

Operation Crash

Current as of December 2, 2016

Operation Crash is an ongoing nationwide criminal investigation led by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife, Office of Law Enforcement. The investigation focuses on the illegal trade in rhinoceros horn and elephant ivory in response to international poaching and smuggling syndicates. Charges filed against defendants include violations of the Endangered Species Act, the Lacey Act, Conspiracy, Smuggling, Money Laundering, International Money Laundering, Mail Fraud, Tax Evasion, Bribery, and False Documents.

Demands for Rhino Horn

- Hunting Trophies
 - Some hunting trophies are legal to import for non-commercial purposes with CITES documents and FWS Declaration.
- Traditional Asian Medicinals
 - Traditional Asian medicinals are used for many ailments, including anxiety; dysentery; vomiting; food poisoning; arthritis; sexual vigor; and in Vietnam as a cancer cure, even though rhino horn is made from keratin, the chief component found in human hair, fingernails, and animal hooves.
- Horns and Carved Horns
 - Horns in a home are viewed as “good luck” pieces.
 - Carved horns are collectors’ objects and a sign of wealth.

Launching the Initial Nationwide Take-down

- February 17-18, 2012 - The “take-down” involved more than 140 law enforcement officers from multiple regions and supporting Federal agencies.
- Search warrants were executed in 13 States along with 8 arrests.
- This effort led to multiple indictments and convictions of numerous individuals who were operating large-scale rhinoceros horn and elephant ivory smuggling networks.

Types of Investigations

- Trade in raw horns
- Trade in carved items
- Illegal hunting
- Unlawful Exportation

Sentences/Fines/Forfeiture/Restitution

- Total prison sentences to date: 33.75 years
