Ĺ

(2) Background

Federal policy, to include Office of Management and Budget (OMB) A-130, Information Technology Management Reform Act (Clinger/Cohen Act), and the Federal Information Systems Management Act (FISMA) have mandated the responsibility for Agency Heads to ensure the protection of information and information resources.

The Chief Information Security Officer (CISO) of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), as directed by the Chief Information Officer (CIO), is responsible providing information security policy and oversight for all DHS operating components. In addition the CISO works to provide Department-wide Information Security training opportunities.

The primary management tool for the CISO is the use of DHS Management Directive 4300 (and associated publications) to communicate information security policy to DHS Components. DHS has established policy for Information Security; however, additional guidelines and methodologies will be required to address new requirements, as well as to maintain existing guidance. In addition, the Department must respond to new threats, mission changes and new operational requirements that impact Information Security. The Director, Information Security Policy provides this support to the CISO.

The CISO also works to provide training opportunities to further the effectiveness of the Information Security Program. As the principal advisor to senior department executives on Information Security, the CISO may require specialized Information Security Consulting expertise to address emerging challenges and operational requirements.

(3) Scope

This Statement of Work (SOW) describes tasks needed by the CISO and the Director, Information Security Policy.
