.
[2755] UN General Assembly, Res. 53/164, 9 December 1998, § 8.
[2756] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 4(d).
[2757] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1986/40, 12 March 1986, § 6; Res. 1987/58, 11 March 1987, § 6.
[2758] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1990/77, 7 March 1990, § 2; Res. 1991/75, 6 March 1991, § 5.
[2759] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1994/59, 4 March 1994, § 1.
[2760] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1985/36, 13 March 1985, § 2; Res. 1991/51, 6 March 1991, §§ 5 and 7.
[2761] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/60, 10 March 1993, § 1; Res. 1994/79, 9 March 1994, § 2; Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, § 2.
[2762] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/7, 23 February 1993, § 10.
[2763] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1997/58, 15 April 1997, § 2.
[2764] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1991/67, 6 March 1991, § 5; Res. 1992/60, 3 March 1992, § 3.
[2765] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 22.
[2766] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, § 15.

2983. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[2767]

2984. In 1991, in a report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that he had received reports alleging that armed opposition groups had carried out mass executions of soldiers and civilians after the surrender of a garrison in 1990. Other instances of summary executions of militia members and governmental troops had also been reported. The Special Rapporteur made reference to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and GC III.[2768]

2985. In 1996, in a report on the situation of human rights in the Sudan, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights stated that "those captured have been and are . . . summarily executed".[2769]

2986. In 1991, in the context of the conflict in El Salvador, ONUSAL examined the case of the summary execution of a member of the rural police a few days after his capture by the FMLN. The local FMLN Command argued that it had to carry out such an extreme measure at the request of the community that feared his release. ONUSAL considered the case to be a violation of the guarantees offered by AP II, in particular Articles 4(2)(a), 5 and 6.[2770]

2987. In its report in 1993, the UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador stated that:

> When punishing persons accused of crimes, it is necessary to observe the basic elements of due process. International humanitarian law does not in any way exempt the parties to a conflict from that obligation, and international human rights law does not exempt the party which has effective control of a territory from that obligation with respect to persons within its jurisdiction. On the contrary, those two sources of law expressly prohibit the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted independent and impartial tribunal attaching all the judicial guarantees generally recognized as indispensable . . . In none of the cases mentioned above is there any evidence that a proper trial was held prior to the execution.[2771]

Other International Organisations

2988. With respect to the drafting of the 1950 ECHR, the Committee of Experts of the Council of Europe stated that the right to recognition before the law could

[2767] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

[2768] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Afghanistan, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1991/31, 28 January 1991, §§ 61 and 65–66.

[2769] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Sudan, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/62, 20 February 1996, § 9.

[2770] ONUSAL, Director of the Human Rights Division, Report, UN Doc. A/46/658-S/23222, 15 November 1991, Annex, §§ 62–63.

[2771] UN Commission on the Truth for El Salvador, Report, UN Doc. S/25500, 1 April 1993, Annex, pp. 152–153.

be deduced from the other Articles and therefore did not need to be expressly indicated.[2772]

2989. In 2000, the Rapporteur of the Council of Europe reported an account by a Russian soldier of the summary execution of captured combatants "because they were snipers". In the report's recommendations, the Rapporteur asked the Russian federal authorities to treat captured fighters in accordance with IHL and in particular to stop summary executions of captured snipers.[2773]

International Conferences

2990. The 20th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1965 adopted a resolution on the treatment of prisoners of war in which it called upon all authorities involved in armed conflicts "to ensure that every prisoner of war is given the treatment and full measure of protection prescribed by the Geneva Convention of 1949 on the protection of prisoners of war, including the judicial safeguards afforded to every prisoner of war charged with any offence".[2774]

2991. In the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, the World Conference on Human Rights in 1993, expressed dismay and condemnation that "gross and systematic violations and situations that constitute serious obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights continue to occur in all parts of the world, [including] ... summary and arbitrary executions".[2775]

2992. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "strict orders are given to prevent all serious violations of international humanitarian law, including ... summary executions ... and threats to carry out such actions".[2776]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

2993. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what the Court in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[2777]

2994. In the Karadžić and Mladić case before the ICTY in 1996, the accused were charged with genocide, crimes against humanity and violations of the [2772] Council of Europe, Committee of Experts, CE Doc. H(70)7, § 41.f.

[2773] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Opinion on Russia's request for membership in the light of the situation in Chechnya, Doc. 7231, 2 February 1995, § 75.
[2774] 20th International Conference of the Red Cross, Vienna, 2–9 October 1965, Res. XXIV.
[2775] World Conference on Human Rights, Vienna, 14–25 June 1993, Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, UN Doc. A/CONF.157/23, 12 July 1993, § I(30).
[2776] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(b).
[2777] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.

laws and customs of war for the summary executions of Bosnian Muslims who were hors de combat because of injury, surrender or capture.[2778] In its review of the indictments, the ICTY Trial Chamber confirmed all counts.[2779]

2995. In its decision on the defence motion for interlocutory appeal on jurisdiction in the Tadić case in 1995, the ICTY Appeals Chamber held that Article 3 of the 1993 ICTY Statute also covered violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[2780]

2996. In the Erdemović case in 1998, the accused pleaded guilty to the charge of a violation of the laws and customs of war for his participation in the summary executions of Bosnian Muslims who, inter alia, had surrendered following the fall of Srebrenica. He was sentenced to five years' imprisonment.[2781]

2997. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

> 3. The Committee would find it useful if, in their future reports, States parties could provide more detailed information on the steps taken to ensure that equality before the courts, including equal access to courts, fair and public hearings and competence, impartiality and independence of the judiciary are established by law and guaranteed in practice . . .
> 4. The provisions of article 14 apply to all courts and tribunals within the scope of that article whether ordinary or specialized. The Committee notes the existence, in many countries, of military or special courts which try civilians. This could present serious problems as far as the equitable, impartial and independent administration of justice is concerned. Quite often the reason for the establishment of such courts is to enable exceptional procedures to be applied which do not comply with normal standards of justice. While the Covenant does not prohibit such categories of courts, nevertheless the conditions which it lays down clearly indicate that the trying of civilians by such courts should be very exceptional and take place under conditions which genuinely afford the full guarantees stipulated in article 14. The Committee has noted a serious lack of information in this regard in the reports of some States parties whose judicial institutions include such courts for the trying of civilians. In some countries such military and special courts do not afford the strict guarantees of the proper administration of justice in accordance with the requirements of article 14 which are essential for the effective protection of human rights. If States parties decide in circumstances of a public emergency as contemplated by article 4 to derogate from normal procedures required under article 14, they should ensure that such derogations do not exceed those strictly required by the exigencies of the actual situation, and respect the other conditions in paragraph 1 of article 14.[2782]

[2778] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Second Indictment, 16 November 1995, §§ 6, 19–20, 21–23 and 51.
[2779] ICTY, Karadžić and Mladić case, Review of the Indictments, 11 July 1996, §§ 21–41 and 86–95.
[2780] ICTY, Tadić case, Interlocutory Appeal, 2 October 1995, p. 51, § 89 and p. 73, §§ 134 and 136.
[2781] ICTY, Erdemović case, Sentencing Judgement bis, 5 March 1998, Part X (Disposition). (The accused originally pleaded guilty to the charge of a crime against humanity. The Appeals Chamber held that the plea was not informed and ordered a new trial.)
[2782] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, §§ 3–4.

2998. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC stated that:

> 11. ... States parties may in no circumstances invoke article 4 of the Covenant as justification for acting in violation of humanitarian law or peremptory norms of international law, for instance ... by deviating from fundamental principles of fair trial.
> ...
> 16. Safeguards related to derogation, as embodied in article 4 of the Covenant, are based on the principles of legality and the rule of law inherent in the Covenant as a whole. As certain elements of the right to a fair trial are explicitly guaranteed under international humanitarian law during armed conflict, the Committee finds no justification for derogation from these guarantees during other emergency situations. The Committee is of the opinion that the principles of legality and the rule of law require that fundamental requirements of fair trial must be respected during a state of emergency. Only a court of law may try and convict a person for a criminal offence.[2783]

2999. In its views in Bahamonde v. Equatorial Guinea in 1993, the HRC stated that one of the guarantees contained in Article 14(1) of the 1966 ICCPR was the general right of the accused to be granted access to a court.[2784]

3000. In Äärelä and Näkkäläjärvi v. Finland in 2001, the HRC stated that:

> It is the fundamental duty of the courts to ensure equality between the parties, including the ability to contest all the argument and evidence adduced by the other party.... These circumstances disclose a failure of the Court of Appeal to provide full opportunity to each party to challenge the submissions of the other, thereby violating the principles of equality before the courts and of fair trial contained in article 14, paragraph 1, of the Covenant.[2785]

3001. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following: "All persons shall have the right to have their cause heard and shall be equal before the courts and tribunals in the determination of their rights and obligations."[2786]

3002. In its decision in Union Inter-Africaine des Droits de l'Homme et al. v Angola in 1997, concerning deportations of "illegal immigrants", the ACiHPR stated that "it is unacceptable to deport individuals without giving them the possibility to plead their case before the competent national courts as this is contrary to the spirit and letter of the [1981 ACHPR] and international law".[2787]

[2783] HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, §§ 11 and 16.
[2784] HRC, Bahamonde v. Equatorial Guinea, Views, 20 October 1993, § 9.4.
[2785] HRC, Äärelä and Näkkäläjärvi v. Finland, Views, 24 October 2001, § 7.4, see also Wolf v. Panama, Views, 26 March 1992, § 6.6 (equality of arms requires an adversarial procedure).
[2786] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(a).
[2787] ACiHPR, Union Inter-Africaine des Droits de l'Homme and Others v. Angola, Decision, 11 November 1997, § 20.

3003. In its decision in Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224/98) in 2000, the ACiHPR, referring to Article 7(1)(d) of the 1981 ACHPR, stated that:

> 60. ... The Commission finds the selection of serving military officers, with little or no knowledge of law, as members of the Tribunal in contravention of Principle 10 of the Basic Principles on the Independence of Judges. The said Principle states: "Persons selected for judicial office shall be individuals of integrity and ability with appropriate training or qualifications in law".
> 61. In the same vein, the Commission considers the arraignment, trial and conviction of Malaolu [i.e. the editor of an independent Nigerian newspaper], a civilian, by a Special Military Tribunal, presided over by serving military officers, who are still subject to military commands, without more, prejudicial to the basic principles of fair hearing guaranteed by Article 7 of the [1981 ACHPR].
> 62. ... [Military tribunals] should not, in any circumstances whatsoever, have jurisdiction over civilians. Similarly, Special Tribunals should not try offences that fall within the jurisdiction of regular courts.[2788]

3004. In its decision in Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (129/94) in 1995, concerning the revocation of the jurisdiction of the Court to review the legality of decrees, the ACiHPR stated that:

> 13. The ousting of jurisdiction of the courts ... constitutes an attack of incalculable proportions on Article 7 [1981 ACHPR] ... An attack of this sort is especially invidious, because, while it is a violation of human rights in itself, it permits other violations of rights to go unredressed.
> 14. Article 26 [1981 ACHPR] ... clearly envisions the protection of the courts which have traditionally been the bastion of protection of the individual's rights against the abuses of State power.[2789]

3005. In its decision in Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (151/96) in 1999, relating to the setting up of special military tribunals by decree to try persons accused of plotting to overthrow the government and thereby excluding ordinary courts from taking up cases placed before the special tribunals ("ouster clauses"), the ACiHPR stated that:

> 17. ... The ouster clauses ... were found to constitute violations of Article 7 [1981 ACHPR]. The Commission must take this opportunity, not only to reiterate the conclusions made before, that the constitution and procedures of the special tribunals violate Articles 7(1)(a) and (c) and 26, but to recommend an end to the practice of removing entire areas of law from the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts.
> ...
> 21. [A] Commission's previous decisions found that the special tribunals violated the Charter because their judges were specially appointed for each case by the executive branch, and would include on the panel at least one, and often a majority, of military or law enforcement officers, in addition to a sitting or retired judge. The Commission here reiterates its previous decisions and declares that the trial of these persons before a special tribunal violates Article 7(1)(d) and Article 26.

[2788] ACiHPR, Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224/98), Decision, 23 October–6 November 2000, §§ 60–62.
[2789] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (129/94), Decision, 13-22 March 1995, §§ 13–14.

...

23. ... The setting up of a parallel system has the danger of undermining the court system and creates the likelihood of unequal application of the laws.[2790]

3006. In its decision in Avocats Sans Frontières v. Burundi (231/99) in 2000, the ACiHPR stated that:

The right to equal treatment by a jurisdiction, especially in criminal matters, means, in the first place, that both the defence and the public prosecutor shall have equal opportunity to prepare and present their pleas and indictment during the trial. Simply put, they should argue their cases before the jurisdiction on an equal footing. Secondly it entails the equal treatment of all accused persons by jurisdictions charged with trying them. This does not mean that identical treatment should be meted to all accused. The idea here is the principle that when objective facts are alike, the response of the judiciary should also be similar. There is a breach of the principle of equality if judicial or administrative decisions are applied in a discriminatory manner.[2791]

3007. In its decision in Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria in 2001, the ACiHPR stated that:

It is our view that the provisions of Article 7 [1981 ACHPR] should be considered non-derogable providing as they do the minimum protection to citizens and military officers alike ... The military tribunals are not negated by the mere fact of being presided over by military officers. The critical factor is whether the process is fair, just and impartial.[2792]

3008. In its report in Ofner and Hopfinger v. Austria in 1962, the ECiHR stated that:

Article 6 of the Convention does not define the notion of a "fair trial" in a criminal case. Paragraph 3 of the Article enumerates certain specific rights which constitute essential elements of that general notion, and paragraph 2 may be considered to add another element. The words "minimum rights", however, clearly indicate that the five rights specifically enumerated in paragraph (3) are not exhaustive ... The Commission is of the opinion that what is generally called "the equality of arms", that is the procedural equality of the accused with the public prosecutor, is an inherent element of a "fair trial".[2793]

3009. In its judgement in the Golder v. UK case, the ECtHR stated that Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR:

[2790] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation v. Nigeria (151/96), Decision, 15 November 1999, §§ 17, 21 and 23.
[2791] ACiHPR, Avocats sans Frontières v. Burundi (231/99), Decision, 23 October-6 November 2000, § 27.
[2792] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria (218/98), Decision, 23 April–7 May 2001, § 27.
[2793] ECiHR, Ofner and Hopfinger v. Austria, Report, 23 November 1962, § 46.

28. . . . does not state a right of access to the courts or tribunals in express terms. It enunciates rights which are distinct but stem from the same basic idea and which, taken together, make up a single right not specifically defined in the narrower sense of the term. It is the duty of the Court to ascertain, by means of interpretation, whether access to the courts constitutes one factor or aspect of this right.
. . .
31. The terms of [Article 6(1)] of the European Convention, taken in their context, provide reason to think that this right is included among the guarantees set forth.
. . .
35. . . . It would be inconceivable, in the opinion of the Court, that [Article 6(1)] should describe in detail the procedural guarantees afforded to parties in a pending lawsuit and should not first protect that which alone makes it in fact possible to benefit from such guarantees, that is, access to a court. The fair, public and expeditious characteristics of judicial proceedings are of no value at all if there are no judicial proceedings.
36. Taking all the preceding considerations together, it follows that the right of access constitutes an element which is inherent in the right stated by [Article 6(1)] . . . The Court thus reaches the conclusion . . . that [Article 6(1)] secures to everyone the right to have any claim relating to his civil rights and obligations brought before a court or tribunal. In this way the Article embodies the "right to a court", of which the right of access, that is the right to institute proceedings before courts in civil matters, constitutes one aspect only. To this are added the guarantees laid down by Article 6 para. 1 (art. 6–1) as regards both the organisation and composition of the court, and the conduct of the proceedings. In sum, the whole makes up the right to a fair hearing.[2794]

3010. In its judgement in Engel v. Netherlands in 1976, concerning procedures for breaches of military discipline, the ECtHR stated that the right to fair trial is not limited to cases categorised as "criminal" by the State. It added that:

If the Contracting States were able at their discretion to classify an offence as disciplinary instead of criminal . . . the operation of the fundamental clauses of Articles 6 and 7 would be subordinated to their sovereign will. A latitude extending this far might lead to results incompatible with the purpose and object of the Convention.

The Court further stated that "the criteria to be taken into account when deciding whether a 'disciplinary accusation' is in fact a criminal matter are: 'the very nature of the offence' and 'the degree of severity of the penalty that the person concerned risks incurring'".[2795]

3011. In its judgement in the Deweer case in 1980, the ECtHR stated that one of the elements contained in Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR was the general right of persons to access a court.[2796]

3012. In its judgement in Borgers v. Belgium in 1991, the ECtHR found that:

[2794] ECtHR, Golder v. UK, Judgement, 21 February 1975, §§ 28–36.
[2795] ECtHR, Engel v. Netherlands, Judgement, 8 June 1976, §§ 81–82.
[2796] ECtHR, Deweer case, Judgement, 27 February 1980, § 49.

27. In the present case the hearing on 18 June 1985 before the Court of Cassation concluded with the avocat général's submissions to the effect that Mr Borger's appeal should not be allowed . . . At no time could the latter reply to those submissions: before hearing them, he was unaware of their contents because they had not been communicated to him in advance; thereafter he was prevented from doing so by statute . . .

    The Court cannot see the justification for such restrictions on the rights of the defence. Once the avocat général had made submissions unfavourable to the applicant, the latter had a clear interest in being able to submit his observations on them before argument was closed. The fact that the Court of Cassation's jurisdiction is confined to questions of law makes no difference in this respect.
28. Further and above all, the inequality was increased even more by the avocat général's participation, in an advisory capacity, in the Court's deliberations. Assistance of this nature, given with total objectivity, may be of some use in drafting judgments, although this task falls in the first place to the Court of Cassation itself. It is however hard to see how such assistance can remain limited to stylistic considerations, which are in any case often indissociable from substantive matters, if it is in addition intended . . . to contribute towards maintaining the consistency of the case-law . . .
29. In conclusion, having regard to the requirements of the rights of the defence and of the principle of the equality of arms and to the role of appearances in determining whether they have been complied with, the Court finds a violation of Article 6 para. 1 [1950 ECHR].[2797]

3013. In its judgement in Bulut v. Austria in 1996, the ECtHR stated that "under the principle of equality of arms, as one of the features of the wider concept of a fair trial, each party must be afforded a reasonable opportunity to present his case under conditions that do not place him at a disadvantage vis-à-vis his opponent".[2798]

3014. In its judgement in Belziuk v. Poland in 1998, the ECtHR, recalling "the fundamental principles which emerge from its jurisprudence relating to Article 6 § 1 in conjunction with paragraph 3 (c)" of the 1950 ECHR, stated that:

The principle of equality of arms is only one feature of the wider concept of a fair trial, which also includes the fundamental right that criminal proceedings should be adversarial. The right to an adversarial trial means, in a criminal case, that both prosecution and defence must be given the opportunity to have knowledge of and comment on the observations filed and the evidence adduced by the other party. Various ways are conceivable in which national law may secure that this requirement is met. However, whatever method is chosen, it should ensure that the other party is aware that observations have been filed and gets a real opportunity to comment thereon.[2799]

[2797] ECtHR, Borgers v. Belgium, Judgement, 30 October 1991, §§ 27–29.
[2798] ECtHR, Bulut v. Austria, Judgement, 22 February 1996, § 47.
[2799] ECtHR, Belziuk v. Poland, Judgement, 25 March 1998, § 37.

3015. In its judgement in McElhinney v. Ireland in 2001, relating to non-access because of the principle of sovereign immunity, the ECtHR stated that:

The right of access to court is not, however, absolute, but may be subject to limitations; these are permitted by implication since the right of access by its very nature calls for regulation by the State. In this respect, the Contracting States enjoy a certain margin of appreciation . . . [The ECtHR] must be satisfied that the limitations applied do not restrict or reduce the access left to the individual in such a way or to such an extent that the very essence of the right is impaired. Furthermore, a limitation will not be compatible with Article 6 § 1 [1950 ECHR] if it does not pursue a legitimate aim and if there is no reasonable relationship of proportionality between the means employed and the aim sought to be achieved.[2800]

3016. In a resolution adopted in 1968 concerning the law applicable to emergency situations, the IACiHR declared that:

The suspension of constitutional guarantees or state of siege is compatible with the system of representative democratic government only if enacted under the following conditions:

. . .

e. When it does not in any manner presuppose the suspension of . . . the right to due process of law.[2801]

3017. In 1981, in a report on the situation of human rights in Colombia, the IACiHR recommended that Colombia issue legal regulations so that persons arrested or detained were guaranteed the right to a fair trial.[2802]

3018. In its doctrine concerning judicial guarantees and the right to personal liberty and security published in 1982, the IACiHR stated that replacing regular courts with military courts, the judges in which are beholden to the political power and less well trained in law, undermines the guarantees to which all accused persons are entitled.[2803]

3019. In 2002, in its report on terrorism and human rights, the IACiHR stated that:

Where an emergency situation is involved that threatens the independence or security of a state, the fundamental components of the right to due process and to a fair trial must nevertheless be respected . . . The basic components of the right to a fair trial cannot be justifiably suspended. These protections include, in particular, the right to a fair trial by a competent, independent and impartial court for persons charged with criminal offenses, the presumption of innocence, the right to be informed promptly and intelligibly of any criminal charge, the right to adequate time

[2800] ECtHR, McElhinney v. Ireland, Judgement, 21 November 2001, § 34.

[2801] IACiHR, Resolution adopted at the 1968 Session, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.19 Doc. 32, Inter-American Yearbook on Human Rights, 1968, pp. 59-61.

[2802] IACiHR, Report on the situation of human rights in Colombia, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.53 Doc. 22, 30 June 1981, p. 221.

[2803] IACiHR, Doctrine concerning judicial guarantees and the right to personal liberty and security, reprinted in Ten years of activities (1971–1981), General Secretariat of the IACiHR, Washington, D.C., 1982, p. 331.

and facilities to prepare a defense, the right to legal assistance of one's choice for free legal counsel where the interests of justice require, the right not to testify against oneself and protection against coerced confessions, the right to attendance of witnesses, the right of appeal, as well as respect for the principle of non-retroactive application of penal laws.[2804]

3020. In its advisory opinion in the Judicial Guarantees case in 1987, the IACtHR stressed that the "concept of due process" in Article 8 of the 1969 ACHR "should be understood as applicable, in the main, to all judicial guarantees referred to in the American Convention", even where there had been legitimate derogations from certain rights under Article 27 of the 1969 ACHR. It further noted that:

Reading Article 8 together with Articles 7(6), 25, and 27(2) of the Convention leads to the conclusion that the principles of due process of law cannot be suspended in states of exception insofar as they are necessary conditions for the procedural institutions regulated by the Convention to be considered judicial guarantees.[2805]

3021. In its judgement in several cases concerning Argentina in 1992, the IACiHR, referring to the judgement of the IACtHR in the Velásquez Rodríguez case of 1988, stated that:

36. Under Article 1.1 of the [1969 ACHR], the States Parties are obliged "to respect the rights and freedoms recognized herein and to ensure to all persons subject to their jurisdiction the free and full exercise of those rights and freedoms . . ."
37. The laws and the Decree [granting general amnesty] sought to, and effectively did obstruct the exercise of the petitioners' right under Article 8.1 [1969 ACHR] cited earlier. With enactment and enforcement of the laws and the Decree, Argentina has failed to comply with its duty to guarantee the rights to which Article 8.1 [1969 ACHR] refers, has abused those rights and has violated the Convention.[2806]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3022. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

No sentence may be passed and no penalty may be executed on a person found guilty of a penal offence related to the armed conflict without trial. The conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the [2804] IACiHR, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.116 Doc. 5 rev. 1 corr., 22 October 2002, §§ 245 and 247.

[2805] IACtHR, Judicial Guarantees case, Advisory Opinion, 6 October 1987, §§ 29–30.
[2806] IACiHR, Cases 10.147, 10.181, 10.240, 10.262, 10.309 and 10.311 (Argentina), Report, 2 October 1992, §§ 36–37.

generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . the right to fair trial.[2807]

Delegates also teach that depriving a person of the rights of fair and regular trial constitutes a grave breach of the law of war.[2808]

3023. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols underlines the relevance of Article 6(2) AP II for the interpretation of common Article 3(1)(d) of the 1949 Geneva Conventions, stating that:

> Article 6 lays down some principles of universal application which every responsibly organized body must, and can, respect. It supplements and develops common Article 3, paragraph 1, subparagraph (1) (d), which prohibits "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples." This very general rule required clarification to strengthen the prohibition of summary justice and of convictions without trial, which it already covers. Article 6 reiterates the principles contained in the Third and Fourth Conventions, and for the rest is largely based on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, particularly Article 15, from which no derogation is permitted, even in the case of a public emergency threatening the life of the nation.[2809]

3024. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "the following principles in particular must be respected . . . the passing of sentences and carrying out of executions without fair trial are specifically prohibited".[2810]

3025. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated, in relation to civilians, that "summary executions" and "sentencing without a fair trial" are prohibited.[2811]

3026. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC emphasised, in relation to civilian persons who refrain from acts of hostility, that "the passing of sentences without a fair trial in particular" is prohibited.[2812]

[2807] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(a).

[2808] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 776(h).

[2809] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 4597.

[2810] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.

[2811] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

[2812] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War!, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

3027. In a summary note on respect for IHL in an internal armed conflict, the ICRC stated that "the ICRC urges the authorities to take all necessary measures to put an end to ... the extra-judicial killings that are feared to occur in some cases".[2812]

3028. In a working paper on war crimes submitted in 1997 to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the following war crime, when committed in an international armed conflict, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court: "wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or another protected person of the rights to fair and regular trial". The working paper also proposed that the crime of "passing sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all judicial guarantees recognized as indispensable", as a serious violation of IHL applicable in non-international armed conflicts, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court.[2813]

3029. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in the context of the conflict in Colombia, the ICRC condemned two separate incidents > in which wounded combatants being evacuated by its delegates were seized and summarily executed by men belonging to enemy forces. These acts, which constitute grave breaches of international humanitarian law, have obliged the organization to suspend all medical evacuations of wounded combatants within Colombia.[2814]

VI. Other Practice

3030. In 1979, in a meeting with the ICRC, the leader of an armed opposition group stated that he was in favour of executing POWs who attempted to escape.[2815]

3031. In 1984 and 1988, an armed opposition group told the ICRC that it generally refrained from executing prisoners in reprisal and only pronounced death sentences on the basis of at least three witness accounts.[2816]

3032. In 1985, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group stated that it had changed its policy from executing captured combatants immediately to giving them a choice between joining the movement and being transferred to party authorities.[2817]

3033. In 1987, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group stated that prisoners were given the chance to repent and that detainees were not

[2812] ICRC archive document.
[2813] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, §§ 1(a)(v) and 3(v).
[2814] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/35, Colombia: ICRC condemns grave breaches of IHL, suspends medical evacuations of wounded combatants, 3 October 2000.
[2815] ICRC archive document.
[2816] ICRC archive documents.
[2817] ICRC archive document.

mistreated. It maintained, however, that if a prisoner admitted to having killed civilians or combatants, the prisoner should be put to death. When the ICRC protested against the sentencing of combatants as criminals, the group stated that religious law had precedence over IHL.[2818]

3034. In 1988, in a meeting with the ICRC, an armed opposition group justified the execution of captured combatants for reasons of security, as a means of avoiding reprisals, or simply as revenge.[2819]

3035. In 1990, Amnesty International condemned summary executions ordered by the Iraqi authorities in the context of the Gulf War.[2820]

3036. In 1994, in a report entitled "Medical Practice in the Context of Internal Armed Conflict", the Peruvian Medical Federation for Human Rights documented the practice of trying civilian persons accused of being involved in insurgent activities by military courts, and alleged that the trials were frequently conducted by "faceless judges" and that the courts were not impartial.[2821]

3037. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that:

> No sentence shall be passed and no penalty shall be executed on a person found guilty of an offence without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by the community of nations.[2822]

Trial by an independent, impartial and regularly constituted court

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3038. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that, in the case of armed conflict not of an international character occurring in the territory of one of the High Contracting Parties:

> (1) . . . the following acts are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to [persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including members of armed forces who have laid down their arms and those placed hors de combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause]:
> . . .

[2818] ICRC archive document. [2819] ICRC archive document.
[2820] Amnesty International, News Release No. MDE 14/15/90, 3 October 1990.
[2821] Peru, Federación Médica Peruana Asociación Pro Derechos Humanos, Medical Practice in the Context of Internal Armed Conflict, August 1994.
[2822] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9, IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 333.

(b) the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples.

3039. Article 84, second paragraph, GC III provides that "in no circumstances whatever shall a prisoner of war be tried by a court of any kind which does not offer the essential guarantees of independence and impartiality as generally recognized".

3040. Article 66 GC IV provides that:

In case of breach of the penal provisions promulgated by it by virtue of the second paragraph of Article 64, the Occupying Power may hand over the accused to its properly constituted, non-political military courts, on condition that the said courts sit in the occupied country. Courts of appeal shall preferably sit in the occupied country.

3041. Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal".

3042. Article 14(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "everyone shall be entitled to a . . . hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal".

3043. Article 8(1) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "every person has the right to a hearing . . . by a competent, independent, and impartial tribunal".

3044. Article 75(4) AP I provides that "no sentence may be passed and no penalty may be executed on a person found guilty of a penal offence related to the armed conflict except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2823]

3045. Article 6(2) AP II provides that "no sentence shall be passed and no penalty shall be executed on a person found guilty of an offence except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by a court offering the essential guarantees of independence and impartiality". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[2824]

3046. Article 7(1)(d) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "every individual shall have the right to have his cause heard. This comprises: . . . (d) the right to be tried within a reasonable time by an impartial court or tribunal."

3047. Article 26 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "States parties to the present Charter shall have the duty to guarantee the independence of the Courts".

3048. Article 40(2)(b)(iii) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (iii) to have the matter determined without delay by a competent, independent and impartial authority or judicial body".

[2823] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[2824] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

3049. Article 67(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "in the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled to a . . . fair hearing conducted impartially".

Other Instruments

3050. Article 10 of the 1948 UDHR states that "everyone is entitled in full equality to a . . . hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal".

3051. Article XXVI of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man provides that "every person accused of an offense has the right to be given an impartial . . . hearing".

3052. The 1985 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary provide that:

1. The independence of the judiciary shall be guaranteed by the State and enshrined in the Constitution or the law of the country. It is the duty of all governmental and other institutions to respect and observe the independence of the judiciary.
2. The judiciary shall decide matters before them impartially, based on facts and according to law, without any restrictions, improper influences, inducements, pressures, threats or interferences, direct or indirect, from any quarter or for any reason.
3. The judiciary shall have jurisdiction over all issues of a judicial nature and shall have exclusive authority to decide whether an issue submitted for its decision is within its competence as defined by law.
4. There shall not be any inappropriate or unwarranted interference with the judicial process, nor shall judicial decisions by the courts be subject to revision. This principle is without prejudice to judicial review or to mitigation or commutation by competent authorities of sentences imposed by the judiciary, in accordance with the law.
5. Everyone shall have the right to be tried by ordinary courts or tribunals using established legal procedures. Tribunals that do not use the duly established procedures of the legal process shall not be created to displace the jurisdiction belonging to the ordinary courts or judicial tribunals.
6. The principle of the independence of the judiciary entitles and requires the judiciary to ensure that judicial proceedings are conducted fairly and that the rights of the parties are respected.

. . .

10. Persons selected for judicial office shall be individuals of integrity and ability with appropriate training or qualifications in law. Any method of judicial selection shall safeguard against judicial appointments for improper motives. In the selection of judges, there shall be no discrimination against a person on the grounds of race, colour, sex, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or status, except that a requirement, that a candidate for judicial office must a national of the country concerned, shall not be considered discriminatory.

Paragraphs 11–12 and 17–20 of the Basic Principles add conditions that ensure security of tenure of judges so that they will not be under pressure to decide a case in a way that is not impartial.

3053. Article 8(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right, "in the determination of any charge against him, to have a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal duly established by law or by treaty".
3054. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3055. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3056. Article 11(1)(a) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind states that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right, "in the determination of any charge against him, to have a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal duly established by law".
3057. Article 47 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone is entitled to a . . . hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3058. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "in any case, a prisoner of war shall not appear in front of a tribunal, whatever its nature, if it does not offer essential guarantees of independence and impartiality".[2825]
3059. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that in non-international armed conflicts, "only a tribunal offering the essential guarantees of independence and impartiality can pronounce a sentence".[2826]
3060. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that depriving a POW or other protected persons of the right to be judged by an impartial court is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2827]
3061. Canada's LOAC Manual provides for the necessity that "the tribunal offers the essential guarantees of independence and impartiality generally recognized as compatible with the rule of law".[2828] It also contains the requirement of "an impartial and regularly constituted tribunal" for internees in occupied territories.[2829] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "no sentences shall be passed or penalties executed for offences

[2825] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.074.
[2826] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[2827] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 55.
[2828] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-6, § 56.
[2829] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-8, § 65.

related to the conflict except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by a court offering the essential guarantees of independence and impartiality".[2830]

3062. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL states that judicial independence and impartiality are essential guarantees that may not be suspended even in situations of armed conflict.[2831]

3063. The Military Manual of the Netherlands prohibits punishments "without a previous judgement by an impartial tribunal".[2832] It also provides with regard to protected persons that "no one may be sentenced and punished without a previous judgement by an impartial and independent tribunal".[2833] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual prohibits sentences pronounced by a tribunal that does not fulfil "the essential requirements of independence and impartiality".[2834]

3064. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "prisoners may only be tried by a civil court if the Detaining Power's Forces may be so tried for the offence involved, and provided the tribunal offers the essential guarantees of independence and impartiality generally recognised as compatible with the rule of law".[2835] It further specifies that "no sentence may be passed and no penalty may be executed on a person found guilty of a penal offence related to the conflict except pursuant to a conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court".[2836]

3065. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "any tribunal shall offer guarantees of independence and impartiality" and that "depriving a person of his right to be tried impartially" is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[2837]

3066. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[2838]

3067. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "only an impartial and regularly constituted tribunal can judge and sentence an accused person".[2839] It further states that "a person found guilty of a criminal offence committed in connection with the armed conflict shall be sentenced only in accordance with a judgement . . . This judgement shall be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted tribunal."[2840] According to the manual, it is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions to deprive POWs and civilians of "their right to be

[2830] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 28.
[2831] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), Instruction No. 4.
[2832] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VII-2.
[2833] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VIII-3.
[2834] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-54.
[2835] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 930(1).
[2836] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4), see also § 1815(1).
[2837] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 8.7.c.(2) and 11.8.b.(1).
[2838] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[2839] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 153, commentary.
[2840] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 175.

tried by an impartial and regularly constituted tribunal, in accordance with the conventions".[2841]

3068. The UK Military Manual states that "in no circumstances whatsoever may [POWs] be tried by a court which does not afford the essential guarantees of independence and impartiality". It explains that POWs, under certain conditions, may be tried by civil courts and that "such courts must in any case comply with the requirement of independence and impartiality".[2842]

3069. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 84 GC III.[2843]

3070. The US Air Force Pamphlet emphasises that "in no event may [a POW] be tried by any court not offering the [generally recognized] essential guarantees of independence and impartiality".[2844]

National Legislation

3071. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2845]

3072. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who deprives civilians or prisoners of war of their right to be tried by an impartial tribunal.[2846]

3073. Georgia's Code of Criminal Procedure states that the right of the accused to be tried by an independent and impartial tribunal cannot be suspended in situations of emergency.[2847]

3074. Germany's Law Introducing the International Crimes Code punishes anyone who, in connection with an international or non-international armed conflict, imposes a severe punishment, particularly the death penalty or imprisonment, without such person having been convicted by an impartial and regularly constituted court.[2848]

3075. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 84 GC III, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(5) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(2) AP II, are punishable offences.[2849]

3076. Kenya's Constitution provides that, if a person is charged with a criminal offence, the case shall be tried by an independent and impartial court established by law.[2850]

[2841] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 192(b), see also § 193(2)(e).
[2842] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 202.
[2843] US, Field Manual (1956), § 160.
[2844] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8.
[2845] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2846] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(2)(c).
[2847] Georgia, Code of Criminal Procedure (1998), Article 8.
[2848] Germany, Law Introducing the International Crimes Code (2002), Article 1, § 8(1)(7).
[2849] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2850] Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(1).

3077. Kuwait's Constitution specifies that the right to be tried by an independent judge is both fundamental and non-derogable.[2851]
3078. Kyrgyzstan's Criminal Code states that emergency situations do not abrogate the right of the accused to be tried by an independent and impartial tribunal.[2852]
3079. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended punishes the imposition of criminal penalties without a previous judgement by an independent court.[2853]
3080. Under the International Crimes Act of the Netherlands, it is a crime to commit, "in the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, a violation of Article 3 common to all the Geneva Conventions", including "the passing of sentences and the carrying out of executions without previous judgement pronounced by a regularly constituted court, affording all the judicial guarantees which are generally recognised as indispensable".[2854]
3081. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2855]
3082. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who deprives civilians or prisoners of war of their right to be tried by an impartial tribunal.[2856]

National Case-law
3083. In the Ohashi case in 1946 before the Australian Military Court at Rabaul, the judge advocate stated that one of the fundamental principles of justice was:

> Consideration by a tribunal comprised of one or more men who will endeavour to judge the accused fairly upon the evidence using their own common knowledge of ordinary affairs and if they are soldiers their military knowledge, honestly endeavouring to discard any preconceived believe in the guilt of [the] accused or any prejudice against him.[2857]

Other National Practice
3084. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[2858]
3085. Country reports on human rights practices issued by the US Department of State in 1983 and 1996 stress that the right to be tried by a trained, impartial [2851] Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Articles 162–163.

[2852] Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 17.
[2853] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[2854] Netherlands, International Crimes Act (2003), Article 6(1)(d).
[2855] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[2856] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(a)(2)(c).
[2857] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Ohashi case, Judgement, 23 March 1946.
[2858] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997,Chapter 5.

and independent judge may not be suspended, even during an emergency situation.[2859]

3086. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that . . . no sentence be passed and penalty executed except pursuant to conviction pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court".[2860]

3087. The Report on US Practice states that "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions". The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[2861]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3088. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3089. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

> The provisions of article 14 apply to all courts and tribunals within the scope of that article whether ordinary or specialized. The Committee notes the existence, in many countries, of military or special courts which try civilians. This could present serious problems as far as the equitable, impartial and independent administration of justice is concerned. Quite often the reason for the establishment of such courts is to enable exceptional procedures to be applied which do not comply with normal standards of justice. While the Covenant does not prohibit such categories of courts, nevertheless the conditions which it lays down clearly indicate that the trying of civilians by such courts should be very exceptional and take place under conditions which genuinely afford the full guarantees stipulated in article 14 . . . If States parties decide in circumstances of a public emergency as contemplated by article 4 to derogate from normal procedures required under article 14, they should ensure that such derogations do not exceed those strictly required by the exigencies of the actual situation, and respect the other conditions in paragraph 1 of article 14.[2862]

[2859] US, Department of State, Country reports on human rights practices for 1983, Nicaragua, p. 637; Country reports on human rights practices for 1996, Cambodia, p. 611.

[2860] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 427–428.

[2861] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

[2862] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 4.

3090. In its views in Karttunen v. Finland in 1992, the HRC defined the elements of guarantees of a fair trial contained in Article 14(1) of the 1966 ICCPR and stated that:

"Impartiality" of the court implies that judges must not harbour preconceptions about the matter put before them, and that they must not act in ways that promote the interests of one of the parties. Where the grounds for disqualification of a judge are laid down by law, it is incumbent upon the court to consider ex officio these grounds and to replace members of the court falling under the disqualification criteria. A trial flawed by the participation of a judge who, under domestic statutes, should have been disqualified cannot normally be considered to be fair or impartial within the meaning of Article 14.[2863]

3091. In its views in Bahamonde v. Equatorial Guinea in 1993, the HRC stated that "a situation where the functions and competencies of the judiciary and the executive are not clearly distinguishable or where the latter is able to control or direct the former is incompatible with the notion of an independent and impartial tribunal".[2864]

3092. In its views in Espinoza de Polay v. Peru in 1997, the HRC found a violation of Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR and stated that "in a system of trial by 'faceless judges', neither the independence nor the impartiality of the judges is guaranteed, since the tribunal, being established ad hoc, may comprise serving members of the armed forces".[2865]

3093. In its decision in Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (60/91) in 1995, the ACiHPR stated that:

The [national law under consideration] describes the constitution of the tribunals, which shall consist of three persons: one judge, one officer of the Army, Navy or Air Force and one officer of the Police Force. Jurisdiction has thus been transferred from the normal courts to a tribunal chiefly composed of persons belonging to the executive branch of government, the same branch that passed the [law under consideration], whose members do not necessarily possess any legal expertise. [Article 7(1)(d) of the 1981 ACHPR] requires the court or tribunal to be impartial. Regardless of the character of the individual members of such tribunals, its composition alone creates the appearance, if not actual lack of impartiality. It thus violates [Article 7(1)(d)].[2866]

3094. In its decision in Centre For Free Speech v. Nigeria (206/97) in 1999, the ACiHPR stated that:

15. The issue of the arraignment and trial of the Journalists must also be addressed here. The complainant alleges that the Journalists were arraigned, tried and convicted by a Special Military Tribunal, presided over by a serving military officer and whose membership also included some serving military officers. This is in violation of the provisions of Article 7 of the [1981

[2863] HRC, Karttunen v. Finland, Views, 23 October 1992, § 7.2.
[2864] HRC, Bahamonde v. Equatorial Guinea, Views, 20 October 1993, § 9.4.
[2865] HRC, Espinoza de Polay v. Peru, Views, 6 October 1997, § 8(5)–(8).
[2866] ACiHPR, Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (60/91), Decision, 13–22 March 1995, § 8.

ACHPR] and Principle 5 of the [1985 Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary].

16. It could not be said that the trial and conviction of the four Journalists by a Special Military Tribunal presided over by a serving military officer who is also a member of the PRC, the body empowered to confirm the sentence, took place under conditions which genuinely afforded the full guarantees of fair hearing as provided for in article 7 of the [1981 ACHPR]. The above act is also in contravention of Article 26 of the [1981 ACHPR].[2867]

3095. In its decision in Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania in 2000, which concerned the trial of military and civilian persons by a special court consisting of army officers, the ACiHPR stated that:

Withdrawing criminal procedure from the competence of the Courts established within the judicial order and conferring onto an extension of the executive necessarily compromises the impartiality of the Courts, to which the African Charter refers. Independent of the qualities of the persons sitting in such jurisdictions, their very existence constitutes a violation of the principles of impartiality and independence of the judiciary and, thereby, of article 7, 1 (d) [1981 ACHPR].[2868]

3096. In its decision in Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria in 2001, the ACiHPR, with regard to the question whether a (military) tribunal, composed of military personnel as judges, meets the requirements of Article 7 of the 1981 ACHPR, stated that:

25. The issues brought before the Commission have to be judged in the environment of a military junta and serving military officers accused of offences punishable in terms of military discipline in any jurisdiction. This caution has to be applied especially as pertaining to serving military officers. The civilian accused is part of the common conspiracy and as such it is reasonable that he be charged with his military co-accused in the same judicial process. We are making this decision conscious of the fact that Africa continues to have military regimes who are inclined to suspend the constitution, govern by decree and seek to oust the application of international obligations . . .
. . .
27. It is our view that the provisions of Article 7 [1981 ACHPR] should be considered non-derogable providing as they do the minimum protection to citizens and military officers alike especially under an unaccountable, undemocratic military regime . . . It is noted that [military or special courts trying civilians] could present serious problems as far as equitable, impartial and independent administration of justice is concerned. Such courts are resorted to in order to justify recourse to exceptional measures which do not comply with normal procedures . . . The military tribunals are not negated by the mere fact of being presided over by military officers. The critical factor is whether the process is fair, just and impartial.
. . .

[2867] ACiHPR, Centre For Free Speech v. Nigeria (206/97), Decision, 15 November 1999, §§ 15–16.
[2868] ACiHPR, Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania (54/91), Decision, 11 May 2000, § 98.

43. The communication alleges that the composition of the tribunal which was presided over by a serving military officer did not meet the requirement of an independent and impartial judicial panel to try the accused, and therefore a violation of Article 7(1)(d) of the Charter . . .
44. It has been stated elsewhere in this decision, that a military tribunal per se is not offensive to the rights in the Charter nor does it imply an unfair or unjust process. We make the point that Military Tribunals must be subject to the same requirements of fairness, openness, and justice, independence, and due process as any other process. What causes offence is failure to observe basic or fundamental standards that would ensure fairness. As that matter has been dealt with above, it is not necessary to find that a tribunal presided over by a military officer is a violation of the Charter. It has already been pointed out that the military tribunal fails the independence test.[2869]

3097. In its judgement in the Piersack case in 1982, the ECtHR held that "impartiality" in Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR meant, inter alia, a lack of prejudice or bias and that there were two aspects to this requirement: "First, the tribunal must be subjectively free of personal prejudice or bias. Secondly, it must also be impartial from an objective viewpoint, that is, it must offer sufficient guarantees to exclude any legitimate doubt in this respect."[2870]

3098. In its judgement in the Belilos case in 1988, the ECtHR gave the following definition of a tribunal:

"Tribunal" is characterised in the substantive sense of the term by its judicial function, that is to say determining matters within its competence on the basis of rules of law and after proceedings conducted in a prescribed manner . . . It must also satisfy a series of further requirements – independence, in particular of the executive; impartiality; duration of its members' term of office; guarantees afforded by its procedure – several of which appear in the text of Article 6(1) itself.[2871]

3099. In Holm v. Sweden before the ECtHR in 1993, the applicant alleged that, "owing to the participation of five active SAP [Swedish Social Democratic Workers Party] members in the jury at the District Court of Stockholm, his case had not been heard by 'an independent and impartial tribunal' within the meaning of [Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR]". In its judgement, the ECtHR held that:

30. In determining whether the District Court could be considered "independent and impartial", the Court will have regard to the principles established in its own case-law . . . which apply to jurors as they do to professional judges and lay judges. Like the Commission, it finds it difficult in this case to examine the issues of independence and impartiality separately . . .
31. It is only the independence and the objective impartiality of the five jurors who were affiliated to the SAP which are in issue; the applicant did not contest their subjective impartiality, finding it impracticable to do so in view of the secrecy of each juror's vote . . .

[2869] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria (218/98), Decision, 23 April–7 May 2001, §§ 25, 27 and 43–44.
[2870] ECtHR, Piersack case, Judgement, 1 October 1982, §§ 28–34; De Cubber case, Judgement, 26 October 1984, §§ 24–26; Findlay v. UK, Judgement, 25 February 1997, § 73.
[2871] ECtHR, Belilos case, Judgement, 29 April 1988, § 64.

It is undisputed that the jurors in question were elected in the prescribed manner by the competent elective body, in conformity with the legal conditions for eligibility: namely that the persons concerned be known to be independent and fair-minded and to have sound judgment and also that different social groups and currents of opinion as well as geographical areas be represented among the jurors . . . The jury was constituted by the drawing of lots after each party to the proceedings had had an opportunity to express its views on the existence of grounds for disqualification of any of the jurors on the list and to exclude an equal number of jurors . . . It was also possible for the parties to appeal to the Court of Appeal against decisions by the District Court on requests for disqualification, and the applicant, albeit unsuccessfully, availed himself of this remedy . . . Before participating in the trial, each juror had to take an oath to the effect that he or she was to carry out the tasks to the best of his or her abilities and in a judicial manner . . .

32. . . . Nevertheless, it is to be noted that there were links between the defendants and the five jurors who had been challenged by the applicant which could give rise to misgivings as to the jurors' independence and impartiality. The jurors in question were active members of the SAP who held or had held offices in or on behalf of the SAP . . .

33. Having regard to the foregoing, the Court considers that the independence and impartiality of the District Court were open to doubt and that the applicant's fears in this respect were objectively justified. Moreover, since the Court of Appeal's jurisdiction, like that of the District Court, was limited by the terms of the jury's verdict, the defect in the proceedings before the latter court could not have been cured by an appeal to the former . . .

In sum, there has been a violation of Article 6 para. 1 . . . in the particular circumstances of the present case.[2872]

3100. In its judgement in Findlay v. UK in 1997 concerning the trial of a soldier by court martial for breaches of military discipline and criminal offences, the ECtHR stated that:

73. The Court recalls that in order to establish whether a tribunal can be considered as "independent", regard must be had, inter alia, to the manner of appointment of its members and their term of office, the existence of guarantees against outside pressures and the question whether the body presents an appearance of independence

. . .

As to the question of "impartiality", there are two aspects to this requirement. First, the tribunal must be subjectively free of personal prejudice or bias. Secondly, it must also be impartial from an objective viewpoint, that is, it must offer sufficient guarantees to exclude any legitimate doubt in this respect . . .

74. The Court observes that the convening officer . . . played a significant role before the hearing of Mr Findlay's case. He decided which charges should be brought and which type of court martial was most appropriate. He convened the court martial and appointed its members and the prosecuting and defending officers . . .

[2872] ECtHR, Holm v. Sweden, Judgement, 25 November 1993, §§ 30–33; see also IACiHR, Case 11.139 (US), Report, 6 December 1996, § 168.

75. The question therefore arises whether the members of the court martial were sufficiently independent of the convening officer and whether the organisation of the trial offered adequate guarantees of impartiality.

. . . It is noteworthy that all the members of the court martial, appointed by the convening officer, were subordinate in rank to him. Many of them, including the president, were directly or ultimately under his command . . . Furthermore, the convening officer had the power, albeit in prescribed circumstances, to dissolve the court martial either before or during the trial . . .

76. In order to maintain confidence in the independence and impartiality of the court, appearances may be of importance. Since all the members of the court martial which decided Mr Findlay's case were subordinate in rank to the convening officer and fell within his chain of command, Mr Findlay's doubts about the tribunal's independence and impartiality could be objectively justified . . .

77. In addition, the Court finds it significant that the convening officer also acted as "confirming officer". Thus, the decision of the court martial was not effective until ratified by him, and he had the power to vary the sentence imposed as he saw fit . . . This is contrary to the well-established principle that the power to give a binding decision which may not be altered by a non-judicial authority is inherent in the very notion of "tribunal" and can also be seen as a component of the "independence" required by Article 6 para. 1 [1950 ECHR].[2873]

3101. In its judgement in Ciraklar v. Turkey in 1998, which concerned the trial by the Turkish State Security Court of a student arrested during a demonstration, the ECtHR reiterated its view that appearances mattered in that ascertainable facts might give rise to legitimate doubts as to the independence and impartiality of a tribunal. In this case, a violation was found because the judges belonged to the army and were subject to military discipline, their designation and appointment required the intervention of the army administration and they only received a four-year renewable mandate. The Court stated that "what is decisive is whether the fear [of non-independence or non-impartiality] can be held to be objectively justified".[2874]

3102. In its judgement in the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR stated that:

For the Court, examination in abstracto of the impugned "constitutional provision" and the "Prohibited Military Areas Decree" leads it to conclude that these texts clearly introduced and authorised the trial of civilians by military courts. It considers that there is no reason to doubt that these courts suffer from the same defects of independence and impartiality which were highlighted in its Incal v. Turkey judgment in respect of the system of National Security Courts established in Turkey by the respondent State (. . .), in particular the close structural links between the executive power and the military officers serving on the "TRNC" military courts. In the Court's view, civilians in the "TRNC" accused of acts characterised as military offences before such courts could legitimately fear that they lacked independence and impartiality.

[2873] ECtHR, Findlay v. UK, Judgement, 25 February 1997, §§ 73–77; see also Ringeisen case, Judgement, 16 July 1971, § 95; Campbell and Fell case, Judgement, 28 June 1984, § 78 and Benthem case, Judgement, 23 October 1985, §§ 41–43.

[2874] ECtHR, Ciraklar v. Turkey, Judgement, 28 October 1998, § 38.

The Court concluded that there had been a violation of Article 6 of the 1950 ECHR "on account of the legislative practice of authorising the trial of civilians by military courts".[2875]

3103. In its judgement in Sahiner v. Turkey in 2001 concerning the trial of a civilian by a martial law court composed of two civilian judges, two military officers and an army officer, the ECtHR stated that:

> 45. The Court considers in this connection that where, as in the present case, a tribunal's members include persons who are in a subordinate position, in terms of their duties and the organisation of their service, vis-à-vis one of the parties, accused persons may entertain a legitimate doubt about those persons' independence. Such a situation seriously affects the confidence which the courts must inspire in a democratic society . . . In addition, the Court attaches great importance to the fact that a civilian had to appear before a court composed, even if only in part, of members of the armed forces . . .
> 46. In the light of the foregoing, the Court considers that the applicant – tried in a Martial Law Court on charges of attempting to undermine the constitutional order of the State – could have legitimate reason to fear about being tried by a bench which included two military judges and an army officer acting under the authority of the officer commanding the state of martial law. The fact that two civilian judges, whose independence and impartiality are not in doubt, sat on that court makes no difference in this respect . . .
> 47. In conclusion, the applicant's fears as to the Martial Law Court's lack of independence and impartiality can be regarded as objectively justified. There has accordingly been a violation of Article 6 § 1 [1950 ECHR].[2876]

3104. In its Annual Report 1992–1993, the IACiHR discussed the principles that member States should apply in order to satisfy the requirements of judicial independence and impartiality. The list included:

> a) guaranteeing the judiciary freedom from interference by the executive and legislative branches;
> b) providing the judiciary with the necessary political support for performing its functions;
> c) giving judges security of tenure;
> d) preserving the rule of law and declaring states of emergency only when necessary and in strict conformity with the requirements of the American Convention;
> e) returning to the judiciary responsibility for the disposition and supervision of detained persons.[2877]

[2875] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, §§ 358–359.
[2876] ECtHR, Sahiner v. Turkey, Judgement, 25 September 2001, §§ 45–47.
[2877] IACiHR, Annual Report 1992–1993, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.83 Doc. 14, 12 March 1993, p. 207.

3105. In its report in a case concerning Peru in 1994, the IACiHR stated that a Special Military Court was not an independent and impartial tribunal inasmuch as it was subordinate to the Ministry of Defence and thus to the executive.[2878]

3106. In its report in a case concerning Peru in 1995, the IACiHR referred to the Campbell and Fell case before the ECtHR and held that the determination of whether a court is independent of the executive depends on the "manner of appointment of its members, the duration of their terms . . . [and] the existence of guarantees against outside pressures". The Commission further noted the jurisprudence of the ECtHR and stated that "the irremovability of judges . . . must . . . be considered a necessary corollary of their independence".[2879]

3107. In its report in a case concerning Peru in 1996, the IACiHR stated in relation to the meaning of "impartiality", that:

> Impartiality presumes that the court or judge does not have preconceived opinions about the case sub judice and, in particular, does not presume the accused to be guilty. For the European Court, the impartiality of the judge is made up of subjective and objective elements. His subjective impartiality in the specific case is presumed as long as there is no evidence to the contrary. Objective impartiality, on the other hand, requires that the tribunal or judge offer sufficient guarantees to remove any doubt as to their impartiality in the case.[2880]

3108. In its judgement in the Castillo Petruzzi and Others case in 1999, the IACtHR stated that:

> 132. In the instant case, the Court considers that the military tribunals that tried the alleged victims for the crimes of treason did not meet the requirements implicit in the guarantees of independence and impartiality that Article 8(1) of the [1969 ACHR] recognizes as essentials of due process of law.
> 133. What is more, because judges who preside over the treason trials are "faceless," defendants have no way of knowing the identity of their judge and, therefore, of assessing their competence. Compounding the problem is the fact that the law does not allow these judges to recuse themselves.
> 134. The Court therefore finds that the State violated Article 8(1) of the [1969 ACHR].[2881]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3109. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure".[2882]

[2878] IACiHR, Case 11.084 (Peru), Report, 30 November 1994, Section V(3).
[2879] IACiHR, Case 11.006 (Peru), Report, 7 February 1995, Section VI(2)(a).
[2880] IACiHR, Case 10.970 (Peru), Report, 1 March 1996, Section V(B)(3)(c).
[2881] IACiHR, Castillo Petruzzi and Others case, Judgement, 30 May 1999, §§ 132–134.
[2882] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202.

3110. In a press release issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict in Chechnya, the ICRC urged the parties to ensure that "no sentence was passed and no penalty executed without a judgement pronounced by a court offering essential guarantees of independence and impartiality".[2883]

VI. Other Practice

3111. In 1985, the ICRC noted that an armed opposition group had emphasised that trial by an impartial and independent judiciary was required by Islamic law.[2884]

Presumption of innocence

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3112. Article 6(2) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law".

3113. Article 14(2) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "everyone charged with a criminal offence shall have the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law".

3114. Article 8(2) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "every person accused of a criminal offence has the right to be presumed innocent so long as his guilt has not been proven according to law".

3115. Article 75(4)(d) AP I provides that "anyone charged with an offence is presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2885]

3116. Article 6(2)(d) AP II provides that "anyone charged with an offence is presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[2886]

3117. Article 7(1) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "every individual shall have the right to have his cause heard. This comprises: . . . the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty by a competent court or tribunal."

3118. Article 40(2)(b)(i) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child alleged or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: (i) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to the law".

[2883] ICRC, Press Release No. 1793, Chechnya: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, 28 November 1994.
[2884] ICRC archive document.
[2885] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[2886] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

3119. Article 66 of the 1998 ICC Statute, entitled "Presumption of innocence", provides that:

1. Everyone shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty before the Court in accordance with the applicable law.
2. The onus is on the Prosecutor to prove the guilt of the accused.
3. In order to convict the accused, the Court must be convinced of the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt.

3120. Article 17(3) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone states that "the accused shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to the provisions of the present Statute".

Other Instruments

3121. Article 11 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law".

3122. Article XXVI of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man states that "every accused person is presumed innocent until proven guilty".

3123. Principle 36 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "a detained person suspected of or charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent and shall be treated as such until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence".

3124. Article 19 of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam states that "a defendant is innocent until his guilt is proven in a fair trial".

3125. Article 8 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to be presumed innocent until proved guilty".

3126. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3127. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3128. According to Article 21(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, "the accused shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to the provisions of the present Statute".

3129. According to Article 20(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, "the accused shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to the provisions of the present Statute".

3130. Article 11(1) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind "shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty".

3131. Article 2(9) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines states that all accused persons have the right "to be presumed innocent until proven guilty".

3132. Article 48(1) of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone who has been charged shall be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3133. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that presumption of innocence is a fundamental judicial guarantee which applies to prisoners of war and civilians in occupied territories.[2887] The presumption of innocence is also a fundamental guarantee in situations of non-international armed conflict.[2888]

3134. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that in non-international armed conflicts, "accused persons shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law".[2889]

3135. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that in both international and non-international armed conflicts, civilians benefit from the right to be presumed innocent.[2890]

3136. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "any person is presumed innocent until he is judicially declared guilty".[2891]

3137. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "anyone charged with an offence is presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law".[2892] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "an accused is to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to the law".[2893]

3138. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[2894]

National Legislation

3139. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right of the accused to be presumed innocent until found guilty of an offence.[2895]

[2887] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30 (POWs), § 4.15 (civilians) and § 5.09 (occupied territory).
[2888] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[2889] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 29(d).
[2890] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 24.
[2891] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 10.
[2892] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(d).
[2893] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(1)(d).
[2894] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[2895] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 20(3); Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 40(1); Georgia, Code of Criminal Procedure (1998), Article 10; Kenya, Constitution

3140. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2896]
3141. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(d) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 6(2)(d) AP II, are punishable offences.[2897]
3142. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2898]

National Case-law
3143. In the Ohashi case in 1946 before the Australian Military Court at Rabaul, the judge advocate stated that the fundamental principles of justice included:

> (a) Consideration by a tribunal comprised of one or more men who will endeavour to judge the accused fairly upon the evidence using their own common knowledge of ordinary affairs and if they are soldiers their military knowledge, honestly endeavouring to discard any preconceived believe in the guilt of [the] accused or any prejudice against him.
> . . .
> (e) The court should satisfy itself that the accused is guilty before awarding punishment. It would be sufficient if the court believed it to be more likely than not that the accused was guilty.[2899]

Other National Practice
3144. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[2900]
3145. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[2901]

(1992), Article 77(2)(a); Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Article 34; Kyrgyzstan, Constitution (1993), Article 39(1); Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 49(1).
2896 Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
2897 Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
2898 Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
2899 Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Ohashi case, Judgement, 23 March 1946.
2900 Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
2901 Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3146. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3147. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

> By reason of the presumption of innocence, the burden of proof of the charge is on the prosecution and the accused has the benefit of the doubt. No guilt can be presumed until the charge has been proved beyond reasonable doubt . . . It is, therefore, a duty for all public authorities to refrain from prejudging the outcome of a trial.[2902]

3148. In its views in Gridin v. Russia in 2000, the HRC found a violation of the presumption of innocence because of public declarations by officials, which were given wide media coverage, presenting the accused as guilty before his conviction.[2903]

3149. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following: "Persons charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proven guilty by a competent court."[2904]

3150. In its decision in Pagnoulle v. Cameroon in 1997 concerning the five-year imprisonment of a Cameroonian citizen by a military tribunal, the ACiHPR held that "detention on the mere suspect that an individual may cause problems is a violation of his right to be presumed innocent".[2905]

3151. In its decision in Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania in 2000, dealing with a case in which the accused refused to defend themselves in the absence of a lawyer, the ACiHPR held that:

> In the judgement of early September 1986 . . . the presiding judge declared that the refusal of the accused persons to defend themselves was tantamount to an admission of guilt. In addition, the tribunal based itself, in reaching the verdicts it handed down, on the statements made by the accused during their detention in police cells, which statements were obtained from them by force. This constitutes a violation of [Article 7(1)(b) of the 1981 ACHPR].[2906]

3152. In Neumeister v. Austria in 1968, the ECtHR stated that:

> 4. The Court is of the opinion that [Article 5(3) of the 1950 ECHR] cannot be understood as giving the judicial authorities a choice between either bringing the accused to trial within a reasonable time or granting him provisional

[2902] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 7.
[2903] HRC, Gridin v. Russia, Views, 20 July 2000, § 8.3.
[2904] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(a).
[2905] ACiHPR, Pagnoulle v. Cameroon, Decision, 15–24 April 1997, § 21.
[2906] ACiHPR, Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania (54/91), Decision, 11 May 2000, § 95.

release even subject to guarantees. The reasonableness of the time spent by an accused person in detention up to the beginning of the trial must be assessed in relation to the very fact of his detention. Until conviction, he must be presumed innocent, and the purpose of the provision under consideration is essentially to require his provisional release once his continuing detention ceases to be reasonable . . .

5. The Court is likewise of the opinion that, in determining in a given case whether or not the detention of an accused person exceeds a reasonable limit, it is for the national judicial authorities to seek all the facts arguing for or against the existence of a genuine requirement of public interest justifying a departure from the rule of respect for individual liberty.

. . .

12. The Court is of the opinion that in these circumstances the danger that Neumeister would avoid appearing at the trial by absconding was, in October 1962 in any event, no longer so great that it was necessary to dismiss as quite ineffective the taking of the guarantees which, under Article 5(3) (art. 5-3) may condition a grant of provisional release in order to reduce the risks which it entails.[2907]

3153. In its judgement in Allenet de Ribemont v. France in 1995, the ECtHR stated that:

The Court notes that in the instant case some of the highest-ranking officers in the French police referred to Mr Allenet de Ribemont, without any qualification or reservation, as one of the instigators of a murder and thus an accomplice in that murder (see paragraph 11 above). This was clearly a declaration of the applicant's guilt which, firstly, encouraged the public to believe him guilty and, secondly, prejudged the assessment of the facts by the competent judicial authority. There has therefore been a breach of Article 6 para. 2 [1950 ECHR].[2908]

3154. In its report in a case concerning Peru in 1996, the IACiHR stated that:

The essential thing is therefore that the judge who hears the case is free of any prejudice concerning the accused's guilt and affords him the benefit of the doubt, i.e. does not condemn him until he is certain or convinced of his criminal liability, so that all reasonable doubt that the accused might be innocent is removed.[2909]

3155. In its report in a case concerning Argentina in 1996, the IACiHR found that an excessive period of pre-trial detention may violate the presumption of innocence:

The prolonged imprisonment . . . without conviction, with its natural consequence of undefined and continuous suspicion of an individual, constitutes a violation of the principle of presumed innocence . . . The substantiation of guilt calls for the formulation of a judgement establishing blame in a final sentence. If the use of that procedure fails to assign blame within a reasonable length of time and the State is able to justify further holding of the accused in pre-trial incarceration, based on [2907] ECtHR, Neumeister v. Austria, Judgement (Merits), 27 June 1968, §§ 4 and 12 of the part entitled "As to the Law".

[2908] ECtHR, Allenet de Ribemont v. France, Judgement, 10 February 1995, § 41.
[2909] IACiHR, Case 10.970 (Peru), Report, 1 March 1996, § V(B9(3)(c).

the suspicion of guilt, then it is essentially substituting pre-trial detention for the punishment.[2910]

3156. In its judgement in the Suárez Rosero case in 1997, the IACtHR held that:

> 77. This Court is of the view that the principle of the presumption of innocence- inasmuch as it lays down that a person is innocent until proven guilty- is founded upon the existence of judicial guarantees. Article 8(2) of the Convention establishes the obligation of the State not to restrict the liberty of a detained person beyond the limits strictly necessary to ensure that he will not impede the efficient development of an investigation and that he will not evade justice; preventive detention is, therefore, a precautionary rather than a punitive measure. This concept is laid down in a goodly number of instruments of international human rights law, including the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which provides that preventive detention should not be the normal practice in relation to persons who are to stand trial (Art. 9(3)). This would be tantamount to anticipating a sentence, which is at odds with universally recognized general principles of law.
> 78. The Court considers that Mr. Suárez-Rosero's prolonged preventive detention violated the principle of presumption of innocence, in that he was detained from June 23, 1992, to April 28, 1996, and that the order for his release issued on July 10, 1995, was only executed a year later. In view of the above, the Court rules that the State violated Article 8(2) of the American Convention.[2911]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3157. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . presumed innocence until proved guilty".[2912]

3158. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states that "it is a widely recognized legal principle that it is not the responsibility of the accused to prove he is innocent, but of the accuser to prove he is guilty".[2913]

VI. Other Practice

3159. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum

[2910] IACiHR, Case 11.245 (Argentina), Report, 1 March 1996, § 113; see also IACiHR, Case 11.205 and Others, Report, 11 March 1997, §§ 46–48.
[2911] IACtHR, Suárez Rosero case, Judgement, 12 November 1997, §§ 77–78.
[2912] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(d).
[2913] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 3108.

judicial guarantees, including that "anyone charged with an offence is presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law".[2914]

Information on the nature and cause of the accusation

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3160. Article 16(a) of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that "in order to ensure fair trial for the Defendants, the following procedure shall be followed: (a) the Indictment shall include full particulars specifying in detail the charges against the Defendants".

3161. Article 96, fourth paragraph, GC III provides that "before any disciplinary award is pronounced, the accused shall be given precise information regarding the offences of which he is accused".

3162. Article 105, fourth paragraph, GC III provides that:

> Particulars of the charge or charges on which the prisoner of war is to be arraigned, as well as the documents which are generally communicated to the accused by virtue of the laws in force in the armed forces of the Detaining Power, shall be communicated to the accused prisoner of war in a language he understands, and in good time before the opening of the trial.

3163. Article 71, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "accused persons who are prosecuted by the Occupying Power shall be promptly informed, in writing, in a language which they understand, of the particulars of the charges preferred against them".

3164. Article 123, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "before any disciplinary punishment is awarded, the accused internee shall be given precise information regarding the offences of which he is accused".

3165. Article 6(3)(a) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights: . . . to be informed promptly, in a language which he understands and in detail, of the nature and cause of the accusation against him".

3166. Article 14(3)(a) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "everyone shall be entitled to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him".

3167. Article 8(2)(b) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "every accused person is entitled to prior notification in detail of the charges against him".

3168. Article 75(4)(a) AP I provides that "the procedure shall provide for an accused to be informed without delay of the particulars of the offence alleged against him". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2915]

[2914] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9(c), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

[2915] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

3169. Article 6(2)(a) AP II provides that "the procedure shall provide for an accused to be informed without delay of the particulars of the offence alleged against him". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[2916]

3170. Article 40(2)(b)(ii) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (ii) to be informed promptly and directly of the charges against him or her".

3171. Article 55(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> Where there are grounds to believe that a person has committed a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court . . . that person shall also have the following rights of which he or she shall be informed prior to being questioned:
>
> (a) To be informed, prior to being questioned, that there are grounds to believe that he or she has committed a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court.

3172. Article 60(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> Upon the surrender of the person to the Court, or the person's appearance before the Court voluntarily or pursuant to a summons, the Pre-Trial Chamber shall satisfy itself that the person has been informed of the crimes which he or she is alleged to have committed, and of his or her rights under this Statute, including the right to apply for interim release pending trial.

3173. Article 67(1)(a) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> In the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled . . . to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:
>
> (a) To be informed promptly and in detail of the nature, cause and content of the charge, in a language which the accused fully understands and speaks.

3174. Article 17(4)(a) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that:

> In the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, he or she shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality: . . . to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he or she understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him or her.

Other Instruments

3175. Article 9(a) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) provides that "in order to insure fair trial for the accused, the following procedure shall be followed: (a) Indictment. The Indictment shall consist of a plain, concise, and adequate statement of each offence charged."

3176. Principle 10 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "anyone who is arrested shall be promptly informed of any charges against him".

[2916] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

3177. Article 8(b) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him".
3178. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3179. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3180. Article 21(4)(a) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that:

> In the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, the accused shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality: . . . to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him.

3181. Article 20(4)(a) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he or she understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him or her".
3182. Article 11(1)(b) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charge against him."

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3183. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides, in a paragraph entitled "Right of defence", that "before giving a disciplinary penalty, the accused prisoner must be informed, with precision, of the acts he is charged with".[2917] It further provides that:

> The accused prisoner of war will receive, as quickly as possible before the beginning of the trial, communication in an understandable language, of the bill of indictment as well as the acts which generally are notified to the accused in accordance with the laws in force in the army of the [detaining power].[2918]

The manual also provides that the occupying power shall inform "any indicted person . . . without delay, of the motives of accusation that have been formulated against him, in a language he will understand".[2919]

[2917] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.082(2).
[2918] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.086.
[2919] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.029(2).

3184. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that, at least certain guarantees shall be respected, such as: "the information of the prisoner without delay of the details of the offence of which he is charged".[2920] It further states that any accused person shall be informed without delay of the particulars of the offences of which he is accused.[2921] The same provision applies in non-international armed conflicts.[2922]

3185. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "notice of proceedings must be given to . . . the accused notifying the particulars of the charges in good time before the trial".[2923]

3186. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "accused persons must be promptly informed, in writing, and in a language which they understand, of the charges brought against them".[2924] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manuals states that "accused persons shall be informed of the particulars of the offence charged".[2925]

3187. Indonesia's Directive on Human Rights in Trikora states that respect for personal and human dignity includes the right to obtain explanation of charges.[2926]

3188. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides, with respect to non-international armed conflict, that "the suspect must be informed without delay of the particulars of the offences alleged".[2927]

3189. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "before any disciplinary punishment is awarded, the accused internee shall be given precise information regarding the offences of which he is accused".[2928] It further provides that "the procedure shall provide for an accused to be informed without delay of the particulars of the offence alleged against him".[2929] The manual also specifies that "the accused must be promptly informed, in writing, and in a language which they understand, of the charges brought against them".[2930]

3190. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "before a [disciplinary] decision is imposed, the accused prisoner shall be informed of the acts of which he is charged".[2931]

3191. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[2932]

[2920] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30.
[2921] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 5.09(1) (occupied territories), see also § 4.15 (civilians).
[2922] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[2923] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1042(c).
[2924] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-6, § 54.
[2925] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 29(a).
[2926] Indonesia, Directive on Human Rights in Trikora (1995), § 4(a).
[2927] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[2928] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1130(1).
[2929] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(a).
[2930] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1330(1), see also § 1815(2)(a).
[2931] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.7.e.(2).
[2932] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.

3192. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "every person arrested, detained or interned for acts committed in connection with the conflict shall be informed, without delay, in a language he or she understands, of the reasons why the measures have been taken".[2933]
3193. The UK Military Manual states that "before any disciplinary award is pronounced [against a prisoner of war] the accused must be given full information regarding the offence with which he is charged".[2934] With regard to judicial proceedings against prisoners of war, the manual provides that "particulars of the charges brought against the accused . . . must be given to the accused in a language which he understands".[2935] With respect to situations of occupation, the manual states that "the accused must be promptly informed, in writing and in a language which they understand, of the charges brought against them".[2936]
3194. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 96 and 105 GC III.[2937] It also contains the provisions of Articles 71 and 123 GC IV.[2938]
3195. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides, with respect to protected persons arrested for criminal offences, that "among other rights, accused persons are assured the right to be informed promptly of the charges against them".[2939]
3196. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook provides that "a prisoner must be given notice of the charges".[2940]

National Legislation
3197. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right of the accused to be informed of the particulars of the alleged offence.[2941]
3198. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2942]
3199. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 96 and 105 GC III and Articles 71 and 123 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(a) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(2)(a) AP II, are punishable offences.[2943]
3200. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the

[2933] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 175.
[2934] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 208.
[2935] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 228.
[2936] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 570.
[2937] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 172 and 181.
[2938] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 330 and 441.
[2939] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6.
[2940] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-2(c).
[2941] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 20(2); Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 18(5); Georgia, Code of Criminal Procedure (1998), Articles 12 and 74; India, Constitution (1950), Article 22(1); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(2)(b); Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 18; Mexico, Constitution (1917), Article 20(III).
[2942] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2943] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2944]

National Case-law

3201. In the Ohashi case before the Australian Military Court at Rabaul in 1946, the Judge Advocate stated that the notion of "fair trial" supposed, inter alia, the following:

- the accused should know the exact nature of the charge against him/her;
- the accused should know what is alleged against him/her by way of evidence;
- he should have full opportunity to give his own version of the case and produce evidence to support it.[2945]

Other National Practice

3202. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[2946]

3203. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[2947]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3204. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3205. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

Article 14(3)(a) applies to all cases of criminal charges, including those of persons not in detention. The Committee notes further that the right to be informed of the charge "promptly" requires that information is given in the manner described as soon as the charge is first made by a competent authority. In the opinion of the Committee this right must arise when in the course of an investigation a court or an authority of the prosecution decides to take procedural steps against a person suspected of a crime or publicly names him as such. The specific requirements of subparagraph 3(a) may be met by stating the charge either orally or in writing,

[2944] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[2945] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Ohashi case, Statement by the Judge Advocate, 23 March 1946.
[2946] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997,Chapter 5.
[2947] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

provided that the information indicates both the law and the alleged facts on which it is based.[2948]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3206. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "any person arrested, detained or interned for actions related to the armed conflict shall be informed promptly in a language understandable to him of the reasons for the measure taken".[2949]

VI. Other Practice

3207. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, and states that "the procedure shall provide for an accused to be informed without delay of the particulars of the offence alleged against him or her".[2950]

Necessary rights and means of defence

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3208. Article 16(d) of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that "a Defendant shall have the right to conduct his own defense before the Tribunal or to have the assistance of counsel".

3209. Article 49, fourth paragraph, GC I provides that "in all circumstances, the accused persons shall benefit by safeguards of proper trial and defence, which shall not be less favourable than those provided by Article 105 and those following of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of August 12, 1949".

3210. Article 50, fourth paragraph, GC II provides that "in all circumstances, the accused persons shall benefit by safeguards of proper trial and defence, which shall not be less favourable than those provided by Article 105 and those following of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of August 12, 1949".

3211. Article 84, second paragraph, GC III provides that "in no circumstances whatever shall a prisoner of war be tried by a court of any kind . . . the procedure of which does not afford the accused the rights and means of defence provided for in Article 105".

[2948] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 8.

[2949] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 201.

[2950] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9(a), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

3212. Article 96, fourth paragraph, GC III stipulates that "the accused shall be . . . given an opportunity of explaining his conduct and of defending himself".

3213. Article 99, third paragraph, GC III provides that "no prisoner of war may be convicted without having had an opportunity to present his defence and the assistance of a qualified advocate or counsel".

3214. Article 105, first paragraph, GC III provides that "the prisoner of war shall be entitled to assistance by one of his prisoner comrades, to defence by a qualified advocate or counsel of his own choice". Article 105, second paragraph, provides that "failing a choice by the prisoner of war, the Protecting Power shall find him an advocate or counsel . . . Failing a choice of an advocate or counsel by the prisoner of war or the Protecting Power, the Detaining Power shall appoint a competent advocate or counsel to conduct the defence." Article 105, third paragraph, provides that:

> The advocate or counsel conducting the defence on behalf of the prisoner of war shall have at his disposal a period of two weeks at least before the opening of the trial, as well as the necessary facilities to prepare the defence of the accused. He may, in particular, freely visit the accused and interview him in private. He may also confer with any witnesses for the defence, including prisoners of war. He shall have the benefit of these facilities until the term of appeal or petition has expired.

3215. Article 72, first paragraph, GC IV provides that:

> Accused persons shall have the right to present evidence necessary for their defence . . . They shall have the right to be assisted by a qualified advocate or counsel of their own choice, who shall be able to visit them freely and shall enjoy the necessary facilities for preparing the defence.

3216. Article 123, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "the accused internee shall be . . . given an opportunity of explaining his conduct and of defending himself".

3217. Article 6(3)(b) and (c) of the 1950 ECHR provides that:

> Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights . . . to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence; to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require.

3218. Article 14(3)(b) and (d) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that:

> In the determination of any criminal charge against him, everyone shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees: . . . to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing; . . . to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing; to be informed, if he does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to him, in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment by him in any such case if he does not have sufficient means to pay for it.

3219. Article 8(2)(c)-(e) of the 1969 ACHR provides that:

Every person is entitled . . . to the following minimum guarantees: . . . adequate time and means for the preparation of his defense; . . . to defend himself personally or to be assisted by legal counsel of his own choosing, and to communicate freely and privately with his counsel; the inalienable right to be assisted by counsel provided by the state, paid or not as the domestic law provides, if the accused does not defend himself personally or engage his own counsel within the time period established by law.

3220. Article 75(4)(a) AP I provides that "the procedure . . . shall afford the accused before and during his trial all necessary rights and means of defence". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2951]

3221. Article 6(2)(a) AP II stipulates that "the procedure shall . . . afford the accused before and during his trial all necessary rights and means of defence". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[2952]

3222. Article 7(1)(c) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that every individual accused shall have "the right to defence, including the right to be defended by counsel of his choice".

3223. Article 40(2)(b)(ii) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (ii) to have legal or other appropriate assistance in the preparation and presentation of his or her defence".

3224. Article 55(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that the accused shall have the right to have "legal assistance of the person's choosing".

3225. Article 67(1)(b) and (d) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

In the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled to . . . have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of the defence and to communicate freely with the counsel of the accused's choosing in confidence . . . to conduct the defence in person or through legal assistance of the accused's choosing, . . . to be informed, if the accused does not have legal assistance, of this right and to have legal assistance assigned by the Court in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment if the accused lacks sufficient means to pay for it.

3226. Article 17(4) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that:

In the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, he or she shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:

. . .

[2951] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[2952] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

(b) To have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his or her defence and to communicate with counsel of his or her own choosing;
...
(d) ... to defend himself or herself in person or through legal assistance of his or her own choosing ... to be informed, if he or she does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to him or her, in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment by him or her in any such case if he or she does not have sufficient means to pay for it.

Other Instruments

3227. Article 9(c) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) provides that:

Each accused shall have the right to be represented by counsel of his own selection, subject to the disapproval of such counsel at any time by the Tribunal. The accused shall file with the General Secretary of the Tribunal the name of his counsel. If an accused is not represented by counsel and in open court requests the appointment of counsel, the Tribunal shall designate counsel for him. In the absence of such request the Tribunal may appoint counsel for an accused if in its judgment such appointment is necessary to provide for a fair trial.

3228. Article 11 of the 1948 UDHR provides that everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to a trial "at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence".

3229. Principle 15 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "communication of the detained or imprisoned person with the outside world, and in particular his ... counsel, shall not be denied for more than a matter of days".

3230. Principle 17 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that:

1. A detained person shall be entitled to have the assistance of a legal counsel. He shall be informed of his right by the competent authority promptly after arrest and shall be provided with reasonable facilities for exercising it.
2. If a detained person does not have a legal counsel of his own choice, he shall be entitled to have a legal counsel assigned to him by a judicial or other authority in all cases where the interests of justice so require and without payment by him if he does not have sufficient means to pay.

3231. Principle 18 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that:

1. A detained or imprisoned person shall be entitled to communicate and consult with his legal counsel.
2. A detained or imprisoned person shall be allowed adequate time and facilities for consultation with his legal counsel.
3. The right of a detained or imprisoned person to be visited by and to consult and communicate, with delay or censorship and in full confidentiality, with his legal counsel may not be suspended or restricted save in exceptional circumstances, to be specified by law or lawful regulations, when it is considered indispensable by a judicial or other authority in order to maintain security and good order.

4. Interviews between a detained or imprisoned person and his legal counsel may be within sight, but not within hearing, of a law enforcement official.
5. Communications between a detained or imprisoned person and his legal counsel mentioned in the present principle shall be inadmissible as evidence against the detained or imprisoned person unless they are connected with a continuing or contemplated crime.

3232. Article 19(e) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam states that a defendant has the right to a fair trial "in which he shall be given all guarantees of defence".
3233. Article 8 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right:

(c) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing;
...
(e) ... to defend himself in person and through legal assistance of his own choosing; to be informed, if he does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to him and without payment by him in any such case if he does not have sufficient means to pay for it.

3234. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3235. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3236. Article 18(3) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "if questioned, the suspect shall be entitled to be assisted by counsel of his own choice".
3237. Article 21(4) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that:

In the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, the accused shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:
...
(b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing;
...
(d) ... to defend himself in person ... to be informed, if he does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to him, in any case where the interests of justice so require, and without payment by him in any such case if he does not have sufficient means to pay for it.

3238. Article 17(3) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that "if questioned, the suspect shall be entitled to be assisted by counsel of his or her own choice".

3239. Article 20(4) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that:

In the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, the accused shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:

...

(b) to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his or her defence and to communicate with counsel of his or her own choosing;

...

(d) ... to defend himself or herself in person ... to be informed, if he or she does not have legal assistance, of this right; and to have legal assistance assigned to him or her, in any case where the interest of justice so require, and without payment by him or her in any such case if he or she does not have sufficient means to pay for it.

3240. Article 11(1)(c) and (e) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing" and "to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing".

3241. The 1990 Basic Principles on the Role of Lawyers states that:

Whereas the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that a detained person shall be entitled to have the assistance of, and to communicate and consult with, legal counsel,

Whereas the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners recommend, in particular, that legal assistance and confidential communication with counsel should be ensured to untried prisoners.

...

1. All persons are entitled to call upon the assistance of a lawyer of their choice to protect and establish their rights and to defend them in all stages of criminal proceedings;
2. Governments shall ensure that efficient procedures and responsive mechanisms for effective and equal access to lawyers are provided for all persons within their territory and subject to their jurisdiction, without distinction of any kind, such as discrimination based on race, colour, ethnic origin, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth, economic or other status.

...

5. Governments shall ensure that all persons are immediately informed by the competent authority of their right to be assisted by a lawyer of their own choice upon arrest or detention or when charged with a criminal offence;
6. Any such persons who do not have a lawyer shall, in all cases in which the interests of justice so require, be entitled to have a lawyer of experience and competence commensurate with the nature of the offence assigned to them in order to provide effective legal assistance, without payment by them if they lack sufficient means to pay for such services;

7. Governments shall further ensure that all persons arrested or detained, with or without criminal charge, shall have prompt access to a lawyer, and in any case not later than forty-eight hours from the time of arrest or detention;
8. All arrested, detained or imprisoned persons shall be provided with adequate opportunities, time and facilities to be visited by and to communicate and consult with a lawyer, without delay, interception or censorship and in full confidentiality. Such consultations may be within sight, but not within hearing, of law enforcement officials.

3242. Article 47(2) of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone shall have the possibility of being advised, defended and represented".
3243. Article 48(2) of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "respect for the rights of the defence of anyone who has been charged shall be guaranteed".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3244. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "in no case shall a prisoner of war appear in front of a tribunal . . . if the proceedings do not ensure to the accused person the rights and means of defence".[2953] It further provides that:

> A prisoner of war has the right to be assisted by one of his inmates [or] to be defended by a qualified lawyer of his own choosing . . . In order to prepare his defence, counsel will have at least a period of two weeks before the examination of the case, as well as the necessary facilities; he can visit the accused freely and meet with him without witness. Counsel may also meet all witnesses on his behalf, including other prisoners of war. He will enjoy these facilities until the expiration of the delay to appeal.[2954]

3245. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that "the right of prisoners to a defence is recognised and guaranteed. To this effect, prisoners have the right to be assisted by one of their fellow inmates, or to be defended by a qualified lawyer of their own choosing".[2955]
3246. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that POWs "are entitled to be represented by a qualified lawyer of their choice and assisted by another PW".[2956]
3247. Canada's LOAC Manual states that prisoners of war and accused persons in occupied territory must be allowed to present their defence.[2957] The manual further states that "accused persons in occupied territory must "have the right

[2953] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.074.
[2954] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.086, see also § 5.029(3) (occupied territory).
[2955] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30, see also § 5.09.
[2956] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1042(d).
[2957] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-7, § 76.

to be assisted by a qualified advocate or counsel of their own choice".[2958] It adds that the advocate or counsel of the accused "must be able to visit them freely and to be provided with the necessary facilities for preparing the defence".[2959] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual provides that "accused persons shall be afforded all the necessary rights and means of defence".[2960]

3248. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that during the investigation and the trial, "any accused has the right . . . to be assisted by a qualified lawyer of his own choosing or by an ex-officio lawyer".[2961]

3249. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "at a minimum, [procedural] rights must include the assistance of lawyer counsel, an interpreter and a fellow prisoner".[2962]

3250. Germany's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war shall be given the opportunity to present their defence".[2963]

3251. Hungary's Military Manual provides that accused POWs shall be granted rights and means of defence.[2964]

3252. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides, with regard to non-international armed conflicts, that a suspect "must be given the necessary rights and means of defence".[2965]

3253. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that a prisoner of war "must be allowed to present his defence and be represented by qualified counsel or an advocate".[2966] With respect to occupied territory, it states that accused persons "have the right to be assisted by a qualified advocate or counsel of their own choice, who must be able to visit them freely and to enjoy the necessary facilities for preparing the defence".[2967] According to the manual, "insofar as civilians accused of war crimes are held by a Power of which they are not nationals, they are entitled to the safeguards of proper trial and defence, which shall not be less than those provided for prisoners of war by Articles 105 to 108 III GC".[2968] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that, as a minimum, "the accused shall be . . . afforded all the necessary rights and means of defence".[2969]

3254. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines provides that "legal counsels of detainees or arrested persons must

[2958] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-6, § 57.
[2959] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-7, § 57.
[2960] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 29(a).
[2961] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 11.
[2962] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.8.1.
[2963] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 725.
[2964] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 92.
[2965] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[2966] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 932(2), see also § 1130 (civilian internees).
[2967] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1330(2) and (4).
[2968] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1716.
[2969] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(2)(a).

be granted free access to the detention center/jail where the detainees are held".[2970]

3255. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that the right of defence must be respected during criminal proceedings in occupied territories.[2971]

3256. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[2972]

3257. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "only military tribunals can try prisoners. They shall provide the accused with all recognised means of defence."[2973] It also provides that an accused prisoner "shall have the possibility of expressing himself on the subject of the accusation of which he is charged".[2974]

3258. The UK Military Manual states that "in no circumstances whatsoever may [POWs] be tried by a court ... the procedure of which does not afford the accused the rights and means of defence laid down in Art. 105 [GC III]".[2975] The manual further states that "no prisoner of war may be convicted without having had an opportunity to present his defence and the assistance of a qualified advocate or counsel".[2976] In addition, the manual provides that:

> In any judicial proceedings against him, the prisoner of war is entitled to ... defence by a qualified advocate or counsel of his own choice ...
>
> Defending Counsel must be given at least two weeks before the opening of the trial in which to prepare the defence of the accused. He must also be given all necessary facilities; in particular, he must be allowed freely to visit the accused and to interview him in private ... The facilities are to remain available until the expiry of the time for appeal or petition against conviction.[2977]

With respect to situations of occupation, the manual states that the accused "have the right to be assisted by a qualified advocate or counsel of their own choice", that the qualified advocate or counsel of the choosing of the accused "must be able to visit them freely and to enjoy the necessary facilities for preparing the defence" and that the "accused have the right to present evidence necessary to their defence".[2978]

3259. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 96, 99 and 105 GC III.[2979] It also restates Articles 71 and 72 GC IV, concerning situations of occupation, and Article 123 GC IV, regarding disciplinary punishment.[2980]

3260. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "in no event may [a POW] be tried ... under procedure which fails to accord the rights of defense set forth

[2970] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2(b)(2).
[2971] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.7.b.(3).
[2972] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[2973] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 106.
[2974] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 153.
[2975] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 202.
[2976] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 225.
[2977] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 227.
[2978] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 571.
[2979] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 172, 175 and 181.
[2980] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 441, 442 and 330.

in Article 105 [GC III]". It adds that Article 105 GC III "gives [the accused] the right to counsel of his choice" and that the POW's "counsel will have the opportunity to prepare an adequate defense".[2981] The manual also states that "among other rights, accused persons are assured the right to . . . obtain defense counsel".[2982]

3261. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that prisoners must "be allowed the help of a lawyer".[2983]

3262. The US Naval Handbook provides that "at a minimum, [procedural] rights must include the assistance of lawyer counsel".[2984]

National Legislation

3263. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right of accused persons to have legal assistance, sometimes of their own choosing and/or for free.[2985]

3264. Argentina's Code of Criminal Procedure states that "incommunicado detention may not prevent the detainee from communicating with his counsel promptly before the beginning of his statement before the judge".[2986]

3265. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[2987]

3266. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 49 GC I, 50 GC II, 84, 96, 99 and 104 GC III, 71, 72 and 123 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(a) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(2)(a) AP II, are punishable offences.[2988]

3267. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[2989]

[2981] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8. [2982] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6.
[2983] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-2(c).
[2984] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.7.1.
[2985] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 292; Constitution (1994), Article 20(5); Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 18(5) and 42(3); Code of Criminal Procedure (1998), Articles 11, 17, 74 and 77; India, Constitution (1950), Article 22(1); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(2); Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Article 34; Kyrgyzstan, Constitution (1993), Articles 40 and 88; Mexico, Constitution (1917), Article 20(V)(VII) and (IX); Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 48.
[2986] Argentina, Code of Criminal Procedure (1991), Article 205.
[2987] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[2988] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[2989] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

National Case-law

3268. In its judgement in the Ward case in 1942, the US Supreme Court stated that:

> This Court has set aside convictions based upon confessions extorted from ignorant persons . . . who have been unlawfully held incommunicado without advice of friends or counsel, or who have been taken at night to lonely and isolated places for questioning. Any one of these grounds would be sufficient cause for reversal.[2990]

Other National Practice

3269. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[2991]

3270. Country reports on human rights practices issued by the US Department of State have often noted that defendants must be given an opportunity to present their defence. More specifically, in 1986, the Department of State expressed concern that several indicted political prisoners in Ethiopia had been denied the right to present a defence, to call witnesses or to search for further evidence.[2992]

3271. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[2993]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

3272. In a resolution adopted in 1996 on the situation of human rights in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the FRY (Serbia and Montenegro), the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the government of Croatia "to pursue vigorously prosecutions against those suspected of past violations of international humanitarian law and human rights, while ensuring that the rights . . . to legal representation are afforded to all persons suspected of such crimes".[2994]

Other International Organisations

3273. No practice was found.

[2990] US, Supreme Court, Ward case, Judgement, 1 June 1942.
[2991] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997,Chapter 5.
[2992] US, Department of State, Country reports on human rights practices for 1986, Ethiopia, p. 144; see also Country reports on human rights practices for 1993, Nicaragua, p. 637; Country reports on human rights practices for 1996, Cambodia, p. 611.
[2993] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[2994] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/71, 23 April 1996, § 22.

International Conferences

3274. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3275. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

> 9. Subparagraph 3 (b) [of Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR] provides that the accused must have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence and to communicate with counsel of his own choosing. What is "adequate time" depends on the circumstances of each case, but the facilities must include access to documents and other evidence which the accused requires to prepare his case, as well as the opportunity to engage and communicate with counsel. When the accused does not want to defend himself in person or request a person or an association of his choice, he should be able to have recourse to a lawyer. Furthermore, this subparagraph requires counsel to communicate with the accused in conditions giving full respect for the confidentiality of their communications. Lawyers should be able to counsel and to represent their clients in accordance with their established professional standards and judgement without any restrictions, influences, pressures or undue interference from any quarter.
> ...
> 11. ... The accused or his lawyer must have the right to act diligently and fearlessly in pursuing all available defences and the right to challenge the conduct of the case if they believe it to be unfair. When exceptionally for justified reasons trials in absentia are held, strict observance of the rights of the defence is all the more necessary.[2995]

3276. In 1992, in its concluding observations on the report of Senegal, the HRC rejected the argument that the 1966 ICCPR's provisions should be interpreted against the background of the conditions prevailing in the country (a state of emergency) and expressed concern at provisions in legislation "particularly in so far as they allow detainees to be kept incommunicado during the first eight days following arrest and deprived of access to a lawyer for the period of arrest".[2996]

3277. In several cases, the HRC found a violation of the right of defence because of lack of access to counsel during detention, including during incommunicado detention.[2997]

3278. In several cases, the HRC has stressed the need for free legal assistance where the interests of justice so require. This was not required in criminal

[2995] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, §§ 9 and 11.

[2996] HRC, Concluding observations on the report of Senegal, UN Doc. CCPR/C/79/Add.10, 28 December 1992, § 5.

[2997] HRC, Sala de Tourón v. Uruguay, Views, 31 March 1981, § 12; Pietraroia v. Uruguay, Views, 27 March 1981, § 17; Wight v. Madagascar, Views, 1 April 1985, § 17; Lafuente Peñarrieta and Others v. Bolivia, Views, 2 November 1987, § 16.

proceedings concerning breach of traffic regulations,[2998] but was found to be necessary in cases of murder trials, as well as appeals contesting the fairness of a trial.[2999]

3279. In its views in Little v. Jamaica in 1991, the HRC held that the meaning of "adequate time" to prepare a defence would vary according to the circumstances and complexity of the case, but a few days would normally be deemed insufficient.[3000]

3280. In its views in Saldías López v. Uruguay in 1981, the HRC found a violation of Article 14 (3)(d) of the 1966 ICCPR when an ex-officio defence attorney had been appointed for the accused against their will.[3001]

3281. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following:

> In the determination of charges against individuals, the individual shall be entitled in particular to:
>
> . . .
>
> i) Have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of their defence and to communicate in confidence with counsel of their choice.[3002]

3282. In its decision in Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (87/93) in 1995, the ACiHPR held that:

> The communication alleges that during the trials the defense counsel for the complainants was harassed and intimidated to the extent of being forced to withdraw from the proceedings. In spite of this forced withdrawal of counsel, the tribunal proceeded to give judgment in the matter, finally sentencing the accused to death. The Commission finds that defendants were deprived of their right to defense, including the right to be defended by counsel of their choice, [which constitutes a] violation of [Article 7(1)(c) of the 1981 ACHPR].[3003]

3283. In its decision in Avocats Sans Frontières v. Burundi (231/99) in 2000, the ACiHPR emphatically recalled that:

> The right to legal assistance is a fundamental element to the right to fair trial. Moreso where the interests of justice demand it. It holds the view that in the case under consideration, considering the gravity of the allegations brought against the accused and the nature of the penalty faced [i.e. death penalty], it was in the interest of Justice for him to have benefit of the assistance of a lawyer at each stage of the case.[3004]

[2998] HRC, O.F. v. Norway, Admissibility Decision, 26 October 1984, § 5.6.
[2999] HRC, Currie v. Jamaica, Views, 29 March 1994, § 13.2–13.4; Thomas v. Jamaica, Views, 3 November 1997, § 6.4.
[3000] HRC, Little v. Jamaica, Views, 1 November 1991, § 8.3–8.4.
[3001] HRC, Saldías López v. Uruguay, Views, 29 July 1981, § 13; see also Celiberti de Casariego v. Uruguay, Views, 29 July 1981, § 11.
[3002] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(e)(i).
[3003] ACiHPR, Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (87/93), Decision, 13–22 March 1995, § 9.
[3004] ACiHPR, Avocats Sans Frontières v. Burundi (231/99), Decision, 23 October–6 November 2000, § 30.

3284. In its decision in Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria (218/98) in 2001, the ACiHPR stated, with respect to Article 7(1)(c) of the 1981 ACHPR, that:

> 27. It is our view that the provisions of Article 7 should be considered non-derogable providing as they do the minimum protection to citizens and military officers alike especially under an unaccountable, undemocratic military regime . . .
> 28. It is alleged that in contravention of Article 7(1)(c) of the Charter, the convicted persons were not given the opportunity to be represented and defended by counsel of their choice, but rather that junior military lawyers were assigned to them and their objections were overruled. The fairness of the trial is critical if justice is to be done. For that especially in serious cases, which carry the death penalty, the accused should be represented by a lawyer of his choice. The purpose of this provision is to ensure that the accused has confidence in his legal counsel. Failure to provide for this may expose the accused to a situation where they will not be able to give full instructions to their counsel for lack of confidence.
> 29. Besides, it is desirable that in cases where the accused are unable to afford legal counsel, that they be represented by counsel at state expense. Even in such cases, the accused should be able to choose out of a list the preferred independent counsel "not acting under the instructions of government but responsible only to the accused". The Human Rights Committee also prescribes that the accused person must be able to consult with his lawyer in conditions which ensure confidentiality of their communications. Lawyers should be able to counsel and to represent their clients in accordance with established professional standards without any restrictions, influences, pressures or undue interference from any quarter . . .
> 30. The right to fair trial is essential for the protection of all other fundamental rights and freedoms . . .
> 31. The assignment of military lawyers to accused persons is capable of exposing the victims to a situation of not being able to communicate, in confidence, with counsel of their choice. The Commission therefore finds the assignment of military counsel to the accused persons, despite their objections, and especially in a criminal proceeding which carries the ultimate punishment a breach of Article 7(1)(c) [of the 1981 ACHPR].[3005]

3285. In its decision in Ensslin, Baader and Raspe v. FRG in 1978, the ECiHR held that it was permissible to bar a particular lawyer from representing an accused because of his support for a criminal organisation to which the accused belonged and in circumstances in which a number of other lawyers nominated by the accused were permitted to act.[3006]

3286. In its judgement in the Pakelli case in 1983, the ECtHR reaffirmed that free legal assistance must be given if the accused does not have sufficient means to pay counsel and if the interests of justice so require. In this case, one of the grievances of the accused related to the application of a new rule of criminal procedure and therefore the presence of counsel was necessary.[3007]

[3005] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria (218/98), Decision, 23 April–7 May 2001, §§ 27–31.
[3006] ECiHR, Ensslin, Baader and Raspe v. FRG, Decision, 8 July 1978, §§ 25 and 57.

3287. In its judgement in the Campbell and Fell case in 1984, the ECtHR observed that the "privileged contact prior to the commencement of litigation may be just as important as privileged contact after proceedings have been instituted".[3008]

3288. In its decision in the Can case in 1984, the ECiHR explained that the right of the accused to "adequate facilities" under the 1950 ECHR implied that:

> The substantive defence activity on his behalf may comprise everything which is "necessary" to prepare the main trial . . . The accused must have the opportunity to organise his defence in an appropriate way and without restriction as to the possibility to put all relevant defence arguments before the trial court.[3009]

The ECiHR further stated that "to subject the defence counsel's contacts with the accused to supervision of the court" is in principle incompatible with the right to effective assistance by a lawyer as guaranteed by the 1950 ECHR. It added that:

> This does not mean, however, that the right to free contact with the defence counsel must be granted under all circumstances and without any exceptions. Any restrictions in this respect must however remain an exception to the general rule, and therefore need to be justified by the special circumstances of the case.[3010]

3289. In its judgement in Quaranta v. Switzerland in 1991, the ECtHR, considering that the case concerned the possibility of up to three years' imprisonment, which was severe, and that the personality of the accused was such that the lack of counsel made it impossible for him to plead his cause adequately, stated that:

> 27. . . . The right of an accused to be given, in certain circumstances, free legal assistance constitutes one aspect of the notion of a fair trial in criminal proceedings . . .
> 32. In order to determine whether the "interests of justice" required that the applicant receive free legal assistance, the Court will have regard to various criteria . . .
> 33. In the first place, consideration should be given to the seriousness of the offence . . . and the severity of the sentence which [the accused] risked . . .
> 34. An additional factor is the complexity of the case.[3011]

3290. In its judgement in the Imbrioscia v. Switzerland case in 1993, the ECtHR stated, with respect to Article 6(3)(c) of the 1950 ECHR, that:

[3007] ECtHR, Pakelli case, Judgement, 25 April 1983, §§ 30–40.
[3008] ECtHR, Campbell and Fell case, Judgement, 28 June 1984, § 159.
[3009] ECiHR, Can case, Decision, 12 July 1984, § 53.
[3010] ECiHR, Can case, Decision, 12 July 1984, § 57.
[3011] ECtHR, Quaranta v. Switzerland, Judgement, 24 May 1991, §§ 27 and 32–34.

> 33. . . . [The applicant] inferred that in order to be effective, the right to defend oneself must cover not only the trial, but also the preceding interrogations by the police and the phase which took place before the district prosecutor.
> . . .
> 36. The Court cannot accept the Government's first submission without qualification. Certainly the primary purpose of Article 6 [1950 ECHR] as far as criminal matters are concerned is to ensure a fair trial by a "tribunal" competent to determine "any criminal charge", but it does not follow that the Article (art. 6) has no application to pre-trial proceedings. The "reasonable time" mentioned in [Article 6(1)], for instance, begins to run from the moment a "charge" comes into being, within the autonomous, substantive meaning to be given to that term.[3012]

3291. In its judgement in Averill v. UK in 2000, the ECtHR found that the "concept of fairness" enshrined in Article 6 of the 1950 ECHR required that legal assistance be accessible even "at the initial stages of police interrogation".[3013]

3292. In a case concerning Nicaragua in 1989, the IACiHR considered the issue of adequacy of time to prepare a defence. The Commission inferred from the shortness of the period during which the accused had been detained and tried that he had not been accorded adequate time for the preparation of his defence.[3014]

3293. In its advisory opinion in the Exceptions to the Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies case in 1990, the IACtHR stated that:

> 25. . . . If a person refuses or is unable to defend himself personally, he has the right to be assisted by counsel of his own choosing. In cases where the accused neither defends himself nor engages his own counsel within the time period established by law, he has the right to be assisted by counsel provided by the state, paid or not as the domestic law provides. To that extent the Convention guarantees the right to counsel in criminal proceedings. But since it does not stipulate that legal counsel be provided free of charge when required, an indigent would suffer discrimination for reason of his economic status if, when in need of legal counsel, the state were not to provide it to him free of charge.
> 26. Article 8 must, then, be read to require legal counsel only when that is necessary for a fair hearing. Any state that does not provide indigents with such counsel free of charge cannot, therefore, later assert that appropriate remedies existed but were not exhausted.
> 27. Even in those cases in which the accused is forced to defend himself because he cannot afford legal counsel, a violation of Article 8 of the Convention could be said to exist if it can be proved that the lack of legal counsel affected the right to a fair hearing to which he is entitled under that Article.[3015]

[3012] ECtHR, Imbrioscia v. Switzerland, Judgement, 24 November 1993, §§ 33 and 36.
[3013] ECtHR, Averill v. UK, Judgement, 6 June 2000, § 57.
[3014] IACiHR, Case 10.198 (Nicaragua), Resolution, 29 September 1989, § 9 .
[3015] IACtHR, Exceptions to the Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies case, Advisory Opinion, 10 August 1990, §§ 25–27.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3294. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces the rule that the courts must respect "the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . the right to fair trial including means of defence".[3016]

VI. Other Practice

3295. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides that "unacknowledged detention" shall remain prohibited. It also provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, including that "the procedure . . . shall afford the accused before and during his or her trial all the necessary rights and means of defence".[3017]

Trial without undue delay

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3296. Article 103, first paragraph, GC III provides that "judicial investigations relating to a prisoner of war shall be conducted as rapidly as circumstances permit and so that his trial shall take place as soon as possible".

3297. Article 71, second paragraph, GC IV provides that accused persons prosecuted by the occupying power "shall be brought to trial as rapidly as possible".

3298. Article 5(3) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone arrested or detained in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1.c of this article . . . shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial".

3299. Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time".

3300. Article 9(3) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "anyone arrested or detained on a criminal charge . . . shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release".

3301. Article 14(3)(c) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that everyone shall be entitled "to be tried without undue delay".

3302. Article 8(1) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "every person has the right to a hearing, with due guarantees and within a reasonable time".

[3016] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(a).

[3017] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Articles 4(2) and 9(a), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, pp. 331–332 and 334.

3303. Article 7(1)(d) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that every individual shall have "the right to be tried within a reasonable time by an impartial court or tribunal".
3304. Article 40(2)(b)(iii) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (iii) to have the matter determined without delay by a competent, independent and impartial authority or judicial body".
3305. According to Article 64(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "the Trial Chamber shall ensure that the trial is . . . expeditious". Article 64(3) provides that "upon assignment of a case for trial in accordance with this Statute, the Trial Chamber assigned to deal with the case shall . . . confer with the parties and adopt such procedures as are necessary to facilitate the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings".
3306. Article 67(1)(c) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to be tried without undue delay".
3307. Article 17(4)(c) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "in the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, he or she shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality: . . . to be tried without undue delay".

Other Instruments
3308. Principle 38 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "a person detained on a criminal charge shall be entitled to trial within a reasonable time or to release pending trial".
3309. Article 8(d) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to be tried without undue delay".
3310. Article 20(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "the Trial Chamber shall ensure that a trial is fair and expeditious".
3311. Article 21(4)(c) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that the accused shall "be tried without undue delay".
3312. Article 19(1) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that "the Trial Chamber shall ensure that a trial is fair and expeditious".
3313. Article 20(4)(c) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that the accused shall "be tried without undue delay".
3314. Article 11(1)(d) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to be tried without undue delay".

3315. Article 47 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3316. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that the verdict shall be given in "the shortest time limit as possible".[3018] It also provides that the occupying power shall conduct the case "in the most speedy way".[3019]

3317. Australia's Defence Force Manual sets out a number of procedural rules which include, inter alia, that "investigations must be conducted as rapidly as possible".[3020]

3318. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that in an occupied territory, accused persons "must be brought to trial as rapidly as possible".[3021]

3319. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "anybody who is accused has the right to . . . a due . . . trial without unjustified delay".[3022]

3320. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "internees charged with disciplinary offences are entitled to a speedy trial".[3023] It further provides that the accused "must be brought to trial as rapidly as possible".[3024]

3321. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that judicial criminal proceedings in occupied territory shall not last longer than the usual delay.[3025]

3322. The UK Military Manual provides that "the investigation of charges against a prisoner of war shall be carried out as quickly as circumstances permit and in such manner that his trial will take place as quickly as possible".[3026] The manual further states that in occupied territories, the accused "must be brought to trial as rapidly as possible".[3027]

3323. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 103 GC III and Article 71 GC IV.[3028]

National Legislation

3324. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right to be tried without undue delay.[3029]

[3018] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008(2).
[3019] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.029(2).
[3020] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 1042(a).
[3021] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-6, § 54.
[3022] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 11.
[3023] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1129(5).
[3024] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1330(1).
[3025] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.7.b.(3).
[3026] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 230.
[3027] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 570.
[3028] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 179 and 441.
[3029] See, e.g., Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(1).

3325. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3030]
3326. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 103 GC III and 71 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[3031]
3327. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3032]

National Case-law
3328. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
3329. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
3330. No practice was found.

Other International Organisations
3331. In a resolution adopted in 1984 concerning the situation of martial law in Turkey, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe urged the Turkish authorities to ensure respect for the right of individuals to have their cases heard within a reasonable time.[3033]

International Conferences
3332. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3333. In its General Comment on Article 9 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1982, the HRC stated that "pre-trial detention should be an exception and as short as possible".[3034]
3334. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

[3030] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3031] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3032] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3033] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Res. 822, 10 May 1984, § 17(b)(iv).
[3034] HRC, General Comment No. 8 (Article 9 ICCPR), 30 July 1982, § 3.

Subparagraph 3 (c) provides that the accused shall be tried without undue delay. This guarantee relates not only to the time by which a trial should commence, but also the time by which it should end and judgement be rendered; all stages must take place "without undue delay". To make this right effective, a procedure must be available in order to ensure that the trial will proceed "without undue delay", both in first instance and on appeal.[3035]

3335. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following: "In the determination of charges against individuals, the individual shall be entitled in particular to: . . . ii) Be tried within a reasonable time."[3036]

3336. In its decision in Pagnoulle v. Cameroon in 1997, the ACiHPR held that:

> Mr. Mazou has not yet had a judgment on his case brought before the Supreme Court over 2 years ago, without being given any reason for the delay . . . The delegation [of Cameroon] held that the case might be decided upon by the end of October 1996, but still no news of it has been forwarded to the Commission. Given that this case concerns Mr. Mazou's ability to work in his profession, two years without any hearing or projected trial date constitutes a violation of [Article 7(1)(d) of the 1981 ACHPR].[3037]

3337. In its decision in Abubakar v. Ghana in 1996, involving the arrest and detention of a Ghanaian national, the ACiHPR found that "the complainant was detained in prison for seven years without trial before his escape. This period clearly violates the "reasonable time" standard stipulated in the [1981 ACHPR]."[3038]

3338. In several cases, the ECtHR found that the reasonableness of the length of time for pre-trial detention would depend upon factors relating to the circumstances of the case, including the difficulty of the investigations, the behaviour of the accused and the handling of the case by the national authorities.[3039]

3339. In its judgement in Boddaert v. Belgium in 1992, the ECtHR stated that Article 6 of the 1950 ECHR commanded that judicial proceedings be expeditious, but it also laid down the more general principle of the proper administration of justice.[3040]

3340. In a case concerning Argentina in 1989, the IACiHR referred to the jurisprudence of the ECtHR and stated that the:

3035 HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 10.

3036 ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(e)(ii).

3037 ACiHPR, Pagnoulle v. Cameroon, Decision, 15–24 April 1997, § 19.

3038 ACiHPR, Abubakar v. Ghana, Decision, 21–31 October 1996, § 12.

3039 ECtHR, Wemhoff case, Judgement, 27 June 1968, § 104; Matznetter v. Austria, Judgement, 10 November 1969, § 12; Stögmüller case, Judgement, 10 November 1969, § 16; König v. Germany, Judgement, 28 June 1978, § 99; Letellier v. France, Judgement, 26 June 1991, § 51; Kemmache v. France, Judgement, 27 November 1991, § 52; Tomasi v. France, Judgement, 27 August 1992, § 102; Olsson v. Sweden (No. 2), Judgement, 27 November 1992, § 99; Scopelliti v. Italy, Judgement, 23 November 1993, § 19.

3040 ECtHR, Boddaert v. Belgium, Judgement, 12 October 1992, § 39.

reasonableness of a court order or of length of time must be weighed within its own and specific context, that is, there are no general universally valid criteria and what is involved is something that is legally known as a question of fact
...
It is not possible to define this [reasonable length of time] period in abstracto, but, instead, that it shall be defined in each case ... The Commission ... agrees with the opinion that the referenced State party is "not bound (by the Convention) to fix a valid period for all cases, independently from the circumstances".[3041]

3341. In a case concerning Argentina in 1996, the IACiHR noted in relation to the right to a hearing within a reasonable time that a series of factors might determine the length of a trial. The relevant considerations included "the complexity of the case, the behaviour of the accused, and the diligence of the competent authorities in their conduct of the proceedings".[3042]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3342. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

3343. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, including that "the procedure ... shall provide for a trial within a reasonable time".[3043]

Examination of witnesses

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3344. Article 16(e) of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that "a Defendant shall have the right through himself or through his Counsel to present evidence at the Trial in support of his defence, and to cross-examine any witness called by the Prosecution".

3345. Article 96, third paragraph, GC III provides that "the accused shall be ... permitted, in particular, to call witnesses".

3346. Article 105, first paragraph, GC III provides that "the prisoner of war shall be entitled ... to the calling of witnesses".

[3041] IACiHR, Case 10.037 (Argentina), Resolution, 13 April 1989, Section 11(a)(s) and Section 17(seven).
[3042] IACiHR, Case 11.245 (Argentina), Report, 1 March 1996, § 111.
[3043] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9(a), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

3347. Article 72, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "accused persons shall have the right to present evidence necessary to their defence and may, in particular, call witnesses".
3348. Article 123, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "the accused internee shall be . . . permitted, in particular, to call witnesses".
3349. Article 6(3)(d) of the 1950 ECHR provides as a minimum right for any person who is charged with a criminal offence "to examine or have examined witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him".
3350. Article 14(3)(e) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that, in the determination of any criminal charge, the accused is entitled as a minimum guarantee "to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him".
3351. Article 8(2)(f) of the 1969 ACHR states that every person accused of a criminal offence is entitled to be guaranteed "the right of the defense to examine witnesses present in the court and to obtain the appearance, as witnesses, of experts or other persons who may throw light on the facts".
3352. Article 75(4)(g) AP I provides that "anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3044]
3353. Article 40(2)(b)(iv) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (iv) to examine or have examined adverse witnesses and to obtain the participation and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under conditions of equality".
3354. Article 67(1)(e) of the 1998 ICC Statute states that the accused is entitled:

> To examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him or her and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him or her. The accused shall also be entitled to raise defences and to present other evidence admissible under this Statute.

3355. Article 17(4) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that the accused > shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:

>
> . . .
>
> (e) to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him or her and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him or her.

[3044] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

Other Instruments

3356. Article 9(d) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) provides that "an accused shall have the right, through himself or through his counsel (but not through both), to conduct his defense, including the right to examine any witness, subject to such reasonable restrictions as the Tribunal may determine".

3357. Article 8(f) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him".

3358. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3359. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3360. Article 21(4)(e) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him or her and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him or her".

3361. Article 20(4)(e) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him or her and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his or her behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him or her".

3362. Article 11(1)(f) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3363. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) states that POWs have the right to "call witnesses".[3045] It further states that the counsel for defence "can . . . talk with witnesses for the prosecution, including prisoners of war".[3046] The manual also stresses that "any accused has the right to assert the means of evidence necessary for his defence . . . including citing witnesses".[3047]

[3045] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.082.
[3046] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.086.
[3047] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.029(3).

3364. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that a POW has the "right to subpoena witnesses".[3048]

3365. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that accused persons in occupied territory must "have the right to present evidence necessary to their defence and may, in particular, call witnesses".[3049]

3366. New Zealand's Military Manual states that in order to defend himself, the accused internee "shall be permitted, in particular, to call witnesses".[3050] It further provides that "anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him".[3051] The manual also stresses that "accused persons have the right to present evidence necessary to their defence and may, in particular, call witnesses".[3052]

3367. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "before imposing a [disciplinary] decision, the accused prisoner . . . can explain his conduct and defend himself, including by presenting witnesses".[3053]

3368. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3054]

3369. The UK Military Manual provides, regarding disciplinary punishment of a POW, that "he must be allowed to call witnesses".[3055] It further provides that "in any judicial proceedings against him, the prisoner of war is entitled to . . . call witnesses" and that "Defending Counsel . . . must also be allowed to interview any witness for the defence, including prisoners of war".[3056] With respect to cases of occupation, the manual states that the "accused have the right to present evidence necessary to their defence and may, in particular, call witnesses".[3057]

3370. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 96 and 105 GC III.[3058] It also uses the same wording as Article 123 GC IV regarding disciplinary punishments and Article 72 GC IV concerning situations of occupation.[3059]

3371. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that Article 105 GC III "gives the right to [the prisoner of war] . . . to the calling of witnesses".[3060] It also states that "among other rights, accused persons are assured the right to . . . call witnesses".[3061]

[3048] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30, see also § 5.09.
[3049] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-7, § 57.
[3050] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1130(1).
[3051] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(g).
[3052] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1330(2).
[3053] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.e.(2).
[3054] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3055] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 208.
[3056] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 227.
[3057] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 571.
[3058] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 172 and 181.
[3059] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 330 and 441.
[3060] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8.
[3061] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6.

3372. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that in case of trial, prisoners must "be allowed to call witnesses for the defense".[3062]

National Legislation

3373. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right to call witnesses.[3063]

3374. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3064]

3375. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 96 and 105 GC III and Articles 72 and 123 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(g) AP I, are punishable offences.[3065]

3376. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[3066]

National Case-law

3377. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

3378. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3067]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3379. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3380. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that "subparagraph 3(e) ... is designed to guarantee to the accused the same legal powers of compelling the attendance of witnesses and of examining or cross-examining any witnesses as are available to the prosecution".[3068]

[3062] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-2(c).
[3063] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 20(4); Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 42(6); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(2)(e); Mexico, Constitution (1917), Article 20(IV).
[3064] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3065] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3066] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3067] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997,Chapter 5.
[3068] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 12.

3381. In its views in L. Grant v. Jamaica in 1994 and García Fuenzalida v. Ecuador in 1996, the HRC found a violation of Article 14(3)(e) of the 1966 ICCPR if the State did not take the necessary measures to enable important witnesses to appear.[3069]

3382. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following:

> In the determination of charges against individuals, the individual shall be entitled in particular to:
>
> . . .
>
> iii) Examine, or have examined, the witnesses against them and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on their behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against them.[3070]

3383. In its judgement in Engel v. Netherlands in 1976, the ECtHR stated that Article 6 of the 1950 ECHR did not require > the attendance and examination of every witness on the accused's behalf. Its essential aim, as is indicated by the words "under the same conditions", is a full "equality of arms" in the matter. With this proviso, it leaves it to the competent national authorities to decide upon the relevance of proposed evidence insofar as is compatible with the concept of a fair trial which dominates the whole of Article 6 (art. 6).[3071]

3384. In its judgement in J. J. v. the Netherlands in 1998, the ECtHR stated that under Article 6(3)(d) of the 1950 ECHR, the right of the defence to call and examine witnesses meant, in principle, "the opportunity for the parties to a criminal . . . trial to have knowledge of and comment on all evidence addressed or observations filed . . . with a view to influencing the court's decision".[3072]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3385. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . presence of defence witnesses [and] examination of witnesses against the accused".[3073]

[3069] HRC, L. Grant v. Jamaica, Views, 31 March 1994, § 8.5; García Fuenzalida v. Ecuador, Views, 12 July 1996, § 9.5.

[3070] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(e)(iii).

[3071] ECtHR, Engel v. Netherlands, Judgement, 8 June 1976, § 91.

[3072] ECtHR, J. J. v. the Netherlands, Judgement, 27 March 1998, § 43.

[3073] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(g)–(h).

3386. The ICRC Commentary on Article 75 AP I points out that "the possibility of examining witnesses is an essential prerequisite for an effective defence".[3074]

VI. Other Practice

3387. No practice was found.

Assistance of an interpreter

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3388. Article 96, fourth paragraph, GC III provides that "the accused shall be . . . permitted . . . to have recourse, if necessary, to the services of a qualified interpreter".

3389. Article 105, first paragraph, GC III provides that "the prisoner of war shall be entitled . . . if he deems necessary, to the services of a competent interpreter".

3390. Article 72, third paragraph, GC IV provides that "accused persons shall, unless they freely waive such assistance, be aided by an interpreter, both during preliminary investigation and during the hearing in court. They shall have the right at any time to object to the interpreter and to ask for his replacement."

3391. Article 123, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "the accused internee shall be . . . permitted . . . to have recourse, if necessary, to the services of a qualified interpreter".

3392. Article 6(3)(e) of the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone charged with a criminal offence has the following minimum rights . . . to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court".

3393. Article 14(3)(f) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "in the determination of any criminal charge against him, everyone shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality: . . . to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court".

3394. Article 8(2)(a) of the 1969 ACHR establishes "the right of the accused to be assisted without charge by a translator or interpreter, if he does not understand or does not speak the language of the tribunal or court".

3395. According to Article 40(2)(b)(vi) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child, "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (vi) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if the child cannot understand or speak the language used".

3396. Article 55(1)(c) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that a person "shall, if questioned in a language other than a language the person fully understands and speaks, have, free of any cost, the assistance of a competent interpreter and such translations as are necessary to meet the requirements of fairness".

[3074] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 3115.

3397. Article 67(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> In the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled . . . to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:
>
> . . .
>
> (f) To have, free of any cost, the assistance of a competent interpreter and such translations as are necessary to meet the requirements of fairness, if any of the proceedings of or documents presented to the Court are not in a language which the accused fully understands and speaks.

3398. Article 17(4) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that:

> In the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, he or she shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:
>
> . . .
>
> (f) to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he or she cannot understand or speak the language used in the Special Court.

Other Instruments

3399. Article 8(g) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court".

3400. Article 21(4)(f) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he or she cannot understand or speak the language used in the International Tribunal".

3401. Article 20(4)(f) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he or she cannot understand or speak the language used in the International Tribunal for Rwanda".

3402. Article 11(1)(g) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to have the free assistance of an interpreter if he cannot understand or speak the language used in court".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3403. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that the accused POW "shall be authorised . . . to ask for the assistance of a qualified interpreter" and that a POW has the right to "use, if he considers it to be necessary, the services of a qualified interpreter".[3075] The manual states that "any accused person, except if he refuses freely, can be assisted by an interpreter during the investigation as well as during the hearings before the tribunal. He can, at any time, challenge the interpreter and ask for his substitution."[3076]

3404. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that a POW has the "right to . . . have access to an interpreter".[3077]

3405. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that accused persons in occupied territory must "be aided by an interpreter, both during preliminary investigation and during the hearing in court".[3078]

3406. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "at a minimum, [procedural] rights must include the assistance of . . . an interpreter".[3079]

3407. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that the accused "shall have recourse, if necessary, to the services of a qualified interpreter".[3080] It further states that "both during the preliminary investigation and during the hearing in court, the accused must be aided by an interpreter, unless such assistance is voluntarily waived. Similarly, an accused has the right at any time to object to the interpreter and to ask for his replacement."[3081]

3408. The UK Military Manual provides, regarding disciplinary punishment of a POW, that "if necessary, [he must] be given the services of a qualified interpreter".[3082] It further states that "in any judicial proceedings against him, the prisoner of war is entitled . . . if he so desires, to have the services of a qualified interpreter".[3083] With respect to situations of occupation, the manual states that "unless they voluntarily waive such assistance, accused persons must be aided by an interpreter, both during preliminary investigation and during the hearing in court. They have the right at any time to object to the interpreter and to ask for his replacement."[3084]

3409. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 96 and 105 GC III.[3085] It also uses the same wording as Articles 72 and 123 GC IV.[3086]

3410. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that Article 105 GC III "gives [the prisoner of war] the right to . . . the services of a competent interpreter".[3087] It also states that "among other rights, accused persons are assured the right to . . . obtain an interpreter".[3088]

3411. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that prisoners must be allowed "the help of . . . an interpreter" in case of trial.[3089]

[3075] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), §§ 2.082 and 2.086.
[3076] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.029(3).
[3077] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30, see also § 5.09.
[3078] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-7, § 58.
[3079] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.8.1.
[3080] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1130(1).
[3081] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1330(2).
[3082] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 208.
[3083] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 227.
[3084] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 571.
[3085] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 172 and 181.
[3086] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 442 and 330.
[3087] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8.
[3088] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6.
[3089] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 4-2(c).

3412. The US Naval Handbook states that "at a minimum, [procedural] rights must include the assistance of . . . an interpreter".[3090]

National Legislation

3413. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right to have the free assistance of an interpreter if the accused cannot understand or speak the language used in court.[3091]

3414. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3092]

3415. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 96 and 105 GC III and Articles 72 and 123 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[3093]

3416. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3094]

National Case-law

3417. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

3418. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3419. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3420. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

> [The right conferred by] Subparagraph 3(f) . . . is independent of the outcome of the proceedings and applies to aliens as well as to nationals. It is of basic importance in cases in which ignorance of the language used by a court or difficulty in understanding may constitute a major obstacle to the right of defence.[3095]

[3090] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.7.1.
[3091] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 20(7); Germany, Criminal Procedure Code as amended (1987), Section 259; Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(2)(f).
[3092] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3093] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3094] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[3095] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 13.

3421. In its views in Cadoret and Le Bihan v. France in 1991, the HRC explained the scope of the right to an interpreter as follows:

The provision for the use of one official court language by States parties to the Covenant does not . . . violate article 14. Nor does the requirement of a fair hearing obligate State parties to make available to a person whose mother tongue differs from the official court language, the services of an interpreter, if that person is capable of understanding and expressing himself adequately in the official language. Only if the accused or the witnesses have difficulties in understanding or expressing themselves in the court language is it obligatory that the services of an interpreter be made available.[3096]

3422. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR considered that the right to fair trial included, inter alia, the following: "In the determination of charges against individuals, the individual shall be entitled in particular to: . . . iv) Have the free assistance of an interpreter if they cannot speak the language used in court."[3097]

3423. In its decision in Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania in 2000, the ACiHPR held that:

The right to defence should also be interpreted as including the right to understand the charges being brought against oneself. In [one of the trials under consideration which allegedly violated the 1981 ACHPR], only 3 of the 21 accused persons spoke Arabic fluently, and this was the language used during the trial. This means that the 18 others did not have the right to defend themselves; this . . . constitutes a violation of [Article 7(1)(c) of the 1981 ACHPR].[3098]

3424. In its judgement in the Luedicke, Belkacem and Koç case in 1978, the ECtHR stated that:

The right protected by Article 6 para. 3 (e) (art. 6-3-e) entails, for anyone who cannot speak or understand the language used in court, the right to receive the free assistance of an interpreter, without subsequently having claimed back from him payment of the costs thereby incurred.

. . .

Construed in the context of the right to a fair trial guaranteed by Article 6, paragraph 3 (e) (art. 6-3-e) signifies that an accused who cannot understand or speak the language used in court has the right to the free assistance of an interpreter for the translation or interpretation of all those documents or statements in the proceedings instituted against him which it is necessary for him to understand in order to have the benefit of a fair trial.[3099]

[3096] HRC, Cadoret and Le Bihan v. France, Views, 11 April 1991, § 5(6); see also Guesdon v. France, Views, 25 July 1990, § 10(2); Barzhig v. France, Views, 11 April 1991, § 5.5; Z. P. v. Canada, Admissibility Decision, 11 April 1991, § 5.3; C. E. A. v. Finland, Admissibility Decision, 10 July 1991, § 6.2; C. L. D. v. France, Admissibility Decision, 8 November 1991, § 4.2.

[3097] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 2(e)(iv).

[3098] ACiHPR, Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania (54/91), Decision, 11 May 2000, § 97.

[3099] ECtHR, Luedicke, Belkacem and Koç case, Judgement, 28 November 1978, §§ 46 and 48.

3425. In its judgement in the Kamasinski case in 1989, the ECtHR stated that Article 6(3)(e) of the 1950 ECHR > does not go so far as to require a written translation of all items of written evidence or official documents in the procedure. The interpretation assistance provided should be such as to enable the defendant to have knowledge of the case against him and to defend himself, notably by being able to put before the court his version of the events.[3100]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3426. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

3427. No practice was found.

Presence of the accused at the trial

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3428. Article 12 of the 1945 IMT Charter (Nuremberg) provides that:

> The Tribunal shall have the right to take proceedings against a person charged with crimes set out in Article 6 of this Charter in his absence, if he has not been found or if the Tribunal, for any reason, finds it necessary, in the interests of justice, to conduct the hearing in his absence.

3429. Article 123, second paragraph, GC IV refers to the disciplinary punishment awarded to internees and states that "the decision shall be announced in the presence of the accused".

3430. Article 6(3)(c) of the 1950 ECHR provides that everyone charged with a criminal offence has the right "to defend himself in person".

3431. Article 14(3)(d) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "everyone shall be entitled to . . . be tried in his presence".

3432. Article 8(2)(d) of the 1969 ACHR provides that during proceedings, every person accused of a criminal offence has "the right . . . to defend himself personally".

3433. Article 75(4)(e) AP I provides that "anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to be tried in his presence". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3101]

[3100] ECtHR, Kamasinski case, Judgement, 19 December 1989, § 74.
[3101] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

3434. Upon ratification of AP I, Austria stated that:

> Article 75 of Protocol I will be applied insofar as sub-paragraph (e) of paragraph 4 is not incompatible with legislation providing that any defendant, who causes a disturbance at the trial or whose presence is likely to impede the questioning of another defendant or the hearing of a witness or expert witness, may be removed from the courtroom.[3102]

3435. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany stated that "Article 74, paragraph 4, subparagraph (e) of Additional Protocol I will be applied in such manner that it is for the court to decide whether an accused person held in custody may appear in person at the hearing before the court of review".[3103]

3436. Upon ratification of AP I, Ireland stated that "Article 75 will be applied in Ireland insofar as paragraph 4(e) is not incompatible with the power enabling a judge, in exceptional circumstances, to order the removal of an accused from the court who causes a disturbance at the trial".[3104]

3437. Upon ratification of AP I, Liechtenstein stated in relation to Article 75 that "paragraph 4(e) is not incompatible with legislation under which any accused who causes a disturbance in court or whose presence could impede the questioning of another accused, a witness or expert may be excluded from the courtroom".[3105]

3438. Upon ratification of AP I, Malta stated in relation to Article 75 that:

> Sub-paragraph (e) of paragraph 4 is not incompatible with legislation providing that any defendant, who causes a disturbance at the trial or whose presence is likely to impede the questioning of another defendant or the hearing or another witness or expert witness, may be removed from the courtroom.[3106]

3439. Article 6(2)(e) AP II provides that "anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to be tried in his presence". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3107]

3440. Upon ratification of AP II, Austria stated that:

> Article 6, paragraph 2, sub-paragraph (e) of Protocol II will be applied insofar as it is not incompatible with legislation providing that any defendant, who causes a disturbance at the trial or whose presence is likely to impede the questioning of another defendant or the hearing of a witness or expert witness, may be removed from the courtroom.[3108]

3441. Upon ratification of AP II, Germany stated that "Article 6, paragraph 2, subparagraph (e) of Additional Protocol II will be applied in such manner that [3102] Austria, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 13 August 1982, § 3(a).

[3103] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 14 February 1991, § 8.
[3104] Ireland, Declarations and reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 19 May 1999, § 13.
[3105] Liechtenstein, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 10 August 1989, § 1(a).
[3106] Malta, Reservations made upon accession to AP I and AP II, 17 April 1989, § 1(a).
[3107] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.
[3108] Austria, Reservations made upon ratification of AP II, 13 August 1982, § 6.

it is for the court to decide whether an accused person held in custody may appear in person at the hearing before the court of review".[3109]

3442. Upon ratification of AP II, Ireland stated that "Article 6 will be applied in Ireland insofar as paragraph 2(e) is not incompatible with the power enabling a judge, in exceptional circumstances, to order the removal of an accused from the court who causes a disturbance at the trial".[3110]

3443. Upon ratification of AP II, Liechtenstein stated that:

> Article 6, paragraph 2(e), of Protocol II will be implemented provided that it is not incompatible with legislation under which any accused who causes a disturbance in court or whose presence could impede the questioning of another accused or of a witness or expert may be excluded from the court room.[3111]

3444. Upon ratification of AP II, Malta stated in relation to Article 6 that:

> paragraph 2, sub-paragraph (e) of Protocol II will be applied insofar as it is not incompatible with legislation providing that any defendant, who causes a disturbance at the trial or whose presence is likely to impede the questioning of another defendant or the hearing of a witness or expert witness, may be removed from the courtroom.[3112]

3445. Article 63(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "the accused shall be present during the trial".

3446. Article 67(1)(d) of the 1998 ICC Statute states that the accused, "subject to article 63, paragraph 2, [shall] be present at the trial".

3447. Article 17(4)(d) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "in the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, he or she shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality: . . . to be tried in his or her presence".

Other Instruments

3448. Article 12(c) of the 1946 IMT Charter (Tokyo) provides that the Tribunal shall "provide for the maintenance of order at the trial and deal summarily with any contumacy, imposing appropriate punishment, including exclusion of any accused or his counsel from some or all further proceedings, but without prejudice to the determination of the charges".

3449. Article 8(e) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to be tried in his presence".

3450. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

[3109] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 14 February 1991, § 8.
[3110] Ireland, Declarations and reservations made upon ratification of AP II, 19 May 1999, § 2.
[3111] Liechtenstein, Reservations made upon ratification of AP II, 10 August 1989, § 2.
[3112] Malta, Reservations made upon accession to AP I and AP II, 17 April 1989, § 2.

3451. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3452. Article 21(4)(d) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to be tried in his presence".
3453. Article 20(4)(d) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that the accused shall be entitled "to be tried in his or her presence".
3454. Article 11(1)(e) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "to be tried in his presence".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3455. Argentina's Law of War Manual lists the fundamental guarantees for prisoners of war, including "trial in the presence of the accused".[3113] The same provision applies to civilians and in occupied territories.[3114] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that one of the fundamental judicial guarantees is "trial in the presence of the accused".[3115]
3456. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, in non-international armed conflict, "accused persons have the right to be present at their trial".[3116]
3457. New Zealand's Military Manual states, in an explanatory footnote, that "no prisoner may be tried in absentia".[3117] It further provides that "anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to be tried in his presence".[3118] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "the accused has the right to be present at his trial".[3119]
3458. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3120]

National Legislation

3459. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right of the accused to be tried in their presence.[3121]

[3113] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30.
[3114] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 4.15 and 5.09(4).
[3115] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[3116] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 29(e).
[3117] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 932(3), footnote 145.
[3118] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(e).
[3119] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(4)(e).
[3120] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3121] See, e.g., Georgia, Code of Criminal Procedure (1998), Article 77(3); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77; Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 28; Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 123(2).

3460. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3122]
3461. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 123 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(e) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(2)(e) AP II, are punishable offences.[3123]
3462. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3124]

National Case-law
3463. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
3464. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3125]
3465. The Report on US Practice states that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II". The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[3126]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
3466. No practice was found.

Other International Organisations
3467. No practice was found.

International Conferences
3468. The Rapporteur of the Third Committee at the CDDH noted in relation to Article 75(4)(e) AP I that "it was understood that persistent misconduct by a defendant could justify his banishment from the courtroom".[3127]

[3122] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3123] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3124] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3125] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[3126] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[3127] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XV, CDDH/407/Rev.1, 10 June 1977, p. 462, § 48.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3469. In Daniel Monguya Mbenge v. Zaire in 1983, the HRC held that:

14.1 . . . According to article 14 (3) of the [ICCPR], everyone is entitled to be tried in his presence and to defend himself in person or through legal assistance. This provision and other requirements of due process enshrined in article 14 cannot be construed as invariably rendering proceedings in absentia inadmissible irrespective of the reasons for the accused person's absence. Indeed, proceedings in absentia are in some circumstances (for instance, when the accused person, although informed of the proceedings sufficiently in advance, declines to exercise his right to be present) permissible in the interest of the proper administration of justice. Nevertheless, the effective exercise of the rights under article 14 presupposes that the necessary steps should be taken to inform the accused beforehand about the proceedings against him (art. 14 (3) (a)). Judgement in absentia requires that, notwithstanding the absence of the accused, all due notification has been made to inform him of the date and place of his trial and to request his attendance. Otherwise, the accused, in particular, is not given adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence (art. 14 (3) (b)), cannot defend himself through legal assistance of his own choosing (art. 14 (3) (d)) nor does he have the opportunity to examine, or have examined, the witnesses against him and to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf (art. 14 (3) (e)).
14.2 The Committee acknowledges that there must be certain limits to the efforts which can duly be expected of the responsible authorities of establishing contact with the accused. With regard to the present communication, however, those limits need not be specified. The State party has not challenged the author's contention that he had known of the trials only through press reports after they had taken place. It is true that both judgements state explicitly that summonses to appear had been issued by the clerk of the court. However, no indication is given of any steps actually taken by the State party in order to transmit the summonses to the author, whose address in Belgium is correctly reproduced in the judgement of 17 August 1977 and which was therefore known to the judicial authorities. The fact that, according to the judgement in the second trial of March 1978, the summons had been issued only three days before the beginning of the hearings before the court, confirms the Committee in its conclusion that the State party failed to make sufficient efforts with a view to informing the author about the impending court proceedings, thus enabling him to prepare his defence. In the view of the Committee, therefore, the State party has not respected D. Monguya Mbenge's rights under article 14 (3) (a), (b), (d) and (e) of the Covenant.[3128]

3470. In Karttunen v. Finland in 1992, the HRC stated that:

7.3 . . . The Committee considers that the author was entitled to oral proceedings before the Court of Appeal. As the State party itself concedes, only this procedure would have enabled the Court to proceed with the reevaluation of all the evidence submitted by the parties, and to determine whether the procedural flaw had indeed affected the verdict of the District Court. In the light of the above, the Committee concludes that there has been a violation of article 14, paragraph 1 [of the 1966 ICCPR].[3129]

[3128] HRC, Daniel Monguya Mbenge v. Zaire, Views, 25 March 1983, §§ 14.1–14.2.
[3129] HRC, Karttunen v. Finland, Views, 23 October 1992, § 7.3.

3471. In its judgement in the Colozza case in 1985, the ECtHR held that the conduct of a criminal trial without the presence of the accused was incompatible with Article 6 of the 1950 ECHR and that in cases where a person was convicted in absentia, there must be an opportunity for that person to reopen the trial.[3130] The ECtHR held that a hearing in absentia was permitted if the State had acted diligently, but unsuccessfully, to give the accused effective notice of the hearing.[3131]

3472. In several cases, the ECtHR decided that the right to be present included appeal proceedings if the issues considered were not purely those of law, but included issues of fact or sentencing.[3132]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3473. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . trial in the presence of the accused".[3133]

3474. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states that Article 75(4)(e) AP I "does not exclude sentencing a defendant in his absence if the law of the State permits judgement in absentia".[3134] It adds that:

> In some countries the discussions of the judges of the court are public and take place before the defendant; in other countries the discussion is held in camera, and only the verdict is made public. Finally, there are countries where the court's decision is communicated to the defendant by the clerk of the court in the absence of the judges. This sub-paragraph does not prohibit any such practices: the important thing is that the defendant is present at the sessions where the prosecution puts its case, when oral arguments are heard, etc. In addition, the defendant must be able to hear the witnesses and experts, to ask questions himself and to make his objections or propose corrections.[3135]

VI. Other Practice

3475. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi

[3130] ECtHR, Colozza case, Judgement, 12 February 1985, § 29.
[3131] ECtHR, Colozza case, Judgement, 12 February 1985, § 28; see also F. C. B. v. Italy case, Judgement, 28 August 1991, § 33.
[3132] See, e.g., ECtHR, Ekbatani v. Sweden, Judgement, 26 May 1988, § 31; Kremzow v. Austria, Judgement, 21 September 1993, §§ 59 and 67.
[3133] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(e).
[3134] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 3109.
[3135] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987,7break; § 3110.

University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, including that "anyone charged with an offence shall have the right to be tried in his or her presence".[3136]

Compelling accused persons to testify against themselves or to confess guilt

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3476. Article 99, second paragraph, GC III provides that "no moral or physical coercion may be exerted on a prisoner of war in order to induce him to admit himself guilty of the act of which he is accused".

3477. Article 14(3)(g) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "everyone is entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality: . . . not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt".

3478. Article 8(2)(g) of the 1969 ACHR provides for "the right not to be compelled to be a witness against himself or to plead guilty". It can be read in conjunction with Article 8(3) which states that "a confession of guilt by the accused shall be valid only if it is made without coercion of any kind".

3479. Article 75(4)(f) AP I provides that "no one shall be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3137]

3480. Article 6(2)(f) AP II provides that "no one shall be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3138]

3481. According to Article 40(2)(b)(iv) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child "every child alleged as or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees: . . . (iv) not to be compelled to give testimony or to confess guilt".

3482. Article 55(1)(a) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "in respect of an investigation under this Statute, a person . . . shall not be compelled to incriminate himself or herself or to confess guilt".

3483. Article 67(1)(g) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> In the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled . . . to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality:
>
> . . .
>
> (g) Not to be compelled to testify or to confess guilt and to remain silent, without such silence being a consideration in the determination of guilt or innocence.

[3136] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9(d), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

[3137] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

[3138] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

3484. Article 17(4)(g) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "in the determination of any charge against the accused pursuant to the present Statute, he or she shall be entitled to the following minimum guarantees, in full equality: . . . not to be compelled to testify against himself or herself or to confess guilt".

Other Instruments

3485. Principle 21 of the 1988 Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment provides that "it shall be prohibited to take undue advantage of the situation of a detained or imprisoned person for the purpose of compelling him to confess, to incriminate himself otherwise or to testify against any other person".

3486. Article 8(h) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt".

3487. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3488. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3489. Article 21(4)(g) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that, among the minimum guarantees, the accused is "not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt".

3490. Article 20(4)(g) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that, among the minimum guarantees, the accused is "not to be compelled to testify against himself or herself or to confess guilt".

3491. Article 11(1)(h) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "not to be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt".

3492. Article 2(9) of Part III of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the Agreement seeks to protect and promote the right against self-incrimination.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3493. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "no moral or physical pressure shall be exercised on a prisoner of war to make him confess guilt for the act of which he is accused".[3139]

[3139] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.083(1).

3494. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that judicial proceedings must afford the guarantee that there is "no pressure on the prisoner to confess guilt".[3140] With respect to occupied territories, the manual states that there shall be "no pressure in order to obtain a confession".[3141] In the case of non-international armed conflict, the manual provides for the "absence of pressure [on the accused] to obtain a confession of guilt".[3142]

3495. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "no force of any kind may be imposed upon a PW to cause the PW to plead guilty".[3143] It further states that in cases of non-international armed conflicts, "accused persons shall not be compelled to testify against themselves or to confess their guilt".[3144]

3496. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that it is prohibited to "compel someone to confess or to incriminate himself".[3145]

3497. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "no force of any kind may be imposed upon a prisoner to cause him to plead guilty".[3146] It further provides that "no one shall be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt".[3147] The manual also states that in cases of non-international armed conflict, one of the minimum guarantees is that "no accused shall be compelled to testify against himself or to confess his guilt".[3148]

3498. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3149]

3499. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "no coercion shall be exercised to lead the prisoner to confess guilt to the act of which he is accused".[3150]

3500. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 99 GC III.[3151]

National Legislation

3501. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right not to be compelled to testify against oneself or to confess guilt.[3152]

[3140] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30.
[3141] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 5.09(3).
[3142] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[3143] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-7, § 76.
[3144] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 29(f).
[3145] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 29.
[3146] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 932(2).
[3147] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(f).
[3148] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(4)(f).
[3149] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3150] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 106.
[3151] US, Field Manual (1956), § 175.
[3152] See, e.g., Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 42(8); India, Constitution (1950), Article 20(3); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(7); Mexico, Constitution (1917), Article 20(II); Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 51(1).

3502. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3153]
3503. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 99 GC III, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(f) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(2)(f) AP II, are punishable offences.[3154]
3504. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3155]

National Case-law
3505. In its judgement in the Ward case in 1942, the US Supreme Court stated that:

> This Court has set aside convictions based upon confessions extorted from ignorant persons who have been subjected to persistent and protracted questioning, or who have been threatened with mob violence, or who have been unlawfully held incommunicado without advice of friends or counsel, or who have been taken at night to lonely or isolated places for questioning. Any one of these grounds would be sufficient cause for reversal . . . The use of a confession obtained under such circumstances is a denial of due process.[3156]

Other National Practice
3506. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3157]
3507. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[3158]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3508. No practice was found.

[3153] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3154] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3155] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3156] US, Supreme Court, Ward case, Judgement, 1 June 1942.
[3157] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997,Chapter 5.
[3158] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3509. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

> Subparagraph 3 (g) provides that the accused may not be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt. In considering this safeguard, the provisions of article 7 and article 10 paragraph 1 should be borne in mind. In order to compel the accused to confess or to testify against himself, frequently methods which violate these provisions are used. The law should require that evidence provided by means of such methods or any other form of compulsion is wholly unacceptable.[3159]

3510. In several cases, the HRC explained that the guarantee of Article 14(3)(g) of the 1966 ICCPR must be understood "in terms of the absence of any direct or indirect physical or psychological pressure from the investigating authorities on the accused, with a view to obtaining a confession of guilt".[3160]

3511. The right not to be compelled to testify against oneself or to confess guilt has been seen by the ECtHR as one element of the right to a fair trial.[3161] In its judgement in Coëme and Others v. Belgium in 2000, the ECtHR stated that what mattered was that the guilt of the accused must not be established through evidence obtained from him by force or other forms of pressure.[3162]

3512. In its report in a case concerning Argentina in 1990, the IACiHR stated that conviction on the basis of confessions obtained under torture violated Article XXVI of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man.[3163]

3513. In its report in a case concerning Nicaragua in 1989, the IACiHR found a violation of Article 8(2)(g) of the 1969 ACHR because a confession had been obtained whilst the defendant was being held incommunicado which was therefore invalid under Article 8(3).[3164]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3514. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . no compulsion to confess guilt".[3165]

[3159] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 14.
[3160] HRC, Saldías López v. Uruguay, Views, 29 July 1981, §§ 11.5–13; Teti Izquierdo v. Uruguay, Views, 1 April 1982, § 9; Estrella v. Uruguay, Views, 29 March 1983, § 10; Hiber Conteris v. Uruguay, Views, 17 July 1985, § 10; Cariboni v. Uruguay, Views, 27 October 1987, § 10; Kelly v. Jamaica, Views, 8 April 1991, § 5(5); Berry v. Jamaica, Views, 7 April 1994, § 11(7); Johnson v. Jamaica, Views, 22 March 1996, § 8(7).
[3161] ECtHR, Funke case, Judgement, 25 February 1993, § 44; Serves v. France, Judgement (Chamber), 20 October 1997, § 47.
[3162] ECtHR, Coëme and Others v. Belgium, Judgement, 22 June 2000, § 128.
[3163] IACiHR, Case 9850 (Argentina), Report, 4 October 1990, Part III, § 7.
[3164] IACiHR, Case 10.198 (Nicaragua), Resolution, 29 September 1989, § 1.
[3165] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(f).

VI. Other Practice

3515. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, including that "no one shall be compelled to testify against himself or herself or to confess guilt".[3166]

Public proceedings

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3516. Article 62 of the 1929 Geneva POW Convention provides that:

The representatives of the protecting Power shall have the right to attend the hearing of the case. The only exception to this rule is where the hearing has to be kept secret in the interests of the safety of the State. The detaining Power would then notify the protecting Power accordingly.

3517. Article 105, fifth paragraph, GC III provides that "the representatives of the Protecting Power shall be entitled to attend the trial of the case, unless, exceptionally, this is held in camera in the interest of State security".

3518. Article 74, first paragraph, GC IV provides that:

Representatives of the Protecting Power shall have the right to attend the trial of any protected person, unless the hearing has, as an exceptional measure, to be held in camera in the interests of the security of the Occupying Power, which shall then notify the Protecting Power.

3519. Article 6(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that:

In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing. Judgement shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice.

3520. Article 14(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that:

In the determination of any criminal charge against him, or of his rights and obligations in a suit at law, everyone shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing . . . The press and the public may be excluded from all or part of a trial for reasons of morals, public order (ordre public) or national security in a democratic society, or when the interest of the private lives of the parties so requires, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice; but any judgement rendered in a criminal case or in a suit at law shall be made public except where the interest of juvenile persons otherwise requires or the proceedings concern matrimonial disputes or the guardianship of children.

[3166] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9(e), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

3521. Article 8(5) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "criminal proceedings shall be public, except insofar as may be necessary to protect the interests of justice".

3522. Article 75(4)(i) AP I provides that "anyone prosecuted for an offence shall have the right to have the judgement pronounced publicly". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3167]

3523. Upon ratification of AP I, Finland stated that "with regard to Article 75, paragraph 4 (i), Finland enters a reservation to the effect that under Finnish law a judgement can be declared secret if its publication can be an affront to morals or endanger national security". This reservation was withdrawn with effect from 16 February 1987.[3168]

3524. Upon ratification of AP I, Liechtenstein stated in relation to Article 75 that "paragraph 4(i) is not incompatible with legislation relating to the public nature of hearings and of the pronouncement of judgement".[3169]

3525. Article 64(7) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

> The trial shall be held in public. The Trial Chamber may, however, determine that special circumstances require that certain proceedings be in closed session for the purposes set forth in article 68, or to protect confidential or sensitive information to be given in evidence.

3526. Article 67(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "in the determination of any charge, the accused shall be entitled to a public hearing".

3527. Article 68(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "as an exception to the principle of public hearings provided for in article 67, the Chambers of the Court may, to protect victims and witnesses or an accused, conduct any part of the proceedings in camera".

3528. Article 76(4) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "the sentence shall be pronounced in public, and whenever possible, in the presence of the accused".

3529. Article 17(2) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "the accused shall be entitled to a . . . public hearing, subject to measures ordered by the Special Court for the protection of victims and witnesses".

3530. Article 18 of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "the judgement shall be . . . delivered in public".

Other Instruments

3531. Article 10 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone is entitled in full equality to a . . . public hearing".

[3167] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[3168] Finland, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 7 August 1980, § 1.
[3169] Liechtenstein, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 10 August 1989, § 1(c).

3532. Article 11 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial".
3533. Article XXVI of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man provides that "every person accused of an offense has the right to be given . . . a public hearing".
3534. Article 8(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right "in the determination of any charge against him, to have a fair and public hearing".
3535. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3536. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3537. Article 20(4) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "the hearings shall be public unless the Trial Chamber decides to close the proceedings in accordance with its rules of procedure and evidence".
3538. Article 23(2) of the 1993 ICTY Statute provides that "the judgement . . . shall be delivered by the Trial Chamber in public".
3539. Article 19(4) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that "the hearings shall be public unless the Trial Chamber decides to close the proceedings in accordance with its rules of procedure and evidence".
3540. Article 22(2) of the 1994 ICTR Statute provides that "the judgement . . . shall be delivered by the Trial Chamber in public".
3541. Article 11(1)(a) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that an individual charged with a crime against the peace and security of mankind has the right, "in the determination of any charge against him, to have a fair and public hearing".
3542. Article 47(2) of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3543. Argentina's Law of War Manual lists the fundamental guarantees for prisoners of war, inter alia, "public trial".[3170] The same provision applies to civilians and in occupied territories.[3171]
3544. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "anybody who is accused has the right to . . . a due public trial".[3172]

[3170] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30.
[3171] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 4.15 and 5.09(4).
[3172] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 11.

3545. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "unless the trial is to be held in camera, the Protecting Power's representative is entitled to be present". The footnote to this provision explains that "the Protecting Power must be informed of any trial that is to be held in camera".[3173] The manual further states that "anyone prosecuted for an offence shall have the right to have the judgement pronounced publicly".[3174]

3546. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3175]

3547. The UK Military Manual provides that if the trial of a POW is held in camera, "the Detaining Power shall notify the Protecting Power" of the reasons why.[3176]

National Legislation

3548. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right to have a public trial and for the judgement to be pronounced publicly.[3177]

3549. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3178]

3550. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(i) AP I, is a punishable offence.[3179]

3551. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[3180]

National Case-law

3552. In its judgement in the Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that "the entire proceedings from the beginning to end were secret and no public record was allowed to be made of them" and concluded, on this and other bases, that the trial of the accused was "unfair".[3181]

[3173] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 932(3) and its footnote 145.
[3174] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(i).
[3175] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3176] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 229.
[3177] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 20(1); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(10); Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Article 165; Mexico, Constitution (1917), Article 20(VI); Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 123(1).
[3178] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3179] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3180] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3181] US, Military Tribunal at Nuremberg, Altstötter (The Justice Trial) case, Judgement, 4 December 1947.

Other National Practice

3553. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3182]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3554. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3555. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

The publicity of hearings is an important safeguard in the interest of the individual and of society at large. At the same time article 14, paragraph 1, acknowledges that courts have the power to exclude all or part of the public for reasons spelt out in that paragraph. It should be noted that, apart from such exceptional circumstances, the Committee considers that a hearing must be open to the public in general, including members of the press, and must not, for instance, be limited only to a particular category of persons. It should be noted that, even in cases in which the public is excluded from the trial, the judgement must, with certain strictly defined exceptions, be made public.[3183]

3556. In its decision in Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224/98) in 2000, the ACiHPR stated that:

The exceptional circumstances [to the right to a public trial] under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights . . . are for reasons of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, or when the interest of the private lives of the parties so requires, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice. The Commission notes that these circumstances are exhaustive, as indicated by the use of the phrase "apart from such exceptional circumstances".[3184]

3557. In its decision in Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria in 2001, the ACiHPR stated that:

35. The communication further alleges that except for the opening and closing ceremonies, the trial was conducted in camera in contravention of Article 7 of the [1981 ACHPR]. The Charter does not specifically mention the right to public trials; neither does its Resolution on the Right to Recourse Procedure and Fair Trial. Mindful of developments in international human rights law and practice, and drawing especially from General Comment of the Human Rights Committee to the effect that "the publicity of the hearings is an important safeguard in the interest of the individual and of society at large . . . apart from exceptional circumstances, the Committee considers that a hearing must be open to the public in general, including members of the press, and must not, for instance, be limited only to a particular category of persons . . ." . . .

[3182] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997,Chapter 5.
[3183] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 6.
[3184] ACiHPR, Media Rights Agenda v. Nigeria (224/98), Decision, 23 October–6 November 2000, § 52.

36. The publicity of hearings is an important safeguard in the interest of the individual and the society at large. At the same time article 14, paragraph 1 [1966 ICCPR] acknowledges that courts have the power to exclude all or parts of the public for reasons spelt out in that paragraph. It should be noted that, apart from such exceptional circumstances, the UN Human Rights Committee considers that a hearing must be open to the public in general, including members of the press, and must not, for instance, be limited only to a particular category of persons.[3185]

3558. In its judgement in Stefanelli v. San Marino in 2000, the ECtHR stated that:

The Court reiterates that it is a fundamental principle enshrined in Article 6 § 1 that court hearings should be held in public. This public character protects litigants against the administration of justice without public scrutiny; it is also one of the means whereby people's confidence in the courts can be maintained. By rendering the administration of justice transparent, publicity contributes to the achievement of the aim of Article 6 § 1, namely a fair trial, the guarantee of which is one of the principles of any democratic society.[3186]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3559. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . public pronouncement of the judgement".[3187]

3560. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols states that:

It is an essential element of fair justice that judgements should be pronounced publicly. Of course, a clear distinction should be made between proceedings and judgement. It may be necessary because of the circumstances and the nature of the case to hold the proceedings in camera, but the judgement itself must be made in public, unless, as the Rapporteur pointed out, this is prejudicial to the defendant himself; this could be the case for a juvenile offender.[3188]

VI. Other Practice

3561. No practice was found.

[3185] ACiHPR, Civil Liberties Organisation and Others v. Nigeria (218/98), Decision, 7 May 2001, §§ 36–37.
[3186] ECtHR, Stefanelli v. San Marino, Judgement, 8 February 2000, § 19.
[3187] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(j).
[3188] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 3118.

Advising convicted persons of available remedies and of their time-limits

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3562. Article 106 GC III provides that "every prisoner of war . . . shall be fully informed of his right to appeal or petition and of the time limit within which he may do so".

3563. Article 73, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "a convicted person . . . shall be fully informed of his right to appeal or petition and of the time limit within which he may do so".

3564. Article 75(4)(j) AP I provides that, among other fundamental guarantees, "a convicted person shall be advised on conviction of his judicial and other remedies and of the time-limits within which they may be exercised". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3189]

3565. Article 6(3) AP II provides that "a convicted person shall be advised of his judicial and other remedies and of the time-limits within which they may be exercised". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3190]

Other Instruments

3566. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3567. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3568. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "any prisoner of war . . . shall be fully informed of his rights of recourse, as well as the required time limit to exercise them".[3191] It further states that the "proceedings shall foresee the right to appeal for the persons [placed in assigned residence or interned]".[3192]

3569. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that, in occupied territory, any convicted person shall be informed of the means of recourse available and how to exercise them.[3193] With respect to non-international armed conflict,

[3189] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[3190] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.
[3191] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.087.
[3192] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008(2).
[3193] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 5.09.

the manual states that "information on the right to judicial appeals" is one of the fundamental guarantees.[3194]

3570. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, in non-international armed conflicts, "accused persons shall be told, if convicted, of their judicial and other remedies and appellate procedures".[3195]

3571. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides with respect to non-international armed conflicts that "a person who is convicted must be informed about the judicial remedies available to him".[3196]

3572. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that prisoners charged with offences shall be informed "with details as to the right of appeal".[3197] It further states that "a convicted person shall be advised of the remedies and of the time limits within which they may be exercised".[3198] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual provides that "a convicted person shall be told on conviction of his judicial and other remedies and appellate procedures".[3199]

3573. Spain's LOAC Manual lists the "conditions and limits regarding proceedings" established by the law of war, inter alia, "remedies and appeal" and "time limits".[3200]

3574. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3201]

3575. The UK Military Manual states that "every prisoner of war . . . must be fully informed of this right [of appeal or petition] and also of any time limit for appeal or petition".[3202]

National Legislation

3576. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right of the convicted person to receive advice on judicial and other remedies available.[3203]

3577. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3204]

3578. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 106

[3194] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[3195] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 29(g).
[3196] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[3197] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 932.
[3198] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(j).
[3199] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(2).
[3200] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.7.b.(3).
[3201] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3202] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 232.
[3203] See, e.g., Georgia, Code of Criminal Procedure (1998), Article 511; Mexico, Constitution (1917), Article 20(IX).
[3204] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

GC III and 73 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(j) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(3) AP II, are punishable offences.[3205]

3579. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3206]

National Case-law

3580. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

3581. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3207]

3582. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 75 AP I to be part of customary international law.[3208]

3583. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[3209]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3584. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3585. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3586. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting

[3205] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3206] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3207] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[3208] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[3209] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . information on the right of appeal and other remedies and their time-limits".[3210]

3587. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols explains the rationale behind the guarantee of Article 75(4)(j) AP I as follows:

> It was not considered realistic in view of the present state of national legislation in various countries to lay down a principle to the effect that everyone has a right of appeal against [the] sentence pronounced upon him, i.e., to guarantee the availability of such a right, as provided in the ICRC draft. However, it is clear that if such remedies do exist, not only should everyone have the right to information about them and about the time-limits within which they must be exercised, as explicitly provided in the text, but in addition, no one should be denied the right to use such remedies.[3211]

VI. Other Practice

3588. No practice was found.

Right to appeal

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3589. Article 106 GC III provides that "every prisoner of war shall have, in the same manner as the members of the armed forces of the Detaining Power, the right of appeal or petition from any sentence pronounced upon him, with a view to the quashing or revising of the sentence or the reopening of the trial".

3590. Article 73, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "a convicted person shall have the right of appeal provided for by the laws applied by the court".

3591. Article 14(5) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "everyone convicted of a crime shall have the right to his conviction and sentence being reviewed by a higher tribunal according to law".

3592. Article 8(2)(h) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "during the proceedings, every person is entitled, with full equality, to the following minimum guarantees . . . the right to appeal the judgment to a higher court".

3593. Article 7(1)(a) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "every individual shall have the right to have his cause heard. This comprises . . . the right to an appeal to competent national organs against acts violating his fundamental rights as recognized and guaranteed by conventions, laws, regulations and customs in force."

[3210] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(k).

[3211] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 4611.

3594. Article 2(1) of the 1984 Protocol 7 to the 1950 ECHR provides that "everyone convicted of a criminal offence by a tribunal shall have the right to have his conviction or sentence reviewed by a higher tribunal. The exercise of this right, including the grounds on which it may be exercised, shall be governed by law."

3595. Article 40(2)(b) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

> Every child alleged or accused of having infringed the penal law has at least the following guarantees:
>
> . . .
>
> (v) If considered to have infringed the penal law, to have this decision and any measures imposed in consequence thereof reviewed by a higher competent, independent and impartial authority or judicial body according to law.

Other Instruments

3596. Article 11(2) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "an individual convicted of a crime shall have the right to his conviction and sentence being reviewed according to law".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3597. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "any prisoner of war has the right, under the same conditions as the members of the armed forces of the [Detaining Power], to make an appeal against any sentence pronounced against him".[3212] It further provides that the "proceedings shall foresee the right to appeal for the persons [placed in assigned residence or interned]".[3213] With respect to occupied territory, the manual states that:

> Any sentenced person has the possibility to use the recourse prescribed in the legislation which applies to the tribunal . . . If the legislation which applies to the tribunal does not foresee possibilities of appeal, the sentenced/convicted person shall have the right to appeal the sentence in front of the competent authority of the Occupying Power.[3214]

3598. Hungary's Military Manual states, regarding the prosecution of POWs, that there is a right of appeal.[3215]

[3212] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.087.
[3213] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.008(2).
[3214] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.029(4).
[3215] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 92.

3599. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that prisoners charged with offences "shall enjoy the same right of appeal as members of the Detaining Power's own forces".[3216] It further states that:

> There is no absolute right of appeal against sentence. The IV GC Article 73 merely lays down that "the convicted person shall have the right of appeal provided for by the laws applied by the court". If, however, the court makes no provision for appeal, the convicted person must be given the right to petition the competent authority of the Occupying Power against the finding and sentence. In either case, he must be fully informed of his right to appeal or petition and of the time limit within which he may do so.[3217]

3600. According to Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, "the right of recourse in appeal, cassation and review shall be ensured".[3218]

3601. The UK Military Manual states that "every prisoner of war must be given, in the same manner as members of the armed forces of the Detaining Power, the right of appeal or petition against any judgement or sentence passed on him, with a view to the quashing of the sentence or the reopening of the trial".[3219] With respect to situations of occupation, the manual provides that:

> There is no absolute right of appeal against sentence. The Civilian Convention Article 73 merely lays down that "the convicted person shall have the right of appeal provided for by the laws applied by the court". However, where the law makes no provision for appeal, the convicted person must be given the right to petition the competent authority of the Occupying Power against the finding and sentence. In either case, he must be fully informed of his right to appeal or petition and of the time limit within which he may do so.[3220]

3602. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 106 GC III.[3221] It also uses the same wording as Article 73 GC IV.[3222]

3603. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that there are provisions in GC III which "grant [the prisoner of war] the right of appeal".[3223] It further states with respect to protected persons arrested for criminal offences that "among other rights, accused persons are assured the right . . . to appeal".[3224]

National Legislation

3604. The vast majority of States provide for a right to appeal in their Constitutions and/or legislation relating to criminal or military law.[3225]

[3216] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 932.
[3217] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1330(3).
[3218] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 106.
[3219] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 232.
[3220] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 572.
[3221] US, Field Manual (1956), § 182.
[3222] US, Field Manual (1956), § 443.
[3223] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8.
[3224] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6.
[3225] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 20(6); Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 42(1); Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Article 166; Russia, Constitution (1993), Articles 46(2) and (3), 47 and 50(3).

3605. Colombia's Constitution provides that "any judicial sentence may be appealed or adjudicated, but for exceptions provided by law".[3226]
3606. Estonia's Constitution provides that "every person shall have the right to appeal a judgement by a court in his or her case to a higher court, in accordance with procedures established by law".[3227]
3607. Hungary's Constitution as amended provides that "in the Republic of Hungary everyone is entitled to legal redress or has the right to appeal against court or administrative decisions, or any other authority's decisions that infringe his rights or lawful interests".[3228]

National Case-law
3608. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
3609. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
3610. In a resolution adopted in 2002 on the integrity of the judicial system, the UN Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that "every convicted person should have the right to have his/her conviction and sentence reviewed by a higher tribunal according to law".[3229]

Other International Organisations
3611. In 1992, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe recommended that "the governments of member states be guided in their internal legislation and practice by the principles set out in the text of the European rules on community sanctions and measures, appended to the present recommendation". These provide, inter alia, that "the offender shall have the right to make a complaint to a higher deciding authority against a decision subjecting him to a community sanction or measure, or modifying or revoking such a sanction or measure".[3230]

International Conferences
3612. No practice was found.

[3226] Colombia, Constitution (1991), Article 31.
[3227] Estonia, Constitution (1992), Article 24.
[3228] Hungary, Constitution as amended (1994), Article 57(5).
[3229] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2002/37, 22 April 2002, § 7.
[3230] Council of Europe, Committee of Ministers, Rec. R (92) 16 on the European rules on community sanctions and measures, 19 October 1992, Appendix, Rule 13.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3613. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that:

> Article 14, paragraph 5, provides that everyone convicted of a crime shall have the right to his conviction and sentence being reviewed by a higher tribunal according to law. Particular attention is drawn to the other language versions of the word "crime" ("infraction", "delito", "prestuplenie") which show that the guarantee is not confined only to the most serious offences.[3231]

3614. In its views in Salgar de Montejo v. Colombia in 1982, the HRC stated that the expression "according to law" contained in Article 14, paragraph 5, is not intended to leave the existence of the right of review at the discretion of States, but only refers to the "modalities by which the review by a higher tribunal is to be carried out". In this case, an appeal to the same judge was a breach of the right of appeal.[3232] However, in Lumley v. Jamaica in 1999, the HRC decided that refusal of appeal, where a proper procedure was followed reviewing with care the evidence and the law, was not in violation of the right to appeal.[3233]

3615. In its views in Henry v. Jamaica in 1991 and Frances v. Jamaica in 1993, the HRC stated that the right of appeal presupposed a written reasoned judgement delivered by the Court of earlier instance, even where such a court is itself an appeal court.[3234]

3616. In its views in Domukovsky and Others v. Georgia in 1998, the HRC stated that the right of appeal required a review of both facts and law, and not only of law.[3235]

3617. In a resolution adopted in 1992 on the right to recourse and fair trial, the ACiHPR stated that "persons convicted of an offence shall have the right of appeal to a higher court".[3236]

3618. In its decision in Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (60/91) in 1995, the ACiHPR held that:

> While punishments decreed as the culmination of a carefully conducted criminal procedure do not necessarily constitute violations of these rights, to foreclose any avenue of appeal to "competent national organs" in criminal cases bearing such penalties clearly violates [Article 7(1)(a) of the 1981 ACHPR], and increases the risk that severe violations may go unredressed.[3237]

[3231] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 17.
[3232] HRC, Salgar de Montejo v. Colombia, Views, 24 March 1982, § 10.4.
[3233] HRC, Lumley v. Jamaica, Views, 31 March 1999, § 7.2–7.3.
[3234] HRC, Henry v. Jamaica, Views, 1 November 1991, § 8.4; Francis v. Jamaica, Views, 24 March 1993, § 12.2.
[3235] HRC, Domukovsky and Others v. Georgia, Views, 6 April 1998, § 18.11.
[3236] ACiHPR, Eleventh Session, Tunis, 2–9 March 1992, Resolution on the Right to Recourse and Fair Trial, § 3.
[3237] ACiHPR, Constitutional Rights Project v. Nigeria (60/91), Decision, 13–22 March 1995, § 8.

3619. In its decision in Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania in 2000, the ACiHPR stated that:

> For an appeal to be effective, the appellate jurisdiction must, objectively and impartially, consider both the elements of fact and of law that are brought before it. Since this approach was not followed in the cases under consideration, the Commission considers, consequently, that there was a violation of [Article 7(1)(a) of the 1981 ACHPR].[3238]

3620. In the case of Hadjianastassiou v. Greece, the ECtHR indicated that the right of appeal presupposed a written reasoned judgement delivered by the Court of earlier instance, even where such a court is itself an appeal court.[3239]

3621. In a case concerning Argentina in 1997, the IACiHR decided, in the context of a situation that it characterised as a non-international armed conflict, that there had been a violation of the petitioner's right to appeal to a higher court.[3240]

3622. In 2002, in its report on terrorism and human rights, the IACiHR stated that even in a state of emergency, "the basic components of the right to a fair trial cannot be justifiably suspended" and that these included "the right of appeal".[3241]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3623. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols explains the rationale behind the guarantee of Article 75(4)(j) AP I as follows:

> It was not considered realistic in view of the present state of national legislation in various countries to lay down a principle to the effect that everyone has a right of appeal against [the] sentence pronounced upon him, i.e., to guarantee the availability of such a right, as provided in the ICRC draft. However, it is clear that if such remedies do exist, not only should everyone have the right to information about them and about the time-limits within which they must be exercised, as explicitly provided in the text, but in addition, no one should be denied the right to use such remedies.[3242]

[3238] ACiHPR, Malawi African Association and Others v. Mauritania (54/91), Decision, 11 May 2000, § 94.
[3239] ECtHR, Hadjianastassiou v. Greece, Judgement, 16 December 1992, §§ 29–37.
[3240] IACiHR, Case 11.137 (Argentina), Report, 18 November 1997, §§ 156 and 435.
[3241] IACiHR, Report on Terrorism and Human Rights, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.116 Doc. 5 rev. 1 corr., 22 October 2002, § 247.
[3242] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 4611.

VI. Other Practice

3624. Amnesty International, in relation to political prisoners, has often denounced the denial of the right to appeal in cases of the death penalty, as, for instance, in Georgia.[3243]

Non bis in idem

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3625. Article 86 GC III provides that "no prisoner of war may be punished more than once for the same act, or on the same charge".

3626. Article 117, third paragraph, GC IV states that "no internee may be punished more than once for the same act, or on the same count".

3627. Article 14(7) of the 1966 ICCPR provides "no one shall be liable to be tried or punished again for an offence for which he has already been finally convicted or acquitted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of each country".

3628. Article 8(4) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "an accused person acquitted by a nonappealable judgement shall not be subjected to a new trial for the same cause".

3629. Article 75(4)(h) AP I provides that "no one shall be prosecuted or punished by the same Party for an offence in respect of which a final judgement acquitting or convicting that person has been previously pronounced under the same law and judicial procedure". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3244]

3630. Upon ratification of AP I, Austria stated that "Article 75 of Protocol I will be applied insofar as sub-paragraph (h) of paragraph 4 is not incompatible with legal provisions authorizing the reopening of proceedings that have resulted in a final declaration of conviction or acquittal".[3245]

3631. Upon ratification of AP I, Denmark stated that:

> Denmark expresses a reservation with regard to the application of Article 75, paragraph 4 (h) (Protocol I), to the effect that the provisions of this paragraph shall not prevent the reopening of criminal proceedings in cases where the rules of the Danish Code of civil and criminal procedure, in exceptional circumstances, provide for such a measure.[3246]

3632. Upon ratification of AP I, Finland stated that "with reference to Article 75, paragraph 4 (h) of the Protocol, the Finnish Government wish to [3243] Amnesty International, Georgia: Fear of Imminent Execution, AI-Index EUR 56/03/96, 21 June 1996.

[3244] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[3245] Austria, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 13 August 1982, § 3(b).
[3246] Denmark, Reservation made upon ratification of AP I, 17 June 1992.

clarify that under Finnish law a judgement shall not be considered final until the time-limit for exercising any extraordinary legal remedies has expired".[3247]

3633. Upon ratification of AP I, Germany stated that "Article 74, paragraph 4, subparagraph (h) of Additional Protocol I will only be applied to the extent that it is in conformity with legal provisions which permit under special circumstances the re-opening of proceedings that had led to final conviction or acquittal".[3248]

3634. Upon ratification of AP I, Iceland stated that its ratification was "subject to a reservation with respect to Article 75, paragraph 4(h), of Protocol I regarding the resumption of cases which have already been tried, the Icelandic law containing detailed provisions on this matter".[3249]

3635. Upon ratification of AP I, Liechtenstein stated in relation to Article 75 that "paragraph 4(h) is not incompatible with legislation providing for the reopening of a trial which has already led to a person's conviction or acquittal".[3250]

3636. Upon ratification of AP I, Malta stated in relation to Article 75 that "sub-paragraph (h) of paragraph 4 is not incompatible with legal provisions authorizing the reopening of proceedings that have resulted in a final declaration of conviction or acquittal".[3251]

3637. Upon ratification of AP I, Sweden stated in relation to Article 75 that "paragraph 4, sub-paragraph (h) shall be applied only to the extent that it is not in conflict with legal provisions which allow, in exceptional circumstances, the reopening of proceedings which have resulted in a final conviction or acquittal".[3252]

3638. Article 4(1)–(3) of the 1984 Protocol 7 to the 1950 ECHR provides that:

> No one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings under the jurisdiction of the same State for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of that State.
>
> ... The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the reopening of the case in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State concerned, if there is evidence of new or newly discovered facts, or if there has been a fundamental defect in the previous proceedings, which could affect the outcome of the case.

3639. Article 20(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "no person shall be tried by another court for a crime referred to in article 5 for which that person has already been convicted or acquitted by the Court".

3640. Article 9(1) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, entitled "Non bis in idem", provides that "no person shall be tried before a

[3247] Finland, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 7 August 1980, § 3.
[3248] Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I and AP II, 14 February 1991, § 8.
[3249] Iceland, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 10 April 1987.
[3250] Liechtenstein, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 10 August 1989, § 1(b).
[3251] Malta, Reservations made upon accession to AP I and AP II, 17 April 1989, § 1(b).
[3252] Sweden, Reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 31 August 1979, § 2.

national court of Sierra Leone for acts for which he or she has already been tried by the Special Court".

Other Instruments

3641. Article 9 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that:

1. No one shall be tried or punished for a crime under this Code for which he has already been finally convicted or acquitted by an international criminal court.
2. . . . No one shall be tried or punished for a crime under this Code in respect of an act for which he has already been finally convicted or acquitted by a national court, provided that, if a punishment was imposed, it has been enforced or is in the process of being enforced.

3642. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3643. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3644. Article 10(1) of the 1993 ICTY Statute, entitled "Non bis in idem", provides that "no person shall be tried before a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law under the present Statute, for which he or she has already been tried by the International Tribunal".

3645. Article 9(1) of the 1994 ICTR Statute, entitled "Non bis in idem", provides that "no person shall be tried before a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law under the present Statute, for which he or she has already been tried by the International Tribunal for Rwanda".

3646. Article 12(1) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Non bis in idem", provides that "no one shall be tried for a crime against the peace and security of mankind of which he has already been finally convicted or acquitted by an international criminal court".

3647. Article 50 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights states that "no one shall be liable to be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he or she has already been finally acquitted or convicted within the Union in accordance with the law".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3648. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "a prisoner of war cannot be sentenced more than once because of the same act or on the same charge".[3253]

[3253] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.076.

3649. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that "no prisoner of war may be punished more than once for the same act or on the same charge (Article 86 GC III)".[3254] With respect to occupied territory, the manual states that "civilians shall not be punished more than once for the same fault" . . . and that anyone "shall be tried only once for the same offence or the same accusation in conformity with the same legislation in the same proceedings".[3255]
3650. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "no PW may be punished more than once for the same offence, or on the same charge".[3256]
3651. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "anybody who is accused has the right . . . not to be tried twice for the same act".[3257]
3652. Germany's Military Manual provides that "prisoners of war may not be punished or disciplined more than once for the same act".[3258]
3653. According to New Zealand's Military Manual, "no prisoner may be punished more than once for the same offence or on the same charge".[3259] It further states that "no internee may be punished more than once for the same offence or on the same count".[3260] The manual also provides that "no one shall be prosecuted or punished by the same party for an offence in respect of which a final judgement acquitting or convicting that person has been previously pronounced under the same law and judicial procedure".[3261]
3654. According to Spain's LOAC Manual, "prisoners of war cannot be punished more than once for the same act or the same accusation".[3262]
3655. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3263]
3656. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that a prisoner "shall be punished only once for the same act or on the same count".[3264]
3657. The UK Military Manual provides that "no internee may be punished more than once for the same act or on the same count".[3265] It also states that "a prisoner of war may not be punished more than once for the same act or on the same charge".[3266]
3658. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 86 GC III.[3267] It also uses the same wording as Article 117 GC IV.[3268]

[3254] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.23.
[3255] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 4.36 and 5.09.
[3256] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-6, § 58.
[3257] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 11.
[3258] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 725.
[3259] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 931(1).
[3260] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1128.
[3261] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(h).
[3262] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.7.b.
[3263] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3264] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 106.
[3265] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 71.
[3266] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 204.
[3267] US, Field Manual (1956), § 162.
[3268] US, Field Manual (1956), § 324.

3659. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "Article 86 [GC III] prohibits punishing POWs more than once for the same offence (non bis in idem)".[3269]

National Legislation

3660. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the principle of non bis in idem.[3270]

3661. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3271]

3662. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 86 GC III and 117 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(h) AP I, are punishable offences.[3272]

3663. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3273]

National Case-law

3664. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

3665. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3274]

3666. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 75 AP I to be part of customary international law.[3275]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3667. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3668. In its General Comment on Article 14 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1984, the HRC stated that "it seems to the Committee that most States parties make a

[3269] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8.
[3270] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 23; Georgia, Constitution (1995), Article 42(4); Criminal Code (1999), Article 3(1); India, Constitution (1950), Article 20(2); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(5); Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 3(3); Mexico, Constitution (1917), Article 23; Russia, Constitution (1993), Article 50(1).
[3271] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3272] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3273] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3274] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[3275] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

clear distinction between a resumption of a trial justified by exceptional circumstances and a re-trial prohibited pursuant to the principle of ne bis in idem as contained in paragraph 7".[3276]

3669. In its admissibility decision in A. P. v. Italy in 1987, the HRC stated that Article 14(7) did not prohibit double jeopardy for the same offence when the prosecutions were initiated in different States.[3277]

3670. In its report in a case concerning Peru in 1995, the IACiHR stated that the underlying elements of the principle of ne bis in idem are that: the accused has been acquitted, the judgment in question is final and that the new proceedings are based on the same cause.[3278]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3671. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . no punishment more than once for the same act or the same charge".[3279]

VI. Other Practice

3672. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, including that "no one shall be liable to be tried or punished again for an offence for which he or she has already been finally convicted or acquitted in accordance with the law and penal procedure".[3280]

N. Principle of Legality

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3673. Article 99, first paragraph, GC III provides that "no prisoner of war may be tried or sentenced for an act which is not forbidden by the law of the Detaining Power or by international law, in force at the time the said act was committed".

[3276] HRC, General Comment No. 13 (Article 14 ICCPR), 12 April 1984, § 19.
[3277] HRC, A. P. v. Italy, Admissibility Decision, 2 November 1987, § 7.3.
[3278] IACiHR, Case 11.006 (Peru), Report, 7 February 1995, pp. 298–302.
[3279] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(i).
[3280] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9(f), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

3674. Article 65 GC IV provides that "the penal provisions enacted by the Occupying Power shall not come into force before they have been published" and "the effect of these penal provisions shall not be retroactive".
3675. Article 67 GC IV provides that "the courts shall apply only those provisions of law which were applicable prior to the offence".
3676. Article 7(1) of the 1950 ECHR provides that:

No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offence was committed.

Article 15(2) prohibits derogations from Article 7 of the 1950 ECHR.
3677. Article 15(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that:

No one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time when the criminal offence was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of the offence, provision is made by law for the imposition of the lighter penalty, the offender shall benefit thereby.

Article 4 provides that no derogations are possible from Article 15 of the 1966 ICCPR.
3678. Article 9 of the 1969 ACHR provides that:

No one shall be convicted of any act or omission that did not constitute a criminal offense, under the applicable law, at the time it was committed. A heavier penalty shall not be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the criminal offense was committed. If subsequent to the commission of the offense the law provides for the imposition of a lighter punishment, the guilty person shall benefit therefrom.

Article 27 prohibits any suspension of Article 9 of the 1969 ACHR.
3679. Article 75(4)(c) AP I provides that:

No one shall be accused or convicted of a criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under the national or international law to which he was subject at the time when it was committed; nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time when the criminal offence was committed; if, after the commission of the offence, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, the offender shall benefit thereby.

Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3281]
3680. Article 6(2)(c) AP II provides that:

No one shall be accused or convicted of a criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under the national or international law to which he was subject at the time when it was committed; nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than that which was applicable at the time when the criminal offence was committed; if, after the commission of the offence, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, the offender shall benefit thereby.

[3281] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.

Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3282]

3681. Article 7(2) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "no one may be condemned for an act or omission which did not constitute a legally punishable offence at the time it was committed".

3682. Article 40(2)(a) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "no child shall be alleged as, be accused of, or recognized as having infringed the penal law by reason of acts or omissions that were not prohibited by national or international law at the time they were committed".

3683. Article 22(1) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that "a person shall not be criminally responsible under this Statute unless the conduct in question constitutes, at the time it takes place, a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court".

3684. Article 24(1)–(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute provides that:

No person shall be criminally responsible under this Statute for conduct prior to the entry into force of the Statute . . . In the event of a change in the law applicable to a given case prior to a final judgement, the law more favourable to the person being investigated, prosecuted or convicted shall apply.

Other Instruments

3685. Article 11 of the 1948 UDHR provides that:

No one shall be held guilty of any penal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a penal offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed. Nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time the penal offence was committed.

3686. Article 10 of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Non-retroactivity", provides that:

1. No one shall be convicted under this Code for acts committed before its entry into force.
2. Nothing in this article shall preclude the trial and punishment of anyone for any act which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal in accordance with international law or domestic law applicable in conformity with international law.

3687. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

[3282] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

3688. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3689. Article 13 of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, entitled "Non-retroactivity", provides that:

1. No one shall be convicted under the present Code for acts committed before its entry into force.
2. Nothing in this article precludes the trial of anyone for any act which, at the time when it was committed, was criminal in accordance with international law or national law.

3690. Article 49 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "no one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence under national law or international law at the time when it was committed".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3691. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "tribunals will only apply legal provisions existing previously to the offence".[3283] It adds that the "legal provisions decreed by the Occupying Power . . . cannot have a retroactive effect".[3284]

3692. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) states that the prisoner shall be informed of the offence for which he or she is charged, an offence "which shall constitute a criminal act at the time it was committed".[3285] It further states that criminal provisions "cannot have a retroactive effect" and that the alleged offence against the accused "must constitute a criminal act at the moment it was committed".[3286] The same provision applies in non-international armed conflicts.[3287]

3693. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "no PW may be tried or punished for any offence which was not, at the time of its commission, forbidden by International Law or the law of the Detaining Power".[3288] With respect to occupied territories, the manual states that "the penal provisions enacted by the occupant must not be retroactive".[3289] It further provides that "no person may be tried for a war crime unless the crime in question was an offence at the

[3283] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.025.
[3284] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 5.026.
[3285] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 3.30.
[3286] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 5.08 and 5.09 (occupied territory), see also § 4.15 (civilians).
[3287] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[3288] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-7, § 76.
[3289] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-6, § 49(a).

time of its commission in accordance with national legislation or International Law".[3290] The same provision applies to non-international armed conflicts.[3291]

3694. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "nobody can be tried except according to the laws that pre-existed the alleged act".[3292]

3695. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides with respect to non-international armed conflict that "nobody may be condemned for acts or omissions which did not constitute a punishable act at the time of the act or omission in question".[3293]

3696. New Zealand's Military Manual states that "no prisoner may be tried or punished for any offence which was not, at the time of its commission, forbidden by international law or the law of the Detaining Power".[3294] It further states that "no one shall be accused or convicted of a criminal offence on account of any act or commission which did not constitute a criminal offence under the national or international law to which he was subject at the time when it was committed".[3295] The manual also states that "the penal provisions enacted by the Occupying Power must not be retroactive".[3296] According to the manual, "no person may be tried for a war crime unless the act in question was an offence at the time of its commission".[3297] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manuals states that:

> No one shall be guilty of an offence in respect of any act or omission which was not an offence at the time of commission, nor shall any punishment be more severe than was applicable at that time, although, if the punishment has been alleviated, the accused shall benefit accordingly.[3298]

3697. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "no prisoner shall be subject to judicial proceedings or be sentenced for an act which was not previously prohibited whether by the national legislation of the party under whose power he is, or by International Law in force at the time the act was committed".[3299]

3698. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3300]

3699. The UK Military Manual provides that "no prisoner of war may be tried or sentenced for an act which is not forbidden by the law of the Detaining

[3290] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-6, § 42.
[3291] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 29(c).
[3292] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 10.
[3293] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[3294] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 932(2).
[3295] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137(4)(c).
[3296] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1327(1)(a).
[3297] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1711(3).
[3298] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(2)(c).
[3299] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.7.c.(1).
[3300] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.

Power or by international law in force at the time the act in question was committed".[3301]

3700. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "no PW may be tried or sentenced for an act which is not forbidden by the law of the Detaining Power or by international law in force when the act in question was committed".[3302]

3701. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 99 GC III.[3303] With respect to situations of occupation, the manual uses the same wording as Article 65 GC IV.[3304]

3702. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "no PW may be tried or sentenced for an act which is not forbidden by the law of the detaining power or by international law in force at the time the act was committed".[3305]

National Legislation

3703. Countless pieces of domestic legislation contain the principle of non-retroactivity in criminal matters.[3306]

3704. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3307]

3705. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 99 GC III and 65 and 67 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(4)(c) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 6(2)(c) AP II, are punishable offences.[3308]

3706. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[3309]

National Case-law

3707. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

3708. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3310]

[3301] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 223.
[3302] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 8, p. 33, § 19(f).
[3303] US, Field Manual (1956), § 175.
[3304] US, Field Manual (1956), § 435.
[3305] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8.
[3306] See, e.g., India, Constitution (1950), Article 22; Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 77(4); Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Article 32; Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 7.
[3307] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3308] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3309] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3310] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.

3709. The Report on the Practice of Syria asserts that Syria considers Article 75 AP I to be part of customary international law.[3311]

3710. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II". According to the report, it is also the opinio juris of the US that military necessity will not justify derogation of the right not to be subjected to retroactive penal legislation.[3312]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

3711. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3712. In its judgement in Kokkinakis v. Greece in 1993, the ECtHR maintained that:

> Article 7 § 1 of the Convention is not confined to prohibiting the retroactive application of the criminal law to an accused's disadvantage. It also embodies, more generally, the principle that only the law can define a crime and prescribe a penalty (nullum crimen, nulla poena sine lege) and the principle that the criminal law must not be extensively construed to an accused's detriment, for instance by analogy; it follows from this that an offence must be clearly defined in law. This condition is satisfied where the individual can know from the wording of the relevant provision and, if need be, with the assistance of the court's interpretation of it, what acts and omissions will make him liable.[3313]

3713. In its judgement in S. W. v. UK in 1995, the ECtHR stated that "Article 7 [1950 ECHR] cannot be read as outlawing the gradual clarification of the rules of criminal liability through judicial interpretation from case to case, provided that the resultant development is consistent with the essence of the offence and could reasonably be foreseen".[3314]

3714. In its judgement in the Castillo Petruzzi and Others case in 1999, the IACtHR held that:

> The Court considers that crimes must be classified and described in precise and unambiguous language that narrowly defines the punishable offense, thus giving full meaning to the principle of nullum crimen nulla poena sine lege praevia in [3311] Report on the Practice of Syria, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

[3312] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3 and 5.7.
[3313] ECtHR, Kokkinakis v. Greece, Judgement, 25 May 1993, § 52.
[3314] ECtHR, S. W. v. UK, Judgement, 22 November 1995, § 36.

criminal law. This means a clear definition of the criminalized conduct, establishing its elements and the factors that distinguish it from behaviors that are either not punishable offences or are punishable but not with imprisonment. Ambiguity in describing crimes creates doubts and the opportunity for abuse of power, particularly when it comes to ascertaining the criminal responsibility of individuals and punishing their criminal behavior with penalties that exact their toll on the things that are most precious, such as life and liberty. Laws of the kind applied in the instant case, that fail to narrowly define the criminal behaviors, violate the principle of nullum crimen nulla poena sine lege praevia recognized in Article 9 of the [1969 ACHR].[3315]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3715. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . law in force at the time the offence was committed (i.e. no retroactive law)".[3316]

VI. Other Practice

3716. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, including that "no one shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute a criminal offence, under applicable law, at the time when it was committed".[3317]

O. Individual Criminal Responsibility and Collective Punishments

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3717. Article 50 of the 1899 HR provides that "no general penalty, pecuniary or otherwise, can be inflicted on the population on account of the acts of individuals for which it cannot be regarded as collectively responsible".

3718. Article 50 of the 1907 HR provides that "no general penalty, pecuniary or otherwise, shall be inflicted upon the population on account of the acts of individuals for which they cannot be regarded as jointly and severally responsible".

[3315] IACtHR, Castillo Petruzzi and Others case, Judgement, 30 May 1999, § 121.

[3316] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(c).

[3317] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 9(g), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.

3719. Article 26, sixth paragraph, GC III states that "collective disciplinary measures affecting food are prohibited".
3720. Article 87, third paragraph, GC III provides that "collective punishment for individual acts" is forbidden.
3721. Article 33, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "no protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties . . . are prohibited."
3722. Article 5(3) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "punishment shall not be extended to any person other than the criminal". This guarantee is non-derogable under Article 27(2).
3723. Article 75(2)(d) AP I provides that "the following acts are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever, whether committed by civilian or by military agents: . . . collective punishments". Article 75(4)(b) provides that "no one shall be convicted of an offence except on the basis of individual penal responsibility". Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3318]
3724. Article 4(2)(b) AP II provides that "the following acts against the persons referred to in paragraph I are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever: . . . collective punishments". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3319]
3725. Article 6(2)(b) AP II provides that "no one shall be convicted of an offence except on the basis of individual penal responsibility". Article 6 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3320]
3726. Article 7(2) of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "punishment is personal and can be imposed only on the offender".
3727. Article 25(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute, entitled "Individual criminal responsibility", provides that "a person who commits a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court shall be individually responsible and liable for punishment in accordance with this Statute".
3728. Article 3(b) of the 2002 Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone provides that "the Special Court shall have the power to prosecute persons who committed or ordered the commission of serious violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . and [AP I and AP II]", which include "collective punishment".

Other Instruments
3729. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution, including the imposition of collective penalties.

[3318] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[3319] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[3320] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 97.

3730. Paragraph 5 of the 1974 UN Declaration on the Protection of Women and Children in Emergency and Armed Conflict provides that "all forms of repression ... of women and children, including ... collective punishment ... committed by belligerents in the course of military operations or in occupied territories, shall be considered criminal".
3731. Article 19(c) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam states that "liability is in essence personal".
3732. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3733. Article 22(2)(a) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind, states that "collective punishment" is an exceptionally serious war crime and a serious violation of the principles and rules of international law applicable in armed conflict.
3734. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.
3735. Article 20(f)(ii) of the 1996 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind provides that "collective punishments" committed in violation of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict not of an international character are war crimes.
3736. Article 4(b) of the 1994 ICTR Statute grants the Tribunal jurisdiction over violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and AP II, and expressly refers to, inter alia, collective punishments.
3737. Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that:

> The following acts against any of the persons mentioned in section 7.1 [persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations, including civilians, members of armed forces who have laid down their weapons and persons placed hors de combat by reason of sickness, wounds or detention] are prohibited at any time and in any place: ... collective punishment.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3738. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) prohibits "collective punishments" of the civilian population.[3321]
3739. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) prohibits collective punishments and provides that this is a fundamental guarantee which applies in international and non-international armed conflicts.[3322] The manual further states that the

[3321] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.012.
[3322] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), §§ 3.25, 4.15, 4.29 and 7.04.

"exclusion of collective responsibility for any sentence" is a fundamental guarantee in non-international armed conflicts.[3323]

3740. Under Australia's Defence Force Manual, collective penalties are expressly prohibited as measures for the control of the population of occupied territory.[3324]

3741. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that "it is prohibited to impose collective punishments [or] to take measures of intimidation or terrorism".[3325]

3742. Benin's Military Manual prohibits collective punishment.[3326]

3743. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits subjecting the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to collective punishment.[3327]

3744. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits subjecting the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to collective punishment.[3328]

3745. Canada's LOAC Manual forbids collective punishment against prisoners of war, civilians in general and in occupied territories, whether in international or internal armed conflicts.[3329] It also provides that, in non-international armed conflict, "no accused persons shall be convicted of an offence except on the basis of individual penal responsibility".[3330]

3746. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "nobody can be considered as responsible for an act he has not committed".[3331]

3747. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits subjecting the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to collective punishment.[3332]

3748. Ecuador's Naval Manual states that prisoners of war and interned persons "may not be subjected to collective punishment".[3333]

3749. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended prohibits subjecting the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to collective punishment.[3334]

3750. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "no one shall be held responsible for an act he did not commit".[3335]

3751. France's LOAC Manual provides that collective punishment is a war crime and that one of the three main principles common to IHL and human rights is the principle of security, which guarantees to every human being the

[3323] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.10.
[3324] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 953 and 1221.
[3325] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 50.
[3326] Benin, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 4.
[3327] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Articles 35(2) and 73(3).
[3328] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[3329] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 10-7, § 61, p. 11-4, § 33, p. 11-8, § 63, p. 12-5, § 41(d) and p. 17-3, § 21(a).
[3330] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 29(b).
[3331] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 5.
[3332] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[3333] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), §§ 11-8-1 and 11-9.
[3334] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[3335] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 3.1.

right not to be held responsible for an offence he or she did not commit[3336] and which prohibits collective punishments.[3337] The manual further states that "no protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed".[3338]

3752. Germany's Soldiers' Manual provides for the prohibition of collective punishment against civilians.[3339]

3753. Germany's Military Manual refers to Article 33 GC IV and prohibits "collective penalties" of civilians.[3340] It specifies that this prohibition also applies in occupied territories.[3341] With regard to prisoners of war, the manual refers to Article 87(3) GC III and provides that "collective punishment for individual acts and cruel punishment are forbidden".[3342]

3754. Germany's IHL Manual states that "collective punishments are prohibited".[3343]

3755. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "collective punishment" of prisoners of war is absolutely forbidden.[3344]

3756. Italy's IHL Manual states that civilian persons in occupied territory have the right not to be subjected to collective punishment.[3345]

3757. Mali's Army Regulations prohibits subjecting the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to collective punishments.[3346]

3758. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "nobody shall be held responsible for an act he/she did not commit".[3347]

3759. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations prohibits subjecting the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, prisoners and civilians to collective punishments.[3348]

3760. The Military Manual of the Netherlands reproduces the prohibition of collective punishments found in Articles 75 AP I and 4 AP II.[3349] With respect to non-international armed conflict, the manual states that "nobody may be condemned but on the basis of individual criminal responsibility".[3350]

3761. New Zealand's Military Manual, referring to Articles 32–34 GC IV, states that "the following are . . . prohibited: a. the punishment of a protected person for an offence not committed by him personally; b. collective penalties".[3351] The manual reproduces Article 75(2) AP I.[3352] With regard to the control of persons in occupied territory, it also states that "impermissible

[3336] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 52.
[3337] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 45 and 51.
[3338] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 74.
[3339] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 4.
[3340] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 507.
[3341] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 536.
[3342] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 725.
[3343] Germany, IHL Manual (1996), § 405.
[3344] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 53.
[3345] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(f).
[3346] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[3347] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 5.
[3348] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2).
[3349] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. VIII-3 and XI-4, see also p. VII-2.
[3350] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-52.
[3351] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1116(2)(a) and (b).
[3352] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1137.

measures of population control include: . . . punishments for acts of others, that is . . . collective penalties".[3353] The manual also states that:

> Until and during World War II, Occupying Powers occasionally sought to secure observance of the law of armed conflict by the inhabitants of the occupied territory by the imposition or threat of collective penalties. Such action was contrary to HR Art. 50, and any collective penalties are now expressly forbidden by IV GC Art. 33 and AP 1 Art. 75 (2)(d).[3354]

With regard to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "although AP II contains no provisions relating to enforcement or punishment of breaches, it does contain a statement of fundamental guarantees prohibiting at any time and anywhere: . . . collective punishment".[3355] In a part entitled "Trial and Punishment: Restrictions and Guarantees", the manual also states that "as a minimum: . . . no one shall be convicted of an offence except on the basis of individual criminal responsibility".[3356]

3762. Nicaragua's Military Manual prohibits acts of collective punishment, including the threat to commit such acts.[3357]

3763. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians "shall not be held responsible for acts which they have not committed" and that collective punishments are prohibited.[3358]

3764. Russia's Military Manual refers to the Geneva Conventions and AP I and prohibits collective punishment "of war victims".[3359]

3765. Senegal's IHL Manual lists the prohibition of collective punishment among the most basic universal rights to which every individual is entitled.[3360]

3766. Spain's LOAC Manual prohibits collective punishments.[3361] It further stresses that "any collective punishment for individual acts" is prohibited.[3362]

3767. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3363] In a chapter on IHL rules during occupation, the manual refers to Article 33 GC IV and states that "protected persons may not be punished for actions they have not themselves performed. Collective punishment of a whole group is also prohibited."[3364]

[3353] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1322(3).
[3354] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1608.
[3355] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1812(1)(b).
[3356] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1815(2)(b).
[3357] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(35).
[3358] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 34.
[3359] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 8(b).
[3360] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), Chapter IV(A)(2), p. 23.
[3361] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.2.c.
[3362] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 8.7.b.
[3363] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3364] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.

3768. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "no one shall be punished for an act he did not personally commit".[3365] It also refers to Article 87 GC III and states that "collective punishments are prohibited" and that "collective and individual punishments affecting food are prohibited".[3366] With respect to occupied territories, the manual states that "collective punishments . . . are prohibited". It also provides the following examples of prohibited collective punishments: "condemnation of the whole population of a village to forced labour [and] collective fines or temporary closing of all schools in retaliation for offences committed by a few inhabitants".[3367]
3769. Togo's Military Manual prohibits collective punishment.[3368]
3770. The UK Military Manual states that:

> The Hague Rules forbid collective punishment, in the form of a general pecuniary or other penalty, of the population for acts of individuals for which the population as a whole cannot be regarded as jointly and severally responsible. It was formerly thought that the prohibition did not exclude reprisals against a locality or community for some act committed by its inhabitants or members who cannot be identified. However, the Civilian Convention, Art. 33 has prohibited collective penalties and has expressly adopted the principle that "no protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed".[3369]

According to the manual, all "violations of the Geneva Conventions not amounting to 'grave breaches', are also war crimes, for example, . . . imposing collective disciplinary measures affecting food of prisoners of war".[3370]
3771. The UK LOAC Manual forbids collective punishments.[3371]
3772. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 87 GC III and 33 GC IV and Article 50 of the 1907 HR.[3372]
3773. The US Air Force Pamphlet prohibits collective punishment imposed on prisoners of war for individual acts.[3373] It refers to Article 33 GC IV and states that "collective penalties (punishment of a protected person for offences which he has not personally committed)" are prohibited.[3374]
3774. The US Naval Handbook states that "prisoners of war may not be subjected to collective punishment". The same provision applies to interned persons.[3375]

[3365] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 153.
[3366] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 106 (POWs) and 120.
[3367] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 153 (civilians in occupied territory).
[3368] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule III, p. 4.
[3369] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 647, see also §§ 42 (civilians), 205 (POWs) and 553 (occupied territory).
[3370] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626.
[3371] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 35, § 9, see also Annex A, p. 48, § 20.
[3372] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 163(a) (POWs), 272 (civilians) and 448 (occupied territory).
[3373] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 13-8 (POWs).
[3374] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-4 (civilians).
[3375] US, Naval Handbook (1995), §§ 11.7.1 (POWs) and 11.8 (interned persons).

3775. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) prohibits collective punishment of civilians, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked and prisoners of war.[3376]

National Legislation

3776. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who subjects any protected person to "collective punishments for individual acts".[3377]

3777. Australia's War Crimes Act provides that the "imposition of collective punishment" is a war crime.[3378]

3778. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3379]

3779. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that the "imposition of collective punishment" is a war crime.[3380] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[3381]

3780. China's Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals provides that "enforcing collective torture" is a war crime.[3382]

3781. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended provides that the imposition of collective penalties during war or in an area under siege or during a declared state of emergency is an offence.[3383]

3782. Under Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended, in times of war or occupation, organising, ordering or imposing collective punishments on the civilian population constitutes a "crime against the civilian population".[3384]

3783. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that the imposition of collective punishment is a war crime.[3385]

3784. Under Ethiopia's Penal Code, in time of war, armed conflict or occupation, the imposition of collective punishment on civilian population is a war crime.[3386]

3785. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 26 and 87 GC III and 33 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(2)(d) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(2)(b) AP II, are punishable offences.[3387]

[3376] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 31(1).
[3377] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[3378] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3.
[3379] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3380] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(1).
[3381] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 433(1).
[3382] China, Law Governing the Trial of War Criminals (1946), Article 3(6).
[3383] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 525.
[3384] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 138(5).
[3385] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 158.
[3386] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(g).
[3387] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

3786. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "no collective sanction, financial or of any kind, can be imposed on the population because of an individual fault".[3388]
3787. Kyrgyzstan's Criminal Code of provides that "the Criminal Code is based upon the principles of . . . personal criminal responsibility".[3389]
3788. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, the imposition of collective punishments constitutes a war crime.[3390]
3789. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3391]
3790. Romania's Law on the Punishment of War Criminals provides that "criminals of war" are persons who "ordered or executed collective . . . repression".[3392]
3791. Slovenia's Penal Code provides that "the imposition of collective punishments" is a war crime.[3393]
3792. Under Spain's Penal Code, "the imposition of collective punishments" is an offence.[3394]
3793. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "the imposition of collective penalties" is a war crime.[3395]

National Case-law
3794. In 1995, Colombia's Constitutional Court held that the prohibitions contained in Article 4(2) AP II practically reproduced specific constitutional provisions.[3396]
3795. In its judgement in the Priebke case in 1997, the Military Tribunal of Rome found that the killing of 335 civilians at the Ardeatine caves ordered by the accused as a reprisal for the killing of German officers in Rome by partisans was a war crime. The Court held that the "multiple murder of civilians in occupied territory had been perpetrated beyond the limits set by customary laws on reprisals and by Article 50 of the Hague Regulations on collective punishments".[3397]
3796. In the Calley case in 1973, a US army officer was convicted of murder for killing South Vietnamese civilians. The US Army Court of Military Review

[3388] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 65.
[3389] Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 3(1).
[3390] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[3391] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3392] Romania, Law on the Punishment of War Criminals (1945), Article I(d).
[3393] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(1).
[3394] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 612(3).
[3395] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142(1).
[3396] Colombia, Constitutional Court, Constitutional Case No. C-225/95, Judgement, 18 May 1995.
[3397] Italy, Military Tribunal of Rome, Priebke case, Judgement, 22 July 1997.

dismissed the argument that the acts were lawful reprisals for illegal acts of the enemy and held that "slaughtering many for the presumed delicts of a few is not a lawful response to the delicts . . . Reprisal by summary execution of the helpless is forbidden in the laws of land warfare."[3398]

Other National Practice

3797. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Article 75 AP I embodies customary law.[3399]

3798. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that [all persons who are in the power of a party to a conflict and who do not benefit from more favorable treatment under the Conventions] not be subjected to . . . collective punishments".[3400]

3799. In 1992, in its final report to Congress on the conduct of the Gulf War, the US Department of Defense stated that:

> Iraqi policy provided for the collective punishment of the family of any individual who served in or was suspected of assisting the Kuwaiti resistance. This punishment routinely took the form of destruction of the family home and execution of all family members. Collective punishment is prohibited expressly by Article 33 GC [IV].[3401]

3800. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[3402]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

3801. In a resolution adopted in 1974 on the protection of women and children in emergency and armed conflict, the UN General Assembly stated that "all forms of . . . collective punishment . . . shall be considered criminal".[3403]

[3398] US, Army Court of Military Review, Calley case, Judgement, 16 February 1973.
[3399] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.
[3400] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 427.
[3401] US, Department of Defense, Report to Congress on the Conduct of the Persian Gulf War, Appendix O, The Role of the Law of War, 10 April 1992, ILM, Vol. 31, 1992, p. 620.
[3402] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[3403] UN General Assembly, Res. 3318 (XXIX), 14 December 1974, §§ 4 and 5.

3802. In a resolution adopted in 1993 on the occupied Arab territories, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned "the policies and practices of Israel . . . and, in particular, . . . collective punishment".[3404]
3803. In a resolution adopted in 1998, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon Israel:

> to cease immediately its policy of enforcing collective punishments, such as the demolition of houses and closure of the Palestinian territory, measures which constitute flagrant violations of international law and international humanitarian law, endanger the lives of the Palestinians and also constitute a major obstacle in the way of peace.[3405]

3804. In two resolutions adopted in 1988 and 1989 on the situation in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, after reaffirming that GC IV applied to the situation, considered that "collective punishment . . . amounted to a war crime under international law".[3406]
3805. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that "violations . . . of Article 4 of Additional Protocol II thereto committed in an armed conflict not of an international character have long been considered customary international law".[3407]

Other International Organisations
3806. No practice was found.

International Conferences
3807. The Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003 adopted in 1999 by the 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent requested that all parties to an armed conflict take effective measures to ensure that "strict orders are given to prevent all serious violations of international humanitarian law, including . . . collective punishment . . . and threats to carry out such actions".[3408]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3808. In its judgement in the Delalić case in 1998, the ICTY Trial Chamber addressed the question of the legality of the confinement of civilians. It referred to [3404] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1993/2 A, 19 February 1993, § 1.

[3405] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1998/1, 27 March 1998, § 7.
[3406] UN Sub-Commission on the Human Rights, Res. 1988/10, 31 August 1988, § 3; Resolution 1989/4, 31 August 1989, § 3.
[3407] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.
[3408] 27th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 31 October–6 November 1999, Res. I, Annex 2, Plan of Action for the years 2000–2003, Actions proposed for final goal 1.1, § 1(b).

Article 78 GC IV and ruled that "internment and assigned residence, whether in the occupying power's national territory or in the occupied territory, are exceptional measures to be taken only after careful consideration of each individual case. Such measures are never to be taken on a collective basis."[3409]

3809. In its General Comment on Article 4 of the 1966 ICCPR in 2001, the HRC held that "States parties may in no circumstances invoke article 4 of the Covenant as justification for acting in violation of humanitarian law or peremptory norms of international law, for instance . . . by imposing collective punishments".[3410]

3810. In its judgement in A. P., M. P. and T. P. v. Switzerland in 1997, the ECtHR, accepting that, "whether or not the late Mr P. was actually guilty, the applicants were subjected to a penal sanction for tax evasion allegedly committed by him", stated that "it is a fundamental rule of criminal law that criminal liability does not survive the person who has committed the criminal act".[3411]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3811. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "collective punishments are prohibited".[3412] Delegates also teach that "the conviction must be pronounced by an impartial and regularly constituted court respecting the generally recognized principles of regular judicial procedure, which include . . . individual and not collective penal responsibility".[3413]

3812. The ICRC Commentary on the Additional Protocols explains with regard to Article 6(2)(b) AP II that:

> This subparagraph lays down the fundamental principle of individual responsibility; a corollary of this principle is that there can be no collective penal responsibility for acts committed by one or several members of a group. This principle is contained in every national legislation. It is already expressed in Article 33 of the fourth Convention, where it is more elegantly worded as follows: "No protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed" . . . The wording was modified to meet the requirement of uniformity between the texts in the different languages and, in this particular case, with the English terminology ("individual penal responsibility"). Article 75, paragraph 4 (b), of Protocol I, lays down the same principle.

[3409] ICTY, Delalić case, Judgement, 16 November 1998, § 578.
[3410] HRC, General Comment No. 29 (Article 4 ICCPR), 24 July 2001, § 11.
[3411] ECtHR, A. P., M. P. and T. P. v. Switzerland, Judgement, 29 August 1997, §§ 47–48.
[3412] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 197.
[3413] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 202(b).

According to the Commentary, this does not exclude cases of complicity or incitement, which are punishable offences in themselves and may lead to a conviction.[3414]

3813. In a working paper submitted in 1997 to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, the ICRC proposed that the following war crime, when committed in an international armed conflict, be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court: collective punishment. Collective punishments, as serious violations of IHL in non-international conflicts, were also listed as war crimes.[3415]

3814. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC recalled that "restrictions on movements by means of curfews or the sealing-off of areas may in no circumstances amount to collective penalties".[3416]

VI. Other Practice

3815. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "no one shall be held responsible for an act he has not committed".[3417]

3816. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides a list of the minimum judicial guarantees, including that "collective punishments against persons and their property" shall remain prohibited and that "no one shall be convicted of an offence except on the basis of individual penal responsibility".[3418]

P. Respect for Convictions and Religious Practices

Note: For practice concerning the religious beliefs of the dead, see Chapter 35, section D. For practice concerning respect for the convictions and religious practices of persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, section J. For practice concerning the education of children, see Chapter 39, section B.

[3414] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 4603.

[3415] ICRC, Working paper on war crimes submitted to the Preparatory Committee for the Establishment of an International Criminal Court, New York, 14 February 1997, §§ 1(ii)–(iii) and 3(i).

[3416] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.

[3417] ICRC archive document.

[3418] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(2)(b), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, pp. 331 and 334.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3817. Article 46 of the 1899 HR provides that "religious convictions and liberty must be respected".

3818. Article 46 of the 1907 HR provides that "religious convictions and practice must be respected".

3819. Article 27, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "protected persons are entitled, in all circumstances, to respect for . . . their religious convictions and practices".

3820. Article 38, third paragraph, GC IV provides that protected persons "shall be allowed to practise their religion and to receive spiritual assistance from ministers of their faith".

3821. Article 58 GC IV provides that:

> The Occupying Power shall permit ministers of religion to give spiritual assistance to the members of their religious communities.
>
> The Occupying Power shall also accept consignments of books and articles required for religious needs and shall facilitate their distribution in occupied territory.

3822. Article 9 of the 1950 ECHR provides that:

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.
2. Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of public safety, for the protection of public order, health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

3823. Article 18 of the 1966 ICCPR provides that:

1. Everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right shall include freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of his choice, and freedom, either individually or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching.
2. No one shall be subject to coercion which would impair his freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of his choice.
3. Freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

Under Article 4(2) ICCPR no derogation may be made from this provision.

3824. Article 12 of the 1969 ACHR provides that:

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of conscience and of religion. This right includes freedom to maintain or to change one's religion or beliefs, and freedom to profess or disseminate one's religion or beliefs, either individually or together with others, in public or in private.

2. No one shall be subject to restrictions that might impair his freedom to maintain or to change his religion or beliefs.
3. Freedom to manifest one's religion and beliefs may be subject only to the limitations prescribed by law that are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals, or the rights or freedoms of others.
4. Parents or guardians, as the case may be, have the right to provide for the religious and moral education of their children or wards that is in accord with their own convictions.

Under Article 27(2) no derogation may be made from this provision.

3825. Article 75(1) AP I provides that "each Party shall respect . . . the convictions and religious practices" of all persons who are in its power. Article 75 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3419]

3826. Article 4(1) AP II provides that all persons hors de combat are entitled to respect for their convictions and religious practices. Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3420]

3827. Article 8 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that "freedom of conscience, the profession and free practice of religion shall be guaranteed. No one may, subject to law and order, be submitted to measures restricting the exercise of these freedoms."

3828. Article 14(1) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "States Parties shall respect the right of the child to freedom of thought, conscience and religion". Article 14(3) provides that "freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs may be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals, or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others".

3829. Article 30 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "in those States in which . . . religious . . . minorities . . . exist, a child belonging to such a minority . . . shall not be denied the right, in community with other members of his or her group, . . . to profess and practise his or her own religion".

Other Instruments

3830. Article 37 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "the United States acknowledge and protect, in hostile countries occupied by them, religion and morality . . . Offenses to the contrary shall be rigorously punished."

3831. Article 38 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration, in the section on "the military power with respect to private persons", provides that "religious convictions [of persons] and their practice, must be respected".

3832. Article 49 of the 1880 Oxford Manual, in the section on "the rules of conduct with respect to persons" in occupied territory, provides that "their religious convictions and practice, must be respected".

[3419] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 250.
[3420] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

3833. Article 18 of the 1948 UDHR provides that:

> Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

3834. According to Article III of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man, "every person has the right freely to profess a religious faith, and to manifest and practice it both in public and in private".

3835. Article 1 of the 1981 UN Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination based on Religion or Belief provides that:

> Everyone shall have the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right shall include freedom to have a religion or whatever belief of his choice, and freedom, either individually or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in worship, observance, practice and teaching.

3836. Paragraph 4 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3837. Paragraph 2.3 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina requires that all civilians be treated in accordance with Article 75 AP I.

3838. Section 7.1 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin provides that:

> Persons not, or no longer, taking part in military operations, including civilians, members of armed forces who have laid down their weapons and persons placed hors de combat by reason of sickness, wounds or detention . . . shall be accorded full respect for their . . . religious and other convictions.

3839. Article 10 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that:

> Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion. This right includes freedom to change religion or belief and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or in private, to manifest religion or belief, in worship, teaching, practice and observance.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3840. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "protected persons have the right to respect for their beliefs and religious practice".[3421] With respect to non-repatriated foreigners, the manual provides that they "shall have the possibility to practice their religion and receive spiritual assistance from a minister of religion".[3422]

[3421] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.010.

3841. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "protected persons have the right, in any circumstance, to respect for their beliefs and religious practices".[3423] With respect to non-repatriated foreigners, the manual states that "they shall be allowed to practice their religion and to receive spiritual assistance from ministers of their faith".[3424] In the case of non-international armed conflict, the manual states that "all persons who do not directly take part in hostilities ... have the right to be respected in their beliefs and religious practices".[3425]

3842. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "religious convictions [of protected persons] ... shall be respected".[3426]

3843. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that, in the territories of the parties to the conflict and in occupied territories, "religious conventions and practices ... of protected persons must in all circumstances be respected".[3427] It further provides that "the occupant is obligated to allow freedom of religion in the occupied territory".[3428] According to the manual, "it is a duty of the occupant to see that religious convictions [of inhabitants of occupied territory] are not interfered with".[3429] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "all persons not participating in the conflict or who have ceased to do so are entitled to ... respect for their convictions and religious practices".[3430]

3844. Canada's Code of Conduct states that "civilians [in a foreign land] are entitled in all circumstances to respect for ... their religious convictions and practices, and their manners and customs".[3431]

3845. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that "a means to guarantee the rights of non-combatants is to respect their convictions and beliefs".[3432] It further provides that it is a duty of the parties to the conflict "to permit religious practices".[3433]

3846. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "captured combatants and civilian persons who are under the power of the adverse party have the right to respect ... for their convictions".[3434]

[3422] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.016.
[3423] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.27.
[3424] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.30(4.3).
[3425] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 7.04.
[3426] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 953.
[3427] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 11-4, § 29, see also p. 12-4, § 37 (occupied territory).
[3428] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-3, § 28.
[3429] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 12-5, § 36.
[3430] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-3, § 19.
[3431] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 4, § 2.
[3432] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 21.
[3433] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 28.
[3434] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 4.

3847. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic instructs soldiers that "however different or unusual a foreign land may seem to you, remember to respect its people and their . . . religious beliefs".[3435]
3848. Ecuador's Naval Manual prohibits "offences against civilian inhabitants of the occupied territory, including . . . infringing religious rights".[3436]
3849. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that all persons taking no direct part in the hostilities and persons hors de combat have the right to respect for their individual beliefs.[3437]
3850. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that "everybody has the right to respect . . . for their beliefs".[3438]
3851. France's LOAC Manual refers to Article 75(1) AP I and provides that "all the parties shall respect . . . religious practices of all persons [under their power]".[3439]
3852. Germany's Military Manual provides that "civilians who do not take part in hostilities . . . are entitled to respect for their religious convictions".[3440] It further provides that the belligerent shall ensure the "freedom of religion" to aliens remaining in the territory of a party to the conflict.[3441]
3853. Hungary's Military Manual provides for "respect for the religious convictions" of civilians in occupied territories.[3442]
3854. Indonesia's Directive on Human Rights in Trikora states that respect for personal and human dignity includes a prohibition on the violation or derogation of individual rights, such as freedom of thought, conscience and religion.[3443]
3855. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territory, civilians have the right to respect for their religious convictions and practices.[3444]
3856. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "religious convictions and practices are to be respected".[3445]
3857. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "captured combatants and civilians in the power of the adverse party have the right to respect for . . . their beliefs".[3446]
3858. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "religious convictions and practices . . . of protected persons must in all circumstances be respected".[3447] It further provides that protected persons who remain in the territory of the [3435] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.

[3436] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 6.2.5(1)–(2).
[3437] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1(1).
[3438] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 2.
[3439] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 51.
[3440] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 502, see also § 532.
[3441] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 585.
[3442] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 97.
[3443] Indonesia, Directive on Human Rights in Trikora (1995), § 4(a).
[3444] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(a).
[3445] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[3446] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), p. 91, Rule 4.
[3447] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1114.

belligerents "must be allowed . . . to practise their religion".[3448] According to the manual, "the Occupying Power has a duty to allow freedom of religion in the occupied territory".[3449] In addition, "it is the duty of the Occupying Power to see that . . . [the] religious convictions [of the inhabitants] are not interfered with" and that "according to the IV GC, protected persons are entitled in all circumstances to respect for . . . their religious convictions and practices".[3450]

3859. Nicaragua's Military Manual states that "victims of an armed conflict have the right in any circumstance to respect for . . . their beliefs and religious practices".[3451]

3860. Romania Soldiers' Manual provides that captured combatants and civilians have the right to respect for their convictions and to practice their religion freely.[3452]

3861. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "religious beliefs and the practice of worship shall be respected".[3453] It further states that "the civilian population has the right to respect for its religious beliefs".[3454]

3862. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that the fundamental guarantees for persons in the power of one party to the conflict as contained in Article 75 AP I are a part of customary international law.[3455] It provides that "as a general rule, civilians within an occupied area shall, as protected persons, under all circumstances enjoy respect as to . . . religious convictions and practice".[3456] The manual also provides that "occupation shall not involve any change in the faith and religious practice of the population. The IV Geneva Convention contains a number of articles providing protection for religion, faith and religious practices, without this being linked to any particular confession."[3457]

3863. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides, with respect to civilians in the power of a party to the conflict, that "religious convictions and customs shall be respected".[3458] In the case of occupied territories, the manual states that "the ministers of religion shall be able to give spiritual assistance to the members of their religious communities. Religious convictions and performing religious practices shall be respected."[3459]

3864. The UK Military Manual states that "protected persons who remain in the territory of the belligerent must, in general, . . . be allowed . . . to practice their religion".[3460] In the case of occupied territories, the manual states that

[3448] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1118.
[3449] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1315.
[3450] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1321(1)–(2).
[3451] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(30).
[3452] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 33, § 1.
[3453] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.7.c.(3).
[3454] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.6.a.(1).
[3455] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 19.
[3456] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[3457] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, pp. 127–128.
[3458] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 146.
[3459] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 167.
[3460] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 46.

"public worship must be permitted and religious convictions respected by the Occupant, who must permit ministers of religion to give spiritual assistance to the members of their religious communities".[3461] It also states that "it is a duty of the Occupant to see that . . . [the] religious convictions [of the inhabitants] are not interfered with". It adds that "according to the Civilian Convention, protected persons are entitled in all circumstances to respect for . . . their religious convictions and practices".[3462]

3865. The UK LOAC Manual states that "in all circumstances . . . religious convictions . . . of protected persons should be respected".[3463]

3866. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 27, 38, third paragraph, and 58 GC IV. It also uses the same wording as Article 46 of the 1907 HR.[3464]

3867. The US Air Force Pamphlet recalls that GC IV contains provisions on the treatment of protected persons, including "to respect . . . religious customs".[3465] It adds that protected persons in the territory of a belligerent "in any case, are entitled . . . to practice their religion".[3466] The Pamphlet refers to Article 46 of the 1907 HR and provides for respect for "religious convictions and practices".[3467]

3868. The US Soldier's Manual instructs soldiers that "however different or unusual a foreign land may seem to you, remember to respect its people and their honor, family rights, religious beliefs, and customs".[3468]

3869. The US Naval Handbook provides that "the following acts are representative war crimes: . . . infringement of religious rights" of civilian inhabitants of occupied territory.[3469]

National Legislation

3870. Countless pieces of domestic legislation provide for the right to freedom of conscience and of religion.[3470]

3871. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3471]

3872. The Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that compelling civilians to "forcible conversion to another nationality

[3461] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 536.
[3462] UK, Military Manual (1958), §§ 546 and 547.
[3463] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, § 9.
[3464] US, Field Manual (1956), § 110 (Article 34 GC III), § 266 (Article 27 GC IV), § 277 (Article 38 GC IV), § 387 (Article 58 GC IV), § 293 (Article 86 GC IV), § 300 (Article 93 GC IV) and § 380.
[3465] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-4.
[3466] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-5.
[3467] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6(a).
[3468] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 21.
[3469] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5(1) and (2).
[3470] See, e.g., Ethiopia, Constitution (1994), Article 27(1); India, Constitution (1950), Article 25(1); Kenya, Constitution (1992), Article 78; Kuwait, Constitution (1962), Article 35; Kyrgyzstan, Constitution (1993), Article 16(2); Mexico, Constitution (1917) Article 24; Russia Constitution (1993), Article 28.
[3471] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).

or religion" is a war crime.[3472] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[3473]

3873. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that "conversion to another religion" of civilian population is a war crime.[3474]

3874. Ethiopia's Penal Code provides that "forcible religious conversion" is a war crime against the civilian population.[3475]

3875. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 27, 38 and 58 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 75(1) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 4(1) AP II, are punishable offences.[3476]

3876. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, "compelling [civilians] to convert to another faith" constitutes a war crime.[3477]

3877. Myanmar's Defence Services Act provides for the punishment of "any person subject to this law who . . . by defiling any place of worship, or otherwise, intentionally insults the religions or wounds the religious feelings of any person".[3478]

3878. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[3479]

3879. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, "conversion of the population to another religion" is a war crime.[3480]

3880. The Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act of the SFRY (FRY) considers that, during war or enemy occupation, "any person who ordered, assisted or otherwise was the direct executor of . . . forced conversion to any other faith" committed war crimes.[3481]

3881. The Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "conversion of the population to another religion" is a war crime.[3482]

[3472] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 154(1).
[3473] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 433(1), 434 and 435.
[3474] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 158.
[3475] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 282(e).
[3476] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3477] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[3478] Myanmar, Defence Services Act (1959), Section 66(b).
[3479] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3480] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 374(1).
[3481] SFRY (FRY), Criminal Offences against the Nation and State Act (1945), Article 3(3).
[3482] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 142.

National Case-law

3882. In its judgement in the Zühlke case in 1948, a Special Court of Cassation of the Netherlands held that refusal to admit a clergyman or priest to a person awaiting execution of the death sentence constituted a war crime.[3483]

3883. In the Tanaka Chuichi case before an Australian military court in 1946, the accused had ill-treated Sikh prisoners of war, had cut their hair and beards and had forced some of them to smoke a cigarette, acts contrary to their culture and religion. The Court found the accused guilty of violations of, inter alia, the 1929 Geneva POW Convention.[3484]

Other National Practice

3884. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[3485]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

3885. In a resolution on Sudan adopted in 2000, the UN General Assembly expressed its deep concern "at continuing violations of human rights in areas under the control of the Government of the Sudan, in particular: . . . restrictions on freedom of religion".[3486]

3886. In a resolution adopted in 1996, the UN Commission on Human Rights expressed serious concern about reports of religious persecution and forced conversion in the government-controlled areas of Sudan.[3487]

3887. In a resolution adopted in 2001 on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance, the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned "all forms of intolerance [and] discrimination based on religion or belief" and urged States "to recognize the right of all persons to worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief and to establish and maintain places for these purposes".[3488]

3888. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949

[3483] Netherlands, Special Court of Cassation (Second Chamber), Zühlke case, Judgement, 6 December 1948.
[3484] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Tanaka Chuichi case, Judgement, 12 July 1946.
[3485] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[3486] UN General Assembly, Res. 55/116, 4 December 2000, § 2(b)(iii).
[3487] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1996/73, 23 April 1996, preamble.
[3488] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 2001/42, 23 April 2001, §§ 2 and 4(d).

Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[3489]

3889. In a report in 1993, the UN Special Rapporteur on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief stated that:

The Special Rapporteur has continued to receive allegations of infringements in most regions of the world of the rights and freedoms contained in the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief. Practices of religious intolerance have continued to occur in countries with varying degrees of development and different political and social systems and have not been confined to a particular faith.[3490]

Other International Organisations

3890. No practice was found.

International Conferences

3891. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3892. In its General Comment on Article 18 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1993, the HRC stated that:

The right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion (which includes the freedom to hold beliefs) in article 18.1 is far-reaching and profound; it encompasses freedom of thought on all matters, personal conviction and the commitment to religion or belief, whether manifested individually or in community with others. The Committee draws the attention of States parties to the fact that the freedom of thought and the freedom of conscience are protected equally with the freedom of religion and belief. The fundamental character of these freedoms is also reflected in the fact that this provision cannot be derogated from, even in time of public emergency, as stated in article 4.2 of the Covenant.[3491]

3893. In 1999, in the case of the Association of Members of the Episcopal Conference of East Africa v. Sudan, the ACiHPR stated that:

73. Another matter is the application of Shari'a law. There is no controversy as to Shari'a being based upon the interpretation of the Muslim religion. When Sudanese tribunals apply Shari'a, they must do so in accordance with the other obligations undertaken by the State of Sudan. Trials must always accord with international fair-trial standards. Also, it is fundamentally unjust that religious laws should be applied against non-adherents of the religion. Tribunals that apply only Shari'a are thus not competent to judge non-Muslims, and everyone should have the right to be tried by a secular court if they wish.

[3489] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.

[3490] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of all Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1993/62, 6 January 1993, § 74; see also Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1987/35, 24 December 1986; Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1988/45, 6 January 1988; Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1989/44, 30 December 1988; Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1990/46, 22 January 1990; Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1991/56, 18 January 1991 and Report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1992/52, 18 December 1991.

[3491] HRC, General Comment No. 22 (Article 18 ICCPR), 30 July 1993, § 1.

74. It is alleged that non-Muslims were persecuted in order to cause their conversion to Islam. They do not have the right to preach or build their Churches; there are restrictions on freedom of expression in the national press. Members of the Christian clergy are harassed; Christians are subjected to arbitrary arrests, expulsions and denial of access to work and food aid.
75. In its various oral and written submissions to the African Commission, the government has not responded in any convincing manner to all the allegations of human made against it. The Commission reiterates the principle that in such cases where the government does not respect its obligation to provide the Commission with a response on the allegations of which it is notified, it shall consider the facts probable.
76. Other allegations refer to the oppression of Christian civilians and religious leaders and the expulsion of missionaries. It is alleged that non-Muslims suffer persecution in the form of denial of work, food aid and education. A serious allegation is that of unequal food distribution in prisons, subjecting Christian prisoners to blackmail in order obtain food. These attacks on individuals on account of their religious persuasion considerably restrict their ability to practice freely the religion to which they subscribe. The government provides no evidence or justifications that would mitigate this conclusion. Accordingly, the Commission holds a violation of Article 8 [of the ACHPR].[3492]

3894. In 1993, in its judgement in Kokkinakis v. Greece, the ECtHR stated that:

31. As enshrined in Article 9 (art. 9) [of the 1950 ECHR], freedom of thought, conscience and religion is one of the foundations of a "democratic society" within the meaning of the Convention. It is, in its religious dimension, one of the most vital elements that go to make up the identity of believers and their conception of life, but it is also a precious asset for atheists, agnostics, sceptics and the unconcerned. The pluralism indissociable from a democratic society, which has been dearly won over the centuries, depends on it.

    While religious freedom is primarily a matter of individual conscience, it also implies, inter alia, freedom to "manifest [one's] religion". Bearing witness in words and deeds is bound up with the existence of religious convictions.

    According to Article 9 (art. 9), freedom to manifest one's religion is not only exercisable in community with others, "in public" and within the circle of those whose faith one shares, but can also be asserted "alone" and "in private"; furthermore, it includes in principle the right to try to convince one's neighbour, for example through "teaching", failing which, moreover, "freedom to change [one's] religion or belief", enshrined in Article 9 (art. 9), would be likely to remain a dead letter.[3493]

[3492] ACiHPR, Association of Members of the Episcopal Conference of East Africa v. Sudan, Decision, 1–15 November 1999, §§ 73–76.
[3493] ECtHR, Kokkinakis v. Greece, Judgement, 25 May 1993, § 31.

3895. In its judgement in the Cyprus case in 2001, the ECtHR found, in relation to the living conditions of Greek Cypriots in the Karpas region of northern Cyprus, that there had been a violation of Article 9 of the 1950 ECHR (freedom of thought, conscience and religion) in respect of Greek Cypriots concerning the effects of restrictions on freedom of movement, which limited access to places of worship and participation in other aspects of religious life.[3494]

3896. In a resolution adopted in 1968 concerning the law applicable to emergency situations, the IACiHR declared that:

> The suspension of constitutional guarantees or state of siege is compatible with the system of representative democratic government only if enacted under the following conditions:
>
> . . .
>
> e. When it does not in any manner presuppose the suspension of . . . the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion.[3495]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3897. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the person and the person's honour, convictions and religious practices shall be respected".[3496] Delegates also teach that in occupied territories "the religious convictions and practices of the inhabitants must be respected. Religious personnel shall be permitted to give spiritual assistance to the members of their religious communities with the aid of the occupying power."[3497]

3898. In a declaration issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross recalled the Geneva Conventions and AP I and reminded the parties of their obligation to respect the beliefs of combatants and civilians.[3498]

3899. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC recalled that "religious customs must be respected, which implies access to places of worship to the fullest extent possible".[3499]

[3494] ECtHR, Cyprus case, Judgement, 10 May 2001, §§ 245–246.
[3495] IACiHR, Resolution adopted at the 1968 Session, Doc. OEA/Ser.L/V/II.19 Doc. 32, Inter-American Yearbook on Human Rights, 1968, pp. 59–61.
[3496] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 188.
[3497] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 824.
[3498] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1o. de Enero de 1994, 3 January 1994.
[3499] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.

VI. Other Practice

3900. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "captured combatants and civilians under the authority of the adverse party are entitled to respect for their . . . convictions".[3500]
3901. In 1986, an armed opposition group was said to release or execute captured combatants according to their willingness to convert to Islam and their behaviour in detention. If no solution was found to their case after two years of detention, the prisoners would have been executed.[3501]
3902. A colloquium held jointly by the IIHL and the International Institute of Human Rights in 1973 adopted a resolution on spiritual and intellectual assistance in time of armed conflict and civil disturbances. The resolution appealed to any party involved in an international or non-international armed conflict to respect the right of any victim of an armed conflict to exercise his or her spiritual and intellectual activities and to supply him or her with the facilities necessary therefor, as well as to refrain from controlling such activities in a manner incompatible with respect for beliefs and convictions, or from practising methods of information, training or teaching which were incompatible with freedom of thought and the principles of humanitarian law. It also invited all States to ratify the universal and regional instruments asserting the right to freedom of thought, conviction and religion, and to apply the provisions of those instruments in all circumstances, including during international and non-international conflicts, and in situations of internal tension.[3502]
3903. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "all persons, even if their liberty has been restricted, are entitled to respect for their person, honour and convictions, freedom of thought, conscience and religious practices".[3503]

Q. Respect for Family Life

Note: For practice concerning enforced disappearance, see section K of this chapter. For practice concerning accounting for the dead, see Chapter 35, section E. For practice concerning the right of the families to know the fate of their relatives, see Chapter 36. For practice concerning the grouping of families in detention, correspondence with and visits to persons deprived of their liberty, see Chapter 37, sections B, C, H and I. For practice concerning respect for family unity during displacement, see Chapter 38, section C.

[3500] ICRC archive document. [3501] ICRC archive document.
[3502] IIHL/International Institute of Human Rights, Colloquium on Spiritual and Intellectual Assistance in Time of Armed Conflicts and Civil Disturbances, IRRC, No. 152, 1973, p. 609.
[3503] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 3(1), IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 331.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

3904. Article 46 of the 1899 HR provides that "family honour and rights . . . must be respected".

3905. Article 46 of the 1907 HR provides that "family honour and rights . . . must be respected".

3906. Article 26 GC IV provides that:

> Each Party to the conflict shall facilitate enquiries made by members of families dispersed owing to the war, with the object of renewing contact with one another and of meeting, if possible. It shall encourage, in particular, the work of organizations engaged on this task provided they are acceptable to it and conform to its security regulations.

3907. Article 27, first paragraph, GC IV provides that "protected persons are entitled, in all circumstances, to respect for their . . . family rights".

3908. Article 8 of the 1950 ECHR provides that:

1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.
2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, of for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.

3909. Article 17(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "no one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation". Article 17(2) provides that "everyone has the right to protection of the law against such interference or attacks".

3910. Article 23(1) of the 1966 ICCPR provides that "the family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State".

3911. Article 10(1) of the 1966 ICESCR provides that "the widest possible protection and assistance should be accorded to the family, which is the natural and fundamental group unit of society".

3912. Article 11 of the 1969 ACHR provides that:

1. Everyone has the right to have his honor respected and his dignity recognized.
2. No one may be the object of arbitrary or abusive interference with his private life, his family, his home, or his correspondence, or of unlawful attacks on his honor or reputation.
3. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interferences or attacks.

3913. Article 17(1) of the 1969 ACHR provides that "the family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the state".

3914. Article 74 AP I provides that "Parties to the conflict shall facilitate in every possible way the reunion of families dispersed as a result of armed conflicts and shall encourage in particular the work of the humanitarian organizations engaged in this task". Article 74 AP I was adopted by consensus.[3504]

3915. Article 4(3)(b) AP II provides that "all appropriate steps shall be taken to facilitate the reunion of families temporarily separated". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3505]

3916. Article 18 of the 1981 ACHPR provides that:

1. The family shall be the natural unit and basis of society. It shall be protected by the State which shall take care of its physical health and moral.
2. The State shall have the duty to assist the family which is the custodian of morals and traditional values recognized by the community.

3917. Article 15(1) of the 1988 Protocol of San Salvador provides that "the family is the natural and fundamental element of society and ought to be protected by the State, which should see to the improvement of its spiritual and material conditions".

3918. Article 9 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "Parties shall ensure that a child shall not be separated from his or her parents against their will".

3919. Article 10 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that "applications by a child or his or her parents to enter or leave a State Party for the purpose of family reunification shall be dealt with by States Parties in a positive, humane and expeditious manner".

3920. Article 16 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

1. No child shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his or her privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to unlawful attacks on his or her honour and reputation.
2. The child has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

3921. Article 22(2) of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child provides that:

States Parties shall provide, as they consider appropriate, cooperation in any efforts by the United Nations and other competent intergovernmental organizations or non-governmental organizations cooperating with the United Nations . . . to trace the parents or other members of the family of any refugee child in order to obtain information necessary for reunification with his or her family.

[3504] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.43, 27 May 1977, p. 248.
[3505] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.

3922. In the 1994 Quadripartite Agreement on Georgian Refugees and IDPs, the parties agreed that:

> In accordance with the fundamental principle of preserving family unity, where it is not possible for families to repatriate as units, a mechanism shall be established for their reunification in Abkhazia. Measures shall also be taken for the identification and extra care/assistance for unaccompanied minors and other vulnerable persons during the repatriation process.

Other Instruments

3923. Article 37 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "the United States acknowledge and protect, in hostile countries occupied by them, . . . the sacredness of domestic relations. Offenses to the contrary shall be rigorously punished."

3924. Article 38 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration provides that "family honour and rights . . . must be respected".

3925. Article 48 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "family honour and rights . . . must be respected".

3926. Article 12 of the 1948 UDHR provides that "no one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence, nor to attacks upon his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks".

3927. Article 16(3) of the 1948 UDHR provides that "the family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State".

3928. Article V of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man provides that "everyone has the right to the protection of the law against abusive attacks upon his . . . family life".

3929. Article VI of the 1948 American Declaration on the Rights and Duties of Man provides that "every person has the right to establish a family, the basic element of society, and to receive protection therefor".

3930. Article 5(b) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that society and the State "shall ensure family protection and welfare".

3931. Principle 17 of the 1998 Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement provides that:

1. Every human being has the right to respect of his or her family life.
2. To give effect to this right for internally displaced persons, family members who wish to remain together shall be allowed to do so.
3. Families which are separated by displacement should be reunited as quickly as possible. All appropriate steps shall be taken to expedite the reunion of such families, particularly when children are involved. The responsible authorities shall facilitate inquiries made by family members and encourage and cooperate with the work of humanitarian organizations engaged in the task of family reunification.

4. Members of internally displaced families whose personal liberty has been restricted by internment or confinement in camps shall have the right to remain together.

3932. Article 7 of the 2000 EU Charter of Fundamental Rights provides that "everyone has the right to respect for his or her private and family life".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

3933. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) contains provisions specifying that parties to a conflict must assist members of families to keep in contact and, if possible, facilitate the process of family reunification.[3506]

3934. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that "the High Contracting Parties and the Parties to the conflict shall facilitate in every possible way the reunion of families dispersed as a result of armed conflicts and shall encourage in particular the work of the humanitarian organisations engaged in this task".[3507]

3935. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "family rights [of protected persons] ... shall be respected".[3508]

3936. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that civilians in a foreign land are entitled in all circumstances to respect for their family rights.[3509]

3937. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic instructs soldiers that "however different or unusual a foreign land may seem to you, remember to respect its people and their honour, family rights ... and customs".[3510]

3938. El Salvador's Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces recalls that "the Universal Declaration of Human Rights establishes ... the protection of the family".[3511]

3939. Germany's Military Manual provides that "civilians who do not take part in hostilities ... are entitled to respect for their family rights".[3512]

3940. Italy's IHL Manual provides that, in occupied territory, civilians have the right to respect for their family rights.[3513]

3941. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "family and private honour ... are to be respected".[3514]

3942. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "family rights ... of protected persons must in all circumstances be respected".[3515] It also recalls the

[3506] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 4.009.
[3507] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 4.14.
[3508] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 953.
[3509] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 4, § 2.
[3510] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 10.
[3511] El Salvador, Human Rights Charter of the Armed Forces (undated), p. 2.
[3512] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 502, see also § 532.
[3513] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 41(a).
[3514] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 2.
[3515] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1114.

provisions of AP I, stating that "parties to the conflict are obliged to facilitate the reunion of families dispersed as a result of armed conflicts".[3516] The manual further states that "according to the IV GC, protected persons are entitled in all circumstances to respect for . . . their family rights".[3517]

3943. Nicaragua's Military Manual states that "victims of an armed conflict have the right in any circumstances to respect for . . . their family rights".[3518]

3944. The Handbook on Discipline of the Philippines provides for the punishment of abduction and separation of family members.[3519]

3945. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the reunion of dispersed families shall be favoured".[3520] It clearly stipulates that "family rights shall be respected".[3521]

3946. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "as a general rule, civilians within an occupied area shall, as protected persons, under all circumstances enjoy respect as to . . . family rights".[3522]

3947. The UK Military Manual states that in situations of occupation, "according to the Civilian Convention, protected persons are entitled in all circumstances to respect for . . . their family rights".[3523]

3948. The UK LOAC Manual states that "in all circumstances, the . . . family rights . . . of protected persons should be respected".[3524]

3949. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 27 GC IV.[3525] It also uses the same wording as Article 46 of the 1907 HR.[3526]

3950. The US Air Force Pamphlet recalls that GC IV has provisions on the treatment of protected persons, including "to respect . . . family rights".[3527] It also refers to Article 46 of the 1907 HR, which provides for respect for "family honour".[3528]

3951. The US Soldier's Manual instructs soldiers that "however different or unusual a foreign land may seem to you, remember to respect its people and their honor, family rights . . . and customs".[3529]

3952. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook provides that "the United States supports the principles in [AP I], Article 74, that nations facilitate in every possible way the reunion of families dispersed as a result of armed conflict and encourage the work of humanitarian organizations engaged in this task".[3530]

[3516] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1136.
[3517] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1321(2).
[3518] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 14(30).
[3519] Philippines, Handbook on Discipline (1989), p. 16.
[3520] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.c.(1).
[3521] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.7.c.(3).
[3522] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 6.1.3, p. 122.
[3523] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 547.
[3524] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 9, p. 34, § 9.
[3525] US, Field Manual (1956), § 266.
[3526] US, Field Manual (1956), § 380.
[3527] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-4.
[3528] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 14-6(a).
[3529] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 21.
[3530] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.4, footnote 19.

National Legislation

3953. Angola's Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations provides that:

> It is the responsibility of the Provincial Governments, through the Sub-Groups on Displaced Persons and Refugees of the Provincial Humanitarian Coordination Groups, to carry out the following:
> ...
> h) To take appropriate measures to ensure family reunification.[3531]

3954. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[3532]

3955. According to Colombia's Law on Internally Displaced Persons, the family of forcibly displaced persons must benefit from the right to family reunification.[3533]

3956. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 27 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 74 AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 4(3)(b) AP II, are punishable offences.[3534]

3957. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended punishes as a "violation of the norms of international humanitarian law in time of war, an armed conflict or under the conditions of occupation or annexation: ... separation of children from their parents or guardians".[3535]

3958. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[3536]

3959. The Act on Child Protection of the Philippines provides that:

> All appropriate steps shall be taken to facilitate the reunion of families temporarily separated due to armed conflict ...
> Whenever possible, members of the same family shall be housed in the same premises and given separate accommodation from other evacuees and be provided with facilities to lead a normal family life.[3537]

National Case-law

3960. No practice was found.

[3531] Angola, Rules on the Resettlement of Internally Displaced Populations (2001), Article 2(h).
[3532] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[3533] Colombia, Law on Internally Displaced Persons (1997), Article 2(4).
[3534] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[3535] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 336.
[3536] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[3537] Philippines, Act on Child Protection (1992), Sections 22(f) and 23.

Other National Practice

3961. A resolution adopted by the National Assembly of South Korea in December 1998 urged cooperation between the authorities in North and South Korea in reuniting separated family members and proposed that the National Red Cross Societies in each region proceed with their work on family reunification.[3538]

3962. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that . . . states facilitate in every possible way the reunion of families dispersed as a result of armed conflicts".[3539]

3963. According to the Report on US Practice, "Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II reflect general US policy on treatment of persons in the power of an adverse party in armed conflicts governed by common Article 3" of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The report also notes that "it is the opinio juris of the US that persons detained in connection with an internal armed conflict are entitled to humane treatment as specified in Articles 4, 5 and 6 AP II".[3540]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

3964. In several resolutions on the rights of the child, the UN General Assembly has called upon all States and UN bodies and agencies "to ensure the early identification and registration of unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children [and] to give priority to programmes for family tracing and reunification".[3541]

3965. In two resolutions adopted in 1997 and 1998 on the rights of the child, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon all States "to give priority to programmes for family tracing and reunification, and to continue monitoring the care arrangements for unaccompanied refugee and internally displaced children".[3542]

3966. In 1996, in a report on the impact of armed conflict on children, the UN Secretary-General noted that:

[3538] South Korea, Resolution Calling for the Confirmation of Life or Death and the Reunion of Members of Separated Families in South and North Korea, 198th Regular Session, 1 December 1998.

[3539] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 427.

[3540] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.3.

[3541] UN General Assembly, Res. 51/77, 12 December 1996, Section III, § 42; Res. 52/107, 12 December 1997, Section V, § 3; Res. 53/128, 9 December 1998, Section V, § 3.

[3542] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1997/78, 18 April 1997, § 16; Res. 1998/76, 22 April 1998, § 17(b).

A substantial body of rules and standards already confirms the principle of family reunion, whether children are separated from parents by armed conflict or other events. In practice, however, reunification is often frustrated or protracted, resulting in further psychological damage to children and their families.[3543]

3967. In 1981, in a Conclusion on Family Reunification, the UNHCR Executive Committee stressed that "every effort should be made to ensure the reunification of separated families".[3544]
3968. In 1997, in a Conclusion on Refugee Children and Adolescents, the UNHCR Executive Committee stated that the role of the family as the fundamental group of society should be protected in accordance with human rights and humanitarian law.[3545]

Other International Organisations
3969. No practice was found.

International Conferences
3970. The 25th International Conference of the Red Cross in 1986 adopted a resolution on protection of children in armed conflict in which it recommended that "according to the Geneva Conventions and the two Additional Protocols, all necessary measures be taken to preserve the unity of the family and to facilitate the reuniting of families".[3546]
3971. The 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent in 1995 adopted a resolution on protection of the civilian population in period of armed conflict in which it stated that it:

(a) demands that all parties to armed conflict avoid any action aimed at, or having the effect of, causing the separation of families in a manner contrary to international humanitarian law;
(b) appeals to States to do their utmost to solve the serious humanitarian issue of dispersed families without delay.[3547]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

3972. In its General Comment No. 16 on Article 17 of the 1966 ICCPR in 1988, the HRC held that:

[3543] UN Secretary-General, Impact of armed conflict on children, Report prepared by the expert appointed pursuant to UN General Assembly Resolution 48/157 (1993), UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/110, 5 February 1996, § 44.
[3544] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 24 (XXXII): Family Reunification, 22 October 1981, § 1.
[3545] UNHCR, Executive Committee, Conclusion No. 84 (XLVIII): Refugee Children and Adolescents, 20 October 1997, § b(i).
[3546] 25th International Conference of the Red Cross, Geneva, 23–31 October 1986, Res. IX, § 5.
[3547] 26th International Conference of the Red Cross and Red Crescent, Geneva, 3–7 December 1995, Res. II, § D(a)-(d).

1. Article 17 provides for the right of every person to be protected against arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy, family, home or correspondence as well as against unlawful attacks on his honour and reputation. In the view of the Committee this right is required to be guaranteed against all such interferences and attacks whether they emanate from State authorities or from natural or legal persons. The obligations imposed by this article require the State to adopt legislative and other measures to give effect to the prohibition against such interferences and attacks as well as to the protection of this right.

...

4. The expression "arbitrary interference" is also relevant to the protection of the right provided for in article 17. In the Committee's view the expression "arbitrary interference" can also extend to interference provided for under the law. The introduction of the concept of arbitrariness is intended to guarantee that even interference provided for by law should be in accordance with the provisions, aims and objectives of the Covenant and should be, in any event, reasonable in the particular circumstances.
5. Regarding the term "family", the objectives of the Covenant require that for purposes of article 17 this term be given a broad interpretation to include all those comprising the family as understood in the society of the State party concerned. The term "home" in English, "manzel" in Arabic, "zhùzhái" in Chinese, "domicile" in French, "zhilische" in Russian and "domicilio" in Spanish, as used in article 17 of the Covenant, is to be understood to indicate the place where a person resides or carries out his usual occupation. In this connection, the Committee invites States to indicate in their reports the meaning given in their society to the terms "family" and "home".[3548]

3973. In 1997, in its concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, the CRC stated that the State should reinforce its central tracing agency to favour family reunification.[3549]

3974. In several cases, the ECtHR addressed the issue of family unity and held that Article 8 of the 1950 ECHR included a right for parents to have measures taken with a view to them being reunited with their children and an obligation for national authorities to take such measures. According to the Court, preventing parents from living with their children amounted to interference with the right to respect for family life.[3550]

3975. In Johnston and Others v. Ireland in 1986 dealing with a couple prevented from marrying one another for reasons related to the domestic law on divorce of Ireland, the ECtHR stated that:

55. The principles which emerge from the Court's case-law on Article 8 (art. 8) [of the 1950 ECHR] include the following.

[3548] HRC, General Comment No. 16 (Article 17 ICCPR), 8 April 1988, §§ 1 and 4–5.
[3549] CRC, Concluding observations on the report of Myanmar, UN Doc. CRC/C/15/Add.69, 24 January 1997, § 40–41.
[3550] ECtHR, Eriksson case, Judgement, 22 June 1989, p. 26, § 71; Andersson v. Sweden, Judgement, 25 February 1992, p. 30, § 91; Rieme v. Sweden, Judgement, 22 April 1992, §§ 55, 56 and 69; Olsson v. Sweden, Judgement, 27 November 1992, pp. 35–36, § 90; Hokkanen v. Finland, Judgement, 23 September 1994; Gül v. Switzerland, Judgement, 19 February 1996, p. 14.

(a) By guaranteeing the right to respect for family life, Article 8 (art. 8) presupposes the existence of a family . . .
(b) Article 8 (art. 8) applies to the "family life" of the "illegitimate" family as well as to that of the "legitimate" family . . .
(c) Although the essential object of Article 8 (art. 8) is to protect the individual against arbitrary interference by the public authorities, there may in addition be positive obligations inherent in an effective "respect" for family life. However, especially as far as those positive obligations are concerned, the notion of "respect" is not clear-cut: having regard to the diversity of the practices followed and the situations obtaining in the Contracting States, the notion's requirements will vary considerably from case to case. Accordingly, this is an area in which the Contracting Parties enjoy a wide margin of appreciation in determining the steps to be taken to ensure compliance with the Convention with due regard to the needs and resources of the community and of individuals . . .

56. In the present case, it is clear that the applicants, the first and second of whom have lived together for some fifteen years . . . ,constitute a "family" for the purposes of Article 8 (art. 8). They are thus entitled to its protection, notwithstanding the fact that their relationship exists outside marriage . . .[3551]

3976. In B. v. UK in 1987, the ECtHR stated that:

60. The mutual enjoyment by parent and child of each other's company constitutes a fundamental element of family life. Furthermore, the natural family relationship is not terminated by reason of the fact that the child is taken into public care. It follows – and this was not contested by the Government – that the Authority's decisions resulting from the procedures at issue amounted to interferences with the applicant's right to respect for her family life.
61. According to the Court's established case-law:
(a) an interference with the right to respect for family life entails a violation of Article 8 (art. 8) [of the 1950 ECHR] unless it was "in accordance with the law", had an aim or aims that is or are legitimate under Article 8 § 2 (art. 8-2) and was "necessary in a democratic society" for the aforesaid aim or aims . . .
(b) the notion of necessity implies that the interference corresponds to a pressing social need and, in particular, that it is proportionate to the legitimate aim pursued . . .
(c) although the essential object of Article 8 (art. 8) is to protect the individual against arbitrary interference by the public authorities, there may in addition be positive obligations inherent in an effective "respect" for family life . . .
(d) in determining whether an interference is "necessary in a democratic society" or whether there has been breach of a positive obligation, the Court will take into account that a margin of appreciation is left to the Contracting States . . .[3552]

[3551] ECtHR, Johnston and Others v. Ireland, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction), 18 December 1986, §§ 55–56.
[3552] ECtHR, B. v. UK, Judgement, 8 July 1987, §§ 60–61.

3977. In Moustaquim v. Belgium in 1991, the ECtHR stated that:

> 34. Mr Moustaquim submitted that his deportation by the Belgian authorities interfered with his family and private life. He relied on Article 8 (art. 8) of the Convention . . .
> 35. The Government expressed doubts as to whether the applicant and his parents had any real family life at the time he was deported, as family ties were, at the least, strained in view of the number of occasions on which the youth had run away and had been imprisoned. They did not, however, expressly dispute that Article 8 (art. 8) was applicable.
> 36. Mr Moustaquim lived in Belgium, where his parents and his seven brothers and sisters also resided. He had never broken off relations with them. The measure complained of resulted in his being separated from them for more than five years, although he tried to remain in touch by correspondence. There was accordingly interference by a public authority with the right to respect for family life guaranteed in paragraph 1 of Article 8 (art. 8-1).[3553]

3978. In Vermeire v. Belgium in 1991, the ECtHR stated that:

> 25. . . . There was nothing imprecise or incomplete about the rule which prohibited discrimination against Astrid Vermeire compared with her cousins Francine and Michel, on the grounds of the "illegitimate" nature of the kinship between her and the deceased [i.e. her grandparents] . . .
>
> For these reasons, the Court . . .
>
> 2. Holds unanimously that the applicant's exclusion from the estate of Camiel Vermeire [i.e. her grandfather] violated Article 14 in conjunction with Article 8 (art. 14+8) of the [1950 ECHR].[3554]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

3979. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

3980. The SPLM Human Rights Charter provides that "children have the right not to be separated from their families and to be reunited with them".[3555]

[3553] ECtHR, Moustaquim v. Belgium, Judgement (Merits and just satisfaction), 18 February 1991, §§ 34–36.
[3554] ECtHR, Vermeire v. Belgium, Judgement (Merits), 29 November 1991, § 25 and Disposition 2.
[3555] SPLM, Human Rights Charter, May 1996, § 6.

CHAPTER 33

COMBATANTS AND PRISONER-OF-WAR STATUS

Note: For practice concerning the definition of combatants, see Chapter 1, section C. The treatment of captured combatants entitled to prisoner-of-war status is regulated by the Third Geneva Convention. Practice pertaining thereto is not examined in detail in this study because the Third Geneva Convention is considered to be part of customary international law and, in any event, binds almost all States as a matter of treaty law. Chapter 32 contains practice on fundamental guarantees for all combatants hors de combat, whether entitled to prisoner-of-war status or not. Chapter 37 contains practice on persons deprived of their liberty in connection with an armed conflict, whether they are prisoners of war or not.

A. Conditions for Prisoner-of-War Status

Distinction from the civilian population

Note: Chapter 1, sections C and D, provides numerous references to the requirements for militia and volunteer corps to be considered as combatants, including having a distinctive sign and carrying arms openly, as provided for in Article 1 of the 1907 HR and Article 4(A)(2) GC III. These are not, generally, repeated here.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 44(3) AP I provides that "in order to promote the protection of the civilian population from the effects of hostilities, combatants are obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population while they are engaged in an attack or in a military operation preparatory to an attack". Article 44(7) AP I provides that "this Article is not intended to change the generally accepted practice of States with respect to the wearing of the uniform by combatants assigned to the regular, uniformed armed units of a Party to the conflict". Article 44 AP I was adopted by 73 votes in favour, one against and 21 abstentions.[1]

2. Article 45(3) AP I provides that "any person who has taken part in hostilities, who is not entitled to prisoner-of-war status and who does not benefit from more favourable treatment in accordance with the Fourth Convention shall have the right at all times to the protection of Article 75 of this Protocol". Article 45 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2]

3. Upon accession to AP I, Argentina declared that Articles 44(2), 44(3) and 44(4) AP I could not be interpreted:

a) as conferring on persons who violate the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts any kind of immunity exempting them from the system of sanctions which apply to each case;
b) as specifically favouring anyone who violates the rules the aim of which is the distinction between combatants and the civilian population;
c) as weakening respect for the fundamental principle of the international law of war which requires that a distinction be made between combatants and the civilian population, with the prime purpose of protecting the latter.[3]

Other Instruments

4. Paragraph 2.5 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina states that "in order to promote the protection of the civilian population, combatants are obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

5. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that "in order to promote the protection of the civilian population from the effects of hostilities, combatants are

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 121.
[2] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 155.
[3] Argentina, Interpretative declarations made upon accession to AP I and AP II, 26 November 1986, § 1.

obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population while they are engaged in an attack or in a military operation preparatory to an attack".[4]

6. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that combatants must "have a fixed distinctive sign recognisable at a distance and carry arms openly... Combatants are normally expected to distinguish themselves from the civilian population by wearing a uniform."[5]

7. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that there is a "customary rule according to which all members of the regular armed forces wear a uniform".[6]

8. According to Benin's Military Manual, combatants "distinguish themselves by their uniform or by a fixed recognisable sign or at least by carrying arms openly".[7]

9. According to Cameroon's Instructors' Manual, combatants "wear a uniform, a distinctive sign and carry arms openly. They distinguish themselves from the civilian population."[8]

10. Canada's LOAC Manual states that "to ensure the protection of the civilian population, combatants are required to distinguish themselves from that population when engaging in attack or preparing to mount an attack".[9]

11. Colombia's Instructors' Manual states that:

> Combatants must distinguish themselves from the civilian population when they participate in combat action or in an operation preparatory thereto. Members of regular Armed Forces normally wear their uniform. Members of other militias, such as rebels and guerrillas, use a distinctive sign and normally carry their arms openly.[10]

12. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that combatants distinguish themselves from civilians by wearing a uniform, having a distinctive sign, being under a responsible command, being subject to the law of war and by "carrying arms openly at least: during every military engagement [and] as long as visible to the enemy while engaged in a military deployment".[11]

13. Croatia's Commanders' Manual states that combatants, members of the armed forces, "distinguish themselves by their uniform or by a recognizable distinctive sign or at least by carrying their arms openly".[12]

14. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic states that "uniformed, armed soldiers are easily recognisable. However, guerrillas often mix with the civilians, perform undercover operations, and dress in civilian clothes. Alertness and caution must guide you in deciding who is a combatant."[13]

[4] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 1.08(3).
[5] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 512–513.
[6] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 20.
[7] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 12.
[8] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 17, see also p. 77.
[9] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 3-2, § 15.
[10] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 16.
[11] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 6.
[12] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 2.
[13] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 3.

15. France's LOAC Summary Note, LOAC Teaching Note and LOAC Manual provide that combatants distinguish themselves by their uniform, a fixed and recognisable sign or, at least, by carrying arms openly.[14]
16. Germany's Military Manual provides that:

> Combatants are obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population while they are engaged in an attack or in a military operation preparatory to an attack. In accordance with the generally agreed practice of states, members of regular armed forces shall wear their uniform. Combatants who are not members of uniformed armed forces nevertheless wear a permanent distinctive sign visible from a distance and carry their arms openly.[15]

17. According to Hungary's Military Manual, combatants distinguish themselves from civilians by wearing a uniform, having a distinctive sign, being under a responsible command, being subject to the law of war and by "carrying arms openly at least: during every military engagement [and] as long as visible to the enemy while engaged in a military deployment".[16]
18. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "it is prohibited to use civilians for the purpose of masking military movements or hiding among them. From this provision stems the soldiers' obligation to wear a uniform or identifying symbol to clearly distinguish them from civilians."[17]
19. Italy's IHL Manual states that "in order to obtain the best possible protection of the civilian population, lawful combatants are obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population when they participate in an attack or in a military operation preparatory to an attack".[18]
20. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual states that combatants, members of the armed forces, "distinguish themselves by their uniform or by a recognizable distinctive sign or at least by carrying their arms openly".[19]
21. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that:

> While engaged in combat action or in a military operation preparatory to it, combatants must distinguish themselves from the civilian population. It is customary for members of organized armed forces to wear uniform. Members of any other militias, volunteer corps or organized resistance movements wear a fixed recognizable distinctive sign or at least [carry] their arms openly.[20]

22. Madagascar's Military Manual states that combatants "distinguish themselves by their uniform or by a fixed recognisable sign or, at least, by carrying arms openly".[21] The manual further specifies that:

[14] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 1.2; LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 2; LOAC Manual (2001), p. 39.
[15] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 308. [16] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 17.
[17] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 38. [18] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 5.
[19] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 2.
[20] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 8.
[21] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-O, § 2.

Combatants must distinguish themselves from the civilian population while engaged in a combat action or in a preparatory military operation. Members of regular armed forces or persons who are assimilated thereto usually distinguish themselves by their uniform.[22]

23. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that:

[Combatants] have to distinguish themselves from the civilian population. This is a consequence of the principle that the parties to the conflict have to distinguish at all times between civilians and combatants. Combatants distinguish themselves in the first place by wearing a uniform. In addition, they have to carry their arms openly.[23]

24. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that:

With a view to ensuring protection of the civilian population, combatants are required to distinguish themselves from that population when engaged in an attack or preparing to mount an attack. Under the HR this distinction depended upon a recognisable emblem and the carrying of arms openly. In the case of a State's regular forces, the uniform worn by the forces strengthens the distinction.[24]

25. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that:

It is clearly important that combatants, while engaged in combat action or in a military operation preparatory thereto, must distinguish themselves from the civilian population. Members of regular and assimilated armed forces normally distinguish themselves by their uniform. Members of other armed forces wear a fixed, recognisable and distinctive sign and carry their arms openly.[25]

26. Sweden's IHL Manual states that:

The basic rule for the conduct of combatants is that they are obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population when taking part in an attack or in a military operation in preparation for an attack. For combatants belonging to regular forces, this is no problem, since they are recognizable by their uniforms and normally also by the carrying of weapons.[26]

27. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "in order to increase the protection of the civilian population against the effects of hostilities, combatants must distinguish themselves from the civilian population by wearing a uniform, before and during an attack".[27] The manual specifies that "all members of the regular armed forces wear a uniform . . . The uniform allows for a distinction to be made between friendly and enemy armed forces, on the one hand, and between armed forces and civilians, on the other hand."[28]

[22] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-SO, § A.
[23] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-4; see also Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-39.
[24] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 805(3).
[25] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 26.
[26] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.2.1.4, p. 36.
[27] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 26(1).
[28] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 57 and 58.

28. Togo's Military Manual states that "combatants must distinguish themselves from the civilian population by wearing their uniform – or a fixed distinctive sign – and by carrying their arms openly".[29]
29. The UK LOAC Manual states that "all combatants are required to distinguish themselves from the civilian population, usually by wearing uniform".[30] The manual also states that "it is customary for members of organised armed forces to wear uniform".[31]
30. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that combatants are only entitled to POW status if, inter alia, they have a fixed distinctive sign and carry arms openly.[32] It explains that the requirement of having a fixed distinctive sign "may be satisfied by wearing a uniform [and] insures that combatants are clearly distinguishable from civilians to enhance protection of civilians. Less than a complete uniform will suffice provided it serves to distinguish clearly combatants from civilians."[33] With respect to the requirement to carry arms openly, the Pamphlet considers that "irregular forces do not satisfy this requirement by carrying arms concealed about the person or if the individuals hide their weapons on the approach of the enemy".[34]
31. The US Naval Handbook states that "combatants . . . carry their arms openly, and otherwise distinguish themselves clearly from the civilian population".[35]

National Legislation
32. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Articles 44(3) and 45(3) AP I, is a punishable offence.[36]
33. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[37]

National Case-law
34. In its judgement in the Kassem case in 1969, an Israeli Military Court held that the defendants sufficiently fulfilled the requirement to distinguish themselves from the civilian population by wearing mottled caps and green

[29] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 13.
[30] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, p. 9, § 2.
[31] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, p. 8, § 1.
[32] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 3-2(b)(3); see also Field Manual (1956), § 61(a)(2).
[33] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 3-2(b)(4)(b), see also § 7-2 and Field Manual (1956), § 64(b).
[34] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 3-2(b)(4)(c); see also Field Manual (1956), § 64(c).
[35] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 5.3.
[36] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[37] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).

clothes, which were not customary attire for the inhabitants of the area in which the accused were captured.[38]

35. In the Swarka case before an Israeli Military Court in 1974, the defendants had infiltrated Israeli territory from Egypt and had launched rockets at a civilian settlement. Upon their capture, they argued that they were entitled to POW status according to Article 4(A)(1) GC III because they were regular soldiers in the Egyptian army operating under orders from their commander. The Prosecutor contended that they could not benefit from this status since they wore civilian clothes while carrying out their mission. The Court observed that, indeed, neither the Hague Regulations nor GC III provided that a member of the regular armed forces had to wear a uniform at the time of capture in order to be considered a POW. It considered, however, that it would be quite illogical to regard the duty to wear a uniform (in the sense of a distinctive sign) as imposed only on the quasi-military units referred to in Article 4(A)(2) GC III and not on soldiers of regular armed forces. The Court concluded that the defendants were to be prosecuted as saboteurs.[39]

Other National Practice

36. On the basis of an interview with a retired army general, the Report on the Practice of Botswana states that "the position of Botswana is that combatants will usually have well identifiable uniforms".[40]

37. At the CDDH, the FRG stated that "the basic rule set forth in Article 42 [now Article 44], paragraph 3, first sentence, that combatants are obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population means that these combatants have to distinguish themselves in a clearly recognizable manner".[41]

38. On the basis of interviews with senior army officers, the Report on the Practice of Indonesia states that:

> There is no national regulation for the implementation of the distinction principle in non-international armed conflict. However, in certain insurgencies during the 1950's and the 1960's, Indonesian armed forces used uniforms as one of the criteria to distinguish between rebels and civilians . . . Though the uniforms used by some rebels did not resemble the military uniform, for example, the rebels used no insignia or other emblems, their differing colour was the main criterion by which the military was able to distinguish them from civilians.[42]

39. At the CCDH, Italy stated that draft Article 42(3) AP I (now Article 44(3)) "embodied and reaffirmed without amendment or derogation a basic rule of existing international law, the need for combatants to distinguish themselves

[38] Israel, Military Court at Ramallah, Kassem case, Judgement, 13 April 1969.
[39] Israel, Military Court, Swarka case, Judgement, 1974.
[40] Report on the Practice of Botswana, 1998, Interview with a retired army general, Chapter 1.1.
[41] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 136.
[42] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Interviews with senior army officers, Chapter 1.1, note 2.

from the civilian population". It added that "it was essential that the distinction principle should remain the basis of international humanitarian law, because on respect for that principle depended the protection of the civilian population".[43]

40. At the CDDH, the Netherlands stated that it was convinced that "the fundamental rule of distinction between combatants and the civilian population had not been weakened by Article 42 [now Article 44]". It stressed, however, that "the article should not be construed as entitling combatants to waive that distinction".[44]

41. At the CDDH, the US voted in favour of draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) and stated that:

> The basic rule contained in the first sentence of paragraph 3 meant that throughout their military operations combatants must distinguish themselves in a clearly recognized manner. Representatives who had stated or implied that the only rule on the subject was that set forth in the second sentence of paragraph 3 were wrong.[45]

42. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support . . . the principle that combatant personnel distinguish themselves from the civilian populations while engaged in military operations".[46]

43. In 1987, the Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that:

> A fundamental premise of the Geneva Conventions has been that to earn the right to protection as military fighters, soldiers must distinguish themselves from civilians by wearing uniforms and carrying their weapons openly . . . Fighters who attempt to take advantage of civilians by hiding among them in civilian dress, with their weapons out of view, lose their claim to be treated as soldiers. The law thus attempts to encourage fighters to avoid placing civilians in unconscionable jeopardy.[47]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

44. No practice was found.

[43] Italy, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, pp. 122–123, §§ 21 and 24.

[44] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 142, § 5.

[45] US, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 150, § 44.

[46] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 425.

[47] US, Remarks of Judge Abraham D. Sofaer, Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 466.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

45. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

46. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

While engaged in combat action or in a military operation preparatory to it, combatants must distinguish themselves from the civilian population.

Members of regular and assimilated armed forces normally distinguish themselves by their uniform.

Members of other armed forces wear a fixed recognizable distinctive sign and carry their arms openly.[48]

47. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC reminded all those involved that in order "to avoid endangering the civilian population, those bearing weapons and all those who take part in violence must distinguish themselves from civilians".[49]

VI. Other Practice

48. No practice was found.

Levée en masse

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

49. Article 2 of the 1899 HR provides that:

The population of a territory which has not been occupied who, on the enemy's approach, spontaneously take up arms to resist the invading troops without having time to organize themselves in accordance with Article 1, shall be regarded as belligerents, if they respect the laws and customs of war.

50. Article 2 of the 1907 HR provides that:

The inhabitants of a territory which has not been occupied, who, on the approach of the enemy, spontaneously take up arms to resist the invading troops without having had time to organize themselves in accordance with Article 1, shall be regarded as belligerents if they carry arms openly and if they respect the laws and customs of war.

[48] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 48.

[49] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC Appeal to All Involved in Violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.

51. Article 4(A)(6) GC III grants POW status to persons taking part in a levée en masse "provided they carry arms openly and respect the laws and customs of war".

Other Instruments

52. The 1863 Lieber Code states that:

> 51. If the people of that portion of an invaded country which is not yet occupied by the enemy, or of the whole country, at the approach of a hostile army, rise, under a duly authorized levy "en masse" to resist the invader, they are now treated as public enemies, and, if captured, are prisoners of war.
> 52. No belligerent has the right to declare that he will treat every captured man in arms of a levy "en masse" as a brigand or bandit.
>
> If, however, the people of a country, or any portion of the same, already occupied by an army, rise against it, they are violators of the laws of war, and are not entitled to their protection.

53. Article 10 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration states that:

> The population of a territory which has not been occupied, who, on the approach of the enemy, spontaneously take up arms to resist the invading troops without having had time to organize themselves . . . shall be regarded as belligerents if they respect the laws and customs of war.

54. According to Article 2 of the 1880 Oxford Manual "the armed force of a State includes . . . the inhabitants of non-occupied territory, who, on the approach of the enemy, take up arms spontaneously and openly to resist the invading troops, even if they have not had time to organize themselves".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

55. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that participants in a levée en masse enjoy POW status upon capture provided they carry arms openly and respect the laws and customs of war.[50]

56. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that:

> Where the inhabitants of a country or territory spontaneously "take up arms" to resist an invader, LOAC recognises them as combatants provided they do so when there has not been time to form themselves into units and they respect LOAC. Individuals acting on their own are not entitled to combatant status nor the benefits or detriment flowing from that status.[51]

57. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that:

[50] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.002(6).
[51] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 514, see also Glossary, p. xxiv and Commanders' Guide (1994), § 612.

The population of a non-occupied territory who spontaneously take up arms to resist the invading forces without having had time to form themselves into an organised resistance movement or to join the regular armed forces are considered combatants on the condition that this population:

a. respects the laws and customs of war;
b. carries arms openly.[52]

58. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that participants in a levée en masse are recognised as combatants.[53]

59. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that:

As a general rule, civilians are considered non-combatants and cannot lawfully engage in hostilities. There is, however, an exception to this rule for inhabitants of a territory that has not been occupied by an enemy. Where they have not had time to form themselves into regular armed units, inhabitants of a non-occupied territory are lawful combatants if:

a. on the approach of the enemy they spontaneously take up arms to resist the invading forces;
b. they carry arms openly; and
c. they respect the LOAC.

This situation is referred to as a levée en masse.[54]

60. Germany's Military Manual provides that members of a levée en masse "shall be combatants. They shall carry arms openly and respect the laws and customs of war in their military operations."[55]

61. Italy's IHL Manual states that participants in a levée en masse are considered combatants provided they "carry arms openly and respect the laws and customs of war".[56]

62. According to Kenya's LOAC Manual, "participants in a levée en masse . . . are considered as combatants if: (a) they carry their arms openly [and] (b) they comply with the law of armed conflict".[57]

63. According to Madagascar's Military Manual, "participants in a levée en masse are considered as combatants if they carry arms openly and respect the law of war".[58]

64. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that participants in a levée en masse are considered as combatants if "they carry arms openly and comply with the humanitarian law of war".[59]

[52] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 20.
[53] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 35, see also pp. 20 and 143.
[54] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 3-2, § 13.
[55] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 310.
[56] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 4(c).
[57] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 8.
[58] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-SO, § A.
[59] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. III-1 and III-2.

65. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

> Civilians who take up arms on the approach of an enemy to resist the invasion of their State constitute a levée en masse and are regarded as combatants so long as they carry their arms openly and respect the laws and customs of war . . . They are not entitled to such treatment if they take up arms after their territory has been occupied, unless they are so organised as to constitute a resistance movement.[60]

66. According to Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War, "inhabitants of a territory not under occupation, who on the approach of the enemy take up arms to resist the invading forces without having had time to form themselves into regular armed units," have the right to POW status, "provided they carry arms openly and respect the Laws of War".[61]

67. Russia's Military Manual provides that participants in a levée en masse enjoy POW status upon capture provided they carry arms openly and respect IHL.[62]

68. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that participants in a levée en masse are considered combatants "if they carry arms openly and respect the law of war".[63]

69. Spain's LOAC Manual considers the population of a territory that spontaneously takes up arms against an invading army to be combatants, provided they are part of an organised force, commanded by a person responsible for the conduct of his or her subordinates, subject to an internal disciplinary system, and comply with the law of war.[64]

70. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "the civilian population does not have the right to take up arms except in the case of a levée en masse to resist an invader".[65] The manual further specifies that:

> The civilian population of a non-occupied territory which, en masse, takes up arms spontaneously at the approach of the enemy is entitled to commit acts of war, even if this population did not have time to organise itself, provided arms are carried openly and the laws and customs of war are respected.[66]

71. The UK Military Manual considers that participants in a levée en masse > are recognised as being entitled to the privileges of belligerent forces if they fulfil the last two conditions laid down for irregulars, namely, if they carry arms openly and conduct their operations in accordance with the laws and customs of war. They are exempt from the obligations of being under the command of a responsible commander and wearing a distinctive sign. The inhabitants of a territory already invaded by the enemy who rise in arms do not enjoy the privileges of belligerent

[60] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 803(2) and 806(4).
[61] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 33(f).
[62] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 13.
[63] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 24(b).
[64] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.a.(1).
[65] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 26(3).
[66] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 65.

forces and are not entitled to be treated as prisoners of war, unless they are members of organised resistance movements fulfilling the conditions set out in the P.O.W. Convention, Art. 4A(2).[67]

72. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that:

A levée en masse need not be organized, under command, or wear a distinctive sign. However, members must carry arms openly and comply with the law of armed conflict. To be a lawful levée en masse, it must be a spontaneous response by inhabitants of a territory not under occupation to an invading force. Spontaneity requires that there be no time to organize into regular armed forces.[68]

73. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that participants in a levée en masse are considered members of the armed forces if they carry arms openly and respect the law of war.[69]

National Legislation

74. No practice was found.

National Case-law

75. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

76. In 1991, a Belgian parliamentary report considered that in the case of a levée en masse, actions in defence of the territory are permitted and justified by law even if they are not ordered by a proper authority.[70]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

77. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

78. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

79. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

[67] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 97; see also LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, pp. 8–9, § 1(c).
[68] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 3-2(b)(5); see also Field Manual (1956), § 65.
[69] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 48(3).
[70] Belgium, Senate, Report, Enquête parlementaire sur l'existence en Belgique d'un réseau de renseignements clandestin international, 1990–1991 Session, Doc. 1117-4, 1 October 1991, § 24.

Inhabitants of a non-occupied territory, who on the approach of the enemy spontaneously and in mass take up arms to resist the invading forces, without having had time to form themselves into organized armed units, provided they carry arms openly and respect the law of war, are considered as combatants.[71]

VI. Other Practice

80. No practice was found.

Resistance and liberation movements

Note: Chapter 1, sections C and D, provides numerous references to the requirements for resistance movements to be considered as combatants, notably by having a distinctive sign and carrying arms openly, as provided for in Article 4(A)(2) GC III. These are not, generally, repeated here.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

81. Article 44(3) AP I provides that:

In order to promote the protection of the civilian population from the effects of hostilities, combatants are obliged to distinguish themselves from the civilian population while they are engaged in an attack or in a military operation preparatory to an attack. Recognizing, however, that there are situations in armed conflicts where, owing to the nature of the hostilities an armed combatant cannot so distinguish himself, he shall retain his status as a combatant, provided that, in such situations, he carries his arms openly:

(a) during each military engagement, and
(b) during such time as he is visible to the adversary while he is engaged in a military deployment preceding the launching of an attack in which he is to participate.

Acts which comply with the requirements of this paragraph shall not be considered as perfidious within the meaning of Article 37, paragraph 1 c).

Article 44 AP I was adopted by 73 votes in favour, one against and 21 abstentions.[72]

82. Article 45(3) AP I provides that "any person who has taken part in hostilities, who is not entitled to prisoner-of-war status and who does not benefit from more favourable treatment in accordance with the Fourth Convention shall have the right at all times to the protection of Article 75 of this Protocol". Article 45 AP I was adopted by consensus.[73]

[71] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 50.
[72] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 121.
[73] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 155.

83. Upon signature and/or ratification of AP I, Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Ireland, South Korea and UK stated that the situation described in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I could exist only in occupied territories or in armed conflicts covered by Article 4(1) AP I (wars of national liberation).[74]

84. Upon ratification of AP I, Italy and Spain stated that the situation described in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I could exist only in occupied territories.[75]

85. Upon ratification of AP I, Australia stated that, in the context of Article 44(3) AP I, the term "deployment" meant "any movement towards a place from which an attack is to be launched".[76] Similar statements were made by Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, South Korea, Netherlands, New Zealand, Spain, UK and US upon signature and/or ratification of AP I.[77]

86. Upon ratification of AP I, Australia stated that it would interpret the words "visible to the adversary" used in Article 44(3) AP I as "including visible with the aid of binoculars, or by infra-red or image intensification devices".[78]

87. Upon ratification of AP I, New Zealand stated that it would interpret the words "visible to the adversary" used in Article 44(3) AP I as including "visible with the aid of any form of surveillance, electronic or otherwise, available to help keep a member of the armed forces of the adversary under observation".[79]

Other Instruments

88. No practice was found.

[74] Australia, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 21 June 1991, § 2; Belgium, Interpretative declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 20 May 1986, § 4; Canada, Reservations and statements of understanding made upon ratification of AP I, 20 November 1990, § 6(a); France, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 11 April 2001, § 8; Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 3; Ireland, Declarations and reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 19 May 1999, § 7(a); South Korea, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 15 January 1982, § 1; UK, Declarations made upon signature of AP I, 12 December 1977, § c; UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § g.

[75] Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 3; Spain, Interpretative declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 21 April 1989, § 4.

[76] Australia, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 21 June 1991, § 2.

[77] Belgium, Interpretative declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 20 May 1986, § 4; Canada, Reservations and statements of understanding made upon ratification of AP I, 20 November 1990, § 6(b); France, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 11 April 2001, § 8; Germany, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 14 February 1991, § 3; Ireland, Declarations and reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 19 May 1999, § 7(b); Italy, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 27 February 1986, § 4; South Korea, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 15 January 1982, § 1; Netherlands, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 26 June 1987, § 3; New Zealand, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 8 February 1988, § 1; Spain, Interpretative declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 11 April 1989, § 4; UK, Declarations made upon signature of AP I, 12 December 1977, § c; UK, Reservations and declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 28 January 1998, § g; US, Declarations made upon signature of AP I, 12 December 1977, § 2.

[78] Australia, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 21 June 1991, § 2.

[79] New Zealand, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 8 February 1988, § 1.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

89. Military manuals of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Germany, Italy, Kenya, Madagascar, Netherlands, New Zealand, South Africa, Sweden and UK restate the rule contained in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I.[80]

90. According to Benin's Military Manual, combatants "distinguish themselves . . . at least by carrying arms openly".[81]

91. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that combatants must carry their arms openly "at least during every military engagement [and] as long as they are visible to the enemy while engaged in a military deployment".[82]

92. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that guerrilleros and members of resistance movements are considered combatants if they meet certain requirements, including "wearing a uniform or some form of identification recognizable from a distance [and] carrying arms openly".[83]

93. France's LOAC Manual states that:

> Members of guerrilla movements or armed groups can have combatant status . . . provided they carry arms openly during each engagement and they are subject to a hierarchical command structure and an internal disciplinary system which ensures, in particular, respect for the law of armed conflict.[84]

94. According to Hungary's Military Manual, combatants must carry their arms openly "at least during every military engagement [and] as long as they are visible to the enemy while engaged in a military deployment".[85] The manual further states that "inhabitants of occupied territory may organize resistance movements. Members are combatants if they meet the requirements of armed forces."[86]

95. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that:

> Undoubtedly, the conditions mentioned [in Article 4(A)(2) GC III] make it very difficult for non-regular forces for which, in many cases, the fulfilment of the cumulative conditions of openly bearing arms and wearing a recognizable distinctive sign may be suicidal. Still, these are the necessary conditions called for in conducting a regular war between combatant forces, without dragging the population into the conflict.
>
> In an effort to extend the protection accorded to include non-regular combatants, the Additional Protocols from 1977 drastically scaled back the conditions for [80] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 1.08(3); Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 513; Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), pp. 20–21; Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 3-2, § 16; Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 309; Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 5; Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 8; Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-SO, § A; Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-4; Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-39; New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 805(3) and (4); South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 27; Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.2.1.4; UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, p. 9, § 2.

[81] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 12.

[82] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 6.

[83] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.8.

[84] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 39.

[85] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 17.

[86] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 103.

defining a legal combatant. These protocols established that it is sufficient for an underground fighter to bear his arms openly during a military operation and for the duration that he is visible to the enemy, omitting all the other conditions. More seriously, the Protocols state that even non-compliance with the laws of war does not in itself deprive the non-regular combatant of his right to prisoner-of-war status . . . Clearly, such provisions deplete the provisions of the Geneva Convention of all substance, since we are losing sight of the primary goals for which such requirements were intended, namely the mutual observance of the laws of war and the distinction between combatants and the civilian population as well as the concealment of combatants among the civilian population.

We find then that, in effect, the Additional Protocols grant prisoner-of-war protection to any terrorist group that is organized and under the direct command of a commander in charge of his subordinates. Obviously, countries that find themselves embroiled in a struggle with terrorist groups have not adopted these provisions, which is one reason why many countries (including Israel and the U.S.) have not ratified the Additional Protocols. Claims made by terrorists before the IDF's military courts that they are entitled to prisoner-of-war status have been rejected.[87]

96. Russia's Military Manual provides that members of organised resistance movements enjoy POW status upon capture provided they fulfil the conditions set out in Article 4(A)(2) GC III.[88]

97. Spain's LOAC Manual states that guerrilleros are considered lawful combatants if "they operate in occupied territory, carry arms openly during each engagement and during any movement towards the place from which or towards which an attack is to be launched".[89]

98. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that:

Exceptionally, for example, in the case of guerrilla warfare, combatants are not obliged to wear a uniform or a distinctive sign. They are considered as members of the armed forces who have the right to prisoner-of-war status, provided they fight for a State or a liberation movement, within an organisation which has a responsible command and a disciplinary system, and provided they carry their arms openly before and during an attack.[90]

99. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that irregular forces, such as members of organised resistance movements belonging to a party to the conflict, are considered combatants if they meet certain requirements "customarily required of all combatants", including having a fixed distinctive sign recognisable at a distance and carrying arms openly.[91]

100. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that:

Civilians who during an armed attack or a military operation preparatory to an attack do not wear any distinctive sign, that is do not distinguish themselves from the [87] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), pp. 50–51.

[88] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 13.
[89] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.3.a.(1).
[90] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 26(2), see also Article 64.
[91] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 3-2(b)(3); see also Field Manual (1956), § 61(a)(2) and Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.7.

civilian population, are considered combatants and members of the armed forces, provided they carry arms openly during each military engagement as well as during such time as they are visible to the adversary preceding an attack in which they are to participate and provided they comply with the laws of war.[92]

101. Several manuals also contain interpretations of the terms used in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I, including those of Belgium, Germany, Italy, Kenya, Netherlands, New Zealand, South Africa, Sweden and UK.

102. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that:

> It would be preferable that Belgium only supports this rule on condition that it does not apply to operations on non-occupied Belgian territory. The term "military deployment" should, on the other hand, be interpreted very widely in the sense that it covers every movement towards the place from which an attack is to be launched. To be "visible" includes being able to "be observed" even at night by means of infrared rays and the notion "adversary" should be clarified.[93]

103. Germany's Military Manual limits the application of the rule contained in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I to a "situation in occupied territories and in wars of national liberation" and states that "the term 'military deployment' refers to any movement towards the point from which an attack shall be launched".[94]

104. Italy's IHL Manual states that the situation envisaged in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I does not apply to Italian territory but only to occupied territory and that the term deployment means any movement towards a place from which an attack is to be launched.[95]

105. According to Kenya's LOAC Manual, the term deployment refers to "any movement towards a place from which or where a combat action is to take place".[96]

106. The Military Manual of the Netherlands considers that the rule contained in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I applies in wars of national liberation and in occupied territories, i.e. "conflicts which are fought with guerrilla-like tactics in which it is not feasible for combatants to distinguish themselves at all times from the civilian population and to constantly carry arms openly". The manual adds that "the Netherlands, together with a number of other NATO countries, has taken the position that the term 'deployment' means any movement towards a place from which an attack is to be launched".[97]

107. New Zealand's Military Manual specifies that the situations to which the rule contained in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I applies are "special and exceptional. Many States, including New Zealand in its ratification,

[92] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 48(4).
[93] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 21.
[94] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 309.
[95] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 5.
[96] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 8.
[97] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-4.

have declared that these situations can occur only . . . during a war of self-determination conducted by a national liberation movement or in occupied territory".[98] With respect to the expression "visible to the adversary", the manual observes that:

> The text does not indicate whether they must be visible to the naked eye or whether it is sufficient for them to be seen with the aid of instruments. New Zealand's declaration on ratification provided for the term to include "the assistance of any form of surveillance, electronic or otherwise, available to help keep a member of the armed forces of the adversary under observation." While this view was shared by a number of Western States at the time of negotiation of AP I, few States have made it the subject of an understanding: Australia, indeed, takes the view that visibility without electronic aids is a more appropriate interpretation.[99]

With respect to the term "deployment", the manual states that "many States, including New Zealand on ratification [of AP I], have declared that this means any movement towards a place from which an attack is to be launched".[100]

108. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that the term "deployment" refers to "any movement towards a place from which, or where, a combat action is to take place".[101]

109. Sweden's IHL Manual provides that "the rule in Article 44:3 may only be applied by resistance units in enemy occupied or held territory or – in the case of a national liberation movement – within an area controlled by the adversary". The manual considers that part of the text contained in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I, namely the description "during the time the combatant is visible to the adversary when participating in military preparation for the launching of an attack in which he is to take part", is "very unclear, giving rise to varying interpretations".[102]

110. The UK LOAC Manual states that the "unusual combat conditions" to which the rule in the second sentence of Article 44(3) AP I applies "can only occur in occupied territory and during wars of national liberation . . . 'Deployment' in this context means any movement towards the place from which the attack is to be launched."[103]

National Legislation

111. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Articles 44(3) and 45(3) AP I, is a punishable offence.[104]

[98] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 805(3), footnote 17.
[99] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 805(4), footnote 23.
[100] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 805(4), footnote 24.
[101] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 27.
[102] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.2.1.4, p. 37.
[103] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, p. 9, §§ 3 and 5.
[104] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

112. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[105]

National Case-law

113. In its judgement in the Kassem case in 1969, an Israeli Military Court held that in order to benefit from POW status, a person must carry arms openly. The Court specified that the phrase "carrying arms openly" was not to be construed as carrying arms in places where the arms and the persons bearing them cannot be seen, nor does it refer to bearing arms during a hostile engagement. According to the Court, the fact that the defendants used their weapons during their encounter with the IDF is unimportant since no weapons were known to be in their possession until they started firing at Israeli soldiers. It was thus ruled that they did not carry arms openly.[106]

Other National Practice

114. At the CDDH, Argentina abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because "the text adopted did not guarantee the civilian population the minimum protection it needed".[107]

115. At the CDDH, Brazil voted against draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) in Committee III because "the provisions relating to identification of combatants were not sufficiently clear to ensure that the civilian population would be protected from the inevitable risks when it was not possible to identify unmistakably those engaged in military activities".[108] In the final vote in plenary session, Brazil abstained but gave no additional explanation.

116. At the CDDH, Canada abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because it "was concerned about the perhaps necessary vagueness of the language adopted in some paragraphs, but hoped that time would make the meaning more precise".[109] Canada further explained its understanding that the situations referred to in the second sentence of the third paragraph "could exist only in occupied territory; or in armed conflicts as described in Article 1, paragraph 4, of Protocol I" and that the term "military deployment" meant "any movement towards a place from which an attack was to be launched".[110]

[105] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).
[106] Israel, Military Court at Ramallah, Kassem case, Judgement, 13 April 1969.
[107] Argentina, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 124, § 33.
[108] Brazil, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XV, CDDH/III/SR.56, 22 April 1977, p. 185, § 80.
[109] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 145, § 23.
[110] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 146, § 24.

117. At the CDDH, Colombia abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because it lacked precision and did not safeguard the civilian population sufficiently.[111]

118. At the CDDH, Egypt stated that "the right to disguise was confined to the combatants of liberation movements; regular combatants were not released . . . from the obligation to wear uniform during military operations – failure to do so would be to commit an act of perfidy". It further explained that it interpreted the expression "military deployment" as meaning "the last step when the combatants were taking their firing positions just before the commencement of hostilities; a guerrilla should carry his arms openly only when within range of the natural vision of his adversary".[112]

119. At the CDDH, the FRG stated that the second sentence of draft Article 42(3) AP I (now Article 44(3)) "applies only to exceptional situations such as those occurring in occupied territories" and that the term "military deployment" means "any movement toward a place from which an attack is to be launched".[113]

120. In reply to a written question in parliament in 1977, a German Minister of State emphasised that the German delegation present during the negotiation of the Additional Protocols favoured the inclusion of a rule imposing a duty on guerrillas to carry arms openly in combat, as well as during the phase preceding an attack. According to Germany, a clear distinction between civilians and combatants was absolutely necessary, even in the context of guerrilla warfare.[114]

121. At the CDDH, Greece stated that the situations described in the second sentence of draft Article 42(3) AP I (now Article 44(3)) "which were quite exceptional, could exist not only in occupied territories but also in armed conflicts as described in paragraph 4 of Article 1 of draft Protocol I".[115]

122. At the CDDH, Iran indicated that draft Article 42(3) AP I (now Article 44(3)) "applied only to members of resistance movements fighting in occupied territory against an Occupying Power and to members of national liberation movements fighting against minority racialist régimes".[116]

123. At the CDDH, Ireland abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because it considered that "the protection of the civilian population

[111] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 181.

[112] Egypt, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 145, §§ 19 and 21.

[113] FRG, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 136.

[114] Germany, Lower House of Parliament, Answer by Dr. Hamm-Brücher, Minister of State, to a written question, 13 May 1977, Plenarprotokoll 8/27, 13 May 1977, p. 1985.

[115] Greece, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 127, § 47.

[116] Iran, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 152, § 55.

demanded by humanitarian principles is eroded by Article 42 to an unacceptable extent".[117]

124. At the CDDH, Israel voted against draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because it was of the opinion that:

> Article 42, paragraph 3, could be interpreted as allowing the combatant not to distinguish himself from the civilian population, which would expose the latter to serious risks and was contrary to the spirit and to a fundamental principle of humanitarian law. In the case of guerrilla warfare it was particularly necessary for combatants to distinguish themselves because that was the only way in which the civilian population could be effectively protected ... Moreover, once combatants were freed from the obligation to distinguish themselves from the civilian population the risk of terrorist acts increased ... Prisoner-of-war status depended on two essential conditions: first, respect for the rules of international law applicable in armed conflicts (for the members of regular forces there was a praesumptio juris et de jure that that condition had been met); secondly, a clear and unmistakable distinction between the combatants and the civilian population. They were two sine qua non conditions established in international custom and in numerous treaties.[118]

125. The Report on the Practice of Israel states that Israel does not consider that Article 44(3) AP I reflects customary international law.[119]

126. At the CDDH, Italy abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) "essentially because of the ambiguity of paragraphs 3 and 4 of Article 42, but considered that the article was not unacceptable in itself if its true meaning ... could be detected".[120] Italy further stated that the particular situations to which the second sentence of the third paragraph referred "were evidently those which occurred in occupied territory or in other identical situations so far as substance was concerned, that was to say where resistance movements were organized".[121]

127. At the CDDH, Japan abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because it considered that "the provisions of paragraph 3 on the ways in which members of irregular forces were required to distinguish themselves from civilians would lead to inadequate protection of the civilian population".[122] It further stated that paragraph 3 should be construed "as applying restrictively to exceptional cases" and that the term "military deployment" used in paragraph 3(b) meant "any movement towards a place from which an attack was to be launched".[123]

[117] Ireland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 137.
[118] Israel, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, pp. 121–122, §§ 17 and 19.
[119] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1997, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 1.1.
[120] Italy, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 122, § 20.
[121] Italy, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 123, § 22.
[122] Japan, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 152, § 51.
[123] Japan, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 152, § 53.

128. At the CDDH, the Netherlands stated that it understood the phrase "military deployment" in paragraph 3(b) of draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) to mean "any tactical movement towards a place from which the attack is to be launched".[124]

129. At the CDDH, Portugal abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) and considered that "the exceptional rule in the second sentence of the [third] paragraph did not ensure reasonable protection for the civilian population".[125]

130. At the CDDH, Spain abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because:

> The text presented does not guarantee the safety of the civilian population, which is the essential aim of the instruments under consideration. In the view of this delegation, the terms in which the article is drafted could favour the development of the new phenomenon known as urban guerrilla warfare and, therefore, a certain form of terrorism, thus constituting a grave danger to the security of States and a step on the road to international subversion.[126]

131. At the CDDH, Switzerland abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) because it was afraid that "the article would only have the effect of doing away with the distinctions between combatants and civilians. The consequence would be that the adverse party could take draconian measures against civilians suspected of being combatants."[127]

132. At the CDDH, the UAE stated that it agreed with the interpretation given by Egypt of the expression "military deployment".[128]

133. At the CDDH, the UK abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) and stated that "any failure to distinguish between combatants and civilians could only put the latter at risk. That risk might well become unacceptable unless a satisfactory interpretation could be given to certain provisions of Article 42."[129] The UK further stated that it considered that "the situations in which a guerrilla fighter was unable to distinguish himself from the civilian population could exist only in occupied territory" and that the word "deployment" must be interpreted as meaning "any movement towards a place from which an attack was to be launched".[130]

134. At the CDDH, Uruguay abstained in the vote on draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) and referred to the statements made by Argentina and Switzerland

[124] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 142, § 6.
[125] Portugal, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 148, § 36.
[126] Spain, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.55, 26 May 1977, p. 138.
[127] Switzerland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 131, § 68.
[128] UAE, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 146, § 25.
[129] UK, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 132, § 73.
[130] UK, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, p. 132, § 74.

and to its own statement in Committee III in which it had expressed its concern about "the foreseeable consequences of the lack of a clear distinction between the combatants and the civilian population, which would expose the civilian population to a quite unnecessary risk".[131]

135. At the CDDH, the US explained its vote in favour of draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) as follows:

> The article conferred no protection on terrorists. It did not authorize soldiers to conduct military operations while disguised as civilians. However, it did give members of the armed forces who were operating in occupied territory an incentive to distinguish themselves from the civilian population when preparing for and carrying out an attack . . . As regards the second sentence of paragraph 3, it was the understanding of [the US] delegation that situations in which combatants could not distinguish themselves throughout their military operations could exist only in the exceptional circumstances of territory occupied by the adversary or in those armed conflicts described in Article 1, paragraph 4, of draft Protocol I . . . The sentence was clearly designed to ensure that combatants, while engaged in military operations preparatory to an attack, could not use their failure to distinguish themselves from civilians as an element of surprise in the attack. Combatants using their appearance as civilians in such circumstances in order to aid in the attack would forfeit their status as combatants . . . Combatants must distinguish themselves from civilians during the phase of the military operation which involved moving to the position from which the attack was to be launched.[132]

136. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "the executive branch regards [the provision of Article 44(3) AP I, second sentence] as highly undesirable and potentially dangerous to the civilian population and of course does not recognize it as customary law or deserving of such status".[133]

137. In a memorandum issued in 1988, the Office of the Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that:

> Article 44 grants combatant status to irregular forces in certain circumstances even if they do not satisfy the traditional requirements to distinguish themselves from the civilian population and otherwise comply with the existing laws of war. This was not acceptable as a new norm of international law. It clearly does not reflect customary law.[134]

[131] Uruguay, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 144, § 18; Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XV, CDDH/III/SR.55, 22 April 1977, p. 160, § 32.

[132] US, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, pp. 149–150, § 43.

[133] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 425.

[134] US, Memorandum prepared by the Office of the Legal Adviser of the Department of State, 29 March 1988, reprinted in Marian Nash (Leich), Cumulative Digest of United States Practice

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

138. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

139. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

140. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

In situations where, owing to the nature of hostilities an armed combatant cannot distinguish himself, he keeps his status as a combatant if he carries his arms openly:

a) during every military engagement;
b) as long as he is visible to the enemy while he is engaged in a military deployment, that is in any movement towards a place from which or where a combat action is to take place.[135]

VI. Other Practice

141. At the CDDH, the PLO stated that the phrase "during such time as he is visible to the adversary" used in paragraph 3 of draft Article 42 AP I (now Article 44) must be interpreted as meaning "visible to the naked eye" and that the phrase "while he is engaged in a military deployment preceding the launching of an attack" could only mean "immediately before the attack, often coinciding with the actual beginning of the attack".[136]

B. Spies

Definition of spies

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

142. Article 29 of the 1899 HR provides that:

An individual can only be considered a spy if, acting clandestinely, or on false pretences, he obtains, or seeks to obtain information in the zone of operations of a belligerent, with the intention of communicating it to the hostile party.

in International Law, 1981–1988, Department of State Publication 10120, Washington, D.C., 1993–1995, p. 3441.

135 Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 49.

136 PLO, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.40, 26 May 1977, pp. 147–148, § 31.

Thus, soldiers not in disguise who have penetrated into the zone of operations of a hostile army to obtain information are not considered spies. Similarly, the following are not considered spies: soldiers or civilians, carrying out their mission openly, charged with the delivery of despatches destined either for their own army or for that of the enemy. To this class belong likewise individuals sent in balloons to deliver despatches, and generally to maintain communication between the various parts of an army or a territory.

143. Article 29 of the 1907 HR provides that:

A person can only be considered a spy when, acting clandestinely or on false pretences, he obtains or endeavours to obtain information in the zone of operations of a belligerent, with the intention of communicating it to the hostile party.

Thus, soldiers not wearing a disguise who have penetrated into the zone of operations of the hostile army, for the purpose of obtaining information, are not considered spies. Similarly, the following are not considered spies: Soldiers and civilians, carrying out their mission openly, entrusted with the delivery of despatches intended either for their own army or for the enemy's army. To this class belong likewise persons sent in balloons for the purpose of carrying despatches and, generally, of maintaining communications between the different parts of an army or a territory.

144. Article 46(2) AP I provides that:

A member of the armed forces of a Party to the conflict who, on behalf of that Party and in territory controlled by an adverse Party, gathers or attempts to gather information shall not be considered as engaging in espionage if, while so acting, he is in the uniform of his armed forces.

Article 46 AP I was adopted by consensus.[137]

Other Instruments

145. Article 88 of the 1863 Lieber Code states that "a spy is a person who secretly, in disguise or under false pretense, seeks information with the intention of communicating it to the enemy".

146. Article 19 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration provides that "a person can only be considered a spy when acting clandestinely or on false pretenses he obtains or endeavours to obtain information in the districts occupied by the enemy, with the intention of communicating it to the hostile party".

147. Article 22 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration provides that "soldiers not wearing a disguise who have penetrated into the zone of operations of the hostile army, for the purpose of obtaining information, are not considered spies".

148. Article 24 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "individuals may not be regarded as spies, who, belonging to the armed force of either belligerent, have penetrated, without disguise, into the zone of operations of the enemy".

[137] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.39, 25 May 1977, p. 111.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

149. Argentina's Law of War Manual defines spies with reference to Article 29 of the 1907 HR and considers that this definition implies that members of the armed forces who wear their uniform while gathering information are not considered to be spies.[138]

150. Australia's Commanders' Guide defines spies as "combatants who conduct covert espionage operations in enemy occupied territory, while not in uniform".[139]

151. Australia's Defence Force Manual defines espionage as "the clandestine collection of information behind enemy lines or in the area of operations with the intention of communicating that information to a hostile party to the conflict".[140]

152. Belgium's Law of War Manual defines a spy as:

> an individual who gathers or attempts to gather, clandestinely or on false pretences, information in the zone of operations of a belligerent with the intention of communicating it to the adverse party. The "zone of operations" comprises zones where no land operations are taking place but which may be hit by aerial bombardment (including bombardment by long-range missiles). This interpretation is very wide. Neutral territory on which a spy may operate cannot, however, be considered as a "zone of operations".[141]

153. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "spying is to be distinguished from military intelligence. The latter is legal while the former is vigorously condemned in all national and international jurisdictions. Spying is an unlawful search for information."[142]

154. Canada's LOAC Manual defines espionage as "the collection of information clandestinely behind enemy lines or in the zone of operations while wearing civilian clothing or otherwise disguised or concealed. Spies are those who engage in espionage."[143] The manual specifies that "members of the armed forces of a party to the conflict who gather or attempt to gather information while wearing the uniform of their armed forces will not be considered as engaging in espionage".[144] (emphasis in original)

155. Ecuador's Naval Manual defines a spy as:

> someone who, while in territory under enemy control or the zone of operations of a belligerent force, seeks to obtain information while operating under a false claim of non-combatant or friendly forces status with the intention of passing that

[138] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 1.09(1); see also Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.009(1).
[139] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 707, see also § 913.
[140] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 717.
[141] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 21.
[142] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), pp. 36 and 60.
[143] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 6-3, § 23.
[144] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 3-4, § 33.

information to an opposing belligerent. Members of the armed forces who penetrate enemy-held territory in civilian attire or enemy uniform to collect intelligence are spies. Conversely, personnel conducting reconnaissance missions behind enemy lines while properly uniformed are not spies.[145]

156. France's LOAC Manual defines spies with reference to Article 29 of the 1907 HR.[146]

157. Germany's Military Manual defines spies as "persons who clandestinely or on false pretences, i.e. not wearing the uniform of their armed forces, gather information in the territory controlled by the adversary".[147]

158. Kenya's LOAC Manual defines spies as:

> persons who, acting clandestinely or on false pretences, gather information in the territory of a belligerent party with the intent of communicating it to the enemy . . . If members of the armed forces gather intelligence in occupied territory, they may not be treated as spies provided they are in uniform.[148]

159. The Military Manual of the Netherlands defines spies with reference to Article 29 of the 1907 HR and states that this definition implies that combatants gathering information in uniform are not considered as spies.[149]

160. New Zealand's Military Manual defines spies as "people, wearing civilian clothing or otherwise disguised, who collect information clandestinely behind enemy lines or in the zone of operations with the intention of communicating that information to a hostile Party".[150]

161. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War states that:

> Soldiers or civilians acting clandestinely or on false pretences to obtain information about a belligerent with the intention to communicate it to his enemy are engaged in espionage . . . Soldiers wearing their uniform when penetrating the enemy zone of operations are not spies and if captured, should be treated as prisoners of war.[151]

162. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that espionage "entails acting clandestinely in order to obtain information for transmission back to one's own side".[152]

163. Spain's LOAC Manual states that "a member of the armed forces who gathers information is not considered to be engaged in espionage if that person is wearing regular uniform or is a resident in an occupied territory and is collecting information in that territory on behalf of the occupied power".[153]

145 Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 12.8.
146 France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 64.
147 Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 321.
148 Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 9.
149 Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-5.
150 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 506(2).
151 Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 31.
152 South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(d).
153 Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.4.a.

164. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual defines a spy as "an individual who, acting clandestinely or on false pretences, gathers or attempts to gather information in the zone of operation of a belligerent with the intention of communicating it to the adverse party".[154]

165. The UK LOAC Manual defines spies as "persons who, acting clandestinely or on false pretences, gather information in the territory of a belligerent with intent to communicate it to the enemy".[155]

166. The US Naval Handbook defines a spy as:

> someone who, while in territory under enemy control or the zone of operations of a belligerent force, seeks to obtain information while operating under a false claim of noncombatant or friendly forces status with the intention of passing that information to an opposing belligerent. Members of the armed forces who penetrate enemy-held territory in civilian attire or enemy uniform to collect intelligence are spies. Conversely, personnel conducting reconnaissance missions behind enemy lines while properly uniformed are not spies.[156]

167. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides a definition of spies similar to that contained in Article 29 of the 1907 HR.[157]

National Legislation

168. Chile's Code of Military Justice defines a spy as:

> 1) anyone who surreptitiously or with the aid of a disguise or a false name, or by concealing his status or nationality, introduces himself in time of war and without justified aim in a war zone, a military post or among troops in the field; 2) anyone who conveys communications, messages or sealed documents from the enemy without being compelled to do so, or who being so compelled does not hand them over to the national authorities; 3) anyone who engages in reconnaissance, draws up plans or makes sketches of the terrain; 4) anyone who conceals, causes to be concealed or places in a safe place a person whom he knows to be an enemy spy, agent or member of the military.

The Code also provides that "enemy soldiers who, wearing their uniforms, openly enter the national territory for, inter alia, the purpose of engaging in reconnaissance of the terrain or observing troop movements" shall not be considered as spies but shall be subject to the rules of war as laid down by international law.[158]

169. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended defines a spy as someone who has penetrated a defended place or troops in the field with the aim of collecting useful information and communicating it to the enemy.[159]

[154] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 42.
[155] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, p. 9, § 6.
[156] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 12.8.
[157] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 109.
[158] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Articles 252–253.
[159] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Articles 206–207.

170. A publication on Philippine military law states that:

A spy is a person who, without authority and secretly, or under a false pretext, contrives to enter within the lines of an army for the purpose of obtaining material information and communicating it to the enemy; or one who, being by authority within the lines, attempts secretly to accomplish such purpose.[160]

National Case-law
171. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
172. No practice was found.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

173. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

174. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

175. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

176. No practice was found.

Status of spies

Note: For practice concerning summary execution of spies, see Chapter 32, section M.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
177. Article 30 of the 1899 HR provides that "a spy taken in the act cannot be punished without previous trial". Article 31 specifies that "a spy who, after rejoining the army to which he belongs, is subsequently captured by the enemy, is treated as a prisoner of war, and incurs no responsibility for his previous acts of espionage."

[160] Claro C. Gloria, Philippine Military Law, Capitol Publishing House, Quezon City, 1956, p. 263.

178. Article 30 of the 1907 HR provides that "a spy taken in the act shall not be punished without previous trial". Article 31 specifies that "a spy who, after rejoining the army to which he belongs, is subsequently captured by the enemy, is treated as a prisoner of war, and incurs no responsibility for his previous acts of espionage".
179. Article 46(1) AP I provides that:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of the Conventions or of this Protocol, any member of the armed forces of a Party to the conflict who falls into the power of an adverse Party while engaging in espionage shall not have the right to the status of prisoner of war and may be treated as a spy.

Article 46 AP I was adopted by consensus.[161]
180. Article 45(3) AP I provides that "any person who has taken part in hostilities, who is not entitled to prisoner-of-war status and who does not benefit from more favourable treatment in accordance with the Fourth Convention shall have the right at all times to the protection of Article 75 of this Protocol". Article 45 AP I was adopted by consensus.[162]

Other Instruments
181. Article 88 of the 1863 Lieber Code states that "the spy is punishable with death by hanging by the neck, whether or not he succeeded in obtaining information or in conveying it to the enemy".
182. Article 20 of the 1874 Brussels Declaration states that "a spy taken in the act shall be tried and treated according to the laws in force in the army which captures him". Article 21 adds that "a spy who rejoins the army to which he belongs and who is subsequently captured by the enemy is treated as a prisoner of war and incurs no responsibility for his previous acts".
183. Article 23 of the 1880 Oxford Manual states that "individuals captured as spies cannot demand to be treated as prisoners of war".
184. Article 25 of the 1880 Oxford Manual states that "in order to avoid the abuses to which accusations of espionage too often give rise in war, it is important to assert emphatically that no person charged with espionage shall be punished until the judicial authority shall have pronounced judgment".
185. Article 26 of the 1880 Oxford Manual states that "a spy who succeeds in quitting the territory occupied by the enemy incurs no responsibility for his previous acts, should he afterwards fall into the hands of that enemy".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
186. Argentina's Law of War Manual cites Articles 29–31 of the 1907 HR.[163]

[161] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.39, 25 May 1977, p. 111.
[162] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 155.
[163] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 2.009.

187. Australia's Commanders' Guide states that:

The most notable exception to granting of PW status to enemy military personnel is to those individuals who are classified as spies . . . Such individuals are not entitled to PW status and may be tried as common criminals under the detaining power's criminal code. It is important to note, however, that if military clothing is worn during such operations, the perpetrators are lawful combatants and are entitled to PW status.[164]

188. Belgium's Law of War Manual states that:

Spying is not contrary to the law of war and, as a result, does not constitute a war crime. Most countries provide, however, that spying is a crime [under domestic law] in order to protect their national interests and the interests of their armed forces. A person who is caught spying for the enemy is liable to punishment, but only after being tried . . . In general, civilians act as spies. This activity, by itself, does not give them the status of combatant . . . Members of the armed forces who perform spying missions in the zone of operations will be treated, if captured, either as prisoners of war or as spies, depending on whether they accomplished their mission wearing their uniform or disguised as civilians wearing civilian clothes.[165]

189. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that:

Members of the Armed Forces in organised units, francs-tireurs detached from their regular units, commando detachments and isolated saboteurs, as well as voluntary militias, self-defence groups and organised resistance formations are lawful combatants on condition that those units, organisations or formations have a designated commander, that their members wear a distinctive sign, notably on their clothing, that they carry arms openly and that they respect the laws and customs of war. These combatants must be considered prisoners of war. Anyone who does not comply with these conditions may be considered a spy subject to the applicable criminal sanctions.[166]

190. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that a combatant caught spying "loses his status as a prisoner of war".[167]

191. Canada's LOAC Manual states that:

Members of the armed forces engaging in espionage while not in uniform may be treated as spies and lose their entitlement to PW status if they are captured before rejoining the armed forces to which they belong. Spies who are not in uniform are not lawful combatants. If they engage in hostilities, they may be punished for doing so but only after a fair trial affording all judicial guarantees.[168] [emphasis in original]

192. Croatia's LOAC Compendium states that:

The Occupying Power may impose the death penalty only on inhabitants guilty of espionage, sabotage [and] intentional offences having caused death. However, such [164] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 707, see also §§ 511 and 913–914 and Defence Force Manual (1994), § 717.

[165] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), pp. 21–22.
[166] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 30.
[167] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 89, see also pp. 36, 60, 77 and 143.
[168] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 3-4, §§ 34 and 35, see also p. 6-3, §§ 23 and 24.

offences must have been punishable by death under the law in force in occupied territory before occupation.[169]

193. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that "search for information in uniform or without disguise concealing combatant status is legitimate. Spies may be used but they do not have the right to prisoner-of-war status."[170]

194. According to Ecuador's Naval Manual,

Spying during armed conflict is not a violation of international law. Captured spies are not, however, entitled to prisoner-of-war status. The captor nation may try and punish spies in accordance with its national law. Should a spy succeed in eluding capture and return to friendly territory, liability to punishment terminates. If subsequently captured during some other military operation, the former spy cannot be tried or punished for the earlier act of espionage.[171]

195. France's LOAC Teaching Note states that "spies . . . are not combatants and have no right to prisoner-of-war status".[172]

196. France's LOAC Manual states that "a spy has no right to prisoner-of-war status and is subject to the national legislation of the territory where he is captured".[173]

197. Germany's Military Manual states that:

Even if they are members of their armed forces, [spies] do not have the right to the status of prisoner of war. Persons who fall into the hands of the adversary while engaging in espionage shall be liable to punishment. Even if taken while engaging in espionage, a spy shall not be punished without prior conviction pursuant to regular judicial proceedings.[174]

198. Hungary's Military Manual states that:

The Occupying Power may impose the death penalty only on inhabitants guilty of espionage, sabotage [and] intentional offences having caused death. However, such offences must have been punishable by death under the law in force in occupied territory before occupation.[175]

199. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that:

The spy does not meet the conditions required of a legal combatant (since he is assimilated in the civilian population) and thus is not entitled to the prisoner-of-war's immunity against being tried. Therefore, a state that captures a spy is allowed to bring him to trial in accordance with its own internal laws, an offense that is generally punishable by a long prison sentence or even death . . . A spy who

[169] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 65.
[170] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 31.
[171] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 12.8.1.
[172] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 2.
[173] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 64, see also p. 40.
[174] Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 321–322.
[175] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 101.

has succeeded in completing his mission and returning to his army is once again entitled to legal combatant status.[176]

200. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that "search for information in uniform or without disguise concealing combatant status is legitimate. Spies may be used but they do not have the right to prisoner-of-war treatment."[177]

201. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that:

Those captured while engaged in espionage do not have POW status but may not be punished without trial . . . Members of the armed forces who were involved in spying cease to be spies as soon as they return to their own lines. If subsequently captured, they cannot be punished for their previous spying activities.[178]

202. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "the search for information in uniform or without disguise concealing combatant status is legitimate. Spies may be used but they do not have the right to prisoner-of-war status."[179]

203. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that:

A member of the armed forces who falls into the hands of the adversary while engaged in espionage has no entitlement to the status of prisoner of war; he can be treated as a spy . . . Military spies, who rejoin their forces after having accomplished their task and are subsequently captured, must be treated as prisoners of war and no longer be convicted for their earlier spying activities . . . A spy caught in the act may under no circumstances be sentenced without trial.[180]

204. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

Although spying is not contrary to the law of armed conflict, international law provides that spies, if captured, may be tried in accordance with the law of the captor and may be liable to the death penalty. To punish them without a proper trial is, however, a war crime. The collection of information by persons wearing uniform is a permitted means of conflict and a person so engaged is liable to be fired upon as is any other member of the enemy forces. If captured, such a person is to be treated as a prisoner of war.[181]

The manual adds that:

Persons who have evaded capture when carrying out acts of espionage and who have rejoined their own forces or own national authority cannot be charged with such acts if subsequently captured; if they are members of armed forces they must be treated as prisoners of war.[182]

[176] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 59.
[177] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 31.
[178] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 9.
[179] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 5-O, § 31.
[180] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), pp. III-5 and III-6.
[181] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 506(2) and (3).
[182] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 506(4).

205. Nigeria's Military Manual states that "spies . . . are however not to be considered as prisoner of war".[183]

206. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War states that:

For the purpose of waging war it is necessary to obtain information about the enemy. To get such information, it is lawful to employ spies and use soldiers and civilians of the enemy for committing acts of treason. But although this practice by the states is considered legitimate, lawful punishment under the municipal law may be imposed upon individuals engaged in espionage or treason when they are caught by the enemy . . . Soldiers wearing their uniform when penetrating the enemy zone of operations are not spies and if captured, should be treated as prisoners of war. When a spy is apprehended, he should not be punished without a fair regular trial. A spy who succeeds to rejoin his armed forces and is subsequently captured by the enemy is not liable to be punished for his previous acts of espionage. Such immunity is not accorded to a civilian spy captured by the enemy after reaching his own territory.[184]

207. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that espionage "is not a violation of the law of war but there is no protection under the Geneva Conventions in respect of acts of espionage".[185]

208. Spain's LOAC Manual states that spies are not entitled to POW status.[186]

209. According to Sweden's IHL Manual, "spies . . . are not entitled to combatant or prisoner-of-war status".[187]

210. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that:

International law applicable in armed conflict does not prohibit the use of spies and secret agents, who can even be soldiers or civilians of enemy nationality. Nevertheless, upon their capture or arrest, these persons are liable to be sentenced severely, according to the domestic law of the State concerned . . . A spy who is caught in the act may not be sentenced without previous judgement.[188]

211. The UK Military Manual states that "regular members of the armed forces who are caught as spies are not entitled to be treated as prisoners of war. But they would appear to be entitled, as a minimum, to the limited privileges conferred upon civilian spies or saboteurs by [Article 5 GC IV]."[189]

212. The UK LOAC Manual provides that:

Those captured while engaged in espionage do not have PW status but may not be punished without trial. If members of the armed forces gather intelligence in occupied territory they may not be treated as spies provided that they are in uniform. Even if not in uniform, members of the armed forces who were involved in spying

[183] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 8, § 9(c)(2).
[184] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 31.
[185] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 34(d).
[186] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.4.
[187] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 3.2.1.4, p. 36.
[188] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 41(2) and 43.
[189] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 96.

cease to be spies as soon as they return to their own lines. If subsequently captured they cannot be punished for their previous spying activities.[190]

213. The US Naval Handbook states that:

Spying during armed conflict is not a violation of international law. Captured spies are not, however, entitled to prisoner-of-war status. The captor nation may try and punish spies in accordance with its national law. Should a spy succeed in eluding capture and return to friendly territory, liability to punishment terminates. If subsequently captured during some other military operation, the former spy cannot be tried or punished for the earlier act of espionage.[191]

214. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) states that spies caught in the act cannot be punished without previous trial, but spies who rejoin their army and are subsequently caught must be treated as POWs and incur no responsibility for their previous acts of espionage.[192]

National Legislation

215. Chile's Code of Military Justice states that spies can be sentenced to life imprisonment or death.[193]

216. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 45(3) AP I, is a punishable offence.[194]

217. Referring to Malaysia's Armed Forces Act, the Report on the Practice of Malaysia states that the use of spies is unlawful in Malaysia. The report adds that there is no statutory definition of "spy", but it nevertheless considers that it is an offence for any person subject to service law in Malaysia to assist the enemy, communicate with it or share intelligence with it and that the Official Secrets Act and Armed Forces Act provide a penalty for spying.[195]

218. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended provides that spies will be punished by death. Once spies have returned to their own troops and are then arrested, they cannot be punished as spies, but have to be treated as POWs.[196]

219. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[197]

[190] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, pp. 9–10, § 6.
[191] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 12.8.1.
[192] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), §§ 111–112.
[193] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Articles 252–253.
[194] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[195] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 1.1, referring to Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 41 and Official Secrets Act (1972), Sections 2–3.
[196] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Articles 206–207.
[197] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).

220. A publication on Philippine military law states that:

> Any person who in time of war shall be found lurking or acting as a spy in or about any of the fortifications, posts, quarters, or encampments of the Armed Forces of the Philippines or elsewhere, shall be tried by a general court-martial or by a military commission, and shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.[198]

221. Spain's Military Criminal Code provides that non-combatants involved in military espionage are subject to punishment and do not benefit from POW status.[199]

National Case-law

222. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

223. The Report on the Practice of Botswana maintains that spies are not protected.[200]

224. The Report on the Practice of Jordan notes that while there is no definition of the concept of spies in domestic law nor any provision concerning their status, interviews with military officers confirmed that spies are put on trial in Jordan.[201]

225. According to the legal adviser of the South Korean Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a captured spy who is a member of enemy armed forces cannot be deemed a POW and may be punished under national law.[202]

226. On the basis of replies by army officers to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Rwanda affirms that spies are not considered as civilians. The report therefore concludes that spies are liable to attack.[203]

227. According to the Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, "spies and mercenaries are likely to be regarded as combatants in Zimbabwe for purposes of being military targets. They are, however, unlikely to be afforded POW status and related protection if captured."[204]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

228. No practice was found.

198 Claro C. Gloria, Philippine Military Law, Capitol Publishing House, Quezon City, 1956, p. 263.
199 Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Articles 52 and 57.
200 Report on the Practice of Botswana, 1998, Chapter 1.1.
201 Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Interviews with military officers, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 1.1.
202 South Korea, Opinion of a legal adviser of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs concerning the North Korean Submarine Infiltration Case, September 1996, Report on the Practice of South Korea, 1997, Chapter 1.1.
203 Report on the Practice of Rwanda, 1997, Replies by army officers to a questionnaire, Chapter 1.1.
204 Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 1.1.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

229. In its admissibility decision in Treholt v. Norway in 1991, the ECiHR held that the special character of espionage meant that there was a need for additional security measures and surveillance in relation to persons suspected of spying. The Commission stated that while these increased security measures were permitted, they might not extend to interference with the fundamental rights of a detainee.[205]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

230. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

231. No practice was found.

C. Mercenaries

Definition of mercenaries

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

232. Mercenaries are defined by Article 47(2) AP I as any person who:

a) is specially recruited locally or abroad in order to fight in an armed conflict;
b) does, in fact, take a direct part in the hostilities;
c) is motivated to take part in the hostilities essentially by the desire for private gain and, in fact, is promised by or on behalf of a Party to the conflict, material compensation substantially in excess of that promised or paid to combatants of similar ranks and functions in the armed forces of that Party;
d) is neither a national of a party to the conflict nor a resident of territory controlled by a Party to the conflict;
e) is not a member of the armed forces of a Party to the conflict; and
f) has not been sent by a State which is not a Party to the conflict on official duty as a member of its armed forces.

Article 47 AP I was adopted by consensus.[206]

233. In an interpretative declaration made upon accession to AP I, Algeria reserved judgement on the definition of mercenarism as set out in Article 47(2) AP I, which it deemed "restrictive".[207]

[205] ECiHR, Treholt v. Norway, Admissibility Decision, 9 July 1991, pp. 192 and 194.
[206] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 156.
[207] Algeria, Interpretative declarations made upon accession to AP I, 16 August 1989, § 3.

234. Article 1 of the 1977 OAU Convention against Mercenarism defines a mercenary as:

Any person who:
a) is specially recruited locally or abroad in order to fight in an armed conflict;
b) does in fact take a direct part in the hostilities;
c) is motivated to take part in the hostilities essentially by the desire for private gain and in fact is promised by or on behalf of a party to the conflict material compensation;
d) is neither a national of a party to the conflict nor a resident of territory controlled by a party to the conflict;
e) is not a member of the armed forces of a party to the conflict; and
f) is not sent by a state other than a party to the conflict on official mission as a member of the armed forces of the said state.

235. Article 1 of the 1989 UN Mercenary Convention defines a mercenary as:

1. Any person who:
   (a) is specially recruited locally or abroad in order to fight in an armed conflict;
   (b) is motivated to take part in the hostilities essentially by the desire for private gain and, in fact, is promised, by or on behalf of a party to the conflict, material compensation substantially in excess of that promised or paid to combatants of similar rank and functions in the armed forces of that party;
   (c) is neither a national of a party to the conflict nor a resident of territory controlled by a party to the conflict;
   (d) is not a member of the armed forces of a party to the conflict; and
   (e) has not been sent by a State which is not a party to the conflict on official duty as a member of its armed forces.
2. A mercenary is also any person who, in any other situation:
   (a) is specially recruited locally or abroad for the purpose of participating in a concerted act of violence aimed at:
      (i) overthrowing a Government or otherwise undermining the constitutional order of a State; or
      (ii) undermining the territorial integrity of a State;
   (b) is motivated to take part therein essentially by the desire for significant private gain and is prompted by the promise or payment of material compensation;
   (c) is neither a national nor a resident of the State against which such an act is directed;
   (d) has not been sent by a State on official duty; and
   (e) is not a member of the armed forces of the State on whose territory the act is undertaken.

Other Instruments

236. Article 23(2) of the 1991 ILC Draft Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind defines a mercenary as any individual who:

(a) is specially recruited locally or abroad in order to fight in an armed conflict;
(b) is motivated to take part in the hostilities essentially by the desire for private gain and, in fact, is promised, by or on behalf of a party to the conflict, material compensation substantially in excess of that promised or paid to combatants of similar rank and functions in the armed forces of that party;
(c) is neither a national of a party to the conflict nor a resident of territory controlled by a party to the conflict;
(d) is not a member of the armed forces of a party to the conflict; and
(e) has not been sent by a State which is not a party to the conflict on official duty as a member of its armed forces.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

237. Military manuals of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Netherlands, New Zealand, Spain and SFRY (FRY) contain a definition of mercenaries that is identical to the one provided by Article 47(2) AP I.[208]

238. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual defines mercenaries as "persons who are specially recruited at home or abroad to fight for pay during an armed conflict".[209]

239. Germany's Military Manual defines mercenaries as "any person who is motivated to take a direct part in the hostilities by the desire for private gain without being a national or a member of the armed forces of a party to the conflict (Art. 47 AP I). In addition, the provisions of the 1989 Mercenary Convention apply."[210]

240. Kenya's LOAC Manual defines a mercenary as "a person who takes part in the conflict for private gain, who is not a member of any organized armed forces of a Party to the conflict and has not been sent on official duty by a country not involved in the conflict".[211]

241. The UK LOAC Manual states that "a mercenary is a person who takes part in the conflict for private gain, who is not a member of any organised armed forces and has no connection with the countries involved in the conflict".[212]

242. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that:

Until recently, there was no generally accepted definition of a "mercenary," but the term was usually applied to foreigners who took part in an armed conflict on one side or the other, primarily for high pay or hope of booty . . . The definition of [208] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 1.09(2); Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), Glossary; Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), Glossary, p. xxiii; Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 23; Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 3-4, § 30; France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 81; Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-6; New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 807; Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.4.b; SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 113.

[209] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), pp. 36 and 60.
[210] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 303.
[211] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 9.
[212] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, p. 10, § 7.

"mercenary" in [AP I] is so narrow that few persons would fit within it. The United States has signed this Protocol but has not yet ratified it.[213]

National Legislation

243. Armenia's Penal Code defines a mercenary as:

a person who is specially recruited, who acts in exchange for financial remuneration, who is neither a national of a party to the armed conflict or the military operations, nor its permanent resident, who is not a member of the armed forces of a party to the conflict, and who is not sent by another State to carry out official duties within the armed forces.[214]

244. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code defines a mercenary as "a person not being a citizen of a State party to an armed conflict or hostilities, not having permanent residence on the territory of the State, as well as not being sent to carry out official duties, who acts with a view to private gain".[215]

245. The Criminal Code of Belarus defines a mercenary as a person who participates, "on the territory of a foreign State, in armed conflict or hostilities and who does not belong to the armed forces of the parties to the conflict and who acts with a view to a material remuneration without being authorised by the State of his origin or by the State on whose territory he permanently resides".[216]

246. Georgia's Criminal Code defines a mercenary as "a specially recruited person who acts with the view to receive a remuneration and who is neither a national of a State party to the conflict or hostilities, nor its permanent resident and who is not sent by any other State on official duty as a member of its armed forces".[217]

247. Kazakhstan's Penal Code defines a mercenary as "any person who acts with a view to receive material remuneration or any other personal advantage and who does not belong to any party to the conflict, is not a permanent resident on its territory and is not dispatched by another State to fulfil official duties".[218]

248. Kyrgyzstan's Criminal Code defines a mercenary as "a person who acts with a view to receive a remuneration and who is not a citizen of a state party to an armed conflict or hostilities, who is not its permanent resident and who is not a person sent on an official mission".[219]

249. Moldova's Penal Code defines a mercenary as:

a person acting in the territory of a state involved in an armed conflict or in military hostilities with the aim to receive material gains, while not being a national of the

[213] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 5-3.
[214] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 395(4).
[215] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 114, remark.
[216] Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 133.
[217] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 410, note.
[218] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Article 162, note.
[219] Kyrgyzstan, Criminal Code (1997), Article 375, note.

said state, not having a permanent residence on the territory of the latter and not being under the duty to exercise official obligations.[220]

250. Russia's Criminal Code defines a mercenary as "a person who acts for the purpose of getting a material reward and is not a citizen of the State that participates in the armed conflict or hostilities, who does not reside on a permanent basis on its territory, and who is not fulfilling official duties".[221]

251. Tajikistan's Criminal Code defines a mercenary as:

> a specially recruited person who acts with a view to receive a remuneration and who is neither a national of a State party to the conflict nor its permanent resident, nor a member of the armed forces of a party which is in a state of war and is not sent by any other State on official duty as a member of its armed forces.[222]

252. Ukraine's Criminal Code defines mercenary activity as "participation in armed conflicts of other States for the purpose of pecuniary compensation without authorisation obtained from appropriate government authorities".[223]

253. Uzbekistan's Criminal Code defines mercenary activity as:

> participation on the territory or side of a foreign State in an armed conflict or military actions by a person who is neither a citizen nor a member of the armed forces of State in conflict, nor a permanent resident of the territory under its control, nor someone sent on official duty by any State to the armed forces of another State, with a view to receive a financial reward or other personal advantages.[224]

National Case-law

254. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

255. At the CDDH, Afghanistan stated that it "does not see any need for the retention of the clause immediately following the words 'private gain' in paragraph 2(c)" of Article 42 quater of draft AP I (now Article 47).[225]

256. At the CDDH, Cameroon suggested that the definition of a mercenary in Article 42 quater of draft AP I (now Article 47) would have been improved by the deletion of the condition of a promise of "material compensation substantially in excess of that promised or paid to combatants of similar ranks and functions" in paragraph 2(c) because "it would be very difficult to prove that a mercenary received exorbitant pay".[226]

[220] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 130.
[221] Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 359, note.
[222] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 401, note.
[223] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 447(2).
[224] Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Article 154.
[225] Afghanistan, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 175.
[226] Cameroon, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 156, § 76.

257. At the CDDH, Cuba stated, with regard to paragraph 2(c) of Article 42 quater of draft AP I (now Article 47), that it "has serious doubts about its objectivity, since in practice it will not be possible to verify whether or not the material compensation is in excess of that paid to combatants of similar rank and functions".[227]

258. At the CDDH, Mauritania expressed "the greatest reservation with regard to the definition, motivation and scope" of mercenary activity as set forth in paragraphs 2(a)–(c) of Article 42 quater of draft AP I (now Article 47). It explained that "the mercenary of today is no longer motivated solely by the desire for private gain" and, as a result, considered that "the definition and motivations of the mercenary as specified in Article 42 quater, paragraph 2, are incomplete in so far as their range does not cover all categories of mercenaries".[228]

259. At the CDDH, the Netherlands stated that:

> We are somewhat worried by the fact that in the list of criteria [to define a mercenary], the motivation of a person has been brought into play. We should like to reiterate our position that the application of humanitarian law and the granting of humanitarian treatment should not be made dependent on someone's motivation for taking part in the armed conflict. Moreover the element of motivation will be difficult to establish and could give rise to more than one interpretation.[229]

260. At the CDDH, Nigeria stated that it "appreciated the suggestion made by the representative of the United Republic of Cameroon and regretted that it had been made too late".[230]

261. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we do not favor the provisions of article 47 on mercenaries, which among other things introduce political factors that do not belong in international humanitarian law, and do not consider the provisions of article 47 to be part of current customary law".[231]

262. In 1980, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the UN Mercenary Convention, the SFRY stated that it supported the definition of a mercenary provided by Article 47 AP I.[232]

---

[227] Cuba, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 185.

[228] Mauritania, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, pp. 191–192.

[229] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 194.

[230] Nigeria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 156, § 77.

[231] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 426–427.

[232] SFRY, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/35/SR.23,17 October 1980, § 70.

263. At the CDDH, Zaire stated that it considered that paragraph 2(c) in Article 42 quater of draft AP I (now Article 47) "was greatly weakened by the inclusion of the second clause" requiring a promise of "material compensation substantially in excess of that promised or paid to combatants of similar ranks and functions".[233]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
264. In a resolution adopted in 1999 on the use of mercenaries as a means of violating human rights and impeding the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination, the UN General Assembly asked the UN Secretary-General:

> to invite Governments to make proposals towards a clearer legal definition of mercenaries, and, in this regard, requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to convene expert meetings, as requested in previous General Assembly resolutions, to study and update the international legislation in force and to propose recommendations for a clearer legal definition of mercenaries that would allow for more efficient prevention and punishment of mercenary activities.[234]

Regional Organisations
265. No practice was found.

International Conferences
266. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

267. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

268. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

269. No practice was found.

[233] Zaire, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 160, § 100.
[234] UN General Assembly, Res. 54/151, 17 December 1999, § 12.

Status of mercenaries

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

270. Pursuant to Article 47(1) AP I, "a mercenary shall not have the right to be a combatant or a prisoner of war". Article 47 AP I was adopted by consensus.[235]

271. Article 45(3) AP I provides that "any person who has taken part in hostilities, who is not entitled to prisoner-of-war status and who does not benefit from more favourable treatment in accordance with the Fourth Convention shall have the right at all times to the protection of Article 75 of this Protocol". Article 45 AP I was adopted by consensus.[236]

272. Upon ratification of AP I, Ireland declared that "Article 47 in no way prejudices the application of Articles 45(3) and 75 of Protocol I to mercenaries as defined in this Article".[237]

273. Upon ratification of AP I, the Netherlands stated that "Article 47 in no way prejudices the application of Articles 45 and 75 of Protocol I to mercenaries as defined in this Article".[238]

274. Article 3 of the 1977 OAU Convention against Mercenarism states that "mercenaries shall not enjoy the status of combatants and shall not be entitled to prisoner of war status".

275. Article 11 of the 1977 OAU Convention against Mercenarism states that a mercenary "shall be entitled to all guarantees normally granted to any ordinary person by the State on whose territory he is being tried".

Other Instruments

276. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

277. Military manuals of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Cameroon, France, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, UK and SFRY (FRY) state that mercenaries are neither combatants nor entitled to POW status.[239]

[235] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 156.
[236] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 155.
[237] Ireland, Declarations and reservations made upon ratification of AP I, 19 May 1999, § 8.
[238] Netherlands, Declarations made upon ratification of AP I, 26 June 1987, § 4.
[239] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 1.09(2); Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 708; Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 23; Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 143, see also pp. 36, 60 and 77; France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 2; France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 40, see also p. 81; Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 6; Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. III-6, § 5; New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 807; Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 8, § 9(c)(2); Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.4.b; Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section

278. Canada's LOAC Manual states that:

Mercenaries are unlawful combatants and may be attacked for such time as they take a direct part in hostilities. If captured, mercenaries are not entitled to PW status. They may be punished for being mercenaries but only following a fair trial affording all judicial guarantees.[240]

279. Germany's Military Manual provides that:

Mercenaries shall be regarded as unlawful combatants [i.e.] persons who take a direct part in the hostilities without being entitled to do so and have to face penal consequences. They do not have the right to the status of a prisoner of war. [They] do, however, have a legitimate claim to certain fundamental guarantees (Art. 75 AP I), including the right to humane treatment and a regular judicial procedure.[241]

280. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that "another provision in the Additional Protocols is meant precisely to deny prisoner-of-war status to ... mercenaries. This provision, which was adopted under pressure from African countries, is accepted as a customary rule and is therefore binding."[242]

281. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "mercenaries are neither entitled to combatant nor to POW status ... Nevertheless, a captured mercenary ... cannot be deprived of his fundamental rights and may not be punished without trial."[243]

282. New Zealand's Military Manual states that:

Prior to 1977 there was no restriction upon the use of mercenaries in armed conflict and, in accordance with the principles of humanitarian law, any form of discrimination among combatants was forbidden. By a series of resolutions in relation to specific anti-colonial conflicts in Africa, the United Nations recommended prohibition of the use of such personnel against national liberation movements. This did not affect their legal status, although the government of Angola instituted criminal proceedings against captured mercenaries. Insofar as countries accepting AP I are concerned mercenaries are not entitled to combatant rights, thus denying to this type of soldier the equal treatment otherwise prescribed by the Protocol. Nevertheless, they remain entitled to the provisions concerning humanitarian treatment contained in AP I Art. 75.[244]

283. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct states that "foreign nationals on legitimate business will not be molested, but mercenaries will not be spared: they are the worst of enemies".[245]

3.2.1.4, p. 36; Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 177; UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 3, p. 10, § 7; SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 114.

240 Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 3-4, § 31.

241 Germany, Military Manual (1992), §§ 302–303.

242 Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 51.

243 Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 9.

244 New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 807(2).

245 Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(l).

284. Nigeria's Military Manual states that "mercenaries are however not to be considered as prisoner[s] of war".[246]

285. Spain's LOAC Manual states that mercenaries are not entitled to POW status.[247]

286. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "a mercenary has no right to combatant or prisoner-of-war status".[248]

287. The US Air Force Commander's Handbook states that:

> In recent years, many countries have claimed that "mercenaries" are unlawful combatants and subject to punishment upon capture . . .
>
> a. The United States has long recognized that neutral nationals taking part in an armed conflict can encourage the escalation of that conflict, and US statutes place certain limits on the recruitment of mercenaries in this country. We have also, however, regarded mercenaries as lawful combatants entitled to PW status upon capture. The US government has always protested vigorously against any attempt by other nations to punish American citizens as mercenaries.
> b. [AP I] provides that mercenaries do not have the right to be combatants or prisoners of war, but the definition of "mercenary" in this Protocol is so narrow that few persons would fit within it.[249]

National Legislation

288. Armenia's Penal Code, Azerbaijan's Criminal Code, the Criminal Code of Belarus, Georgia's Criminal Code, Kazakhstan's Penal Code, Moldova's Penal Code, Russia's Criminal Code, Tajikistan's Criminal Code, Ukraine's Criminal Code, Uzbekistan's Criminal Code and Vietnam's Penal Code criminalise the participation of a mercenary in an armed conflict.[250]

289. Under Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended, any "minor breach" of AP I, including violations of Article 45(3) AP I, is a punishable offence.[251]

290. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the two additional protocols to [the Geneva] Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[252]

National Case-law

291. No practice was found.

[246] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 8, § 9(c)(2).
[247] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 1.4.
[248] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 177.
[249] US, Air Force Commander's Handbook (1980), § 5-3.
[250] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 395(3); Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 114(3); Belarus, Criminal Code (1999), Article 133; Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 410(3); Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Article 162(3); Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 141(1); Russia, Criminal Code (1996), Article 359(3); Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 401(3); Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 447(2); Uzbekistan, Criminal Code (1994), Article 154; Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 280(2).
[251] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[252] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(b).

Other National Practice

292. At the CDDH, Australia stated that it held the view that "mercenaries, who are in the hands of a Party to an armed conflict to which draft Protocol I applies, are entitled to the benefits of the treatment provided for by Article 65 [now Article 75] of that Protocol".[253]

293. The Report on the Practice of Botswana asserts that "mercenaries have no protection at all".[254]

294. At the CDDH, Canada stated that it "welcomed the recognition by the Nigerian representative that mercenaries were entitled to the fundamental guarantees provided in Article 65 [now Article 75 AP I]".[255]

295. China considers that mercenaries should not benefit from the treatment reserved for POWs and that they may also be liable to punishment, depending upon the seriousness of the crimes committed.[256]

296. At the CDDH, Colombia stated that it "would have liked some specific reference to be included [in Article 42 quater draft AP I (now Article 47)] to the fundamental guarantees provided for in Article 65 [now Article 75 AP I]".[257]

297. At the CDDH, Cyprus stated that it "wished to express its appreciation for the clarification given by the Nigerian representative".[258]

298. In 1982, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Egypt stated that mercenaries should benefit from humanitarian treatment according to human rights principles and established norms.[259]

299. At the CDDH, the Holy See stated that it:

> could not agree that mercenaries should not be expressly granted the minimum protection given to all men, whatever their faults and their moral destitution. Consequently, . . . the Holy See would have liked Article 42 quater [now Article 47 AP I] to refer explicitly to Article 65 on fundamental guarantees [now Article 75].[260]

300. At the CDDH, India stated that it "welcomed the clarification given by the Nigerian representative".[261]

[253] Australia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 175, see also p. 176.
[254] Report on the Practice of Botswana, 1998, Chapter 1.1.
[255] Canada, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 160, § 98.
[256] China, Address on the Convention on Suppressing the Activities of Mercenaries, Selected Documents of the Chinese Delegation to the United Nations, World Knowledge Press, Beijing, 1980, p. 173.
[257] Colombia, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 161, § 105, see also p. 182.
[258] Cyprus, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 159, § 96.
[259] Egypt, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/37/SR.10, 14 October 1982, § 10.
[260] Holy See, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 158, §§ 87–88.
[261] India, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 159, § 90.

301. With reference to a press conference by the Iraqi Minister of Defence in 1986, the Report on the Practice of Iraq states that mercenaries are not treated as POWs.[262]

302. At the CDDH, Italy stated that:

> Mercenaries, though not entitled to prisoner-of-war status, were covered by Article 65 [now Article 75 AP I], which contained the fundamental safeguards to be given to all persons not enjoying more favourable treatment, regardless of the gravity of the crimes with which they might be charged.[263]

303. In 1981, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, Italy stated that Article 47 AP I should be interpreted in parallel to Article 75 AP I.[264]

304. At the CDDH, Mexico stated that "the guarantees contained in Article 65 [now Article 75 AP I] are implicitly applicable to the persons dealt with in Article 42 quater [now Article 47]".[265]

305. At the CDDH, the Netherlands reiterated "the applicability to a mercenary of the fundamental guarantees" embodied in Article 65 of draft AP I (now Article 75).[266]

306. In 1980, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, the representative of the Netherlands stated that the status of mercenaries under Article 47 AP I was less than the Dutch delegation found desirable. He added that, notwithstanding their reprehensible activities, the human rights of mercenaries should be respected, as with every other human being.[267]

307. At the CDDH, Nigeria stated:

> While recognizing the fundamental guarantees provided for in the new Article 65 of draft Protocol I [now Article 75] and not denying the common humanity which mercenaries shared with the rest of mankind, [Nigeria] did not think that such considerations could serve as a pretext for giving mercenaries the rights of combatants or prisoners of war in any situation of armed conflict.[268]

---

[262] Report on the Practice of Iraq, 1998, Chapter 5.3, referring to Press conference by the Iraqi Minister of Defence, 4 October 1986.

[263] Italy, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 159, § 92.

[264] Italy, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/36/SR.18, 28 October 1981, § 36.

[265] Mexico, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 192.

[266] Netherlands, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 194, see also p. 195.

[267] Netherlands, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/35/SR.23, 7 November 1980, § 76.

[268] Nigeria, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 157, § 81.

308. At the CDDH, Portugal stated that according to its interpretation of draft Article 65 on fundamental guarantees and draft Article 42 quater on mercenaries (now Articles 75 and 47 AP I), "the latter were in a category covered by the fundamental guarantees set out in Article 65".[269]

309. The Report on the Practice of Russia states that:

As far as mercenaries are concerned, it must be said that they participate in nearly all the conflicts in the CIS countries. In connection with various political considerations, however, their legal status is made equal to the status of "volunteers". Once Georgians brought down a plane and captured a mercenary – an officer of the Russian armed forces who fought for Abkhazia. Georgia demonstrated goodwill: it released the man and handed him over to Russia.[270]

310. On the basis of replies by army officers to a questionnaire, the Report on the Practice of Rwanda states that mercenaries are not considered as civilians. The report concludes, therefore, that mercenaries are liable to attack.[271]

311. At the CDDH, Sweden stated that the text of Article 42 quater of draft AP I (now Article 47) "should be complemented with a sentence stating that mercenaries are entitled to the protection laid down in Article 65 [now Article 75] in Protocol I".[272]

312. At the CDDH, Switzerland stated that it "regretted that there had been no reference in Article 42 quater [now Article 47 AP I] to other provisions of the Protocol, in particular Article 65 [now Article 75]".[273]

313. In 1980, in a memorandum concerning the international legal rights of captured mercenaries, the US Department of State stated that:

The act of being a mercenary is not a crime under international law. An individual who is accused of being a mercenary and who is captured during an armed conflict is entitled to the basic humanitarian protections of the international law applicable in armed conflict, including those specified in the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War. The specific rights which such an individual would be entitled to vary depending on whether the conflict is an international conflict or an internal one and, in the case of international armed conflicts, on whether the person is entitled to prisoner-of-war status . . . The protections of [common] article 3 [of the 1949 Geneva Conventions] would also apply to any captured individual accused of being a mercenary during a civil war. [Common Article 3] does not provide any immunity from prosecution to individuals for engaging in combatant acts. The provisions of the Geneva Conventions

[269] Portugal, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 160, § 97.
[270] Report on the Practice of Russia, 1997, Chapter 5.3.
[271] Report on the Practice of Rwanda, 1997, Replies by army officers to a questionnaire, Chapter 1.1.
[272] Sweden, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 198.
[273] Switzerland, Statement at the CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.41, 26 May 1977, p. 158, § 82.

dealing with prisoners of war do not apply in civil wars, and combatants captured during civil wars are not prisoners of war within the meaning of international law.[274]

314. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we do not favor the provisions of article 47 on mercenaries, which among other things introduce political factors that do not belong in international humanitarian law, and do not consider the provisions of article 47 to be part of current customary law".[275]

315. In 1987, the Legal Adviser of the US Department of State stated that:

> For a third example [of why the Joint Chiefs of Staff judged AP I too ambiguous and complicated to use as a practical guide for military operations], article 47 of Protocol I provides that "a mercenary shall not have the right to be a combatant or a prisoner of war." This article was included in the Protocol not for humanitarian reasons, but purely to make the political point that mercenary activity in the Third World is unwelcome. In doing so, this article disregards one of the fundamental principles of international humanitarian law by defining the right to combatant status, at least in part, on the basis of the personal or political motivations of the individual in question. This politicizing of the rules of warfare is contrary to Western interests and the interests of humanitarian law itself.[276]

316. In 1980, during a debate in the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly on the UN Mercenary Convention, the SFRY recalled that Article 47 AP I provided that mercenaries did not have a right to the status of combatant or POW and concluded that mercenaries could not enjoy any protection under international law.[277]

317. According to the Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, "spies and mercenaries are likely to be regarded as combatants in Zimbabwe for purposes of being military targets. They are, however, unlikely to be afforded POW status and related protection if captured."[278]

[274] US, International Legal Rights of Captured Mercenaries, Memorandum prepared by the Attorney-Adviser in the Office of the Assistant Legal Adviser for African Affairs, US Department of State, 17 October 1980, reprinted in Marian Nash (Leich), Cumulative Digest of United States Practice in International Law, 1981–1988, Department of State Publication 10120, Washington, D.C., 1993–1995, pp. 3457 and 3463–3464.

[275] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, pp. 426–427.

[276] US, Remarks of Judge Abraham D. Sofaer, Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 469.

[277] SFRY, Statement before the Sixth Committee of the UN General Assembly, UN Doc. A/C.6/35/SR.23, 17 October 1980, § 70.

[278] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 1.1.

318. In 1985, in a meeting with the ICRC, a government stated that "foreign prisoners may be exchanged after being tried".[279]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

319. The mission dispatched by the UN Secretary-General in 1988 to investigate the situation of POWs in Iran and Iraq reported that:

> Some of the prisoners detained in [Iran] are not Iraqi nationals but come from other countries . . . The Iranian authorities call them mercenaries and have argued that, under Protocol I of the Geneva Conventions, they are not protected. The Iranian authorities contend that they could, according to custom, suffer capital punishment but have not been executed; on the contrary, they are treated as the other POWs. Since this seems to be the case, the legal argument about mercenaries has become redundant. (Otherwise, one would have to observe that [Iran] is not a party to the Protocol mentioned, and in any event has not shown that the condition[s] of its article 47 have been fulfilled.) . . . The Iranian authorities . . . promised that the non-Iraqi prisoners also will be released after the cessation of hostilities.[280]

Regional Organisations

320. No practice was found.

International Conferences

321. The Rapporteur of Committee III at the CDDH stated with regard to Article 47 AP I that:

> Although the proposed new article makes no reference to the fundamental protections of Article 65 [now Article 75 AP I], it was understood by the Committee Group that mercenaries would be one of the groups entitled to the protections of that article which establishes minimum standards of treatment for persons not entitled to more favourable treatment under the Conventions and Protocol I.[281]

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

322. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

323. No practice was found.

[279] ICRC archive document.
[280] UN Secretary-General, Report of the mission dispatched by the Secretary-General on the situation of prisoners of war in the Islamic Republic of Iran and Iraq, UN Doc. S/20147, Annex, 24 August 1988, § 65.
[281] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. XV, CDDH/407/Rev.1, 17 March–10 June 1977, p. 455, § 27.

VI. Other Practice

324. In an address to the nation in 1993, the President of UNITA stated that "captured mercenaries will be summarily executed".[282]

[282] UNITA, Address to the Nation by Jonas Savimbi, President, relayed live from Huambo, 9 March 1993.

CHAPTER 34

THE WOUNDED, SICK AND SHIPWRECKED

A. Search for and Collection and Evacuation of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked

Search and collection

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 6 of the 1864 GC provides that "wounded or sick combatants, to whatever nation they may belong, shall be collected".

2. Article 16 of the 1907 Hague Convention (X) provides that "after every engagement, the two belligerents, so far as military interests permit, shall take steps to look for the shipwrecked".

3. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that "the wounded and sick shall be collected". (Article 3 GC II adds the shipwrecked)

4. Article 4 GC I and Article 5 GC II provide that neutral and other States not parties to the conflict shall apply the provisions of these instruments to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked of the armed forces of the parties to the conflict.

5. Article 15, first paragraph, GC I provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick".
6. Article 18 GC I provides that:

> The military authorities may appeal to the charity of the inhabitants voluntarily to collect . . . under their direction, the wounded and sick, granting persons who have responded to this appeal the necessary protection and facilities . . .
>
> The military authorities shall permit the inhabitants and relief societies, even in invaded or occupied areas, spontaneously to collect and care for wounded or sick of whatever nationality.

7. Article 18, first paragraph, GC II states that "after each engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures to search for and collect the shipwrecked, wounded and sick".
8. Article 21, first paragraph, GC II states that "the Parties to the conflict may appeal to the charity of commanders of neutral merchant vessels, yachts or other craft, to take on board and care for wounded, sick or shipwrecked persons".
9. According to Article 13 GC IV, the obligation to search and care for the wounded applies to the "whole population of the countries in conflict".
10. Article 16, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "as far as military considerations allow, each Party to the conflict shall facilitate the steps taken to search for the . . . wounded".
11. Article 17(2) AP I provides that "the Parties to the conflict may appeal to the civilian population and the aid societies referred to in paragraph 1 [i.e. aid societies, such as national Red Cross (Red Crescent, Red Lion and Sun) Societies] to collect . . . the wounded, sick and shipwrecked". Article 17 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]
12. Article 19 AP I provides that neutral and other States not parties to the conflict shall apply the provisions of AP I to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked of the armed forces of the parties to the conflict. Article 19 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2]
13. Article 8 AP II provides that "whenever circumstances permit, and particularly after an engagement, all possible measures shall be taken, without delay, to search for and collect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked". Article 8 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3]
14. Article 18(1) AP II provides that "the civilian population may, even on its own initiative, offer to collect . . . the wounded, sick and shipwrecked". Article 18 AP II was adopted by consensus.[4]

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 70.
[2] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[3] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 110.
[4] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 150.

Other Instruments

15. Article 10 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "wounded and sick soldiers should be brought in . . . to whatever nation they belong".

16. Paragraph 1 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "all wounded and sick on land shall be treated in accordance with the provisions of the First and Second Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949".

17. In the 1991 Hague Statement on Respect for Humanitarian Principles, the Presidents of the six republics of the former Yugoslavia undertook "to apply the following fundamental principles: wounded and ill persons must be helped and protected in all circumstances".

18. Paragraph 2.1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "the treatment provided to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be in accordance with the provisions of the First and Second Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949".

19. Article 4(2) and (9) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that the wounded and sick shall be searched for and collected.

20. Section 9.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that "whenever circumstances permit, a suspension of fire shall be arranged, or other local arrangements made, to permit the search for . . . the wounded [and] the sick . . . left on the battlefield and allow for their collection . . .".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

21. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) states that "at all times and particularly after an engagement, the belligerents shall take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick".[5] It adds that "appeal can be made to the civilian population for the collection . . . of the wounded and sick".[6]

22. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) provides that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be searched for and collected.[7]

23. Australia's Commanders' Guide and Defence Force Manual require that all possible measures be taken to search for and collect the shipwrecked, wounded and sick.[8]

24. Belgium's Law of War Manual refers to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and provides that the wounded and sick shall be searched for.[9]

[5] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.003.
[6] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.006.
[7] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.05.
[8] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 858; Defence Force Manual (1994), §§ 668 and 986.
[9] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 17.

25. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers states that "if operations so permit, the wounded must be searched for".[10]
26. Benin's Military Manual provides that "combatants shall participate in the search for ... the wounded and sick".[11] It instructs soldiers to "collect ... the wounded and sick, whether friend or foe".[12]
27. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "whenever circumstances permit, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be collected".[13]
28. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "when operational circumstances permit, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked must be collected".[14]
29. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that the wounded and shipwrecked shall be searched for and collected. It adds that "an appeal may be launched to the civilian population to help National Societies of the Red Cross and Red Crescent to collect ... the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[15]
30. Canada's LOAC Manual states that "following an engagement, parties to a conflict are obliged to take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick and shipwrecked".[16] It adds that "appeals may be made to local inhabitants and relief societies to collect ... the wounded and sick. Such inhabitants and relief societies, even in occupied or invaded territory, shall be permitted spontaneously to collect ... such personnel."[17] In the case of non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "after an engagement and whenever circumstances permit, all possible steps must be taken without delay to search for and collect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[18]
31. Canada's Code of Conduct instructs soldiers "to take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick from all sides, opposing forces or not, as well as civilians".[19] It also provides that "military authorities may ask the inhabitants in the area of conflict to voluntarily collect ... the wounded under their direction".[20]
32. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that the "parties to the conflict shall collect and assist the wounded and sick in their power".[21]
33. Colombia's Basic Military Manual states that "the wounded and sick must be collected".[22]

[10] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), pp. 16–17, see also p. 32.
[11] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 10.
[12] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 18.
[13] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(1).
[14] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 31.
[15] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 96.
[16] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 8.
[17] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-2, § 12.
[18] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 32.
[19] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 3.
[20] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 10, § 8.
[21] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 3.
[22] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 28.

34. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be collected".[23]
35. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual provides that wounded enemy combatants shall be collected.[24]
36. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations instructs soldiers "to collect . . . the wounded, the sick and shipwrecked whenever circumstances permit".[25]
37. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that "whenever the tactical situation permits, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be collected".[26]
38. Croatia's Commanders' Manual stipulates that the wounded and shipwrecked shall be searched for and collected.[27]
39. Croatia's Soldiers' Manual instructs soldiers to search for and collect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the adversary's armed forces.[28]
40. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL instructs soldiers to collect the wounded and sick.[29]
41. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "parties to the conflict shall, after each engagement and without delay, take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick on the field of battle".[30] It contains similar provisions with respect to the shipwrecked.[31]
42. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that "wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be searched for and collected . . . by the Party to the conflict in whose power they may be".[32]
43. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be searched for and collected . . . by the Party to the conflict in whose power they may be".[33]
44. Germany's Military Manual states that a cease-fire may be concluded for "humanitarian purposes, in particular searching and collecting the wounded and the shipwrecked".[34] It adds that "at all times, all possible measures shall be taken to collect the wounded and sick and shipwrecked".[35] The manual also provides that "civilians and help organisations such as, for example, the National Red Cross or Red Crescent Society are permitted to collect . . . the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[36]

[23] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 24.
[24] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 20.
[25] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32.
[26] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 45.
[27] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), p. 10, Rule No. 71.
[28] Croatia, Soldiers' Manual (1992), p. 3
[29] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), p. 11, Nos. 1–3.
[30] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.4.
[31] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.6.
[32] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[33] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[34] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 233.
[35] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 605.
[36] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 632.

45. Hungary's Military Manual provides that "whenever the tactical situation permits, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be collected".[37]
46. Indonesia's Military Manual states that "the wounded and sick should be searched for and collected, as soon as the hostilities end".[38]
47. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual instructs soldiers that when confronted with wounded enemy combatants, the following rule must be observed: "Collect them."[39]
48. Kenya's LOAC Manual refers to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and states that the "wounded and sick shall be collected and cared for".[40] The manual provides that "combatants are required to search for and collect the wounded and sick" and states that this principle also applies to wounded enemy combatants.[41] It also provides that "civil defence units and personnel shall participate in the search for victims, particularly when there are civilian casualties". The manual adds that "commanders may appeal to the civilian population, to aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies . . . to collect . . . the wounded and shipwrecked".[42]
49. Lebanon's Teaching Manual instructs members of the armed forces to search for and collect enemy wounded in the field as well as shipwrecked at sea.[43]
50. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "when the mission so permits, the wounded [and] shipwrecked . . . shall be searched for and collected". It instructs soldiers that, when confronted with wounded enemy combatants, the following rule must be observed: "Collect them."[44] It also states that "local arrangements may be concluded for the search, collection [and] exchange . . . of the wounded and shipwrecked".[45]
51. Mali's Army Regulations provides that "refusal to collect and protect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked whenever circumstances permit" is a violation of the laws and customs of war.[46]
52. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations instructs soldiers "to collect and protect the wounded and sick when circumstances permit".[47]
53. According to the Military Manual of the Netherlands, "particularly after an engagement, wounded and sick shall be searched for and collected".[48] In

[37] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 73.
[38] Indonesia, Military Manual (1982), § 37.
[39] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), p. 29.
[40] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 6 and Précis No. 3, p. 14.
[41] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, pp. 13 and 15 and Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[42] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[43] Lebanon, Teaching Manual (1997), pp. 77–78.
[44] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-O, § 16, Fiche No. 2-T, § 21, Fiche No. 5-SO, § C and Fiche No. 4-T, § 2.2(22).
[45] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-SO, § B.
[46] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[47] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25.
[48] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.

the case of non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked must be searched for and collected".[49]

54. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that the "wounded ... shall be searched for and collected when the circumstances permit it".[50]

55. The IFOR Instructions of the Netherlands instruct soldiers to "collect the wounded ... whether friend or foe".[51]

56. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the Parties to a conflict are obliged to take all possible measures to search for and collect, without delay, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[52] It adds that "appeals may be made to the charity and humanity of the local inhabitants and relief societies to collect ... the wounded and sick".[53] With regard to non-international armed conflict, the manual states that "after any engagement and whenever circumstances permit, all possible steps must be taken, without delay, to search for and collect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[54]

57. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that, in internal armed conflicts, the wounded and sick shall be collected.[55]

58. Nigeria's Military Manual states that "as soon as the tactical situation permits, necessary measures shall be taken to search for [and] collect ... the wounded [and] shipwrecked".[56]

59. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War states that "at all times and particularly after a campaign, the belligerents must immediately take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick".[57]

60. Nigeria's Soldiers' Code of Conduct states that "the wounded enemy shall be collected".[58] It adds that "the wounded and shipwrecked enemies at sea shall be accorded similar respect and protection".[59]

61. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines instruct soldiers to "care for the wounded and sick, be they friendly or foe".[60]

62. Romania's Soldiers' Manual requires that wounded and sick enemy combatants be collected.[61]

63. Russia's Military Manual provides that:

> Military commanders may appeal to the charity of the local population to voluntarily collect ... the wounded and sick. The military authorities must permit the

[49] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[50] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-40.
[51] Netherlands, IFOR Instructions (1995), § 6.
[52] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(1).
[53] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(4).
[54] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1817(1).
[55] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Article 6.
[56] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 13, § 4, see also p. 39, § 5(f) and (h) and p. 46, § 16(g).
[57] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 34.
[58] Nigeria, Soldiers' Code of Conduct (undated), § 6.
[59] Nigeria, Soldiers' Code of Conduct (undated), § 8.
[60] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 5.
[61] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 9.

inhabitants and relief societies, even in invaded or occupied areas, spontaneously to collect . . . wounded or sick.[62]

64. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be collected".[63]
65. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that during internal disturbances, local agreements may be concluded to search for and collect the wounded.[64]
66. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "at all times, but particularly after an engagement, parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded . . . during combat".[65]
67. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that Article 17 AP I on the role of aid organisations has the status of customary law.[66]
68. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "at all times, and especially following an engagement, all means should be taken to search for and collect the wounded".[67] It also provides that "appeal may be made to civilians or civilian relief societies to collect . . . the wounded".[68]
69. According to Togo's Military Manual, "combatants shall participate in the search for . . . the wounded and sick".[69] It instructs soldiers "to collect and care for the wounded and sick, whether friend or foe".[70]
70. The UK Military Manual provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, the belligerents must immediately take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick".[71] It also provides that:

> The military authorities may appeal to the charitable zeal of local inhabitants to collect . . . the wounded and sick, under their direction, granting to those who respond to this appeal special protection and facilities. The inhabitants, as also relief societies, must be permitted spontaneously to collect . . . wounded and sick, whatever nationality.[72]

71. The UK LOAC Manual states that "combatants are required to search for and collect the shipwrecked, wounded and sick and to ensure their adequate care".[73] It also provides that "military authorities must allow the local population and relief societies to collect . . . the wounded and sick".[74] The manual restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[75]

[62] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 15.
[63] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(1).
[64] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 20.
[65] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.5.a, see also §§ 5.2.d.(5), 10.6.b.(3) and 10.6.c.
[66] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 18.
[67] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 71.
[68] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 75.
[69] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 10.
[70] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 18.
[71] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 342.
[72] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 345.
[73] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 7, p. 26, § 2.
[74] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 6.
[75] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 12, p. 42, § 2.

72. The US Field Manual reproduces common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Articles 15 and 18 GC I.[76]

73. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 15 GC I and states that it "includes, inter alia, an obligation to search for and collect wounded and sick".[77] The manual also refers to Article 12 GC II and defines shipwreck as "a shipwreck from any cause, including forced landings at sea by or from an aircraft". The manual specifies that "it is important to the Air Force since it provides a fully protected status for pilots downed or forced to land at sea".[78] It also provides that "military authorities shall permit the inhabitants and relief societies spontaneously to collect . . . wounded of all nationalities".[79]

74. The US Naval Handbook states that:

> Parties to the conflict must, after each engagement and without delay, take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick on the field of battle . . . Shipwrecked persons include those in peril at sea or in other waters as a result of either the sinking, grounding, or other damage to the vessel in which they are embarked, or of the downing or distress of an aircraft. It is immaterial whether the peril was the result of enemy action or nonmilitary causes.[80]

75. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that:

> 164. At all times and especially after an engagement, all necessary measures shall be taken without delay to search for and collect the wounded and sick.
> . . .
> Whenever circumstances permit, a cease-fire may be arranged in order to collect, exchange or transport wounded and sick left on the battlefield . . .
> 165. The civilian population or humanitarian societies may, of their own initiative, collect . . . the wounded and sick, whether friend or foe, even in occupied territory. Military commanders are obliged to permit such humanitarian activities while retaining the right of supervision.[81]

National Legislation

76. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who fails to search for and rescue the wounded, sick and shipwrecked of any party to the conflict.[82]

77. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, at any time and especially after an engagement, the wounded and sick shall be searched for.[83]

[76] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 11, 216 and 219.
[77] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).
[78] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-3(a).
[79] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).
[80] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-4.
[81] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), §§ 164–165.
[82] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(1) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[83] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 24.

78. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[84]
79. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act provides for the obligation to search for the wounded and sick.[85]
80. China's Criminal Code as amended punishes those who are directly responsible for the deliberate abandonment of the wounded and sick on the battlefield.[86]
81. Colombia's Penal Code provides for the punishment of "anyone who, during an armed conflict, . . . abandons the wounded and sick".[87]
82. The DRC Code of Military Justice as amended provides for the punishment of any member of the armed forces who does not assist persons in danger.[88]
83. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador provide a prison sentence for "anyone who, during an international or non-international armed conflict, fails to rescue and provide assistance to protected persons, while having an obligation to do so".[89]
84. Iraq's Military Penal Code punishes any person who abandons the wounded.[90]
85. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 4 and 15 GC I, 5 and 18 GC II and 16 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 19 AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 8 AP II, are punishable offences.[91]
86. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of any military medical personnel who, during or after an engagement, fail to provide assistance to the wounded, sick or shipwrecked.[92]
87. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of the soldier who fails to search for and rescue the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, irrespective of the party to which they belong.[93]
88. Nicaragua's Draft Penal Code provides for the punishment of a civilian not subject to military jurisdiction who "violates the duty of humanity towards the . . . wounded and sick, or those placed in hospital or camps for the wounded". It also provides a prison sentence for "anyone who, during an international

[84] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[85] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Schedule 1, Article 15.
[86] China, Criminal Code as amended (1997), Article 444.
[87] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 145.
[88] DRC, Code of Military Justice as amended (1972), Article 519.
[89] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Omision y obstaculización de medidas de socorro y asistencia humanitaria".
[90] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Article 115(c).
[91] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[92] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 190.
[93] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 56(2).

or non-international armed conflict, fails to rescue and provide assistance to protected persons, while having an obligation to do so".[94]

89. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[95]

90. Spain's Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces punishes the failure to search for and rescue the wounded and sick of both parties.[96]

91. Under Spain's Military Criminal Code, failure to use the available means to search and rescue the wounded, sick and shipwrecked constitutes an offence against the laws and customs of war.[97]

92. Under the US War Crimes Act as amended, violations of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions are war crimes.[98]

93. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of "failure to assist, when possible, an enemy who surrenders in case of shipwreck, fire, explosion, earthquake or similar circumstances".[99]

94. Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who denies or obstructs assistance to the wounded and sick.[100]

95. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who "intentionally leaves behind a soldier killed or wounded on the battlefield" or for the failure to "care for or give medical treatment to a wounded soldier".[101]

National Case-law

96. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

97. The Report on the Practice of Egypt states that "in application of its long dated experience, Egypt considers the search for and care of wounded [and] sick ... as a tradition which should be respected at all times and in any circumstance, particularly in time of military operations".[102]

98. The instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, state that "the wounded

[94] Nicaragua, Draft Penal Code (1999), Articles 456 and 463.
[95] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[96] Spain, Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces (1978), Article 140.
[97] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(1).
[98] US, War Crimes Act as amended (1996), Section 2441(c).
[99] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58(20), see also Article 58(21).
[100] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(4).
[101] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 271(1).
[102] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

and sick, whether civilian or military, must be respected, collected, protected and cared for".[103]

99. The Report on the Practice of Jordan states that "Jordan recognizes that its armed forces are under an obligation to search for the wounded . . . as soon as circumstances permit".[104]

100. On the basis of an interview with the Ministry of Home Affairs, the Report on the Practice of Malaysia states that "there exists a practice of searching for the wounded after any confrontation".[105] Furthermore, on the basis of interviews with members of the armed forces, the report states that:

> The Maritime Police Unit is responsible for the rescue of any shipwrecked vessel notwithstanding the fact that the vessel is an enemy vessel. Enemy vessels, which are shipwrecked in the course of battle, are only provided with assistance upon surrender. Once enemy ships are no longer seaworthy, no further attack is permitted. Enemy personnel are left to carry out their own evacuation and life saving procedures.
>
> There exists a practice of searching for those parachuting in distress.[106]

101. According to the Report on the Practice of the Philippines:

> In an armed conflict where guerilla warfare is the strategy used, distinguishing between civilians and combatants is very difficult. This is precisely the reason why the Philippines have adopted the same rules for both civilians and combatants with regard to the search for . . . the wounded [and] sick.[107]

102. In 1984, in reply to a question in the House of Commons regarding the war in the South Atlantic in 1982 and in particular the sinking of the Argentine warship Belgrano by HMS Conqueror, the UK Prime Minister wrote that:

> Immediately after the attack upon the Belgrano, Conqueror herself came under attack from the Argentine escorting destroyers and, to evade this, moved away from the area . . . When on 4th May Conqueror signalled she was returning to that area, she was ordered not to attack warships engaged in rescuing survivors from the Belgrano.[108]

103. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that, whenever circumstances permit, all possible measures should be taken to search for the wounded and sick in accordance with Article 8 AP II.[109]

---

[103] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1995, Section 6, § 62.
[104] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[105] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Interview with the Ministry of Home Affairs, Chapter 5.1.
[106] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Interviews with members of the armed forces, Chapter 5.1.
[107] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[108] UK, House of Commons, Annex to a letter of the Prime Minister in reply to a question, Hansard, 29 October 1984, Vol. 65, Written Answers, cols. 786–9, § 13.
[109] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

104. According to the Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, "Zimbabwe seems to regard as customary, the rules of international practice codified in the Geneva Conventions as regards the search for . . . the wounded".[110]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
105. In 2000, in his report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, the UN Secretary-General stated that common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and Article 4 AP II "have long been considered customary international law".[111]

Other International Organisations
106. No practice was found.

International Conferences
107. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

108. In its judgement in the Nicaragua case (Merits) in 1986, the ICJ held that the rules contained in common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions reflected what in 1949 in the Corfu Channel case (Merits) the Court had called "elementary considerations of humanity".[112]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

109. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

As soon as the tactical situation permits, necessary measures shall be taken . . . to search for [and] collect . . . the wounded and shipwrecked . . .

[C]ivil defence units and personnel shall participate in the search for victims, particularly when there are civilian casualties . . .

Commanders may appeal to the civilian population, to aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies and to commanders of neutral merchant vessels, yachts or other craft, to collect . . . the wounded and shipwrecked . . .

Civilian persons and aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies shall be permitted, even on their own initiative, to search for [and] collect . . . the wounded and shipwrecked. No one shall be harmed, prosecuted or punished for such acts . . .

[110] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 5.1.
[111] UN Secretary-General, Report on the establishment of a Special Court for Sierra Leone, UN Doc. S/2000/915, 4 October 2000, § 14.
[112] ICJ, Nicaragua case (Merits), Judgement, 27 June 1986, § 218.

Local arrangements shall be concluded for the search [and] removal . . . of the wounded and shipwrecked.[113]

110. In an appeal issued in 1983 in the context of the Iran–Iraq War, the ICRC pointed to grave violations of IHL committed by both countries, including "abandoning of enemy wounded on the battlefield".[114]

111. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "the following principles in particular must be respected: . . . the wounded, the sick and the shipwrecked must be collected . . . regardless of the party to which they belong".[115]

112. In a communication to the press in 1993, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Somalia "to collect . . . wounded and sick".[116]

113. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "all the wounded and sick, both civilian and military, must be collected".[117]

114. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC emphasised that "all the wounded and sick must be collected . . . without distinction, in accordance with the provisions laid down primarily in the First and Fourth Geneva Conventions".[118]

115. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC stated that "the wounded and sick must be collected . . . regardless of the party to which they belong".[119]

VI. Other Practice

116. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "the wounded and sick shall be collected . . . by the party in conflict which has them in its power".[120]

[113] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 483–486 and 535.
[114] ICRC, Conflict between Iraq and Iran: ICRC Appeal, IRRC, No. 235, 1983, p. 221.
[115] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.
[116] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.
[117] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.
[118] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.
[119] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.
[120] ICRC archive document.

117. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, to search for and collect wounded [and] sick".[121]

Evacuation

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

118. Article 15, second and third paragraphs, GC I provides that:

Whenever circumstances permit, an armistice or a suspension of fire shall be arranged, or local arrangements made, to permit the removal, exchange and transport of the wounded left on the battlefield.

Likewise, local arrangements may be concluded between Parties to the conflict for the removal or exchange of wounded and sick from a besieged or encircled area, and for the passage of medical and religious personnel and equipment on their way to that area.

119. Article 18, second paragraph, GC II provides that:

Whenever circumstances permit, the Parties to the conflict shall conclude local arrangements for the removal of the wounded and sick by sea from a besieged or encircled area and for the passage of medical and religious personnel and equipment on their way to that area.

120. Article 17 GC IV provides that:

The Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas, of wounded [and] sick . . . and for the passage of ministers of all religions, medical personnel and medical equipment on their way to such areas.

121. Paragraph 7(b)(2) of the 1987 NATO STANAG 2067 provides that "stragglers requiring medical care should be treated and, if necessary, evacuated through medical channels".

Other Instruments

122. Article 11 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "commanders in chief have power to deliver immediately to the enemy outposts hostile soldiers who have been wounded in an engagement, when circumstances permit and with the consent of both parties". Article 12 provides that "evacuations, together with the persons under whose direction they take place, shall be protected by neutrality".

[121] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 13, IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 335.

123. Paragraph 1 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "all wounded and sick on land shall be treated in accordance with the provisions of the First Geneva Convention".

124. Paragraph 2.1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "the treatment provided to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be in accordance with the provisions of the First and Second Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949".

125. Section III(2)(b) of the 1992 Agreement No. 3 on the ICRC Plan of Action between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "appropriate measures will be taken to permit the evacuation of the wounded, the sick and other vulnerable persons".

126. Section 9.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that "whenever circumstances permit, a suspension of fire shall be arranged, or other local arrangements made, to permit the [removal, exchange and transport] of the wounded [and] the sick . . . left on the battlefield".

II. National practice

Military Manuals

127. Argentina's Law of War Manual restates the provisions of Article 15 GC I.[122]

128. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that:

> Belligerents should endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of wounded [and] sick . . . and for the passage of ministers of all religions, medical personnel and medical equipment on their way to such areas.[123]

129. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "commanders may make agreements for the exchange, removal and transport of the wounded left on the field, besieged or encircled areas and to allow the passage of medical personnel and chaplains proceeding to any such area".[124] It also states that:

> The opposing parties are required to try and conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of wounded [and] sick . . . and for the passage of ministers of all religions, medical personnel and medical equipment on their way to such areas.[125]

[122] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.003.
[123] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 926.
[124] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 986.
[125] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 735.

130. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers states that "if operations so permit, the wounded must be ... evacuated from the combat zone".[126]
131. Benin's Military Manual provides that "combatants shall participate in the ... evacuation of the wounded and sick".[127] It further provides that "as soon as the tactical situation permits, the wounded and sick shall be evacuated by the appropriate channel".[128]
132. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "if circumstances permit, the parties to a conflict must endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged areas of wounded [and] sick".[129] It adds that:

> In the case of land engagement, agreements between commanders, whether by armistice or cease-fire, may be made for the exchange, removal and transport of the wounded left on the field. In both land and sea engagements, arrangements may also be made for the removal of the wounded and sick from a besieged area and for the passage of medical personnel and chaplains proceeding to such an area.[130]

133. Canada's Code of Conduct states that "whenever circumstances permit, a suspension of fire shall be arranged or local arrangements made to permit the removal of the sick, wounded and dead, and the exchange and transport of the wounded and sick".[131]
134. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual provides that evacuation of wounded and sick can take place during combat, after combat or during a cease-fire.[132]
135. Croatia's LOAC Compendium provides that "whenever the tactical situation permits, all wounded and sick must be ... evacuated".[133]
136. The Military Manual of the Dominican Republic states that "wounded prisoners and captives shall be evacuated as soon as possible to the rear through medical channels".[134]
137. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "whenever circumstances permit, an armistice or cease-fire should be arranged to enable the wounded and sick to be located and removed to safety and medical care".[135]
138. France's LOAC Manual restates Articles 15 GC I and 18 GC II.[136]
139. Hungary's Military Manual states that "whenever the tactical situation permits, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be ... evacuated".[137]
140. According to India's police regulations, police forces "should make arrangements for the rapid evacuation to hospital by ambulance of the sick and of persons injured by police fire".[138]

[126] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 17.
[127] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 10.
[128] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[129] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 6-4, § 35. [130] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 10.
[131] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 3.
[132] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 67.
[133] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 45.
[134] Dominican Republic, Military Manual (1980), p. 8.
[135] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.4.
[136] France, LOAC Manual (2001), pp. 37 and 64. [137] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 73.
[138] India, Police Manual (1986), Article 13(xvi); West Bengal Police Regulations (1962), Article 156(a); Madras Police Standing Orders (1951), Article 667.

141. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual states that "wounded enemy combatants and shipwrecked shall be evacuated".[139]

142. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "arrangements may be made between the Parties to permit the removal, exchange and transport of the wounded left on the battlefield".[140] The manual further states that "a local cease-fire may be arranged for the removal from the besieged or encircled areas of the wounded and sick".[141]

143. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that the wounded and shipwrecked shall be evacuated.[142] It further notes that "local arrangements may be concluded for . . . evacuation of the wounded and shipwrecked".[143]

144. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "whenever circumstances permit, a cease-fire or a suspension of fire should be sought to enable the . . . removal of the wounded".[144]

145. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that:

> In the case of a land engagement, agreements between the commanders, whether by armistice or cease-fire, may be made for the exchange, removal and transport of the wounded left on the field. In both land and sea engagements, arrangements may be made for the removal of the wounded and sick from a besieged or encircled area and for the passage of medical personnel and chaplains proceeding to such an area.[145]

146. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "whenever possible, an armistice or cease-fire should be arranged or local arrangements should be made to enable the transfer, exchange and carriage of the wounded who have been left on the battlefield".[146]

147. The Military Directive to Commanders of the Philippines provides that:

> Medical teams must be made available to provide . . . evacuation to injured civilians caught in the crossfire . . .
>
> Coordination and liaison with national and local government agencies should be pursued in undertaking the following immediate tasks after [the] conduct of operations . . . rescue, evacuation and hospitalization.[147]

148. The Military Instructions of the Philippines provides that:

> In the aftermath of military or law enforcement operations involving a firefight that results in unavoidable casualties, caring for the wounded . . . must be a paramount concern of all commanders and troops at all levels . . . To increase their chances of survival, their immediate evacuation to the nearest clinic or hospital must be ensured.[148]

[139] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 75.
[140] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[141] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 4, p. 5.
[142] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-O, § 22.
[143] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-SO, § B.
[144] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.
[145] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(1), see also § 314(2).
[146] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 34.
[147] Philippines, Military Directive to Commanders (1988), Guideline 4(d) and (h).
[148] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), § 4.

149. The Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights of the Philippines provides that members of the AFP and PNP must at the earliest possible opportunity turn the enemy hors de combat (e.g. wounded, surrendered/captured) "over to higher echelons of command/office for proper disposition".[149]

150. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that wounded and sick enemy combatants shall be evacuated from the combat zone.[150]

151. Rwanda's Military Instructions states that immediate evacuation of wounded persons to the nearest clinic or hospital should be ensured.[151]

152. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that during internal disturbances, local agreements may be concluded to evacuate the wounded and allow the passage of medical assistance.[152]

153. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "'as far as circumstances permit', agreements shall be concluded to facilitate the search, removal, exchange and transport of wounded left on the battlefield".[153] It further states that "wounded and sick enemies shall be evacuated as soon as possible" and "in the same conditions as our own troops".[154] The manual specifies that "in besieged or encircled areas where there is civilian population, it shall be endeavoured to conclude local agreements with the enemy to organise the evacuation of the wounded [and] sick . . . and the passage of medical and religious personnel".[155]

154. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that "local arrangements or a temporary cease-fire shall be concluded to permit the removal, exchange and transport of wounded and sick left on the battlefield and for the evacuation or exchange of wounded and sick from a besieged or encircled area".[156]

155. According to Togo's Military Manual, "combatants shall participate in the . . . evacuation of the wounded and sick".[157] It adds that "as soon as the tactical situation permits, the wounded and sick shall be evacuated by the appropriate channel".[158]

156. The UK Military Manual states that "belligerents should endeavour to conclude local agreements for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of wounded [and] sick . . . and for the passage of ministers of all religions and medical personnel and medical equipment on their way to such areas".[159] It further states that "whenever circumstances permit, a local armistice or suspension

[149] Philippines, Joint Circular on Adherence to IHL and Human Rights (1991), § 2(a)(3).
[150] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 9.
[151] Rwanda, Military Instructions (1987), pp. 41–42.
[152] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), p. 20.
[153] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 2.4.a.(1), see also § 2.6.b.(1).
[154] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, §§ 5.2.(d).4 and 7.3.(a).11.
[155] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.4.a.
[156] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 71, see also Article 12(2).
[157] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 10.
[158] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 12.
[159] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 29, see also § 343.

of fire must be arranged to permit the removal of the wounded left on the battlefield".[160]

157. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "arrangements may be made between the parties to permit the removal, exchange and transport of the wounded left on the battlefield".[161] It also states that "in appropriate local circumstances, arrangements should be made for the evacuation by sea of the wounded and sick and for the passage of medical and religious personnel and equipment especially to besieged areas" and that "a local cease-fire may be arranged for the removal from besieged or encircled areas of the wounded and sick".[162]

158. The US Field Manual reproduces Articles 15 GC I and 18 GC II.[163]

159. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "Article 15 [GC I] . . . authorizes the conclusion of local arrangements between the parties for removal or exchange of wounded and sick from a besieged or encircled area, and for the passage of medical and religious personnel and equipment on their way thereto".[164] It adds that "parties are encouraged to conclude local arrangements for the removal of the wounded and sick by sea from besieged or encircled areas, and for the passage of medical and religious personnel and equipment on their way thereto".[165]

160. The US Soldier's Manual instructs soldiers to evacuate sick and wounded captives to the rear through medical channels "as soon as possible".[166]

161. The US Naval Handbook states that:

> When circumstances permit, an armistice or cease-fire should be arranged to enable the wounded and sick to be located and removed to safety and medical care.
> . . .
> Following each naval engagement at sea, the belligerents are obligated to take all possible measures, consistent with the security of their forces, to search for and rescue the shipwrecked.[167]

162. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that:

> At all times and especially after an engagement, all appropriate measures shall be taken without delay to . . . transport [the wounded and sick] to appropriate medical units . . . A cease-fire may be arranged in order to . . . transport wounded and sick left on the battlefield.[168]

National Legislation

163. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in both international and

[160] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 342.
[161] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 3.
[162] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 7, p. 26, § 2 and Section 9, p. 34, § 3.
[163] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 216 and 256.
[164] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2a.
[165] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-3a.
[166] US, Soldier's Manual (1984), p. 17.
[167] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11-4.
[168] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), § 164.

non-international armed conflicts, at any time and especially after an engagement, the wounded and sick shall be evacuated from the battlefield.[169]

164. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[170]

165. Under Iraq's Military Penal Code, failure to bring a wounded person to a designated location is an offence.[171]

166. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 15 GC I, 18 GC II and 17 GC IV, is a punishable offence.[172]

167. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... is liable to imprisonment".[173]

National Case-law

168. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

169. The Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina provides the following examples concerning the evacuation and transportation of the wounded and sick: instructions of the army general in November 1993 to the command of the 4th Corps regarding the evacuation of the wounded and sick;[174] approval given by the army general to the command of the 3rd Corps in December 1993 for the evacuation of 11 seriously ill persons from Vitez, with the assistance of the ICRC, as well as for the evacuation of 15 wounded HVO members;[175] and instructions of the army general to the 5th Corps in December 1993 regarding the evacuation of the wounded and sick.[176]

170. In February 1987, the French government issued a communiqué in relation to the besieged Palestinian camps in southern Lebanon and invited "the entire

[169] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 24.
[170] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[171] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Article 115C.
[172] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[173] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108(a).
[174] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Headquarters of the Supreme Command of the Armed Forces, Office of the Commander in Chief, Instructions to the 4th Corps, No. 1/297-536, 13 November 1993, Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2000, Chapter 5.1.
[175] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Headquarters of the Supreme Command of the Armed Forces, Office of the Commander in Chief, Instructions to the 3rd Corps, No. 1/297-590, 5 December 1993, Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2000, Chapter 5.1.
[176] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Headquarters of the Supreme Command of the Armed Forces, Office of the Commander in Chief, Instructions to the 5th Corps, No. 1/297-625, 13 December 1993, Report on the Practice of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2000, Chapter 5.1.

international community to mobilise and act in solidarity so that . . . wounded can be safely evacuated".[177]

171. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, during the Iran–Iraq War, Iran evacuated wounded Iraqi combatants to safe places, in accordance with the principles of Islamic law.[178]

172. The Guidelines on Evacuations adopted in 1991 by the Presidential Human Rights Committee of the Philippines provided that "non-Government health workers . . . shall be permitted to go to evacuation centers to render medical/relief assistance to evacuees".[179]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

173. In a resolution adopted in 1978 in the context of the conflict in Lebanon, the UN Security Council called upon the belligerents to allow ICRC units into the conflict area to evacuate the wounded.[180]

174. In a resolution adopted in 1985, the UN General Assembly appealed to the government of El Salvador to "permit the International Committee of the Red Cross to continue to evacuate those wounded and maimed by war to where they can receive needed medical attention".[181]

175. In a resolution adopted in 1986, the UN Commission on Human Rights reiterated the request to:

> the Government of El Salvador and the opposition forces to co-operate fully with the humanitarian organizations dedicated to alleviating the suffering of the civilian population, wherever these organizations operate in the country, and to permit the International Committee of the Red Cross to continue to evacuate those wounded and maimed by the war to places where they can receive medical attention they need.[182]

176. In a resolution adopted in 1988, the UN Commission on Human Rights requested the government of El Salvador and the FMLN "with the intention of humanizing the conflict, to continue to apply the agreements for the evacuation of war-wounded for medical attention unaffected by new [ex]changes and negotiations".[183] This request was reiterated in a subsequent resolution adopted in 1989.[184]

[177] France, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Communiqué on Palestinian camps under siege in Lebanon, 11 February 1987, Politique étrangère de la France, February 1987, p. 103.
[178] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[179] Philippines, Presidential Human Rights Committee, Resolution No. 91-001 Providing for Guidelines on Evacuations, 26 March 1991, § 5.
[180] UN Security Council, Res. 436, 6 October 1978, § 2.
[181] UN General Assembly, Res. 40/139, 13 December 1985, § 9; see also Res. 41/157, 4 December 1986, § 8.
[182] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1986/39, 12 March 1986, § 6.
[183] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1988/65, 10 March 1988, § 11.
[184] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/68, 8 March 1989, § 11.

177. In a resolution adopted in 1991, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the parties to the conflict in El Salvador to guarantee respect for IHL, "particularly with regard to the evacuation of the war-wounded and maimed in order that they may receive prompt medical attention".[185]
178. In a resolution adopted in 1987 on the situation in El Salvador, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights welcomed:

> the implementation of the agreement reached by both contending parties to allow the International Committee of the Red Cross to evacuate the war-wounded and disabled of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front without the need for exchanges or prior negotiations in order for them to receive the necessary medical care.[186]

179. In a resolution adopted in 1989, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights expressed regret that "the Government of El Salvador has continued to prevent the International Committee of the Red Cross from evacuating the war-wounded and maimed to other countries and frequently does not even allow it to transfer the seriously wounded to a local emergency hospital". It reminded "the Government of El Salvador that in accordance with Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions . . . it may not prevent [the] evacuation [of the war-wounded and disabled] by the International Committee of the Red Cross so that they may receive the medical attention they require".[187]
180. In 1996, in a report concerning Liberia, the UN Secretary-General reported that UNOMIL had facilitated discussions on the evacuation of the wounded.[188]

Other International Organisations
181. In two resolutions adopted in 1995 in the context of the conflict in Chechnya, the European Parliament called on "the Russian and Chechen sides to call an immediate humanitarian ceasefire to permit the retrieval of the . . . wounded".[189]

International Conferences
182. No practice was found.

[185] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1991/75, 6 March 1991, § 9.
[186] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1987/18, 2 September 1987, § 4.
[187] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/9, 31 August 1989, preamble and § 4, see also § 7.
[188] UN Secretary-General, 15th progress report on UNOMIL, UN Doc. S/1996/47, 23 January 1996, § 26.
[189] European Parliament, Resolution on the humanitarian situation in Chechnya and the neighbouring republics of Ingushetia, Daghestan and Northern Ossetia, 16 February 1995, § 1; Resolution on human rights in Chechnya, 16 March 1995, § 2.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

183. In the Aloeboetoe and Others case before the IACtHR in 1988, the facts as stated in the petition alleged that following an incident in which a group of soldiers arrested and shot a number of "unarmed maroons (bushnegroes)" on suspicion of membership of the Jungle Commando, "the representative of the International Red Cross received a permit to evacuate Mr. Aside [a seriously injured man] after negotiating with the authorities [of Suriname] for 24 hours".[190]

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

184. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "evacuation through the appropriate channel shall be organised and start as rapidly as the tactical situation permits" and that "local arrangements shall be concluded for the . . . evacuation of the wounded and shipwrecked".[191]

185. On numerous occasions, the ICRC has acted as a neutral intermediary and provided its good offices in order to facilitate the negotiation of truces or ceasefire agreements for the removal of wounded and sick.[192] It has been the case, in particular, in the following situations: in the Palestinian conflict (between June and August 1948);[193] during the clashes in Budapest (November 1956);[194] in the conflict between the armed forces of France and Tunisia in Bizerte (July 1961);[195] during the civil war in the Dominican Republic (May 1961);[196] during the events in Kisangani between European mercenaries and the Congolese army (July 1967);[197] during the hostilities opposing the Jordanian armed forces and Palestinian movements (September 1967);[198] during the 1973 war between Egypt and Israel (November 1973 and January 1974);[199] during the civil [190] IACtHR, Aloeboetoe and Others case, Judgement, 4 December 1991, § 15.

[191] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 507 and 535, see also § 581.
[192] François Bugnion, Le Comité International de la Croix-Rouge et la Protection des Victimes de la Guerre, ICRC, Geneva, 1994, pp. 557–564.
[193] IRRC, No. 354, June 1948, pp. 401–407; IRRC, No. 356, August 1948, pp. 552–553; IRRC, No. 357, September 1948, pp. 618–620; ICRC, Report of Mission of Mr de Reyner, 31 March 1948; ICRC, Report of Mission of Dr Lehner and Mrs Torin, 15 June 1948; ICRC, Report of Mission of Mr de Reyner, January 1948–July 1949.
[194] IRRC, No. 456, December 1956, p. 720.
[195] IRRC, No. 515, November 1961, p. 530; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1961, pp. 18341–18343.
[196] IRRC, No. 558, June 1965, p. 283; IRRC, No. 559, July 1965, pp. 335–337; ICRC, Annual Report 1965, Geneva, 1966, pp. 39–42; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1965, pp. 20813–20818.
[197] IRRC, No. 584, August 1967, pp. 371–372; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1967, p. 22188.
[198] IRRC, No. 622, October 1970, pp. 618–624; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1970, p. 24230.
[199] IRRC, No. 660, December 1973, pp. 728–729; IRRC, No. 662, February 1974, pp. 92–93; ICRC, Annual Report 1973, Geneva, 1974, pp. 12–13; ICRC, Annual Report 1974, Geneva, 1975, p. 20; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1973, pp. 26202–26203.

war in Lebanon (August 1976 and 1981),[200] during the civil war in Nicaragua (September 1978);[201] during the civil war in Chad (February and March 1979);[202] and during the Israeli offensive in Lebanon (August and September 1982).[203]

186. In a communication to the press in 1991, the ICRC urged all the parties to the conflict in Somalia to help the Red Cross and Red Crescent "in evacuating the wounded".[204]

187. In 1992, the ICRC reminded a State of its obligation to transfer the wounded to places where they could receive adequate medical care.[205]

188. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "when [the wounded and sick] cannot receive the care needed for their survival on the spot, their evacuation shall be organized and facilitated, insofar as the security situation permits".[206]

189. In a communication to the press issued in 1996 in the context of the conflict in Chechnya, the ICRC called upon the parties to do everything possible to facilitate the evacuation of the wounded and sick to hospitals.[207] In another communication to the press later the same year, the ICRC appealed to the parties to provide security guarantees to enable its delegates to evacuate the wounded.[208]

VI. Other Practice

190. In 1984, in the context of the conflict in East Timor, a statement issued by the head of the FRETILIN external delegation referred to an incident in which a FALINTIL unit was forced to withdraw when Indonesian helicopters intervened to evacuate the wounded after an attack.[209]

[200] IRRC, No. 692, August 1976, pp. 477–478; IRRC, No. 693, September 1976, pp. 545–546; ICRC, Annual Report 1976, Geneva, 1977, p. 6; ICRC, Annual Report 1981, Geneva, 1982, pp. 52–53; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1976, pp. 28119–28121.

[201] IRRC, No. 713, September–October 1978, p. 293; IRRC, No. 717, May–June 1979, pp. 160–161; IRRC, No. 718, July–August 1979, pp. 206–207; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1978, p. 29375.

[202] IRRC, No. 716, March–April 1979, pp. 95–96; IRRC, No. 723, May–June 1980, pp. 148–150; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1981, p. 30693.

[203] IRRC, No. 737, September–October 1982, p. 305; ICRC, Annual Report 1982, Geneva, 1983, pp. 56–57; Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1983, pp. 31914–31920.

[204] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 91/49, Desperate situation in Mogadishu, 29 November 1991.

[205] ICRC archive document.

[206] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

[207] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 96/10, Chechen conflict: ICRC appeal, 8 March 1996, § 2.

[208] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 96/25, Russian Federation/Chechnya: ICRC calls on all parties to observe a truce, 10 August 1996, § 1.

[209] São Tomé and Principe, Documents on the question of East Timor submitted to the UN Secretariat, UN Doc. A/39/345-S/16668, 16 July 1984, Annex, p. 14.

B. Treatment and Care of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked

Medical care

Note: For practice concerning humane treatment of the wounded and sick, see Chapter 32, section A. For practice concerning the provision of basic necessities to persons deprived of their liberty, including medical care, see Chapter 37, section A.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

191. Article 6 of the 1864 GC provides that "wounded or sick combatants, to whatever nation they may belong, shall be . . . cared for".

192. Common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions provides that "the wounded and sick shall be . . . cared for". (Article 3 GC II adds the shipwrecked)

193. Article 12, second paragraph, GC I and Article 12, second paragraph, GC II provide that members of the armed forces who are wounded, sick or shipwrecked shall be "cared for by the Party to the conflict in whose power they may be . . . [T]hey shall not wilfully be left without medical assistance and care, nor shall conditions exposing them to contagion or infection be created".

194. Article 15, first paragraph, GC I provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures . . . to ensure . . . adequate care" of the wounded and sick.

195. Article 18, first and second paragraphs, GC I states that:

> The military authorities may appeal to the charity of the inhabitants voluntarily to . . . care for, under their direction, the wounded and sick, granting persons who have responded to this appeal the necessary protection and facilities . . .
>
> The military authorities shall permit the inhabitants and relief societies, even in invaded or occupied areas, spontaneously to collect and care for wounded or sick of whatever nationality.

196. Article 18, first paragraph, GC II provides that "after each engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures . . . to ensure . . . adequate care" of the shipwrecked, wounded and sick.

197. Article 21, first paragraph, GC II states that "the Parties to the conflict may appeal to the charity of commanders of neutral merchant vessels, yachts or other craft, to take on board . . . wounded, sick or shipwrecked persons".

198. Article 16, first paragraph, GC IV provides that the wounded and sick "shall be the object of particular protection and respect".

199. Article 10 AP I provides that:

1. All the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, to whichever Party they belong, shall be respected and protected.
2. In all circumstances, they shall receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition.

Article 10 AP I was adopted by consensus.[210]

200. Article 17(2) AP I provides that "the Parties to the conflict may appeal to the civilian population and the aid societies referred to in paragraph 1 [i.e. aid societies, such as national Red Cross (Red Crescent, Red Lion and Sun) Societies] to . . . care for the wounded, sick and shipwrecked". Article 17 AP I was adopted by consensus.[211]

201. Article 7 AP II provides with regard to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked that:

1. All the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, whether or not they have taken part in the armed conflict, shall be respected and protected.
2. In all circumstances they shall be treated humanely and shall receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition.

Article 7 AP II was adopted by consensus.[212]

202. Article 8 AP II provides that "whenever circumstances permit, and particularly after an engagement, all possible measures shall be taken, without delay . . . to ensure . . . adequate care" of the wounded and sick. Article 8 AP II was adopted by consensus.[213]

203. Article 18(1) AP II provides that "the civilian population may, even on its own initiative, offer to . . . care for the wounded, sick and shipwrecked". Article 18 AP II was adopted by consensus.[214]

204. Article 7(b)(2) of the 1987 NATO STANAG 2067 provides that "stragglers requiring medical care should be treated".

Other Instruments

205. Article 79 of the 1863 Lieber Code provides that "every captured wounded enemy shall be medically treated, according to the ability of the medical staff".

206. Article 10 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "wounded or sick soldiers shall be brought in and cared for".

207. Article 6 of the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials provides that "law enforcement officials shall ensure the full protection of the health of persons in their custody and, in particular, shall take immediate action to secure medical attention whenever required". The commentary on the Article states that:

While the medical personnel are likely to be attached to the law enforcement operation, law enforcement officials must take into account the judgement of such personnel when they recommend providing the person in custody with appropriate

[210] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 69.
[211] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 70.
[212] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 109.
[213] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 110.
[214] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.53, 6 June 1977, p. 150.

treatment through, or in consultation with, medical personnel from outside the law enforcement operation.

208. Article 3(a) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict . . . the wounded and the sick shall have the right to medical treatment".
209. In paragraphs 1 and 2 of the 1991 Hague Statement on Respect for Humanitarian Principles, the Presidents of the six republics of the former Yugoslavia undertook to apply the principle that "wounded and ill persons must be helped and protected in all circumstances".
210. Paragraph 1 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "all wounded and sick on land shall be treated in accordance with the provisions of the First Geneva Convention".
211. Paragraph 2.1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that in all circumstances, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked "shall receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition".
212. Article 4(2) and (9) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "the wounded and the sick shall be collected and cared for by the party to the armed conflict which has them in its custody or responsibility" and that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, . . . to ensure their adequate care".
213. Section 9.1 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that "members of the armed forces and other persons in the power of the United Nations force who are wounded or sick shall . . . receive the medical care and attention required by their condition".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

214. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "appeal can be made to the civilian population for the . . . care of the wounded and sick".[215]
215. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) refers to Articles 10 AP I and 7 AP II and states that "in all circumstances, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked of either party shall be respected, protected . . . and shall receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, appropriate medical care".[216]
216. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "wounded, sick and shipwrecked combatants are to be afforded necessary medical care".[217] It also

[215] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.006.
[216] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.03.
[217] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 622.

provides that "civilians in enemy territory are protected persons and as such must be afforded necessary medical treatment".[218]

217. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "parties to a conflict must take all possible measures to ... ensure ... care" of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked.[219] It adds that wounded, sick and shipwrecked combatants shall not be "left without proper medical care and attention, or ... exposed to conditions which might result in contagion or infection".[220]

218. Belgium's Law of War Manual refers to common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and provides that the wounded and sick shall be cared for.[221]

219. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers states that "if operations so permit, the wounded must be ... cared for".[222]

220. Benin's Military Manual provides that "the wounded and sick shall be ... cared for by the party to the conflict in whose power they may be".[223] The manual instructs soldiers to "care for and protect" wounded enemy combatants.[224]

221. Bosnia and Herzegovina's Military Instructions provides that "the wounded and sick who have ceased to resist ... must be provided with medical care and assistance".[225]

222. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "whenever circumstances permit, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be ... protected and cared for".[226]

223. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "when circumstances so permit, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be ... cared for".[227]

224. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that "wounded enemy combatants shall be cared for".[228] It also states that "an appeal may be launched to the civilian population to help National Societies of the Red Cross and Red Crescent to ... care for the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[229]

225. Canada's LOAC Manual states that AP I "also contains provisions amplifying the obligation to care for persons protected by GC I and GC II" and that "the innovation of AP I in this area is to extend the scope of the earlier Conventions so that civilians as well as military personnel are entitled to protection".[230] It also provides that "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall not

[218] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 609.
[219] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 986.
[220] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 990(b)–(c).
[221] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 17.
[222] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), pp. 16–17, see also p. 32.
[223] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 4, see also pp. 9 and 12.
[224] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule I, p. 16, see also Fascicule III, p. 5.
[225] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Military Instructions (1992), § 14(1)
[226] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(1).
[227] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 31.
[228] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 40, § 152, p. 44, § 163(1) and p. 149, § 531(2).
[229] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 96.
[230] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 2.

be left without proper medical care".[231] The manual further states that "appeals may be made to local inhabitants and relief societies to . . . care for the wounded and sick. Such inhabitants and relief societies, even in occupied or invaded territory, shall be permitted spontaneously to . . . care for such personnel."[232] In the case of non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "after an engagement and whenever circumstances permit, all possible steps must be taken without delay . . . to ensure . . . adequate care" of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[233]

226. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "in all circumstances [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] shall . . . receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition".[234] It also provides that "military authorities may ask the inhabitants in the area of conflict to voluntarily . . . care for the wounded under their direction".[235]

227. Colombia's Basic Military Manual provides that all wounded and sick combatants shall be cared for.[236]

228. Colombia's Instructors' Manual provides that "wounded enemy combatants must be cared for".[237]

229. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that "the wounded and sick shall be . . . cared for by the parties to the conflict".[238]

230. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations states that "when circumstances so permit, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be . . . cared for".[239]

231. Croatia's Commanders' Manual states that adequate care must be taken of the wounded and shipwrecked.[240]

232. Croatia's LOAC Compendium, Commanders' Manual and Soldiers' Manual instruct soldiers to protect civilian boats that rescue the shipwrecked.[241]

233. Croatia's Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL requires that the wounded and sick be cared for.[242]

234. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that wounded and sick members of the armed forces shall be cared for.[243]

235. El Salvador's Soldiers' Manual provides that wounded and sick persons shall be assisted and cared for in all circumstances.[244]

[231] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 18.
[232] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-2, § 12.
[233] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 32.
[234] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 1.
[235] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 10, § 8.
[236] Colombia, Basic Military Manual (1995), p. 21.
[237] Colombia, Instructors' Manual (1999), p. 24; see also Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 20.
[238] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), § 3.
[239] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32.
[240] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), Rule 16.
[241] Croatia, LOAC Compendium (1991), p. 45; Commanders' Manual (1992), Rules 71 and 75–76; Soldiers' Manual (1992), p. 3.
[242] Croatia, Instructions on Basic Rules of IHL (1993), Nos. 1–3.
[243] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.4.
[244] El Salvador, Soldiers' Manual (undated), p. 7.

236. France's LOAC Summary Note provides that the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be . . . cared for . . . by the Party to the conflict in whose power they may be".[245]

237. France's LOAC Teaching Note provides that the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be . . . cared for . . . by the Party to the conflict in whose power they may be".[246]

238. France's LOAC Manual provides that the "authorities are responsible for the health and physical integrity of the persons in their power. They commit war crimes if they refuse to provide them with medical care or if they deliberately place their health in danger."[247]

239. Germany's Soldiers' Manual provides that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be cared for.[248]

240. Germany's Military Manual states that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be cared for.[249] It adds that "at all times all possible measures shall be taken to . . . ensure their adequate medical assistance".[250] The manual also provides that "civilians and help organisations such as, for example, the National Red Cross or Red Crescent Society are permitted to . . . care for the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[251]

241. Hungary's Military Manual makes an explicit reference to GC I as being the regime applicable to the wounded and sick.[252]

242. India's Police Manual states that "police should be ready to render First Aid to the injured and should make arrangements for the speedy transport of such injured persons to the hospital".[253]

243. India's Army Training Note states that "on humanitarian grounds, medical help and care has to be provided to sick and wounded of even an enemy as laid down in [the] Geneva Conventions". The manual explains that the denial of medical care is most likely to occur because of a shortage of medicine and doctors; because troops may give priority to their own wounded and sick; because wounded insurgents or terrorists may have themselves killed or injured armed forces personnel in an ambush or a raid; and because the sick and wounded may sympathise with or harbour insurgents or terrorists. The manual warns, however, that the denial of medical care may lead to allegations and charges of "(a) inhuman behaviour, (b) cruelty to fellow human beings, [or] (c) death due to the carelessness and negligence of Armed Forces personnel".[254] With respect to a situation where the armed forces are called upon to assist the civilian authorities, the manual states that, after firing, "immediate steps should be taken to succour the wounded rioters" and that "it is most important that

[245] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1.
[246] France, LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[247] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 32.
[248] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 5.
[249] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 601.
[250] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 605.
[251] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 632.
[252] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 86.
[253] India, Police Manual (1986), p. 39, Article 13(xvi).
[254] India, Army Training Note (1995), Appendix Y, § 5.

the best possible arrangements for first aid, medical attention and evacuation to hospital of injured rioters are made".[255]

244. Indonesia's Military Manual provides that the wounded and sick must be cared for.[256]

245. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, "it is imperative to tend to the enemy's wounded".[257] The manual further provides that:

> Belonging to combatant forces entitles the combatant to special rights when he steps out of the sphere of hostilities by surrendering, being taken as a prisoner of war, injury or loss of fighting ability. Such a combatant is entitled to the status of a prisoner of war, according him medical treatment.[258]

246. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that "wounded and shipwrecked enemy combatants shall be cared for and evacuated to the rear".[259]

247. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that as soon as the tactical situation permits, "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be cared for".[260] The manual contains the same provision with regard to captured enemy combatants.[261] It also provides that "commanders may appeal to the civilian population, to aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies . . . [to] care for the wounded and shipwrecked".[262]

248. Lebanon's Teaching Manual instructs combatants to care for the wounded and shipwrecked.[263]

249. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that one of the seven fundamental rules of IHL is that "the wounded and sick shall be cared for by the power in whose hands they are". It instructs soldiers: "Care for them . . . Hand them over to your superior . . . or to the nearest medical personnel."[264]

250. Under Mali's Army Regulations, "refusal to . . . care for the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, when the circumstances so permit," constitutes a breach of the laws and customs of war.[265]

251. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "when circumstances so permit, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be . . . cared for".[266]

252. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "the wounded and sick may not be left without medical care and attention".[267] With respect to [255] India, Army Training Note (1995), p. 13, § 19(b).

[256] Indonesia, Military Manual (1982), §§ 36–37.
[257] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 44.
[258] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 46.
[259] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 75.
[260] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, pp. 10–11.
[261] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 15 and Précis No. 3, p. 7.
[262] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[263] Lebanon, Teaching Manual (1997), pp. 77–78.
[264] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 4-T, § 2.2(22) and p. 91, Rule 3, see also Fiche No. 2-T, § 21.
[265] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[266] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(4).
[267] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2.

non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that the "wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall receive medical care".[268]

253. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "all wounded and sick must be cared for".[269]

254. The IFOR Instructions of the Netherlands instructs soldiers to "care for [the wounded] whether friend or foe".[270]

255. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the sick, wounded and shipwrecked members of the armed forces and others entitled to be treated as combatants ... shall not be ... left without proper medical care and attention; nor exposed to conditions which might result in contagion or infection".[271] It also provides that "appeals may be made to the charity and humanity of the local inhabitants and relief societies to ... care for the wounded and sick".[272] In the case of non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that all possible steps must be taken to ensure the adequate care of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked.[273]

256. Nicaragua's Military Manual provides that in both internal and international armed conflicts, the wounded and sick shall be cared for.[274]

257. Nigeria's Operational Code of Conduct states that "all wounded military and civilians will be given necessary medical attention and care".[275]

258. Nigeria's Military Manual provides that "the wounded and sick shall be cared for by the party to the conflict in whose power they may be".[276] It further states that "as soon as the tactical situation permits, necessary measures shall be taken to ... care for the wounded [and] shipwrecked".[277]

259. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that the wounded and sick who are in the power of a belligerent must be cared for and that it is prohibited to leave the wounded and sick "without assistance and care or to create conditions that could lead to epidemics or infections".[278]

260. Nigeria's Soldiers' Code of Conduct states that the wounded and shipwrecked enemies "shall be ... treated or handed over to a superior or the nearest medical personnel".[279]

261. The Military Directive to Commanders of the Philippines provides that:

> Medical teams must be made available to provide emergency medical attention ... to injured civilians caught in the crossfire ...

[268] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[269] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-37.
[270] Netherlands, IFOR Instructions (1995), § 6.
[271] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1004(1).
[272] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(4).
[273] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1817.
[274] Nicaragua, Military Manual (1996), Articles 6 and 14.
[275] Nigeria, Operational Code of Conduct (1967), § 4(k).
[276] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 13, § 4.
[277] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 46, § 16(g), see also p. 39, § 5(f) and (h).
[278] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[279] Nigeria, Soldiers' Code of Conduct (undated), § 6.

To demonstrate AFP and government concern for the population, military civic action shall be undertaken immediately after the operation. This includes such immediate tasks as providing medical aid to sick and wounded civilians; procuring and distributing food and shelter to displaced persons; and, restoring vital facilities.[280]

262. The Military Instructions of the Philippines provides that:

In the aftermath of military or law enforcement operations involving firefight that results in unavoidable casualties, caring for the wounded . . . which includes our own troops, the enemy and particularly innocent civilians must be a paramount concern of all commanders and troops at all levels. In the scene of the incident, all wounded must be treated with care and their wounds attended by providing them with first aid.[281]

263. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines requires soldiers to care for the wounded and sick.[282]

264. The Police Rules of Engagement of the Philippines states that, after a shoot-out and "in case the suspect has been wounded and disabled, he shall be brought . . . to the nearest hospital for medical treatment".[283]

265. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that "wounded and sick enemy combatants shall be given first aid and brought to superiors or nearest sanitary personnel".[284]

266. Russia's Military Manual provides that "military commanders may appeal to the charity of the local population to voluntarily . . . care for the wounded and sick. The military authorities must permit the inhabitants and relief societies, even in invaded or occupied areas, spontaneously to . . . care for wounded or sick."[285]

267. Rwanda's Military Instructions provides that those wounded and sick during combat must be hospitalised.[286]

268. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "when circumstances so permit, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be . . . cared for".[287]

269. South Africa's LOAC Manual states that the wounded and sick "shall receive, to the fullest possible extent and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition".[288]

270. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "as soon as the tactical situation permits, all measures shall be taken to care for the wounded and shipwrecked".[289]

[280] Philippines, Military Directive to Commanders (1988), p. 28, Guidelines 4(d)–(e).
[281] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), § 4.
[282] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 5.
[283] Philippines, Police Rules of Engagement (1993), Section 4(f).
[284] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), pp. 10–12, see also p. 32.
[285] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 15.
[286] Rwanda, Military Instructions (1987), pp. 41–42.
[287] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(1).
[288] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 31.
[289] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.d.2.(5).

It adds that enemy wounded must be brought to the commander or to the nearest medical post.[290]

271. Sweden's Military Manual provides that the wounded and sick, whether civilians or combatants, shall receive medical care.[291]

272. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that Article 10 AP I on the protection of the wounded, the sick and the shipwrecked and Article 17 AP I on the role of aid organisations have the status of customary law.[292]

273. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that the wounded and sick shall be cared for and states that the refusal to provide care to the wounded is a grave breach of the Geneva Conventions.[293] It also states that "appeal may be made to civilians or civilian relief societies to ... care for the wounded".[294]

274. Togo's Military Manual provides that the "wounded and sick shall be cared for by the Party to the conflict in whose power they may be".[295] The manual instructs soldiers to "care for and protect" wounded enemy combatants.[296]

275. Uganda's Code of Conduct instructs soldiers to render medical treatment to members of the public who may be in the territory of the unit.[297]

276. The UK Military Manual states that in international armed conflicts, "the wounded and sick must be cared for by the belligerents in whose power they are".[298] It also provides that:

> The military authorities may appeal to the charitable zeal of local inhabitants to ... care for the wounded and sick, under their direction, granting to those who respond to this appeal special protection and facilities. The inhabitants, as also relief societies, must be permitted spontaneously to ... care for wounded and sick, whatever nationality.[299]

277. The UK LOAC Manual states that "combatants are required to ... ensure ... adequate care" of the shipwrecked, wounded and sick.[300] It also provides that "military authorities must allow the local population and relief societies to ... tend the wounded and sick".[301] The manual also restates the provisions of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and specifies that, in the case of non-international armed conflicts, the wounded and sick shall be cared for.[302]

278. The US Field Manual provides that the "wounded and sick shall be cared for by the party to the conflict in whose power they may be" and that "they shall not wilfully be left without medical assistance and care, nor shall conditions

[290] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 10.6.b.(3) and 10.6.c.
[291] Sweden, Military Manual (1976), p. 16.
[292] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 18.
[293] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 69, 70(1) and 192(1).
[294] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 75.
[295] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 4, see also pp. 8 and 12.
[296] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule I, p. 17, see also Fascicule III, p. 5.
[297] Uganda, Code of Conduct (1986), Rule 7.
[298] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 339.
[299] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 345.
[300] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 7, p. 26, § 2.
[301] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 6.
[302] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 12, p. 42, § 2.

exposing them to contagion or infection be created".[303] The manual reproduces Articles 15 and 18 GC I.[304]

279. The US Air Force Pamphlet provides that "military authorities shall permit the inhabitants and relief societies spontaneously to . . . care for wounded of all nationalities". It also reproduces Article 12 GC I.[305]

280. The US Instructor's Guide reproduces Article 12 GC I.[306]

281. The US Naval Handbook provides that parties shall take all possible measures to ensure the care of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked.[307]

National Legislation

282. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who "deprives a protected person of, or does not provide, necessary medical care".[308]

283. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in both international and non-international armed conflicts, "the Armed Forces of the Azerbaijan Republic and appropriate authorities and governmental bodies shall ensure [in all circumstances and with the least possible delay] medical assistance and care needed for the wounded and sick".[309]

284. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[310]

285. China's Criminal Code as amended provides for the punishment of "those working in medical aid or medical treatment positions during wartime who refuse to save or treat seriously injured or critically sick servicemen when conditions permit them to do so".[311]

286. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on "anyone who, during an armed conflict, fails to rescue and provide assistance to protected persons, while having an obligation to do so".[312]

287. Cuba's Military Criminal Code punishes the failure to fulfil the obligations concerning care and treatment of the wounded and sick.[313]

288. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who does not take measures or obstructs measures to protect or provide assistance to the wounded.[314]

[303] US, Field Manual (1956), § 215. [304] US, Field Manual (1956), §§ 216 and 219.
[305] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a). [306] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), p. 8.
[307] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.4.
[308] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(4) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[309] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 25.
[310] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[311] China, Criminal Code as amended (1997), Article 445.
[312] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 152.
[313] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Article 42(2).
[314] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(2)(a).

289. Under the Draft Amendments to the Penal Code of El Salvador, anyone who prevents medical personnel from providing the medical and humanitarian relief that according to IHL they are entitled to provide is punishable.[315]
290. Under Estonia's Penal Code, "refusal to provide assistance to a sick, wounded or shipwrecked person in a war zone, if such refusal causes the death of or damage to the health of that person" is a war crime.[316]
291. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 12 and 15 GC I, 12 and 18 GC II and 16 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 10 AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 7(2) and 8 AP II, are punishable offences.[317]
292. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[318]
293. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended provides for the punishment of anyone who does not take measures or obstructs measures to protect or provide assistance to the wounded.[319]
294. Spain's Penal Code punishes the deprivation of necessary medical aid.[320]
295. Under Ukraine's Criminal Code, failure to fulfil the obligation to provide medical treatment and care to the wounded and sick constitutes a war crime.[321]
296. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of the soldier who "fails to assist a surrendered enemy in cases of shipwreck, fire, explosion, earthquake or similar accidents". It also punishes the soldier who does not assist, when possible, his own comrades in distress.[322]
297. Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended punishes "those who deny or impede assistance to the wounded and sick".[323]
298. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of "any person who . . . fails to care for or give medical treatment to a wounded soldier".[324]

National Case-law

299. In the Military Junta case in 1985, Argentina's National Court of Appeals established that, in a situation of internal violence, wounded persons should receive adequate treatment.[325]

[315] El Salvador, Draft Amendments to the Penal Code (1998), Article entitled "Omision y obstaculización de medidas de socorro y asistencia humanitaria".
[316] Estonia, Penal Code (2001), § 100.
[317] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[318] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[319] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 263(2)(a).
[320] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 609.
[321] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 434.
[322] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58(20)–(21)
[323] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(4).
[324] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 271(1).
[325] Argentina, National Court of Appeals, Military Junta case, Judgement, 9 December 1985.

Other National Practice

300. The briefing notes prepared by the Office of the Attorney General of Australia and cleared by the Defence Forces for debate on the 1991 Geneva Conventions Amendment Bill stated that AP II had produced some important principles, including "general duties of care for the wounded and sick".[326]

301. The Report on the Practice of Colombia states that Colombia authorizes the Colombian Red Cross or the ICRC to render aid to the wounded.[327]

302. According to the Report on the Practice of Egypt "in application of its long dated experience, Egypt considers the . . . care for wounded [and] sick . . . as a tradition which should be respected at all times and in any circumstance, particularly in time of military operations".[328]

303. Under the instructions given to the French armed forces for the conduct of Opération Mistral, simulating a military operation under the right of self-defence or a mandate of the UN Security Council, "the wounded and sick, whether civilian or military, must be respected, collected, respected and cared for".[329]

304. In 1985, the government of Honduras reported to the IACiHR that medical professionals were caring for an individual wounded during an incident in a refugee camp by a member of a Honduran patrol.[330]

305. According to the Report on the Practice of India, there is an obligation to provide immediate medical treatment to those who are injured in police firing.[331]

306. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, during the Iran–Iraq War, Iran brought wounded Iraqi combatants to safe places and treated them in accordance with Islamic principles which, according to Iran's opinio juris, require that wounded and sick combatants be cared for.[332]

307. With reference to two communiqués issued by the General Military Commander in September 1970, the Report on the Practice of Jordan states that Jordan "made sure that adequate care to the wounded during the internal armed conflict which occurred in its territory in 1970 was provided".[333]

308. According to the Report on the Practice of Malaysia, enemy sick or wounded are handed over to the police, who are under an obligation to provide the necessary medical treatment.[334]

[326] Australia, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Geneva Protocols: Geneva Convention Amendment Bill, Doc. DFAT-92/013031 Pt 8, 13 February 1991, p. 2.
[327] Report on the Practice of Colombia, 1998, Chapter 5.1, referring to Program Presidencial para la defensa de la libertad personal, Bogotá, April 1996, p. 17.
[328] Report on the Practice of Egypt, 1997, Chapter 5.7.
[329] France, Etat-major de la Force d'Action Rapide, Ordres pour l'Opération Mistral, 1995, Section 6, § 62.
[330] IACiHR, Case 9619 (Honduras), Resolution, 28 March 1987, § 4.
[331] Report on the Practice of India, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[332] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[333] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Chapter 5.1, referring to Communiqué from the General Military Commander, 18 September 1970 and Communiqué from the General Military Commander, 24 September 1970.
[334] Report on the Practice of Malaysia, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

309. According to the Report on the Practice of the Philippines:

> In an armed conflict where guerilla warfare is the strategy used, distinguishing between civilians and combatants is very difficult. This is precisely the reason why the Philippines have adopted the same rules for both civilians and combatants with regard to the ... care of the wounded [and] sick.[335]

310. In 1989, when submitting information on the rights of detainees for consideration by the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Portugal stated that where firearms were used, those wounded had to be given first aid as soon as possible.[336]

311. In 1997, a senior officer of the RPF in Rwanda declared to a gathering of diplomats and NGO representatives that civilians caught in crossfire were being brought to hospital by members of the RPF in order to receive care.[337]

312. In its report on "Gross violations of human rights" committed between 1960 and 1993, South Africa's Truth and Reconciliation Commission stated that it had evidence from the war in south-west Africa that "on occasion, badly wounded SWAPO fighters were ... not given medical treatment".[338]

313. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that the wounded and sick in internal armed conflicts should be respected and protected in accordance with Article 7 AP II. They must receive the medical care required by their condition.[339]

314. In 1975, the government of Uruguay informed the IACiHR that a prisoner who was shot and seriously injured during an escape attempt was immediately given first aid and brought to a military hospital for surgery.[340]

315. In 1991, in a document entitled "Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia", the Ministry of Defence of the SFRY (FRY) included the following example: "It was quite normal to prevent assistance to be provided to the wounded YPA soldiers ... Civilian hospitals and clinics have refused to provide medical assistance to the wounded and sick soldiers and their dependants."[341]

316. According to the Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, "Zimbabwe seems to regard as customary, the rules of international practice codified in the Geneva Conventions as regards the ... care of the wounded".[342]

[335] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[336] Portugal, Report on the Administration of Justice and the Human Rights of Detainees submitted to the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, UN Doc. E/CN.4/Sub.2/1989/20/Add.1, 15 June 1989, §§ 54 and 61(d).
[337] "Vers la fin de l'aventure des infiltrés", La Nouvelle Relève, No. 346, 15 August 1997, pp. 1–2.
[338] South Africa, Truth and Reconciliation Commission Report, 1998, Vol. 2, p. 54, § 47.
[339] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[340] IACiHR, Case 1954 (Uruguay), Resolution, 6 March 1981, § 5.
[341] SFRY (FRY), Ministry of Defence, Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia, July 1991, § 3(i)–(ii); see also Secretariat of the Federal Executive Council, Press Release, Statement by Lieutenant-General Marko Negovanovic, Belgrade, 2 July 1991.
[342] Report on the Practice of Zimbabwe, 1998, Chapter 5.1.

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

317. In a resolution adopted in 1984, the UN Commission on Human Rights called on all parties to the conflict in El Salvador to respect and protect the wounded from all sides.[343]

318. In a resolution adopted in 1991, the UN Commission on Human Rights called upon the parties "to guarantee respect for the humanitarian rules applicable to non-international armed conflicts such as that in El Salvador, particularly with regard to the evacuation of the war wounded and maimed in order that they receive prompt medical attention".[344]

319. In a resolution adopted in 1989, the UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights reminded:

> the Government of El Salvador that in accordance with Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions, it must respect and give protection to the war-wounded and disabled, it may not prevent their evacuation by the International Committee of the Red Cross so that they may receive the medical attention they require.[345]

320. In 1995, in a report on the situation of human rights in Burundi, the Special Rapporteur of the UN Commission on Human Rights condemned the alleged practice of both parties of refusing to provide medical care to the wounded brought to clinics or hospitals.[346]

321. In 1997, in a report on the situation of human rights in Nigeria, the UN Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions and the UN Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers expressed their particular concern that the government of Nigeria had "reportedly denied medical care to detainees suffering from allegedly life-threatening conditions".[347]

322. In 1992, in a report concerning El Salvador, the Director of the Human Rights Division of ONUSAL reported that the wounded and sick were entitled to immediate care, failure to observe this rule of conduct being a serious violation of the norms of IHL.[348]

[343] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1984/52, 14 March 1984, § 5.
[344] UN Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1991/75, 6 March 1991, § 9.
[345] UN Sub-Commission on Human Rights, Res. 1989/9, 31 August 1989, § 4, see also § 3.
[346] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Burundi, Initial report, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1996/16, 14 November 1995, § 121.
[347] UN Commission on Human Rights, Special Rapporteur on Extrajudicial, Summary or Arbitrary Executions and Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers, Report on the situation of human rights in Nigeria, UN Doc. E/CN.4/1997/62/Add.1, 24 March 1997, § 76.
[348] ONUSAL, Director of the Human Rights Division, Report for November and December 1991, UN Doc. A/46/876-S/23580, 19 February 1992, Annex, § 170.

Other International Organisations

323. In 1995, the Rapporteur of the Council of Europe on the human rights situation in Chechnya reported two cases in which wounded Russian soldiers were attacked in hospitals but noted that these incidents were isolated and did not derive from a deliberate policy of the Chechen authorities.[349]

324. In a resolution adopted in 1985 on the situation in Afghanistan, the European Parliament demanded that the USSR allow the ICRC access to care for the wounded.[350]

325. In a resolution on Yemen adopted in 1964, the Council of the League of Arab States decided "to call upon the International Committee of the Red Cross to take the initiative of providing care for the wounded and help for the victims".[351]

International Conferences

326. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

327. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

328. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that:

> Commanders may appeal to the civilian population, to aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies and to commanders of neutral merchant vessels, yachts or other craft, to . . . care for the wounded and shipwrecked . . .
>
> Civilian persons and aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies shall be permitted, even on their own initiative, to . . . care for the wounded and shipwrecked. No one shall be harmed, prosecuted or punished for such acts . . .
>
> The wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be . . . cared for . . .
>
> The wounded and sick shall receive the medical care and attention required by their state of health.[352]

329. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "the wounded, the sick and the shipwrecked must be . . . cared for".[353]

[349] Council of Europe, Parliamentary Assembly, Opinion on Russia's request for membership in the light of the situation in Chechnya, Doc. 7231, 2 February 1995, § 75.
[350] European Parliament, Resolution on the situation in Afghanistan, 31 December 1985, § 1.
[351] League of Arab States, Council, Res. 1984, 31 March 1964, § 3.
[352] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 485, 486, 504 and 728.
[353] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.

330. In two press releases issued in 1991 in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC reminded the parties that "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked members of the armed forces must be cared for; [and] the wounded, whether civilian or military, . . . must receive special consideration and protection".[354]

331. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC urged all the parties involved in the conflict in Tajikistan to ensure the protection of civilian and military victims and in particular "to ensure that the wounded and sick were cared for in all circumstances, regardless of the side to which they belong".[355]

332. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC urged all parties to the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh "to ensure that the wounded and sick are cared for in all circumstances".[356]

333. In a communication to the press in 1993, the ICRC enjoined the parties to the conflict in Somalia to "care for wounded and sick".[357]

334. In a press release in 1994, the ICRC reminded the parties to the conflict in Afghanistan that the sick and wounded must be respected in all circumstances.[358]

335. In a declaration issued in 1994 in the context of the conflict between the Mexican government and the EZLN, the Mexican Red Cross, basing itself on the Geneva Conventions and AP I, which it considered applicable to the situation in Chiapas, stated that the parties were under an obligation to protect and care for wounded persons in their power.[359]

336. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "all the wounded and sick, both civilian and military, must be . . . cared for".[360]

337. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC emphasised that "all the wounded and sick must be . . . cared for, without distinction, in accordance with the provisions laid down primarily in the First and Fourth Geneva Conventions".[361]

[354] ICRC, Press Release No. 1658, Gulf War: ICRC Reminds States of their Obligations, 17 January 1991, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 26; Press Release No. 1659, Middle East Conflict: ICRC Appeals to Belligerents, 1 February 1991, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 27.

[355] ICRC, Press Release, Tajikistan: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, ICRC Dushanbe, 25 November 1992.

[356] ICRC, Press Release No. 1670, Nagorno-Karabakh: ICRC calls for respect for humanitarian law, 12 March 1992.

[357] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 93/17, Somalia: ICRC appeals for compliance with international humanitarian law, 17 June 1993.

[358] ICRC, Press Release No. 1764, Afghanistan: ICRC calls for respect for the civilian population, 8 February 1994.

[359] Mexican Red Cross, Declaración en torno a los acontecimientos que se han presentado en el estado de Chiapas a partir del 1o. de enero de 1994, 3 January 1994, § 2(B).

[360] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

[361] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

338. In a press release in 1994, the ICRC called on parties to the conflict in Chechnya to ensure that the wounded and sick were cared for.[362]
339. In a press release in 1995, the ICRC appealed to all the parties involved in Turkey's military operations in northern Iraq "to care for the wounded and sick".[363]
340. In a communication to the press issued in 2000 in connection with the hostilities in the Near East, the ICRC stated that "the wounded and sick must be . . . cared for regardless of the party to which they belong".[364]

VI. Other Practice

341. In 1980, an armed opposition group expressed its acceptance of the fundamental principles of IHL as formulated by the ICRC, including the principle that "the wounded and sick shall be . . . cared for by the party in conflict which has them in its power".[365]
342. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides that "in every circumstance, the wounded and sick, whether or not they have taken part in acts of violence, . . . shall receive, to the fullest extent practicable and with the least possible delay, the medical care and attention required by their condition".[366]
343. With reference to the Penal and Disciplinary Rules and OLS Ground Rules, the Report on SPLM/A Practice states that "the SPLM/A has a long-standing practice of care for the sick and wounded. This practice has been expressed in outstanding legal instruments of the SPLM/A."[367]

Distinction between the wounded and the sick

Note: For practice concerning non-discrimination between the wounded and the sick in general, see Chapter 32, section B.

[362] ICRC, Press Release No. 1793, Chechnya: ICRC urges respect for humanitarian rules, 28 November 1994.
[363] ICRC, Press Release No. 1797, ICRC calls for compliance with international law in Turkey and Northern Iraq, 22 March 1995.
[364] ICRC, Communication to the Press No. 00/42, ICRC appeal to all involved in violence in the Near East, 21 November 2000.
[365] ICRC archive document.
[366] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 12, IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 334.
[367] Report on SPLM/A Practice, 1998, Chapter 5, referring to SPLM/A, Penal and Disciplinary Rules, 4 July 1984, Section 30(2) ("The SPLA as an organised and disciplined Army, shall observe and be bound by internationally recognized humanitarian standards for the conduct of warfare.") and Agreement on Ground Rules for Operation Lifeline Sudan, 1995, preamble (expressing support for the Geneva Conventions and their Additional Protocols).

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

344. Article 12, third paragraph, GC I provides that "only urgent medical reasons will authorize priority in the order of treatment to be administered".

345. Article 12, third paragraph, GC II provides that "only urgent medical reasons will authorize priority in the order of treatment to be administered".

346. Article 10(2) AP I provides that "there shall be no distinction among [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] founded on any grounds other than medical ones". Article 10 AP I was adopted by consensus.[368]

347. Article 15(3) AP I states that "the Occupying Power may not require that, in the performance of [humanitarian] functions, [civilian medical] personnel shall give priority to the treatment of any person except on medical grounds". Article 15 AP I was adopted by consensus.[369]

348. Article 7(2) AP II provides that "there shall be no distinction among [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] founded on any grounds other than medical ones". Article 7 AP II was adopted by consensus.[370]

349. Article 9(2) AP II states that "in the performance of their duties, medical personnel may not be required to give priority to any person except on medical grounds". Article 9 AP II was adopted by consensus.[371]

Other Instruments

350. Article 10 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "wounded or sick soldiers shall be brought in and cared for, to whatever nation they belong". (emphasis added)

351. Paragraph 1 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "all wounded and sick on land shall be treated in accordance with the provisions of the First Geneva Convention".

352. Paragraph 2.1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "there shall be no distinction among [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] founded on any grounds other than medical ones".

353. Section 9.1 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin specifies that "only urgent medical reasons will authorize priority in the order of treatment to be administered". (emphasis added)

[368] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR. 37, 24 May 1977, p. 69.
[369] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR. 37, 24 May 1977, p. 70.
[370] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 109.
[371] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 112.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

354. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1969) provides that "only urgent medical reasons will authorise priority in the order of treatment to be administered".[372] (emphasis added)

355. Argentina's Law of War Manual (1989) refers to Articles 10 AP I and 7 AP II and provides that "in all circumstances, the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, to whichever party they belong, must be respected and protected . . . There shall be no distinction based on any grounds other than medical ones."[373] (emphasis added)

356. Australia's Commanders' Guide provides that "if medical supplies, personnel or facilities are inadequate to treat all the sick and wounded then medical assistance is to be provided strictly on the basis of medical triage" and that "the most in need of medical treatment are to be given priority".[374] (emphasis added)

357. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that "priority in medical treatment can only be determined on the basis of medical need".[375] (emphasis added) The manual also states that "while there is no absolute obligation to accept civilian wounded and sick, once civilian patients have been accepted, discrimination against them, on any grounds other than medical, is not permissible".[376]

358. Belgium's Teaching Manual for Soldiers states that "during search and rescue operations, priority shall be given to a wounded enemy in the event that he/she is more seriously affected".[377]

359. Benin's Military Manual instructs soldiers to "care for the wounded and sick, whether friend or foe".[378] (emphasis added)

360. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "only urgent medical requirements will justify any priority in treatment among those who are sick and wounded".[379] (emphasis added)

361. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "there shall be no distinction among [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] based on any grounds other than medical ones . . . Only medical reasons will determine the priority of treatment."[380] (emphasis added)

362. Colombia's Soldiers' Manual provides that "the most seriously wounded enemy combatants must be cared for first".[381]

[372] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.001.
[373] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.03.
[374] Australia, Commanders' Guide (1994), § 622.
[375] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 992.
[376] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994) § 987.
[377] Belgium, Teaching Manual for Soldiers (undated), p. 17, see also p. 32.
[378] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 18.
[379] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-2, §§ 19–20.
[380] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, §§ 1 and 4.
[381] Colombia, Soldiers' Manual (1999), p. 20.

363. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "priority in order of treatment may only be justified by urgent medical considerations".[382]

364. France's LOAC Manual provides with regard to the wounded and sick that "the law of armed conflicts does not allow any distinction other than that based on medical needs".[383]

365. Germany's Soldiers' Manual provides with regard to the treatment of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked that "there shall be no distinction other than on medical grounds".[384]

366. Hungary's Military Manual makes an explicit reference to GC I as being the regime applicable to the wounded and sick.[385]

367. Kenya's LOAC Manual instructs soldiers to "care for the wounded and sick, be they friend or foe".[386] (emphasis added)

368. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that the wounded and sick shall receive the medical care required by their state of health. It specifies that this obligation also applies in the case of wounded, sick and shipwrecked enemies.[387]

369. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides that "only urgent medical reasons will determine priority of treatment among the wounded and sick".[388] (emphasis added) With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall receive medical care without discrimination".[389]

370. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "all wounded and sick must be cared for, also those from the enemies. Priority in treatment may only be based on medical grounds."[390]

371. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "only urgent medical requirements will justify any priority in treatment among those who are sick and wounded".[391] (emphasis added) With regard to civilian sick and wounded, the manual provides that:

> There is no absolute obligation to accept civilian wounded and sick only so far as it is practicable to do so. For example, if military medical facilities are not being used but might be used in the immediate future because of an impending battle, there is no obligation to treat civilians. Once a civilian patient has been accepted, however, discrimination against him/her on other than medical grounds is not permissible.[392]

[382] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), § 11.4.
[383] France, LOAC Manual (2001), p. 32.
[384] Germany, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 5.
[385] Hungary, Military Manual (1992), p. 86.
[386] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 14.
[387] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 3-O, § 16 and Fiche No. 2-T, § 2.
[388] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-1.
[389] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-5.
[390] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-37.
[391] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1004(2).
[392] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(2).

372. Nigeria's Military Manual states that "only urgent medical reasons will authorise priority in the order of treatment to be administered".[393] (emphasis added)
373. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "priority in treatment should be granted to the most gravely wounded".[394]
374. The Soldier's Rules of the Philippines requires soldiers to "care for the wounded and sick, be they friend or foe".[395] (emphasis added)
375. Romania's Soldiers' Manual tells soldiers that "nobody will punish you for rendering first aid to a wounded, not even to an enemy one".[396]
376. Russia's Military Manual provides that:

> Military commanders may appeal to the charity of the local population to voluntarily collect and care for the wounded and sick. The military authorities must permit the inhabitants and relief societies, even in invaded or occupied areas, spontaneously to collect and care for wounded or sick of whatever nationality.[397] [emphasis added]

377. Senegal's IHL Manual provides that one of the fundamental guarantees common to IHL and the 1948 UDHR is that no distinction other than that based on medical grounds shall be made in the treatment of the wounded and sick.[398]
378. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that medical personnel shall provide the wounded and sick with the medical care required by their condition. It states that only urgent medical reasons may justify priority in the order of medical treatment.[399]
379. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "at all times, and especially following an engagement, all means should be taken to search for and collect the wounded ... whether friend or foe".[400] (emphasis added) It further provides that "only emergency medical reasons shall establish the priority in the treatment of friendly or enemy wounded".[401] (emphasis added)
380. Togo's Military Manual instructs soldiers to "care for the wounded and sick, whether friend or foe".[402] (emphasis added)
381. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "priority in the order of medical treatment is decided only for urgent medical reasons".[403] (emphasis added)
382. The US Field Manual provides that "only urgent medical reasons will authorize priority in the order of treatment to be administered".[404] (emphasis added)

[393] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 13, § 4.
[394] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 35.
[395] Philippines, Soldier's Rules (1989), § 5.
[396] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 22, § 3.
[397] Russia, Military Manual (1990), § 15.
[398] Senegal, IHL Manual (1999), pp. 3 and 24.
[399] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 9.2.(a).2.
[400] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 71.
[401] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 74.
[402] Togo, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 18.
[403] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 2.
[404] US, Field Manual (1956), § 215.

383. The US Air Force Pamphlet states that "priority in order of treatment is justified only by urgent medical reasons".[405] (emphasis added)
384. The US Naval Handbook provides that "priority in order of treatment may only be justified by urgent medical considerations".[406] (emphasis added)
385. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that "only urgent medical reasons shall determine priority of treatment among the wounded and sick".[407] (emphasis added)

National Legislation
386. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that, in international and non-international armed conflicts:

> the Armed Forces of the Azerbaijan Republic and appropriate authorities and governmental bodies shall ensure [in all circumstances and with the least possible delay] medical assistance and care, needed for the wounded and sick irrespective of their status.[408] [emphasis added]

387. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[409]
388. Ethiopia's Red Cross Legal Notice refers to one of the objectives of the Red Cross, notably "caring for the sick and wounded among troops and civilians without national discretion".[410]
389. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 12 GC I and 12 GC II, and of AP I, including violations of Articles 10(2) and 15(3) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 7(2) and 9(2) AP II, are punishable offences.[411]
390. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[412]

National Case-law
391. No practice was found.

[405] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2. [406] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 11.4.
[407] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Article 162.
[408] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 25.
[409] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[410] Ethiopia, Red Cross Legal Notice (1947), Article 4(a).
[411] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[412] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

Other National Practice

392. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support the principle that when [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] are given medical treatment, no distinction among them be based on any grounds other than medical ones".[413]

393. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that there should be no distinction among the wounded and sick on any but medical grounds.[414]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

394. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

395. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

396. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "there shall be no distinction among wounded, sick and shipwrecked founded on any grounds other than medical ones" and that "only urgent medical reasons shall authorize priority in the order of treatment to be administered. Criteria based on nationality or rank are excluded."[415]

397. In a Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law sent in 1990 to all States party to the Geneva Conventions in the context of the Gulf War, the ICRC stated that "the wounded, the sick and the shipwrecked must be collected and cared for regardless of the party to which they belong".[416] (emphasis added)

398. In a press release in 1992, the ICRC urged all parties to the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh "to ensure that the wounded and sick are cared of in all circumstances, regardless of the side to which they belong".[417]

[413] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 423.

[414] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

[415] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, §§ 200 and 215.

[416] ICRC, Memorandum on the Applicability of International Humanitarian Law, 14 December 1990, § I, IRRC, No. 280, 1991, p. 24.

[417] ICRC, Press Release No. 1670, Nagorno-Karabakh: ICRC calls for respect for humanitarian law, 12 March 1992.

399. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, the ICRC stated that "all the wounded and sick, both civilian and military, must be collected and cared for, without distinction".[418] (emphasis added)

400. In 1994, in a Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise in the Great Lakes region, the ICRC emphasised that "all the wounded and sick must be collected and cared for without distinction, in accordance with the provisions laid down primarily in the First and Fourth Geneva Conventions".[419] (emphasis added)

VI. Other Practice

401. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides that "in every circumstance, the wounded and sick, whether or not they have taken part in acts of violence, ... shall receive ... medical care ... There shall be no distinction among them on any grounds other than their medical condition."[420]

402. In 1993, in a communication on violations of IHL in Somalia during UNOSOM operations, MSF denounced "obstruction of civilian access to hospitals and medical care" in the following terms:

> The access of the only two civilian hospitals which have surgical units, Benadir and Digfer, was blocked on July 17, 1993 by the deployment of United Nations' tanks.
>
> The military hospitals were reserved exclusively for the treatment of United Nations' troops, thus setting up an unacceptable discrimination between the wounded.
>
> Only the Moroccan hospital remained open to the wounded Somalis. This building was inaccessible to the residents west of the K6/Digfer axis. Moreover, as the Moroccan troops were involved in front line military operations, the civilian population could expect little help from them.

MSF urged the UN military commander and the commanders of the various national contingents to respect humanitarian law, including "the right of the injured to treatment, anytime, anywhere, civilian and military alike (article 3 of the four Geneva Conventions)" and requested that "access to treatment be always guaranteed, with no discrimination".[421]

[418] ICRC, Memorandum on Respect for International Humanitarian Law in Angola, 8 June 1994, § I, IRRC, No. 320, 1997, p. 503.

[419] ICRC, Memorandum on Compliance with International Humanitarian Law by the Forces Participating in Opération Turquoise, 23 June 1994, § I, reprinted in Marco Sassòli and Antoine A. Bouvier, How Does Law Protect in War?, ICRC, Geneva, 1999, p. 1308.

[420] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Articles 12 and 14, IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 335.

[421] MSF, Communication on the violations of humanitarian law in Somalia during UNOSOM operations, 20 July 1993, Part I, § 3(a), Part II and Part III, § 2(b).

C. Protection of the Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked against Pillage and Ill-treatment

General

Note: For practice concerning pillage in general, see Chapter 16, section D.

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

403. Article 28 of the 1906 GC provides that "in the event of their military penal laws being insufficient, the signatory governments also engage to take, or to recommend to their legislatures, the necessary measures to repress, in time of war, individual acts of robbery and ill treatment of the sick and wounded of the armies".

404. Article 16 of the 1907 Hague Convention (X) provides that "after every engagement, the two belligerents, so far as military interests permit, shall take steps to look for the shipwrecked, sick, and wounded, and to protect them . . . against pillage and ill-treatment".

405. Article 15, first paragraph, GC I provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures . . . to protect [the wounded and sick] against pillage and ill-treatment".

406. Article 18, first paragraph, GC II provides that "after an engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures . . . to protect [the shipwrecked, wounded and sick] against pillage and ill-treatment".

407. Article 16, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "as far as military considerations allow, each Party to the conflict shall facilitate the steps taken to search for the killed and wounded, to assist the shipwrecked and other persons exposed to grave danger, and to protect them against pillage and ill-treatment".

408. Article 4(2)(g) AP II prohibits acts of pillage against "all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities". Article 4 AP II was adopted by consensus.[422]

409. Article 8 AP II provides that "whenever circumstances permit, and particularly after an engagement, all possible measures shall be taken, without delay, . . . to protect [the wounded, sick and shipwrecked] against pillage and ill-treatment". Article 8 AP II was adopted by consensus.[423]

Other Instruments

410. Based on several documents supplying evidence of outrages committed during the First World War, the 1919 Report of the Commission on Responsibility lists violations of the laws and customs of war which should be subject to criminal prosecution, including ill-treatment of wounded.

[422] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.50, 3 June 1977, p. 90.
[423] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 110.

411. Rule 4 of the 1950 UN Command Rules and Regulations gave Military Commissions of the UN Command in Korea jurisdiction over offences including acts of marauding.
412. Paragraph 1 of the 1991 Memorandum of Understanding on the Application of IHL between Croatia and the SFRY provides that "all wounded and sick on land shall be treated in accordance with the provisions of the First Geneva Convention".
413. Paragraph 2.1 of the 1992 Agreement on the Application of IHL between the Parties to the Conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina provides that "the treatment provided to the wounded, sick and shipwrecked shall be in accordance with the provisions of the First and Second Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949".
414. Section 7.2 of the 1999 UN Secretary-General's Bulletin states that pillage of persons *hors de combat*is prohibited.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

415. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that the sick and wounded on the battlefield must be protected against pillage.[424]
416. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that all possible measures must be taken to protect the wounded and sick against pillage and ill-treatment.[425]
417. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited the plunder the . . . wounded".[426]
418. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited the plunder the wounded, sick and shipwrecked".[427]
419. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the parties to a conflict must protect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked against pillage and ill-treatment" in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[428]
420. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that following an engagement, there is an obligation to protect the sick, wounded and civilians against theft and ill-treatment. It further provides that "the personal property of sick and wounded . . . shall not be taken".[429]
421. Colombia's Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL provides that the wounded and sick must be protected by the party which has them in its power.[430]

[424] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.003.
[425] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 986.
[426] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[427] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[428] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 9 and p. 17-4, § 32.
[429] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 3 and Rule 8, § 2.
[430] Colombia, Circular on Fundamental Rules of IHL (1992), §§ 1 and 3.

422. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to plunder the . . . wounded".[431]
423. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended states that "it is prohibited to plunder the . . . wounded".[432]
424. Germany's Military Manual states that the wounded, sick and shipwrecked "shall be protected against pillage and ill-treatment".[433]
425. Israel's Manual on the Laws of War states that the "Geneva Conventions contain provisions banning the looting of the wounded, sick [and] shipwrecked . . . Looting is regarded as a despicable act that tarnishes both the soldier and the IDF, leaving a serious moral blot."[434]
426. Italy's IHL Manual provides that the ill-treatment of the wounded, sick and shipwrecked is a war crime.[435]
427. Indonesia's Military Manual provides that the wounded and sick must be protected from robbery and ill-treatment.[436]
428. Lebanon's Army Regulations, Field Manual and Teaching Manual prohibit the pillage of the wounded.[437]
429. Mali's Army Regulations states that "it is prohibited to plunder the . . . wounded".[438]
430. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations states that "it is prohibited to plunder the . . . wounded".[439]
431. The Military Manual of the Netherlands provides with regard non-international armed conflicts that "the wounded, sick and shipwrecked must be protected against pillage".[440]
432. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that the sick, wounded and shipwrecked are to be protected from pillage and ill-treatment in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[441]
433. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "the belligerents must immediately take all possible measures to protect the sick and wounded against pillage and ill-treatment".[442]
434. The Rules for Combatants of the Philippines provides that "it is forbidden to mistreat a wounded enemy combatant".[443]
435. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that "it is prohibited to despoil or pillage wounded and sick enemy combatants".[444]

[431] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32.2.
[432] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis (2).
[433] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 605.
[434] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 62.
[435] Italy, IHL Manual (1991), Vol. I, § 84.
[436] Indonesia, Military Manual (1982), § 37.
[437] Lebanon, Army Regulations (1971), § 17; Field Manual (1996), § 8; Teaching Manual (1997), p. 77.
[438] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[439] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25.2.
[440] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI-1.
[441] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), §§ 1003(1) and 1817(1).
[442] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 34.
[443] Philippines, Rules for Combatants (1989), § 3.
[444] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 9.

436. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations provides that "it is prohibited to plunder the . . . wounded".[445]

437. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "it is prohibited to despoil the wounded".[446]

438. The UK Military Manual states that the wounded and sick must be protected against pillage and ill-treatment.[447] The manual refers to:

> a special class of war crime that is sometimes known as "marauding". This consists of ranging over battlefields and following advancing or retreating armies in quest of loot, robbing, maltreating and killing stragglers and wounded and plundering the dead – all acts done not as a means of carrying on the war but for private gain. Nevertheless, such acts are treated as violations of the law of war. Those who commit them, whether civilians who have never been lawful combatants, or persons who have belonged to a military unit, an organised resistance movement or a levée en masse, and have deserted and so ceased to be lawful combatants, are liable to be punished as war criminals. They may be tried and sentenced by the courts of either belligerent.[448]

439. The UK LOAC Manual refers to Article 15 GC I and states that combatants shall prevent the wounded and sick from being despoiled.[449]

440. The US Field Manual states that the parties shall take all possible measures to protect the wounded and sick against pillage and ill-treatment and prevent their being despoiled.[450]

441. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 15 GC I and states the obligation to protect the sick and wounded from pillage and ill-treatment.[451]

442. The US Naval Handbook provides that "mistreating enemy forces, the shipwrecked disabled by sickness or wounds" is a war crime.[452]

National Legislation

443. Albania's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of "stealing on the battlefield".[453]

444. Algeria's Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of soldiers or civilians who, in an area of hostilities, steal from the wounded, sick or shipwrecked.[454]

445. Under Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice, "despoliation of . . . the wounded, sick [and] shipwrecked" is an offence.[455]

446. Under Armenia's Penal Code, stealing objects from the wounded and sick on the battlefield is a punishable offence.[456]

[445] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34.2.
[446] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 72; see also Teaching Manual (1986), p. 19.
[447] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 342.
[448] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 636.
[449] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 3.
[450] US, Field Manual (1956), § 216.
[451] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-3(a).
[452] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[453] Albania, Military Penal Code (1995), Articles 91–93.
[454] Algeria, Code of Military Justice (1971), Article 287.
[455] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(8) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[456] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 383.

447. Australia's Defence Force Discipline Act, in an article on looting, provides that:

> A person, being a defence member or a defence civilian, who, in the course of operations against the enemy, or in the course of operations undertaken by the Defence Force for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities –
>
> ...
>
> (b) takes any property from the body of a person ... wounded [or] injured ... in those operations ...
>
> is guilty of [an] offence.[457]

448. Azerbaijan's Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War provides that "in international and non-international armed conflicts, at any time and especially after an engagement, all possible measures must be taken to protect the wounded and sick from pillage and ill-treatment".[458]

449. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides for the punishment of "pillage of property of persons killed or wounded on the battlefield".[459]

450. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[460]

451. Bolivia's Military Penal Code provides that "the person who plunders the belongings of wounded in combat" commits a punishable offence.[461]

452. Under the Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, "the unlawful appropriation of belongings from the ... wounded on the battlefield" is a war crime. It adds that ill-treatment of wounded, sick and shipwrecked is a war crime.[462] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provisions.[463]

453. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that taking on the battlefield "objects from a wounded [person], ... with the intention to unlawfully appropriate them" is a crime.[464]

454. Under Burkina Faso's Code of Military Justice, "the despoliation of the wounded [and] sick ... in a unit's area of operations" is an offence.[465]

455. Canada's National Defence Act provides that "every person who ... steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of any person ... wounded, in the course of warlike operations, ... is guilty of [an] offence".[466]

[457] Australia, Defence Force Discipline Act (1982), Section 48(1).
[458] Azerbaijan, Law concerning the Protection of Civilian Persons and the Rights of Prisoners of War (1995), Article 24.
[459] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 118.
[460] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[461] Bolivia, Military Penal Code (1976), Article 156.
[462] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Articles 159(1) and 173.
[463] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Articles 439(1) and 441.
[464] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Article 405.
[465] Burkina Faso, Code of Military Justice (1994), Article 193.
[466] Canada, National Defence Act (1985), Section 77(g).

456. Under Chad's Code of Military Justice, the taking of property from the wounded is a criminal offence.[467]

457. Chile's Code of Military Justice provides that "anyone who plunders the clothing or other objects belonging to a wounded person . . . in order to appropriate them" commits a punishable offence against international law.[468]

458. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a sanction on "anyone who, during an armed conflict, despoils . . . a protected person".[469]

459. Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended provides for the punishment of "anyone who, in an area of military operations, plunders a wounded, sick [or] shipwrecked . . . person".[470]

460. Croatia's Criminal Code provides that the "unlawful taking of the personal belongings of the . . . wounded on the battlefield" is a war crime.[471]

461. Cuba's Military Criminal Code punishes "anyone who, in areas of military operations, plunders for personal gain money or other belongings from wounded persons".[472]

462. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended punishes "whoever in a theatre of war, on the battlefield or in places affected by military operations, . . . seizes another person's belongings, taking advantage of such person's distress".[473]

463. Under Egypt's Penal Code, stealing from enemy or friendly wounded on the battlefield is a punishable offence.[474]

464. Egypt's Military Criminal Code criminalises the theft in zones of military operations of property belonging to wounded or sick whether friend or foe.[475]

465. El Salvador's Code of Military Justice provides that "a soldier who plunders the clothes or other personal effects of a wounded person . . . in order to appropriate them" commits a punishable offence.[476]

466. Under Ethiopia's Penal Code, "whosoever . . . lays hands on or does violence to a wounded [or] sick . . . enemy on the field of battle, with intent to rob or plunder him" commits a crime. The Code also provides for the punishment of the ill-treatment of the wounded and sick.[477]

467. France's Code of Military Justice provides for the punishment of "any individual, military or not, who, in the area of operation of a force or a unit, . . . plunders a wounded, sick [or] shipwrecked . . . person".[478]

468. Gambia's Armed Forces Act provides that "every person subject to this Act who . . . steals from or with intent to steal searches, the person of any [467] Chad, Code of Military Justice (1962), Article 62.

[468] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 263.
[469] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 151.
[470] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 465.
[471] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Articles 162 and 165.
[472] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Article 43(1).
[473] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 264(a).
[474] Egypt, Penal Code (1937), Article 317(9).
[475] Egypt, Military Criminal Code (1966), Article 136, see also Article 123.
[476] El Salvador, Code of Military Justice (1934), Article 70.
[477] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Articles 287(c) and 291.
[478] France, Code of Military Justice (1982), Article 428.

person . . . wounded, in the course of war-like operations" commits a punishable offence.[479]

469. Ghana's Armed Forces Act states that "every person subject to the Code of Service Discipline who . . . steals from or with the intent to steal searches, the person of any person . . . wounded, in the course of warlike operations" commits a punishable offence.[480]

470. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, "pillage, i.e. seizure in a combat situation of things which are on . . . wounded", is a crime.[481]

471. Guinea's Criminal Code provides that "whoever, in an area of military operation, plunders a wounded, sick [or] shipwrecked person" commits a punishable offence.[482]

472. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, "the person who loots the fallen, injured or sick on the battlefield" is guilty, upon conviction, of a war crime.[483]

473. Under Indonesia's Military Penal Code, theft from sick or wounded members of the armed forces of parties to the conflict is a punishable offence.[484]

474. Iraq's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of "every person who, with the intent to appropriate for himself or unjustifiably, takes money or other things . . . from the wounded while on the march or in hospital or during movements".[485]

475. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 15 GC I, 18 GC II and 16 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Articles 4(2)(g) and 8 AP II, are punishable offences.[486]

476. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who ill-treats the wounded, sick and shipwrecked. It also provides that anyone who plunders a wounded, sick or shipwrecked person is guilty of a punishable offence.[487]

477. Under Kazakhstan's Penal Code, "theft of objects belonging to the . . . wounded on the battlefield (marauding)" is a crime.[488]

478. Under Kenya's Armed Forces Act, anyone who steals from the wounded commits a punishable offence.[489]

[479] Gambia, Armed Forces Act (1985), Section 40(g).
[480] Ghana, Armed Forces Act (1962), Section 18(g).
[481] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 413(a).
[482] Guinea, Criminal Code (1998), Article 570.
[483] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 161.
[484] Indonesia, Military Penal Code (1947), Articles 140–143.
[485] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Article 115(a).
[486] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[487] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Articles 192 and 193.
[488] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Article 385.
[489] Kenya, Armed Forces Act (1968), Section 23.

479. Under South Korea's Military Criminal Code, "a person who takes the clothes and other property of the . . . wounded in the combat area" commits a punishable offence.[490]

480. Latvia's Criminal Code provides that the appropriation of property of the wounded on the battlefield is a war crime.[491]

481. Under Lebanon's Code of Military Justice, pillage of the sick or the wounded by non-military persons in an "area of military operations" is a punishable offence.[492]

482. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, "an order to plunder or seize things from . . . wounded victims on the battlefield" is a war crime.[493]

483. Malaysia's Armed Forces Act provides for the punishment of "every person subject to service law under this Act who . . . steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . wounded in the course of warlike operations".[494]

484. Under Mali's Code of Military Justice, "anyone who plunders a wounded, sick [or] shipwrecked . . . person" commits a punishable offence.[495]

485. Mexico's Code of Military Justice as amended provides penalties for persons who mistreat or otherwise cause physical or mental injuries to the wounded and sick.[496]

486. Mozambique's Military Criminal Law provides for the punishment of stealing valuables and objects from the wounded.[497]

487. The Definition of War Crimes Decree of the Netherlands includes "ill-treatment of wounded" in its list of war crimes.[498]

488. Under the Military Criminal Code as amended of the Netherlands, "theft from a . . . sick or wounded person, who belongs to one of the parties to the conflict," is a criminal offence.[499]

489. New Zealand's Armed Forces Discipline Act provides that:

> Every person subject to this Act commits the offence of looting, and is liable to imprisonment for life, who –
>
> (a) Steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . wounded . . . in the course of any war or warlike operations in which New Zealand is engaged, or . . . injured . . . in the course of operations undertaken by any service of the Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil power.[500]

[490] South Korea, Military Criminal Code (1962), Article 82.
[491] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Section 76.
[492] Lebanon, Code of Military Justice (1968), Article 132.
[493] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 341.
[494] Malaysia, Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 46(a).
[495] Mali, Code of Military Justice (1995), Article 134(1).
[496] Mexico, Code of Military Justice as amended (1933), Article 324.
[497] Mozambique, Military Criminal Law (1987), Articles 83(b) and 85(d).
[498] Netherlands, Definition of War Crimes Decree (1946), Article 1.
[499] Netherlands, Military Criminal Code as amended (1964), Article 156.
[500] New Zealand, Armed Forces Discipline Act (1971), Section 31(a).

490. Nicaragua's Military Penal Law punishes "anyone who, in military operations, steals for personal gain money or other belongings of the wounded".[501]
491. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of the soldier who, in the zone of operations, "despoils a ... wounded, sick or shipwrecked person of their clothing or other personal effects".[502]
492. Nigeria's Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended punishes any person subject to service law who "steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the body of a person ... wounded ... in the course of a war-like operation".[503]
493. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in ... the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 ... [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions ... is liable to imprisonment".[504]
494. Paraguay's Military Penal Code punishes "any soldier who has plundered another wounded soldier".[505]
495. Under Peru's Code of Military Justice, ill-treatment of a non-resisting wounded enemy constitutes a violation of the law of nations.[506]
496. Romania's Penal Code criminalises "robbing the ... wounded on the battlefield of objects they possess".[507]
497. Singapore's Armed Forces Act as amended provides for the punishment of every person subject to military law who:

> steals from or, with intent to steal, searches the person of anyone ... wounded ... in the course of warlike operations, or ... injured ... in the course of operations undertaken by the Singapore Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities.[508]

498. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended punishes "whoever in a theatre of war, on [the] battlefield or in places affected by military operations, ... seizes another person's belongings, taking advantage of such person's distress".[509]
499. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, plundering or ordering the plunder of objects belonging to casualties on the battlefield constitutes a war crime.[510]
500. Under Spain's Military Criminal Code, the despoliation of wounded, sick or shipwrecked persons and appropriation of their personal belongings in a combat area is an offence against the laws and customs of war.[511]

[501] Nicaragua, Military Penal Law (1980), Article 81.
[502] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 56(1).
[503] Nigeria, Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended (1993), Section 51.
[504] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[505] Paraguay, Military Penal Code (1980), Article 293.
[506] Peru, Code of Military Justice (1980), Article 94.
[507] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 350.
[508] Singapore, Armed Forces Act as amended (1972), Section 18(a).
[509] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 264(a).
[510] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 380(1).
[511] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(2).

501. Spain's Penal Code provides for the punishment of anyone who during an armed conflict despoils the wounded, sick or shipwrecked and appropriates their personal belongings.[512]
502. Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended punishes anyone who, on the battlefield, despoils and pillages the wounded and sick. It also provides for the punishment of anyone who uses violence against the wounded and sick.[513]
503. Under Tajikistan's Criminal Code, pillage of wounded and sick in a combat zone is a crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[514]
504. Togo's Code of Military Justice punishes "any soldier who plunders a wounded, sick or shipwrecked person".[515]
505. Trinidad and Tobago's Defence Act as amended contains a section on "looting" which states that "any person subject to military law who . . . steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . wounded in the course of warlike operations . . . is guilty of looting".[516]
506. Uganda's National Resistance Army Statute provides that "a person subject to military law who . . . steals from or, with intent to steal, searches the person or any person . . . wounded in the course of war-like operations . . . commits an offence".[517]
507. Under Ukraine's Criminal Code, stealing the belongings of the wounded and sick on the battlefield or treating them cruelly constitutes a war crime.[518]
508. The UK Army Act as amended provides that:

> Any person subject to military law who –
>
> (a) steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . wounded . . . in the course of warlike operations, or . . . injured . . . in the course of operations undertaken by Her Majesty's forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities . . .
>
> shall be guilty of looting.[519] [emphasis in original]

509. The UK Air Force Act as amended provides for the punishment of any person subject to air force law who:

> steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone . . . wounded . . . in the course of warlike operations, or . . . injured . . . in the course of operations undertaken by Her Majesty's forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities.[520]

[512] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 612(7).
[513] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Articles 139–140.
[514] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 405.
[515] Togo, Code of Military Justice (1981), Article 95.
[516] Trinidad and Tobago, Defence Act as amended (1962), Section 40(a).
[517] Uganda, National Resistance Army Statute (1992), Section 35(f).
[518] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Articles 432 and 434.
[519] UK, Army Act as amended (1955), Section 30(a).
[520] UK, Air Force Act as amended (1955), Section 30(a).

510. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended punishes the "despoliation of the wounded . . . in combat".[521]
511. Under Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, it is a crime against international law to "plunder . . . the wounded and sick".[522]
512. Vietnam's Penal Code provides for the punishment of "any person who steals personal belongings from a wounded soldier".[523]
513. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, despoliation of the wounded or sick is a war crime.[524]
514. Zambia's Defence Act as amended states that "any person subject to military law under this Act who . . . steals from or with intent to steal searches the person of anyone . . . wounded in the course of warlike operations . . . shall be guilty of looting".[525]
515. Zimbabwe's Defence Act as amended provides for the punishment of "any member [of the Defence Forces] who . . . steals from or with intent to steal searches the person of anyone . . . wounded in the course of warlike operations".[526]

National Case-law
516. No practice was found.

Other National Practice
517. According to German investigations following allegations of crimes committed against members of the armed forces in Crete in May 1941, it appeared that "wounded soldiers were robbed and deprived of parts of their clothing, primarily by the civilian population".[527]
518. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that the wounded and sick in internal armed conflicts should be respected and protected in accordance with Article 8 AP II.[528]
519. Order No. 579 issued in 1991 by the Chief of Staff of the YPA provides that YPA units shall apply "all means to prevent any attempt of pillage [and] mistreatment of . . . the wounded and sick".[529]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

520. No practice was found.

[521] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58(10).
[522] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(11).
[523] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 271(2).
[524] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 20.
[525] Zambia, Defence Act as amended (1964), Section 35(a).
[526] Zimbabwe, Defence Act as amended (1972), First Schedule, Section 11(a).
[527] Alfred M. de Zayas, The Wehrmacht War Crimes Bureau, 1939–1945, University of Nebraska Press, 1989, pp. 156–157.
[528] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[529] SFRY (FRY), Chief of General Staff of the YPA, Political Department, Order No. 579, 14 October 1991, § 2.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

521. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

522. No practice was found.

VI. Other Practice

523. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, provides that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, . . . to protect [the wounded and sick] against pillage and ill-treatment".[530]

Respect by civilians for the wounded, sick and shipwrecked

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties
524. Article 18, second paragraph, GC I states that "the civilian population shall respect [the] wounded and sick, and in particular abstain from offering them violence".
525. Article 17(1) AP I provides that "the civilian population shall respect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked, even if they belong to the adverse Party, and shall commit no act of violence against them". Article 17 AP I was adopted by consensus.[531]

Other Instruments
526. No practice was found.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
527. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that the civilian population shall respect the wounded, sick and shipwrecked and shall not commit any act of violence against them.[532]

[530] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 13, IRRC, No. 282, 1991, p. 335.
[531] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 70.
[532] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.03.

528. Australia's Defence Force Manual states that while personnel from a disabled aircraft may be captured by non-combatants, they may not be subjected to violent assault by them.[533]
529. Germany's Military Manual provides that "civilians must respect the wounded, the sick and the shipwrecked, even if they belong to the opposite party. They must not use violence against them."[534]
530. Spain's LOAC Manual refers to Article 17 AP I.[535]
531. Sweden's IHL Manual considers that Article 17 AP I on the role of aid organisations has the status of customary law.[536]
532. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual, although it refers to Article 18 GC I, does not provide explicitly for the duty of civilians to respect the wounded and sick. The commentary gives as an example, however, that if "a seriously injured parachutist lands near a farm, he shall be cared for until the arrival of the authorities".[537]
533. The UK Military Manual provides that "the civilian population must respect the wounded and sick, and refrain from offering them violence". The manual further provides that "nursing the wounded and sick should not be penalised, though this immunity does not extend to the concealment of enemy personnel or the activities of escape organisations".[538]
534. The US Field Manual provides that "the civilian population shall respect [the] wounded and sick, and in particular abstain from offering them violence".[539]
535. The US Health Service Manual reproduces Article 18 GC I and provides that "the civilian population must respect the wounded and the sick and refrain from offering them violence".[540]

National Legislation
536. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[541]
537. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 18 GC I, and of AP I, including violations of Article 17(1) AP I, are punishable offences.[542]
538. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the

[533] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 848.
[534] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 632.
[535] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.3.a.(4).
[536] Sweden, IHL Manual (1991), Section 2.2.3, p. 18.
[537] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 75.
[538] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 345.
[539] US, Field Manual (1956), § 219.
[540] US, Health Service Manual (1991), p. A-2.
[541] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[542] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).

protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[543]

National Case-law

539. No practice was found.

Other National Practice

540. According to the Report on the Practice of Chile, civilians also have a duty to respect persons hors de combat.[544]

541. According to the Report on Report on the Practice of Indonesia, although civilians do not have the legal duty to safeguard the enemy hors de combat, they would have a moral duty to do so under the principle of humanity stated in the State's fundamental philosophy (Pancasila).[545]

542. According to the Report on the Practice of Iran, during the Iran–Iraq War, in reply to allegations that "angry [Iranian] mobs had killed parachuting Iraqis", Iranian military authorities stated that pilots were under the control of the army and well treated.[546] The Iranian authorities repeatedly asked the Iranian population not to shoot at parachuting pilots and to capture them alive.[547]

543. The Report on the Practice of Israel states that:

> With respect to civilians, the Israeli Penal Law 1997 prohibits any assault on the person of another, except in situations where there exists a defence prescribed by law, such as self defence. Civilians are, therefore, also under the duty not to harm [the] enemy hors de combat.[548]

544. According to the Report on the Practice of Jordan, civilians also have a duty to respect persons hors de combat.[549]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

545. In a resolution on Angola adopted in 1993, the UN Security Council condemned the "violations of international humanitarian law, in particular . . . the extensive killings carried out by armed civilians".[550]

Other International Organisations

546. No practice was found.

[543] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[544] Report on the Practice of Chile, 1997, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 2.1.
[545] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 2.1.
[546] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapter 2.1.
[547] Report on the Practice of Iran, 1997, Chapters 2.1 and 5.3; see also Military Communiqué No. 66, 29 September 1980.
[548] Report on the Practice of Israel, 1998, Chapter 2.1, referring to Penal Law as amended (1977).
[549] Report on the Practice of Jordan, 1997, Answers to additional questions on Chapter 2.1.
[550] UN Security Council, Res. 804, 29 January 1993, § 10.

International Conferences

547. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

548. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

549. The ICRC Commentary on Article 17 AP I states that its "provision was inspired by Article 18, paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, of the First Convention – the principle of which came from the original Convention of 22 August 1864 (Article 5) – and it was aimed at extending the scope of Article 18 to the civilian wounded and sick".[551]

VI. Other Practice

550. No practice was found.

[551] Yves Sandoz et al. (eds.), Commentary on the Additional Protocols, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 692.

CHAPTER 35

THE DEAD

A. Search for and Collection of the Dead

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

1. Article 3 of the 1929 GC provides that "after each engagement the occupant of the field of battle shall take measures to search for . . . the dead".

2. Article 15, first paragraph, GC I provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures . . . to search for the dead".

3. Article 18, first paragraph, GC II provides that "after each engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures . . . to search for the dead".
4. Article 21, first paragraph, GC II states that "the Parties to the conflict may appeal to the charity of commanders of neutral merchant vessels, yachts or other craft . . . to collect the dead".
5. Article 16, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "as far as military considerations allow, each Party to the conflict shall facilitate the steps taken to search for the killed".
6. Article 17(2) AP I states that "the Parties to the conflict may appeal to the civilian population and the aid societies . . . to search for the dead and report their location". Article 17 AP I was adopted by consensus.[1]
7. Article 33(4) AP I provides that "the Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to agree on arrangements for teams to search for . . . and recover the dead from the battlefield areas". Article 33 AP I was adopted by consensus.[2]
8. Article 8 AP II provides that "whenever circumstances permit, and particularly after an engagement, all possible measures shall be taken, without delay . . . to search for the dead". Article 8 AP II was adopted by consensus.[3]

Other Instruments
9. Article II(5) of the 1992 N'Sele Ceasefire Agreement provides that the ceasefire shall imply "the possibility of recovering the remains of the dead".
10. Article 4(9) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, . . . to search for the dead".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
11. Argentina's Law of War Manual states that the parties shall, without delay, take all possible measures to search for and collect the dead.[4]
12. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that "parties must search for the dead".[5] The manual further states that:

> All of the protagonists to a conflict shall attempt to agree to form special teams to undertake the search, identity and recovery of their dead from a belligerent's battlefield. This will include any arrangements for such teams to be accompanied by members of the belligerent force upon whose land they are searching. In the course of their duties search teams are deemed to be protected persons.[6]

[1] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 70.
[2] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.
[3] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 110.
[4] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; see also Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.06.
[5] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 986, see also § 994.
[6] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 9-104.

13. Belgium's Law of War Manual provides that "the belligerents must search for the dead and collect them".[7]

14. Benin's Military Manual provides that "combatants must search for the dead". The manual also states that "military commanders can make an appeal to the civilian population, to aid societies such as the National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies . . . to collect . . . the dead".[8]

15. Cameroon's Instructors' Manual states that military commanders must take care of searching for the dead and that they must be evacuated.[9] It further provides that "in case of civilian losses, civil defence units and personnel shall participate in the search for the victims".[10] The manual also states that "an appeal to the charity of the population can be made to help National Societies such as the Red Cross or the Red Crescent in order to collect . . . the dead".[11]

16. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that the belligerents "must also search for the dead".[12] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual specifies that "steps must also be taken to search for the dead".[13] It also states that:

> Parties to the conflict shall endeavour to reach agreements to allow teams to search for . . . and recover the dead from battlefield areas. They may also attach to such teams representatives of the adverse party when the search is taking place in areas controlled by the adverse party. While carrying out these duties, members of the teams shall be respected and protected.[14]

17. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "there is . . . an obligation to search for . . . the dead".[15]

18. Croatia's Commanders' Manual provides that "when the mission permits, the . . . dead in action shall be searched for and collected".[16] It further states that "bodies not buried or cremated on the spot shall be evacuated".[17]

19. France's LOAC Summary Note and LOAC Teaching Note provide that the dead must be collected.[18]

20. According to Germany's Military Manual, "the dead are to be collected".[19]

21. Under India's police regulations, Indian police are required to make arrangements for the collection of dead persons killed in police firing.[20]

[7] Belgium, Law of War Manual (1983), p. 49.
[8] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 10.
[9] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 67, § 241(1).
[10] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), pp. 95–96, DG 34.
[11] Cameroon, Instructors' Manual (1992), p. 96, DG 34.
[12] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 9, see also p. 11-2, § 16.
[13] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 32.
[14] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-5, § 53.
[15] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 3.
[16] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 71.
[17] Croatia, Commanders' Manual (1992), § 89.
[18] France, LOAC Summary Note (1992), § 2.1; LOAC Teaching Note (2000), p. 3.
[19] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 611.
[20] India, Police Manual (1986), Article 13(xvii–xviii); West Bengal Police Regulations (1962), Article 156(a).

22. Italy's LOAC Elementary Rules Manual provides that "when the mission permits, the . . . dead in action shall be searched for and collected".[21]
23. Kenya's LOAC Manual provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, Parties to the conflict must take measures to search for and collect the dead". It adds that "civil defence units and personnel shall participate in the search for victims, particularly when there are civilian casualties".[22] The manual also provides that "commanders may appeal to the civilian population, to aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies and to commanders of neutral merchant vessels, yachts or other craft . . . to collect and identify the dead".[23]
24. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that, "when the mission so permits . . . those killed in action shall be searched for and collected".[24]
25. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that, with regard to non–international armed conflicts, "whenever circumstances permit, all measure shall be taken, without delay to search for and collect . . . the dead".[25]
26. According to the Military Handbook of the Netherlands, "the dead shall systematically, if possible, be searched for and collected".[26]
27. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the parties to a conflict are obliged to take all possible measures . . . to search for the dead".[27] The manual further states that:

> To facilitate the finding of the missing personnel Parties to the conflict endeavour to reach agreement to allow teams to search for . . . and recover the dead from battle-field areas and may attach to such teams representatives of the adverse Party when the search is taking place in areas controlled by the adverse Party. While carrying out these duties, members of the teams shall be respected and protected.[28]

With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "steps must be taken to search for the dead".[29]
28. Nigeria's Military Manual provides that the dead must be searched for "may be, with the aid of the civilian population or the Red Cross/Crescent".[30]
29. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "at all times and particularly after a campaign, the belligerents must immediately take measures to . . . search for the dead".[31]

[21] Italy, LOAC Elementary Rules Manual (1991), § 71.
[22] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 14, see also Précis No. 3, pp. 11 and 13.
[23] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[24] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 7-O, § 16, see also Fiche No. 5-SO, § C, Fiche No. 8-SO, § C and Fiche 2-T, § 22.
[25] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. XI–5.
[26] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-40.
[27] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(1), see also § 1011(1).
[28] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1011(3).
[29] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1817.
[30] Nigeria, Military Manual (1994), p. 46, § 16(g).
[31] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 34(c).

30. The Military Instructions of the Philippines provides that "evacuation of the dead bodies must be done expeditiously and brought to the nearest morgue".[32]

31. According to Spain's LOAC Manual, "the belligerent parties must, at all times and particularly after an engagement, take all possible measures to search for and collect . . . the dead in action".[33] The manual also states that "the dead bodies not buried, cremated or buried at sea because of the circumstances, shall be evacuated".[34]

32. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, all measures shall be taken to search for and collect the dead, be they enemies or friends".[35]

33. Togo's Military Manual provides that "combatants must search for the dead". It also states that "military commanders can make an appeal to the civilian population, to aid societies such as the National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies . . . to collect . . . the dead".[36]

34. The UK Military Manual provides that "belligerents must at all times, and particularly after an engagement, take all possible measures to search for the dead".[37]

35. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "combatants are required . . . to search for the dead".[38]

36. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 15 GC I.[39]

37. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 15 GC I.[40]

38. The US Operational Law Handbook states that "the LOW requires Parties to a conflict to search for the dead".[41]

39. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook provides that the requirement for parties to the conflict, after each engagement and without delay, to take all possible measures to search for and collect the wounded and sick "also extends to the dead".[42]

40. The YPA Military Manual of the SFRY (FRY) provides that the civilian population or humanitarian societies may, of their own initiative, collect the dead, while military commanders assist and supervise these groups.[43]

[32] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), p. 27, § 4; see also Military Directive to Commanders (1988), p. 30, guideline 4(h)(6).
[33] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.5.a, see also § 5.2.d.(5).
[34] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[35] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 71(1).
[36] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 10.
[37] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 381.
[38] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 3.
[39] US, Field Manual (1956), § 216.
[40] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).
[41] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[42] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.4, footnote 19.
[43] SFRY (FRY), YPA Military Manual (1988), Article 166.

National Legislation

41. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[44]

42. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "Parties to the conflict, shall, without delay take all possible measures . . . to search for the dead".[45]

43. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 15 GC I, 18 GC II and 16 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 33(4) AP I, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 8 AP II, are punishable offences.[46]

44. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[47]

45. Vietnam's Penal Code punishes "anyone who abandons . . . dead soldiers on the battlefield".[48]

National Case-law

46. In its ruling in the Jenin (Mortal Remains) case in 2002, dealing with the question of when, how and by whom the mortal remains of Palestinians who died in a battle in Jenin refugee camp should be identified and buried, Israel's High Court of Justice stated that "teams would be selected, and include soldiers from the bomb disposal unit, medical and other professional representatives. These teams will locate the bodies."[49] It also stated that "locating . . . the bodies is a highly important humanitarian deed. It is derived from the respect to the dead. The respect of every dead."[50]

Other National Practice

47. According to the Report on the Practice of Indonesia, whenever circumstances permit, all possible measures should be taken to search for the dead.[51]

48. According to the Report on the Practice of the Philippines:

> In an armed conflict where guerilla warfare is the strategy used, distinguishing between civilians and combatants is very difficult. This is precisely the reason why the Philippines have adopted the same rules for both civilians and combatants with regard to the search for and care of the wounded, sick and dead.[52]

[44] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[45] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Article 15, Schedule 1.
[46] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[47] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[48] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 271(1).
[49] Israel, High Court of Justice, Jenin (Mortal Remains) case, Ruling, 14 April 2002, §7.
[50] Israel, High Court of Justice, Jenin (Mortal Remains) case, Ruling, 14 April 2002, § 9.
[51] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[52] Report on the Practice of the Philippines, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

49. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support . . . the principle that each party to a conflict permit teams to search for . . . and recover the dead from the battlefield".[53]
50. According to the Report on US Practice, it is the opinio juris of the US that all possible measures should be taken to search for the dead.[54]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations
51. In 1992, in a report concerning Bosnia and Herzegovina, the UN Secretary-General reported that ICRC delegates had recovered the war dead.[55]
52. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992) noted, with respect to its investigation into mass graves, that "the Geneva Conventions require parties to a conflict to search for the dead".[56]

Other International Organisations
53. No practice was found.

International Conferences
54. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

55. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

56. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "as soon as the tactical situation permits, necessary measures shall be taken . . . to search for the dead".[57] Delegates also teach that "commanders may appeal to the civilian population, to

[53] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.
[54] Report on US Practice, 1997, Chapter 5.1.
[55] UN Secretary-General, Report pursuant to Security Council resolution 752 (1992), UN Doc. S/24000, 26 May 1992, § 9.
[56] UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992), Final report, Annex Summaries and Conclusions, UN Doc. S/1994/674/Add.2 (Vol. I), 31 May 1995, § 503(b).
[57] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 483.

aid societies such as National Red Cross or Red Crescent Societies and to commanders of neutral merchant vessels, yachts or other craft ...to collect... the dead".[58]

VI. Other Practice

57. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay,... to search for the dead".[59]

B. Treatment of the Dead

Respect for the dead

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

58. Under Article 16, second paragraph, GC IV, "as far as military considerations allow, each Party to the conflict shall facilitate the steps taken... to protect [the killed] against... ill-treatment".

59. Article 34(1) AP I provides that "the remains of persons who have died for reasons related to occupation or in detention resulting from occupation or hostilities... shall be respected". Article 34 AP I was adopted by consensus.[60]

60. Article 4 AP II states that:

> 1. All persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities, whether or not their liberty has been restricted, are entitled to respect for their person [and] honour...
> 2. Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, the following acts against the persons referred to in paragraph I are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever:
>
> ...
>
> (e) outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment...

61. Pursuant to Article 8(2)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii) of the 1998 ICC Statute, "committing outrages upon personal dignity" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

Other Instruments

62. Article 19 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "it is forbidden to... mutilate the dead lying on the field of battle".

[58] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 485.

[59] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 13, IRRC, No. 282, p. 335.

[60] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VI, CDDH/SR.37, 24 May 1977, p. 71.

63. Article 3(a) of the 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam provides that "in the event of the use of force and in case of armed conflict . . . it is prohibited to mutilate dead bodies".
64. Article 3(4) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "desecration of the remains of those who have died in the course of the armed conflict or while under detention" shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever with respect to persons hors de combat. Article 4(9) provides that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, . . . [to prevent] mutilation [the dead]".
65. With reference to the crime of outrages upon personal dignity, the 2000 ICC Elements of Crimes specifies that Article 8(2)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii) of the 1998 ICC Statute also applies to dead persons.
66. The 2000 UNTAET Regulation No. 2000/15 establishes panels with exclusive jurisdiction over serious criminal offences, including war crimes. According to Section 6(1)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii), "committing outrages upon personal dignity" constitutes a war crime in both international and non-international armed conflicts.

II. National Practice

Military Manuals

67. Australia's Defence Force Manual provides that:

> The remains of the dead, regardless of whether they are combatants, noncombatants, protected persons or civilians, are to be respected, in particular their honour, family rights, religious convictions and practices and manners and customs. At all times they shall be humanely treated.[61]

68. The Instructions to the Muslim Fighter issued by the ARBiH in Bosnia and Herzegovina in 1993 stated that:

> (c) Prisoners of war:
> . . . Islam likewise forbids the mutilation of enemy . . . dead . . . These are general rules which are binding for our soldiers. However, if the commanding officer assesses that the situation and the general interest demand a different course of action, then the soldiers are duty-bound to obey their commanding officer.[62]

69. Canada's LOAC Manual provides that "the remains of all persons who have died as a result of hostilities or while in occupation or detention in relation thereto shall be respected".[63] The manual considers that "mutilation or other maltreatment of dead bodies" is a war crime.[64]

[61] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 998.
[62] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Instructions to the Muslim Fighter (1993), § c.
[63] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-6, § 54.
[64] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 16-4, § 21(a).

70. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "there is ... an obligation to ... protect and pay proper respect for the dead".[65]
71. Ecuador's Naval Manual provides that "mutilation and other mistreatment of the dead" are representative war crimes.[66]
72. According to Israel's Manual on the Laws of War, "it is imperative to tend to the enemy's wounded and dead".[67] It further provides that a "[legal] combatant is entitled to the status of a prisoner of war, according him ... protection against the abuse of dead soldiers' bodies".[68] The manual also provides that it is absolutely forbidden to abuse the corpses of the enemy's dead.[69]
73. South Korea's Operational Law Manual provides that the mutilation of dead bodies is a war crime.[70]
74. Under South Korea's military regulations, "injuring dead bodies" is a war crime.[71]
75. The Military Manual of the Netherlands states that "remains must be protected".[72]
76. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "the dead must not be mutilated".[73]
77. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the remains of all persons who have died as a result of hostilities, or while in occupation or detention in relation to hostilities, shall be respected".[74] It also provides that "among other war crimes recognised by the customary law of armed conflict are mutilation or other maltreatment of dead bodies".[75] With respect to non-international armed conflicts, the manual states that "steps must be taken to prevent ... abuse" of the dead.[76]
78. According to Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War, "maltreatment of dead bodies" is a war crime.[77]
79. The Military Instructions of the Philippines provides that "respect for the dead which includes our own troops, the enemy and particularly innocent civilians must be a paramount concern of all commanders and troops at all levels ... All dead bodies ... must be handled humanely and treated with care and respect."[78]

[65] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 7, § 3.
[66] Ecuador, Naval Manual (1989), p. 6-5, § 6.2.5.
[67] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 44.
[68] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 46.
[69] Israel, Manual on the Laws of War (1998), p. 61.
[70] South Korea, Operational Law Manual (1996), Articles 1(4) and 2.
[71] South Korea, Military Regulation 187 (1991), Article 4.2; Military Operations Law of War Compliance Regulation (1993).
[72] Netherlands, Military Manual (1993), p. VI-2
[73] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-37.
[74] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1012(1).
[75] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1704(5).
[76] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1817(1).
[77] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 6.
[78] Philippines, Military Instructions (1989), §§ 2 and 4.

80. According to South Africa's LOAC Manual, "maltreatment of dead bodies" is a grave breach.[79]
81. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the dead shall be preserved from attack".[80] It also stipulates that "the dead shall be respected".[81]
82. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual states that anyone who "mutilates the dead" will be punished.[82]
83. The UK Military Manual provides that "the dead must be protected against . . . maltreatment".[83] It further states that "maltreatment of dead bodies" is a war crime.[84]
84. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "the dead must not be . . . mutilated".[85]
85. The US Field Manual provides that "maltreatment of dead bodies" is a war crime.[86]
86. The US Instructor's Guide states that "in addition to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the following acts are further examples of war crimes: . . . mutilating or mistreating dead bodies".[87]
87. The US Naval Handbook provides that "mutilation and other mistreatment of the dead" are representative war crimes.[88]

National Legislation
88. Australia's War Crimes Act states that "the expression 'war crime' includes the following: . . . cannibalism . . . [and] mutilation of the dead".[89]
89. Australia's ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act incorporates in the Criminal Code the war crimes defined in the 1998 ICC Statute, including "outrages upon personal dignity" of the bodies of dead persons in both international and non-international armed conflicts.[90]
90. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[91]
91. Canada's Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act provides that the war crimes defined in Article 8(2) of the 1998 ICC Statute are "crimes according to customary international law" and, as such, indictable offences under the Act.[92]

[79] South Africa, LOAC Manual (1996), § 39(c).
[80] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6).
[81] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 7.5.a.
[82] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Articles 194(2) and 200(f).
[83] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 380. [84] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 626(b).
[85] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Annex A, p. 47, § 15. [86] US, Field Manual (1956), § 504(c).
[87] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 13 and 14. [88] US, Naval Handbook (1995), § 6.2.5.
[89] Australia, War Crimes Act (1945), Section 3(xxxiv) and (xxxv).
[90] Australia, ICC (Consequential Amendments) Act (2002), Schedule 1, §§ 268.58(2) and 268.74(2).
[91] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[92] Canada, Crimes against Humanity and War Crimes Act (2000), Section 4(1) and (4).

92. Congo's Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act defines war crimes with reference to the categories of crimes defined in Article 8 of the 1998 ICC Statute.[93]
93. Under Ethiopia's Penal Code, it is a punishable offence to "mutilate a dead person".[94]
94. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Article 16 GC IV, and of AP I, including violations of Article 34(1) AP I, are punishable offences.[95]
95. Italy's Law of War Decree as amended provides that "commanders shall take all necessary measures to ensure respect for the bodies of enemy dead on the battlefield".[96]
96. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides that anyone who mutilates or commits outrages upon the cadaver of a soldier fallen on the battlefield is guilty of a punishable offence.[97]
97. Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended punishes outrages upon the bodies of the killed out of revenge or for terror purposes.[98]
98. The Military Criminal Code as amended of the Netherlands provides for the punishment of persons committing violent acts against a dead person.[99]
99. Under New Zealand's International Crimes and ICC Act, war crimes include the crimes defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[100]
100. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[101]
101. Spain's Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces states that "the dead shall be respected".[102]
102. Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended punishes anyone who mutilates a dead person.[103]
103. Under Trinidad and Tobago's Draft ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[104]

[93] Congo, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity Act (1998), Article 4.
[94] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 287(b).
[95] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[96] Italy, Law of War Decree as amended (1938), Article 94.
[97] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 197.
[98] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 335.
[99] Netherlands, Military Criminal Code as amended (1964), Article 143.
[100] New Zealand, International Crimes and ICC Act (2000), Section 11(2).
[101] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.
[102] Spain, Royal Ordinance for the Armed Forces (1978), Article 140.
[103] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Article 140(2).
[104] Trinidad and Tobago, Draft ICC Act (1999), Section 5(1)(a).

104. Under the UK ICC Act, it is a punishable offence to commit a war crime as defined in Article 8(2)(b)(xxi) and (c)(ii) of the 1998 ICC Statute.[105]
105. Under Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, committing outrages against the dead is considered a crime against international law.[106]

National Case-law
106. In 1945, in the Takehiko case, an Australian Military Court sentenced the accused, a Japanese soldier, for "mutilating the dead body of a prisoner of war" and for "cannibalism".[107]
107. In 1946, in the Tisato case, an Australian Military Court found the accused, a Japanese soldier, guilty of "cannibalism". The prosecution in this case alleged that several prisoners had been killed and that their flesh had been eaten.[108]
108. In its ruling in the Jenin (Mortal Remains) case in 2002, dealing with the question of when, how and by whom the mortal remains of Palestinians who died in a battle in Jenin refugee camp should be identified and buried, Israel's High Court of Justice stated that "needless to say, the burial will be made in an appropriate and respectful manner, maintaining the respect for the dead. In this matter, no distinction will be made between the bodies of armed combatants and the bodies of civilians."[109]
109. In 1946, in the Kikuchi and Mahuchi case, a US Military Commission sentenced the accused, who were Japanese soldiers, for "bayoneting and mutilating the dead body of a United States prisoner of war".[110]
110. In 1946, in the Yochio and Others case, a US Military Commission tried and convicted some of the accused Japanese soldiers for "preventing an honorable burial due to the consumption of parts of the bodies of prisoners of war by the accused during a special meal in the officers' mess". The accused were found guilty of these charges.[111]
111. In its judgement in the Schmid case in 1947, the US General Military Court at Dachau found the accused, a German medical officer, guilty of maltreating the body of a deceased US airman in violation of Article 3 of the 1929 Geneva Convention.The accused had severed the head from the body of the airman, had baked it and removed the skin and flesh and had bleached the skull.[112]

[105] UK, ICC Act (2001), Sections 50(1) and 51(1) (England and Wales) and Section 58(1) (Northern Ireland).
[106] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(12).
[107] Australia, Military Court at Wewak, Takehiko case, Judgement, 30 November 1945.
[108] Australia, Military Court at Rabaul, Tisato case, Judgement, 2 April 1946.
[109] Israel, High Court of Justice, Jenin (Mortal Remains) case, Ruling, 14 April 2002, § 8.
[110] US, Military Commission at Yokohama, Kikuchi and Mahuchi case, Judgement, 20 April 1946.
[111] US, Military Commission at the Mariana Islands, Yochio and Others case, Judgement, 2–15 August 1946.
[112] US, General Military Court at Dachau, Schmid case, Judgement, 19 May 1947.

Other National Practice

112. In 1993, the Ministry of the Interior of Azerbaijan ordered that troops "in zones of combat, during military operations . . . must not desecrate the remains of enemies".[113]

113. In case before Colombia's Council of State in 1994, the Prosecutor stated that failure to treat the bodies of dead combatants and civilians with respect constituted a violation of common Article 3 of the 1949 Geneva Conventions.[114]

114. The Report on the Practice of Indonesia states that it is the practice of Indonesia to care for the dead.[115]

115. In 1987, the Deputy Legal Adviser of the US Department of State affirmed that "we support . . . the principle that . . . the remains of the dead be respected and maintained".[116]

116. In 1991, the Ministry of Defence of the SFRY (FRY) issued a document entitled "Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia". This document included the following example: "the attitude towards dead YPA soldiers has been absolutely uncivilized and without any trace of humanity".[117]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

117. No practice was found.

IV. Practice of International Judicial and Quasi-judicial Bodies

118. No practice was found.

V. Practice of the International Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement

119. To fulfil its task of disseminating IHL, the ICRC has delegates around the world teaching armed and security forces that "the dead may not be attacked".[118]

[113] Azerbaijan, Ministry of the Interior, Command of the Troops of the Interior, Order No. 42, Baku, 9 January 1993, § 5.

[114] Colombia, Council of State, Case No. 9276, Concepto del Procurador Primero Delegado, 19 August 1994.

[115] Report on the Practice of Indonesia, 1997, Chapter 5.1.

[116] US, Remarks of Michael J. Matheson, Deputy Legal Adviser, US Department of State, The Sixth Annual American Red Cross-Washington College of Law Conference on International Humanitarian Law: A Workshop on Customary International Law and the 1977 Protocols Additional to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, American University Journal of International Law and Policy, Vol. 2, 1987, p. 424.

[117] SFRY (FRY), Ministry of Defence, Examples of violations of the rules of international law committed by the so-called armed forces of Slovenia, July 1991, § 2(iv).

[118] Frédéric de Mulinen, Handbook on the Law of War for Armed Forces, ICRC, Geneva, 1987, § 230.

120. In 1993, the ICRC reminded officials of a State of their duty to prevent the abuse of remains of dead nationals of another State, even if such abuses were committed by the civilian population.[119] The following year, it again reminded the State of its obligation to respect the bodies of dead soldiers and protect them from mutilation and degrading treatment.[120]

121. In 1993, in a letter to the ICRC, a National Red Crescent Society denounced the inhumane treatment of bodies of dead combatants by troops of one of the parties to the conflict.[121]

122. In a press release issued in 1993 in the context of the conflict in Somalia, the ICRC condemned abuses committed on the remains of dead combatants of the UNOSOM II forces.[122]

VI. Other Practice

123. Investigations following allegations concerning crimes committed against members of the armed forces fighting in Crete during the Second World War found evidence that dead German soldiers had been mutilated:

> Some had their genitals mutilated, eyes put out, ears and noses cut off; others had knife wounds in the face, stomach, and back; throats were slit, and hands chopped off. The majority of these mutilations were probably defilement of dead bodies; only in a few cases does the evidence indicate that the victim was maltreated and tortured to death.[123]

124. The Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights of Åbo Akademi University in Turku/Åbo, Finland in 1990, states that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, . . . to prevent [the dead] being . . . mutilated".[124]

Protection of the dead against despoliation

I. Treaties and Other Instruments

Treaties

125. Article 16 of the 1907 Hague Convention (X) provides that, "after every engagement, the two belligerents, so far as military interests permit, shall take steps . . . to protect . . . the dead . . . against pillage".

[119] ICRC archive document. [120] ICRC archive document. [121] ICRC archive document.
[122] ICRC, Press Release No. 1759, Somalia: The ICRC appeals for respect for international humanitarian law, 7 October 1993, § 1.
[123] Alfred M. de Zayas, The Wehrmacht War Crimes Bureau, 1939–1945, University of Nebraska Press, 1989, pp. 156 and 157.
[124] Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards, adopted by an expert meeting convened by the Institute for Human Rights, Åbo Akademi University, Turku/Åbo, 30 November–2 December 1990, Article 13, IRRC, No. 282, p. 335.

126. Article 15, first paragraph, GC I provides that "at all times, and particularly after an engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures to ... prevent [the dead from] being despoiled".
127. Article 18, first paragraph, GC II provides that "after each engagement, Parties to the conflict shall, without delay, take all possible measures to ... prevent [the dead from] being despoiled".
128. Article 16, second paragraph, GC IV provides that "as far as military considerations allow, each Party to the conflict shall facilitate the steps taken ... to protect [the killed] against pillage".
129. Article 4 AP II states that:

> 2. Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing, the following acts against [all persons who do not take a direct part or who have ceased to take part in hostilities] are and shall remain prohibited at any time and in any place whatsoever:
>
> ...
>
> (g) pillage.

130. Article 8 AP II provides that "whenever circumstances permit, and particularly after an engagement, all possible measures shall be taken, without delay, to ... prevent [the dead from] being despoiled". Article 8 AP II was adopted by consensus.[125]

Other Instruments
131. Article 19 of the 1880 Oxford Manual provides that "it is forbidden to rob ... the dead lying on the field of battle".
132. Rule 4 of the 1950 UN Command Rules and Regulations gave Military Commissions of the UN Command in Korea jurisdiction over offences including acts of marauding.
133. Article 4(9) of Part IV of the 1998 Comprehensive Agreement on Respect for Human Rights and IHL in the Philippines provides that "every possible measure shall be taken, without delay, to ... prevent despoliation [of the dead]".

II. National Practice

Military Manuals
134. Argentina's Law of War Manual provides that the dead shall be prevented from being despoiled.[126]
135. Australia's Defence Force Manual specifies that "parties must take measures to protect the bodies from being despoiled".[127] It adds that the remains of the dead "must be protected against pillage and despoilment".[128]

[125] CDDH, Official Records, Vol. VII, CDDH/SR.51, 3 June 1977, p. 110.
[126] Argentina, Law of War Manual (1969), § 3.005; Law of War Manual (1989), § 2.06.
[127] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 986.
[128] Australia, Defence Force Manual (1994), § 998.

136. Under Belgium's Field Regulations, "it is forbidden to despoil the dead".[129] The manual adds that "only weapons, ammunition, war material and personal documents may be removed from the body".[130]

137. Benin's Military Manual provides that "combatants must prevent the dead from being despoiled".[131]

138. Burkina Faso's Disciplinary Regulations states that it is prohibited "to despoil the dead".[132]

139. Cameroon's Disciplinary Regulations states that it is forbidden "to despoil the dead".[133]

140. Canada's LOAC Manual specifies that the belligerents "must ... prevent [the] remains [of the dead] from being despoiled".[134] With respect to non-international armed conflicts in particular, the manual states that "steps must also be taken to ... prevent despoliation [of the dead]".[135]

141. Canada's Code of Conduct provides that "the personal property of ... the dead shall not be taken".[136]

142. Congo's Disciplinary Regulations states that, under the laws and customs of war, it is forbidden to "despoil the dead".[137]

143. France's Disciplinary Regulations as amended provides that, under international conventions, "it is prohibited to despoil the dead".[138]

144. According to Germany's Military Manual, "the dead are to be ... prevented from being despoiled".[139]

145. Kenya's LOAC Manual states that "Parties to a conflict must ... prevent [the dead] being despoiled".[140]

146. Lebanon's Army Regulations and Field Manual prohibit pillage of the dead.[141]

147. Madagascar's Military Manual provides that "all possible measures must be taken ... to prevent [the dead] being despoiled".[142]

148. Mali's Army Regulations provides that, under the laws and customs of war, it is prohibited to plunder the dead.[143]

149. Morocco's Disciplinary Regulations provides that, under the laws and customs of war, it is prohibited "to despoil the dead".[144]

[129] Belgium, Field Regulations (1964), Article 24; see also Law of War Manual (1983), p. 49.
[130] Belgium, Field Regulations (1964), Article 24.
[131] Benin, Military Manual (1995), Fascicule II, p. 10, see also Fascicule III, p. 5.
[132] Burkina Faso, Disciplinary Regulations (1994), Article 35(2).
[133] Cameroon, Disciplinary Regulations (1975), Article 32.
[134] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 9-1, § 9, see also p. 11-2, § 16.
[135] Canada, LOAC Manual (1999), p. 17-4, § 32.
[136] Canada, Code of Conduct (2001), Rule 8, § 2.
[137] Congo, Disciplinary Regulations (1986), Article 32(2).
[138] France, Disciplinary Regulations as amended (1975), Article 9 bis.
[139] Germany, Military Manual (1992), § 611.
[140] Kenya, LOAC Manual (1997), Précis No. 2, p. 14, see also Précis No. 3, p. 11.
[141] Lebanon, Army Regulations (1971), § 17; Field Manual (1996), § 8.
[142] Madagascar, Military Manual (1994), Fiche No. 2-T, § 22.
[143] Mali, Army Regulations (1979), Article 36.
[144] Morocco, Disciplinary Regulations (1974), Article 25(2)(6).

150. The Military Handbook of the Netherlands provides that "the property [of the dead] must not be taken or destroyed".[145]
151. New Zealand's Military Manual provides that "the Parties to a conflict are obliged ... to prevent [the dead] ... being looted".[146]
152. Nigeria's Manual on the Laws of War provides that "at all times and particularly after a campaign, the belligerents must immediately take measures to ... prevent [the dead] being despoiled".[147]
153. Romania's Soldiers' Manual provides that it is prohibited to despoil or pillage dead enemy combatants.[148]
154. Senegal's Disciplinary Regulations states that, under the laws and customs of war, it is prohibited for soldiers in combat "to despoil the dead".[149]
155. Spain's LOAC Manual provides that "the dead shall not be ... despoiled".[150]
156. Switzerland's Basic Military Manual provides that it is prohibited "to despoil the ... dead".[151]
157. Togo's Military Manual provides that "combatants must ... prevent the dead from being despoiled".[152]
158. The UK Military Manual provides that "the dead must be protected against pillage", specifying that "this is a well-established rule of customary international law".[153] It adds that "belligerents must at all times, and particularly after an engagement, take all possible measures ... to prevent [the dead] ... being despoiled".[154] The manual further states that:

> A special class of war crime is that sometimes known as "marauding". This consists of ranging over battlefields and following advancing or retreating armies in quest of loot, robbing ... and plundering the dead – all acts done not as a means of carrying on the war but for private gain. Nevertheless, such acts are treated as violations of the law of war. Those who commit them, whether civilians who have never been lawful combatants, or persons who have belonged to a military unit, an organised resistance movement or a levée en masse, and have deserted and so ceased to be lawful combatants, are liable to be punished as war criminals. They may be tried and sentenced by the courts of either belligerent.[155]

159. The UK LOAC Manual provides that "combatants are required to ... prevent [the dead] being despoiled".[156]

[145] Netherlands, Military Handbook (1995), p. 7-37.
[146] New Zealand, Military Manual (1992), § 1003(1).
[147] Nigeria, Manual on the Laws of War (undated), § 34(c).
[148] Romania, Soldiers' Manual (1991), p. 9.
[149] Senegal, Disciplinary Regulations (1990), Article 34(2).
[150] Spain, LOAC Manual (1996), Vol. I, § 5.2.d.(6), see also § 7.5.a.
[151] Switzerland, Basic Military Manual (1987), Article 72; see also Military Manual (1984), p. 4 and Teaching Manual (1986), p. 38.
[152] Togo, Military Manual (1996), Fascicule II, p. 10, see also Fascicule III, p. 5.
[153] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 380.
[154] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 381.
[155] UK, Military Manual (1958), § 636.
[156] UK, LOAC Manual (1981), Section 6, p. 22, § 3, see also Annex A, p. 47, § 15.

160. The US Field Manual reproduces Article 15 GC I.[157]
161. The US Air Force Pamphlet refers to Article 15 GC I.[158]
162. The US Instructor's Guide states that "in addition to the grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, the following acts are further examples of war crimes: . . . taking and keeping . . . property from dead bodies".[159]
163. The US Operational Law Handbook states that "the LOW requires Parties to a conflict to prevent [the] despoilment [of the dead]".[160]
164. The Annotated Supplement to the US Naval Handbook provides that the "requirement [to protect from harm and ensure the care of wounded, sick and shipwrecked] also extends to the dead and includes a requirement to prevent despoiling of the dead".[161]

National Legislation
165. Under Albania's Military Penal Code, "stealing on the battlefield" is an offence.[162]
166. Under Algeria's Code of Military Justice, it is a punishable offence for a military or civilian person to steal from dead persons in the area of operation.[163]
167. Argentina's Draft Code of Military Justice punishes any soldier who "despoils a cadaver".[164]
168. Under Armenia's Penal Code, stealing objects from the dead on the battlefield is a punishable offence.[165]
169. Australia's Defence Force Discipline Act, in an article concerning looting, provides that:

> A person, being a defence member or a defence civilian, who, in the course of operations against the enemy, or in the course of operations undertaken by the Defence Force for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities –
>
> . . .
>
> (b) takes any property from the body of a person killed . . . in those operations . . .
>
> is guilty of [a punishable] offence.[166]

170. Azerbaijan's Criminal Code provides that "pillage of property of persons killed . . . on the battlefield" constitutes a war crime in international and non-international armed conflicts.[167]

[157] US, Field Manual (1956), § 216.
[158] US, Air Force Pamphlet (1976), § 12-2(a).
[159] US, Instructor's Guide (1985), pp. 13 and 14.
[160] US, Operational Law Handbook (1993), p. Q-185.
[161] US, Annotated Supplement to the Naval Handbook (1997), § 11.4, footnote 19.
[162] Albania, Military Penal Code (1995), Articles 91–93.
[163] Algeria, Code of Military Justice (1971), Article 287.
[164] Argentina, Draft Code of Military Justice (1998), Article 292, introducing a new Article 876(8) in the Code of Military Justice as amended (1951).
[165] Armenia, Penal Code (2003), Article 383.
[166] Australia, Defence Force Discipline Act (1982), Section 48(1).
[167] Azerbaijan, Criminal Code (1999), Article 118.

171. Bangladesh's International Crimes (Tribunal) Act states that the "violation of any humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts laid down in the Geneva Conventions of 1949" is a crime.[168]
172. Under the Criminal Code of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, "the unlawful appropriation of belongings from the killed . . . on the battlefield" is a war crime.[169] The Criminal Code of the Republika Srpska contains the same provision.[170]
173. Botswana's Geneva Conventions Act provides that "Parties to the conflict, shall, without delay take all possible measures . . . to protect [the dead] being despoiled".[171]
174. Bulgaria's Penal Code as amended provides that any "person who, on the battlefield, takes away objects from . . . a killed person, with the intention to unlawfully appropriate them" commits a punishable crime.[172]
175. Under Burkina Faso's Code of Military Justice, the despoliation of the dead in the area of operations of military units is a punishable offence.[173]
176. Canada's National Defence Act provides that "every person who . . . steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of any person killed . . . in the course of warlike operations . . . is guilty of [a punishable] offence".[174]
177. Under Chad's Code of Military Justice, taking the property of the dead on the battlefield is a criminal offence.[175]
178. Chile's Code of Military Justice provides that "military personnel who plunder soldiers or auxiliary personnel dead on the battlefield of their money, jewellery or other objects, in order to appropriate them," commits a punishable offence.[176]
179. Colombia's Penal Code imposes a criminal sanction on "anyone who, during an armed conflict, despoils a dead person".[177]
180. Côte d'Ivoire's Penal Code as amended punishes "whoever, in an area of military operations, despoils . . . a dead person".[178]
181. Under Croatia's Criminal Code, "the unlawful taking of the personal belongings of those killed on the battlefield" is a war crime.[179]
182. Cuba's Military Criminal Code punishes "anyone who, in areas of military operations, for personal gain, despoils the money or other belongings of . . . the dead".[180]

[168] Bangladesh, International Crimes (Tribunal) Act (1973), Section 3(2)(e).
[169] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Federation, Criminal Code (1998), Article 159(1).
[170] Bosnia and Herzegovina, Republika Srpska, Criminal Code (2000), Article 439(1).
[171] Botswana, Geneva Conventions Act (1970), Article 15, Schedule 1.
[172] Bulgaria, Penal Code as amended (1968), Article 405.
[173] Burkina Faso, Code of Military Justice (1994), Article 193.
[174] Canada, National Defence Act (1985), Section 77(g).
[175] Chad, Code of Military Justice (1962), Article 62.
[176] Chile, Code of Military Justice (1925), Article 365.
[177] Colombia, Penal Code (2000), Article 151.
[178] Côte d'Ivoire, Penal Code as amended (1981), Article 465.
[179] Croatia, Criminal Code (1997), Article 162(1).
[180] Cuba, Military Criminal Code (1979), Article 43(1).

183. The Czech Republic's Criminal Code as amended punishes "a person who, in the area of combat, on the battlefield, in places affected by war operations or in occupied territory, ... robs the war dead".[181]

184. Denmark's Military Criminal Code as amended provides that "any person who unlawfully takes an object from a person killed through an act of war shall be punishable for theft".[182]

185. Under Egypt's Penal Code, the theft of property belonging to a dead combatant ... in zones of military operations, "even if he is an enemy", is an offence.[183]

186. Egypt's Military Criminal Code punishes "any person who, in an area of military operations, steals from a dead ... soldier, even if he is an enemy".[184] The provision applies both to the military and to civilians.[185]

187. El Salvador's Code of Military Justice punishes "the soldier who despoils his comrade-in-arms, killed on the battlefield, of the money or jewellery carried with him, and appropriates it for himself".[186]

188. Under Ethiopia's Penal Code, "whoever, in time of war and contrary to public international law and humanitarian conventions, ... lays hands on or does violence to a ... dead enemy on the field of battle, with intent to rob or plunder him" commits a punishable offence against the law of nations.[187]

189. Under France's Code of Military Justice, "any individual, military or not, who, in the area of operation of a force or a unit, ... plunders a ... dead person" commits a punishable offence.[188]

190. Gambia's Armed Forces Act provides that "every person subject to this Act who ... steals from or with intent to steal searches, the person of any person killed ... in the course of war-like operations" commits a punishable offence.[189]

191. Under Georgia's Criminal Code, "pillage, i.e. seizure in a combat situation of things which are on a dead person," is a crime.[190]

192. Ghana's Armed Forces Act states that "every person subject to the Code of Service Discipline who ... steals from or with the intent to steal searches, the person of any person killed ... in the course of warlike operations" commits a punishable offence.[191]

193. Guinea's Criminal Code provides that "whoever, in an area of military operation, plunders a ... dead person" commits a punishable offence.[192]

[181] Czech Republic, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 264(c).
[182] Denmark, Military Criminal Code as amended (1978), Article 24(2).
[183] Egypt, Penal Code (1937), Article 317(9).
[184] Egypt, Military Criminal Code (1966), Article 136.
[185] Egypt, Military Criminal Code (1966), Articles 123 and 136.
[186] El Salvador, Code of Military Justice (1934), Article 71.
[187] Ethiopia, Penal Code (1957), Article 287(c).
[188] France, Code of Military Justice (1982), Article 428.
[189] Gambia, Armed Forces Act (1985), Section 40(g).
[190] Georgia, Criminal Code (1999), Article 413(a).
[191] Ghana, Armed Forces Act (1962), Section 18(g).
[192] Guinea, Criminal Code (1998), Article 570.

194. Under Hungary's Criminal Code as amended, "the person who loots the dead . . . on the battlefield" is guilty, upon conviction, of a war crime.[193]
195. Indonesia's Military Penal Code provides that "those who commit theft from dead bodies" commit a punishable offence.[194]
196. Iraq's Military Penal Code states that "every person who, with the intent to appropriate for himself or unjustifiably, takes money or other things from the killed in the field of battle . . . shall be punished".[195]
197. Ireland's Geneva Conventions Act as amended provides that any "minor breach" of the Geneva Conventions, including violations of Articles 15 GC I, 18 GC II and 16 GC IV, as well as any "contravention" of AP II, including violations of Article 8 AP II, are punishable offences.[196]
198. Italy's Wartime Military Penal Code provides that anyone who despoils a cadaver on the battlefield for private purposes is guilty of a punishable offence.[197]
199. Under Kazakhstan's Penal Code, "theft of objects belonging to the dead . . . on the battlefield" is a punishable offence.[198]
200. Under Kenya's Armed Forces Act, anyone who steals from the person of the dead commits a punishable offence.[199]
201. Under South Korea's Military Criminal Code, "a person who takes the clothes and other property of the dead . . . in the combat area" commits a punishable offence.[200]
202. Under Latvia's Criminal Code, the pillage of persons killed on the battlefield is a punishable offence.[201]
203. Lebanon's Code of Military Justice stipulates that "any person, military or not, who, in an area of military operations, despoils a . . . dead person" commits a punishable offence.[202]
204. Under Lithuania's Criminal Code as amended, "an order to plunder or seize things from fallen . . . victims on the battlefield" is a war crime.[203]
205. Malaysia's Armed Forces Act provides that:

Every person subject to service law under this Act who –

(a) steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of warlike operations . . .

[193] Hungary, Criminal Code as amended (1978), Section 161.
[194] Indonesia, Military Penal Code (1947), Article 143.
[195] Iraq, Military Penal Code (1940), Article 115(a).
[196] Ireland, Geneva Conventions Act as amended (1962), Section 4(1) and (4).
[197] Italy, Wartime Military Penal Code (1941), Article 197.
[198] Kazakhstan, Penal Code (1997), Article 385.
[199] Kenya, Armed Forces Act (1968), Section 23.
[200] South Korea, Military Criminal Code (1962), Article 82.
[201] Latvia, Criminal Code (1998), Section 74, see also Section 71 (deliver children on a compulsory basis from one group of people into another as a part of a genocide campaign).
[202] Lebanon, Code of Military Justice (1968), Article 132.
[203] Lithuania, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 341.

shall be guilty of looting and liable on conviction by court-martial to imprisonment or any less punishment provided by this Act.[204]

206. Under Mali's Code of Military Justice, "anyone who despoils a . . . dead person" commits a punishable offence.[205]
207. Under Moldova's Penal Code, "pillage of the dead on the battlefield" is a punishable offence.[206]
208. Under the Military Criminal Code as amended of the Netherlands "theft from a dead . . . person, who belongs to one of the parties to the conflict" is a criminal offence.[207]
209. New Zealand's Armed Forces Discipline Act provides that:

Every person subject to this Act commits the offence of looting, and is liable to imprisonment . . . who –

(a) Steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of any war or warlike operations in which New Zealand is engaged, or killed . . . in the course of operations undertaken by any service of the Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil power.[208]

210. Nicaragua's Military Penal Law punishes "anyone who, in military operations, steals, for personal gain, the money or other belongings of . . . the dead".[209]
211. Nicaragua's Military Penal Code provides for the punishment of the soldier who, in the zone of operations, "despoils a dead person . . . of his or her clothes or other personal effects".[210]
212. Under Nigeria's Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended, looting is a punishable offence. A person is guilty of looting who "steals from, or with intent to steal, searches the body of a person killed . . . in the course of war-like operations, or killed . . . in the course of operations undertaken by any service of the Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities".[211]
213. Under Norway's Military Penal Code as amended, "anyone who contravenes or is accessory to the contravention of provisions relating to the protection of persons or property laid down in . . . the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 . . . [and in] the two additional protocols to these Conventions . . . is liable to imprisonment".[212]

[204] Malaysia, Armed Forces Act (1972), Section 46(a).
[205] Mali, Code of Military Justice (1995), Article 134(1).
[206] Moldova, Penal Code (2002), Article 389.
[207] Netherlands, Military Criminal Code as amended (1965), Article 156.
[208] New Zealand, Armed Forces Discipline Act (1971), Section 31(a).
[209] Nicaragua, Military Penal Law (1980), Article 81.
[210] Nicaragua, Military Penal Code (1996), Article 56(1).
[211] Nigeria, Armed Forces Decree 105 as amended (1993), Section 51(a).
[212] Norway, Military Penal Code as amended (1902), § 108.

214. Romania's Penal Code criminalises "robbing the dead . . . on the battlefield of objects they possess".[213]

215. Singapore's Armed Forces Act as amended provides that:

> Every person subject to military law who –
>
> (a) steals from or, with intent to steal, searches the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of warlike operations, or killed . . . in the course of operations undertaken by the Singapore Armed Forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities . . .
>
> shall be guilty of looting and shall be liable on conviction by a subordinate military court to imprisonment.[214]

216. Slovakia's Criminal Code as amended punishes "a person who in the area of combat, on the battlefield, in places affected by war operations or in the occupied territory . . . rob the war dead".[215]

217. Under Slovenia's Penal Code, plundering or ordering the plunder of the belongings of casualties on the battlefield is a war crime.[216]

218. Under Spain's Military Criminal Code, "the military personnel who . . . strip a cadaver . . . of his personal effects in the area of operations, with the intent to appropriate them," commit punishable offences against the laws and customs of war.[217]

219. Under Spain's Penal Code, "anyone who, on the occasion of an armed conflict . . . strips a cadaver . . . of his personal effects" commits a punishable "offence against protected persons and objects in the event of armed conflict".[218]

220. Switzerland's Military Criminal Code as amended punishes anyone who, on the battlefield, despoils dead persons.[219]

221. Tajikistan's Criminal Code punishes "pillage, i.e. seizure in a combat situation of things which are on the dead".[220]

222. Under Togo's Code of Military Justice, taking the property from the dead on the battlefield is a criminal offence.[221]

223. Trinidad and Tobago's Defence Act as amended contains a section on "looting" which states that:

> Any person subject to military law who –
>
> (a) steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of warlike operations . . .

[213] Romania, Penal Code (1968), Article 350.
[214] Singapore, Armed Forces Act as amended (1972), Section 18(a).
[215] Slovakia, Criminal Code as amended (1961), Article 264(c).
[216] Slovenia, Penal Code (1994), Article 380(1).
[217] Spain, Military Criminal Code (1985), Article 77(2).
[218] Spain, Penal Code (1995), Article 612(7).
[219] Switzerland, Military Criminal Code as amended (1927), Article 140(1).
[220] Tajikistan, Criminal Code (1998), Article 405.
[221] Togo, Code of Military Justice (1981), Article 95.

is guilty of looting and, on conviction by court-martial, liable to imprisonment or less punishment.[222]

224. Uganda's National Resistance Army Statute stipulates that "a person subject to military law who . . . steals from or with intent to steal, searches the person or any person killed . . . in the course of war-like operations . . . commits an offence and shall on conviction, be liable to . . . imprisonment".[223]

225. Pursuant to Ukraine's Criminal Code, "stealing belongings of the dead . . . on a battlefield" is a war crime.[224]

226. The UK Army Act as amended provides that:

> Any person subject to military law who –
> (a) steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of warlike operations, or killed . . . in the course of operations undertaken by Her Majesty's forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities . . .
> shall be guilty of looting and liable, on conviction by court-martial, to imprisonment or any less punishment provided by this Act.[225]

227. The UK Air Force Act as amended provides that:

> Any person subject to air-force law who –
> (a) steals from, or with intent to steal searches, the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of warlike operations, or killed . . . in the course of operations undertaken by Her Majesty's forces for the preservation of law and order or otherwise in aid of the civil authorities . . .
> shall be guilty of looting and liable, on conviction by court-martial, to imprisonment or any less punishment provided by this Act.[226]

228. Uruguay's Military Penal Code as amended punishes "the spoliation of . . . the dead in combat".[227]

229. Under Venezuela's Code of Military Justice as amended, it is a crime against international law to plunder a dead person.[228]

230. Vietnam's Penal Code punishes "anyone who steals things from . . . remains of soldiers dead on the battlefield".[229]

231. Under Yemen's Military Criminal Code, "any person who . . . despoils . . . a dead person" commits a war crime.[230]

[222] Trinidad and Tobago, Defence Act as amended (1962), Section 40(a).
[223] Uganda, National Resistance Army Statute (1992), Section 35(f).
[224] Ukraine, Criminal Code (2001), Article 432.
[225] UK, Army Act as amended (1955), Section 30(a).
[226] UK, Air Force Act as amended (1955), Section 30(a).
[227] Uruguay, Military Penal Code as amended (1943), Article 58(10).
[228] Venezuela, Code of Military Justice as amended (1998), Article 474(12).
[229] Vietnam, Penal Code (1990), Article 271(2).
[230] Yemen, Military Criminal Code (1998), Article 20.

232. Under the Penal Code as amended of the SFRY (FRY), ordering or executing the unlawful seizure of belongings from the killed on the battlefield is a war crime.[231]

233. Zambia's Defence Act as amended states that:

> Any person subject to military law under this Act who –
> (a) steals from or with intent to steal searches the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of warlike operations . . .
> shall be guilty of looting and liable, on conviction by court-martial, to imprisonment or any less punishment provided by this Act.[232]

234. Zimbabwe's Defence Act as amended provides that:

> Any member [of the Defence Forces] who –
> (a) steals from or with intent to steal searches the person of anyone killed . . . in the course of warlike operations . . .
> shall be guilty of the offence of looting and liable to imprisonment or any less punishment.[233]

National Case-law

235. In its judgement in the Pohl case in 1947, the US Military Tribunal at Nuremberg stated that "robbing the dead, even without the added offence of killing, is and always has been a crime. And when it is organized and planned and carried out on a hundred-million mark scale, it becomes an aggravated crime, and anyone who takes part in it is a criminal".[234]

Other National Practice

236. A training video on IHL produced by the UK Ministry of Defence illustrates the rule that "stealing from a dead soldier is illegal and also a court martial offence".[235]

III. Practice of International Organisations and Conferences

United Nations

237. In 1994, in its final report on grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of IHL committed in the former Yugoslavia, the UN Commission of Experts Established pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780

[231] SFRY (FRY), Penal Code as amended (1976), Article 147(1).
