

SPOUSE EMPLOYMENT AND EDUCATION

Finding employment can be a difficult process for military spouses, especially for first time job seekers or those who are just starting their careers. The military lifestyle oftentimes presents job-seeking obstacles that are unique to the military community. The Department of Defense (DoD) has created programs to help address the challenges faced by military spouses and to provide resources designed to assist them in reaching their employment and career goals.

A number of different programs are available to Service members, spouses, and to adult family members wishing to pursue their higher level education goals. DoD, the Services, and individual universities can provide information on schools, programs of study, and various scholarships that might make pursuing education goals easier for military family members.
