Our commitment to patriotism

By Chief Master Sgt. Kirby Schueler
302nd AW Command Chief

Like all of you, I have been very interested in the war on terror and our possible involvement since Sept. 11, 2001. We all waited with great anticipation for the opportunity to do our part and take the fight to extremists.

I have been so proud of our record of success over the last few years from the vehicle operators, to security forces, aerial port and most recently the aircraft maintenance and flying squadrons to name a few.

Just as important was the role of those members who took care of all the day-to-day training needs and support requirements of those deployed abroad.

Lately, as the war continues on with no end in sight and the promise of more to come in the very near future, I have been considering the title of Citizen Airmen.

As the reserves move toward a more operational force in support of our active duty brethren, the expectation is that we will volunteer to accomplish these future missions versus mobilization. As we also continue to place greater and greater stress on our families and employers, perhaps it is time to consider the title of patriot. We have taken our oath to protect and defend the Constitution as reservists to a new level never seen in the history of the United States.

The fact that the reserve component from all branches is involved in long term sustained combat actions in a foreign theatre for nearly six years is something we should all be proud of.

No draft, a strong economy, low unemployment – what is it that drives a volunteer reserve force to jeopardize family and job in support of this nation? Patriotism.

As the Congress takes partisan positions on the war and they reduce our aircraft, personnel and funding to pay for future weapons systems – what keeps us coming back? Patriotism

As the needs of the Air Force place us in a position to share our facilities and aircraft with an active duty group – what intrigues us? Patriotism.

Our members drive, fly and take trains at their own expense to the 302nd from many other states – what motivates them? Patriotism.

It's not the retirement pay, medical benefits, uniform, rules, discipline, formations or a chance to get away from the house – what compels us? Patriotism.

If you are a flag-waiving, loyal supporter of independence serving the United States of America in uniform; if you mourn for those that have sacrificed everything; if you serve regardless of public opinion; if you long to see your families, children and grandchildren safe in the future; if you have sworn to give your life in the defense of everything we hold sacred – you are a patriot!

We are Citizen Airmen, make no mistake, but I am also proud to call each of you a fellow patriot.

Honor your employer

Reservists have an opportunity to honor their civilian employers. The 302nd Airlift Wing Employer Appreciation Day is scheduled for Saturday, June 2.

“Since 9-11, our reservists have had to answer the call to duty more than once,” said Col. James J. Muscatell Jr., 302nd AW commander. “Our efforts to fight terrorism would not have been possible without the support of civilian employers. We owe these people a debt of gratitude for the sacrifices they’ve made to allow their employees to serve our country. Employer Appreciation Day is one way we can thank them for that support.”

Employers will be treated to an orientation flight on one of the wing’s C-130H aircraft. Spouses are invited to join the employers. However, Air Force regulations do not allow them to fly. Spouses will attend an aircraft tour during the flight.

At the luncheon, they will hear from Fred Fletemeyer, Colorado Chairman for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve, and Colonel Muscatell. They will also receive a Modular Airborne Firefighting System briefing.

Completed forms must be returned by May 11. They may be dropped off at Public Affairs, Bldg. 893, Suite 138; faxed to (719) 556-4214; e-mailed to

Guard, Reserve leaders speak before Senate

By Staff Sgt. Julie Weckerlein
Air Force Print News

WASHINGTON (AFNEWS) - Military leaders from the National Guard and Reserve testified before members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Subcommittee on Defense, April 11 on Capitol Hill to give a status on the forces and to bring focus on the services' budget.

Lt. Gen. Craig McKinley, Director of the Air National Guard, spoke candidly about the Airmen under his leadership and their ability to adapt for the ongoing global war on terrorism, base realignment and closure changes, the Air Force's Total Force Integration initiative and recapitalization.

"In the year I've been in this position, I've been able to visit units throughout the states," he said, "and I'm proud of the men and women who are serving."

General McKinley pointed out the Total Force success found in Burlington, Vermont with community basing. In 2005, a group of active-duty maintainers from the 20th Fighter Wing at Shaw Air Force Base, S.C., were sent to there to be trained by Airmen of the Vermont Air National Guard's 158th Fighter Wing. The idea was to provide a setting where young maintainers could learn from veteran guardsmen.

He said the insight and experience offered by the guardsmen was invaluable to the newer Airmen. Airmen with lower skill levels and experience became familiar with higher skill level work.

"It was a total success," said General McKinley. "It was a great concept and the Burlington community embraced it. It produced results ... and I believe community basing is the way of the future (for the total force)," he said.

He also talked about the accomplishments of the 119th Fighter Wing out of Fargo, N.D., an award-winning flying unit that was greatly affected by BRAC. He praised their ability to adapt to change, a trait found in all Airmen, he said.

"This very distinguished unit lost their F-16s, which had been there for years," he said. "But the crews there remained professional and ready to fight and have embraced the new missions (Predator unmanned aerial system and the C-21 Lear Jet) and are proud of what they do."

Lt. Gen. John Bradley, Chief of Air Force Reserve, also testified about the Airmen in his command and their response to BRAC changes.

"The 2005 BRAC had a significant impact to the Air Force Reserve," he said in his written statement. "BRAC directed the realignment of seven wings and the closure of one wing, General Billy Mitchell Field, Milwaukee, Wis. To our Reserve Airman, a base realignment, in many cases, is essentially a closure. We are working closely with the Air Force and the Office of the Secretary of Defense on initiatives which encourage those impacted by BRAC decisions to continue serving their nation."

He said the readiness of his Reserve Airmen is world-class.

"We pride ourselves on our ability to respond to any global crisis within 72 hours," General Bradley said. "In many cases, including our response to natural disasters, we respond within 24 hours. We train our Selected Reserve to the same standards as the active duty for a reason: we are one Air Force in the same fight."

Both generals said that one of their goals is to support the recapitalization efforts set for the force's aging fleet and equipment, a sentiment reiterated by Army Lt. Gen. Steven Blum,

Mandatory separation ages change for reserve officers

WASHINGTON - If otherwise eligible, Air Force Reserve officers can now stay in the service longer before reaching their mandatory separation age.

In the past, brigadier generals and below had to retire or separate when they reached age 60. Now they can stay until age 62. The age for major generals rose from 62 to 64.

These changes are a result of provisions in the 2007 National Defense Authorization Act.

With the approval from the secretary of the Air Force, chaplains and officers in some health professions may remain in an active status until age 67.

Eligible officers still have the option of voluntarily separating or retiring before their mandatory age. Additionally, mandatory separation dates because of years of commissioned service restrictions have not changed.

Unless otherwise continued, lieutenant colonels must separate or retire when reaching 28 years of commissioned service. The limit for colonels is 30 years.

Although the authorization act changed mandatory separation ages, it did not change when officers become eligible to draw retirement pay. If they meet all other requirements for retirement, they may apply for retired pay upon reaching age 60.

Also unchanged is the requirement for an individual to request approval from the secretary of the Air Force to continue to receive service credit for any service performed once becoming qualified for retired pay, which typically occurs at age 60.

Development teams guide Reserve Airmen's careers

The Air Force Reserve Command is working on a new program designed to maximize the potential of its Airmen as they chart their future careers. While Reserve Force Development will eventually encompass the whole Reserve population, the first step in the process is developing the abilities of the officer corps.

To submit or review a development plan or to see a listing of when the next meeting is for specific career fields, visit the ARPC Force Development Web site at <http://arpc.afrc.af.mil/forcedevelopment>.

For more information, call 800-525-0102 and ask for the force development division.

AAFES Military Moving Center brings savings home

The Army & Air Force Exchange Service is on the move, offering military families a quick and easy way to save time and money on the numerous challenges associated with moving to a new assignment.

Searchable by specific street address, the service is a "one stop" shop where troops moving to or within the continental United States can connect and compare local utilities and services with just a few clicks of the mouse.

You can access the moving center website at <http://www.militarymovingcenter.com/aafes>.

E-Mail for Life' initiative launched

E-Mail for Life, or E4L, is a new program that will consolidate the service's multiple e-mail systems and provide senior leaders the capability to e-mail every Air Force member directly. The new E4L addresses will not be base specific but will have the extension of @us.af.mil. This means that every Air Force user – active-duty, Guard, Reserve, civilian or contractor – will keep that address for as long as they're associated with the Air Force. The E4L address will not show up on the Global Access List until mid-summer when the initiative reaches full operating capability.

Air Force clubs offering scholarships

Air Force Services Agency officials are offering $25,000 in scholarships for club members and eligible family members, including the member's spouse, son, daughter, stepson and stepdaughter. Grandchildren are also eligible if they are dependents of the club member. Applicants must have been accepted by or are enrolled in an accredited college or university for the fall term as well as be part- or full-time students. Student enrollment status may involve either undergraduate or graduate curriculum.

The deadline to enter is June 15.

New ABU in full production

The new Airman Battle Uniform, designed to eventually replace both the Battle Dress and Desert Combat Uniforms worn by Airmen, is currently in full production.

Distribution plans also have the ABU replacing the BDU in the initial clothing bag at Basic Military Training in early fall. The ABU could be available for purchase in many Military Clothing Sales stores later this year, with Army and Air Force Exchange Service-wide availability in early 2008.

Some of the ABU features are both men's and women's sizes for better fit, improved pocket placement, and no starch maintenance, lowering time and costs of upkeep.

Now that the ABU is being fielded, development has started on other new uniform items. Specifically, Airmen can expect a field test of the new service coat later this year.

The new service coat, known as the Heritage Jacket, has gone through several prototypes, with officials recently deciding which version will be released for field testing. Once feedback has been received from the wear test, Air Force leaders will make a final decision on the new coat and send it into production.
