Visitors of the Battleship Missouri Memorial and the Pacific Aviation Museum had an opportunity to see history re-enacted on Feb. 2 during Living History Day on Ford Island, Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam.

The day was, in part, a celebration of the 70th anniversary of the Battleship Missouri's launch along with aviation history at the Pacific Aviation Museum.

The Battleship Missouri (BB 63) was launched Jan. 29, 1944 and was the site of the signing of the Terms of Surrender by Japan to end World War II.

"Living History Day is a celebration child and how wide their eyes get of all things historical," said Josh Stutz, when they can jump in a helicopter coordinator, education department, or they can don a flight suit or they Battleship Missouri Memorial. "They have been concentrating on their anniversary and the history going along with that, and then here at the museum we focused in on Pacific aviation history.'

Thousands attended the event, including many children who were able to learn about history and meet people who have helped shape it.

Trailing by a point early in the second half, Pacific Command/Joint Intelligence Operation Center (PACOM/ JIOC) went on a 13-0 run and then hung on to defeat Headquarters Pacific Air Forces (HQ PACAF), 38-32, on Jan. 30 in an intramural basketball Blue Division matchup at Hickam Fitness Center, Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam.

Sparked by the play of guard Darius Richardson, a military family member, PACOM/JIOC slowly took control before Intelligence Specialist 2nd Class Rob Tievy connected on a 3-point shot to put the team out in front, 29-17, with 10:12 remaining in the contest.

"Overall, we knew we were better," Richardson said. "It's the first game of the year, so everybody is just trying to get used to each other. We just played better. We stepped up, played better defense, got a couple of steals and got a quick six points right off the bat."

While PACOM/JIOC finally pulled away in the second half, the team played the entire first half with HQ PACAF hot on their heels.

Tied at 4-4, PACOM/ JIOC went on a 5-0 run,

However, at the 6:47 mark, Ballers guard Tech. Sgt. Jorge Verlejo pulled up at the top of the key and swished a trey to tie the score up at 24-24.

"That was huge," said Ballers head coach Maurice Honeywood, a Department of Defense civilian. "I don't know if it was the turning point because I don't think it was just one play. It was Engineer Squadron Bulls.

Moonlight excursions provide outdoor recreation Reid Tokeshi

Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam Morale, Welfare and Recreation

Kayak excursions are some of the most popular activities offered by Joint Base Pearl Harbor-Hickam's Morale, Welfare and Recreation Outdoor Recreation Program.

A twist on these activities is available this month with MWR's moonlight paddle. Available when the moon is at its fullest, the moonlight paddle provides a different perspective to kayakers on the waters of Hickam Harbor. In stark contrast to the day, paddling at night means participants are limited to what they can see in front of them.

Guide Kyle Candilasa said it can create a small adrenaline rush because participants are surrounded by darkness. "It's sort of a rush seeing only what your headlamp show in front. It's a little eerie and fun at the same time," Candilasa said. The next moonlight paddle at Hickam Harbor will begin at 7 p.m. Feb. 14. Participants need to sign up by Feb. 10.

"You can watch the full moon rise, and if it's not cloudy you can see the stars over the ocean as you paddle out," Candilasa said.

Football dreams of Navy's first black admiral

Review by Bill Doughty

Long before becoming Navy's first black admiral, Samuel L. Gravely Jr., had his sights set on becoming a football coach. He loved the game, but his father — "deathly afraid" about injury didn't want him to play. Gravely Sr., a World War I veteran and pullman porter, thought his son's future lay with the post office.

Gravely's biography, "Trailblazer: The U.S. Navy's First Black Admiral," is the heartfelt tale of how education, hard work, perseverance and luck came together for a remarkable and inspirational leader, whose training to become an officer actually preceded the Golden Thirteen (first naval officers).

Gravely played football despite his father's fears. He had to hide his uniform behind the refrigerator during high school - until his father found it.

After high school he attended the all-black Virginia Union University in his hometown of Richmond, Va. where football changed his life.

Gravely writes: "One difference from high school was that I was able to play football without my father knowing it. The college had a gym with lockers, so it was no longer a case of trying to hide my uniform at home. One of the football trips in 1940 had beneficial consequences down the road. At the time, my sister Christie was going to school at Virginia State College in Petersburg. I went over there once with a bunch of football players, and my sister introduced me to one of her roommates, Alma Clark. Several years later, Alma and I were married ... "

One year later, World War II started in the Pacific with Imperial Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941. Gravely enlisted in the Navy after the Navy announced a new policy (April 7, 1942) to accept black Sailors into general service ratings.

It was a giant leap for the young man whose only life experiences were in the segregated south where every school he attended was all black and where he had to sit in the back of the streetcar or bus but in the front of the train, "which was the first place the coal hit."

At Great Lakes Naval Training Station and Hampton Institute. Gravely excelled in study, but learned, "I wasn't as technically minded as I thought I was." He came out as a nonrated fireman. deployment to the Pacific, Gravely USS Toledo, USS Seminole and The east coast would have seemed like a natural selection as a duty my roommates to look in another he was arrested for "impersonating when he became CO of USS CNO Adm. Zumwalt and his Zdirection," Gravely writes. "[Roger] Gibbons had been a schoolteacher. He'd been one of the great football players of Prairie View A&M, a black college in Texas ..." Gibbons suggested they take Horace Greeley's advice and "Go West, young man." They asked for and got orders to San Diego, which at the time was even more segregated than Richmond, he writes.

Gravely studied at UCLA. He considered his future and began taking pre-med classes, temporarily questioning his childhood dream of becoming a football coach.

He followed opportunity back to New York and Asbury Park, N.J. and excelled as a midshipman, studying at Columbia University. He expresses regret that instead of an assignment at sea in 1944 he was assigned to teach back at Great Lakes.

Soon, though, Gravely was serving aboard PC-1264, a submarine chaser homeported at Staten Island, New York City and operating along the east coast, especially near Florida. PC-1264 and USS Mason were the only two combatant ships with black officers aboard during WWII.

When PC-1264 went to Norfolk for a shipyard period to prepare for er there and joined his semi-pro would serve throughout the an officer" because the white military policeman had never seen a "Negro Navy officer."

After WWII, like a lot of his contemporaries, Gravely decided to leave the military and use the GI Bill to continue his education. He attended Virginia Union and got serious about his studies, majoring in history. And he played football. His coach was Sam Taylor, who had been the coach for his former roommate Roger Gibbons at Prairie View.

Another turning point came in 1949 when Gravely was invited to come back on active duty. The year before President Harry S. Truman issued an executive order (9981) which said, "It is hereby declared that there shall be equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed services without regard to race, color, religion, or national origin."

It was also a turning point for civil rights in the nation. (Like Seattle Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson and his father would ask in the next generation: "Why not me? Why not us?")

Gravely became a coach and leader not of football players but of Sailors. He would go on from recruiter duty to serve aboard the battleship USS Iowa, heavy cruiser struck up a friendship with a work- USS Theodore E. Chandler. He

In 1963 he was invited to the met President Kennedy and Vice President Johnson. He was in Emancipation Proclamation centennial celebration.

Gravely next served at the Naval War College and Defense Communications Agency. He commanded USS Taussig and then USS Jouett, a guided-missile frigate, later redesignated a guided-missile cruiser.

In 1971, Gravely was frocked to rear admiral, blazing another trail for naval officers. He served as director of naval communications and commander of Cruiser-Destroyer Group Two and then Eleventh Naval District.

In September 1976, back in Pearl Harbor, Gravely assumed command of U.S. 3rd Fleet, based in Hawaii. (Since then C3F has men and women." relocated to San Diego.)

In addition to his accomplishments, Gravely shares his challenges and personal tragedies. In 1978 his son Robbie was killed while driving on Ford Island in Pearl Harbor.

"Trailblazer" is written with Paul Stillwell, who in the preface White House where he and Alma notes that Gravely was born just 60 years after the Civil War. The afterward is a very personal Washington, D.C. as part of the account by Alma B. Gravely, written in 2010, of her life together with her "Sammie." Adm. Gravely passed away in 2004.

In 2009, the Samuel L. Gravely Jr. Elementary School was dedicated in Prince William County. Va.. Inside the front door of the school is the motto that Alma says expresses the admiral's philosophy: "Success = Education + Motivation + Perseverance."
