Mass transit changes to better accommodate riders

BY CHRISSEY MINER
78th Air Base Wing Public Affairs

If $3 a gallon gas prices aren't incentive enough to park your vehicle, base officials have introduced a few more incentives to help convince you to let others do the driving.

The Round Robins Express, or base shuttle service, now has additional stops on its routes to entice employees to jump on board. A number of the new pick up and drop off points are adjacent to the flightline, which provide maintenance riders easier access to their work areas.

The RRE travels two routes. The Red Line supports high occupancy administrative buildings such as Bldgs. 300 and 301, while the Blue Line is tailored to flightline workers. Both lines run weekdays from 5:15 to 9 a.m. and 2 to 5:30 p.m.

According to John Pugh, 78th Mission Support Group deputy director, the program is evolving to better serve its customers.

"We listen very carefully to feedback we receive from riders and potential riders," Pugh said. "We want to make the program the best it can be to encourage people to give up their keys."

Since their launch in late November, base officials have also made positive changes to the base's other mass transit options.

Gate 12, at the North Davis Drive extension, is open to vehicles with two or more occupants. It was initially open to vehicles with three or more occupants.

Meanwhile, the schedules of the BiRD, or Buses into Robins Daily, have been modified. BiRD also has four pick-up locations between the Macon Centreplex and the base: Cherry Street at Martin Luther King Blvd. (in downtown Macon), Broadway at Highway 247, the TIMCO site at 247 (near the Macon airport), and Elberta Road at 247.

The drop-off points are the same from Robins to Macon, with the exception of the TIMCO stop. Northbound BiRD buses instead stop at the Kohl's Distribution Center.

To ease riders' burden in obtaining BiRD passes, Macon Transit Authority

A C-17 Globemaster III from the Air Force Reserve's 315th Airlift Wing, Charleston, S.C., landed at Robins Dec. 30 to load humanitarian aid headed for Nicaragua.

A 1984 E-One fire truck, along with nearly 3.5 tons of medical supplies and fire-fighting equipment donated by Emergency Response Services for Latin America, a charitable organization formed by Rodney McDonald from Warner Robins and Mark Taylor from Bend, Ore., were loaded onto the C-17 and then departed for Managua, Nicaragua's capital.

The equipment was transported as part of the Denton Program, which permits the Department of Defense to transport, on a space-available basis, privately-donated humanitarian goods to foreign countries at no cost to the donating agencies or organizations.

"The opportunity to bring humanitarian aid which provides direct assistance to countries in need is one of the better missions we do," said Lt. Col. Jess Smith, mission commander. "The entire crew is proud to be a part of these important missions."

According to an ERSLA release, the organization began soliciting equipment for the shipment in 2009 by visiting fire departments and networking online. Donated equipment from around the country was then consolidated in a staging location in Warner Robins.

On the heels of this delivery, a second C-17 crew from the 315th was scheduled to deliver nearly $67,000 in medical and school supplies to Haiti, as well as another $25,000 in clothing, food, medical and school supplies to Grenada.

In total, the Air Force Reserve was scheduled to airlift four tons of humanitarian aid, school supplies, and first-responder equipment to Central America and the Caribbean during the holiday weekend.

Center continues work with OSHA

The Warner Robins Air Logistics Center is continuing to work with the Occupational Safety and Health Administration on the Center's plan to correct 13 citations the Center received in May.

In early December, the Center asked for additional time because of the magnitude and complexity of the abatement plan for Bldgs. 169 and 670 to complete remedial actions OSHA requires.

However, the Center received notification this week that OSHA requested additional information about the Center's plan and could not approve the request for the full amount of time the Center requested. However, OSHA did agree to re-evaluate the Center's request.

"The health and welfare of our workforce is vitally important," said Maj. Gen. Robert H. McMahon, Center commander. "Therefore, we are working with OSHA to ensure its concerns are addressed."

"We have made some significant strides in our efforts to correct the issues, but we still have additional work to do," McMahon continued.

The Center will address OSHA's latest concerns in correspondence early next week.

In the meantime, the Center will continue on its path to improvement.

"It is paramount we provide our employees the safest work environment possible," said McMahon.

Base postal service temporarily interrupted

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

The U.S. Postal Service is working to establish a new contract for operation of its satellite office in Bldg. 910.

The office closed Dec. 31 following unexpected termination of the current contract, but it will not impact official mail delivery on base to offices or personal mail delivery to residences.

The postal service contract provides personal mail services, including outgoing mail collection and post office boxes.

Temporary service is expected to resume Monday, according to Sandra Bussey, Postal Service retail specialist. A postal clerk will provide services Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m.

Services will include stamp sales, package mailing, and delivery for base post office-box mail.

All official government mail is still processed through the 78th Air Base Wing Communications Directorate official mail center, also located in Bldg. 910.

A sign posted at the base post office lists other Postal Service locations where personal mail services are available in the local area.

The Postal Service is seeking a new service provider. The new contractor should be in place within 90 days, but could take longer, Bussey said.

Robins hosts Open Skies Treaty exercise

BY WAYNE CRENSHAW
wayne.crenshaw.ctr@robins.af.mil

The Russians recently visited Robins, sort of.

In late December, the base played host to an exercise for the Open Skies Treaty. To promote trust, the treaty allows signatory nations to, upon request, fly over and photograph each other's military installations.

The exercise involved U.S. military members – including Navy, Army and Air Force personnel – from the Defense Threat Reduction Agency. The unit works to counter the threat of weapons of mass destruction around the world, and escorts Opens Skies visitors to U.S. installations. Also participating were aircraft maintainers from Offutt Air Force Base, Neb.

Some members of the team played the role of Russians on an Open Skies visit. It allowed those who escort delegations to test their knowledge of the protocol and negotiations involved, said Maj. Keith Oki, deputy mission commander.

The group of about 32 - including the maintain-ers, escorts and the "Russians" - arrived at Robins one day and travelled the next to Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio.

Robin serves as a refueling point for Open Skies visits. While stopovers here are less frequent today, at one time Robins hosted as many as two or three Russian visits a year.

Management Partnership Agreement.

The document is the same as it has been under previous commanders, but is traditionally signed by each new commander as a renewal of the commitments outlined in the agreement.

"You and I will agree to agree and we will agree to disagree, but we will work through the issues," McMahon told Scott following the signing. "It's this partnership that will make us successful."

The agreement does not supersede the Master Labor Agreement, which extends across Air Force Materiel Command, but instead expresses a local commitment by both sides to follow the MLA and work together on issues.

The partnership agreement also spells out the for-

Scott said the agreement is significant because it establishes open communi-

AFMC commander emphasizes education, CCAF

On Jan. 1, AFMC began our “Year of the Community College of the Air Force” campaign. John Buchan, a 20th century writer and politician, once said, “The task of leadership is not to put greatness into people, but to elicit it, for the greatness is there already.” Therefore, I challenge each of you to reap the benefits of formal education during the New Year.

AFMC’s YoCCAF will emphasize the need for enlisted Airmen to earn college degrees, specifically a CCAF degree. Currently, 24 percent of AFMC’s enlisted Airmen have earned degrees through CCAF, and our goal is to increase this by 10 percent in 2011. With 67 degrees in five general areas, CCAF provides career-specific education for enhanced performance as technicians and noncommissioned officers.

YoCCAF will employ a direct approach -- individual bases will designate mentors to contact Airmen face-to-face to share the importance of education in their own lives and the benefits to the entire Air Force. Although YoCCAF will target E-4 to E-7, I encourage all

Gen. Doanald Hoffman
Commander
Air Force Materiel
Command

Airmen to seek additional education regardless of rank. Formal education after high school is a path to promotion and personal development for enlisted Airmen, and a commodity highly valued in all Air Force members.

Even the wisest mind has something more to learn.

Chief Master Sgt. of the Air Force James A. Roy said, “Airmen are to be trained, educated, and have the experience (depth) to carry out the mission.” Our Air Force is confronted with great challenges and considerable fiscal constraints, but the solutions are right here. They are in the new recruits, in the Airmen we supervise, and inside each one of us. Through continuing education we can unlock ideas to create efficiencies, conserve valuable resources, and inspire innovation.

Whether for promotion, qualification for a special duty, or personal improvement, I encourage all AFMC Airmen to make time for education. Add educational goals to your list of New Year resolutions for 2011 and keep learning -- the future of the Air Force depends on it!

Buyer beware: Remember to read the fine print

BY CAPT. SHERWIN IGNACIO

Robins Legal Office

When purchasing a vehicle, a good deal may not always be a good deal. Make sure you read the fine print. You may not be getting what you bargained for.

If you purchase a vehicle in the state of Georgia, and the amount of your purchase is more than $5,000, there is no limit to the maximum interest rate.

According to Georgia law, the maximum interest rate for any purchase of $5,000 or more may be negotiated between the buyer and seller. So, theoretically, a buyer can agree to an interest rate which far exceeds what is actually being charged at market. And, because of possible variation from lender to lender, it is important buyers “shop around” and check the various rates charged by banks, credit unions, finance companies, and other lenders in order to negotiate the best rate for the type of loan desired.

It is important when you are in the final stages of purchasing a vehicle and about to sign the contract, you make sure you read the fine print. Make sure you know what the interest rate of your purchase is because you may be agreeing to a rate more than you bargained for.

SPEEDERS IN TURNER PARK

I am sending this e-mail because I am concerned about the children in our neighborhood (Turner Park). I moved on base 1 1/2 years ago, and since moving here I have witnessed several speeders in my neighborhood. I have spoken with, Hunt, wing safety, and security forces and the speeders still persist. These are not the “bad day” or “emergency” speeders; these are habitual every day speeders.

I was standing in my front yard saying goodbye to a friend with her 3 year old, 18 month old, my daughter (11) and my husband when yet another speeder went by my house. I moved closer to the road in an attempt to slow down the driver, but the driver sped by as if he was on a road with no limits. I did call in this driver and gave the license, make and model of the offending vehicle.

I have requested extra patrols around 6:20 a.m. because the high school and middle school bus riders have to cross a very busy street, in the dark, to get to our bus stop at the mail boxes. I have also requested extra patrols around 4 p.m. for afternoon elementary bus riders return. I have not seen the requested patrol.

A common answer to why it is difficult to correct this speeding issue is the lack of speed limit signs. From my understanding, the AFI has a regulation stating base housing speed with and without children. I would think that alone is enough notice of appropriate speed within a neighborhood.

I understand security forces is entrusted with a great deal of responsibility in order to ensure mission success, but I am very concerned a child will get hit by a speeder and I would never be able to forgive myself if I didn't speak up.

COL. BUHLER RESPONDS:

Thank you for bringing your concern to my attention. I have contacted Lt. Col. Thomas Morea, 78th Security Forces Squadron commander, about this situation.

Our defenders in security forces are actively enforcing the laws on Robins, to include law enforcement patrols in the three housing areas.

Additionally, security forces are randomly conducting speed enforcement to protect the 27,000-plus personnel who enter the installation during the work week. To assist in reducing speeds, a speed cart has been placed within the Turner Park housing area.

Additionally, security forces will increase the number of patrols in the housing areas during the times you provided.

The Robins Air Force Base Supplement for Motor Vehicle Traffic Supervision states the speed limit in all military housing areas is 15 mph and 10 mph when children are present. Signs posting these speed limits are located conspicuously to alert drivers of the speed limit. However, we ask all drivers to remain alert and cognizant of the posted speed.

Last, if a suspected speeder or a motor vehicle infraction occurs, please contact the Base Defense Operations Center at 468-2187 and, if possible, provide the license plate number, color, make, and model of the vehicle.
