Smith's daughter overheard the argument and went to her mother's bedroom where she observed KING standing over Dorothy Smith, striking her while she lay in bed. When the daughter ran from the room to call for help, KING chased her. The child locked herself in her bedroom, but KING broke in and attacked her with a sharp object before he fled the scene. Medical personnel arrived at the house to find Dorothy Smith dead from a cut to her neck and her daughter critically injured. The surviving victim was later able to identify KING from a photographic line-up as the man who assaulted her and fatally wounded her mother.
