

Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance

Provisions: Summary of Legislation, 1935-56

by ROBERT J. MYERS*

THE Social Security Act of 1935 established the first Federal social security system in the United States—a system that has been substantially revised by successive amendments since that year. The major features of the largest program, now old-age, survivors, and disability insurance, and the changes in coverage, benefit, and financing provisions resulting from the amendments¹ to the Act are summarized in the following pages. The detailed provisions are given in the accompanying tables.

The program established by the Social Security Act of 1935 was a relatively simple one, designed to pay (1) old-age benefits to the worker when he retired at or after 65 and (2) cash refunds to survivors when the wage earner died and to living workers aged 65 who had not been in covered employment long enough to qualify for monthly benefits. The benefit formula was weighted in favor of the worker with short service or low wages; yet at the same time significant consideration was given to those who would contribute for many years.

The program was financed completely by contributions from employer and employee, each of whom paid 1 percent of the worker's salary up to $3,000 a year; the tax rate was scheduled to rise gradually in the future. The covered group consisted essentially of all workers under age 65 in industry and commerce. Contributions were first collected in 1937, and the first monthly benefit payments were to be made in 1942.

1939 Amendments

The program, however, was substantially changed in 1939. Monthly benefits were made payable in 1940, not only to the retired worker—the only beneficiary category in the 1935 Act—but also to the dependents of retired workers and the survivors of deceased workers (whether or not the worker had retired). Except for widowed mothers and children under age 18, both dependents and survivors had to have attained age 65 to be eligible for benefits.

The method of computing the benefit amount was drastically revised so that there was less emphasis on length of contributions; the formula was still weighted in favor of workers with lower earnings. The "money-back guarantee" provision was eliminated, and only a small lump-sum death payment was provided when no monthly benefits were immediately payable. Coverage provisions were not materially changed, except that the provision excluding workers aged 65 and over was removed.

The proposed increase in the tax rate that was to have become effective in 1940 was eliminated by the 1939 amendments. The actual financing basis of the program was left unclear; under the 1935 Act it had been clear that the program was to be self-supporting from the employer-employee contributions. Many individuals believed that the 1939 amendments had changed the financing basis of the program from "full-reserve" to "pay-as-you-go," but this feeling is not substantiated by the legislative history and provisions; the original Act was not really on a full-reserve basis.

Legislation, 1940-49

During the 1940's the legislative enactments were relatively minor and related primarily to financing. Several times during the 10 years, amendments postponed the scheduled increase in the contribution rates. In other words, the tax rate was "frozen" at the initial level of 1 percent each from employer and employee until 1950, when it went up to 1½ percent each.

One of the amendments made during the decade carried a provision permitting a Government contribution to the system, but the authority was never put to use, and in 1950 the provision was removed from the law. Legislation passed in 1946 provided monthly benefits for survivors of certain World War II veterans. Another law adopted in 1946 provided for a degree of coordination of the newly established survivor benefits under the railroad retirement system with those under old-age and survivors insurance.

Legislation, 1950-52

The 1950 Act made many important changes. Coverage was considerably extended by the bringing in of such groups as the nonfarm self-employed (except members of specified professions), regularly employed farm and domestic workers, employees of nonprofit institutions (on a group elective basis), and State and local government employees not covered by a retirement system (at the option of the employer). ¹ Includes other legislation enacted in 1956 that affected the program.

² Railroad and other earnings are combined in determining eligibility for and amount of survivor benefit; provision extended in 1951 to place workers with less than 10 years of railroad service under old-age, survivors, and disability insurance for all benefits.

³ Employees who vote against coverage are not covered; all new employees are covered.

⁴ Firemen and policemen not covered; 1956 Act permitted their coverage in certain States.

⁵ Provision first effective from July 25, 1947, to Dec. 31, 1953. Legislation in 1953 extended effective date to June 30, 1955; in 1955 to Mar. 31, 1956; and in 1956 to Dec. 31, 1956.

⁶ In effect, an individual can receive only one type of monthly benefit and that, the largest for which he is eligible.

⁷ Benefits are reduced by amount of any other Federal disability benefit or any workmen's compensation benefit.

⁸ Benefit is payable only if worker is not survived by a widow or an eligible child.

⁹ See table 3 for insured-status requirements for various types of benefits. Under the "disability freeze" provision (1954 Act), periods of extended total disability are not counted in determining insured status.

¹⁰ In general, $50 or more of wages paid in a quarter; based on annual earnings for farm workers and self-employed persons.

¹¹ The term "primary insurance amount," introduced in the 1950 Act, de amounts were roughly doubled—a reflection of the appreciable changes in wage levels and the cost of living since the 1939 amendments. The retirement test (the amount of earnings permitted beneficiaries if they are to receive benefits) was notably liberalized. Important changes were made in the financing basis. A revised long-range contribution schedule was placed in the law, the principle of self-support was clearly established, and the maximum earnings base was increased to $3,600 a year.

In 1951 the railroad retirement system was amended to provide further coordination with the old-age and survivors insurance program—affecting not only survivor and retirement benefits but also the program's financing.

The 1952 Act raised the benefit level by about 15 percent and further liberalized the retirement test. No notes the amount payable to a retired worker and on which the benefits of his dependents and survivors are based (also used as basis for benefits payable to survivors of worker who dies before retirement, computed as if deceased worker had attained retirement age on date of death).

¹² This formula applies to average computed from 1951 on, as indicated above; for average computed from 1937 on, the 1939 formula (somewhat modified) is used in conjunction with a conversion table. Under the 1954 Act and subsequently, an alternative computation based on the 1952 formula, plus $5, is possible.

¹³ This benefit (and benefit for disabled child aged 18 or over) is reduced by amount of any other Federal disability benefit or any workmen's compensation benefit.

¹⁴ Employment permitted without suspension of benefits. Applies to all types of benefit except disability. If retired worker's benefit is suspended, so are benefits of dependents.

¹⁵ Provision applies only to wages; comparable provisions (but on an annual basis) for self-employment income.

¹⁶ Benefits are not withheld for any month when wages are $80 or less and when no substantial services in self-employment are rendered. Special provisions apply to earnings from noncovered employment outside the United States.

¹⁷ See table 2 for actual and scheduled contribution rates and maximum earnings base.

change in the financing provisions was necessary because the rise in earnings levels in the preceding few years was sufficient to pay for the benefit liberalizations. Because of the weighted benefit formula, as earnings rise, contribution income rises proportionately; benefit disbursements also increase, but more slowly.

1954 Amendments

The 1954 amendments extended coverage further to include virtually all types of employment. Brought in at this time were self-employed farmers, more domestic and farm workers, State and local government employees under retirement systems (at the option of the employer and the election of the group concerned), ministers, and many self-employed professional groups. Benefits were again raised by about 15 percent, and the retirement test was considerably liberalized and made more flexible.

The 1954 amendments also introduced the concept of disability into the program through the "disability freeze" provision, which is essentially a "waiver of premium" clause designed to maintain both the insured status of permanently and totally disabled workers and their benefit amount. The financial provisions were also altered. The maximum earnings base was raised to $4,200, and tax rates scheduled for the years

1956 Amendments

Additional coverage was provided by the 1956 amendments. They brought in members of the uniformed services on a regular contributory basis and all professional self-employed categories except doctors of medicine, and they made somewhat broader the coverage requirements for self-employed farmers and State and local government employees. Other important changes were the introduction of monthly disability benefits for insured workers aged 50-64 and the lowering of the minimum eligibility age from 65 to 62 for women workers, wives of retired workers, and widows and dependent mothers of deceased insured workers. (For women workers and wives, however, there is an actuarial reduction in the amount of the benefit.) In addition, the amendments provided that the child aged 18 or over of a retired or deceased worker may receive benefits if he became permanently and totally disabled before he reached age 18 and continues to be disabled. The financing provisions were signifi-
