MILESTONE

Robins delivers 200th C-17 Globemaster to warfighter

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

On Tuesday Robins celebrated the completion of work on its 200th C-17 Globemaster III, but maintenance workers turned out to be too fast for the ceremony.

Brig. Gen. Lee Levy, commander of the 402nd Maintenance Wing, jokingly apologized the C-17 behind the podium wasn't the milestone aircraft, as was originally intended. As it turned out, workers completed the 200th plane a few days early and it had already been delivered to the 62nd Airlift Wing at Joint Base

Lewis-McChord, Wash.

Col. Kevin Kilb, 62nd commander, attended the ceremony. Levy apologized to Kilb for the plane having departed but said it was one apology he would always be happy to make.

"This workforce did such amazing work that your airplane went home early," Levy said to Kilb. "That airplane is now back in the fight, supporting our nation's defense all around the globe."

Under a contract with Boeing, the maker of the C-17, the 562nd Aircraft Maintenance Squadron performs modifications and unscheduled depot-level maintenance on C-17s.

The 200th plane was modified with the Extended Range/On Board Inert Gas Generating System II, which involves over 55,000 man hours. The modification includes converting 16 wing dry bays into fuel tanks, extending the aircraft's range by approximately 1,000 miles.

Levy pointed out the range of the C-17 allows it to transport injured Soldiers directly from Iraq and Afghanistan to hospitals in the U.S. He recalled talking to an Army doctor who became "misty eyed" when discussing the C-17's ability to save the lives of warfighters.

Kilb pointed out C-17s from McChord are used for a variety of missions, including the relief efforts in Haiti.

"At my end of the mission chain, we have the honor of using this great machine to do so many things," Kilb said. "You have just as important part in that mission with what you are doing here. It is the people who maintain the machine who keep it mission ready."

Communication key to labor, management relations

The progress made to improve labor and management relations in the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center is due, in large part, to the close involvement of top leaders on both sides of the aisle.

Capt. Nicholas Moore, a member of the labor-management relations 'connector' team, said WR-ALC

Commander Maj. Gen. Polly A. Peyer and American Federation of Government Employees Local 987 President Tom Scott, are working closely together to improve labor and management relations here.

"We are seeing significant signs of improvement and it's due to those at the top on both sides," Moore said.

"It's the hands-on involvement of leaders like Maj. Gen. Peyer and Mr. Tom Scott which will ultimately make this (P31) initiative successful," added Moore. "When the Center's senior-most leaders make labor and management relations a priority and personally follow up on its progress, everyone realizes its importance and (the) need to focus on making it better."

The connector team is already doing its part to improve labor and management relations.

The team first developed a Foster Leadership In People, or FLIP, coin to recognize personnel who've made individual efforts to improve labor and management relations here. It is now working to develop labor-management partnership councils at the group and squadron

Local units still actively involved in Haiti relief efforts

Team Robins continues to support Operation Unified Response, the ongoing relief effort in Haiti.

The 116th Air Control Wing and 78th Air Base Wing continue to support a U-2S reconnaissance aircraft which is temporarily based here.

The U-2S is gathering wide-area shots of the country for decision makers on the ground.

The 560th Aircraft Sustainment Group is also supporting the U-2S, as well as other Air Force surveillance assets in use in Haiti including the RQ-4A Global Hawk and MQ-1 Predator.

The surveillance aircraft are helping with the security of the relief operations.

They're also helping officials monitor the movements of displaced persons.

The 116th ACW has also deployed a deputy airfield manager to Haiti, and six other members of the unit are set to deploy during the next few days. They include three civil engineer officers, a utilities craftsman, an engineer assistant and a heavy equipment operator.

Additionally, staff members at the Air Force Reserve Command headquarters have been coordinating support to the operation provided by Reserve aircraft and crews across the United States.

Also, eight members of the 5th Combat Communications Group, 689th Combat Communications Wing, are in Haiti. The team is transferring video from surveillance and reconnaissance aircraft to servers on the ground and providing an Air Force Expeditionary Medical Support unit with ground communications capabilities.

Robins maintainer wins Marquez Award

Benjamin Clemons, a mechanic in the 569th Electronics Maintenance Squadron, has been named a 2009 Lt. Gen. Leo Marquez Award winner as Outstanding Maintenance Person of the Year (Civilian Technician) in Air Force Materiel Command.

Benjamin Clemons

Clemons said he is "awed" by the award, which is presented to maintainers who "demonstrate the highest degree of sustained job performance, knowledge, efficiency and results in the categories of aircraft, munitions, missile and communications-electronics maintenance."

"I am humbled ... to receive an award set by one of the trailblazers of logistics and maintenance," he said. "It's the biggest award I've ever won."

Clemons, who has worked here since 2002, said many people contributed to his receiving the honor. They include members of his unit as well as his wife and son, he said.

"The award is a reflection of what my organization is all about," said Clemons. "I could not do what I do without the support of my coworkers and management. This is a team effort. I just represent the great people who perform maintenance every day."

Value stream mapping the medical process

Meeting the goal of reducing downtime for aircraft at Robins involves units across the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center.

One unit is the 78th Medical Group's Occupational Medicine Flight, which performs initial and annual physicals and treats civilian on-the-job injuries.

To reduce the time aircraft maintenance workers spend in occupational medicine and increase the time they are working on aircraft, the 78th Medical Group and the 402nd Aircraft Maintenance Group held a "value stream mapping" event last week to identify steps which can be eliminated to speed up the process.

Records show employees spent 35,480 hours in occupational medicine in 2009, with the cost of lost-hours estimated at $4.8 million.

"What we are trying to do is return them to work more quickly," said Randall Evans, 78th Air Base Wing Lean coordinator.

The team mapped the occupational medicine process and identified those steps considered "non-value added."

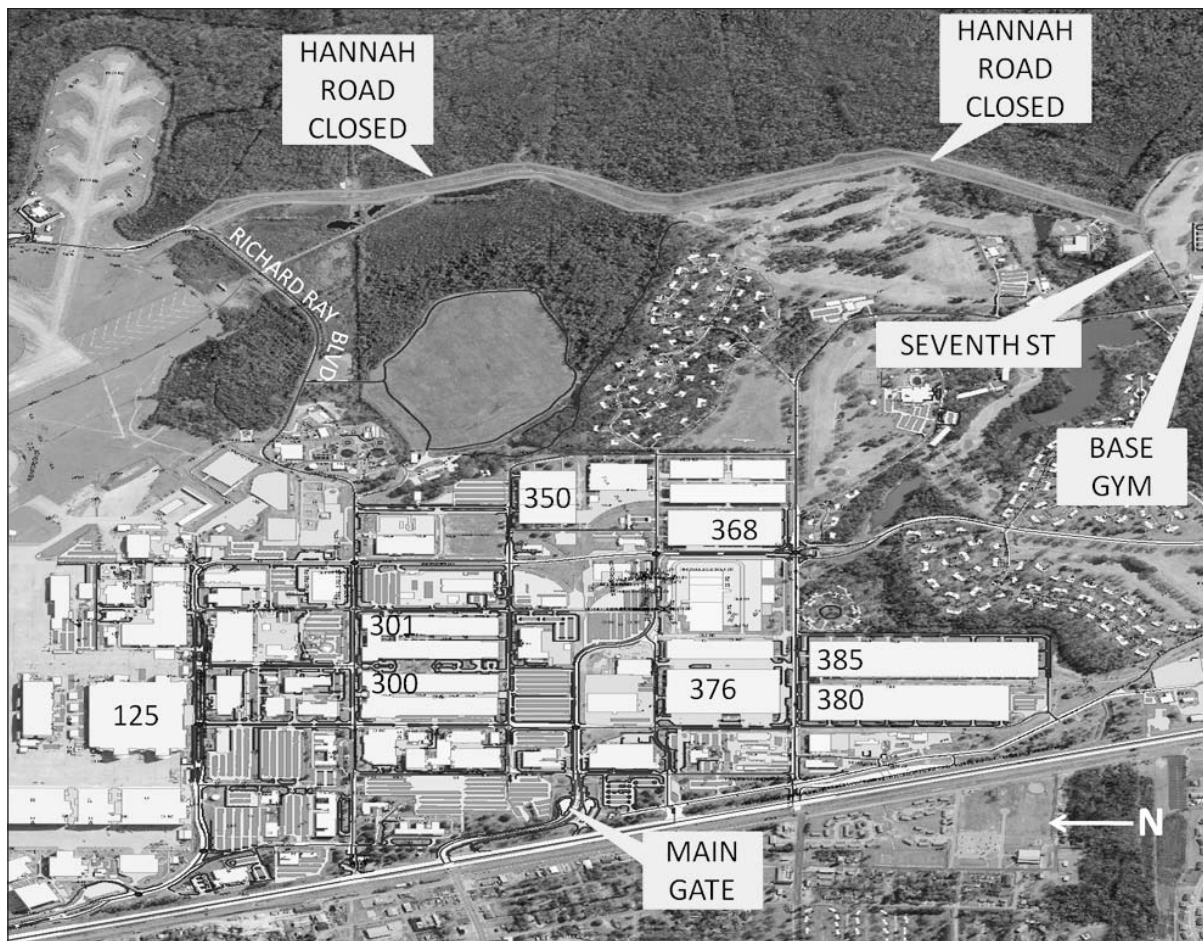

"The value-stream map showed the number of lost hours can be trimmed by about a third when the waste is eliminated," Evans said.

They also identified ways to reduce the time required for the initial physical exam so newly hired employees can start sooner.

Some of the action items will be addressed immediately and others will take more time. Evans said the goal is to have the changes fully implemented in six months to a year.

One of the proposals which could take more time could have one of the biggest impacts. The idea is to have a mobile medical unit on the flightline rather than having maintenance workers drive to the other side of the base. Evans said he can't say for sure it will be implemented, but the team was in broad agreement to pursue the idea.

A mentor's influence can last a lifetime

Mentors touch our lives and help shape us into the people we are today. We value mentorship in the Air Force and both develop it in our subordinates while seeking it from our supervisors.

I like to think one cannot have enough mentors, nor can one mentor enough. I've had many through the years, but one sticks out above the rest. This particular mentor touched my life in two important ways, separated by nearly 40 years.

While a cadet at the U.S. Air Force Academy, I struggled to keep my grades up. I was on the dean's "other list" six of eight semesters. Now, in the end, I managed to defeat my academic demons and graduate with a commission in 1973, but I certainly didn't do it alone. I owe my success in large part to my academic adviser and mentor, Col. Joe Henjum.

Henjum wasn't what I expected when I met him for the first time in 1971. To be honest, I don't think I knew what to expect. He had been awarded the Silver Star for heroism while flying helicopters in Vietnam. I quickly learned Henjum was the kind of person who was easy to look up to and even easier to follow.

When he took me and my academic worries under his wing, I was proud to be there. I knew his guidance, combined with persistence and determination on my part, would lead me through the challenge. In the end, it most certainly did.

Gen. Stephen R. Lorenz

“Go and thank those who have guided you through the years and take time to make a difference in the lives of those you mentor.”

When I walked across the stage with the rest of the Class of 1973, I strode with the confidence Henjum had helped build within me. He had been a crucial part of my Academy experience and, in many ways, part of who I am today. I kept in touch with him over the years, often thanking him for making a difference in my life. I never imagined his influence would impact me all over again, especially at this point in my career.

The second time Henjum touched my life began with tragic news. On Jan. 1 of this year, Henjum passed away after battling a long illness. His son, Mark, asked if I would speak at his father's memorial service. I was touched by his request and spent hours trying to find the right words to convey how great a person had just left our earth. I wanted to make sure everyone understood the lasting difference he made in the lives of others.

When it was my turn to speak, it came from my heart. I told the crowd about a man who dedicated his life to serving and helping others. When I finished, his son rose to speak. While listening to Mark's story, I found Henjum leading me on another journey. I was touched and want to share the story with you.

A few months ago, Mark accompanied his father to the hospital and they both knew what was about to happen. The doctor was going to tell Henjum he only had three months left to live. It was an appointment they were both dreading. While riding up to the doctor's floor, Henjum greeted the building janitor who shared the elevator with them. He complimented the janitor for keeping the building so clean. The janitor was shocked; no one had ever thanked him before. Henjum noticed the building and took the time to notice the janitor. His actions resonated with me. That janitor would never forget him.

When getting off the elevator, Henjum introduced Mark to the receptionist. He told Mark about the receptionist's son who was a Marine and currently flying combat missions in Afghanistan. He reassured the receptionist her son would come home safely; Marines are excellent pilots. Not only had Henjum met and talked with the receptionist before, but he remembered her and took precious time to introduce his son. He even thought to reassure her fears with a son deployed to combat operations.

Now, think about it. Henjum was riding the elevator to find out he didn't have much time left. Instead of lamenting his fate, he was concerned about others. That day, he made a difference in their lives. Almost 37 years after graduating from the Academy, Henjum was once again making a difference in my life.

I always like to tell people they should strive for two things in life: make a difference in people's lives and leave the campground better than you found it. Henjum certainly did throughout his 75 years. He mentored me as a cadet at the Air Force Academy and once again just this last month. I couldn't ask for a better mentor and friend.

Go and thank those who have guided you through the years and take time to make a difference in the lives of those you mentor. Our Air Force is only as good as those of us who serve. Let's all work hard to make each of us a little better each and every day. Just as Henjum did for me and many others.

Well-being Survey

Hundreds of Robins civilian employees will participate in focus groups next week as a part of an independent survey of local personal well-being programs, with a particular emphasis on suicide prevention.

The RAND Corporation is also conducting similar focus groups at Hill Air Force Base in Utah and Tinker Air Force Base in Oklahoma. The RAND Corp. is a non-profit think tank which conducts research and analysis to improve government policy and decision making.

According to Maj. Colin Burchfield, director of psychological health at Robins, 600 people have been invited to take part in the survey, and he is hoping at least 200 will participate.

"It (the survey) gives them an opportunity to give feedback on what's working and what's not working for them," Burchfield said.

Volunteers honored

Organizers of Robins' contribution to the Salvation Army Red Kettle Drive held a luncheon at the base chapel annex last week to honor volunteers who rang bells during the holiday season.

The volunteers raised $27,814, which helped more than 900 Houston County families, said Maj. Fred Thornhill, area commander for the Central Georgia Salvation Army.

"If not for you doing what you did, those families would not have been helped," he told the group.

Robins volunteers included Col. Robert Stambaugh, the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center vice commander.

He also thanked the volunteers for their efforts.

"I know it helped me get in the holiday spirit," he said.
