THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S
FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS
PURSUANT TO THE EMMETT TILL UNSOLVED
CIVIL RIGHTS CRIME ACT OF 2007

January 2014

INTRODUCTION

This report is submitted pursuant to the Emmett Till Unsolved Civil Rights Crime Act of 2007 (“The Till Act”).¹ This fifth Department of Justice (“DOJ” or “Department”) Report is updated with the Department’s activities in the year since the fourth report.²

Section I of the Report summarizes the Department’s civil rights cold case work and provides an overview of the factual and legal challenges we face in our ongoing efforts to prosecute unsolved civil rights era homicides. Prior reports gave a more detailed description of the initiative’s history and challenges. Since the last report, Department attorneys and FBI agents have continued investigating cases, partnering with United States Attorney’s Offices and District Attorney’s Offices. Prosecutors from the Civil Rights Division are actively traveling on several of these matters and have personally participated in witness interviews and other investigative steps in many others.

We have now concluded our investigation into 100 of 113 cold cases involving 126 victims. Though very few prosecutions have resulted from these exhaustive efforts, the Department’s efforts to review these matters have helped bring closure to many family members of the victims. This Section describes the Department’s efforts in locating the victims’ next of kin, personally notifying them of the closure, and providing them with a detailed letter explaining the facts of their relative’s case and our decision.

Section II of the Report summarizes steps we have taken since we began the Cold Case Initiative in 2006. It describes how our efforts to bring justice and/or closure to the families have evolved to the point where it has become apparent that we must regretfully acknowledge that it is unlikely that these cases will result in prosecutions. This Section describes our efforts to generate leads, uncover relevant information and heighten public awareness. Section II notes our cold case presentations at national conferences, in classes, and as part of town hall meetings.

Prior reports described the Department’s successful prosecution of James Ford Seale for the 1964 murders of Charles Moore and Henry Dee, including the Department’s extensive appellate litigation that successfully upheld this important conviction. Mr. Seale died in prison on August 2, 2011.

² The Attorney General’s Fourth Report to Congress Pursuant to the Emmett Till Unsolved Civil Rights Crime Act of 2007 was submitted on November 9, 2012.

Section III of the Report sets forth where things currently stand with respect to the 113 matters opened for review during this process. Section III identifies by name all 126 victims and the approximate date and location of death. It also identifies the three cases which were successfully prosecuted and the 97 matters for which, after significant investigation and review, we have made a decision to close without prosecution. In the majority of the matters that we have closed without prosecution, all identified subjects are deceased. In others, there is insufficient evidence to establish that a racially motivated homicide prosecutable under a civil rights statute, or any other federal or state statute, occurred, as opposed to some other manner of death outside the scope of the Till Act.

The Department's work pursuant to the Till Act is continuing. Although our investigations have reached an end in the large majority of the matters reviewed, our work on the remaining matters continues in earnest.

I. THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE'S EFFORTS TO INVESTIGATE AND PROSECUTE UNSOLVED CIVIL RIGHTS ERA HOMICIDES

A. Overview and Background

For more than 50 years, the Department has been instrumental in bringing justice to some of the nation's most horrific civil rights era crimes, including through the Department's groundbreaking 1967 federal prosecution of 19 subjects for the 1964 murders of three civil rights workers in Philadelphia, Mississippi, a case commonly referred to as the "Mississippi Burning" case in which seven defendants were convicted. Unfortunately, federal jurisdiction over these historic cases is quite limited. The Ex Post Facto Clause of the Constitution and federal statutory law limit the Department's ability to prosecute most civil rights era cases at the federal level because key federal hate crimes laws were enacted after the matters in this initiative occurred. Similarly, the five-year statute of limitations on even death-resulting federal criminal civil rights charges that existed prior to 1994 presents another limitation on such prosecutions. The Fifth Amendment's protection against double jeopardy prohibits the re-trial, in the same court, for the same offenses, of persons who were previously found not guilty or who were convicted but received shockingly light sentences. There is no exception to this constitutional protection regardless of how biased the jury, how inadequate the prosecution or how misinformed the court might have been.

In addition, there are certain difficulties inherent in all cold cases: subjects die; witnesses die or can no longer be located; memories become clouded; evidence is destroyed or cannot be located; original investigations lacked the technical and scientific advances relied upon today. Even with our best efforts, investigations into historic cases are exceptionally difficult, and justice in few of these cases will ever be reached inside of a courtroom.

The Department has always been willing to reassess and review cold cases when new evidence came to light. Thus far, the Department's efforts have resulted in two successful federal prosecutions, and three successful state prosecutions, both before and since the Till Act. The federal prosecutions are United States v. Avants, 367 F.3d 433 (5th Cir. 2004) (Avants was convicted in February 2003, sentenced to life in prison, and died in prison in 2004), and United States v. James Ford Seale, 600 F.3d 973 (5th Cir. 2010) (Seale was convicted in June 2007, and sentenced to three life terms; he died in prison in 2011). The first successful federally-assisted state prosecution was the Sixteenth Street Church bombing case in which the U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Alabama, was cross-designated to serve as the lead prosecutor in two state trials, resulting in defendant Tommy Blanton being convicted in April 2001, and sentenced to four life terms, and defendant Bobby Cherry being convicted in May 2002, and sentenced to four life terms (he died in prison in 2004). The second successful federally-assisted state prosecution was the State of Mississippi v. Edgar Ray Killen in which the defendant was convicted of three counts of manslaughter in June 2005, and sentenced to 60 years in prison. The most recent successful federally-assisted state prosecution occurred in 2010, in the State of Alabama v. James Bernard Fowler. Fowler was convicted in November 2010 and sentenced to six months imprisonment.

In October 2008, the Till Act was signed into law, directing the Department to designate a Deputy Chief in the Civil Rights Division to coordinate the investigation and prosecution of civil rights era homicides, and a Supervisory Special Agent in the FBI's Civil Rights Unit to coordinate the investigation of these cases. The Civil Rights Division and the FBI were also given the authority to work with State and local law enforcement officials.

II. THE COLD CASE INITIATIVE

A. Overview

In order to further the Department's commitment to investigating and prosecuting civil rights era homicides, the FBI in 2006 began its Cold Case Initiative (the Initiative) to identify and investigate the murders committed during the civil rights era. Department lawyers and agents have jointly participated in a multi-faceted strategy to address these investigations.

As detailed more fully in prior reports, the first step in the Initiative was to identify cases for inclusion by having each of the 56 FBI field offices identify cases within its jurisdiction that might warrant review. In 2007, we began the next phase of the Initiative, which includes an ongoing partnership with community groups to identify cases, and an extensive outreach campaign to solicit assistance from those groups and the academic community, media, and state and local law enforcement organizations. When our work on the Initiative began, we had identified 95 matters for inclusion. Largely as a result of our outreach efforts, that number has now grown to 113, including one matter added just this year. At a minimum, we believe that our demonstrated commitment already has provided the communities with the assurance that they are being heard and that the Department is doing everything possible to investigate these important cases.

B. Ongoing Outreach Efforts

As part of the Department's efforts to uncover relevant information regarding our unsolved civil rights era homicides, we have engaged in a comprehensive outreach program, meeting with a broad array of interested individuals and organizations.

i. Meetings with NGOs and Community Activists

Senior officials with the Department and the FBI have met with and will continue to meet with representatives from the NAACP, SPLC, and the National Urban League. In addition to these formal meetings, senior Department officials are in regular contact with interested individuals and groups. We expect these productive dialogues with these groups to continue throughout the Initiative.

ii. Law Enforcement Outreach

We have also reached out to federal and local law enforcement officials and organizations, including all 56 FBI field offices and all U.S. Attorney's Offices, to educate them about the Till Act and to solicit assistance and information. A Department official presented on the Till Act at the Criminal Civil Rights Conferences at the National Advocacy Center in Columbia, South Carolina, in, 2009, 2011, and 2013.

iii. Collaboration with Academic Communities

In January 2008, November 2008, July 2009, October 2009, October 2010, and October 2012, Department officials met with professors from the Syracuse University College of Law. The Syracuse Law School founded a Cold Case Justice Initiative (CCJI) project in response to the unsolved 1964 murder in Ferriday, Louisiana, of shoe shop owner Frank Morris, who suffered fatal burns when his store was set on fire, presumably by members of the Ku Klux Klan. Under the supervision of two professors, Syracuse University College of Law students have researched thousands of documents related to the Morris matter and other cold cases in that geographic area. Unfortunately, despite the efforts of students, professors, journalists, FBI agents, and state and federal prosecutors, and despite the added incentive of a substantial monetary reward offered by the FBI for information leading to an indictment, there was insufficient evidence to support a criminal prosecution of any living subject and that matter has also now been closed.

We have also been in contact with a professor from Northeastern University School of Law, who is directing Northeastern University's Civil Rights and Restorative Justice Project, which engages students in matters relating to the civil rights movement. These students have also done extensive research on a number of our cold cases, and have shared their findings with us. As a direct result of their research, we have added a new case to our list this year.

We have also worked with students from Louisiana State University's Cold Case Project, which focuses on civil rights era homicides in Louisiana and Mississippi and regularly sends students to Washington, D.C. to conduct research at the National Archives. FBI officials have regularly met with the students during their trips, including meetings in April and November of this year.

iv. Media Outreach

The Department and the FBI conducted an aggressive media outreach campaign, granting interviews over the tenure of the Initiative to the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Baltimore Sun, National Public Radio, the British Broadcasting Company, 60 Minutes, Dateline, and local media outlets to continue to elicit the public's assistance with locating witnesses to these crimes, as well as family members of the victims.

The FBI has coordinated with a documentarian filmmaker who has made a number of documentaries on individual cold cases. A series of these documentaries called "The Injustice Files" were aired on Discovery Channel's "Investigative Discovery" in 2011. The FBI has continued to coordinate with this filmmaker for a planned second series of cold case documentaries to air in 2014.

The Department continues to meet with journalists to seek input, ideas, and possible leads. For instance, we are frequently in contact with members of the Civil Rights Cold Case Project, a multi-partner, multi-platform effort focused on the unresolved history of the South during the civil rights era, seeking any information that it may have relevant to cold cases. Among the participants in that project are investigative reporters from Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, who are vigorously investigating the matters in their respective regions. Investigative reporters from Michigan and Massachusetts are also contributing to the project. Another participant in that project is a documentary filmmaker from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, who provided the Department with invaluable information during the investigation and successful prosecution of the James Ford Seale case.

C. Prosecutions

The Cold Case Initiative resulted in one successful federal prosecution which was upheld on appeal in 2010. This case involved the 1964 murders of 19-year-olds Charles Moore and Henry Dee in Franklin County, Mississippi. More detailed facts of this case were included in prior reports. Seale was convicted in June 2007 of two counts of kidnapping and one count of conspiracy, and was sentenced to three life terms. On March 12, 2010, Seale's conviction was affirmed by the original Fifth Circuit panel. On October 4, 2010, Seale's petition for certiorari review to the U.S. Supreme Court was denied. Seale died in prison on August 2, 2011.

There has also been a successful state prosecution since passage of the Till Act. This case involved the February 18, 1965, shooting of Jimmie Lee Jackson by then-Alabama State Trooper James Bonard Fowler following a civil rights protest in Marion, Alabama. In May 2007, the District Attorney for Perry County, Alabama, filed murder charges against Fowler. The FBI lent its assistance to local investigators and the District Attorney's Office in connection with the case. On November 15, 2010, the seventy-seven year old Fowler pleaded guilty to manslaughter, and received a six-month prison sentence.

D. Notifying Victim Family Members

During the past five years, the FBI has completed its work on most of the investigations and has submitted them to the Department for review. The Department's review of these investigations and the thousands of documents provided by the FBI is ongoing. Unfortunately, during this process, it has become apparent that due to the many impediments discussed earlier in this Report, it is unlikely that any of these remaining cases will be prosecuted.

In an effort to nonetheless bring some sense of closure to the family members of these victims, the Department is writing letters to the next of kin when found. We have also made the decision to have FBI agents hand deliver these letters to known family members.

The FBI has devoted considerable resources to locating the next of kin for the victims, successfully locating family members for 102 of the 126 victims. The FBI continues its efforts to locate victim family members.

III. COLD CASE STUDY AND REPORT

As set forth above, the Department's efforts to investigate and prosecute unsolved civil rights era homicide cases predate the Till Act. During the course of the Department's focus on these matters, we have opened 113 matters, involving 126 victims, for review. Seven of those matters have been opened since the First Report to Congress was submitted in May 2009; 17 of them have been added since the Initiative's inception.

Eight of the 113 matters have been referred to state authorities. One of those matters is In re: Emmett Till. The District Attorney for the 4th Judicial District of Mississippi presented the matter to a grand jury in February 2007, and the grand jury declined to issue any new indictments.

Thus far, our review has revealed only limited federal statutory authority for any of the matters, such as the federal murder statute used in United States v. Avants and the federal kidnapping statute used in United States v. Seale. In 51 of the cases closed without prosecution, all identified subjects are deceased. In 31 of the closed cases, there was insufficient evidence of a potential violation of a criminal civil rights statute, as opposed to an accidental death, a suicide, a heart attack, a homicide committed by a black subject for non-racial reasons, or some other manner of death outside the scope of the Till Act.

Since January 2007, at least 72 federal prosecutors have worked on cases under review as part of the Department’s Cold Case Initiative and the Till Act. The resources involved in a viable prosecution are enormous. More than 40 federal employees participated in the Seale prosecution alone. That number does not include the numerous retired federal employees, local law enforcement officials, or contract employees who provided additional assistance.

No funding has been appropriated for grants under the Till Act, and the Department has received no applications for grants from state or local law enforcement agencies under the Till Act.

Below is a chart listing the 126 victims whose deaths the Department has reviewed and is reviewing in accordance with the Till Act:
