Team Whiteman pilots prepare for AFGSC bomber operations challenge

Maj. Joseph Knothe and Capt. Robert Schoeneberg, both B-2 Spirit pilots from the 509th Operations Support Squadron, walk to their assigned aircraft to participate in the bomber operations portion of the Global Strike Challenge 2012 June 26. Global Strike Challenge is the world's premier bomber, Intercontinental Ballistic Missile and security forces competition with units from Air Force Global Strike Command, Air Combat Command, Air Force Reserve Command and the Air National Guard.

One of the Air Force Global Strike Command's core values is 'pride in our nuclear heritage and mission.' One of the ways the command shows that pride is by hosting an annual Global Strike Challenge to demonstrate and showcase mission capabilities.

For Global Strike Challenge 2012, the third annual GSC, members from Team Whiteman participated in the bomber operations portion of the challenge Monday through today at the Smoky Hill Air National Guard Range in Salina, Kan.

"The intent of the bomber operations challenge is to give all Air Force bomber squadrons the opportunity to demonstrate how good we are at getting bombs on target, how proficient we are at making sure they are getting there exactly on time and how well we can work through a complicated scenario," said Capt. Jon Roe, 393rd Bomb Squadron B-2 instructor pilot.

The bomber operations portion of the global strike challenge has three main components in which pilots can earn points. The first component is the bomb score, in which pilots are judged on how close bombs are to the targets. The second component is timing control, where pilots can be penalized for every second, early or late, the bomb hits the target. The third component being judged is a real-world combat bombing scenario.

"We will be given rules of engagement and special instructions to take into account and then when we're up in the air, they're going to give us a dynamic situation," Roe said. "We're going

BARKSDALE AIR FORCE BASE, La. -- Teams from across Air Force Global Strike Command, as well as the Air National Guard, Air Force Reserve Command and Air Combat Command, began competing in the third-annual Global Strike Challenge this month.

Global Strike Challenge is the world's premier bomber, Intercontinental Ballistic Missile and security forces competition with units from

Air Force Global Strike Command, Air Combat Command, Air Force Reserve Command and the Air National Guard. Through competition and teamwork, the event looks to foster esprit de corps, recognize outstanding AFGSC personnel and teams and improve combat capabilities.

Operations, maintenance and security forces teams from bomber and missile wings will compete to be named best-of-the-best. All units supporting the AFGSC mission have been invited to compete through November, showcasing their expertise, skill and capabilities.

"This competition is designed to showcase the excellence and expertise of our Airmen," said Lt. Col. Sarah Hall, Chief, Air Force Exercises Branch, Air Force Global Strike Command. "Global Strike Challenge also helps develop elite, highly-disciplined Airmen and builds esprit de corps through friendly competition."

More than 450 Airmen will take part in Global Strike Challenge competitions at various locations throughout the country, culminating in a symposium and score posting event at Barksdale Nov. 5-7.

"This is our third year for this event, and it just keeps getting better and better," said Lt. Col. Mike Petrosch, Global Strike Challenge command lead. "The competition allows us to recognize the cream-

They really are 'out to get you'

By Lt. Col. Michael Onines
386th Expeditionary Support Squadron

SOUTHWEST ASIA (AFNS) -- When I was first assigned a position to lead people in the Air Force, I was expected to be, among other things, a safety cheerleader, encouraging my team to avoid mishaps and work safely. This was a bit new to me and I found many safety lectures in the past to be dull and boring, so at some point I adopted a safety motto to help break the ice and introduce topics of discussion. It wasn't as good as Calvin's "Be careful, or be roadkill" with patented 3-D gore-o-rama, but whenever I told the team "don't do stupid stuff" it garnered a chuckle and we could segue into the topic-du-jour, such as DUIs, which I would then classify as doing stupid stuff.

For almost every topic I briefed, be it speeding, riding without a helmet or any of a myriad of things you read in safety reports I could classify it as doing stupid stuff and warn the team to avoid doing it. Essentially, my motto described a safety philosophy where if you didn't go looking to get hurt by disobeying and ignoring the rules, you would be just fine.

My perspective on safety changed dramatically a few weeks after I returned from a humanitarian mission to Honduras. During my time there we worked hard to build the foundations of a masonry schoolhouse for a small village. Each day we watched traffic mayhem as donkey carts, tractor-trailers and a variety of run-down cars jockeyed for position on the highway crossing between our camp and our construction project. For the most part watching the traffic game was amusing, and we managed to avoid any close encounters.

I rotated back to home-station and two weeks later a close friend of mine in the squadron left to lead her phase of the construction project. One week after her departure I sat beside her husband while the benefits officer explained what payments he and his children could expect. Captain Palmer was killed on the roads of Honduras in a head-on collision when an oncoming tractor-trailer crossed a double-yellow line to pass on a blind curve. After this, safety briefings became more somber, and my catch phrase wasn't used any more.

It took a year or so before I began briefings with a new motto: "They really are out to get you!" Inanimate objects like barriers, bollards and parked vehicles are hunting your fenders and bumpers. The driving conditions out on the roads are every bit as bad as those in Honduras.

Distracted and aggressive drivers on the roads aren't watching out for anyone else. If you want to be safe you have to treat everyone on the road as a wreck waiting to happen. Obviously there aren't any guarantees, and serious accidents can still happen despite our best efforts, but staying aware of what is going on around you and anticipating what could happen are the best we can do to be safe. Good luck out there, and remember, "they really are out to get you!"

Education apparently never ends

By Chief Master Sgt. Matt Proietti
512th Airlift Wing

DOVER AIR FORCE BASE, Del. -- One reason I joined the military instead of heading to college after high school was to take a break from all of that learning.

It's been 28 years and I'm still waiting. I just completed National Defense University's Senior Enlisted Joint Professional Military Education Course, which I had sidestepped for a few years despite it being a priority for the command chief master sergeant of the Air Force Reserve Command.

I'm confused as to why the younger me thought he could sign on with the Air Force and avoid education, seeing as anyone's enlisted career starts with completing the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery to measure how much we already know and in which fields we may be more likely to succeed.

After this, of course, we attend Basic Military Training, followed by technical school in a work specialty and then we spend a year or so completing a Career Development Course and on-the-job instruction. Along with these come Airman Leadership School, more upgrade training, the Non Commissioned Officer Academy and Senior NCO Academy. This doesn't even include the continuing training we need to stay deployable or any civilian courses we take on our own.

My advice, then, for anyone hoping to avoid education would be to actually steer clear of the military, as U.S. forces of the future won't be less reliant on it.

I served on developmental team and meritorious promotion boards in 2011. In both cases, our mission was to rank the top technical sergeants through chief master sergeants, nearly all of whom had done very good things during their time in uniform. Most had deployed, sometimes multiple times. What often separated them was their level of civilian education. When everyone is pretty sharp, it's up to us to set ourselves apart if we want to be noticed.

Though I'm a reservist, I have been on active duty for about half of the last five years, working nearly exclusively with fulltime GIs. I mentor Airmen of all ranks, including junior officers, and there is a growing frustration among many enlisted members because they feel that they don't have responsibilities that commensurate with their education.

My nickname should be Chief Reality, since that's what I give a dose of to everyone who complains to me about that. I can appreciate their dissatisfaction, even sympathize with them, but I have no answer other than they should apply for an officer's commission if they want more responsibilities. That, or they should start preparing for a post-Air Force career. Being angry with the system that we freely entered, though, is unproductive.

Our service doesn't require its NCOs to go to college, though it certainly encouraged it by creating the Community College of the Air Force, which celebrates its 40th anniversary this year. Our GI Bill education benefits are now transferrable to children or a spouse. That is remarkable.

Education level has been a dividing point between the officer corps and enlisted force since the earliest years of our nation's military services. It's not up to the Air Force to undergo a dramatic culture shift to accommodate us because we, too, see the value in college education. It's up to us to put ourselves in the best position to succeed within the constraints of the system.

However, there's a catch: NCOs lead primarily by the examples we set. Even if we don't value civilian education ourselves or feel that we can stop with a CCAF degree, being a good supervisor means we must advise our Airmen on what's best for them. We need to encourage them to get as much education as they can to give themselves a better shot at success in the future, whether or not it is in the military. The best way to demonstrate this is to be a continuing student ourselves. NCOs who have children are setting a good example for them at the same time.

For the first 12 years of my career, I was focused solely on the work, which led to a fairly quick rise to master sergeant. When I became a senior NCO, though, I had the least amount of formal education of my office. That realization is what finally pushed me to finish my CCAF degree. Completing it helped me be selected to attend a two-month Defense Department course at the University of Oklahoma. The nine credits I earned there contributed to me finishing a bachelor's degree at age 41.

Still, when I applied to the Air Force Reserve Command last fall for consideration to attend some senior-level leadership courses, I was surprised when I wasn't selected. I soon learned why. One of the two reasons cited by the panel was that I hadn't yet completed the Senior Enlisted Joint PME Course, the one I had avoided doing.

I got the message loud and clear: if I didn't do that class, it being a priority for the top officer in my command, why should a panel under him select me for any other courses? Being Chief Reality, I didn't shake my fist at the sky. I committed to doing it.

That board's decision to hold me to this standard was the right one. It also showed me that after 28 years in uniform I still have a lot to learn.

JOINT BASE PEARL HARBOR-HICKAM, Hawaii -- Members of active duty and Reserve Air Force components unload a baby in an incubator from a KC-135 Stratotanker aeromedical evacuation flight June 21. Members of the 442nd Medical Squadron are on temporary duty working and training in various positions on base.

Whiteman Reservists jump at training opportunity

By Senior Airman Wesley Wright
442nd Fighter Wing Public Affairs

JOINT BASE PEARL HARBOR-HICKAM, Hawaii -- During the 442nd Fighter Wing's June 2012 deployment to Hawaii, members of the 442nd Medical Squadron had several opportunities to get valuable training -- one of which included medically assisting Army dependents.

Maj. Jill Blake, 442nd MDS medical administration flight commander, and Senior Master Sgt. Rachel Grant, 442nd MDS NCO in charge, work in the medical clinic at Whiteman AFB. Although they are trained to provide medical assistance, the facility is not a fully functioning hospital. Reservists report to the clinic for routine physical exams, immunizations and records processing. Active-duty medical personnel who work in the same facility also only perform routine examinations. For major medical care, members and dependents are referred off base.

Therefore, when Blake and Grant were given the opportunity to assist with air evacuations while on a training deployment, they jumped at the opportunity.

"These are skills we don't ever get to use," Grant said. "Five years ago was the last time we got to do air evacuations. It's like a brand new experience."

In addition to training at Tripler Army Medical Center, Honolulu, Hawaii, Blake and Grant assisted with routine transfers of patients to TAMC from all over Pacific Air Force -- but one flight will remain in their memories for years to come.

"This was a special flight," Blake said. "We had two-day-old infants and two pregnant mothers, so this was unusual."

As the KC-135 Stratotanker carrying the individuals touched down in the early hours of the morning, Blake and Grant were prepared. Many strong arms were needed, as the two infants, each with an incubators and medical equipment weighed around 200 pounds each. After safely lifting down the incubators, the infants were placed in ambulances and were en-route to TAMC.

Grant said these medical flights would not be possible if it were not for highly trained medical teams.

"We do medical communications, we do medical records, we do orderly room, medical-readiness," Grant said, "We do almost everything. Without (this Air Force specialty code) and Airmen to coordinate the flights, crews and supplies none of this happens."

The event was a truly a joint-forces one -- as active-duty Airmen, Citizen Airmen, Sailors and Soldiers teamed up to provide the best possible care for the patients.

"You've got service members from all over the world here," Grant said. "Also, there are people from many medical fields. "It truly is a joint-effort."

Grant said this military-wide effort was much along the same lines as the total-force integration the 442nd Fighter Wing begins this summer as 100 active-duty operators, maintainers and support personnel team up to accomplish the mission.

Rebekah Carlisle, 18th Medical Operations Squadron, observes the vital signs of an infant during transfer from a KC-135 to an awaiting ambulance after an aeromedical evacuation flight June 21. 509th Bomb Wing Public Affairs

The U.S. Air Forces mission is to fly, fight and win. Here, it is the 509th Maintenance Group's mission to keep Whiteman's jets flying and pilots safe, but also to be prepared for the worst case scenario.

Airman 1st Class David Johnson, 509th Maintenance Squadron, is part of the aircraft recovery team that would respond in the event an aircraft failure. However, the main job for Johnson and the other flightline members is to keep aircraft from ever experiencing trouble.

"We work on different types of maintenance issues to ensure that our aircraft can safely take off and land every time," said Johnson. "We are also prepared to immediately retrieve any aircraft in case of an emergency."

Though the event of an aircraft going down is highly unlikely it is important to be prepared, according to Johnson.

"You have to be ready at all times even when the chances are slim," Johnson said.

"But as long as everything we do preflight is correct then there should never be a problem big enough to cause an aircraft mishap."

When many people think about the Air Force they think about planes and pilots.

"They don't realize that without maintainers conducting their daily operations that these aircraft wouldn't be able to fly as efficiently as they do," Johnson said.

The reason these aircraft are so safe is because of the work the maintainers do behind the scenes to ensure everything is correct before any jet takes off, according to Johnson.

"We have to make sure that everything on the jet is operating to its maximum capabilities," Johnson said.

While everyday maintenance Airmen concentrate on ensuring everything goes accordingly during every flight, their responsibilities go even further.

"From the very wrench we hold to the last adjustment we make; maintainers give 100 percent," said Tech. Sgt. Andrew Stokes, 509th MXS aircraft recovery. "We certify that all facets of the B-2 are functionally ready; in a safe way, by the books and on-time."

The maintainer's job is to complete the mission and bring each and every pilot home safe to their families added Stokes.

"We may have different titles, but we all work together as a team to get our jets in the air and return safely," Johnson said.

WHITEMAN AIR FORCE BASE 2011 Annual Water Quality Report (Consumer Confidence Report) MO1079501

This is an annual report on the quality of water delivered by Whiteman AFB. This report is intended to provide important information about your drinking water and the efforts made to provide safe drinking water. Users will not be mailed individual copies of this report.

Under the Consumer Confidence Reporting Rule of the federal Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA), community water systems are required to report this water quality information to the consuming public. Presented in this report is information on the source of our water, its constituents and the health risks associated with any contaminants.

We continually monitor the drinking water for contaminants. Our water is safe to drink.

Your drinking water comes from the Whiteman AFB Water Treatment Plant operated by 509th Civil Engineer Squadron. Our system has been assigned the identification number MO 1079501 for the purposes of tracking our test results. The plant treats water from the Ozark Aquifer pumped from groundwater wells located on base. Your water is filtered and treated with chlorine to disinfect it. These wells have been tested and the results are available from the 509th Medical Operations Squadron, Bioenvironmental Engineering Flight, at 660-687-4324. If you would like to observe the decision-making process that affects your drinking water quality or if you have any further questions, the water plant can be reached, at 660-687-1984.

The sources of drinking water (both tap water and bottled water) include rivers, lakes, streams, ponds, reservoirs, springs and groundwater wells. As water travels over the surface of the land or through the ground, it dissolves naturally-occurring minerals and, in some cases, radioactive material, and can pick up substances resulting from the presence of animals or from human activity.

Drinking water, including bottled water, may reasonably be expected to contain at least small amounts of some contaminants. The presence of contaminants does not necessarily indicate that water poses a health risk. More information about contaminants and potential health effects can be obtained by calling the Environmental Protection Agency's Safe Drinking Water Hotline, at 1-800-426-4791.

If present, elevated levels of lead can cause serious health problems, especially for pregnant women and young children. Lead in drinking water is primarily from materials and components associated with service lines and home plumbing. Whiteman AFB is responsible for providing high quality drinking water, but cannot control the variety of materials used in plumbing components. When your water has been sitting for several hours, you can minimize the potential for lead exposure by flushing your tap for 30 seconds to two minutes before using water for drinking or cooking. If you are concerned about lead in your water, you may wish to have your water tested. Information on lead in drinking water, testing methods, and steps you can take to minimize exposure is available from the Safe Drinking Water Hotline, at 1-800-426-4791 or at <http://water.epa.gov/drink/info/lead/index.cfm>.

Some people may be more vulnerable to contaminants in drinking water than the general population. Immunocompromised persons such as persons with cancer undergoing chemotherapy, persons who have undergone organ transplants, people with HIV/AIDS or other immune system disorders, some elderly, and infants can be particularly at risk from infections. These people should seek advice about drinking water from their health care providers. Environmental Protection Agency/Centers for Disease Control guidelines on appropriate means to lessen the risk of infection by Cryptosporidium and other microbial contaminants are available from the Safe Drinking Water Hotline, at 1-800-426-4791.

Contaminants that may be present in source water include:

Microbial contaminants, such as viruses and bacteria, which may come from sewage treatment plants, septic systems, agricultural livestock operations, and wildlife.

Inorganic contaminants, such as salts and metals, which can be naturally-occurring or result from urban storm water runoff, industrial or domestic wastewater discharges, oil and gas production, mining, or farming.

Pesticides and herbicides, which may come from a variety of sources such as agriculture, urban storm water runoff, and residential uses.

Organic chemical contaminants, including synthetic and volatile organic chemicals, which are by-products of industrial processes and petroleum production, and can also come from gas stations, urban stormwater runoff, and septic systems.

Radioactive contaminants, which can be naturally-occurring, or be the result of oil and gas production and mining activities.

In order to ensure that tap water is safe to drink, the Department of Natural Resources prescribes regulations which limit the amount of certain contaminants in water provided by public water systems. Department of Health regulations establish limits for contaminants in bottled water which must provide the same protection for public health.

The state has reduced monitoring requirements for certain contaminants to less often than once per year because the concentrations of these contaminants are not expected to vary significantly from year to year. Records with a sample year more than one year old are still considered representative.

Definitions:

MCLG: Maximum Contaminant Level Goal, or the level of a contaminant in drinking water below which there is no known or expected risk to health. MCLGs allow for a margin of safety.

MCL: Maximum Contaminant Level, or the highest level of a contaminant that is allowed in drinking water. MCLs are set as close to the MCLGs as feasible using the best available treatment technology.

AL: Action Level, or the concentration of a contaminant which, when exceeded, triggers treatment or other requirements which a water system must follow.

90th percentile: For Lead and Copper testing. 10% of test results are above this level and 90% are below this level.

Level Found: is the average of all test results for a particular contaminant.

Range of Detections: Shows the lowest and highest levels found during a testing period, if only one sample was taken, then this number equals the Level Found.

RAA: Running Annual Average, or the average of sample analytical results for samples taken during the previous four calendar quarters.

Campers and volunteers enjoy boating at Camp Guardian during the 2009 session.

National Guardsmen go to bat for disabled children

By Bill Phelan
Special to the 131st Bomb Wing

WILDWOOD, Mo. -- A partnership between the Missouri National Guard and a summer camp for disabled children resulted in plenty of smiles at Edmond A. Babler State Park in Wildwood.

This year's camp, which concluded June 15, treated more than 60 children from across Missouri to six days of activities including swimming, fishing, archery and the traditional Camp Guardian Ball.

Many of Camp Guardian's volunteer coordinators and counselors are members of the Missouri National Guard.

This year's camp director was Missouri Air National Guard, Staff Sgt. Brandon Long, 131st Bomb Wing technician, based at Whiteman AFB.

"We have a lot of children from group homes whose families cannot afford to send them to camp," said Long. "To know that you are helping make a child's summer is a feeling I cannot describe.

"This is a wonderful experience," said 1st Lt. Robert Lovelady, 139th Airlift Wing Air Guard, based in St. Joseph, Mo. "For a lot of our campers this is their summer vacation and it costs their families absolutely nothing." The National Guard partnership with Camp Guardian spans some 36 years.

"At least 75 percent of the work that is done for the camp is done by currently serving or retired National Guardsmen," Long said. "We have Air Guardsmen and Army Guardsmen from all over the state involved. That being said, I'd love to have more Guardsmen involved because this is such a great organization.

"You are never going to meet a better group of children," Long said.

If there is any unfortunate aspect to Camp Guardian it is that the organization receives far more camper applications than it has openings. Ideally, organizers would like to accommodate every applicant.

"Our budget for each camp is about $20,000," Long said. "We spend between $400 and $500 per camper, but that's all we can afford."

Over the years, Camp Guardian has chosen various locations for its summer camp, but hopes to build a camp of their own at Lake of the Ozarks someday.

"We have purchased some property down there and hope to build cabins, a gymnasium, a dining hall and other facilities," Long said. "Ideally the camp would be self-sufficient and we would rent it out to other camp organizations."

For more information about Camp Guardian visit the organization's website at campguardian.org.

to have to apply the information that's in these rules of engagement and special instructions to come up with the answer of which is the right targets to bomb for that particular mission."

For fairness, scenarios will be sent out to all participants two days in advance. That way, everyone participating has the same amount of time to plan their missions. Other bases besides Whiteman competing in this year's challenge are Barksdale Air Force Base, La., Minot Air Force Base, N.D., Dyess Air Force Base, Texas, and Ellsworth Air Force Base, S.D.

The most challenging aspect of the scenario is the many unknown challenges that can be thrown into the situation that pilots don't train with on a regular basis, according to Capt. Paul Rowney, 13th Bomb Squadron chief of safety.

"The way we normally fly is that we have a set mission, a set plan and we have to execute that plan down to the letter," Rowney said. "In this situation, there are many things we can't plan for in advance."

When it comes to getting an upper hand at winning the bomber operations portion of this year's GSC, pilots will need solid aircrew preparation in understanding the rules of engagement and special instructions to ensure so they're prepared for what is about to be thrown at them when they step to fly, according to Roe.
