BARKSDALE AIR FORCE BASE,

La. -- Air Force Global Strike Command's new chief master sergeants and chief selects learned leadership lessons from senior NCOs of the past during the AFGSC Chief orientation Jan. 23-27 at Barksdale Air Force Base, La.

During the course, Lt. Gen. Jim Kowalski, AFGSC commander, explained what command expects from each of them. The group also went to Vicksburg, Miss., for a tour of the battlefield and to learn how Civil War Senior NCOs led their troops.

Whiteman announces 2012 WOW Air Show and Open House dates

509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs Office

The 2012 Wings Over Whiteman Air Show and Open House is scheduled May 19 and 20. This free, family oriented event is expected to draw spectators from all over the region.

"It's my pleasure to invite the public to attend the 2012 Wings Over Whiteman Air Show and Open House," said Brig. Gen. Scott Vander Hamm, 509th Bomb Wing commander. "This opportunity allows community members and those coming from outside the area to get an up close look at the personnel and capabilities that help our Airmen carry out missions across the globe. This year's headliner, the U.S. Army Golden Knights, is set to deliver another spectacular performance as seen in years past.

We hope to see many new faces, as well as our veterans as this event is dedicated to the local community and the support and partnerships that enable each of us to serve to the best of our abilities on a daily basis," Vander Hamm said.

While still in the planning stages, the Wings Over Whiteman schedule also feature dozens of static displays, exhibition aircraft, vintage and modern war birds and more. As plans progress, additional aerial acts are scheduled

Along with the aerial demonstrations and static displays, all aircraft that call Whiteman AFB home, to include the B-2 Spirit, T-38 Talon, A-10 Thunderbolt II and AH-64 D Apache helicopter will be available for viewing.

Spectators will also enjoy entertainment throughout the event by an Air Force Band.

Admission and parking are free and times will be announced at a later date.

More information will be announced and can be found by searching Wings Over Whiteman via Facebook, www.wingsoverwhiteman. com or by calling 660-687-6439.

Five lessons for the Grasshopper and the Vet

By Nathan Simmons

75th Air Base Wing Public Affairs

American author Kenneth Blanchard said "The key to successful leadership is influence, not authority."

HILLAIR FORCE BASE, Utah -- Many of the leadership pieces I read seem drab, overdone and generally uninteresting. I'm no expert on the topic, but I've spent 18 months working in Hill's public affairs office, and been lucky enough to train under one of the best leaders I've ever met.

Being the young buck in my office has allowed me to learn from my mentors and occasionally lead the way. Leaders can be young or old, seasoned or inexperienced, but the following principles can help the young grasshopper just as they can the sensei. I don't care if you're turning wrenches or sitting behind a desk, whether you're at the top of the chain of command or you're the grunt, these lessons apply to you.

1. Don't take things for granted.

Some of the most uncomplicated, unchallenging tasks are the ones I've stumbled upon. I've sent a news release to the media with the "draft" watermark hovering in 60 point font in the background; something I smacked myself for later when I was asked about it by a well-renowned reporter. Your goal should be to give your best effort on everything you do.

2. Trust your people.

Give your people a strategic vision and don't hold the reigns so tightly. In some cases there are many ways to get a job done well, so take the monkey off your back and let your staff work for you. As Steven Covey wrote, managers spend much more time handling subordinates' problems than they faintly realize. As I cannot go into meticulous detail on this important point, I strongly recommend his piece in the Harvard Business Review, "Management Time: Who's got the Monkey?"

Come to your leadership with solutions.

When presenting a problem to your boss, come to the table with some possible solutions. Determining the best way forward can be talked through only after you've thought out potential resolutions. Getting your boss's perspective and direction is one thing; hoping your boss can come up with the answer to your problem is another. Coming to your leadership with recommendations not only puts you a step ahead in working through the predicament, it puts you on another level with your boss.

4. Communication is more important than you realize.

Communication is critical in a working relationship. Most who aren't meeting expectations aren't communicating enough with their leadership. If you have no idea what your boss's priorities are, how are you to know what your priorities should be? Thinking ahead and helping solve your boss's problems from your level goes a long way in your relationship with them. Communicating with your leadership and remaining aware of what challenges they are facing allows you to do this.

5. Never think you have it all figured out.

There is a reason this is the final lesson -it's the most important. Regardless if you are a commander, supervisor, director, or industry expert, always remember there is more to learn. Be humble. You have to trust there are people who can teach you things you don't know, and sometimes show you a better way to do things. Realize we are all in this together and no one person has all the answers.

Whether you're a leader or not is up to you. The tag on your shirt or the title behind your name has no bearing on your ability to lead. If you're going to be a leader, be a good one. If you choose to follow, do that well also. Good leaders have been good followers.

If you're the younger, more inexperienced person in your shop like I am, realize that you have the capability to lead. Find a clear-cut leader in your organization and allow them to mentor you. Find someone who will take you under their wing and teach you, someone who will occasionally allow you to fail, which in turn will enable you to succeed. Someday you may be in the boss's chair, but that won't make you a leader.

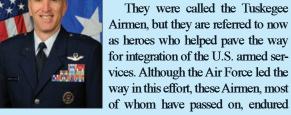

Commander's Corner

Team Whiteman

Last Saturday we had a rare opportunity to meet two of the original Tuskegee Airmen, Charles Ellington and James Shipley, who flew approximately 70 years ago during World War II when the U.S. military was racially segregated.

Although most of us do not remember this era in the military, it remains an important piece of our history that taught us lessons we should never forget. During this time, most black soldiers and sailors were restricted to labor battalions and other support positions. The U.S. Army Air Forces—as we were called back then—proved that given equal opportu-

unjustified hardships. It has been said they fought two wars, one against the Germans and the other against the U.S. Army Air Forces and society.

In today's military, we haven't lived the same experiences of Charles and James. In fact, some of the hardships they and their comrades endured seem foreign to us who serve in today's military. We owe it to these two heroes, and the rest of the Tuskegee Airmen to remember their challenges, but more importantly, their resiliency and commitment.

February is Black History Month, a time Americans reflect on our country's history and appreciate the steps made by our predecessors to bring us where we are today. I encourage each of you to remember our past and not forget these Airmen who helped shape today's Air Force and changed it forever.

Resiliency takes a village

By Col. Rory Welch

45th Space Wing vice commander

PATRICK AFB, Fla. -- It happens to everyone. Life gets complicated, works gets busy and the end result is stress; lots of stress.

The problem is that all too often people don't know where to turn when they get stressed, and there is a stigma that asking for help makes you less promotable, less reliable or marks you as "that guy."

"None of us are absolutely and perfectly equipped to handle the unique, ever-evolving rigors of military service; and, occasionally, each of us may require, to varying degrees, some form of assistance," said Chief of Staff of the Air Force Gen. Norton A. Schwartz, in his speech at the Caring for People Forum.

The fact of the matter is we all cope with circumstances that affect us in different ways, and we all might have to ask for help in dealing with personal issues from time to time. We must be open to the idea of getting help when we feel that we need it, and encourage fellow Airmen or family members to do the same when they experience difficulties.

There have been many Air Force lives lost to suicide with no explanation other than they didn't get the help they needed. And while suicide prevention is a complex process, one Airman going without assistance is one too many.

Gen. Norton A. Schwartz, Chief of Staff of the Air Force

Anyone can be that person you reach out to: a counselor, a running partner, a friend from your book club or even a religious advisor. There is no perfect solution for everyone, but refusing to reach out helps no one.

Being resilient does not mean a person avoids emotional pain and suffering when faced with a crisis. Instead, it means that he or she has a reliable support base to lean on, and is then able to recover and perhaps grow even stronger from the difficult experience.

It cannot be stressed enough that true resiliency takes a village. All Airmen - Officer, Enlisted and Civilian - are important parts of the team, and we need to be there for one another.

For more information on ways to help you be more resilient, please contact either your supervisor or the Airman and Family Readiness Center at 660-687-7132.

Spirit Café position open

The Whiteman AFB Chapel is looking to fill the Spirit Café director position. They are accepting bids through Feb. 12. Opening bids are scheduled to take place Feb. 13 and the contract will be awarded based on the best value to the government. The Statement of Work detailing the position can be picked up at the Whiteman AFB Chapel. If interested in the position, contact Chaplain (Capt.) Jeffery Scott at 660-687-3652.

Semi-annual stockpile inventory

The 509th Munitions Squadron is conducting a semi-annual stockpile inventory during the week of March 5–9. Those who need any munitions issued or have any that need to be turned in, should do so either the week prior or after the inventory. During this week 509th MUNS will only process emergency requests, submitted in writing, and approved by the group commander or equivalent. Questions or concerns can be directed to Tech. Sgt. Jason Gebbia at 660-687-8251.

Flu vaccine available for dependents

The 509th Medical Operations Squadron has recently seen an increased amount of dependents with the flu virus. The 509th MDOS is encouraging dependents to receive the vaccine this flu season. The immunizations clinic has sufficient flu vaccines for patients six months and older, including pregnant women. High risk individuals or those suffering from an illness that may cause their immune system to weaken are prone to severe complications from the flu should get their flu vaccine immediately, if they have not already done so. Dependents have the option to obtain their flu vaccine through other pharmacies at a reimbursable rate. For more information, contact Tech. Sgt. Rennard Greene, at 660-687-4304.

Whiteman Tax Center

The Whiteman Air Force Base Tax Center is open for business in building 509, suite 215. Tax assistance is available to active duty, guard, reservists on Title 10 orders, dependents and retirees, free of charge with a valid military ID. Clients can call 660-687-2896 to schedule an appointment. Taxpayers are asked not to contact base legal.

Found property

Keys, wallets, bicycles, jewelry, cellular telephones and other items have been turned in as found property to Security Forces Investigations. To inquire about lost property, go to building 711, room 305, or call 660-687-5342. Vehicles have been identified as suspected abandoned and will be towed at the owner's expense. WARRENSBURG, Mo. -- James Shipley, 88, of Tipton, Mo., Tuskegee Airmen crew chief with the 332nd Fighter Group, reminisces about old times throughout his military career as a Tuskegee Airmen before the showing of "Red Tails" at Carmike Cinemas Feb. 4. Two original members of the Tuskegee Military Experiment were invited to celebrate Black History Month with Team Whiteman and the community. The Tuskegee Airmen were the first black military Airmen in the United States. Nearly 14,600 individuals were part of various Tuskegee Airmen organizations in World War II, including pilots and ground personnel.

Tuskegee Airmen on the runway once again

By Staff Sgt. Alexandra M. Boutte 509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

WARRENSBURG, Mo. -- More than 200 Team Whiteman and community members honored two original members of the Tuskegee Airmen during a reception at Carmike Cinemas Feb.4.

The Warrensburg Chamber of Commerce hosted a reception prior to the screening of the movie "Red Tails". The event honored the Heart of America Tuskegee Airmen Group in conjunction with the celebration of Black History Month.

"The reason you are here is to celebrate a group of men who were not treated as equals but succeeded despite that," said Brig. Gen. Scott Vander Hamm, 509th Bomb Wing commander.

Among those who prevailed were James Shipley, 88, of Tipton, Mo., a crew chief with the 332nd Fighter Group who served in Europe, and Charles Ellington, 88, of Olathe, Kan., a radio operator with the 332nd, who served in the states during World War II. The Tuskegee Airmen signed autographs, shared stories and posed for dozens of photographs with local residents, Whiteman Airmen and their families.

During WWII, African-Americans in many states and the military were still subjected to the Jim Crow Laws, which defined segregation of public places, transportation, restrooms, restaurants and drinking fountains. The Tuskegee Airmen were the first black military Airmen in the United States to volunteer to serve their country during this time.

An experiment in the U.S. Army Air Force showed that when given adequate training, blacks could fly and support combat units as well as anyone. The Tuskegee Airmen served with distinction in combat and directly contributed to the integration of the armed services.

White bomber pilots who came to Italy with typical segregationist views flew along-side the Red Tails and had their ideas transformed by the black pilots because of their superior flying skills. Many of these bomber crews often requested the Red Tails for escort.

In 1948 President Harry S. Truman ended segregation in the military with the signing of Executive Order 9981. Although Truman ended segregation in the military, blacks faced prejudice for many years thereafter.

It wasn't until March 2007, more than 300 Tuskegee Airmen (or their widows) received a Congressional Gold Medal at a ceremony to honor their heroic efforts. The decoration is the highest civilian award in the U.S. and is awarded to individuals who perform an outstanding deed or act of service to the security, prosperity and national interest of the U.S.

"I appreciate all the people who came up and shook my hand," Shipley said. "It lifts my spirits and made me feel real good. I didn't come in the military thinking I was going to change anything, but it feels good knowing I did."

Although neither Shipley or Ellington didn't change anything alone, they did with the help of nearly 14,600 individuals who helped change a nation and who helped change how brethren in arms see each other.

2011 Annual Awards winners announced

Bv Heidi Hunt

509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

The 509th Bomb Wing honored the 2011 Annual Award winners during a ceremony at Mission's End Feb. 3. The winners are:

Airman 1st Class Trevor Barthel, 509th Operations Group intelligence analyst, enlisted in the Air Force and graduated from basic military training 2009.

Barthel spent the first two years of his assignment here and has been a leader among his peers since his arrival. Currently, Barthel is the lead intelligence analyst for the newly created 509th Mission Training Center, where he creates and conducts training scenarios for 109 pilots. He is also the subject matter expert for the 509th BW on all order of battle issues where he advises wing leadership on all issues regarding order of battle, driving key mission planning decisions to increase the survivability of the B-2 platform. In doing so, he prepares critical reports for Eighth Air Force, Air Force Global Strike Command and U.S. Strategic Command. During Operation Odyssey Dawn, Barthel played a critical role in the mission planning process ensuring threats were tracked and properly accounted for. He also ensured aircraft survivability and mission success.

Senior Noncommissioned Officer

members and training 23 pilots.

Master Sgt. Keith Lockard, 509th Civil Engineer Squadron heavy repair section superintendent, leads 63 personnel in five shops where he is responsible for the maintenance of 942 base facilities, manages AFGSCs only in-house grounds maintenance crews and oversees a 62-member airfield snow and ice removal team.

Lockard enlisted in the Air Force in 1993 and attended technical training at Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas, as a pavements and construction equipment operator. His assignments include Whiteman AFB, Mo.: Grand Forks AFB. N.D.: Tinker Air Force Base, Okla.; Malmstrom Air Force Base, Mont.; Kunsan AB, Republic of Korea; Elmendorf Air Force Base, Ala.; and Osan Air Base, Republic of Korea. Lockard has also been deployed seven times in support of Operations Northern Watch, Southern Watch, Enduring Freedom, Iraqi Freedom and New Dawn.

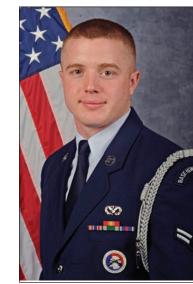

Civilian Associate

Regina K. Craig, 509th Medical Operations Squadron dental technician, is a multifaceted dental assistant whose expertise is used throughout the clinic.

Craig is a personnel reliability program monitor and reviews patient records for potentially disqualifying information, makes personnel reliability program notifications, performs monthly audits and ensures this zero tolerance program is error free. Additionally, her duties include dental assisting, training new assistants, working in the reception area, scheduling offbase referrals and any other areas where she is needed. VICKSBURG, Miss. - Bruce Stewart, Air Force Global Strike Command command historian, explains a map to chief master sergeants and chief selects in Vicksburg, Miss.,

U.S. Air Force photos/Airman 1st Class Benjamin Gonsier

VICKSBURG, Miss. - Bruce Stewart, Air Force Global Strike Command command historian, speaks with a group of chief master sergeants and chief selects about the Civil War era in Vicksburg, Miss., Jan. 26. Stewart dressed up as a Civil War era Union first sergeant to help make the tour of Vicksburg feel more authentic.

Bruce Stewart, former Navy aviation electronics technician and Barksdale historian, served as a tour guide and portrayed a first sergeant named Orrin Southwell from Company H Ill. volunteer infantry. He explained to the participants his role in the Civil War and how it relates to the military

"You guys are like the sergeant majors," Stewart said. "They had to find ways to convince their men that this is the best plan for Senior NCOs in the Civil War led by example; while in battle they would be the first to charge ahead onto the battlefield as their men followed closely behind, Stewart said. He went on to explain how senior NCOs of the present need to have the same motivational skills as they did in order to motivate their Airmen.

During the tour, he brought up actual Civil War battles and explained what the senior NCOs did to come out on top.

According to Stewart, senior NCOs promised promotions to the young Soldiers willing to follow their orders as directed. While that guarantee can't be used anymore, one participant brought up giving their Airmen some rest and relaxation after a job well done.

"The decisions leaders make are timeless," said Chief Master Sgt. David Maniccia, AFGSC. "What applied in the Civil War still applies now."

While the times may be different, not much has changed.

"Young Airmen still need to be inspired and led," said Chief Master Sgt. Brian Hornback, AFGSC command chief.

"This orientation is not an event to celebrate their achievement of making chief master sergeant," said Hornback. "This orientation is designed to prepare them to become strategic leaders and how to apply that knowledge at the tactical and operational levels they will be initially be leading in. We added the twist of including some historical lesson of leadership from the battle of Vickburg. The lessons are timeless as an NCOs role of inspiring their troops to achieve the mission while understanding the bigger picture hasn't changed much since the Civil War.'

Becoming chief is a milestone only one percent of all enlisted personnel reach, making it one of the hardest ranks to make in all of the military. The responsibilities they overtake determine how effectively their Airmen accomplish the missions of the Air

In the past, wing commanders determined the how, what, when, where and why's of registering weapons on base with one exception. All dormitory and temporary lodging facility residents were required to register their firearms and store them in the 509th Security Forces Squadron armory or

Currently, the Air Force is taking a more direct stance in this issue and is requiring all bases to implement registration procedures for residents that also reside in military family housing, commonly referred to as base

During this month, the 509th Bomb Wing public affairs team and the 509th SFS resource protection office will send out information to inform the base populace on how this affects Whiteman AFB.

In order to ensure the process operates smoothly, Whiteman AFB will take a series of steps. The first step will inform the base populace that registration of firearms is required. The second step is to train personnel appointed as Firearm Registration Monitors on their responsibilities. Training times will be scheduled for those appointed as FRMs. The third will initiate the start of the registration process which begins March 1, 2012 and the goal is to complete the registration process within 90 days.

More information will be announced and can be found in the Whiteman Warrior, base bulletin board and whiteman.af.mil. Those who have been appointed as a FRM should contact Jerry Osban at 660-687-4482 to schedule training.

Youth Center makes learning a sport fun for children

Children from ages seven to nine have been participating in basketball at the youth center since early December. This year's season ends today.

Throughout the two month season, the children were introduced to the fundamentals of basketball, such as dribbling, passing, shooting, zone and man-to-man defense, offensive plays and basic basketball terminol-

Score isn't kept during the games because the program is about the children having fun and learning the game of basketball.

"This is a good opportunity for children to get out and be active, have fun, learn the game without the fear or intimidation of competition," said Angela Anderson, 509th Force Support youth center sports director.

Not only did the children learn how to play basketball, they also learned life skills such as team building, interacting with others and

The basketball season was open to children with military parents. Volunteers consisted of military members and spouses.

Staff Sgt. Arnulfo Carrillo, 509th Logistics Readiness Squadron youth center basketball coach, said his children motivated him to

"It allowed me to be active with my children and their friends," said Carrillo. "I really enjoy helping the youth learn how to play and hopefully they keep playing.'

To help guide the players, coaches need one personal quality, patience, according to Carrillo.

"Our goal was to bring camaraderie and teamwork to the children and teach them the basic fundamentals of the game," Carrillo

This year's basketball season was enjoyable for the children and was an opportunity for parents to support and cheer for their children while they learned the basics of basketball, according to Carrillo.

'Sports help parents and children get involved," said 1st Lt. Nathaniel Steward, 509th Logistics Readiness Squadron youth center basketball coach. "The children enjoyed seeing their parents here. It's nice to see the children with pride on their face, after they made a shot, running down the court while looking at their parents.'

In addition to basketball, the youth center offers different sports for the children to participate in throughout the year.

"It is important to keep children involved in the program so it can continue to stay strong," Carrillo said. "I would really like for parents to keep bringing their children to the youth center and keep them involved in these activities. It's a great program."
