

Michael Tompkins

Mike is currently the Special Agent in Charge of the Operations Branch at the Department of Justice, Office of the Inspector General. He is responsible for the oversight and review of all DOJ OIG investigations conducted within the Operations arena, to include undercover and source operations. Additionally he is a primary liaison with senior officials within the Department of Justice, the Executive Office for U.S. Attorneys, the U.S. Marshals Service, the Executive Office for Immigration Review, the Bureau of Prisons, and other Offices, Boards and Departments within the DOJ.

Before his HQ assignment, Mike worked in the San Diego, Los Angeles and Washington field offices. During those field assignments, he conducted numerous bribery and narcotics investigations utilizing confidential informants and operating in a shallow undercover role.

Prior to his employment with the DOJ OIG in 2002, Mike began his federal career as a Special Agent for the Naval Criminal Investigative Service in 1985 in San Diego. During his 17 years with the NCIS, he's investigated a variety of crimes involving the sale of weapons, homicide, narcotics distribution, assault, theft, and sexual related crimes, both domestically and overseas. Mike has also held various management positions as a Supervisory Special Agent, a Resident Agent in Charge, and an Assistant Special Agent in Charge. During his NCIS field and supervisory assignments, he primarily worked in initiative squads or offices, and has managed or participated in countless shallow undercover operations.

Mike graduated from the Southern Connecticut State University in 1984, where he earned a Bachelors of Arts degree in Criminal Justice.