BAE Systems provides specialized engineering and technical services to support the Missile Defense Agency, as well as U.S. Army and U.S. Navy space and missile defense organizations. With a dedicated staff of highly skilled engineers, scientists, systems analysts, and program professionals, we employ creative thought and advanced technologies to deliver cost-effective and tailored solutions.

Our capabilities span the life-cycle of missile defense programs and include: requirements definition, analysis, integration, and planning; systems engineering; test and evaluation; business, financial, and acquisition management; weapons lethality and effects estimation; and warfighter integration, deployment, and operations.

BAE Systems is responsible for the development and production of the infrared seeker for the Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) missile. BAE Systems has worked on missile defense seekers since the late 1970s and achieved the first hit-to-kill intercept of a ballistic-missile target in 1984. Our engineers and scientists are working with MDA to develop the next generation of advanced seeker technologies for missile defense.

Opportunities for supplier participation include engineering and professional services related to missile defense; component and subassemblies for missile and related applications; and specialized design and development services.
