

DOL POLICIES ON GENDER IDENTITY: RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES

Since the Department of Labor's (DOL's or the Department's) earliest years, it has been committed to promoting equal opportunity in employment. This commitment, which has grown significantly over time, necessarily extends to all DOL employees and applicants for DOL employment. On April 28, 2011, the Secretary of Labor signed new, more robust policy statements making clear that the Department will not tolerate discrimination against, or harassment of, DOL employees or applicants for employment on the basis of their gender identity. These policies:

- classify discrimination and harassment based on gender identity as a form of sex-based discrimination and harassment;
- are consistent with the policies of other Federal agencies, such as the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), and the Department of Justice (DOJ); and
- reaffirm the Department's commitment to fair treatment of and equal opportunity for all its employees and applicants.

Why has the Department amended its policies explicitly to prohibit discrimination and harassment based on gender identity?

The Department's policies reaffirm DOL's commitment to fair treatment of, and equal opportunity for, all people. Policies prohibiting discrimination based on gender identity¹ help create the reasonable expectation of a safe environment in which all employees and applicants for employment are evaluated by their performance, rather than others' perceptions of, or level of comfort with, their gender identity or gender expression. Further, DOL's policies are consistent with the policies of other Federal agencies, such as EEOC, DOJ, and OPM, and this guidance document is consistent with OPM's Guidance Regarding the Employment of Transgender Individuals in the Federal Workplace. DOL's policies also comport with Executive Order 13672, signed by President Barack Obama on July 21, 2014, which prohibited discrimination in the civilian federal workforce on the basis of gender identity.

Studies have shown that transgender people face disproportionate amounts of discrimination in all areas of life, especially in employment. A 2011 study indicated that an astonishing ninety percent reported experiencing mistreatment, harassment, or discrimination on the job, including invasion of privacy, verbal abuse, and physical or sexual assault.² These statistics underscore the importance of the Department creating a safe environment for all of its employees.

Employees' and Applicants' Rights

Who is protected from gender identity discrimination? Gender identity discrimination can affect anyone. Policies barring gender identity discrimination not only protect those who openly identify as transgender or express their gender in a non-conforming way. They also protect other people against sex stereotyping -- for instance, women who some people think are "too masculine" or men who some people think are "too feminine." In summary, DOL policies barring discrimination and harassment on the basis of sex protect employees and applicants for employment from being harassed, denied employment or promotion, or otherwise subjected to adverse treatment because they do not conform to societal gender expectations.

What are my rights under DOL's gender identity policies? Employees and applicants for employment have the right to experience a workplace free of discrimination, including harassment. If you believe that you have experienced discrimination, you should contact your agency Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) Manager or the DOL Civil Rights Center (CRC), which is responsible for ensuring nondiscrimination within the Department and processing discrimination complaints. CRC may be reached by phone at (202) 693-6500 (voice) or (800) 877-8339 (Relay), or by e-mail at CivilRightsCenter@dol.gov.

Responsibilities of Managers and Supervisors

What are my responsibilities under DOL's policies barring gender identity discrimination and harassment?

- Communicate clearly with your employees about what type of behavior is lawful and appropriate in the workplace with regard to all forms of discrimination and harassment, including gender identity, and about what consequences your employees will face if they violate the law.
- The most effective way for a manager to set the tone in an office or other workplace setting is to lead by example. Treat with dignity and respect your transgender and gender non-conforming employees, customers, and others with whom you may come in contact. If an employee or customer begins to transition from one gender to another or approaches you regarding being transgender, or if other employees learn that a co-worker, customer, or other person with whom they interact is transgender, there are many ways in which your words and actions can lead to a welcoming and safe atmosphere. Some specific examples:
 - Names and Pronouns. Refer to each person by the name, and the gender-specific pronoun, by which the person wants to be called. If you don't know the preference of a transgender person, ask in a tactful way. Continued intentional misuse of the person's name and pronouns may breach the person's privacy, may put him or her at risk of harm, and in some circumstances, may be considered harassment.
 - Confidentiality and privacy. A person's transgender status should be treated with sensitivity and confidentiality, just as one would treat any other deeply personal life experiences. A transgender employee may or may not want to discuss his or her transgender status with co-workers. Respect the wishes of the employee.

- If the transgender employee indicates that questions or discussions are welcome, instruct other employees that any questions they ask or discussions they initiate must be respectful in tone and appropriate in content.
 - If the transgender employee wishes to keep information about the details of his or her transition as private as possible, respect those wishes. Do not ask the employee questions about his or her medical status or treatment unless such questions are necessary to address any workplace issues that may arise with the employee's medical plans. In addition, remember that medical information about individual employees is protected, and disclosure should be limited.
 - In either case, do not engage, and do not permit employees to engage, in gossip or rumor-spreading about the transgender employee, or about the employee's personal situation or medical treatment.
- Train your employees to treat all of their colleagues, customers, and others with the same dignity and respect.
- Managers and supervisors should also provide support for transitioning employees in other ways:
 - Dress and appearance. As part of the transition process, the physical appearance of a transitioning employee may change. In addition, employees who have begun a social transition will dress in the clothes and adopt the appearance of their identified gender. Agencies should not maintain dress codes that restrict employees' clothing or appearance on the basis of gender. Dress codes must not be used to prevent a transgender employee from living full-time in the role consistent with his or her gender identity. Transgender and gender non-conforming employees must be allowed to comply with dress codes in a manner consistent with their gender identity or gender expression.
 - Restroom access. The Department is guided by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) on the use of sanitary and related facilities by transgender employees in the federal workplace.³ OPM's guidance provides that, for a federal employee who has begun living and working full-time in the gender consistent with the employee's gender identity, federal agencies should allow that person to use the restrooms and locker room facilities (if provided to other employees) that are consistent with his or her gender identity. That decision should be left to the employee to determine the most appropriate and safest option for them.

Transitioning employees should not be required to undergo, or provide proof of, any particular medical procedure to use facilities designated for use by a particular gender. Under no circumstances may an agency require an employee to use facilities that are unsanitary, potentially unsafe for the employee, or located an unreasonable distance from the employee's work station. To ensure equal access, all single-stall restrooms should be accessible to all employees and have gender-neutral signage.

- Identity documentation. Consistent with the Privacy Act, the records in an employee's Official Personnel Folder (OPF) and other employee records (pay accounts, training records, benefits documents, etc.) should be changed to show the employee's new name and gender, once the employee has begun working full-time in the gender role consistent with the employee's gender identity. Employees should also be permitted to change any identity documentation, such as ID badge, email account, business cards, and so on.
- Sick and medical leave. Employees receiving treatment as part of their transition may use sick leave under DOL regulations. Employees who are qualified under the Family Medical Leave Act may also be entitled to take medical leave for transition-related needs.
- During the hiring process, hiring managers and supervisors should be sensitive to the possibility that applicants have transitioned. The name and gender on the application should correspond with the person's current usage or legal status; however, background or suitability checks may disclose a previous name that indicates a gender different from the one the applicant is currently presenting. In such cases, hiring managers should tactfully ask whether the applicant was previously known by a different name, and confirm with the applicant the name and gender that should be used when checking his or her references.
- Should you have further questions, please contact CRC at (202) 693-6500 (voice) or (800) 877-8339 (Relay), or by e-mail at CivilRightsCenter@dol.gov.

Gender Identity: Key Terminology

What is the difference between sex and gender? Sex (i.e., male or female) is assigned at birth based on a combination of a baby's biological characteristics, including chromosomes, hormones, and reproductive organs, and is originally documented on a person's birth certificate. The World Health Organization defines gender as the "socially constructed roles, behaviors, activities, and attributes that a given society considers appropriate for men and women."⁴ These characteristics are traditionally referred to as "masculine" or "feminine."

What is gender identity? Gender identity refers to a person's innate, deeply felt psychological sense of gender, which may or may not correspond to the person's body or sex assigned at birth.⁵

What is gender expression? Gender expression refers to how a person represents, or expresses, his or her gender identity to others -- through appearance, dress, mannerisms, speech patterns, social interactions, and other characteristics and behaviors.

What does "transgender" mean? As indicated above, society has traditionally expected persons who were assigned as a particular sex at birth to behave a certain way in relation to their gender: males are expected to behave in a "masculine" way, females in a "feminine" way. Transgender is an umbrella term covering anyone whose gender identity or expression does not conform to society's expectations for, or stereotypes about, people assigned a particular sex.

As an umbrella term, the word "transgender" is an adjective that covers a wide spectrum of people. It includes persons who are transsexual. A transsexual is someone who — with or without medical treatment — identifies and lives his or her life as a member of the gender other than the one assigned at birth.⁶ Transgender also includes persons who are gender non-conforming. Gender non-conforming people may not consider themselves transgender, but have an appearance or gender expression that does not conform to gender stereotypes.

What is gender transition? Some people have changed, or are in the process of changing, their social gender identity and in some cases, aspects of their physical bodies to conform to their internal sense of gender identity. This process is known as gender transition or transitioning. The World Professional Association of Transgender Health (WPATH), an international organization devoted to the study and treatment of gender-identity issues, has published WPATH Standards of Care, which provides clinical guidance to health care professionals on safe and effective treatment of gender-identity issues.

As explained by the WPATH Standards of Care, gender transition is different for each individual but will frequently proceed in the following order. First, the transgender person may meet with a mental health care provider to ascertain what steps are appropriate in addressing the incongruity between the person's gender identity and the sex that the person was assigned at birth. After appropriate counseling, the person may begin hormone therapy, under the supervision of mental and health care professionals. Prior to or after a period of time on hormone therapy, many transgender people make a social transition by living full-time—both at home and in the workplace—in the gender role consistent with their gender identity. Last, some transgender people may undergo surgical procedures to change their appearance to conform with their identified gender.

Not all transitioning people go through the same process. Some may not undergo medical treatment for various personal, financial, or medical reasons, but may modify their gender expression – their dress, mannerisms, and so forth -- to be consistent with their gender identity. Regardless of these factors, all transgender people are entitled to undertake the transition steps that are appropriate for them, and must be treated with dignity and respect as they do so.
