Website of the Week

"It may not be obvious in the day-to-day world of work or school, but a "three-two-one-liftoff" future for citizens gets closer every day.

Space travel itself is nothing new. Governments have been launching satellites since 1957 and sending people into space since 1961. The novelty is in the growing shift from government to private ownership in operation of everything from rockets and spacecraft to tourist trips and spaceports. An example is this artist's conception of the terminal inside Spaceport America, one of seven U.S. spaceports that have been licensed by the Federal Aviation Administration's Office of Commercial Space Transportation." America.Gov
