USARAF supports combat operations for first time

By Maj. Junel Jeffrey

USS MOUNT WHITNEY, Mediterranean Sea — For Army Lt. Col. Leamond “Bo” Stuart, a 40-year-old Special Forces Soldier from Atlanta, the order to deploy happened fast and the prospect of serving on a ship seemed like an interesting opportunity.

The deployment order arrived within days and the task at hand was quite unique. Stuart didn’t really know exactly what to expect — where he was going or how long he would be away. All he knew was that this deployment, in support of U.S. Naval Forces Europe-Africa-U.S. Sixth Fleet, would be unlike any assignment he’d ever had.

So too for Sgt. 1st Class Steven Terrell, a human resources manager, “It is always difficult when there is little information on where you’re going and when you’re coming home,” he said. “We make it through by staying close and supporting each other.”

Stuart, Terrell and approximately 60 Soldiers packed their duffle bags, said goodbye to family and friends and traveled to Gaeta, Italy, where they joined more than 300 Airmen, Coast Guardsmen, Marines and Sailors embarked upon the USS Mount Whitney (LCC/JCC20), headquarters of Operation Joint Task Force-Odyssey Dawn.

oversees and coordinates U.S. military activities in Africa, established the joint task force to provide operational and tactical command and control for emergency evacuations, humanitarian relief, and potential future missions in support of the international response to unrest in Libya.

With a growing coalition of more than 13 nations including France, Great Britain, Qatar, and the United Arab Emirates, Joint Task Force-Odyssey Dawn set out to enforce United Nations Security Council Resolution 1973, which “authorizes all necessary measures to protect civilians in Libya under threat of attack by Qadhafi regime forces.”

Maj. Scott Sendmeyer said, “Overall, my experience has been very good, although challenging. Having the entire JTF staff on the ship enabled rapid team formulation and also mitigated many outside distractions.”

An Army Engineer Corps officer by trade, Sendmeyer led the overall Campaign Development Team, a group of planners responsible for organizing operations according to task force objectives and desired effects. He said that while working as a joint plans officer was a great learning experience, life on a ship was very different from Army life.

“I never thought of serving from aboard a ship, and it has

173rd ABCT ‘Herd’ leaders trek through Netherlands on historic journey

173rd ABCT PAO

The Netherlands — Elements of the 173rd Airborne Brigade Combat Team’s leadership and staff made the trek March 27-28 to learn about a major operation that happened nearly 70 years ago: code name Market Garden. This chapter in history had a sweeping impact on the European Theater, as airborne troops secured their objectives, including bridges and canals critical to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower’s strategic objectives.

“We set out on the staff ride to improve our understanding of airborne operations,” said Maj. Steven Curtis, brigade intelligence officer for the 173rd ABCT. “We returned with much more; most importantly, a deep appreciation of the bravery and sacrifice of paratroopers before us.”

In addition to the educational expedition, the Sky Soldiers’ 10-hour trip to the Netherlands included a Joint Operation with Dutch soldiers and Dutch marines that saw American Soldiers exchange airborne wings with their counterparts.

Col. Kyle Lear, commander, 173rd ABCT, said, “It is a great opportunity to build rapport and camaraderie with our partnership units. It was a very rewarding experience jumping with the Dutch Paratroopers of the Royal Netherlands army. Soldiers from partner nations usually share a bond; airborne Soldiers share a more intense bond since they both understand what it takes to be a paratrooper.

“As the only Airborne Brigade in Europe, it is extremely important to maintain our focus on Airborne Operations and combined operations with our partnership units,” said Lear.

The brigade staff traveled to visit the Netherlands to learn first-hand about how Airborne Operations, Strategic Planning and Joint Operations played important roles in shaping the outcome of World War II.

USARAF JAG supports rule-of-law education

By U.S. Army Africa Public Affairs Office

Lt. Col. Stephen Salerno, Judge Advocate for U.S. Army Africa's Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, recently provided a week of stability-focused legal instruction in Goma, Democratic Republic of Congo.

The weeklong event, hosted by the Defense Institute for International Legal Studies, included classes on refugee rights under international law; internal armed conflict and the law; and counter-insurgency doctrine. DIILS is the lead Department of Defense security cooperation resource for professional legal education, training and rule-of-law programs.

African participants included military, legal and government representatives from DRoC, Tanzania and Burundi. The regional seminar addressed issues such as border security and combating terrorism, Salerno said.

The choice of Goma, located in the eastern DRoC province of Kivu, as the location for the event was ideal for a seminar addressing border security issues, because it is adjacent to Rwanda and shares boundaries with Burundi, Tanzania and Uganda.

The area is strategically significant in its regional context because counterinsurgent groups are believed to operate there, he said.

Along with Salerno, seminar instructors from the Center for Civil and Military Relations, U.S. Customs and Border Patrol, and the U.S. Coast Guard led sessions.

Since the predominant language in DRoC is French, instructors were forced to adapt by communicating with their students through a translator.

"My first thought was that the translators would slow us down, but in actuality the pace permitted the instructors to emphasize certain points, and provided time to observe the participants reactions," Salerno said. "The benefit was that the short gap in time provided the instructors opportunities to reiterate certain points, or to pause for questions.

"Judging by the frequent questions and engagement of the participants, using interpreters may have improved the quality of the seminar."

The course of instruction was the second, follow-on iteration of a two-phase program, and took into account topics that were developed during the first phase, including the difficulty in controlling soft borders and addressing security concerns with a lack of resources. The seminar also paved the way-ahead for future sub-regional programs addressing rule of law, anti-corruption and anti-terrorism considerations, Salerno said.

Lt. Col. Stephen Salerno, Judge Advocate for U.S. Army Africa's Office of the Staff Judge Advocate gives stability-focused legal instruction in Goma, Democratic Republic of Congo.

Hosting instructive programs such as the DIILS seminar will allow DRoC and neighboring countries in Eastern Africa to develop the mutual trust necessary to enable collective action in response to internal domestic challenges as well as combating terrorist threats, he said.

Salerno is a U.S. Army Reserve officer assigned to the 91st Legal Support Office with previous experience traveling and teaching in Africa, and an easy choice to fulfill the DIILS mission requirements. In his civilian capacity, he is a labor and employment attorney for USARAF OSJA in Vicenza.

USARAF's mission is to promote security, stability and peace with African land force partners. Conducting programs such as the DIILS initiative will enable the command to meet these goals while providing the resources and guidance needed to achieve additional common objectives of African nations' and the United States, Salerno said.

"DIILS and similiar programs will allow American and African forces to build a better understanding of the issues confronting them, proposed solutions, and the development of capacity to adequately address them," he said.

Cheaper taxi fares cost more in safety

By Grant Sattler

USAG Vicenza Public Affairs Office

Off-duty Soldiers and family members are taking unnecessary risks by using unmarked taxis soliciting passengers outside of Gate 2 on Viale della Pace and at popular nightspots, according to U.S. Army Garrison Vicenza security officials.

"Choosing to get in a private vehicle offering rides for hire simply for convenience or in hopes of saving a few Euro may be more costly than you expected," said Peter Huller, USAG Vicenza antiterrorism officer.

Unmarked taxis outside Caserma Ederle may ask lower fares than registered marked taxis, however, because the trip is not metered, there is a greater chance of being pressured for a higher price after the trip, short changed or subjected to other scams. Soldiers should also be aware of potential liability for employing services that engage in tax fraud or provide under-the-table services.

Beyond ensuring fares are valid, legitimate taxis are regulated by the municipality of Vicenza to ensure the safety and security of passengers. Taxi drivers must be properly licensed and insured and their vehicles inspected for safety.

But even more importantly, Soldiers who employ unmarked taxis are potentially putting themselves in arm's reach of harm. Criminals could use the cover of the unmarked taxi services to pick up potential victims, Huller said.

The solution is simple - use only marked taxis and use the buddy system, Huller said. If you are downtown and need to get back to post, ride with a buddy and ensure the taxi you take is marked. Take the taxi service phone number with you when you set out or have someone at the establishment call a legitimate cab for you.

Incidents must be reported to the Military Police immediately at 634-7233/7626 or from off post 0444-71-7233/7626 or by emailing USAGVicenza-PMODeskSgt@eur.army.mil.

If anyone asks a lot of questions about your unit, your mission, security on the installation or anything else that seems strange, report that to the Military Police immediately as well, Huller said. If there is a problem or unusual behavior, remember as much detail as possible - note details from head to foot for individuals and get the make, model, color, license and other information about vehicles.

USARAF Soldiers return from supporting operation

By Rich Bartell

U.S. Army Africa Public Affairs

Following more than two weeks afloat supporting Operation Odyssey-Dawn, U.S. Army Africa Soldiers were greeted by family members and their commander, Maj. Gen. David R. Hogg, March 31 in front of the USARAF Headquarters building.

In a short ceremony, Hogg thanked the assembled team for their work in support of the operation.

"Thank you for your efforts and your service," Hogg said. "You realize that you just made history - it's the first time that U.S. Army Africa has been deployed in support of a named operation," the commanding general said.

USARAF Soldiers had previously trained to work within a joint environment during an exercise called Judicious Response.

"That exercise helped everyone to understand how a joint task force works," Hogg said. "When U.S. Navy Africa picked up the mission and needed Army support, USARAF Soldiers responded and responded well," he said.

During the Operation Odyssey-Dawn mission, the team was aboard the USS Mount Whitney in the Mediterranean Sea.

Lt. Col. Bo Stuart from USARAF Civil Military Operations section served as the USARAF liaison officer and team leader during the mission.

According to Stuart, 26 Soldiers from USARAF took part in the mission working in areas spanning from operations and administration to logistics and supply. Representatives from the Judge Advocate General's Corps were also part of the team and continue to play an ongoing role.

Stuart praised the work of the team.

"Everyone did a great job and the plans and operations section really rose to the occasion," Stuart said.

USARAF operations planners played an important role during the mission and the briefings they provided were often translated into action.

"We briefed one day and it was on the television the next day. And that was an effort led primarily by USARAF planners," said Stuart.

Stuart mirrored Hogg's statement concerning training as a key for the success of the mission saying they had some exercises prior to this mission that replicated a joint task force. For the team, it was business as usual, and execution was just like they had practiced.

Families and friends welcome home U.S. Army Africa Soldiers upon their return March 31 to the command's headquarters in Vicenza, after a shipboard deployment on the USS Mount Whitney in support of Operation Odyssey Dawn.

For Stuart and other team members, working with the U. S. Navy was a new experience.

"It was interesting learning how the Navy does things," Stuart said. "The task force was made up of predominantly Navy personnel so we had to adjust to their terms and acronyms rapidly, but after the first few days we picked up on the lingo and everyone found their niche," he said.

For Infantryman Sgt. 1st Class Joseph M. Kaminski, the mission was his first experience working on a U.S. Navy vessel. On the ship, Kaminski was the non-commissioned officer in charge of the Joint Operations Center.

"Being out at sea and observing the Navy at work was a good learning experience," Kaminski said. "Working with the Navy and the other services was a highlight of the mission. We worked through some challenges and completing the mission was great," Kaminski said.

VHS students take floor at 'Model U.S. Senate'

By Sasha Sibilla

Outlook intern

For the first time in nearly a decade, Vicenza High School sent a delegation of students to the Department of Defense Dependant Schools Europe Model U.S. Senate Conference in Frankfurt, Germany, held March 29-April 1.

Representing senators from the states of Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, New Mexico and Wisconsin, five seniors from the Advanced Placement Government class wrote, revised and debated several bills. The annual conference included students from all over Europe who represented senators from both parties and all fifty states.

More than 80 DODEA students participated in the Europe-wide event to represent the current 112th Senatorial Session and senior leadership positions. Student senators worked in their committee groups and were required to present and defend two bills on pertinent issues affecting the U.S. today.

"The debating at M.U.S.S. was definitely my favorite part," said Vicenza participant Sarah Bonney. "It was a great opportunity to improve my impromptu speaking but more importantly to open myself up to other points of view."

After the bills were discussed, amended and voted on in committee, they were deliberated by the senate as a whole. Four of the bills originally submitted by the VHS senators were passed onto the senate floor and two made it onto the final agenda.

"This experience has enlightened my Advanced Placement Government students," said Vicenza M.U.S.S. sponsor Theresa Martin. "At this conference they were given insight on what day-to-day operations are like in the U.S. Senate and how political ideologies and beliefs can be challenged."

As the participants simulated the actual process of U.S. law making, the conference also included caucuses, bipartisan interaction, presidential ceremonies and bill signings at the Oval Office. Students interested in participating in next year's event, should contact Theresa Martin.

from aboard a ship, and it has proven to truly be an opportunity that I shall cherish," Terrell said. "I know that I'm a much better human resources manager after serving in such a challenging billet."

Terrell, who served as the JTF's resident expert on personnel tracking, U.S. Army finance and personnel procedures, and strength management, says being deployed aboard a ship was an eye-opening experience that showed him how the U.S. Navy operates.

At the conclusion of Operation Odyssey Dawn, U.S. forces fulfilled a supporting role in the NATO-led Operation Unified Protector, charged with the mission "to reduce the flow of arms, related material and mercenaries to Libya, as called for in UN Security Council Resolution 1973."

"I really got a chance to see how a large JTF works in a multinational environment," said Stuart. "It was so interesting to work so close to national policy-level decisions. It was a great experience and I am really glad I got to be part of it."

Stuart says being able to watch the news and see how the efforts of the JTF helped improve the lives of others was an awe-inspiring experience.

"A few short days ago, the Libyan people were being systematically attacked by their own government," Stuart said. "The work of the JTF has alleviated the suffering of the average Libyan citizen, which is certainly a worthy goal."

TREK: Op. Market Garden site revisited by leaders

The element of surprise, communication, weather, supply train issues and leadership styles all play a part in whether a major battle is successful, or not, according to the historians.

While the rules of engagement and attitudes about collateral damage may have changed, much of history does repeat itself, so officers of the 173rd ABCT saw iconic drop zones and exchanged thoughts about pivotal battles that took place in the Netherlands during World War II.

Pointing out some issues, Chief Warrant Officer 3 Andrew Murphy said the lessons of Operation Market Garden solidify the need for both the comprehensive Military Decision Making Process, as well as systematic Troop Leading Procedures.

“With only seven days to plan a major airborne operation, several specified, implied and essential tasks went unanswered, or were never addressed,” said Murphy.

“We’ve learned a great deal from the lessons of our Airborne brethren and have implemented the majority of these lessons within the framework of our brigade staff, including Fragmentary Orders (that adjust movements, timelines and shortfalls), updated intelligence gaps being filled, and more.”

“A well synchronized staff works tirelessly to ensure that a well-planned mission leaves the headquarters element with as much clarity as possible, to ensure the success of any given operation. Reciprocating communication and involving all enablers within the joint planning process facilitates a successful operation. Hindsight being 20/20, it’s easy to punch holes through an operation that wasn’t 100 percent successful, but to define success is far more involved,” Murphy said.

“Although there were objectives that weren’t secured, there still was a population that was liberated at the end of the day. If they only knew then, what we know now,” Murphy said.

The operation saw American, British and Dutch forces – both military and civilian-joined forces to break the German forces occupation of Western Europe.

There were many aspects about the British and Dutch that affected the operation. Officers of the 173rd ABCT learned how important it is for a unit to coordinate and communicate with partnered forces.

According to the historians, there were many facets to this war that went beyond the fierce fighting, destruction and drop zones that saw thousands of Soldiers and civilians lose their lives, as they fought to return liberty and freedom to the people of the Netherlands.

Each time the staff dismounted their buses, a historian explained the important dynamics of the operation, painting pictures for the men of the 173rd

ABCT on what the World War II-era troopers saw, felt and did. The historians’ knowledge about Operation Market Garden gave the brigade’s leaders a chance to contemplate the good and bad decisions that were made, they said.

Lear said, “The staff ride was an excellent training event for all of the brigade’s participants, as it allowed individuals in three garrisons, serving in two countries to enjoy some quality time together in an unfamiliar environment. Coming together and learning from very knowledgeable historians lets the brigade leadership share in an experience that will stay with us throughout our military careers.”

The O'Neal family joined 23 other Camp Darby community members to toe the line at the April Fools' 5 kilometer Fun Run that took place Saturday.

Children riding bikes, in strollers, hitching rides on their parents' back joined the fun run.

"Our oldest son was doing well on his bike until mile two when he decided he wanted to ride in the stroller," said Staff Sgt. Preston O'Neal, as a Camp Darby military police patrol rode up with the bike in the back of the patrol vehicle.

Shearton Cruz was riding her bike while her mom jogged until the pedal broke and they too both finished on foot.

"This is the first time the family ever did a fun run together," said Michelle O'Neal. "The hardest part was keeping the kids motivated to finish. During the last mile we told them there were Girl Scout cookies and oranges at the finish line."

The top three male finishers were: in 18:42, Chief Warrant Officer Robert Carter, 3/405th Army Field Support Battalion; 19:39, Tech. Sgt. Johnny Escobar, 731st Munitions Squadron; and 23:21, Maj. Paul Fritts, Camp Darby chaplain.

The top three female finishers were: in 24:05, Karen Bigelman, USAG Livorno; 24:20, Gabriel Petelini, Camp Darby Commissary; and 24:58, Sharon Carter,

Medal of Honor recipients join 350-mile bike ride

III Corps & Fort Hood Public Affairs

FORT HOOD, Texas — With the assistance of three Medal of Honor recipients, this year's Texas Challenge, one in the Ride 2 Recovery series, helped wounded warriors heal from the wounds of wars suffered in Vietnam, Desert Storm, Iraq and Afghanistan.

The approximately 230 riders passed through Fort Hood, Texas, March 31, en route to Arlington, Texas, for a Major League Baseball game. They began their six-day, 350-mile journey March 28, at the Center for the Intrepid in San Antonio.

After a crowd of several hundred people had gathered near the flagpole outside the III Corps Headquarters, Lt. Gen. Bob Cone, III Corps and Fort Hood commanding general, praised the wounded warriors.

"To see this is awe-inspiring. Folks, the Ride 2 Recovery is an amazing group," Cone said. "It represents what is best about our country, about the military and most important, the human spirit. Thanks for inspiring my Soldiers to do their best in every endeavor."

Three Medal of Honor recipients participated in the Texas Challenge, including Staff Sgt. Sal Giunta, the first living recipient of the nation's highest military award since Vietnam. Cone also acknowledged "Fort Hood's local hero," Staff Sgt. Patrick Zeigler.

Zeigler, who was severely wounded in the Nov. 5, 2009, shootings on Fort Hood, sat near the front of the column of riders, ready to pedal his way on a recumbent-trike from the flagpole to the front gate.

It was Zeigler's first ride since undergoing brain surgery March 4, after falling while on vacation with his wife, Jessica, in Reno, Nev.

After surviving another life-threatening experience, Zeigler said, "It feels great to be here with the whole group, especially everybody in the Texas Challenge. I wish I could have done the whole thing with them, but I'm not strong enough yet."

Of his determination to ride a short distance, Zeigler said, "Most of my strength comes from the love of my wife. She is my rock, and that's the reason I keep going."

The Ride 2 Recovery event helps to raise funds and awareness in support of rehabilitation of wounded warriors. Before arriving at Fort Hood, the riders completed a journey from Austin, with an overnight stay in Killeen, Texas, before attending Fort Hood's rally.

At Killeen, Mike Thornton, a Vietnam vet who was awarded the Medal of Honor in 1972, said, "Wounded warriors are not asking for special treatment because they're disabled. They're just asking to, 'let me be part of this great nation again'."

Another Vietnam veteran in attendance was Johnnie Alexander, who lost both legs in 1969 when he was hit by an incoming mortar round. Alexander said he is happy that his son, Sgt. Phillip Alexander, who is home after serving two tours in Iraq as a medic, is receiving better treatment than he did when he came home from war.

Dick Brock, 66, of Garden Grove, Calif., nicknamed "Sea Bass" by other riders, is welcomed by troops from Fort Hood, Texas, as riders participating in the Texas Challenge Ride 2 Recovery arrive for an overnight rest March 30, in Killeen, Texas.

"So it's (public support) helping to heal wounds to bring the nation together, and it's helping to bring the different eras of warriors from Vietnam to Desert Storm and Iraq and Afghanistan together as a whole unit. We're a nation of people who, if we don't stand together and fight together, we're nothing," he said.

The Texas Challenge was the elder Alexander's first Ride 2 Recovery event.

"For me, it lets me know I can face anything I want," he said. In addition to the special trike, Alexander runs a 12.5-second 100-meter dash with help from two flexible, computerized legs.

Of the trike and his legs, he added, "It's great technology. Anybody can do anything they want to do if they have the will and desire to do it. With the technology, it's up to you."

Adaptive technology also has helped Navy Master at Arms 3rd Class Nathan DeWalt. The military policeman was paralyzed from the mid-chest down after a taxi cab driver pulled in front of his motorcycle.

Although has relied upon a wheelchair to get around in the 2.5 years since the accident, DeWalt said "A wheelchair is just an obstacle you have to climb over. It's not something in my opinion that really changes the way you live."

Despite his injuries, he added, of the people he has met during the four Ride 2 Recovery rides in which he has participated, he was most impressed by Delvin McMillan, a quadruple amputee he rode with last year.

"It's just phenomenal to see people with no arms and no legs but prosthetics and be able to jump on a bike and complete the route," he emphasized. "For me, the biggest thing is coming here and being an inspiration for others."
