- The Deputy Director, CAG is required to diagnose complex problems, develop initial and ongoing strategic assessments, shape and develop the Chief's intent, and author plans and strategies at operational and strategic levels of leadership. CAG regularly works within a high level of volatility and uncertainty, evolving organizational responsibilities, with minimal or incomplete senior leader guidance. Under such conditions, CAG is expected to coherently communicate and articulate alternative points of view that may run counter to prevailing beliefs or conventional wisdom.

- The Deputy Director, CAG will be required to perform the following duties: speech writing, report writing, research, and strategic outreach with think tanks, interagency partners and stake holder organization. The Deputy Director, CAG should be able to effectively organize and conduct planning and coordination within and between Army, Air, and Joint Headquarters, U.S. government agencies, non-governmental agencies, other national governments, and academic insitutions. Much of the work by the CAG requires a broad outlook and strategic vision and the ability to think several steps beyond short-term or immediate results. Therefore, when diagnosing complex problems that require strategic re-evaluation, the duty of NGB-CAG is to evaluate the utility of short-term goals in relation to longer and more lasting objectives and the broader national effort to achieve both operational and strategic success.
