Taking suicides to task

Members of the congressionally-mandated Department of Defense Task Force on Suicide Prevention recently visited Robins as part of its fact-finding mission.

Panel discussions were held with various personnel here.

The task force includes both enlisted and officer military members; civilian representatives of each service; a chaplain; family members; and researchers.

The group will produce a report and make recommendations to the defense secretary for improving the DoD's suicide prevention program.

REACHING GOALS

New facility's consolidation on track with P3I plan

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

The "performance" part of the P3I initiative isn't just about people performing better.

A better, more efficient building in which to work can play a big role in meeting the goal of improved performance.

One example is the 402nd Commodities Maintenance Group's new Aircraft Component Repair Facility in Bldg. 189. The building consolidates work previously done in four other buildings across the base.

Herman Raiff, director of the 402nd CMXG, said after a ribbon-cutting for the building last week, the facility will definitely improve performance. Among other things, it will eliminate 4,000 miles traveled per year moving items to and from the buildings it replaced. It will also have a far more efficient work flow in the building since engineers, managers and mechanics were closely involved in creating the floor design.

In fact, the new building afforded the unit the rare opportunity of setting up a work area with an open footprint, and they took full advantage of it, said Raiff.

"When you are looking at efficiency and effectiveness; it is not only the skill level of people but the layout and the sequence in how we move things," said Raiff. "The new facility enables us to reduce flow days and wasted time." Improved lighting and air conditioning will also impact performance. Paul Irby, an aircraft sheet metal mechanic, said the building where he previously worked had poor lighting and at one point temperatures exceeded 100 degrees.

He said he is now happy to be working in a climate-controlled, well-lighted facility.

"When it's over 100 degrees, it just saps your energy," he said. "You don't want to be there, much less work. It's just amazing how much better it is."

The 61,000 square foot building cost $14.9 million and was certified for occupancy in January. It is already in use.

Gen. Lee Levy, commander of the 402nd Maintenance Wing, said the building is supporting C-130, C-5 and F-15 aircraft, while also realizing significant energy savings.

"This is one more step as we support the warfighter with products on time and on cost," he said.

Levy noted one of two 68-year-old buildings being replaced was originally a World War II hangar which housed the A-20 Havoc.

"I bet when they built that building they didn't think we'd be working in it all the way up until 2010," he said.

Hiring push welcome news for job seekers

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

A recent campaign by employment recruiters at Robins to publicize hundreds of maintenance-related job openings here is already paying dividends.

The base has received more than 2,500 applications for apprenticeship program sheet metal mechanics and 2,218 applications for apprenticeship program aircraft mechanics.

Applications are also pouring in for the co-op program and for positions for experienced aircraft mechanics, said Emma Harrison, chief of the Sustainment Support Branch in the Directorate of Personnel.

Most of the jobs, including some related to software engineering, are in the 402nd Maintenance Wing. In what has been billed as the largest hiring push in a decade, the wing has hired 750 people since last May and expects to hire 400-500 more over the next six to eight months.

For that reason, base officials are working hard to get the word out that good-paying jobs are available here for those with the right skills and a willingness to serve their country. Donna Frazier, director of business operations in the 402nd, said the unit's current and anticipated workload is driving the effort.

"We are having to look at all available options," she said.

Robins Air Force Base is seeking employees who embrace the Air Force core values of "Integrity first, service before self, and excellence in all we do."

Other core competencies desired by new employees include communication and interpersonal skills, time management, and critical thinking.

Those who have experience or are looking to enter the apprenticeship program should go to the Robins Employment Office at the Museum of Aviation or call (478) 926-6666. They can also visit www.usajobs.com to search for jobs at Robins.

Annual survey draws thousands of responses

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

Results from the CheckMATE survey show continued improvement in employee-supervisor engagement in the 402nd Maintenance Wing.

The anonymous 12-question survey by the independent polling group Gallup measures the level of engagement between employees and supervisors.

The groups use the results to find ways to improve their interaction with each other, said Phyllis Johnson, acting chief of the Workforce Effective Division in the Directorate of Personnel.

The survey has been successful enough that it has steadily expanded. It started with parts of the 402nd MXW, and later extended to the entire unit.

COMMUNITY PARTNERING

Students from Middle Georgia Technical College are helping the Museum of Aviation restore a small twin-engine plane built in 1961 and assigned to Robins from 1974 to 1977.

Called "Blue Canoe," the U-3B retired in 1985 at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., and came to the Museum of Aviation 12 months later where it sat outside for 23 years.

The aircraft maintenance technology repair students are on a mission to bring the Canoe back to its original condition and learn about aircraft repair in the process.

"It's probably going to take a year or more," said Robert Gerard, who is supervising the students' work. "We'll use it in several of our classes while restoring it to learn about airframe structural repair and engine overall."

As part of their curriculum, the students will detail the engines, redo the landing gear and propellers, change some of the glass, and give it a new paint job.

The work continues an ongoing partnership. The school has helped the Museum on other projects like

LeaveWeb use vital for proper approval

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

Airmen must enter their request in the LeaveWeb system. Failure to follow the second step can mean Airmen are taking leave and not actually being charged for it.

Should they get injured while on uncharged leave, they can be denied benefits. Failure to follow the proper procedures can also result in disciplinary action.

It is also important for Airmen to log in their exact physical home address, not just “Warner Robins,” in LeaveWeb, said Young-Payne.

Additionally, before departing on leave, members need to ensure their supervisor has approved their request in LeaveWeb and the 78th FSS Customer Support Element has issued an authorization leave number.

For more information about leave requests and LeaveWeb, call the 78th FSS Customer Support Element at 222-6862.

Airmen sometimes fail to follow proper procedures when requesting leave, and should be aware they can get in some serious trouble if they don't.

Staff Sgt. Shamica Young-Payne, a customer-service representative in the 78th Force Support Squadron, said after getting approval for leave from their supervisor, innovations on base last year, said Renee Beringer, IDEA program manager at Robins.

“Even so, I feel like the IDEA program is not being fully utilized,” she said. “There are so many more process improvements which could be submitted.”

Beringer said there is a misconception the program applies only to the maintenance area, but it extends to all military and civilian employees on base.

There is also a misconception, she said, the IDEA program does not apply to improvements within the employee's normal work area.

Validating an idea can be a lengthy process, Beringer admitted. “But if you are patient, it could be up to a $10,000 award,” she said.

Information on the IDEA program can also be found on the Air Force Portal under Top Portal Links or the Robins Home Page under Special Interest.

Anyone interested in submitting an IDEA can contact Beringer at renee.beringer@robins.af.mil.

Make a difference in the lives of others through actions, words

A friend of the community and Robins Air Force Base died Sunday.

I may not know a lot of personal things about Tim Dupree, the Peach County Military Affairs Committee chairman, but I know he had a huge impact on people. I know he opened his home and Hooterville Farms to people – to share what he had and make others happy. I know he touched many lives. This was evident by the hundreds who showed up Tuesday evening for his visitation. I have never seen so many people waiting in line for hours to say goodbye.

Tim wasn't a celebrity, or an elected official, or a church evangelist, but he was a man who made a huge impact on others. It's amazing how far kindness and unselfishness goes. In today's society, we see so little of it.

A lot of people aren't aware of the effects – good or bad – they have on other people. Each of us could take a lesson from Tim and make a difference in other people's lives – from co-workers to family and friends. Help people before they ask for it. Thank people for doing a good job. Pass on kind words to others.

Since many of us spend a large part of our days at work, take the time to not only put in a good day's work but improve on the work you do. What you do at work every day impacts people.

At Robins, we impact the lives of our biggest customers – the warfighters. Don't take this gift for granted. Our friend, father and husband Tim didn't. Just ask anyone who stood in line Tuesday night.

Motorcycle safety could mean difference between life, death

Motorcycle safety could mean the difference between life and death.

I made the conscious decision to prepare for my first ride in more than two months in the same way we prepare for a flight. Would you fly a sortie without doing your pre-flight? I rolled my bike out on Monday and did a "pre-flight" safety inspection. I took it for a short slow ride to get my head back in the game. I've been riding for 33 years, but I felt a little rusty.

I planned my route to work, running it through my head. I imagined the road, the landmarks and the twists and turns of each curve, reviewing them over and over in my mind.

I also did my gear check. Would you show for a sortie without your pro gear? I had my leather chaps, helmet, boots, gloves and heavy leather jacket with my bright fluorescent green reflective vest. I even went to bed early, getting the proper amount of crew rest.

The ride started perfectly.

The weather was clear and the temperature was brisk – ideal riding weather.

As I rode, I ran through all of my training in my head: "Look left, push left, lean left; look right, push right, lean right; enter the curve on the inside, exit on the high side."

After 62 miles, I topped a rise and was greeted by a sea of flashing blue lights.

Wrapped around a pine tree was the remains of a motorcycle. The front tire was still spinning.

The paramedics arrived, but had no sense of urgency. This motorcyclist was dead.

Statistics show 96 percent of all motorcycle accidents are rider error and could have been prevented. Set yourself up for survival. Be the professional on your bike that you are in the air. Ride safe.

This year, for the first time, it was extended to organizations outside the 402nd MXW. Units participating in the latest survey, conducted in the fall, were the 542nd Combat Sustainment Wing, the 330th Aircraft Sustainment Wing, the Warner Robins

Air Logistics Center, Engineering Directorate, Plans and Programs Directorate, Contracting Financial Management, Judge Advocate General and Equal Opportunity office.

The voluntary survey was conducted Oct. 26 through Nov. 6 and 6,500 people participated.

Gail Floyd-Sims, the base contact for Gallup, said the survey has been an effective tool in the four years it has been used here.

“Everyone who participates really gets a lot of good information,” she said.

The survey was able to be expanded this year because additional funding was available. Johnson said the hope is not only for the survey to eventually be offered base wide, but across Air Force Materiel Command.

VIGILANCE, TOLERANCE

Natural resource manager gives facts on snakes

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

A wet winter may mean the snake population at Robins will increase.

Ample rainfall means more swamp and other pools of water, and therefore more frogs and other critters snakes love to eat.

Bob Sargent, natural resources manager, said although reports of people seeing snakes are not on the increase just yet, he expects snake sightings to go up over the next few weeks as their breeding season begins.

However, while people should use caution to avoid snakes, there is no reason to go on a snake killing spree.

“They perform ecological roles that are important to us,” he said. “They eat rodents and invertebrates we don’t like.”

The timber rattler is one of the venomous snakes which reside on Robins.

Non-venomous snakes are also protected by state law, said Sargent.

Venomous snakes residing at Robins are the cottonmouth, the timber rattler, pigmy rattler and the copperhead.

But most snake reports here are of non-venomous snakes such as rat snakes, banded water snakes, racers, brown snakes and garter snakes.

Sargent said he is not aware of a snake bite reported at Robins, and of the 7,000 to 9,000 bites reported in the U.S. each year, the majority of those occur in the West.

Still, people should assume all snakes are venomous, said Sargent, unless they are really confident in their identification skills.

Pictures of snakes found in Georgia can be seen at www.uga.edu/srelherp.

Heritage Club Renovations

Due to renovations at the Heritage Club, bar activities have been temporarily relocated to the Wellston Center behind Horizons. The renovations do not interfere with Pizza Depot, the barber shop and other activities in the building.

The four-month, $240,000 project will give the bar area a more upscale appearance and allow it to be used during the day, when the bar is closed, for other functions.

NOW PLAYING

Tickets $4 adult; $2 children (11 years and younger).
 For details, call the base theater at 926-2919.
