21st TSC facilitates receipt of first Lakota helicopters in USAREUR

By Angelika Lantz

21ST TSC PUBLIC AFFAIRS

The 21st Theater Sustainment Command paved the way for another first when it facilitated the acquisition and receipt of five UH-72A Lakota helicopters - the Army's newest aircraft. The cutting-edge helicopters received at Ramstein Air Base April 13 are the first ones to reach the U.S. Army in Europe.

The light utility helicopters were towed to and reassembled at the Theater Aviation Sustainment Manager Europe's closed loop facility on Ramstein. TASM-E, 405th Army Field Support Brigade, which falls under the operational control of the 21st TSC, is responsible for the maintenance of the light utility helicopters under the Department of the Army Contract Logistics System.

"As the senior logistician for the USAREUR Theater, Maj. Gen. (Patri-cia) McQuistion, (the commanding general of the 21st TSC) has a keen interest in all logistics support of this theater, to include the contracts," said William Sanders, the chief of the 21st TSC's support operation's aviation lo-

COMMENTARY USAG Baden-Württemberg hosts safety days

By E.J. Singleton

USAG BADEN-WÜRTTEMBERG SAFFTY

One of my favorite movies is "It's A Wonderful Life." It's a timeless classic in which Jimmy Stewart's character decides it would have been better if he had never been born. He is granted his wish by Clarence, his guardian angel, and soon learns how many people his life impacted. He observed how his loved ones, friends and the small town he grew up in were totally different because he was not born.

Think about yourself and the impact you have on those around you (i.e., loved ones, friends, and coworkers). How many people rely on you professionally and personally? What if you weren't here?

We all say that someone else would just pick up the slack and things would go on. Sure, that may be true of the job to a certain extent but not your family. Someone may step into the job to keep things moving but would they handle situations the same way you would? Probably not. Think of all you have experienced and your lessons learned over the years. Who has the same set of lessons learned as you? No one.

The bottom line is that each of you are unique and definitely not expendable by any stretch of the imagination. Your loved ones, friends and the Army count on you to be there each and every day.

How do you ensure that you're there when needed? It's simple ... follow the rules. Whether it's operating a vehicle, cutting grass, or playing golf there are rules (safety standards) that apply. When you violate the rules, you increase your chances of being involved in a preventable accident that takes you from those who need you.

Safety Day helps you remember the rules so you can continue to be there for loved ones, friends and yes, the Army.

On May 6, Heidelberg will host its Safety Day at Patton Fitness Center (Bldg. 152) on Patton Barracks. Due to limited space the event is restricted to Soldiers and DA civilians (appropriated, non-appropriated and local nations).

Mannheim will host its Safety Day on May 6 in the Schuh Theater parking lot (Bldg. 735). The event is open to the Soldiers, DA civilians, and their family members.

On May 20, Kaiserslautern will host its Safety Day at Rhein Ordnance Barracks and it also will be open to Soldiers, DA civilians and their family members.

We encourage you to take a few minutes to do something for yourself and those you care about. Attend the Safety Day event in your community and recharge your safety batteries. Don't let your safety batteries go empty this summer, recharge 'em now to ensure that you're still here after summer ends.

Before I close, let's return to Jimmy Stewart in "It's a Wonderful life." In the end, Stewart's character decides that life with all its ups and downs is really worth living and asks that his life be reinstated.

In doing so, he validates what we already know: One man can make a difference and that one life affects many others.

You are part of the greatest fighting force in the world - the U.S. Army. The Army is committed to preserving the American way of life, and the peace, freedom and dignity of others throughout the world. As an Army professional, you help make it possible for others to have a wonderful life. Don't forget to take care of your own as well. Check out the Safety Day nearest you.

Child abuse prevention and Comprehensive Soldier Fitness

Bv Drew Andersen LISAG MANNHEIM

April is Child Abuse Prevention Month in the Army and throughout the worldwide Army family.

In this community, we are dedicating that month to an increased emphasis on the prevention of all forms of child maltreatment. But more importantly, we want to put it in the context of the family and the special contribution that family can make toward the comprehensive fitness of each Soldier, whether at home or deployed downrange.

Children are our most important resource because of the special joy they bring to the family unit and the promise they can add to the family's future.

Unfortunately, children are also the most vulnerable resource of the community. Their very safety depends on caring adults who provide children with the physical and emotional support they need to thrive as well as the spiritual direction to achieve their goals. That is why family fitness needs to be comprehensive.

There is no measure that can be made for a child's love. But it involves an equation that is often overlooked in the raising of a child: you will get back what you give. No matter what your role in our community, be aware of the warning signs, be prepared to help in the prevention effort, and be prepared to act. Take responsibility and overcome the challenges that may get in the way of your duty to protect and care for your children. Family and friends – step up and lend a hand to parents in need of support.

Parents must be role models to their children. Children who lack a good example from their own parents will instinctively look for it in others.

Comprehensive Soldier Fitness will enable the kind of strong Army families that keep our community safe and our environment a wholesome place for everyone, even our most vulnerable.

Herald Post, Europe-based journalists win DOD awards

Staff Report

The Herald Post along with Europe-based print and broadcast journalists took top honors when the Department of Defense-level 2009 Thomas Communications Iefferson Competition winners were announced last week.

"What an honor – not just for the public affairs staff but for the entire Baden-Württemberg community," said Lira Frye, U.S. Army Garrison Baden-Württemberg public affairs officer. "We couldn't have a newspaper of this quality without the community's support. It's their publication, and they deserve much of the credit for making it number one." Prior to the annual Thomas Jefferson competition, each service judges its own entries and selects the best entry in each category to represent that service in the final interservice competition.

After winning the Army's Keith L. Ware Communications Competition, the Herald Post, published by USAG Baden-Württemberg, brought home the prestigious Thomas Jefferson award for tabloidformat newspaper.

"I also want to recognize our Command Information Chief Kelli Bland," Frye said. She proposed an extensive redesign that gave the paper a new, fresh look and worked tirelessly to make the Herald Post current and relevant. Kelli's leadership, diligence and attention to detail were key factors in the paper becoming a top-notch, awardwinning publication."

Bland said this is truly a community award because of all the people involved in producing the weekly newspaper. "We operate with a very small team here, so we rely heavily on the tenant units and community members for information and story ideas," Bland said. "We truly appreciate the input and support that got us to this point.

In addition to the Herald Post, Europe-based print and broadcast journalists brought home individual awards.

In print journalism, Brittany Carlson from the USAG Stuttgart Public Affairs Office won for her story series entitled "The Long Dark 18th Eng. Bde. maneuver support conference focuses on route clearance lessons learned

By Capt. Sonie L. Munson

18TH ENGINEER BRIGADE PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Soldiers from across U.S. Army Europe and individuals from the engineer branch came together to participate in a Maneuver Support Conference sponsored by the 18th Engineer Brigade at Patrick Henry Village in Heidelberg.

During the three-day conference in March, multiple units throughout USAREUR shared lessons learned on route clearance operations from their recent deployments to Iraq and Afghanistan.

"It is only when you apply what you learn that it becomes useful," said Col. Paul M. Paolozzi, commander of the 18th Engineer Brigade, who began the conference, saying he hopes the information shared would go back to the units and be put to use.

The 9th, 4th and 54th Engineer battalions each spoke about the lessons learned during their recent deployments and held two route clearance panels where members of the engineer regiment were allowed to ask questions to help them understand route clearance and how to operate at the battalion, company and platoon levels. Maj. Carrington Stoffels, operations officer for the 9th Engineer Battalion, whose unit operated in five provinces south of Baghdad, shared the top five lessons learned, including centralized route clearance, effect-based operations, the importance of a robust engineer equipment fleet, training platoons to be multi-functional engineers and the importance of crew rest management. "We found centralized route clear-

"We found centralized route clearance was essential for us to be successful," Stoffels said, "because this allowed the battalion to plan all route clearance operations within the five provinces, allowing the unit to prioritize the routes based upon the threat in the area."

On average, the unit cleared about 4,000 kilometers a month, and at times when the threat of improvised explosive devices increased, the amount of kilometers cleared doubled to ensure the roads were safe for the local populous.

Stoffels also said the 9th Engineer Battalion learned the importance of planning operations with a certain outcome in mind and gave an example of training the Iraqi army and Iraqi police on the importance of crime scene investigation. By showing the Iraqi security forces that crime scene investigation would at times result in finding an IED emplacement or network, it convinced them to start their own lab.

The third lesson learned by the 9th Engineer Battalion consisted of having a robust engineer equipment fleet, allowing them to complete any engineering mission assigned, to include route clearance and general engineering. Having a larger fleet enabled the unit to be less affected by the ordering of parts on low density items or on equipment that wasn't in the military ordering system.

Stoffels also said every engineer in his unit was cross trained on other military occupational specialties while downrange.

"Sappers on dozers – it is a new thing and they enjoyed it," he said.

This broke up the monotony of the long hours and the miles logged on the road for the route clearance teams and allowed the general engineering Soldiers to get time off the construction site, he said. Each Soldier benefitted from the change of pace during the deployment, which aided in keeping them alert during their route clearance missions.

The last lesson Stoffels shared was the importance of crew rest cycles. His command found that many of the Soldiers during their rest time had maintenance duty. Because of this, they needed more time to wind down before being able to sleep, causing an overall lack of sleep and mission ineffectiveness. To solve the problem Stoffels said leaders ensured "Soldiers were sleeping by checking their rooms during lights out, which allowed us to manage crew rest."

OHA survey deadline extended to May 15

By Staff Sgt. Patricia Deal USAREUR PUBLIC AFFAIRS

The online Overseas Housing Allowance and Move-In Housing Allowance Survey for Germany and Belgium now runs through May

The deadline has been extended to encourage more participation from those eligible service members, said Germany Country Allowance Coordinator William Gordon from the USAREUR G1, the command's theater-level human resources provider.

"Full participation in this survey is essential as allowances will be updated based on the results," he said. "The key to success is good participation and good data."

The OHA survey is done annually to identify how much service members spent in the previous year for utilities such as electricity, heating fuel, water, trash removal and sewer fees.

The MIHA survey, done every three years, captures how much service members spent on their off-post quarters when they initially moved in. MIHA is a one-time payment covering expenses such as purchasing major appliances or fees charged for turning on utilities.

This year's survey combines the two components and should take about 45 minutes to complete. When filling out the survey, service members should have their actual bills or records for the last 12 months to provide accurate and complete information, Gordon said.

Army Reserve Soldiers based in Germany honored at welcome home warrior-citizen ceremony

By Master Sgt. Bobby J. White 7TH CSC PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Twenty-one Soldiers of the 1177th Movement Control Team recently returned from a deployment and received Welcome Home Warrior-Citizen awards during a ceremony held in their honor April 18 at the parade field on Daenner Kaserne in Kaiserslautern.

The ceremony was an initiative of Lt. Gen. James R. Helmly, the former chief of the Army Reserve, to recognize the efforts of Reserve Soldiers who deployed.

The Kaiserslautern-based Army Reserve unit mobilized in February 2009 and deployed in support of Operation Iraci Freedom. The 1177th MCT conducted missions for the 330th Transportation Battalion, 13th Sustainment Brigade (Expeditionary), and later transferred under the 49th Transportation Battalion, 3rd Sustainment Brigade (Expeditionary) to support its missions.

To be able to perform the various missions, the movement control team was divided into smaller teams to help sustain three operating bases across Iraq. Some of their missions included standing up the first commercial movement division and establishing movement policies and procedures.

These small teams conducted various ground operations that resulted in the movement of more than 3,000 vehicles and approximately 30 super-convoys per month, ensuring the sustainment supplies for coalition forces in Iraq was met. "My faith with the Lord, the support of my wife, and my troops' determination to complete the mission gave me the strength to keep going while deployed," said Capt. Major E. Robinson, the commander of the 1177nd MCT and a native of Chicago. "My experience was rewarding, challenging and unforgettable. Our mission was to sustain the troops with supplies, fuel and food - making this a very unique mission."

All the Soldiers of the unit said the mission was an experience that helped improve their technical and tactical expertise.

Sgt. Carlton Williams, a native of Richmond, Va., and movement noncommissioned officer in the 1177th MCT, described his deployment as an experi-

'The separation from my husband was hard, but if it wasn't for the strong family support group programs, it would have been difficult to continue my day-to-day activities," said Christine Morgan, a native of Kitzingen, Germany, and wife of Sgt. 1st Class Willie J. Morgan.

At the conclusion of the ceremony, the family members were presented awards for their untiring support.

The 1177th MCT is a subordinate unit of the 7th Civil Support Command. The 7th CSC is an operational and expeditionary force of Army Reserve Soldiers ready to provide forward-stationed command and control, consequence management and civil af-fairs capabilities under the direction of the 21st Theater Sustainment Command to support U.S. Army Europe's missions.

The command is headquartered in Kaiserslautern and is comprised of 22 subordinate units throughout Germany and Italy with approximately 1,000 European-based Army Reserve Soldiers.

Best of the best recognized at annual Topper Awards Show

Staff Report

U.S. Army Garrison Baden-Württemberg community theaters took home 11 awards at the annual Tournament of Plays "Topper' Awards Show Saturday at Patrick Henry Village in Heidelberg.

"As always, I was very pleased with how the Roadside program was recognized at the Toppers," said Dane Winters, Heidelberg's Roadside Theater director. "We have an incredibly devoted and talented group of participants, which directly affects the quality of our productions, and it is nice to see this recognized outside of the Heidelberg area."

Altogether, technical, musical, acting, artistic and directing achievements were celebrated by the presentation of 82 golden "Top-per" statues, and 211 framed nomination certificates.

Twenty-three musicals, comedies and dramas were produced during the six-week adjudication period in Army, Air Force and International community theaters in Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Turkey. It is a testament to the quality of the performances that each entered production received multiple awards nominations for excellence.

Installation Management Command-Europe sponsors the annual event, and the "Topper" show has become an important part of each community theater's season. Some are already planning their entries for next year.

And although the awards and recognition provide good incen-tives, the real value of the event is to obtain the training that the adjudicators provide with their postshow critiques. The team of roving judges offers verbal insights and suggestions on-the-spot after each entry they attend.

For the 600 in attendance at Patrick Henry Village ballroom, Saturday night was not only a chance to cheer the nominees and winners, but also to be entertained by the professional-quality Topper singers and band in a show modeled on Broadway's Tony Awards.

It also was a golden opportunity to network with fellow theatre volunteer enthusiasts - Soldiers, family members, civilians, host nation, and international participants-and to celebrate together their passion for creating a little bit of Broadway in their local communities. "Since the Roadside Theater hosts the event, with over 20 volunteer participants and staff working on it, I think we all greatly enjoyed the huge sigh of relief when it goes off without a hitch," Winters said. "We were all very pleased with how the awards event went this year and very happy with our recognition and awards."

USAREUR regulation requires helmets for bike riders

By Staff Sqt. Patricia Deal USAREUR PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Wearing a Consumer Product Safety Commission-approved helmet while bicycling can reduce head injury risk by 85 percent.

"The number one safety rule is that all riders need to wear a helmet. While wearing a helmet won't prevent accidents, it will significantly reduce your injury level if you're wearing one," said Safety and Occupational Health Specialist Shane Podraza, from the U.S. Army Europe Safety Office. "Studies show that nearly 70 percent of all fatal bicycle crashes involve head injuries, highlighting the importance of wearing a helmet."

Despite the definite safety benefit of wearing a helmet, Podraza said those same studies show that only 20 to 25 percent of cyclists wear helmets.

More cyclists will wear a helmet when cycling in areas with helmet use laws in place, according to statistics from the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety. While only a few U.S. states have local ordinances requiring bicyclists to wear helmets, it is a requirement for all cyclists to wear a helmet when riding on military installations in USAREUR.

"One thing for certain is that the Staff Sgt. April Scales cycles with her daughter, Amia, and son, Earl (E.J.), through the ho usina area at Patrick Henry Village in Heidelberg. Scales makes sure her family cycles safely, always wearing their helmets when riding.

military police and gate guards defi-nitely enforce USAREUR regulations that require bicycle riders - and passengers - to wear a helmet when riding on military installations," said Crime Analyst Jim Taylor, from the USAREUR Office of the Provost Marshal. "It's just one means we have to keep riders safe."

And keeping that helmet on while biking off-post is the smart and safe thing to do.

Doctors at USAREUR medical facilities see firsthand the physical and emotional trauma patients suffer from head injuries. Chief Pediatrician Lt. Col. Michael Pelzner, from Landstuhl Regional Medical Center, said it's frustrating for him as he treats many preventable, serious head injuries in children who weren't wearing a helmet when bicycling or skateboarding.

"Besides the usual bumps and bruises, you can get skull fractures, deep cuts and concussions. There's not a lot of padding on the outside of the head, and the blood vessels are near the surface so even minor cuts can bleed a lot," he said. "Falls off a bike or skateboard can occur at significant velocity, increasing the severity of injuries.

"I can't emphasize enough that kids will adapt to consistent routines and expectations. Parents need to start mandating helmet use as soon as kids start on the tricycle at age three to four, and keep at it," he said. "Teenagers think they are invincible, but often respond when they see or hear about a friend who got hurt, or was even killed, because they didn't wear it while riding a bike."

Health Center Dental Clinic noncommissioned Officer-in-Charge Staff Sgt. April Scales said she believes in the importance of wearing helmets while riding. "I make sure I wear one every time I ride," she said. "And my son knows the rule 'no helmet, no riding.

Earl Scales, 11, said he always follows his mother's rule, even though some of his friends don't always wear a helmet when riding. "I would wear one even if she didn't nag me," he said. "I was in an accident and got pretty banged up, broke my arm. I could have been hurt a lot more if I didn't wear a helmet."

Task Force 30th Medical Command comes home

By Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Fincham 30TH MEDCOM PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Fifty-three Soldiers of Task Force 30th Medical Command returned to Heidelberg Monday, following their year long deployment to Afghanistan in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

⁴For the past year I have had the honor of stay-ing in close contact with Col. Doyle and the 30th (Medical Command)," explained Maj. Gen. David Rubenstein, chief of the Army Medical Service Corps and the Army's deputy surgeon general. "As a former commander of this brigade, I cannot begin to tell you how proud I am of the successes that you've had throughout the last year. Simply put you have saved lives."

Task Force 30th MEDCOM uncased its colors at Bagram Air Base, Afghanistan, 12 months ago becoming the first Theater Medical Command in Afghanistan. In previous years, command and control had been decentralized throughout the theater.

Task Force 30th provided a new solution, with centralized planning and expanded roles in health service support, force health protection, medical logistics, patient movement and health care policy.

"For the thousands of Soldiers, Sailors Airmen and Marines and the thousands of family members of those wounded, thank you for what you have accomplished during your year of deployment," said Rubenstein, who served as the commander of the 30th from 2004-2005.

Rubenstein also expressed his thanks to the family members who played an important role throughout the deployment.

Your support of your Soldier, your husband, your wife, your father, your mother, has been incredible and has been equally important. The successes of cal Command, the 30th MEDCOM provides ex-tools and stood ready to assist when and wherever possible, the Lakotas were being off-loaded and re-assembled by representatives from the manufacturer and the light utility helicopters product office at Redstone Arsenal, Ala.

Awaiting their turn was not always easy.

"They are so new, they still have that new helicopter smell," said Carl Marquez, an aircraft mechanic at the closed loop facility.

"On the other hand, who could do it better, anyway? Everyone here is working toward an easy and smooth transition," said Allen Partain, a quality assurance representative with TASM-E.

Finally, when it was time for the ground run-ups of the first three re-assembled Lakotas April 19, the end owners had their turn. Three Falcon Team instructor pilots from the Joint Multinational Readiness Center and seven air crew familiarized themselves with the newest additions to their training fleet.

The aviation detachment known as Falcon Team provides the air support training at JMRC in Hohenfels. The center is slated to receive 10 UH-72-As. Among its initial delivery is the aircraft with tail number 72100, signifying the 100th Lakota helicopter delivered to the Army

Heidelberg.

The helicopters will be used to train pilots for combat engagements. Additionally, they will carry observers to oversee war game scenarios against opposing force aircraft, said Maj. Brian Parsons, an aviation observer controller with the Falcon Team.

In addition to providing JMRC with the flexibility to train diverse scenarios, the multi-role Lakotas will replace the aging UH-1 Iroquois aircraft at JRMC and will free up the UH-60 Black Hawk helicopters for tactical missions and deployments.

That's another plus for the 21st TSC, which is responsible for report-ing the aircraft readiness of this theater to the Department of the Army. The introduction of the Lakotas will boost readiness rates as well as additional operational capability, Sanders explained.

Simultaneously, being able to turn in the reliable but old Huevs at IMRC will eliminate a maintenance nightmare "Obtaining parts for the UH-1 Hueys has been a significant challenge for a while, because (the Army) cancelled all repair parts production lines for this aircraft," Sanders said.

wing aircraft, is produced by American Eurocopter, a business unit of European Aeronautics Defense and Space. "The Lakota is the military version of an existing aircraft - the EC 145 Eurocopter - it was actually designed in Donauwörth, Germany, which makes it even better suited for the training mission here," said Bill Bennett, a contract field service representative with American Eurocopter.

Meeting the Army's commercial off-the-shelf acquisition strategy for light utility helicopters also equates to time and money saved for research and development as well as acquisition.

Patrick Henry pupils get proactive for Earth Week

he may be only 8 years old, but Regina Wolfe already has a green thumb.

Recently Regina, along with her classmates from Patrick Henry Elementary School took turns putting it to good use during the school's Earth Week activities April 21.

The second graders trekked to one of the school's two gardens to weed, water and pot an array of Hibiscus, Japanese Rose, Spirea and Cherry Laurel plants.

Regina, dressed in her favorite pink jumpsuit with matching hair barrettes revealed that, although this was her first time planting shrubbery, this wasn't her first time working in a garden.

"I planted fruit and vegetables like strawberries, carrots, cucumbers, potatoes, tomatoes and apples at my house, but no plants like these," Regina said as she and her classmate Jeffery Hochgesang worked together to pour out the contents of a bag of mulch nearly their size. "I feel good about coming

"I feel good about coming out here, we learned about helping the Earth," she said as her partner Jeffery chimed in, "You have to recycle, too."

Virginia also said the best part about planting apples was getting to make pies out of them with her mom.

The planting project was one of several activities the children participated in during this year's Earth Week to highlight environmental awareness. Students also conducted a trash clean-up, learned about nutrition and endangered species, and created their own Save the Earth T-shirts.

Samantha Rogers, an intern with the Environmental Division from the Oak Ridge Institute for Science and Education, who's been working closely with PHES and others in the area to help teachers and students continue to cultivate environmental awareness year round. She also rolled up her sleeves to help the youngsters to get down and dirty during the event.

"I think it's really important because if kids are disconnected from the Earth and if they're disconnected from the problems we are facing environmentally, they're not going to care and the problems are going to get worse," she added. "We need to have people thinking about recycling, thinking about making sure our air is clean and our water is clean, because if we mess up the planet, we really don't have any other options."

Computer teacher Suzanne McMorran also performed her share of watering, weeding and digging duties while educating the children on how the plants grow and how their root systems work."We want them to have an appreciation of the Earth and a better understanding of how we have to protect it and protect ourselves," McMorran said. "Kids love doing this kind of stuff, and when they appreciate things like flowers, they don't pick them. They enjoy them."

Meanwhile in the far corner of the garden, 8-year olds Regina and Jeffrey had moved on from spreading mulch to finally watering their new plants.

"I think next year we should plant watermelons," Jeffrey said. "Those are really good to eat, and I think they're good for the Earth, too."

Members of the Heidelberg Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers also came out to support the event and help in the planting. LEISURE

Dear Ms. Vicki.

I'm wondering if my husband will ever be normal and adjust from all the many deployments. I've stopped counting them.

At first. I heard that you have to be out of theater for one year before you can deploy again. Oh well, that is not a fact. There have been times that my husband has been home for only six or seven months, and he is deployed again.

We have moved to a new unit only for him to be the first one deployed with the unit again. It's like there's no way to escape this life of deployments over and over again. My question is, how I can help my husband with what I believe is Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. I think he has more than just combat stress.

How will he ever get better with all of the time he spends downrange? What is PTSD and what is combat stress? Can you give me some resource information, too? You have a way of simply putting things for people to understand. Thanks for reading my letter, and I hope you will answer soon. From: Is There Help For My

Husband? Dear Help,

Much is being learned about combat stress and PTSD at this time to help assess, diagnose and treat service members who have been in combat.

Previously, combat stress was called shell shocked, battle fatigue, war anxiety symptoms, etc. Often, combat stress has been misdiagnosed and not understood.

Some service men and women experience trauma after shocking and traumatic events. It can cause long term symptoms that can cause impairment to their quality of life. These symptoms must be treated by trained professionals.

Additionally, the symptoms can be minor to severe. Combat stress can lead to PTSD. In my professional opinion, I believe the overwhelming majority of service members will experience some symptoms of combat stress.

When it comes to PTSD, we must understand that any well trained person is subject to post traumatic reactions that can affect anyone. It has nothing to do with being weak or how courageous a person is.

Traumatic stress causes mental stress that produces a reaction. For example an assault, a near death experience, witnessing a distressing event, surviving a natural disaster and war experiences. These events can cause intense disturbing distress and cause lasting distress.

Because these feelings happen after the event, they are called post-traumatic stress. Keep in mind that we are all different and will have different emotional and mental reactions to a traumatic event, but it becomes abnormal when symptoms last an exceptionally long time, the symptoms are acute, and when they interfere with normal physical and psychological functioning.

Some emotional symptoms are mood swings, nightmares, anger, and fear etc. Some physical reac-
