School town hall set Wednesday

By ADRIANE FOSS
Outlook Editor

Garrison and school officials hope to put elementary and middle school parents' concerns to rest during a Wednesday town hall meeting at 6 p.m. in the multipurpose room of the new school complex in Villaggio.

Elementary School Principal Chris Beane and Middle School Principal Dr. Julio Gonzalez will provide information and answer questions about the new schools and are hoping as many parents as possible will turn out for the event.

"It is great forum for getting information that you may not think of at the moment, but anyone who has attended those types of events know that one question spurs the next, so it will be very beneficial for the parents," said Beane.

In addition to discussing the middle school, the first of its kind with grades 6-8 in the DoDDS Mediterranean Region, Gonzalez will promote a contest allowing parents, teachers and students to come up

Army standardizing child care fees

Some parents will see increase or decrease Oct. 1

DoD news release

Beginning Oct. 1, most Army Families will see an increase in their child care fees while others will see a reduction and some will see no change in fees for School Year 2010-2011. This is a result of a new Department of Defense policy.

"The restructuring of fees should have a positive effect by expanding the number of income categories to better reflect the full range of family incomes," said Eric Weisel, USAG Vicenza's CYSS coordinator. "We are particularly fortunate that in our community we are opening a brand new CDC/SAC facility in Villaggio which should be ready for use by mid-September. We're inviting the community to attend the ribbon-cutting ceremony Oct. 6 to tour the facility and see how the child care fees help us afford high quality facilities for our children.

specific fees for Europe, the Vicenza CYSS team will work with families to determine exactly what their fees will be prior to implementation Oct. 1," said Weisel.

The Army Family Action Plan played an important role in shaping the new child care fee policy. One result of AFAP was as expansion in the number of income categories to better reflect the full range of family incomes found across the Army.

By law, child care fees are based on total family income (excluding certain special pay and allowances), not rank or civilian grade. In 2008, DoD conducted an in-depth

Vicenza's Frigo first Italian employee to earn LSS green belt

DPW's Uberto Frigo used LSS practices to save the garrison $34K annually.

Uberto Frigo, an Italian employee with USAG Vicenza's Directorate of Public Works, earned his certification as a Lean Six Sigma Green Belt May 7.

Using Lean Six Sigma, Frigo improved Caserma Ederle's DPW work order system, increasing efficiency and reducing estimated cost to the tune of $34,000 per year.

During a recent interview with The Outlook, Frigo defined Lean Six Sigma and explains how he became certified:

Q: What is Lean?

A: For many, Lean is the set of "tools" that identifies and eliminates any waste. As waste is eliminated quality improves while production time and cost are reduced. Lean implementation is therefore focused on getting the right things to the right place at the right time in the right quantity to achieve perfect work flow, while minimizing waste and being flexible and able to change.

Q: What is Six Sigma?

A: Six Sigma seeks to improve the quality of process outputs by identifying and removing the causes of defects (errors) and minimizing variability in manufacturing and in business processes. It uses a set of quality management methods ... and creates a special infrastructure of people within the organization (ie: black belts, green belts) who are experts in these methods. Each Six Sigma project carried out within an organization follows a defined sequence of steps and has quantified targets. These targets can be financial (cost reduction or profit increase) or whatever is critical to the customer of that process (cycle time, quality, safety, delivery, etc.).

Opening up may be difficult. When talking is hard, writing may be the answer

The following commentary was written by Michael J. Cain, a freelance writer and volunteer at Fort Bragg, N.C., who teaches therapeutic journaling to Soldiers suffering from post traumatic stress disorder.

Soldiers at Ft. Bragg's Warrior Transition Battalion are working hard to make good their escape from the battalion. Whether they're going back to active duty, or planning a return to civilian life, the first order of business is to get well. Among the tools being offered to assist them is a class in therapeutic journaling.

"The feedback I've gotten from our social workers is saying, in some cases, it is helpful for Soldiers suffering from PTSD or post-combat stress," says Maj. Christopher Blais, executive officer of the WTB.

Venting without fear

In a journal, Soldiers can vent without fear of retribution, and clear their minds of stressful thoughts and memories. Journaling gives the ability to see one's thoughts from a new perspective. Once those thoughts appear on paper, they can be observed with a certain detachment, as if they belonged to another.

Frequently, this new perspective helps to identify solutions that might not have been so obvious when they were just thoughts. Whether the issues involve anger, guilt, fear or other points of discomfort, one of the things that cause those feelings to swell and fester is that they are kept private.

Loreley Taylor, a clinical psychologist who works with members of the WTB, is a strong advocate of journaling. "I do risk assessment with new members of the WTB. When Soldiers come in, I encourage them to journal, to write about happy things, about their goals, about bereavement."

Private thoughts

Many people think their private thoughts will shock people or lead them to judge, but keeping thoughts too "close to the vest" can lead to an explosive outburst at a later date, which can be regrettable at best and dangerous at worst. Journaling allows one to get deep into the core of an issue, without straining relationships or revealing oneself beyond a certain level of comfort.

People who keep journals develop an enhanced ability to deal with difficult issues. Journaling reduces stress, which helps to improve sleep and strengthen relationships. The journaling experience can be as unique as the person doing it. It can also be adapted to suit individual needs.

What works for you

There are no rules about the proper way to keep a journal; it's different for every writer. Finding what works for you is a matter of experimenting. Narrative story telling, or dialogue, perhaps interlaced with newspaper or magazine clippings or illustrations, all are tools that can be used.

Buying an expensive journal is not necessary. In fact, many people report better results when they use an ordinary spiral notebook or legal pad, at least in the beginning. This reduces potential anxiety about feeling the need to write something "profound."

Another reason to start out with something that has removable pages is that it makes it easier to throw away anything you've written that you're uncomfortable with. The act of writing about a difficult subject has value, even if you don't keep it.

Knowing that it's okay to throw it out means you really can write about anything, and if you choose to toss it out, you can always come back to the topic later. The goal of journaling ought to be exploring thoughts and feelings, not beauty and profundity. That may come later, but the first goal is healing.

Some do, some don't

New Soldiers know, intellectually, there are risks associated with military life, but most don't consider the risk of the psychological impact of combat. Some develop post traumatic stress disorder, but not everyone does and we don't know why.

Combat stress is unavoidable; there is nothing routine about facing the harshness of a violent attack.

A Soldier may be trained to kill, but they're not bred to kill; training prepares a Soldier to do the job, but can't always prepare one for the aftermath of that job. It's how we deal with the aftermath that defines the impact.

All members of the WTB visit regularly with psychiatrists and therapists, where they are encouraged to talk about the things that cause them stress. Not surprisingly, many have a hard time opening up, and frequently talk only about things they believe the doctors want to hear.

A journal can be a place to vent, but more importantly, it is a place where complicated issues can be broken down to component parts. These parts can then be viewed and dealt with individually.

Little pieces, big issues

Issues can be overwhelming when approached all at once, but little pieces of big issues can frequently be sorted through almost painlessly and before you know it, the big issues have been resolved as well. All of which helps to make molehills out of mountains.

Try it. Take 20 minutes, once a week. Make a list of the things that cause you the most stress. Take an item from that list and see how many elements you can find which contribute to it.

After you've broken your issue down as far as possible, try to find solutions to the individual elements, rather than the issue itself, and you'll soon find that what was once overwhelming is now manageable; what was once part of a wall is now a stepping-stone.

Journaling won't cure PTSD, or resolve all the issues you'll face when you return from a deployment, but it can help break down the barriers to talking about serious issues. If there is a cure, it's in the talking.

There are no rules about the proper way to keep a journal; it's different for every writer.

Finding what works for you is a matter of experimenting.

Narrative story telling, or dialogue, perhaps interlaced with newspaper or magazine clippings or illustrations, all are tools that can be used.

you must apply all statistical methods, learned during the two weeks training, to a real project assigned to you by management," explained Frigo.

"A GB is a facilitator in a team grouped together to solve specific operational issues, where he acts as the group coordinator and mentor applying new statistical technologies and exercising genuine original thinking," he said.

"It is not uncommon that a GB becomes a black belt," said Frigo, "but this requires full dedication and is hard to achieve if it is not your primary and regular duty.

"As an industrial engineer and working for the USAG Vicenza DPW it has been natural for me to volunteer to become a LSS GB," said Frigo. "LSS concepts and philosophy are common to industrial engineering.

"Being an industrial engineer for more than 26 years has given me the foundations for receiving this specific training and finding further applications of LSS within my working environment," said Frigo. "My project is aimed in reducing processing time to give a quicker response to the DPW customer while maintaining the same level of service quality."

He said Lean Six Sigma is a philosophy that has changed the way he works.

"Once you start knowing it and applying its principles, it is hard to deal with your daily work in a different way," he said. "GBs apply LSS to their daily work environments by driving improvements within their facility, department, or natural work group."

with a new school mascot, motto and grade colors.

"The high school mascot is The Cougars, the elementary school is the Cougar Cubs, and there's nothing in between, so it'll be interesting to see what the community comes up with," said Gonzalez.

Other town hall topics will include new traffic patterns, before- and after-school child care, school lunches, safety and child supervision.

USAG Vicenza School Liaison Officer Norie McCall said while the town hall will take place at the school, the event will not be an opportunity to tour the school. She said students and parents can tour the school Aug. 27 during the official Sneak and Peak.

"Wednesday's town hall is going to simply be a great opportunity for parents to get all of the information they need up front," said McCall.

CYSS will provide child care for the town hall meeting from 5-8:30 p.m. at a cost of $4 per hour per child. Children must be registered with CYSS. No shows will be charged the full rate of $14. Visit Parent Central Services or call 0444-71-7219 to reserve a slot.

Parents are asked to notify PCS and their child's center if the child will need to be walked over from CDC Bldg. 398 or from the School Age Center to child care at CDC Bldg. 395.

study of the child development program fee policy.

As a result, they determined current fee ranges were no longer in sync with the total family income for a majority of the users, and the fees have not kept pace with the increasing costs of providing care.

"While the cost of providing child care has risen each of the past six years, the value of the programs has also increased for Soldiers, their children and the Army," said Peggy Hinson, Child Youth and School Services Director at FMWRC.

"Our child care programs promote early learning. Most Army programs are nationally accredited, and most importantly, Soldiers can concentrate on their mission, knowing their children are safe and well cared for in a fully-accredited child care system," she explained.

The National Association of Child Care Resource and Referral Agencies, the country's leading voice for child care, issues a biennial report on the quality of nationwide child care, including the DoD. The 2007 study found that the DoD child care system "stands alone as a model for states."

In that report, military child care ranked first among the 50 states and the District of Columbia, and was the only entity to score in the top 10 for both standards and oversight criteria.

Since 2004, child care fees at most Army garrisons have remained static in an attempt to ease the burden of persistent conflict and multiple deployments.

In an effort to minimize the financial impact of fee increases, the Army received approval from DoD to begin a phased in implementation of this new Child Care Fee Policy. Individual installations will have plans to reach fixed dollar amounts for each fee category within the next three years.

A 2009 update confirmed that DoD child care continues to score more than 60 percent above the national average.

Currently there are six fee categories, including a minimum fixed rate and five income-based categories, each with a range of fees determined by the garrison.

The School Year 2010-2011 Child Care Fee Policy will contain nine categories, with three added at the top to more accurately accommodate higher incomes.

Under existing policy, Families earning $70,001 pay the same fees as those making more than $100,000. The three additional categories will raise fees incrementally to cover Families earning $125,001 or more annually.

Those earning $85,000 and below will see smaller increases. Furthermore, some lower-income Families will pay reduced fees under the new policy.

As always, Families with more than one child will receive multiple child reductions, regardless of total family income. This now will become an Army-wide standard 15 percent discount for 2nd and subsequent children.

Commanders may authorize additional fee reductions for Families with temporary, documented financial hardships. Army Family Covenant fee reductions are in effect, while military parents are deployed.

In addition to Child Development Center fees, The Army's 2010-2011 Fee Policy covers all Child, Youth and School Services Programs, including: Full Day; Part Day; Part Time; School Age and Hourly Care; Family Child Care Homes; Skies Unlimited Instructional Programs and Youth Sports.

For more information, contact the CYSS Parent Central Services Office at 634-7219.

While the cost of providing care has risen each of the past six years, the value of the programs has also increased.

Our child care programs promote early learning. Most importantly, Soldiers can concentrate on their mission, knowing their children are safe and well cared for in a fully accredited child care system.

Engineers win Small Units Softball Tourney

USAG Livorno Public Affairs

Six Air Force softball teams from Europe came to Camp Darby to face off in the 2010 U.S. Air Forces in Europe Small Units Championship.

Teams from Germany, the Netherlands and Italy played 35 games over four days after the opening ceremony Aug. 5.

The Aviano Civil Engineer team defeated the Geilenkirchen team to win the championship, but it was not an easy take according to Mike Trexler, referee during the championship.

"The teams were all prepared and well balanced. It was difficult to predict the final winner," said Trexler. "Each team had some amazing players and any team could have been the final winner."

In the final round-up, after winning the first game with the Camp Darby team, the Aviano CE team lost a game against the team from Geilenkirchen and was moved into the loser's bracket.

Still the Aviano CE team managed to win all four games in the loser's bracket and won the two final games with Geilenkirchen with scores of 18-4 and 15-5. Croughton placed third in the tournament. The event was organized by Tom Burkett, USAFE sports director, with the local support of the Camp Darby Fitness Center crew.

"Across four days, the six teams played 35 games and it was a great success," said Jimmy Roddy, Camp

Darby Fitness Center director. "We had no major problem; it was safe and we had great fun."

"While the championship was organized by USAFE, the USAG Livorno DFMWR provided logistical support to them" said Todd Smith, DFMWR sports programmer. "We took care of the field, all maintenance and the local organization of the event and it was nice to receive appreciative words from Mr. Burkett after the championship."

The next softball event at Camp Darby is the Ammo Bowl during Labor Day weekend.

Remember summer security tips

By MICHAEL MCKNIGHT

USAG Livorno Antiterrorism Officer

There is often an increase in residential burglary and theft in the warm weather months and one reason is that people tend to leave windows open for ventilation when they are not home.

In a vast number of burglaries, the burglar enters through an opened or unlocked door or window. There is also an increase in theft of personal property because people leave items unattended at parks or at the beach.

Remember to always close and lock your windows, blinds and or shutters when you are away from home. A good thief is always on the lookout for a soft target. Don't be an invitation for a thief; make your home a hard target.

Additionally, it is important to remember to lock your doors whether you're heading out to the market and don't plan on being gone long or are relaxing in the backyard. An experienced thief only needs a few minutes to burglarize your most valued possessions.

Lastly, bicycle thefts increase during the summer months. By locking them with a bike chain or storing them inside, you can help prevent that.

3/405th AFSB personnel support Russian wildfire containment efforts

By JENNIFER KING

405th AFSB Public Affairs Office

The 3rd Battalion, 405th Army Field Support Brigade, supported efforts to assist with the containment of wildfires in Russia by providing military equipment to Russia Aug. 13.

The fire-fighting equipment is being released from the Army Prepositioned Stocks in Italy at the request of the U.S.

European Command.

"The U.S. European Command contacted us regarding the release of equipment," said Lt. Col. Richard Pierce, 3rd Battalion commander. "We received phenomenal support from the Italian 46th Air Brigade in Pisa. We are proud that we are able to do some small part to help ease the suffering of the Russian people and hopefully assist with resolving this catastrophe."

Col. Ronald Green, commander of the 405th AFSB agreed.

"We routinely provide humanitarian assistance whenever we receive a request for aid," Green said.

"We value our relationship with Russia, and this is an example of our ability to work together and support each other in times of crisis," he said.

The equipment was loaded onto a U.S. Air Force C-130J for delivery to Russia.

Local youth test mettle in triathlon

Students tough it out in 1-3K run, 2-6 mile cycling and 75-meter swim events

Special to the Outlook

Twenty-five community youth participated in the third annual triathlon, hosted by Child, Youth and School Services Friday morning.

The event was part of a sports camp led by Sky Clarke, the installation's individual sports specialist/clinician.

"It was a way to introduce youth to a diverse event that many have not tried before," said Clarke. "The participation and energy that the youth brought to this event was amazing."

Clarke said the participants' ability to pull on several individual strengths is what captured the students' attention and made the event a success.

"It's very beneficial for youth to work towards an event like this because they can see how their training and practice really paid off," she said. "For a 6 year old to be able to say they completed a triathlon is a very empowering feeling, one that we try to instill in all of our youth."

Participants ranged in age from 6-18 and competed in the following categories:

n ages 6-10: 1K run, 2-mile cycle, 75-meter swim

n ages 11-14: 2K run, 5-mile cycle, 75-meter swim

n ages 15-18: 3K run, 6-mile cycle, 75-meter swim

Clarke said 22 of the students participated in a triathlon clinic Aug. 12.

"Each day we worked on running, biking and swimming," she said. "The event was open to the community and we had a few additional youth sign up to participate in the meet."

Savannah Hampton, 10, daughter of Spc. William and Kirsten Hampton, took 1st place in the girls ages 6-10 category.
