Organizational Charts Headquarters USAF

Jacob Neufeld, compiler

Charts depicting the major organizational elements and key personnel of the Air Staff have been issued periodically since the creation of the Department of the Air Force in 1947. The Office of Air Force History published a collection of these charts in 1984. This revision adds thirty more charts. Some older charts have surfaced since the first edition appeared; others are corrected versions of the originals. Together, these charts illustrate the organizational evolution of the Air Staff from 1947 to the present.

When Headquarters United States Air Force was established on October 10, 1947, it was organized for flexibility and decentralization. Only eight staff officers were directly responsible to the Chief of Staff: the Vice Chief, Air Inspector, Secretary-General of the Air Board, Chairman of the Scientific Advisory Board, Air Comptroller, Deputy Chief of Staff (DCS) for Personnel & Administration, DCS for Operations, and DCS for Materiel. The DCSs had policy-making responsibility and broad powers of supervision, delegating functions to their directorates. The directorates were encouraged to make decisions on their own and to coordinate across the entire Air Staff, working with directors in other DCS offices without having to go through their own deputy chiefs. Only twelve directorates and four special staff offices were under the DCS level. Administrative aid was provided by the Secretary of the Air Staff and the Air Adjutant General--both responsible to the Assistant Vice Chief of the Air Staff.

Moreover, each DCS had an Assistant DCS to help discharge the duties of office. Not long after the reorganization, a pattern of "assistant for" offices appeared between the DCS and the directorate levels. These offices were intended to cut across the entire functional staff area of a DCS; it was felt that they could be more effective as adjuncts to the DCS. Among the earliest of these offices were the Assistant for Programming and the Assistant for Atomic Energy. Sometimes it was desirable to create an office for a program to lend emphasis without creating a permanent directorate.

As more functions sought direct access to the Chief, the streamlined organization of 1947 proved impossible to maintain. By the end of the Korean War, the Air Staff had introduced yet another level into its administrative structure. Called the assistant chiefs of staff, these offices came to be known collectively as the Special Staff. They were to be responsible to the Chief of Staff for certain programs that the Chief felt could best be accomplished at a higher level. Thus were established the three major levels: the command element, the Air Staff, and the Special Staff.

A fifth major Air Staff office was added at the deputy-chief level in January 1950 with the creation of the DCS/Development. Next, in July 1957, a sixth office was established when DCS/Plans and Programs was split off from DCS/Operations. In February 1963, the DCS/Operations was redesignated DCS/Programs and Requirements; the DCS/Plans and Programs became DCS/Plans and Operations. The Inspector General, an element of the Special Staff since 1948, was moved to the Air Staff level in the major reorganization of July 1978. Most recently, the 1986 Goldwater-Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act transferred three DCSs -- the Inspector General, Comptroller, and Research, Development and Acquisition -- from the Air Staff to the Secretariat, effective in March 1987.

Frequent title changes reflect the revised functions of the Air Staff. To summarize:

DCS/Plans and Programs (1957-1963)
DCS/Plans and Operations (1963-1978)
DCS/Plans and Readiness (1978-1981)
DCS/Plans and Operations (1981- )

The Inspector General (1948-1987)

Special Staff offices have varied in kind and number, many lasting until their functions were superseded or absorbed by other offices. Among these were:

Manpower Group (1948-1949)
Dir/Public Relations (1950-1952)
ACS/Guided Missiles (1954-1959)
ACS/Air Defense Systems (1957-1959)
ACS/Air Defense Systems (1957-1959)
Operations Analysis (1959-1971)
Secretary of the Air Staff (1947-1972)

Generally, the Special Staff has tended to grow. In 1948, only three Special Staff offices appeared: the Scientific Advisory Board, the National Guard Bureau, and the Special Assistant for Reserve Forces. They were followed in 1949 by the Surgeon General, which had been an element of DCS/Personnel. Then, in 1950 were added: the Judge Advocate General, formerly an element of DCS/Personnel, and the Chief Scientist. In 1957 the Assistant Chief of Staff (ACS) for Intelligence, previously an element of DCS/Operations, became part of the Special Staff. In 1963 the Chief of Chaplains moved from DCS/Personnel to the Special Staff. The Chief Master Sergeant of the Air Force was created as part of the Special Staff in 1967. The Office of Air Force History was created and made part of the Special Staff in 1969. The Chief of Security Police was added in 1975. By 1978 the Special Staff had grown to seventeen offices and became a prime target for reorganization. More than half of the offices were removed from the Special Staff at that time, including:

Chief of Security Police
Scientific Advisory Board
Office of Air Force History
ACS/Communications and Computer Resources
Air Force Board Structure
Foreign Liaison
Directorate of Administration
Inspector General (moved to Air Staff)

Subsequently, however, several of these offices were restored. In January 1979 the Scientific Advisory Board and the ACS/Studies and Analysis were reinstated. In April 1981 the Office of Air Force History and the Directorate of Administration returned and in 1983 the ACS/Information Systems was added.

The Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 (familarly called Goldwater-Nichols after the sponsors of the law) made significant changes in the organization of Air Force Headquarters, effective March 1987. The law required that certain functions -- Inspector General, Comptroller, Acquisition, Legislative Liaison, and Public Affairs -- be transferred to the Secretariat. (Some of these already belonged to the Air Force Secretary's office.) Simultaneously, the act aimed to reduce the size of headquarters staffs. An accompanying goal was to implement the Acquisition Executive system, recommended by the David Packard Commission.

The Assistant Secretary for Acquisition and Logistics (SAF/AL) was redesignated the Assistant Secretary for Acquisition (SAF/AQ). This new office (SAF/AQ) combined most functions and elements from SAF/AL and the Air Staff DCS/RD; the latter assumed the title of Military Deputy for Acquisition. The office of Assistant Secretary for Financial Management (SAF/FM) was dissolved, with most of its functions assigned to the Comptroller of the Air Force (AF/AC). The Comptroller, transferred to the Secretariat as SAF/AC. In lieu of the statutory SAF/FM position, the Secretary of the Air Force created an Assistant Secretary for Readiness and Support (SAF/RS) to oversee "Air Force logistics, installations, environmental, and force support plans, policies, and programs." Meanwhile, the Assistant Secretary for Manpower, Reserve Affairs, and Installations (SAF/MI) -- having lost its responsibility for installations -- was redesignated SAF/MR. Another Air Staff DCS-equivalent, the Inspector General of the Air Force (AF/IG), was transferred to the Secretariat. The SAF/IG, however, would continue to report to the Chief of Staff on such traditional military functions as safety, security (including antiterrorism), and the evaluation of operational readiness. The Director of Administration (AF/DA) and nearly all associated functions were placed under the Administrative Assistant to the Secretary (SAF/AA). Renamed the Directorate of Information Management and Administration, this new office absorbed responsibility for the resources management function previously under AF/SC.

Ms Betty McKay supplied the nucleus of the first collection of charts published by the Office of Air Force History. Mr. Harry Zubkoff, former Chief, SAF/AAR, and Mr. William Heimdahl, Chief of Reference Services, Office of Air Force History, provided supplementary information for the charts. Mr. Robert Bell, 1100th RMG/DOVG, performed graphics work and made corrections in copy.
