5th CCG Airmen serve multiple roles in Operation Unified Response

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

5th Combat Communications Group Airmen are on the ground in Haiti and making significant contributions to the relief effort.

Eight members of the unit, part of the 689th Combat Communications Wing, landed in the earthquake-ravaged nation in late January.

Two members are involved with transferring data, via satellite, from reconnaissance aircraft which are surveying the damage. Six are part of a Deployable Initial Communications Element, or DICE.

The DICE's mission is to provide communications for a field hospital, said Capt. Joel Nelson, the team's leader.

The field hospital is at a port and primarily serves as a staging area for patients headed to and from the USNS Comfort, one of the Navy's floating hospitals.

Nelson said the DICE has set up communications with the ship and also with various charitable organizations contributing to the

Civil engineering experts map facility support process

One of the Warner Robins Air Logistic Center's five strategic initiatives is focused on performance. Specifically, ensuring the Center delivers aircraft to its customers on time.

To help move the Center closer to that goal, members of the 78th Civil Engineer Group and others recently conducted a week-long value stream mapping event to identify ways to improve CE support to the ALC. According to event organizers, how quickly CE responds to the facility needs of units such as the 402nd Maintenance Wing directly impacts the speed those units are able to support its customers.

"Focusing on the customer tends to change your perspective. The team worked hard all week to improve their processes ... knowing the ultimate customer is the warfighter," said Randall Evans, 78th Air Base Wing Lean coordinator.

The team investigated a number of areas including intra-agency communication and customer service and satisfaction, and found current CE processes to be 'linear, complicated,' said Evans.

One major change the team recommended is for CE to not wait for a certain stage of a project to be complete to begin work on subsequent stages. For projects which involve planning and programming, design and construction, the team found the average flow-time could be lessened from 843 to 672 days, or as much as 20 percent.

The team also found additional flow time savings can be realized by simply involving organizations such as the small business office, contracting and legal in the first stage of projects rather than later in the process. This will lessen the likelihood of projects having to be 'reworked' because of administrative or legal oversights.

Evans said the team's work epitomizes the Center's focus on Performance - 'We are a results driven, preferred provider committed to customer support.'

"All of the organizations involved in this process were more than willing to do their part to ensure we have the best process in place to support the warfighter," he said.

Magazine places Robins division in top 125 for 3rd year in a row

BY JOANNA WILSON
WR-ALC PERSONNEL DIRECTORATE

The Warner Robins Air Logistics Center's Training and Professional Development Division has been selected by Training Magazine as one of its top 125 organizations for the third consecutive year. It is rated number 60.

The Training Division also scored the highest of all organizations in the Human Resources category.

"It shows our organization is in tune with customer needs and executing our mission properly," said Mark Brotherton of the division's resource and planning branch.

"It's not just about doing our job but following our leadership's vision," he said.

The Training and Professional Development Division is led by Ken Wallace and provides comprehensive and integrated education and training services to the Center's workforce.

This is the 10th year in a row Training Magazine has sponsored the competition, which evaluates a variety of data such as total training budget and number of annual training hours per employee.

Hundreds of organizations compete each year for the elite award.

Robins sergeant wins service's Geico Award

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

A Robins sergeant has been honored by the Air Force for promoting base traffic safety.

Master Sgt. Vincent Dewberry

Master Sgt. Vincent Dewberry, who is assigned to the 78th Security Forces Squadron, recently learned he is the service's nominee for a 2009 Government Employees Insurance Company, or Geico, award.

Dewberry, who is currently deployed to Iraq, will compete in the competition's traffic safety and accident prevention category against nominees from the other military services. The winner will be announced in the spring.

"I am definitely honored, especially with it being Air Force level," he said.

As the squadron's superintendent of plans and programs, Dewberry orchestrated several initiatives to promote traffic safety and security, said Chief Master Sgt. Vincent Eubanks, security forces manager.

The initiatives included creating 'Pumpkin Patrols' to help ensure the safety of children on Halloween night and developing a campaign to educate base drivers about Georgia's 'Click It or Ticket' seatbelt-use program.

Dewberry also developed a tool which helps security forces Airmen 'vet' commercial vendors to determine their eligibility for base access.

That innovation is currently in use at 11 Air Force Materiel Command bases.

Airmen's Ministry Center ribbon cutting set for Wednesday

A ribbon cutting ceremony will be held Wednesday at 6 p.m. to mark the completion of facility and equipment improvements to the Robins Airmen's Ministry Center.

Col. Carl Buhler, 78th Air Base Wing commander, will preside over the ceremony which will also include remarks from Installation Command Chief Master Sgt. Buddy Hutchison.

Between August and December 2009 more than $71,000 worth of upgrades were made to the facility, including a new kitchen.

A U-2/Global Hawk airframe engineer in the 560th Aircraft Sustainment Group is the winner of a 2010 'Black Engineer of the Year' award.

Capt. Nicholas Battle won the Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics Global Competitiveness Conference award

in the Modern-Day Technology Leader category.

"It is still a shock," said Battle, who will receive the award later today at the annual STEM Global Competitiveness Conference in Baltimore, Md. "(But) It feels great to win and have the possibility to meet one of my military and engineering heroes at the ceremony, Gen. (retired) Lester Lyles."

Battle said he knew early in life he wanted to be an engineer.

"I was always fascinated with cars and began modifying car engine parts around the age of 15," he said. "Mechanical Engineering fit the mold ... allowing me do "hands-on" work while applying sound engineering judgment.

"I love being an engineer, and I have always lived by the rule that if you do something you love for work, you will have never worked a day in your life," he said.

Battle also said he credits winning the award to the help of many others.

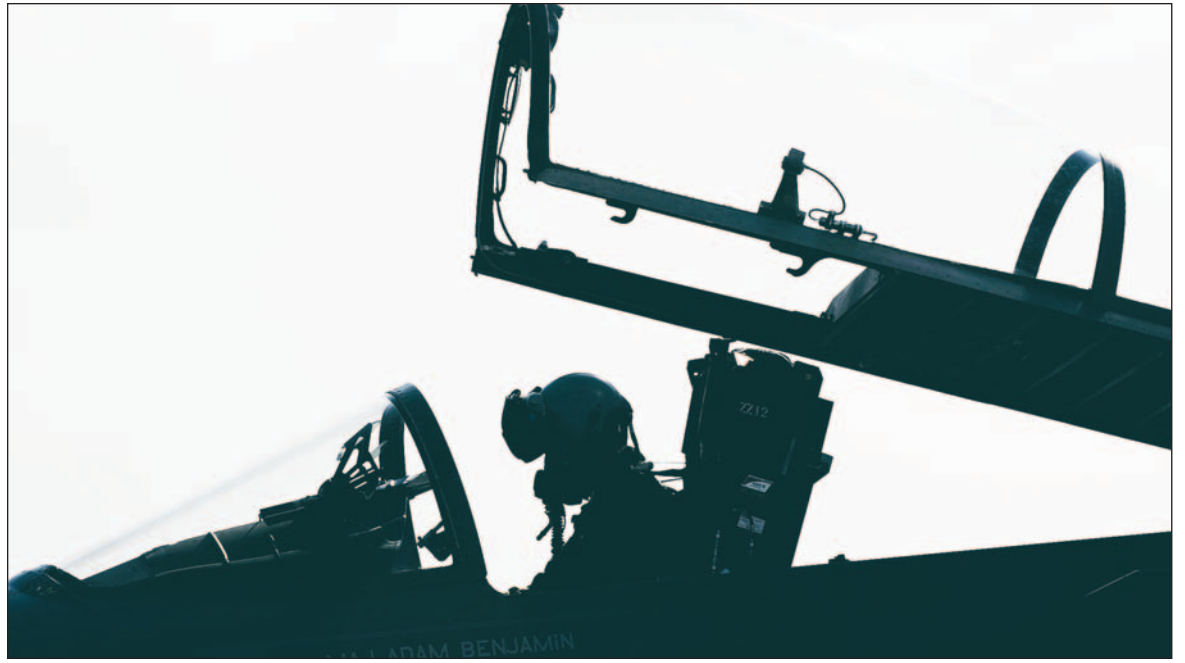

"I owe winning to the great teams and organizations I have worked with and for," he said. "Without the hard work of my teammates and my leadership, this would not have happened."

When there is a need, every little bit helps

Soon after the earthquake rocked Haiti in early January and changed the country forever, the reaction among many Airmen was the same: “How can I volunteer to go?”

I also wanted to be a part of the relief effort and, a few days following the tragedy, I received a call to pack my things. I was going to Pope Air Force Base, N.C., and then on to Haiti. I was excited to actually get a chance to help.

However, I soon found out I would ‘only’ be participating in air delivery missions (where supplies are dropped out of the back of an aircraft), and I didn't feel like I would be helping the citizens of Haiti as much.

What I later learned is that I was part of an invaluable effort by thousands of people to provide relief to the country.

While I augmented the Pope public affairs office and escorted media who accompanied the air deliveries, countless others were doing everything from creating flight plans to palletizing cargo to guarding entry points.

More than 500 soldiers from the Army's 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., spent two days in the terminal waiting for their turn to join the relief effort. I learned they were given a very short amount of time to prepare for the trip and did not know when they were coming back. Even people who deploy to the desert know when they are coming back, I thought to myself.

I also thought about their families. I thought how the families probably helped the Soldiers pack their bags, running out to stores to get things they'd forgotten, or how they were taking care of things at home so the Soldiers could focus on the mission.

Out on the flightline, there were aircraft from many different bases waiting to be loaded with supplies and people. Pope's aircraft maintainers and other flightline personnel worked around the clock, welcoming or sending off more than 70 aircraft a day. No, the maintainers and other flightline personnel never went to Haiti. But, the supplies and personnel couldn't have made it there without them.

Indeed, from the maintainers to the cargo handlers to the family members, everyone played an important part in the Haiti relief efforts.

My experience taught me one doesn't have to be on the front lines to contribute to the success of an operation.

Although we may not always see or understand how we're helping, our efforts often span further than we know.

SES ranks expand

The number of Robins employees in the Senior Executive Service is set to grow by one.

Gregory Stanley, vice director of the 402nd Maintenance Wing, will be promoted into the SES later today. Debra K. Tune, deputy assistant secretary of the Air Force for logistics, will preside over the ceremony.

A former Marine, Stanley began working for the Air Force in 1982. Prior to assuming his current position, he was vice director of the 330th Aircraft Sustainment Wing.

LSV rules updated

Small transports such as golf carts and all-terrain vehicles are widely used at Robins to save fuel, but they also present certain dangers.

"These vehicles lately have been skipping all over the base," said Tim Cahill, safety and occupational health technician in the 78th Air Base Wing Safety Office.

To help minimize the dangers, Robins recently updated the rules for on-base use of golf carts and other small vehicles more commonly known as low-speed vehicles or LSVs. Among other things, the updated rules restrict the operation of LSVs on some of the installation's faster and more heavily travelled streets such as Robins Parkway.

While units with LSVs will provide training on the updated rules, Cahill said they will soon also be available online on the safety office's intranet site.
