As the holiday season approaches, airports, bus stops and train stations will brace for the influx of seasonal travelers. Long-distance travel during the winter holidays may increase by as much as 54 percent, according to the United States Bureau of Transportation.

As the demand for transportation of all sorts increases, so does the value of tickets. However, military service members can sidestep steep ticket prices with the aid of a government perk – Space A travel.

For only $25.70, persons eligible for Space A travel may fly to the United States on a government chartered commercial aircraft.

According to Kevin Walsh, Station air transportation division manager, Station residents recognize the value of the deal. Between 3,500 and 4,000 residents take advantage of Space A travel each year, he said.

"I've saved close to $8,000 in travel expenses by flying Space A," said Cpl. Sean Gries, military policeman and six-time Space A veteran.

Mass casualty drill puts Station to test

A mass casualty drill was held on the flight line here Nov. 24 to assess the emergency communication capabilities of the Station.

The exercise utilized the Provost Marshal's Mobile Command Post and tested the efficiency of emergency first responder's response to a multiple site aircraft mishap.

Marines from aircraft rescue and fire-fighting and the Provost Marshals Office, along with Sailors from the Branch Medical Clinic worked to coordinate and control the exercise.

According to Chief Warrant Officer Cedric D. Gray, Headquarters and Headquarters Squadron aircraft rescue and firefighting officer in charge, the drill was designed to simulate an aircraft crash with multiple casualties.

The goal was to rescue as many of the casualties as possible and render proper medical care, while isolating any problems that arose from the crash such as fires or chemical spills.

"Basically we are simulating an aircraft crash to test how quickly and effectively our units can respond and work together," said Gray.

All of this must be done in a very timely manner, said Gray. Participating units are required to reach the farthest point of the runway in 90 seconds or less from when the call is made. All the units met that specific goal. Additionally, Air Harbor Operations Division surface division patrolled the waters of the Setonaikai Sea just outside the sea wall for possible casualties or parts of the aircraft.

"As soon as we heard the call, we had two boats out in the inner harbor," said Petty Officer 2nd class Alejandro G. Paras, H&HS boatswain's mate. "One boat was there to apply (Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation) and medical aid to the casualties while the other was providing security."

While Marines and Sailors from the boathouse covered the harbor, the land units were busy responding to the simulated emergency on the runway crash site.

Once on the scene, Marines and Iwakuni firefighters moved with speed and intensity to locate and treat the injured, said Lance Cpl. Joshua M. Atkinson, H&HS aircraft rescue and firefighter. There were 29 total simulated casualties requiring medical assistance. The real task for the Marines was deciphering what injuries needed to be treated first.

Residents gather for town hall meeting with new commanding officer

Station residents gathered at the Marine Memorial Chapel Nov. 23 for a town hall meeting.

The quarterly get-together was the first hosted by Station Commanding Officer Col. Michael Dyer.

Prior to formal presentations concerning the current state of affairs aboard the Station and future events affecting local residents, the commanding officer shared his philosophy regarding the local military community.

"My philosophy is one of ownership," said Dyer. "We must take ownership of the community. If something is wrong, we'll work to fix it, but we have to know where the problems are before we can move to address them."

The colonel stressed the importance of "effective communication and a healthy respect for one another," before opening the floor to formal presentations regarding medical and housing issues, Marine Corps Community Service and Defense Commissary Agency business, phone services, cable television service updates and the responsibilities and capabilities of the Station inspector.

Cmdr. Rachel Haltner, Branch Medical Clinic officer in charge, noted the importance of care continuity, and explained what BMC was doing to ensure that service members and civilians were scheduled with the same primary caregiver whenever possible.

She also noted a change in clinic hours (the clinic is now open Friday afternoons), and provided information regarding the availability of flu shots.

A housing representative shared holiday safety information and regulations, and encouraged families and single service members to participate in decorating for the holidays.

Dale Smith, MCCA director, presented a calendar of events designed to entertain families and single Marines and Sailors here. He also noted the availability of counselors for Station residents who may have difficulty spending the holidays away from family and close friends.

Tom Bell, MCCA business operations director, announced the beginning of the "Ask Me" program – a plan to focus the attention on improving customer service and satisfaction.

The commissary manager noted the impact that weather has had on the availability of popular holiday foods. He added that unusual food items could be specially ordered through the commissary.

Having a productive life

LT. CMDR. BRENT JOHNSON
MAG-12 Group Chaplain

My credit card is going to melt this holiday season. When living overseas, it is so much easier to buy things from online stores, and then have UPS or FEDEX deliver them to the relatives back in the states. Not only that, but there is all that great stuff at You Me Town that I can pick up as gifts. Each brother in law will receive "Miffy Merry Christmas" CDs - all our favorite carols sung in Japanese. Yes, my credit card issuer will make some good money from me this winter.

I like buying gifts, but I also share the concerns of many people regarding the growing consumer culture that is taking over in our world and changing the meaning of the Christmas season. The phrase "God loves a happy giver," has become "God loves a happy shopper." Each year more and more Americans go deeper and deeper into credit card debt during the holiday season, just to satisfy the perception that nothing is too expensive for our loved ones. Many other people are just tired of being consumers, but wonder how they can stop the consuming habit.

I don't think we can totally avoid being a consumer. There are certain things I need to buy. I'm not a farmer, so I need to buy groceries. I can't afford, or know how, to build my own house, so I need to see a Realtor. Don't even ask me how a car is put together. I'll just buy a good one that runs. What I can do is avoid buying things I am able to produce.

That is how I beat the consumer mentality. I've become a producer for personal needs. The best vegetables I ate this past summer were the ones my seventh grade son talked me into planting in the back yard. The most fun I had getting ready for Christmas giving was the time I decided to make gifts for key members of my family, and bought gifts for everyone else on my list (which I keep small and manageable.) Paul, the writer of most of the books of the New Testament, had a high opinion of work and living as a producer. He supported himself as a tentmaker as he traveled around the Mediterranean world as an apostle. He also had a dim view of people who refused to work and contribute something to the local community. In 2 Thessalonians 3.10 he wrote, "For even when we were with you we gave you this rule, 'If a man will not work, he shall not eat.'"

A healthy, spiritual life is a productive life. There will be things you have to consume because you do not have the ability to produce them yourself, but there are plenty of things you can do or make - and have fun while doing them, especially with other people - that will add quality to your life and home. Don't be a mindless consumer this holiday season. Find something you can produce, and give it away.

Thank you from an 'old Marine'

Semper Fi Marines! It has been a long time since I have worn a Marine Corps uniform, but feelings of pride and honor still fill my lungs with each breath.

Being a Marine is not an easy task. There are times that one wishes that they could just quit and go home. There are other times when it seems that we simply aren't doing enough for the Marine Corps. At least that is how it was with me.

Having been retired from the Marine Corps since 1993, the Marines have been put into harm's way more often than not. Each day, I pick up the local newspaper and see the list of soldiers and Marines who have died over the previous days. Lance Corporals who are working hard to get that next stripe so that they can provide for their families have fallen, and the sad part is that not many people care.

There are PFCs and privates, some not old enough to experience all that life offers because of laws governing under age drinking. However, these same "few" have also laid down their lives for a country that only recognizes them in times of combat. Having been a Marine on active duty, and being in Desert Storm, I know how things are at home and in our hearts. I recall graduating from Boot Camp and flying home to Colorado. The lady sitting next to me saw me in my Marine Corps dress greens and told me that I

Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni based Combat Service Support Detachment 36, along with other 3rd Force Service Support Group Marines from Okinawa, Japan, recently participated in Exercise Keen Sword 2005.

The detachment, one of several U.S. units involved, joined Japanese Self-Defense Forces in joint, bilateral military exercises throughout Japan Nov. 10-19. "Our goal was to gain proficiency with the Noncombatant Evacuation Operation Tracking System, and increase our effectiveness at joint, bilateral coordination," said Capt. Craig Petersen, CSSD-36 operations officer.

In preparation for the permissive environment NEO exercise coordinated and executed by the detachment, one group of CSSD-36 Marines established an evacuation control center at Atsugi Naval Base, Japan, while others worked with Japanese Self-Defense Forces at Tsuiki, Japan, and Metabaru, Japan, to prepare an intermediate staging base and a safe haven, said Staff Sgt. Gavin Blackmer, CSSD-36 nuclear, biological and chemical defense staff noncommissioned officer in charge.

"I was impressed with the level of support that the Japanese forces provided and how well our Marines operated with them before, during and after the exercise," said Blackmer. "We were able to test our capabilities to deploy to an unfamiliar base, and things went incredibly smooth."

ditionary Force NEO analyst and NEO Tracking System program manager, echoed Blackmer's sentiment. "This has been a great training exercise," she said. "The [U.S. forces] worked very well with the Japanese Air Self-Defense and Japanese Maritime Self-Defense Forces. They didn't run across any major glitches."

Because of its joint, bilateral nature, the NEO exercise garnered visits from distinguished guests such as the commander of U.S. Forces Japan, Lt. Gen. Thomas Waskow, and Gen. Hajime Masaki, chief of staff for Japan's Ground Self-Defense Forces.

"Everyone was pleased with our performance from start to finish," said Petersen.

Petersen credits his Marines for the success of the exercise.

"They were dealing with a restricted time line and a lot of moving parts and unfamiliar gear, but their performance was outstanding," he said.

According to Petersen, a high level of flexibility was demonstrated by the

The Station Security Reaction Team, alongside the Japanese Ground Self Defense Force, 46th Regiment Rangers, trained for four days Nov. 16-19 in preparation of this year's Active Shield joint combined exercise.

"We're conducting a bilateral training exercise," said Andrew Samuels, Antiterrorism Force Protection officer. "We're required to do one annually, and to prepare for that exercise we're practicing together. The JGSDF are responsible for coming here and protecting our AOR (Area of Responsibility) during a contingency operation. However, without practicing together for a contingency, we wouldn't be well prepared. The goal of this exercise was to practice together, and be sure that we're ready for any possible contingencies."

The training began Nov. 16 with SRT participating in search and clear drills. Moving from room to room with speed and force, the Marines scanned for aggressors. Their proficiency was also tested when non-combatants were placed in the scenario. Without hesitation, they evacuated the noncombatants and put the aggressors under control.

While SRT was busy on the ground, the Rangers were in the sky focusing on fast roping from a UH-1 Huey helicopter. The Huey held the Rangers at approximately 40 feet as they stepped out into the open sky. With no harnesses, they slid down the rope one by one, joining the search and clear training.

"This type of workup training has been going on for months," said Capt. Christopher W. Bushek, Station Provost Marshal. "We are always training to keep up with the Active Shield program, which changes venues, but goes on throughout the year."

The two units train together to support each other and learn their strengths and weaknesses so they can perform better as a team in the case of a contingency, said Samuels.

The bilateral exercise was a great chance for SRT and the Rangers to get a chance to work with each other and hone their skills before Active Shield, said Samuels.

New program offers females 'Choices'

Senior mentorship available for junior service members

Forty-three female Marines and Sailors gathered at the Marine Memorial Chapel Nov. 24 for an introduction to a new program called Choices.

Choices is a program devised to support young women Marines and Sailors by providing a positive environment through professional and personal mentoring and training, said Navy Lt. Carla Barry, Station Protestant Chaplain.

"The program is geared to accommodate the unique issues that face female service members," said Master Sgt.

Diane Rowe, Station Equal Employment Opportunity advisor. "Our hope is that women who have experienced a great deal within the Marine Corps can provide sound advice to younger Marines and Sailors.

"Our target audience is service members ranked E-1 through E-5, but all are welcome," said Rowe.

According to Rowe, major goals include character building, and providing life and career counseling.

Forty-three female Marines and Sailors assembled Nov. 23 at the Marine Memorial Chapel for the first Choices program meeting.

Lance Cpl. Lydia Davey

The program will accomplish its goals through the availability of 24-hour mentoring and through monthly meetings where guest speakers with expertise on topics such as finances, health, and drug and alcohol issues will be hosted.

The program is off to a good start, said Barry.

"There has been a positive response to the introduction of Choices," she said. "We've received a tremendous amount of support from commands aboard the Air Station."

Many females in attendance were encouraged by their commands to participate.

PFC Jessica Clark, Marine Wing Support Squadron 171 supply clerk, was informed of the Choices meeting by her EEO representative. She was pleasantly surprised at the focus of the program.

"In an environment that's mostly male, it's nice to be able to develop more female friendships, and to have the opportunity to draw on the experiences and views of good role models," said Clark.

Clark plans to continue participating in the program while she is stationed here, and said she is looking forward to the camaraderie and direction the program will provide.

"We're excited at the response the program has received, but we're looking for more people to attend, and we're always looking for more mentors," said Barry.

The next Choices meeting will be held Dec. 15, 11:45 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., at the Marine Memorial Chapel. Lunch will be provided free of cost.

For more information about the Choices program, contact Rowe at 253-4186 or the Station chapel at 253-3371.

High school teacher brings drama to classroom

LANCE Cpl. LYDIA DAVEY

Undying, desperate love, drunken fights, heroically selfless actions and old-fashion mob tactics have found a home at Matthew C. Perry High School with the help of the school's new drama teacher, Joe Silbaugh.

"My goal is to keep the kids interested in and excited about drama and to really involve the community with our productions," said Silbaugh.

The drama teacher, who carries nearly a decade of teaching experience with him, possesses a zeal that is catching.

"I like him," said Samantha Keating, a 9th grader, of Silbaugh. Keating plays the part of a freedom fighter in the school's first full-length production of the year, Casablanca. "He's very enthusiastic about the whole thing - very into it."

Silbaugh taught high school drama in Washington State for nine years before accepting an offer to work overseas for a Department of Defense school.

"He has a lot of experience and a love for doing productions," said Alice Berard, M.C. Perry High School principle. "He's going to be able to get the students excited about drama. His energy is contagious."

In addition to teaching drama and preparing his students for speech competitions, Silbaugh said he has plans for regular high school productions throughout the year.

According to 11th-grader Adriano Cabral, the teacher's ambition is just what the school needs.

"I'm excited at the chance to broaden my talents." Said Cabral, who landed the leading male role for the current production.

Cabral's enthusiasm is standard issue among the cast, said Silbaugh.

"They're all very excited. There is some inexperience, but the willingness to learn is here," he noted. Silbaugh stresses the importance of drama and stage performance in the students' lives.

"Just getting up in front of people is a big step - this is how they'll learn to be confident public speakers," he said. "I've taken one

Marines, Sailors and firefighters train throughout the year for emergency contingencies, according to Gray.

Marines from Marine Wing Support Squadron 171 traveled seven miles west of the Station to Kono Elementary School Nov. 21 to share in Japanese festivities and introduce Thanksgiving customs to Japanese children.

The sunny day's activities began with Kono students putting on a kagura play. The play consisted of traditional Japanese music, costumes and a story.

"The kagura tells the story of young people serving in the temple," said Lt. Timothy D. Gault, MWSS-171 chaplain. "They are confronted by beasts, yet continue to serve in the temple successfully."

Following the play, Kono community leaders invited the Marines to make rice balls, practice weaving and play soccer.

For their part, the Marines explained the history of the Thanksgiving holiday dating back to the birth of the United States.

"This goes both ways," said Gault. "Not only were the children able to interact with English speakers and see a piece of American culture, but we were able to see a piece of Japanese culture that most don't get a chance to see."

Afterwards, a turkey, prepared by the Southside Chow Hall, was presented.

Open forum questions included a request for the publication of the specific allocation of funds provided to the community from the Combined Federal Campaign, as well as a date for the reopening of the seawall and the date Christmas trees would become available for purchase here.

According to the Station facilities manager, the Japanese government is scheduled to complete a survey of the damaged seawall next year, and, following that survey and repairs, the seawall will be reopened.

According to the commanding officer, Christmas trees will be available Dec. 1.

Before calling the evening to a close, Dyer thanked community members for attending the event, and encouraged them to continue communicating.

However, according to Gries, first-time travelers may find the task of preparing for such a trip somewhat daunting.

"There's a lot of information to take in, and a lot to prepare for, but it's definitely worth it," Gries said.

Help is readily available to potential passengers, he added.

"The first time I came in, a passenger service agent walked me through everything," noted Gries.

A Marine interested in Space A travel should begin researching his destination and route of choice well in advance, advises Master Sgt. Lawrence Quirindongo, Station terminal manager.

"I would recommend that a Marine begin filling out the necessary paperwork about a month in advance," said Quirindongo.

Once a Marine has decided upon a travel destination, he should develop an alternate plan for transportation. Although Space A is typically a reliable means of travel, it is not guaranteed, said Kevin Walsh, air transportation division manager.

"Sometimes people get bumped off of a flight, it happens," said Quirindongo.

Because of that possibility, he recommends that Marines take extra leave as a precaution.

"However, we only have three or four stateside-bound flights a year that can't accommodate all of the Space A travelers that show up," said Walsh.

The most difficult times are when Marines attempt to secure Space A travel to popular locations such as the United States, Okinawa, Japan, and Osan, Korea, during the summer months and holidays, he noted.

Yet, when weighed against the cost of travel today, "The risks are definitely worth the rewards," said Gries.

Marines who are interested in traveling Space A may call the terminal at 253-5509 and speak with a passenger service representative.

detachment as mechanics and supply clerks successfully performed missions outside the scope of their respective military occupational specialties.

"That flexibility and the ability to adapt is what makes us Marines," he said.

In addition to the NEO training, the exercise included dissimilar aircraft training, base security and force protection, search and rescue, close air support and tactical air drops by C-130 aircraft.

Exercise Keen Sword 2005 is the eighth joint, bilateral field training exercise since 1986.

In the days to come, things may only get worse, no one really knows.

The country that now calls you a "hero," calls you everything else in the book when you are at home and there is no skirmish going on somewhere in the world. However, know that there are us old Marines, especially us old gunnys, who care very much, without ever having seen your face, about how you are doing.

As the holidays come upon us, many people will forget that you are away from home and possibly in combat, and may even lose your life in a country that despises that you are there and for a country that doesn't think much of you until it is someone in their own family. But those same Old Marines who have been in skirmishes throughout time, wearing the same boots that you now fill, will want to know that you were properly fed and equipped to do your job, and that you are getting plenty of rest.

While I cannot speak for the whole nation, I will speak on behalf of all the retired Marines wherever they are in the world, and thank you for the great job that you are doing. You may not be "Old Corps" but you are doing the job better than we could have and with fewer brothers-in-arms than we did; more importantly you are the Marine Corps.

Thank you for the great job you are doing each and every day. Thank you for your sacrifices and for tolerating the civilian population that simply can't know what it is like to be in the military, much less the Marine Corps. Us old Marines want to thank you for upholding Marine Corps honor and traditions. Keep up the fantastic job that you are doing. SEMPER FI!!!

West meets East at Maple Festival

Visitors to this year's Iwakuni Maple Festival enjoyed a charming surprise, Nov. 20, as seven young ladies from the Station Teen Center donned kimonos and served tea throughout the day.

"Kawaii!" guests exclaimed as the girls bowed and looked adorable. The Japanese word means "cute."

The Maple Festival included Japanese dancing, a koto (traditional Japanese guitar) concert and bamboo crafts. Organizers of the concert invited the girls as a unique highlight for this year.

"They thought the girls would make it nicer," said Taeko Yokoyama, youth culture adaptation specialist. "It also gives a good opportunity to know more about each other. I think it breaks stereotypes and opens people up to understand other cultures. We can break our fixed thoughts through common activities like this."

According to Yokoyama, the festival is held every year as a way for foreigners to experience local culture and enjoy the time of year.

"The Maple Festival celebrates the season of fall," she said. "It demonstrates the beauty of the area and of Japanese culture."

Eiko Kaya, vice president of Iwakuni's international cultural exchange program, invited the girls to participate.

"Having the girls here is very appealing to the Japanese people," Kaya said. "Iwakuni is such an international city. Something like this gives the people an opportunity to experience those unique aspects."

According to 10-year-old Halley Wingard, not all those aspects were enjoyable.

"The kimono was tight and it hurt sometimes," she said. "But I had a good time."

If given the opportunity, Wingard said she would do it again.

All the girls enjoyed celebrity status for a day as festival guests took their picture and remarked on their radiant presence.

"The people looked happy to see them," said Yokoyama. "Blue eyes in a kimono? It was very cute."

According to Yokoyama, a variety of Japanese activities are in store for interested Station youth, including an overnight culture exchange at the Oshima Youth House, Dec. 11 and 12.

For information on upcoming youth cultural programs, call Yokoyama at 253-5900.

Over the years, Native Americans have woven their rich culture and history throughout the United States military. They stand proudly for the core values Marines represent.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Counsel sponsored a lunch buffet, Nov. 18, celebrating the history and culture of the American Indians and Alaska Natives at the Club Iwakuni Ballroom.

Native Americans have contributed skills and courage that have saved both American lives and military engagements.

The Navajo code talkers took part in assaults the U.S. Marines executed in the Pacific from 1942 to 1945. They served in Marine divisions transmitting messages by telephone and radio through a secret code - their native language.

Lance Cpl. Candice V. Sutton, embarked, Headquarters and Headquarters Squadron, whose ancestry includes Navajo, Cheyenne, Arapaho, Pawnee and Crow Native Americans, spoke in that code as the guest speaker at the luncheon. She also told traditional stories about her beliefs.

"I think that getting exposed to different cultures and beliefs when you are young will make you into a more well-rounded adult," said Sutton. "You become less ignorant."

"She was very strong with her words," said Karol M. Moore, a fifth grade student who attended the event as an introduction to her next unit, Native American History. "She had a great story."

The event honored not only American Indians and Alaska Natives, Native American art was displayed for everyone who attended the event to see.

Lance Cpl. Candice V. Sutton, Headquarters and Headquarters Squadron, embarked, tells a story about her traditions and beliefs during the Native American Heritage luncheon, Nov. 18.

but also encouraged interaction between them and all military members.

"Hosting such events actually educates people in cultures or subjects that they have never heard of," said Sutton. "It is important because there is so much information about our people, our history and our heritage."

"The event recognized the Native Americans and Alaskan Natives and their contributions as members of the military to the nation," said Gary V. Gilmour, deputy Equal Employment Opportunity director. "Our armed forces are comprised of people from many different ethnic groups. It is important that we take time to recognize the people from those groups and their contributions to the United States."

The 5th grade class from Matthew C. Perry elementary school listens carefully at the event which introduced their next unit: Native American History.

Lance Cpl. Candice V. Sutton, embarked, H&HS, spoke in her native language for guests at the luncheon.

Marine Corps Community Services Chief of Semper Fit, Robert E. Johnston, was awarded the Meritorious Civilian Service Medal this year for his continuous and effective efforts to improve the Semper Fit division. For the past two and a half years, Johnson, a retired Marine, has directed the second largest division of MCCS. Johnson oversees 125 employees in the Semper Fit division. "[Johnson's] foresight and tireless efforts transformed all facilities under his cognizance to some of the best available Marine Corps wide," said MCCS Director Dale Smith.

Iwakuni sweeps Turkey Bowl

Rasheed A. Pelaez catches the football for a touchdown for Dem Boyz.

Cleats dig into the fresh, wet grass. A brisk wind blankets the field. Screaming plays, pulses heightened through each accomplished yard. Bodies moving quickly against the clock. Rain mixed with sweat dripping from faces.

Couldn't be a better day for the annual Turkey Bowl!

Four flag football teams; Iwakuni 171, Dem Boyz All Stars, Sasebo and Yakota, comprised of service members from different parts of Japan, competed in the Thanksgiving tournament, Nov. 19.

"The Turkey Bowl is an event that tries to bring some of the local bases together for some friendly competition," said Keith G. Carr, sports specialist at the Ironworks Gym.

The tournament consisted of four games, 40 minutes each.

"The first game against Yokota got off to a quick start, which surprised me," said Freddie Jones, coach of Dem Boyz. "Once we calmed down and started playing our style of football, I had confidence that we were going to be alright. The championship game was ours to win and we knew it."

Ryan A. Thomas punts the ball with enough force to make it to the other side of the field.

Dem Boyz pulverized Yakota the first game, 30-6. "We got off to a rocky start and were unable to focus on our initial game plan," said Coach Aubrey Williams of team Yakota. "Team Dem Boyz played well, but I believe we could beat them if we played them again."

Team Iwakuni put up a fight but was toppled by Sasebo during the second game, 25-20.

"Our team was sort of shocked when Sasebo scored with only seconds remaining," said Richard Lowenstein, coach of Iwakuni 171. "We were just unable to shake off the loss and move forward."

The next game, Yakota and Iwakuni 171 battled for third place. Yakota stomped Iwakuni, 28-14, taking third, leaving Iwakuni 171 in fourth.

"All in all, we enjoyed the games and will definitely play better next year," said Lowenstein.

Dem Boyz slaughtered team Sasebo, 35-6, in the championship game and took the victory for the Turkey Bowl.

"We just need to make sure that we always defend our home, Iwakuni," said Timothy B. Walker of Dem Boyz.

"I think we played well, even with several of our starters gone on deployment," said Mark Haley, Sasebo coach. "We came down here to have fun and to showcase some of our talent. We accomplished our goal."

For some players, there is nothing better than tough competition to build everlasting camaraderie between the armed forces.

"We love competing with other service members," said Lee A. Woodbridge of Dem Boyz.

Runners 'Puff away' at Great American Smoke-out

STORY AND PHOTOS BY
PFC LUKAS J. BLOM
Combat Correspondent

Runners "lit up" the asphalt at the Great American Smoke-out here, Nov. 19.

The Marine Corps Community Services Semper Fit program held the seventh annual run at the Ironworks Gym.

The Great American Smoke-out is a nationally recognized day that focuses on the health risks of tobacco products. Events are held nationwide in the United States, as well as on U.S. military installations around the world, to promote healthy living.

"Our goal is to get people to stop (using tobacco) for just one day," said Billie F. Scott, MCCC Semper Fit Health Promotions director. "We're not talking about forever. One day could make a huge difference. It shows people that they can achieve their goal."

The event not only brought awareness of the effects of cigarettes, but also cigars and smokeless tobacco (chewing tobacco).

"One dip is equivalent to two or three cigarettes, so it can become a serious health risk very easily," said Scott.

The five-kilometer and 10-kilometer races kicked off at 11:30 a.m. at the gym parking lot.

Taking home the trophy for the five-kilometer run was Bill T. Phillips, 54, with a scorching time of 24 minutes 53 seconds.

Accomplishing the fastest time in the 10-kilometer race and snatching the most prized trophy of the day was Takashi Sobue. Sobue's time of 40 minutes 44 seconds smoked the competition.

"It was a great day for a run," said Scott. "We had beautiful weather and everyone had fun."

Along with competitive runners, parents brought their children out to have some fun, enjoy the sunny weather and learn about the dangers to one's health caused by tobacco.

"We have to set the example for our kids," said Lt. Cmdr. Heather K. Gilchrist, Branch Medical Clinic division officer of Health Promotions and Tobacco Cessation director. "As Marines and Sailors, we need to support each other when one of us is trying to quit."

For Marines and Sailors who are looking for a helping hand in quitting tobacco use, the Branch Medical Clinic offers monthly tobacco cessation classes.

The classes focus on the physical as well as the psychological addictions to tobacco people have, said Gilchrist. The class offers help with recognizing triggers for tobacco use and developing coping strategies, and offers nicotine patches for class members. Also, the class helps individuals with identifying substitutes for tobacco, which is how a person is going to be successful in quitting the habit.

"Approximately 35 percent of the Marine Corps smokes," said Scott. "We want to put the focus on the negative health effects for those people. We have programs like this and our mini-health fairs to help out the people who are thinking of quitting."

For more information concerning tobacco cessation classes, contact the Health Promotions office at 253-3266.

The possible effects of tobacco use on the mouth were displayed in this soberingly realistic model of a human mouth.
