All three of the U.S. Department of Labor's (USDOL) flagship reports on international child labor and forced labor are available on the USDOL website in HTML and PDF formats at <https://www.dol.gov/agencies/ilab/resources/reports/child-labor>. These reports include Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, as required by the Trade and Development Act of 2000; List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor, as required by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005; and List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor, as required by Executive Order 13126. On our website, you can navigate to individual country pages, where you can find information on the prevalence and sectoral distribution of the worst forms of child labor in the country, specific goods produced by child labor or forced labor in the country, the legal framework on child labor, enforcement of laws related to child labor, coordination of government efforts on child labor, government policies related to child labor, social programs to address child labor, and specific suggestions for government actions to address the issue.

Foreword

For more than 25 years, the Department of Labor's Bureau of International Labor Affairs (ILAB) has conducted research and reporting to inform U.S. foreign and trade policy with the aim, among others, of shining a light on labor abuses in key sectors across the world. As the economy becomes more global and supply chains more extensive, ILAB's effort to reveal abusive child labor and forced labor practices becomes even more important.

Central to those efforts are ILAB's annual Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor and biennial List of Goods Produced by Child or Forced Labor. The reports provide specific, actionable information to governments, businesses, non-profits, and other key actors in the global economy on how to combat child labor and forced labor in more than 145 countries and territories. Policymakers and companies can rely on these reports to conduct risk assessments, perform due diligence on supply chains, and develop strategies to address child labor and forced labor.

To assist businesses in identifying risks and in remediating abuses in their supply chains, the Department of Labor also offers the Comply Chain smartphone app. This year, we updated its content with real-world examples of actions taken by companies to ensure workers in their supply chains are not exploited. These examples will give businesses additional tools and ideas on ways to ensure compliance and prevent labor abuses.

The historic United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA) adopted earlier this year provides ILAB another important opportunity for impact, as the agency works with key trading partners on increasing and strengthening labor protections through technical assistance, capacity-building projects, and cutting-edge research. The USMCA explicitly requires each country to prohibit the importation of goods made with forced labor, and ILAB's research and reporting will play a key role in the implementation of this provision.

While it is heartening to see in this year's reports that some countries have progressed in combatting child or forced labor practices within their borders, other nations have taken a step back. And unfortunately, some of the world's largest economies are home to some of the worst violators. As the world grapples with a pandemic, forced labor and unacceptable child labor is likely to become more frequent, not less. Ending these practices demands persistence and requires that all of us around the world, whether businesses, governments, or worker advocates, do our part by sharing our expertise, our lessons learned, and our best practices. Our hope is that these reports will be valuable tools in those efforts.

Purpose of This Report

Research Focus of the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor Report

The Department has prepared this 19th annual report on the 2019 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor in accordance with the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA). (1) The TDA set forth the requirement that a country implement its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor for the President of the United States to consider designating the country a beneficiary developing country under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program. (2; 3) The TDA also mandated that the President submit to the United States Congress the Secretary of Labor's findings with respect to each "beneficiary country's implementation of its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor." (1) ILAB carries out this responsibility on behalf of the Secretary.

Country Coverage

This report covers 119 independent countries and 15 non-independent countries and territories designated as GSP beneficiaries. This includes former GSP recipients who have negotiated free trade agreements with the United States. (4) Because the population of children is extremely small (fewer than 50) or non-existent in the British Indian Ocean Territory, Heard Island and McDonald Islands, and the Pitcairn Islands, the report does not contain a discussion of these three non-independent countries and territories. This 2019 report presents information on child labor and the worst forms of child labor and efforts to eliminate this exploitation in the remaining 119 countries and 12 non-independent countries and territories. The use of “countries” in this report includes territories, and because the report focuses on government efforts, non-independent countries and territories are classified by their associated regions.

Population Covered

In undertaking research on the “worst forms of child labor,” ILAB relied on the TDA definition of a child, which is the same definition contained in ILO Convention No. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (ILO C. 182). The TDA and ILO C. 182 define “child” as a person under the age of 18.

Reporting Period

The reporting period for this year’s report is January 2019 through December 2019. In certain cases, significant events or government efforts that occurred in early 2020 were included, as appropriate.

Type of Work

This report focuses on child labor and the worst forms of child labor. Definitions related to these types of work are guided by ILO C. 138 on Minimum Age and ILO C. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Child labor includes work below the minimum age as established in national legislation (excluding permissible light work), the worst forms of child labor, and hazardous unpaid household services. The definition of the “worst forms of child labor” is found in the TDA and is the same as that included in ILO C. 182. It includes (a) all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale or trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, or forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict; (b) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic performances; (c) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs; and (d) work which, by its nature or the circumstances under which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children. (1; 5) Similar to ILO C. 182, the TDA states that the work described in subparagraph (d) should be “determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved.”

Asking the Right Questions to Trace Labor Abuses in Global Supply Chains

Global Benefits and a Persistent Problem

What do product quality control measures have in common with efforts to eliminate child labor? In a word: traceability. In the case of product safety-related issues, traceability is crucial as quality control experts and operations managers race to link the faulty product to the source. Just as in identifying the origin of defective products to limit harm, the world also has sought to trace the origins of various goods and products as a way to combat child labor and forced labor in those supply chains by asking the right questions: “Who made this and under what conditions?”

Global supply chains have created tremendous prosperity for our society as a whole, lifting millions out of poverty and providing livelihoods for many more; however, problems remain. Violations such as child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking have persisted as supply networks have continued to grow ever more complex. The latest global estimates highlight that 152 million children remain in child labor and 25 million adults and children toil under conditions of forced labor, including in global supply chains that crisscross our globe. (6) Many businesses at all stages of the supply chain, including major global brands, acknowledge these abuses. Businesses can play a critical role in improving working conditions for workers around the world – and many companies have recognized the economic benefit of doing so. These global conditions and the motivations of companies and governments to rectify these injustices have led to an increasing array of research on global supply chains with ILAB playing a pivotal role. ILAB is a leading voice and advocate through its support of research, tools, and technical assistance to aid those who seek to clean up global supply chains, and partnership with the private sector remains essential to matching these aspirations to reality.

A Sound Heard Around the World

On April 24, 2014, a garment factory building in Dhaka, Bangladesh collapsed, killing 1,132 people and injuring more than 2,500 – one of the deadliest structural failures in human history. This was not, however, an isolated incident, but rather another example to remind the world about these long-standing issues. (7) Only 5 months earlier, at least 112 workers lost their lives in a similar tragic accident, trapped inside the burning Tazreen Fashions factory on the outskirts of Dhaka. These events, and similar ones that have occurred since that time, continue to remind us once more about the mortal risks of labor abuses in global supply chains, prompting consumers around the world to question the origins of the clothes they wear and the conditions of the people who make those garments. Driven, in part, by this consumer sentiment and the history of concern focused on apparel sector sweatshops ranging back to the late 1980s, some companies began to push ahead to meet the growing consumer demand for transparency in supply chains. (8) As a government agency, ILAB has led many of the efforts to research and shed light on these abuses, partnering with the private sector, governments, and workers to help bring an end to these forms of exploitation.

Driving Global Research Forward

Informed action depends on quality research, and ILAB is a knowledge generator. Since 1993, ILAB has published more than 40 congressionally-mandated and Presidential Directive reports on child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking – covering approximately 140 countries – that have supported business efforts to reduce child labor and forced labor in global supply chains. In 2002, ILAB submitted a report to the United States Congress on the development of a reporting methodology on working conditions in the apparel industry in major apparel exporting countries, an industry that employs every sixth worker in the world. (9) The Food, Conservation, and Energy Act of 2008 (Farm Bill) mandated ILAB to work with the U.S. Department of Agriculture on a Consultative Group to develop recommendations to lessen the likelihood of agricultural products or commodities produced with child labor and forced labor from entering the United States given global child labor risks in agriculture. In 2012, ILAB introduced Reducing Child Labor and Forced Labor: A Toolkit for Responsible Businesses, the first such guide developed by the U.S. Government to help companies address child labor and forced labor in supply chains. Building on these experiences, in 2017, ILAB supported the first G20 Strategy to Eradicate Child Labor, Forced Labor, and Human Trafficking in the World of Work. ILAB also has contributed to the development of a number of other strategies to eliminate child labor and forced labor, from promoting economic development to conducting research, and from sharing knowledge to driving innovation.

More recently, ILAB has continued to support other critical research on global supply chains. A key piece of this ongoing research is the 2019 report Ending Child Labour, Forced Labour and Human Trafficking in Global Supply Chains. (10) This Alliance 8.7 report, partially funded and supported by ILAB, provides the first-ever estimates of child labor in global supply chains and highlights the often indirect link between the two. This latest research confirmed an indispensable fact: that a significant share of child labor in global supply chains occurs in the lower tiers, in activities such as raw material extraction and agriculture, making due diligence, visibility, and traceability even more challenging. In the face of this challenge, ILAB has sought to be a crucial partner and mentor to those working on these efforts as the world demands more coherence on actions against child labor, forced labor, human trafficking, and modern slavery.

Challenges Ahead

The shortage of data sets, as well as gaps in existing ones, hinder efforts to accurately estimate the scale of child labor and forced labor in global supply chains. Nevertheless, ILAB is committed to leading with our global partners and other researchers to refine and improve traceability methodology and to support complementary, related research. To that end, dialogue among stakeholders must continue on persistent and complex questions like commodity pricing and fair wages for small-scale producers. Additionally, further research is needed on workers that play a supporting role, but are outside a business's direct supply chain. These workers may be involved in providing supplementary manufacturing inputs and the raw materials from farms and forests. In the face of these challenges, more work is needed to link customer to brand to supplier to producer and thereby paint a definitive picture of the complete supply chain.

ILAB as a Leading Actor on Supply Chains

Beyond efforts at a macro level to overcome these hurdles, ILAB collaborates directly with private sector partners aiming to eradicate labor abuses from their supply chains. ILAB provides critical tools to businesses and consumers that help promote a fair global playing field for workers and companies, including our essential reporting, a tool for the business community called Comply Chain, and our technical assistance.

Our Essential Reporting

Since 1993, ILAB has developed a unique approach to using its research to combat labor abuses. ILAB's List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor and the List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor identify supply chains that violate international labor standards and highlight particular goods and products with evidence of abusive labor practices. The annual Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report focuses on the efforts of 131 countries and territories to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through legislation, enforcement mechanisms, policies, and social programs. ILAB employs a systematic and rigorous process, supporting the collection of in-country data, traveling to conduct firsthand research in hard-to-reach places, and corroborating reports of labor abuses with credible international and local sources. This approach helps ensure the credibility and validity of ILAB's publications on child labor and forced labor. Together, these reports serve as a foundation and reliable resource for many companies as part of their ongoing risk management. All data and research from these three information-packed reports also are available through the mobile app Sweat & Toil, which allows users to access more than 1,000 pages of research in the palm of their hand. ILAB uses these reports to provide critical and actionable information to federal government agencies to safeguard federal procurement and prevent the importation of goods made with prohibited labor, as well as helping foreign governments build their capacity to end modern slavery in their countries. Additionally, U.S. and global companies rely on ILAB's informative reports to prevent and reduce labor abuses across their supply chains and global production networks.

Comply Chain – A Tool for the Business Community

While our reports raise awareness, ILAB also provides companies with a practical, step-by-step guide to tackle child labor and forced labor in their global production through Comply Chain: Business Tools for Labor Compliance in Global Supply Chains, originally developed as A Toolkit for Responsible Businesses in 2012. As child labor and forced labor continue to present serious and material risks to companies and industries, this smartphone and web-based app assists companies and industry groups seeking to develop robust social compliance systems for their global production. Comply Chain provides detailed guidance on eight critical elements of social compliance, including numerous real-world examples on everything from responsible recruitment to worker voice. It is designed for companies that do not have such a system in place or those needing to strengthen their existing systems. To provide companies operating around the world with the tools necessary to confront these labor injustices, we made Comply Chain available in English, French, and Spanish in 2018. Read more about ILAB's work in the coffee sector in Figure 1.

Do You Know Where Your Coffee Comes From?

The word "coffee" first entered the English language in 1582.⁽¹¹⁾ Today, much of humanity runs on coffee. In fact, the United States is the leading importer of coffee in the world (23 percent of total coffee imports), and Brazil and Vietnam are two of the largest suppliers.⁽¹²⁾ However, before that coffee reaches our cups, millions of individuals, including children, pick and process those beans.

Coffee is a risky business. Many coffee workers, often from marginalized populations, are paid on a piecework basis and face sub-minimum wages and excessive working hours. Hazardous conditions are commonplace. Moreover, the lack of labor law enforcement in many countries, coupled with ineffective responses from corporate actors, allows systemic labor violations to continue. As evidence of the widespread nature of these abuses, ILAB's reporting highlights 17 countries where there is evidence of child labor and one country (Côte d'Ivoire) where there is evidence of forced labor in coffee production.⁽¹³⁾

Beyond research, ILAB funds projects to address labor issues in coffee supply chains in Latin America and spur government action. One of these projects is the $2 million Cooperation On Fair, Free, Equitable Employment (COFFEE) project implemented by Verité and launched in May 2019.⁽¹⁴⁾ Leveraging ILAB's Comply Chain app, COFFEE focuses on the creation of a global compliance system and toolkit to enable industry actors to implement sustainable social compliance systems to reduce child labor, forced labor, and unacceptable working conditions.⁽¹⁵⁾ A subset of these tools will be piloted in three key coffee-producing countries (Brazil, Colombia, and Mexico) in tandem with training and guidance on the implementation of these tools as part of ongoing stakeholder engagement. More than 25 prominent coffee roasters and traders, industry associations, multi-stakeholder and certification initiatives, and CSOs have agreed to collaborate with the COFFEE project. Against a backdrop of the COVID-19 pandemic, the risks of child labor and forced labor have been elevated in communities that rely on the coffee sector for their livelihoods, especially where enforcement is weak and restrictions on movement for workers have been used as was the case in Brazil. Moreover, in Brazil, there have been proposals to mandate internal migrant quarantines and suspend enforcement efforts directed at mitigating forced labor risks, which has exacerbated the risk of labor abuse.⁽¹⁶⁾ Despite the challenges, it is through direct engagements such as COFFEE that ILAB encourages governments, companies, and industry groups to take increased responsibility for ensuring the dignity of workers everywhere.

Technical Assistance – Lending a Helping Hand as a Partner

ILAB leads not just as a knowledge generator on these issues, but also in the design and funding of innovative technical assistance projects to combat labor abuses in global supply chains. ILAB's projects in this focus area include program activities that not only touch upon aspects of traceability, but also certification and accreditation models, inspections, and even monitoring and remediation. These projects succeed through collaborative efforts to address the root causes of child labor and forced labor and to create an environment for work that is free of exploitation. Since 1995, ILAB has implemented more than 300 projects in more than 95 countries in partnership with more than 80 organizations and with the support and association of a variety of governments and private sector partners.

Campos de Esperanza (Fields of Hope) is a project in Mexico that involves multiple stakeholders in government, the private sector, and civil society working together to reduce child labor in migrant agricultural communities, particularly in the coffee and sugarcane sectors in Veracruz and Oaxaca. (17) The project links children and youth to existing educational programs and refers vulnerable households to existing government programs to improve income and reduce the need for child labor. Campos de Esperanza also strengthens the Government of Mexico's capacity to improve working conditions by addressing occupational safety, and health concerns in the sugarcane sector. The interim evaluation of the Campos de Esperanza project in Mexico found that building on existing private sector policies helped to increase stakeholder buy-in.

Our work in Mexico represents just a single example of our work in this space and the benefit of evaluating projects to generate new knowledge. Additionally, our previous work in the Philippines through the ABK3 LEAP (Livelihoods, Education, Advocacy and Protection to Reduce Child Labor in Sugarcane) project highlighted that forging partnerships among the private sector, civil society, and government requires time and a platform that creates opportunities for dialogue. The ABK3 LEAP project raised awareness, strengthened advocacy, and built the capacity of community, government, and sugar industry stakeholders to reduce exploitative child labor in 11 sugarcane-producing provinces in the Philippines. The final evaluation of this project highlighted the broad commitment from major sugarcane industry stakeholders to eliminate child labor. (18) From the outset, the project engaged with the Government of the Philippines' Sugar Regulatory Administration and piloted multi-stakeholder efforts to establish Voluntary Codes of Conduct developed separately by the sugar stakeholders in each province, according to the conditions in each province to enhance buy-in from planters and millers. The project also leveraged its relationship with SIFI (Sugar Industry Foundation, Inc.) to facilitate access for participant households to receive financial assistance from the Social Amelioration Program, funded through a lien by sugar producers, during major life events, such as childbirth or serious illness. The partnership with SIFI also served an instrumental role in engaging the sugar industry on child labor issues. This multifaceted approach to addressing child labor in the Philippines ensures that efforts to reduce exploitative child labor are sustainable, creating positive, lasting changes. The results are better protections for children from exploitation, increased opportunities for youth and families to contribute to their communities and to global growth, and a more level global playing field for sugar producers who play by the rules and seek to protect their workers from unfair competition and abuses of human rights.

A final example is our project Piloting the United States Department of Agriculture Guidelines for Eliminating Child Labor and Forced Labor in Turkey's Hazelnut Supply Chain, implemented in partnership with the Fair Labor Association. The final evaluation of that project found that two companies (Balsu and Olam – suppliers of Nestlé) had either successfully developed or enhanced their systems to trace and identify risk within their supply chains as part of the project. (19) These traceability activities enable the companies to identify age and worker origin and minimize potential risks, not just traditional business risks, but also the risks of exploitative labor practices. Olam enhanced the system it had in place prior to its involvement in the project by adding labor information, such as labor contractor details, to better understand workforce movements and promote more effective interventions. Balsu was able to develop a new tracing system through the project that combined supply chain (and farmer) traceability with workforce traceability. In short, ILAB’s support for this project has led to real change in pushing corporate efforts forward through the strengthening of collaborative and common responsibilities of both brands and supply chain partners.

ILAB continues to learn from our numerous supply chain-focused projects to improve outcomes for those faced with the reality of exploitative work within global supply chains.

An Evolving Mandate and the Next Frontier

ILAB is committed to innovative approaches that address labor abuses in supply chains. For example, the Bureau has initiated a feasibility study to pilot a methodology to trace the supply chain in the Indonesian palm oil sector. On June 3, 2020, the Bureau also issued a notice of intent to fund a project to develop and pilot methodologies to trace supply chains. Additionally, ILAB is expanding its own research into goods made with inputs produced with child labor or forced labor. This research grew out of the Frederick Douglass Trafficking Victims Prevention and Protection Reauthorization Act of 2018, which included a new congressional mandate for ILAB related to its List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor. (20) Specifically, the United States Congress added a mandate to identify, “to the extent practicable, goods that are produced with inputs that are produced with forced labor or child labor.” This new language asks ILAB to examine not only the inputs to goods and products, but also the final goods and products made up of those inputs that end up on the shelves of our favorite stores. ILAB’s expanded mandate reinforces the reality of the expanding parameters of due diligence across often complex and multi-tier global supply chains. Although some methodologies exist to trace the origin of various consumer products, this field is in its infancy and lacks any widely accepted and cost-efficient standards. ILAB continues to play a role in addressing this challenging supply chain issue.

Partnerships Remain Essential

Governments have a major duty to enforce laws and uphold fundamental workers’ rights, and should lead by example as a responsible partner in public procurement, given a government’s impact on workers connected to global supply chains. For example, consider the 37-member group known as the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). This group of high-income nations represents more than 40 percent of global gross domestic product (GDP). Moreover, this same group spends, on average, 12 percent of its GDP on public procurement – a considerable sum. (21) This high amount of spending highlights the importance of governments taking proactive steps in tending to their own supply chains. Furthermore, this is the reality for all governments around the globe, especially large non-OECD economies, which have the potential to contribute to reductions in labor abuses through responsible procurement policies.

One way that the U.S. Government protects fundamental worker rights is through the Federal Acquisition Regulations (FAR), which prohibit contractors, subcontractors, and their employees from engaging in specific types of trafficking-related activities. Additionally, FAR requires that contractors take appropriate action against employees, agents, and subcontractors who violate the prohibitions and that those contractors inform their employees about the prohibited activities and associated consequences. One of ILAB's flagship reports – List of Products Produced by Forced or Indentured Child Labor – is another example of the U.S. Government's efforts to responsibly manage its procurement. This List is intended to ensure that U.S. federal agencies do not procure goods made by forced or indentured child labor. Under procurement regulations, federal contractors who supply products on the List must certify that they have made a good faith effort to determine whether forced or indentured child labor was used to produce the items supplied. Additionally, the U.S. Government's trade agreements and preference programs require our trading partners to protect internationally recognized worker rights. For example, the United States–Mexico–Canada Agreement (USMCA) brings labor obligations into the core of the agreement and makes them fully enforceable, representing the strongest provisions of any trade agreement. USMCA's labor chapter also requires that each country prohibit the importation of goods into its territory from other sources produced in whole or in part by forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory child labor.

Furthermore, greater enforcement on the part of governments leads to greater compliance on the part of businesses. The business community is an essential partner in this alliance to delve deeper into the question of where our products come from. Eradicating child and forced labor cannot be achieved without sustained commitment from the businesses that mine, produce, manufacture, distribute, and sell goods around the world. Businesses create jobs and find workers to perform those jobs; these companies bear a responsibility to ensure that those working relationships respect national laws and fundamental labor rights. Some businesses and industry groups have long taken this responsibility seriously, through robust voluntary standards, due diligence, remediation, transparency, and engagement with stakeholders. Now, however, the combination of increased pressure from stakeholders, such as governments, and incentives to develop stronger responses is driving more businesses to acknowledge and address labor abuses in their supply chains not just as a voluntary commitment, but as a necessary way of conducting business today.

Partnerships are essential to address the problem of child labor and forced labor in supply chains. We need to bring together all key actors – including governments, international organizations, businesses, workers' and employers' organizations, and civil society – if we hope to truly accelerate progress over the coming decade. That is the kind of “all hands on deck” approach needed. Moreover, such an approach offers the added benefit of allowing us to leverage our vast, collective learning and experience. A greater impact in the years ahead is not only possible, but also more likely by sharing our expertise, our lessons learned, and our good practices.

We continue to recognize the importance of traceability to the quality of the goods and products that we purchase. Yet, traceability is significant beyond quality control: knowing the origin of all products and the conditions under which they are made is increasingly critical in all aspects. As traceability improves, it is increasingly possible to know whether child labor and forced labor are at the origin of the foods we eat or the clothes we wear. As ILAB continues to improve our ability to ask and to answer these questions, we invite you to join us in asking, “Who made this and under what conditions?”

20 Years of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act

In October 2000, the United States Congress passed a pivotal piece of legislation – the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 (TVPA) – that provided increased protections for trafficking victims in the United States, established human trafficking and related offenses as federal crimes, and strengthened the U.S. Government's service provision and prevention efforts. This Act served as the catalyst for two decades of rapid expansion of federal efforts to eradicate human trafficking and uphold the rights of survivors. As we commemorate the 20th anniversary of the TVPA's enactment, USDOL remains committed to working in partnership with other federal agencies and the business and non-governmental organization (NGO) communities to end human trafficking, both at home and abroad.

USDOL has an important role to play in the fight against trafficking in persons. Domestically, investigators from our Wage and Hour Division and Occupational Safety and Health Administration proactively enforce workplace laws and are often the first federal agencies to make contact with vulnerable workers and detect exploitation in the workplace. Our Employment and Training Administration leverages its resources and expertise to help trafficking survivors seek gainful employment when they are ready. Additionally, the Department works hand-in-hand with interagency Anti-Trafficking Coordination Teams, which streamline federal criminal investigations and prosecutions of human trafficking offenses.

Internationally, ILAB has been recognized as a global leader in combating the trafficking of adults and children for more than 20 years. We use our reporting on child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking to engage with and ensure that governments strengthen and enforce their laws, and that businesses do their part to rid their supply chains of child labor and forced labor. Furthermore, ILAB's programming to combat trafficking and forced child labor has expanded to some of the most challenging environments and sectors in the world – from deep-sea fishing in Indonesia and brick kilns in Nepal to palm oil supply chains in Colombia and Ecuador to cocoa farming in Côte d'Ivoire. ILAB has piloted strategies to prevent human trafficking and build the capacity of governments to combat labor abuses. ILAB projects have rescued millions of children from the worst forms of child labor – including trafficking – and provided them with direct services, such as shelter and rehabilitation.

The Trafficking Victims Protection Act and its subsequent reauthorizations have provided ILAB with clear and expanding authorities to combat trafficking in persons. In commemorating the 20th anniversary of this watershed law, we reflect on how far we have come and commit to continuing efforts to meet its goals.

2019 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The Year in Review: From Paper Commitments to Active Enforcement

Unanimous decisions do not come easily, especially on the international stage among 174 different countries. However, in 1999, the 174 member countries of the ILO unanimously adopted Convention No. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, along with its corresponding Recommendation No. 190. (64) Together, these instruments articulated a global consensus that child labor cannot be tolerated. The Convention called for “immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor as a matter of urgency” and called on members to “take appropriate steps to assist one another in giving effect to the provisions of this Convention.”

In 2000, the United States Congress mandated that the U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) submit findings with respect to each Generalized System of Preference’s “beneficiary country’s implementation of its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.” In 2002, USDOL’s Bureau of International Labor Affairs (ILAB) published the first edition of Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. In 2009, ILAB introduced country-specific suggested actions that governments could implement in order to accelerate progress in their fight against child labor. In 2012, ILAB established individual country assessments that identify whether progress has been made toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Today, the 2019 release of Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor offers more than 2,000 suggested actions to governments in 131 countries and territories to advance the elimination of child labor, with almost 1,280 related to improvements in and enforcement of laws alone. This report also highlights the meaningful efforts that many countries have made to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor, including through enacting and enforcing laws, coordinating more effectively among stakeholders, establishing policy frameworks, promoting quality education for children, and implementing social protection programs along with poverty alleviation strategies that address the root causes of child labor.

The 2019 edition also marks a unique milestone with the inclusion of Mexico for the first time. The report covers countries and territories designated as Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) beneficiaries and former GSP beneficiary countries with a Free Trade Agreement signed after the Trade Development Act of 2000 was enacted and for which there is evidence of a child labor problem. Mexico, a former GSP beneficiary, met the benchmark for inclusion in this year's report with the entry into force of the USMCA on July 1, 2020. Although our research coverage has expanded this year, ILAB's commitment to work with governments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor remains the same as we strive to move from commitments on paper to the active enforcement of and compliance with these ideals.

A Newcomer in the Report This Year: Mexico

As this is the first year that Mexico is included in the report, the country received no assessment. ILAB does not offer assessments in the first year that a country's efforts are evaluated and suggested actions are provided, allowing the initial report to serve instead as a baseline. However, it is encouraging to know that were an assessment provided, Mexico would have received a Significant Advancement, the highest assessment possible, as it made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas. The new country profile for Mexico includes more information, such as the results from the country's latest National Employment and Occupation Survey - Child Labor Module, and goods produced with child labor, including some that may be in your pantry. You can also learn about the government's new commission on migrant children and the challenges of enforcement within an informal sector that includes 60 percent of all workers. Figure 3 contains more information about the labor provisions and ILAB's work on the USMCA.

USMCA

The United States, Mexico, and Canada signed the USMCA to replace the outdated North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) in November 2018, and it entered into force on July 1, 2020. Unlike NAFTA, the USMCA includes a labor chapter that brings labor obligations into the core of the agreement and makes them fully enforceable, and places a priority on workers as central beneficiaries. Under this chapter, each country, including Mexico, commits to adopt and maintain in its statutes, regulations, and practices the effective abolition of child labor and a prohibition of the worst forms of child labor. The USMCA labor chapter also requires that each country prohibit the importation of goods into its territory from other sources produced in whole or in part by forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory child labor. Additionally, it lists areas where the three countries may develop cooperative activities, which include combating forced labor and human trafficking on fishing vessels and identifying the movement of goods produced by forced labor. As part of the United States' implementation of the USMCA, President Donald Trump established a Forced Labor Enforcement Task Force. The Task Force includes representatives from across multiple government agencies to effectively monitor and report on U.S. enforcement of the prohibition of importing goods made by forced labor. ILAB plays a leading role in using its expertise to design and implement programs that will assist the Government of Mexico in meeting its USMCA obligations to combat forced labor. USDOL, represented by ILAB, also co-chairs the Interagency Labor Committee for Monitoring and Enforcement, which will monitor implementation of the labor obligations under the USMCA and request enforcement actions when there is a failure to comply with these obligations.

Overview of 2019 Assessments

This year, of the 131 countries and territories assessed, eight countries – Argentina, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Guatemala, Namibia, Paraguay, and Peru – received the highest assessment of Significant Advancement (see Figure 4 for a global breakdown of country assessments for this year). These countries made meaningful efforts during the reporting period in all relevant areas covering legal frameworks, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs, which may have included taking suggested actions recommended in 2018. Furthermore, each of the eight countries met the baseline of minimally acceptable protections that countries must have in order to receive ILAB’s highest assessment of Significant Advancement. In fact, this year warrants special attention and praise for the Government of Namibia as the nation achieved the highest rating of Significant Advancement for the first time ever.

It is noteworthy that 14 more countries and territories would have received an assessment of Significant Advancement had they met this baseline level of protections. These include Angola, Brazil, Chile, Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Islands, India, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique, Niger, Norfolk Island, the Philippines, Thailand, and Uzbekistan. For more information about this baseline see Figure 5 and Exhibit 1.

Sixty-seven countries received a Moderate Advancement assessment in 2019. These countries made meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. Meanwhile, 27 countries received an assessment of Minimal Advancement for making efforts in only a few relevant areas.

Other countries also made efforts to address their child labor situation during the year, yet because they simultaneously continued or established a detrimental law, policy, or practice that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, the highest assessment level these countries could receive was a Minimal Advancement. Sixteen countries – Armenia, Azerbaijan, Cambodia, Gabon, Iraq, Kyrgyz Republic, Mauritania, Moldova, Mongolia, Somalia, Tanzania, Timor-Leste, Tonga, Uganda, Ukraine, and Yemen – implemented or maintained a law, policy, or practice related to access to education, minimum age for work, labor inspection, official complicity in human trafficking, or the recruitment and use of child soldiers that undermined other advancements made toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Dropping off the list this year after its inclusion for several consecutive years is the West African nation of Sierra Leone. In early 2020, Sierra Leone overturned its policy that prohibited pregnant girls from attending regular public schools or taking secondary and post-secondary school entrance exams – a policy that made them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

Additionally, some countries could not receive an assessment level beyond No Advancement because they had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents. Unfortunately, five countries – Afghanistan, Burma, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, and South Sudan – were found to be complicit in the use of forced child labor during the reporting period, whether it be for commercial sexual exploitation, public works projects, compulsory recruitment or support for non-state groups involved in recruitment, or participation in armed conflict.

Six countries received an assessment of No Advancement because they made no effort to prevent the worst forms of child labor: Anguilla, British Virgin Islands, Grenada, Montserrat, Niue, and Tokelau. Despite the lack of evidence of child labor, these countries lack legal frameworks that meet international standards, thereby leaving children without an adequate preventative mechanism.

Overview of Meaningful Efforts

Legal Framework for Child Labor

Around the world in 2019, many countries made meaningful efforts to strengthen legal protections for children from the worst forms of child labor. In South America, the Government of Colombia passed a law that granted birthright citizenship to children born in Colombia to Venezuelan parents, including those with irregular migration status, for the period from January 1, 2015 to September 16, 2021. This legislation was the result of a concerted effort by several ministries and agencies to facilitate access to education and health care, thereby reducing this population's vulnerability to child labor.

Moreover, several countries in the Indo-Pacific region acceded to international conventions and protocols related to the worst forms of child labor as a first step to incorporate those global standards into actionable domestic legislation. For example, Vanuatu acceded to ILO C. 138 on the minimum age, setting the minimum age for work at 14. Additionally, the Government of Tuvalu ratified ILO C. 182 on the worst forms of child labor. Burma also ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. Finally, Bangladesh acceded to the Palermo Protocol on human trafficking in September 2019.

In Africa, Ethiopia raised its minimum age for work from 14 to 15, significantly increased penalties for child labor violations, and extended protections to non-contractual workers. Namibia's new Child Care Protection Act increased protections for children from the worst forms of child labor. Coupled with its implementing guidance, this Act establishes a legal framework for the care of children; provides guidelines for the mandatory reporting of cases related to child exploitation, as well as the provision of protective service for those children; and stipulates penalties of up to 10 years of imprisonment for offenses related to the worst forms of child labor. Tunisia published its hazardous work list in the country's official register in April 2020, thereby bringing it into effect. The new hazardous work list prevents children from participating in street work, specifically the itinerant sale of items on public streets, beaches, and public transport, such as at bus terminals or on the vehicles. Learn more about hazardous child labor and the minimum age for work in Figure 6 and Figure 7.

What is Hazardous Child Labor?

ILO Recommendation 190¹ calls on governments to consider the following when determining work that is prohibited for children.

Work which exposes children to physical, psychological, or sexual abuse

Work underground, under water, at dangerous heights, or in confined spaces

Work with dangerous machinery, equipment and tools, or which involves the manual handling or transport of heavy loads

Work in an unhealthy environment which may, for example, expose children to hazardous substances, agents or processes, or to temperatures, noise levels, or vibrations damaging to their health

Work under particularly difficult conditions such as work for long hours or during the night or work where the child is unreasonably confined to the premises of the employer

Enforcement of Laws on Child Labor

Legislation remains just one side of the coin with enforcement of those laws representing the other side. Colombia's Ministry of Labor launched a virtual training campus for labor inspectors, including a course on Fundamental Rights at Work, which included modules on child labor. In the Indo-Pacific region, Sri Lanka was one of a few countries to increase its labor inspectorate funding, providing almost double the amount of funds – from $1,154,000 in 2018 to $2,110,933 in 2019. Moreover, the Government of Sri Lanka supplied all district offices with at least one vehicle and fuel to conduct inspections. Tunisia took enforcement actions against allegations of child trafficking – including forced labor – subsequently shutting down 11 associations operating unauthorized Koranic schools in 6 different governorates. In Jordan, the Joint Anti-Trafficking Unit held 39 workshops and 250 lectures on trafficking indicators as part of an effort with civil society organizations to raise awareness regarding human trafficking indicators. Georgia implemented a new law that empowers the labor inspectorate to conduct unannounced occupational safety and health inspections in all industries, including for hazardous child labor. In an effort to counteract the growing trend of online exploitation of children, Kenya developed a cyber-crimes unit. In 2019, the unit responded to 10 cases of cyber trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, resulting in 5 prosecutions. See Figure 8 for an overview of global enforcement efforts.

Coordination of Government Efforts on Child Labor

Globally, some countries undertook efforts to enhance and improve coordination mechanisms to address child labor. In Nepal, for example, the police created a new anti-trafficking bureau to assist in the rescue and rehabilitation of victims, and coordinated with their Department of Labor on hazardous child labor cases. A few other countries signed intra-governmental agreements to formalize coordination. In Paraguay, the Ministry of Labor and the Ministry of Children and Adolescents signed an agreement to strengthen inter-agency coordination on child labor. The South American nation of Chile's National Prosecutor's Office also signed a cooperative agreement with the Ombudsman's Office for the Rights of Children to improve the provision of services to children in need. Ecuador's Ministry of Economic and Social

Global Enforcement Efforts

Inclusion put in place an inter-agency agreement for the conducting of joint inspections, as well as set in motion the Inter-Institutional Action Protocol for the Comprehensive Care and Protection of Victims of Trafficking in Persons. Recognizing the need for improved coordination, the southern African nation of Eswatini – formerly known as Swaziland – launched a program with the International Organization for Migration (IOM) to strengthen coordination mechanisms to respond to trafficking in persons and ensure justice for trafficking victims.

Government Policies on Child Labor

The year 2019 saw a number of countries put in place policies that support the prevention and elimination of the worst forms of child labor. New this year is Sri Lanka's National Child Protection Policy, which places a strong focus on the pervasive issues of child sex tourism in that country. State involvement in the cotton sector in Uzbekistan has historically been a root cause of child labor and forced labor. In 2019, the Government of Uzbekistan took up a new Agricultural Strategy that calls for an end to state involvement in cotton production. Another positive development is Lebanon's new education policy, which allows all refugees to enroll in public schools regardless of whether they have the required documentation for school enrollment. Argentina's Superintendent of Labor Risks worked with the ILO and youth advocacy groups to adopt a new National Action Plan to Improve the Safety and Health at Work of Adolescents and Youth. Additionally, the new 4-year National Plan for Development in Costa Rica, which includes strategies for addressing child labor, is also worth commending. Finally, Guinea-Bissau also developed a new National Action Plan to Eliminate and Combat Trafficking in Persons.

Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Beyond policy, a number of countries implemented or strengthened social programs to assist in tackling child labor. In Central America, El Salvador published the results of its 2018 El Salvador Annual Multipurpose Household Survey, which found that around 101,000 children between the ages of 5 and 17 are working in El Salvador, a 21.69 percent decrease since 2017. Elsewhere in the world, Cambodia, Colombia, and Mexico each released results from national surveys that highlighted child labor issues in the production of particular goods and products. Read more about this on page 29. Farther south, Paraguay launched a program to provide support to street children. Under this program, government employees with a range of specializations, including psychologists and social workers, respond to tips from a hotline for reporting mistreatment, sexual abuse, sexual exploitation, and neglect of children, as well as information from roving street patrols in high-risk areas.

In the Indo-Pacific region, the nation of Bangladesh's Ministry of Labor and Employment began implementation of a $35 million, 3-year project – Phase IV of the Eradication of Hazardous Child Labor project – that seeks to identify 100,000 child laborers, reintegrate these children into vocational schools, and provide livelihood support for their parents.

Elsewhere, in the Middle East and North Africa region, Lebanon and Jordan continued to work with international organizations to provide educational opportunities to refugee children, including the Social Support Center in Marka, Jordan, which provided services to 20,000 children. Farther east, Mongolia's Unfriend Campaign monitored, raised awareness of, and investigated instances of possible online recruitment of youth into commercial exploitation, including sex trafficking and forced labor. In 2019, the Unfriend Campaign shut down dozens of social media pages attempting to lure children into false employment opportunities abroad, and referred several cases for criminal investigation.

Nigeria launched the Accelerating Action for the Elimination of Child Labor in Supply Chains in Africa (ACCEL Africa) program, which focuses on eliminating child labor in supply chains. In an effort to improve access to social services, the Government of Zimbabwe launched a mobile birth registration program, implemented by the Office of the Registrar General and some local governments, to ensure that citizens receive identity documents, including birth certificates. The Government of Uganda launched a program to rescue Karamoja street children working in Kampala and place them in rehabilitation centers in Moroto and Wakiso districts before reuniting them with their families.

Overall, these represent just a fraction of the numerous meaningful efforts to combat child labor that countries made in 2019.

Overview of Major Gaps

Unfortunately, 2019's report also highlights a number of gaps that continue to hinder progress against child labor. As was the case last year and noted earlier, the majority of the suggested actions in the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report relate to the areas of legal framework and enforcement, highlighting the persistent need to honor our paper commitments to confront these injustices with comprehensive laws and proper enforcement.

Legal Framework for Child Labor

Persistent legal gaps remain in many countries around the world, resulting in inadequate protections for children against the worst forms of child labor. In many countries in every region, from Bangladesh to Georgia to Guinea to Haiti to Lebanon, labor laws do not cover children working in the informal sector. Similarly, many countries have labor laws that only apply to certain sectors or exclude certain sectors from their minimum age or hazardous work protections. As one example among many, Malawi's minimum age protections do not extend to children working in private homes or on non-commercial farms. Other countries, including Algeria, Nigeria, and Niue, have not determined by national law or regulation the types of work that are hazardous for children.

Gaps persist in criminal laws as well. Some countries have relevant laws that do not fully meet international standards. For example, laws prohibiting child trafficking do not meet international labor standards because they require the use of force, threats, violence, coercion, fraud, or abuse to be established as a crime in a number of countries, including Bhutan, Brazil, and Cameroon, among others. Laws in Mongolia do not specifically criminalize forced labor other than forced begging and forced hazardous work, and laws in Afghanistan likewise fall short of international standards, as the law does not sufficiently criminalize forced labor or debt bondage. Many countries in all regions fail to criminalize the use, procuring, and offering of all children for prostitution, the production of pornography, and pornographic performances. In other cases, countries entirely lack relevant criminal provisions. For example, many countries, from Algeria to Ghana to Papua New Guinea, do not criminalize the use, procurement and offering of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Review Figure 9 to see an overview of global gaps in laws and regulations.

Enforcement of Laws on Child Labor

In the Indo-Pacific region, Cambodia received an assessment of Minimal Advancement this year because the government failed to take active measures to investigate, prosecute, convict, and sentence public officials who participate in or facilitate the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and debt-based forced labor in brick kilns. To make matters worse, reports alleged that Cambodian judges have accepted bribes in return for the dismissal of charges, acquittal, and reduced sentencing for individuals committing such crimes, in particular for those with alleged ties to the Government of Cambodia. The lack of prosecution of public officials facilitating the worst forms of child labor in Cambodia and other countries, such as Afghanistan, India, Madagascar, and Uganda, which is sometimes combined with bribery in the justice system, exacerbates the worst forms of child labor.

Around the world, labor inspectorates lacked adequate human and financial resources, likely resulting in gaps in enforcement of protections. In many Latin America and Caribbean countries, such as Honduras, Mexico, and Panama, criminal and labor law enforcement agencies lacked financial and human resources. Elsewhere in the region, labor law enforcement agencies in places such as Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Paraguay, and Peru lacked sufficient inspectors and training to adequately combat child labor.

A number of other labor inspectorates faced limitations in authority that hindered enforcement efforts. Sadly, the Kyrgyz Republic put a 2-year moratorium on unannounced labor inspections. Azerbaijan's inspection moratorium continued, and in neighboring Armenia, the labor inspectorate was not empowered to conduct inspections. Additionally, labor inspectors in Moldova only conduct unannounced inspections, even in response to complaints, when they demonstrate an immediate risk to the environment, life, health, or property.

There is a persistent lack of data on criminal and labor enforcement efforts around the world, but especially in the Middle East and North Africa. In particular, Iraq, Mauritania, Tunisia, and the West Bank and Gaza Strip each failed to provide information on labor and criminal law enforcement efforts. This lack of information presents difficulties with regard to verifying the strength of a country's enforcement of its laws.

Resource constraints are common in many Sub-Saharan African countries, and in some countries inspectorates are non-existent or not operational. For example, in Guinea-Bissau, limited resources, such as 1 vehicle shared among 28 inspectors with no budget for fuel, severely hinders the labor inspectorate's ability to enforce child labor laws. Burundi's labor inspectorate meanwhile owns no vehicles. Labor inspectors in the Republic of the Congo do not have access to government vehicles and must rely on the businesses that they are inspecting to provide transportation. Somalia does not even have a labor inspectorate, and the labor inspectorate in the Democratic Republic of the Congo simply was not operational during the entire year. These are only two examples that highlight this widespread issue.

Coordination of Government Efforts on Child Labor

This year's report also highlights on a global level how a continued lack of coordination can hurt a country's efforts to tackle the systemic issues of child labor. Across Latin America, some coordinating bodies did not fulfill their mandates. As just one example, in Bolivia, the ILO determined that despite ongoing activities of the National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor, there was no significant coordination on the part of this central coordinating body. Local and municipal committees of the Dominican Republic's National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor faced limitations in fulfilling coordination mandates due, in part, to a lack of financial resources. Whether the result of financial constraints or not, the lack of effective coordinating mechanisms can hinder a nation's efforts to promote unified action against the worst forms of child labor.

Because of weak coordination, border police officers and social workers in Bosnia and Herzegovina failed to properly identify unaccompanied migrant and refugee children as potential victims of human trafficking due to lack of proper protocols.

In Sub-Saharan Africa, it was the case that many coordinating bodies did not meet or fulfill their mandates, including in Benin, Cameroon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Guinea, and Togo, among others.

Government Policies on Child Labor

Many countries lacked policies to address child labor. Most acutely in the Indo-Pacific region, some countries like Bangladesh, Bhutan, Pakistan, and Tonga have not integrated child labor elimination and prevention strategies into various development or education policies. Despite a number of plans put down on paper, Fiji is just one country that has not approved any of their draft action plans to combat child labor and human trafficking. Kiribati and Maldives also do not have policies that focus on combating all relevant worst forms of child labor. Lastly, some countries, such as Algeria, the Central African Republic, and The Gambia, among others, have adopted various policies addressing child labor and human trafficking, yet research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Just as many countries face enforcement challenges, around the world, social programs to address child labor were insufficient. In the Indo-Pacific region educational challenges were common. In Bhutan, children living in remote villages, children of nomadic communities and migrant populations, and children with disabilities face significant difficulties in accessing public education – a common challenge in numerous other countries. In Nepal, children face some common global barriers to accessing education, including a lack of sanitation facilities at schools, long distances to schools, and fees associated with schooling, among others. More specifically, Bangladesh's community of Rohingya refugees are barred from its public schools, leaving international organizations to fill the education gap. Timor-Leste school principals also forced girls to leave school when they became pregnant, although no law or policy prohibits pregnant girls from attending school.

Similarly, in South America, barriers to educational access for children from vulnerable communities, including indigenous peoples, migrants, and refugees, often increase their risk of child labor. Children in Guyana's interior and rural areas have limited access to education due to poor infrastructure, long distances to schools, transportation costs, and a shortage of qualified teachers. Children in rural areas of other Latin American countries, including Chile, Colombia, and Panama also face challenges due to the lack of transportation among other barriers. As a reflection of this broader trend and despite legal access to free education, children in Ecuador face long-standing barriers to education, such as the lack of space and teachers, the lack of transportation to school, and teen pregnancy. The lack of schools in some areas of the country disproportionately affects indigenous and refugee children, as research demonstrates is the case in several other countries, as they must travel long distances to attend school and have limited transportation options.

In Sub-Saharan Africa, social programs in The Gambia do not reach all children working in agriculture and domestic work, or those vulnerable to human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and street work. Similar gaps were noted in Angola, Cabo Verde, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, and Mozambique, to name a few. For a more in-depth regional analysis of government efforts and challenges in 2019, see Figure 10.

Converting Commitments to Action

ILAB remains committed to promoting the dignity of workers everywhere. As ILAB strives to achieve this lofty goal, it is evident that regardless of the laudable successes in 2019 highlighted above, a number of challenging and persistent gaps remain in addressing child labor and forced labor worldwide. Tackling these key challenges must obviously involve the active participation of governments; however, governments are not the only entities that can make a difference. Businesses, civil society organizations, and even individuals can do so as well. As we reflect once more upon the year in review, let us all affirm our conscious commitment to extinguishing these oppressive labor abuses for the last time and move from these commitments to active enforcement.

The U.S. Experience

"The well-being of our workforce is core to the mission of the U.S. Department of Labor. That is why we work to ensure that labor abuses like child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking have no place in our economy or those of our trade partners."

— Secretary of Labor Eugene Scalia

Whether abroad or within our borders, the Department continues to be a major force in the fight against the worst forms of child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking. As a signatory to ILO Convention No. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, the United States has provided vigilant and innovative leadership in combating illegal and dangerous labor practices worldwide. At the same time, we have initiated investigations, programs, and collaborations to ensure that both minors of legal working age and adults enjoy safe and healthy workplaces and decent working conditions that comply with all appropriate laws. Doing so ensures that American businesses and workers not only benefit from competitiveness and growth in the short term, but also benefit from a favorable labor market for the future.

Our domestic initiatives have yielded safe and dynamic job opportunities for America's workers. The Wage and Hour Division (WHD) enforces regulations on the legal work age, permissible hours of work, earned wages, and hazardous occupations prohibited for minor employees. The WHD's YouthRules! initiative also promotes positive and safe work experiences for young workers (see Figure 11). Keeping work environments safe for all employees, regardless of age, is the mission of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. To help youth and young adults with disabilities find success in employment and adulthood, the Office of Disability Employment Policy is on the job, while the Employment and Training Administration (ETA) helps youth enter the workforce and be productive. Additionally, the Bureau of Labor Statistics gathers data on a variety of subjects, including child labor.

Together, these agencies have worked to expand employment opportunity, protect workers' paths to meaningful and rewarding work, and pave the way to a fairer and stronger economy that works for everyone.

The Federal Minimum Ages for Work

Since 1938, the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) has set crucial standards for the safety, well-being, and development of children engaged in work. Child labor provisions under the FLSA are designed to protect children's involvement in educational opportunities and prohibit children's employment in jobs that are detrimental to their health and safety. The FLSA includes restrictions on maximum working hours and types of permissible occupational fields for children under age 16.

- A minimum age of 14 for most employment in non-hazardous, non-agricultural industries, and limits on the times of day, number of hours, and tasks that can be performed by 14- and 15-year-olds.
- A minimum age of 18 for employment in hazardous occupations as delineated by the Department's 17 non-agricultural Hazardous Occupation Orders.
- Exceptions for agricultural and non-agricultural employment. For example, the FLSA does not restrict the work that 16- and 17-year-olds may perform in agricultural employment, and it permits youth under the age of 14 to work in non-hazardous agricultural employment outside school hours with parental approval.

All states have child labor standards and mandatory school attendance laws. When state and federal child labor standards differ, the rule that provides the most protection is the one that must be followed. For example, Washington state and Wisconsin have stricter regulations on child labor in agriculture than the FLSA. In these states, the minimum age for employment in agriculture is 18 during school hours. California, Hawaii, and New Hampshire also set their minimum age for employment in agriculture at 18 during school hours and 16 for individuals who are not in school. (22)

There were 1,838,000 youth ages 16 to 17 employed in 2018 and 1,790,000 employed in the United States in 2019. (23) Despite the restrictions and limitations placed on their work, in 2018, the most recent year for which data are available, there were 9 fatal occupational injuries among youth ages 16 to 17, and 13 fatal occupational injuries among youth below age 16 in the United States. (24)

Wage and Hour Division

The WHD ascertains for employer compliance with the FLSA's child labor provisions in every investigation it conducts. In fiscal year 2019, the WHD concluded more than 850 investigations in which child labor violations were found by investigators; 240 of these investigations found violations of the agency's Hazardous Occupations Orders. The WHD found more than 3,000 young workers employed in violation of the FLSA's child labor requirements, with nearly 550 of them employed in violation of the Hazardous Occupations Orders (see Figure 12).

"Child labor laws exist to strike a balance between providing meaningful work experiences for young people and keeping them safe on the job while not interfering with their educational opportunities."

Wage and Hour Division District Director, Thomas Silva
Portland, Oregon, February 28, 2020,
(Release Number: 20-334-SAN)

For example, investigations by the WHD resulted in three Chicago-area development companies – Maria V. Contracting, Prate Roofing & Installations, LLC, and Red Line Management – being penalized under the FLSA's child labor provisions. The WHD found that all three companies had employed minors in unlawful and hazardous occupations, which led to workplace injuries to three minors. The companies had allowed the minors to engage in activities such as working on roofs (in at least one case, without proper safety equipment), operating heavy and powered machinery, cutting power lines, and working around demolition gear. Subsequent injuries to the minors included electrical shock, bone fractures, torn ligaments, and a joint dislocation. The WHD issued a total of $127,262 in penalties to the three companies. (25)

"The U.S. Department of Labor's Wage and Hour Division is committed to ensuring minors and their parents are aware of the child labor rules and that employers comply. We encourage employment opportunities for minors, but they must be safe."

(Release Number: 19-1780-CHI)

In another case, the WHD found that Manna, Inc., a franchisee of 99 Wendy's and Fazoli's restaurants across 9 states, had violated FLSA standards regarding legal working hours for minors. In particular, the franchisee had allowed 446 minors to work before 7 a.m. or after 7 p.m. on school nights, as well as more than 3 hours on school days and more than 8 hours on non-school days. The WHD issued a $157,114 penalty to Manna, Inc. as a result. (26)

Employment and Training Administration

Through its various workforce training and development programs, ETA works to remove barriers to meaningful work and open economic mobility to more Americans. ETA offers such programs as the Registered Apprenticeship Program, YouthBuild, Job Corps, and Reentry Employment Opportunities. These programs especially equip and empower populations who face unique employment barriers, including youth who are out of school or involved in the justice system, by providing them with work-readiness skills and industry accreditation pathways. Additionally, through Executive Order 13801 (Expanding Apprenticeships in America) and the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act, USDOL is expanding apprenticeship opportunities and broadening special work-readiness opportunities for youth. These include the Industry-Recognized Apprenticeship Program system, which will enable more Americans to take advantage of apprenticeship opportunities.

About the Iqbal Masih Award

The United States Congress established the Iqbal Masih Award for the Elimination of Child Labor in 2008 to recognize exceptional efforts by an individual, company, organization, or national government to end the worst forms of child labor. The award reflects the spirit of Iqbal Masih, a Pakistani child sold into bonded labor as a carpet weaver at age 4. He escaped his servitude at age 10 and became an outspoken advocate of children's rights, drawing international attention to his fight against child labor. Iqbal was killed in Pakistan at age 13 in 1995.

In 2019, the U.S. Secretary of Labor selected Casa Esperanza (House of Hope), an NGO in Panama, to receive the Iqbal Masih Award. In 2020, the Secretary selected Damon Wamara, Executive Director of the Ugandan NGO Dwelling Places, as the recipient of the 2020 award. The recipients received the award in recognition of their extraordinary efforts to combat child labor.

Further information about the Iqbal Masih Award and USDOL's efforts to combat child labor is available on the USDOL website at <https://www.dol.gov/agencies/ilab>.

2019 Iqbal Masih Award Casa Esperanza (House of Hope)

Casa Esperanza has been dedicated to eliminating child labor in Panama for more than 25 years. As the first Panamanian organization to launch a child labor eradication campaign for Panama's coffee sector, Casa Esperanza has encouraged more than 30 farms to adopt labor inspection protocols, which in turn has benefited more than 10,000 children to date, and has decreased child labor in the sector by more than 40 percent. The NGO's initiatives and reports also were fundamental in the removal of sugarcane from USDOL's 2018 List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor as they tirelessly raised awareness of the prevalence of child labor in the sector, and propelled government action to address the issue. The organization's leadership and dedication has been instrumental in empowering the Government of Panama to achieve its mission of eradicating child labor by 2025.

2020 Iqbal Masih Award Dwelling Places

As the Executive Director of Dwelling Places, Damon Wamara works to rehabilitate child victims of human trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging on the streets of Kampala, Uganda. Over the past 6 years, Mr. Wamara and his team have worked tirelessly to rescue more than 1,800 child trafficking victims. These children are then reunited with their families and enrolled in schools. Dwelling Places also provides a catch-up education program, which offers an education to those who have never attended school. Mr. Wamara has collaborated with community leaders to create anti-trafficking committees advocating against children being taken to Kampala for work. Moreover, Mr. Wamara has continuously urged the Government of Uganda to create stronger laws aimed at protecting children from exploitation and giving them a better chance at life.

Definitions Related to Child Labor and Forced Labor

Definitions related to child labor are guided by ILO C. 138 on Minimum Age and ILO C. 182 on Worst Forms of Child Labor. ILO's Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labor, developed during the 18th International Conference of Labor Statisticians (ICLS), and amendments made during the 20th ICLS provide the international framework for measuring children's work.

WORKING CHILDREN

Per the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labor developed during the 18th ICLS, "working children" are those engaged in any productive activity for at least one hour during the reference period. "Productive activity" includes market production and certain types of non-market production, principally the production of goods and services for their families' use. The 20th ICLS introduced changes to the definition of working children to align that definition with internationally accepted definitions of work for adults. The new definition classifies working children as those engaged in any activity to produce goods or to provide services for use by others or for own use. In summary, the new definition includes the production of additional types of services for family use, unpaid trainee work by children, volunteer work by children, and other work activities by children. Since survey instruments are redesigned to reflect this new definition, the definition of "working children" from the 18th ICLS Resolution has been used in this report. The work that children perform may be within the formal or informal economy, inside or outside of family settings, whether paid or unpaid. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer, paid or unpaid. (27; 28)

CHILD LABOR

"Child labor" is a subset of "working children" and is work below the minimum age for work, as established in national legislation that conforms to international standards. The definition includes the worst forms of child labor. Child labor is a subset of working children because child labor excludes children who work only a few hours a week in permitted light work and those who are above the minimum age who engage in work not classified as a worst form of child labor. (27; 29)

WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The term "worst forms of child labor" refers to activities described and as understood in ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999. (30) Under Article 3 of the Convention, the worst forms of child labor comprise the following activities:

- All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, and forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;
- The use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes;
- The use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties; and
- Work which, by its nature or the circumstances under which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.

CATEGORICAL WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

For this report, the term “categorical worst forms of child labor” refers to child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182. This category does not include the worst forms of child labor identified under Article 3(d) as “hazardous work.” See also ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor, 1999. (30)

HAZARDOUS WORK

The term “hazardous work” refers to the worst form of child labor identified in ILO C. 182, Article 3(d), “work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.” ILO C. 182, Article 4, directs countries to consult with employers and workers to identify the types of hazardous work that should be prohibited by law or regulation. Hazardous work lists may describe specific activities, occupations, industries, or conditions. (30)

FORCED LABOR

“Forced labor,” under international standards, is defined as all work or service that is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the worker does not offer him or herself voluntarily. (31) Forced labor is work obtained by force, fraud, or coercion, including (a) by threat of serious harm to, or physical restraint against, any person; (b) by means of any scheme, plan, or pattern intended to cause the person to believe that, if the person did not perform such labor or services, the person or another person would suffer serious harm or physical restraint; or (c) by means of the abuse or threatened abuse of law or the legal process. (31) Circumstances that may give rise to involuntary work, when undertaken under deception or uninformed, include, inter alia, unfree recruitment at birth or through transactions such as slavery or bonded labor; situations in which the worker must perform a job of a different nature from that specified during recruitment without his or her consent; abusive requirements for overtime or on-call work that were not previously agreed to with the employer; work in hazardous conditions to which the worker has not consented, with or without compensation or protective equipment; work with very low or no wages; work coupled with degrading living conditions imposed by the employer; work for other employers than agreed to; work for a longer period of time than agreed to; and work with no or limited freedom to terminate the work contract. (32)

FORCED CHILD LABOR

“Forced child labor” is a categorical worst form of child labor under ILO C. 182. (30) Children older than the minimum age for work are in forced child labor if work is involuntary and they are under the menace of penalty. For children younger than the minimum age, voluntariness does not need to be established because children cannot legally consent to work. Forced child labor also includes work performed with or for the child’s parents for a third party under the threat or menace of any penalty directly applied to the child or parents. All children who are made to work as a result of parental forced labor are engaged in forced child labor. (32)

Appendix 3

ILO Conventions Related To Child Labor and Forced Labor

The ILO brings together government, employer, and worker representatives of member states to establish and supervise the implementation of international labor standards, and develop policies and implement programs to advance decent work. (6) International labor standards are legal instruments drawn up by these ILO constituents that set out basic principles and rights at work. They can take the form of either conventions, protocols, or recommendations. Conventions and protocols are international treaties that are legally binding on ratifying member states. Ratifying countries commit themselves to implementing the convention or protocol in national law and practice, and reporting on its application at regular intervals. Recommendations are non-binding and provide guidelines for action, either as a complement to a convention or as a stand-alone instrument. The following paragraphs describe key ILO instruments related to child labor and the minimum ages set by countries related to these instruments.

ILO CONVENTION NO. 138: MINIMUM AGE FOR ADMISSION TO EMPLOYMENT, 1973

ILO C. 138 establishes that the minimum age of admission to employment or work in any occupation “shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling, and, in any case, shall not be less than fifteen” (Article 2(3)). Countries whose economy and educational facilities are insufficiently developed may initially specify a minimum legal working age of 14 when ratifying the convention. Additionally, Article 7(1) says that national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of children ages 13 to 15 in light work. Countries that have specified a minimum legal working age of 14 may permit light work for children ages 12 to 14. (34)

ILO CONVENTION NO. 182: WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR, 1999

ILO C. 182 defines the worst forms of child labor and requires ratifying countries to take immediate action to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor for persons under age 18.

Among other actions, ILO C. 182 requires ratifying countries to take effective and timebound measures to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor; help remove children from the worst forms of child labor and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration; ensure that children removed from the worst forms of child labor have access to free basic education and, wherever possible and appropriate, vocational training; identify and reach out to children at special risk; take into account the special situation of girls; consult with employer and worker organizations to create appropriate mechanisms to monitor implementation of the convention; and assist one another in implementing the convention. (30)

WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR RECOMMENDATION NO. 190, 1999

Recommendation No. 190 supplements ILO C. 182 and provides non-binding practical guidance in applying the Convention. Among other provisions, it includes a list of working conditions and types of work that should be considered when determining what comprises hazardous work.

ILO CONVENTION NO. 29: FORCED LABOR, 1930

ILO C. 29 prohibits all forms of forced or compulsory labor, which is defined as “all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the person has not offered himself voluntarily.” (31)

ILO CONVENTION NO. 105: ABOLITION OF FORCED LABOR CONVENTION, 1957

ILO C. 105 prohibits forced or compulsory labor as a means of political coercion or education, or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social, or economic system; as a method of mobilizing and using labor for economic development; as a means of labor discipline; as a punishment for having participated in strikes; and as a means of racial, social, national, or religious discrimination. (35)

PROTOCOL OF 2014 TO THE FORCED LABOR CONVENTION, 1930

The Forced Labor Protocol reaffirms the forced labor definition in ILO C. 29. It requires ratifying countries to take effective measures to prevent and eliminate forced and compulsory labor, to sanction perpetrators, and provide victims with protection and access to appropriate remedies, such as compensation. It also requires ratifying countries to develop a national policy and plan of action to address forced or compulsory labor in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations. (36) The Protocol supplements ILO C. 29; as such, only ILO member states that have ratified the convention can ratify the protocol.

FORCED LABOR (SUPPLEMENTARY MEASURES) RECOMMENDATION NO. 203, 2014

Recommendation No. 203 provides non-binding practical guidance in the areas of prevention, protection of victims and ensuring their access to justice and remedies, enforcement, and international cooperation. It supplements both the protocol and the convention. (37)

How to Read a TDA Country Profile

Country Overview: Each country profile begins with an overview for 2019 in a single paragraph, starting with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2019. Following the statement of assessment, the paragraph offers a summary of key findings in the country profile. The narrative includes any meaningful efforts taken by a government, defined as efforts in key areas where the government advanced its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The narrative also notes the most common or egregious forms of child labor found in the country and highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

Section I: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor. The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of the worst forms of child labor in the country.

Table 1, Statistics on Children's Work and Education, contains at least four variables: percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children combining work and school, and primary completion rate. The majority of the country profiles have data for at least one of these variables. A smaller set of profiles contain data on children's work by sector. The age and methodologies of the original surveys that provide the underlying data vary, and in some cases, the surveys may not reflect the true magnitude of the child labor problem in the country.

Table 2, Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity, groups types of children's work by sector, using categories established by the ILO and Understanding Children's Work for national child labor surveys (Agriculture, Industry, and Services), as well as a category intended to capture work understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182, referred to by the report as "Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor." Sectors and specific activities performed by children are sorted into these categories according to internationally accepted industry and occupational codes.

The first table note identifies sectors or activities determined to be hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182, and the second table note provides the definition of "Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor."

The table is followed by a narrative highlighting additional sector-specific information and social, economic, or political issues that affect the prevalence of child labor, such as barriers to accessing education, or major socio-economic shocks to the country that may inhibit the government's ability to address child labor, such as a natural disaster or armed conflict.

Colombia

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2019, Colombia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor launched a virtual training campus for labor inspectors, including a Fundamental Rights at Work course with modules on child labor, and trained local officials on its Comprehensive Child Labor Information System. In an effort to address the education and health of the increased Venezuelan refugee population, the government passed Law 1997 that granted birthright citizenship to children born in Colombia to Venezuelan parents during the period January 1, 2015 - September 16, 2021. The Ministry of the Interior also collaborated with civil society organizations to evaluate the government's anti-trafficking in persons strategy. In addition, the government expanded the Eyes Everywhere anti-commercial sexual exploitation campaign. However, children in Colombia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. In addition, the government does not employ a sufficient number of labor inspectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Colombia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) The government publishes annual statistics on children's work from its National Household Survey. (3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Colombia.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children occurs more often in private homes rented online than in commercial establishments. (10) Some child victims of commercial sexual exploitation are allegedly recruited in schools by other students, and, in some cases, prostitution ring members conduct surveillance around schools in search of girls. (10,36) Indigenous women and children, as well as Venezuelan refugees, are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation. (36,39) Young girls suffer commercial sexual exploitation along the highway between Medellín and Bogotá. (10,34) In mining areas, trafficking of children for forced labor and

Section II: Legal Framework for Child Labor.

The second section indicates whether a country has ratified key international instruments related to child labor and assesses whether a country's legal framework meets international standards. This section begins with a statement about the extent to which the government has ratified key international conventions concerning child labor.

Table 3, Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor, lists the relevant UN conventions concerning child labor. A checkmark indicates the country's ratification, acceptance, accession, or succession to the instrument, considering that these actions have the same practical legal effect regarding the substantive obligations of the instrument as ratification. If other relevant international instruments, beyond those listed in the table were ratified during the reporting period, this may be recognized in a short narrative following the table.

A statement above Table 4, Laws and Regulations on Child Labor, indicates whether the government's laws and regulations related to child labor meet ILO C. 138 and C. 182, or whether gaps exist in the legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor.

Table 4 lists each of the relevant legal standards and notes which laws meet and do not meet international standards. The Table indicates whether a government does not use conscription for military service, whether a government does not have a standing military, and whether an age is calculated based on available information.

The table is followed by a narrative describing any relevant laws that the government enacted, or advanced to a significant step in the legislative process during the reporting period. If the government failed to take action on an existing draft bill that would fill a gap in the legal framework related to child labor, this also may be noted. The narrative also discusses why existing laws do not meet international standards.

Section III: Enforcement of Laws on Child Labor.

The third section describes the roles of government agencies in enforcing laws related to child labor and reports on efforts made during the reporting period. It begins with a statement about whether the government has established institutional mechanisms to enforce laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5), notes whether gaps exist within the authority or operations of the ministries responsible for law enforcement, or whether enforcement data are missing.

Table 5, Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement, lists the agencies charged with enforcing such laws and identifies each agency's role. A table note identifies whether an agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period. A subsequent narrative describes gaps in agency responsibilities or new information during the reporting period.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Colombia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government's laws and regulations are in line with relevant international standards (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Colombia's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the difference in the minimum age for work and the compulsory education age.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Decree 4807 of 2011 (44)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of Decree 4807, Article 28 of the Child and Adolescent Code (38,44)

In September 2019, the government passed Law 1997 that granted birthright citizenship to children born in Colombia to Venezuelan parents, including those with irregular migration status, during the period January 1, 2015 - September 16, 2021. (10,57) This legislation was the result of a concerted effort by the Human Rights Ombudsman, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the National Civil Registry (Registraduría), and other agencies to facilitate access to education and healthcare for this vulnerable population. (10) Although Congress drafted a bill in 2018 that would revise the Penal Code to establish more comprehensive criminal provisions to protect children and adolescents from cyber commercial sexual exploitation, the bill was not approved during the reporting period. (58)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Inspection, Monitoring, Control, and Territorial Management Department	Receives complaints of labor law violations and conducts labor inspections, including inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescent workers and compliance with other child labor provisions. Oversees the Internal Working Group on Child Labor Eradication. (4,45) Operates the Comprehensive Child Labor Information System (SIRTI), a child labor monitoring system that identifies children engaged in or at risk of child labor. (4)
Active Search Team for Trafficking in Persons, Sexual Exploitation of Children, Girls, and Adolescents and Related Crimes (Bogotá)	Uses a proactive investigation model to identify the crimes of trafficking in persons and the sexual exploitation of children, girls, and adolescents in areas of Bogotá where they occur instead of waiting for victims to seek attention at the national level. Created in 2018 by the Bogotá Mayor's office. (21,46)

Table 6 and Table 7 provide data on labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts, respectively, in 2018 and 2019.

Table 6, Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor, provides information on labor law enforcement data, including information about the labor inspectorate's financial and human resources; authority to conduct inspections and assess penalties; and actions and mechanisms to enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor.

Table 7, Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor, provides information on criminal law enforcement data, including information about actions and mechanisms to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.

Section IV: Coordination of Government Efforts on Child Labor. The fourth section provides information on institutions charged with coordinating efforts related to child labor. It begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, and whether any gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor.

Table 8, Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor, lists the country's key coordinating bodies; their composition, if known; and their respective mandates, as well as their efforts during the reporting period. A table note states whether a mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period. A subsequent narrative may include findings on gaps in their efforts.

Notes under each table identify whether the data included in the tables fall outside of the calendar year. A narrative follows each of these tables with more specific information on government mechanisms and efforts, and includes findings in which ILAB has concluded that government efforts fall short.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including the inconsistent coordination in human trafficking victim identification.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-agency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (CIETI)	Coordinates efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by MOL, includes 13 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations. (2) Oversees 32 department-level CIETIs throughout the country, each comprising municipal-level committees. (52) Held several sessions during the reporting period, including one in October to identify geographic "hot spots" with children active in child labor, including its worst forms. (53,54)
National Inter-agency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Coordinates and implements efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by MOL and comprises 15 government agencies. (2) The government did not provide information on activities taken under this coordinating body in 2019 for inclusion in this report.
Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF)	Operates Mobile Teams for Comprehensive Protection Child Labor (EMPIs) to coordinate government actions to protect children's rights, including protection from child labor. Supports demobilized child soldiers by strengthening family networks and increasing access to health services, food, education, and shelter. (4,12) Serves as Administrator of the Fund Against Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents. (55) Processes child labor complaints, operates hotlines to report child labor cases, and provides social services to children engaged in or at risk of child labor. (1,4) ICBF also has a National System of Family Well-Being, which promotes inter-agency coordination to protect children's rights including rights related to child labor, and designs, implements, monitors, and evaluates policies related to childhood and adolescence. (2,56) In 2019, the number of EMPIs under ICBF was reduced to 44 teams throughout the whole country, down from 58 reported in 2018. (57) The EMPIs increased the number of awareness-raising campaigns to prevent child labor in the Putumayo and Cartagena regions, where they provided services to migrant Venezuelan and Ecuadorian populations. (58,59)
Inter-agency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Leads and coordinates efforts among government agencies to combat human trafficking. Created by Law 985, chaired by the Ministry of the Interior (MOI), and comprises 16 government entities and 6 permanent invitees, including private sector and international organizations. (25) During the reporting period, the committee conducted 20 anti-trafficking in person trainings. MOI met in both September and December with more than 35 civil society organizations to evaluate weaknesses and goals of the government's national anti-trafficking strategy and establish indicators to measure performance under a forthcoming strategy, slated to run through 2022. (4,60,61,62) MOI also continued to lead the hotline that reports and tracks cases of human trafficking, and facilitated access to social services for victims. (36)

‡The government has other coordinating mechanisms that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (81-83,85,86)

Section V: Government Policies on Child Labor. The fifth section describes a country's policies and plans to combat child labor and the development of policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor. It begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established policies related to child labor, and whether policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor.

Table 9, Key Policies Related to Child Labor, lists the country's key policies, providing a description of each policy's objectives and any developments in implementation that occurred during the reporting period. The table note identifies policies that were approved during the reporting period and indicates small-scale policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.

The narrative following the table notes includes findings related to whether existing policies sufficiently address child labor issues in the country.

Section VI: Social Programs to Address Child Labor. The sixth section describes social programs launched or implemented during the reporting period that focus on child labor, and programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial effect on child labor. It begins with a statement as to whether the government funded or participated in social programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, and whether gaps exist in these social programs.

Table 10, Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor, lists the country's key social programs and descriptions, including its activities and accomplishments, to the extent known, during the reporting period. Where possible, programs are hyperlinked to project websites for additional information. Table notes identify social programs that are funded by the government or were launched during the reporting period, and whether the government had small-scale social programs with the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor.

The narrative following the tables also may include an analysis of the extent to which social programs were sufficient to address the scope of the problem or covered the key sectors in which children are known to work in the country.

Section VII: Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor. The last section of each country profile (Table 11) is a set of suggested actions for the country to consider taking in order to advance the elimination of child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy Guidelines to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor and Protect the Adolescent Worker (2017–2027)	Aims to address child labor in the agriculture sector, develop child labor prevention strategies, improve the quality and coverage of child protection services, protect adolescent workers from hazardous work, create strategies to address child labor in domestic work, and establish evaluation and monitoring mechanisms to assess progress. (71) The policy also contains a Roadmap for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Mining and a cooperative agreement between the Ministry of Mining and Energy and ICBF to prevent child labor in mining. (72,73,74) Under the cooperative agreement, ICBF trained 1,003 officials in agencies in the National System of Family Welfare on the National Policy Guidelines to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor and Protect the Adolescent Worker. (4) In 2019, ICBF also worked in partnership with MOL under these guidelines to build the capacity of local committees to prevent child labor (CIETIs) at the department and municipal levels, which resulted in the development of local action plans to combat child labor. (4) In addition, MOL held 75 technical workshops and trainings, which included capacity building related to the 2018 revision of the hazardous occupations prohibited to children. These workshops and trainings were attended by 1,320 CIETI and other officials, as well as civil society representatives, from 537 municipalities in 29 departments. (4) Under the Progressive Plan for the Social Protection and Defense of Rights for Rural Workers, the government conducted various outreach activities during the reporting period, including socializing the National Policy Guidelines to Eradicate and Prevent Child Labor and Protect the Adolescent Worker across 17 municipalities with workshops and radio and social media outreach. (4)
National Policy on Childhood and Adolescence (2018–2030)	Articulates multiple sub-policies on the worst forms of child labor: protection of adolescents, prevention and eradication of commercial sexual exploitation of children, and prevention of the recruitment and use of children by non-state armed groups. (1,75) Focuses on the comprehensive welfare and development of children and adolescents, recognizing them as rights-bearing subjects and integral to national development. (1,75) In 2019, under this policy, ICBF began implementing the Strategy for the Prevention of Specific Risks, which involved undertaking actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children for illicit activities and commercial sexual exploitation. (4)

- † Policy was approved during the reporting period.
- ‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (6,98–100)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, civil society organizations agree that these programs remain insufficient to fully address child labor.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Campaigns Against Child Labor†	ICBF-led campaigns to increase coordination among ICBF, Child Protection Police, MOL, and municipal authorities on child labor issues, and to promote education about the risks of hazardous work. (83) In 2019, the government began a campaign, "Working for the Children*": to end child labor in shopping markets. (84) In November, program leaders began public awareness efforts in banana, grain, and fishing markets in the city of Barranquilla, where 180 children joined the program and were returned to school, and their parents were educated on child labor laws. (84) The ICBF produced extensive online resources to educate children on child labor, inform youth on their rights, and the general public on how to report child labor. (85) ICBF also continued the use of Mobile Teams for Comprehensive Protection Child Labor (EMPIs), which, between January and October 2019, conducted 1,389 day-long awareness-raising programs to prevent child labor in 176 municipalities across the country and identified 2,466 children engaged in child labor. (4,86) ICBF worked with families and local authorities to remove these children from child labor. (4) EMPIs also implemented the "One Hour Against Child Labor" program in 152 educational institutions nationwide to train teachers and students on child labor issues. (4)

In 2019, the National Police implemented "Open Your Eyes" ("Abre Tus Ojos"), a public awareness and child protection program to combat child labor and promote attendance in the educational system for children who may be involved in street work. (10) The Colombian Network Against Child Labor (Red Colombia Contra el Trabajo Infantil) also continued its work throughout the reporting period, including by collaborating with MOL on activities dedicated to the protection of legal adolescent work. (10) Despite these efforts, research indicates that existing social programs are insufficient to address the scope of the worst forms of child labor problem in Colombia. (10)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Colombia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2019
Enforcement	Ensure that all labor inspectors have sufficient resources, especially in rural areas, to perform inspections.	2009 – 2019
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2009 – 2019
	Publish information on labor law enforcement efforts, including the number of inspections conducted, child labor violations found, and penalties imposed that were collected for child labor violations.	2009 – 2019
	Publish information on the number of child labor violations found, whether labor inspectors receive training on new laws and refresher courses, and whether new criminal investigators receive initial training.	2018 - 2019

TDA Country Assessment Criteria

Each country in this report receives an assessment to indicate the USDOL's findings on the country's level of advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. There are five possible assessment levels: Significant Advancement, Moderate Advancement, Minimal Advancement, No Advancement, or No Assessment. (41)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

For a country to be assessed as having significantly advanced efforts in 2019, the country must have (1) instituted the minimum requirements related to laws and regulations, mechanisms, and programs to address and prevent the worst forms of child labor (see Exhibit 1); and (2) during the reporting period, made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs, which may have included taking the suggested actions recommended in the 2018 report.

Minimum Requirements Needed to be Considered for a Significant Advancement Assessment

In order for a country to be eligible to receive an assessment of Significant Advancement, a country must have:

- Established a minimum age for work that meets international standards;
- Established a minimum age for hazardous work that meets international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against forced labor that meet international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against child trafficking that meet international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against commercial sexual exploitation of children that meet international standards;
- Established legal prohibitions against the use of children for illicit activities that meet international standards;
- Designated a competent authority or implemented institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor;
- Imposed penalties for violations related to the worst forms of child labor;
- Taken active measures to ensure that children are not inappropriately incarcerated, penalized, or physically harmed for unlawful acts as a direct result of being a victim of the worst forms of child labor;
- Taken active measures to investigate, prosecute, convict, and sentence public officials who participate in or facilitate the worst forms of child labor;
- Made a good faith effort to collect and publish labor and criminal law enforcement data; and
- Directly funded a significant social program that includes the goal of eliminating child labor or addressing the root causes of the problem, such as lack of educational opportunities, poverty, or discrimination.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

A country moderately advanced its efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor in 2019 if it made meaningful efforts during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs, which may have included taking the suggested actions recommended in 2018.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Three types of countries made minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in 2019. The first is a country that made meaningful efforts during the reporting period in a few relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs, which may have included taking the suggested actions recommended in 2018.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of meaningful efforts made in relevant areas, minimally advanced as a result of establishing or failing to remedy regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices that delayed advancement in the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Examples of regressive or significantly detrimental laws, policies, or practices include lowering the minimum age for work below international standards, recruiting or using children in armed conflict, and continuing to impose administrative barriers to child labor inspections. The following points make distinctions between regression and continued law, policy, or practice:

- Regression in Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but established a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice during the reporting period that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.
- Continued Law, Policy, or Practice that Delayed Advancement. This type of country made meaningful efforts in a few or more relevant areas but failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice established in previous years, which delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

NO ADVANCEMENT

Three types of countries made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in 2019. The first is a country that made no meaningful efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.

The other two types of countries are those that, regardless of whether meaningful efforts in relevant areas were made, had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents, which is considered an egregious form of exploitation. Complicity can occur when a government is involved in forced child labor at any level of government, including at the local, regional, or national level. Such incidents involve direct or proactive government action to compel children under age 18 to work. The following points make distinctions between a country making no efforts and being complicit and a country making efforts but being complicit:

- No Efforts and Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made no meaningful efforts, took no suggested actions reported in 2018, and had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents in 2019.
- Efforts Made but Complicit in Forced Child Labor. This type of country made meaningful efforts, which may have included taking the suggested actions reported in 2018, but had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents in 2019.

NO ASSESSMENT

This assessment is reserved for countries in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (fewer than 50), there is no evidence of the worst forms of child labor and the country appears to have an adequate preventive legal and enforcement framework on child labor, or when a country is included in the report for the first time or receives a suggested action for the first time. Currently, only Mexico and Wallis and Futuna fall into this category.

Children's Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions

In this report, 98 countries include a statistical table (Table 1, Statistics on Children's Work and Education) with data on the percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children who combine school and work, and/or primary completion rate. For a smaller set of profiles, a chart lists the percentages of children who work by sector.

This appendix provides definitions and descriptions of the sources for these data and some of the strengths and weakness inherent in these data. In a few cases, more current sources of data may be available than the ones used in this report; however, the most reliable, standardized sources available to date are used to allow for cross-country comparisons. Because reliable child labor surveys are not available for many countries, in some cases, USDOL uses statistics from child labor surveys that are more than 10 years old (data from 2009). If data did not exist from the sources described below, if no other reliable and publicly available source of data exists for a country, or if data exists but has not been analyzed to allow for cross-country comparisons, this report concludes that the statistics are “unavailable.”

Working Children

Many of the statistical tables in the country profiles in this report present data on the percentage and number of working children. Data presented in the current report may differ from data that were presented in previous reports because updated data have become available.

Definition

The term “working children” describes children engaged in any productive activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Productive activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production, principally the production of goods and services for own use. The work that children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, or for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer, paid or unpaid. This definition is in accordance with the Resolution to Amend the 18th ICLS Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour, adopted by the 20th International Conference of Labour Statisticians in 2018, and the report ILO Global Estimates of Child Labour: Results and Trends, 2012–2016. (27; 29) The 20th ICLS introduced changes to the definition of working children to align that definition with internationally accepted definitions of work for adults. The new definition classifies working children as those engaged in any activity to produce goods or to provide services for use by others or for own use. In summary, the new definition includes production of additional types of services for family use, unpaid trainee work by children, volunteer work by children, and other work activities by children. Since survey instruments are currently being redesigned to reflect this new definition, the definition of working children from the 18th ICLS Resolution has been used in this report.

Working Children Versus Children Engaged in Child Labor

This report presents statistics on “working children” rather than on “children involved in child labor.” These terms are defined precisely in the section “Definitions Related to Child Labor.” The definition of working children does not vary among countries and, therefore, statistics on working children are comparable across the country profiles. In contrast, the definition of “children involved in child labor” is based on national legislation, including, for example, the minimum age for work, which varies from country to country. As a result, child labor data are not comparable across countries. Furthermore, these country-level statistics may not disaggregate child labor from the broader category of child work, thereby including children who work only a few hours a week in permitted light work. For the purposes of this report, ILAB is unable to clearly articulate the proportion of working children who are involved in child labor.

Data Sources and Limitations

Data are from the ILO’s analysis of primarily four survey types: (1) the ILO’s SIMPOC surveys; (2) UNICEF’s Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys (MICS); (3) national Labor Force Surveys (LFS); and (4) other national and regional household surveys, including Demographic and Health Surveys (DHS). (38)

According to the ILO researchers, typical surveys on children’s work do not collect sufficiently detailed information on children’s activities to accurately measure economic activity. (39) This observation was repeated in December 2008 at the 18th ICLS. A resolution adopted at the conference provides guidelines for governments on collecting child labor data. Specifically, the guidance indicates that countries can choose to use a broad framework to measure children’s work and child labor that encompasses unpaid household services or that countries can use a narrower definition of children’s work that excludes such services, as long as the definition used is clearly specified. (40) This resolution is contributing to the collection of more comparable data on children’s involvement in non-market activities.

In analyzing the data from the above-mentioned surveys, the ILO attempted to apply a standard definition of children’s work, although UNICEF’s MICS and ILO’s SIMPOC reports, for example, each use a different definition of work. As of the writing of this report, MICS reports include household chores in their definition of work, while SIMPOC reports do not. To the extent possible, the ILO applied a common definition of work to the micro-data described. To date, this has resulted in the individual analysis of more than 208 data sets. While every attempt was made to present a standardized child work statistic, differences across the surveys have the potential to affect the comparability of statistics across countries and across years. Some of these differences are explained in greater detail here; however, in general, they include differing age groups, questionnaire content and wording, purpose of the survey, sample design, non-sampling errors, and the year of data collection.

In general, data are presented for children ages 5 to 14; however, some of the profiles present a work statistic for children ages 6 to 14, 7 to 14, or 10 to 14, depending on the age categories used in the original survey. The wording of work-related questions also may affect the results. For example, the question on work in these surveys usually refers to work during the past 7 days; however, some surveys may refer to work activities during the past 12 months, and thus they are likely to capture a higher proportion of working children than surveys with 7-day timeframes. The purpose of the survey – whether specifically to measure children’s work and child labor (SIMPOC surveys) or to measure the labor force participation of adults – may affect estimates of children’s work. (41) Additionally, sample design may affect the survey results. For example, children’s work is often clustered geographically; SIMPOC surveys are designed to capture children’s work in such geographic areas. As a result, estimates of working children vary across surveys that do not use the same sample design. (42) The ILO and UNICEF continue to investigate the effects of these survey differences on estimates of children's work.

As noted, some country profiles also include the sector in which children reportedly work. For some surveys, the sector of work was not reported by the entire sample of working children. Therefore, the distribution of children working by sector – agriculture, industry, and services – represents children with non-missing data for the sector of work. Additional information on the sectors of work reported in the chart appear in Table 1.

Percentage of Children Attending School

The percentage of children attending school is the share of all children within a specified age group that reported attending school. The ILO data described above in the section “Working Children” are used to develop country-specific school attendance statistics. To be consistent with estimates of working children, the age group for which attendance statistics are calculated for children is generally ages 5 to 14. In some cases, however, different age categories are used, usually ages 6 to 14 or 7 to 14.

Percentage of Children Combining Work and School

The percentage of children who combine work and school is the share of all children within a specified age group reporting both working and attending school. The ILO data described earlier under “Working Children” are used to develop country-specific statistics on children combining work and school. The age group for which these statistics are calculated is usually for children ages 7 to 14.

Primary Completion Rate

This report uses the “gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education” as a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary education. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. The calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade, regardless of age. Therefore, the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over- and underage children who enter primary school late or early, or repeat grades.

Data Sources and Limitations

Unlike the other statistics presented in the country profile data tables, which are all based on the ILO analysis described earlier, primary completion rate data are from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics. The data were downloaded on March 1, 2020, and are available at <http://data.uis.unesco.org/>. Further information on this statistic is available from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics Glossary at <http://uis.unesco.org/en/glossary>.

UNESCO uses population estimates from the United Nations Development Program (UNDP) to calculate some of the rates it publishes, including the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education. These population estimates change over time. The last revision that affected the statistics used in this report was in February 2020. All population-based indicators, including the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education, for all years are re-calculated using these latest estimates. For some countries and years, when the new UNDP population estimates are found to be inconsistent with education data, related indicators are removed. All updates made to UNESCO data on the gross intake ratio to the last grade of primary education are reflected in the primary completion rate statistic included in this report.

Labor Law Enforcement: Sources and Definitions

Labor Force Calculation

This report uses data from the CIA World Factbook, which lists the most recent estimates for countries' total labor force. This number is used to calculate a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors based on the country’s level of development, as determined by the UN. (43)

Country Classification

For analyses, the Development Policy and Analysis Division of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat (UN/DESA) classifies all countries of the world into one of four broad categories: (a) developed economies, (b) economies in transition, (c) developing economies, and (d) least developed countries. The composition of these groupings is intended to reflect basic economic country conditions. Several countries, in particular the economies in transition, have characteristics that could place them in more than one category; however, for analyses, the groupings have been made mutually exclusive. This is decided upon by the UN Economic and Social Council and, ultimately, by the General Assembly deciding on the list of the least developed countries based on recommendations made by the Committee for Development Policy. The basic criteria for inclusion require that certain thresholds be met for per capita gross national income, a human assets index, and an economic vulnerability index. For the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report, “developed economies” equate to the ILO’s classification of “industrial market economies,” “economies in transition” to “transition economies,” “developing economies” to “industrializing economies,” and “the least developed countries” equate to “less developed countries.” Countries that appear on both “developing countries” and “least developed countries” lists are considered “least developed countries” for calculating a “sufficient number” of labor inspectors. (44)

Number of Labor Inspectors

Article 10 of ILO C. 81 calls for a “sufficient number” of inspectors to do the work required. Because each country assigns different priorities of enforcement to its inspectors, there is no official definition for a “sufficient number” of inspectors. The factors that need to be considered include the number and size of establishments, and the total size of the workforce. No single measure is sufficient; however, in many countries, the available data sources are weak. The ratio of inspectors per workforce is currently the only internationally comparable indicator available. In its policy and technical advisory services, the ILO has taken as reasonable benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach 1:10,000 in industrial market economies, 1:15,000 in industrializing economies, 1:20,000 in transition economies, and 1:40,000 in less developed countries. (45)

ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

The ILO CEACR examines and makes two types of comments on the application of international labor standards by states that are party to the relevant conventions. Direct requests contain the Committee’s technical comments or questions about the state’s application of a particular convention, and these requests are sent directly to governments. Observations, which are published in the Committee’s annual report, contain comments on fundamental questions raised by a state’s application of a particular convention and recommendations for the state. (46)

Glossary of Other Terms

Basic Education

Article 7(c) of ILO C. 182 requires countries to “ensure access to free basic education.” According to the International Standard Classification of Education, “basic education” corresponds to the first 9 years of formal schooling and comprises primary and lower secondary education. Primary education is considered to be the first stage of basic education and covers 6 years of full-time schooling, with the legal age of entrance normally being no younger than 5 years or older than 7 years. Primary education is designed to give pupils a sound basis in reading, writing, and mathematics, along with an elementary understanding of other subjects, such as history, geography, natural science, social science, religion, art, and music. Lower secondary education is more subject-focused and requires specialized teachers. It corresponds to about 3 years of schooling. Basic education also can include various non-formal and informal public and private educational activities offered to meet the defined basic learning needs of groups of people of all ages.

Article 13 of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights indicates that primary education should be compulsory and free to all. Secondary education, including technical and vocational education, should be available and accessible to all, and free education should be progressively introduced. Article 28 of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child affirms the right of the child to education and the state's duty to ensure that primary education is free and compulsory. (30; 47-50)

Bonded Labor, Debt Bondage

Bonded labor or debt bondage is “the status or condition arising from a pledge by a debtor of his personal services or those of a person under his control as security for a debt if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied towards the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined,” as defined in the UN Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956). (51)

Bonded labor typically occurs when a person who needs a loan and has no security to offer, pledges his or her labor, or that of someone under his or her control, as security for a loan. In some cases, the interest on the loan may be so high that it cannot be paid. In others, it may be deemed that the bonded individual's work repays the interest on the loan but not the principal. Thus, the loan is inherited and perpetuated, and becomes an inter-generational debt. (4; 52)

Bonded labor is prohibited as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182. (30)

Child Domestic Worker

A “child domestic worker” works in third-party private households under an employment relationship. Child domestic workers engage in various tasks that include cleaning, cooking, gardening, collecting water, and caring for children and the elderly. Child domestic workers sometimes have live-in arrangements, whereby they live in their employer's household and work in exchange for room, board, and sometimes education. Child domestic workers are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including sexual, physical, and verbal abuse, in large part because they often depend on their employers for basic needs and work in locations hidden from public view. (53; 54)

Child Labor Elimination Projects

Since 1995, USDOL has funded 338 projects in 99 countries. USDOL currently oversees more than $238 million in active programming to combat exploitative child labor. To date, USDOL-funded projects have provided nearly 2 million children with education and vocational training opportunities as a strategy for preventing and reducing child labor and increasing access to education in disadvantaged communities. (55)

Child Trafficking

The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children (Palermo Protocol) provides a definition of “human trafficking” for children that states “the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation shall be considered ‘trafficking in persons’ even if this does not involve any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) of this Article.” Therefore, there does not need to be abuse of power, control, coercion, or fraud present to constitute child trafficking, as the definition for adults requires. The Palermo Protocol provides a commonly accepted definition of “human trafficking” in Article 3(a) that trafficking in persons means “the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labor or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs.” (56)

The trafficking of children is prohibited as a worst form of child labor in ILO C. 182, Article 3(a). (30)

Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children

Based on the 1996 Declaration and Agenda for Action of the First World Congress Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, “commercial sexual exploitation of children” (CSEC) is defined as “sexual abuse by the adult and remuneration in cash or kind to the child or third person or persons.” (57; 58; 59) The remuneration dynamic distinguishes CSEC from the sexual abuse of a child, which does not include commercial gain; however, sexual exploitation also includes abuse. The definition of CSEC includes these activities:

Prostitution in the streets or indoors, in such places as brothels, discotheques, massage parlors, bars, hotels, and restaurants, among others:

- Child sex tourism
- The production, promotion, and distribution of pornography involving children
- The use of children in sex shows (public or private)

ILO C. 182, Article 3(b), prohibits using, procuring, or offering a child for prostitution or for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. (30)

Compulsory Education Age

The age up to which children and youth are legally required to attend school. (47)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child spells out the basic rights of children, such as the right to survival; to develop to the fullest; to be protected from harmful influences, abuse, and exploitation; and to participate fully in family, cultural, and social life. The Convention protects children’s rights by setting standards in health care; education; and legal, civil, and social services. According to Article 32 of the Convention, children have the right “to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child’s education, or to be harmful to the child’s health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development.” (60)

Hazardous Work

Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182 sets forth the following as a worst form of child labor: “work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children.” This is colloquially referred to as “hazardous work.” Countries must determine which types of work are considered to be hazardous work by law or regulation. ILO R. 190 includes options for consideration in determining which types of work are hazardous.

Illicit Activities

ILO C. 182, Article 3(c), prohibits “the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.” Illicit activities in this context can include crimes; however, the activity need not be illegal to be considered illicit. (30) According to ILO R. 190 and the General Survey on the Fundamental Conventions Concerning Rights at Work, illicit activities can include “activities which involve the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons,” and “the use of children by criminal organizations for transporting weapons and carrying out arson attacks or destroying public or private property, illicit activities such as housebreaking and petty theft, and ... children being engaged by adults in car breaking, housebreaking, selling drugs and selling stolen goods, use of children for forced or organized begging, gambling, the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons, or for the commission of an offence or a crime using violence or the threat of violence.” (61; 62)

ILO Recommendation No. 190: Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO R. 190 supplements the provisions of ILO C. 182 and provides guidance to ratifying countries regarding its implementation. It provides guidelines to assist countries in determining what types of work should be considered hazardous and thus what type of work countries should prohibit for all children as a worst form of child labor, in accordance with Article 4 of ILO C. 182. ILO R. 190 describes populations in need of specific attention regarding the worst forms of child labor, such as girls and children involved in hidden forms of work. It also provides guidance regarding specific steps that countries which have ratified ILO C. 182 should take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as the collection and exchange of data on both the problem and best practices to address it; passage and enforcement of laws that penalize violations with criminal penalties; awareness raising about the problem; establishment of policies against the worst forms of child labor; and international cooperation through technical, legal, and other forms of assistance. (61)

Informal Sector

While the concept of the informal sector was introduced into international usage in the 1970s, it was only in 1993 at the 15th ICLS that an internationally recognized definition was established for data collection to delineate the “informal sector” as unincorporated, small, or unregistered enterprises, and the employees of those enterprises. An enterprise is unincorporated if no complete set of accounts are available that would permit a financial separation of the activities of the enterprise from that of its owners, and it produces marketable goods or services. The registration and size criteria are determined according to national circumstances and legislation, which provide a degree of flexibility in identifying the informal sector from country to country. However, all interpretations of this sector share the notion of enterprises whose activities are not covered or are insufficiently covered by law, or whose activities are not covered by law in practice, meaning that the relevant law is not applied or enforced. Workers in such enterprises often lack the benefits of regular, stable, and protected employment. Because employers in the informal sector are generally either not covered by labor laws or are not held accountable for complying with labor protections, including occupational safety measures, children who work in “hazardous” or “ultra-hazardous” informal settings likely face increased risk of exploitation, including injury. Additionally, because businesses in the informal sector are not usually included in official statistics, children working in informal sector enterprises may not be counted in labor force activity rates. (63; 64)

Light Work

This report uses the definition of “light work” as established in ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment. Under Article 7(1) of the Convention, “National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is – (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.” Countries that have specified a minimum legal working age of 14 may permit the employment or work of persons ages 12 to 14 in light work as defined in Article 7(1). Countries permitting light work under Article 7 must specify limitations on their hours of work, as well as activities and conditions in which light work may be undertaken. (34)

Minimum Age for Work

The minimum age for work is the age at which a child can enter into work. ILO C. 138 states that the minimum age for admission to employment should not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and should not be less than age 15, or age 14 for developing countries that specified a minimum legal age of 14 upon ratification of ILO C. 138. (52)

Non-Formal Education

Non-formal education is any organized educational activity outside of the established formal school system – whether operating separately or as an important feature of some broader activity – that is intended to serve identifiable learning objectives. Non-formal or transitional education programs can enable former child workers to catch up or be mainstreamed with their peers who began their schooling at the appropriate age. (52)

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict

This optional UN protocol, adopted in 2000, addresses and commits ratifying countries to take action against the involvement of children in armed conflict, which is a worst form of child labor per ILO C. 182, Article 3(a). (65)

Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography

This optional UN protocol, adopted in 2000, addresses and commits ratifying countries to take action against the commercial sexual exploitation of children, which is a worst form of child labor as defined in ILO C. 182, Article 3(b). (66)

Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper

This document is written by the government of a developing country with the participation of civil society to serve as the basis for concessional lending from the World Bank and International Monetary Fund, as well as debt relief under the World Bank's Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. A poverty reduction strategy paper (PRSP) should be used to measure poverty in the country, identify goals for reducing poverty, and create a spending and policy program for reaching those goals. A PRSP also should ensure that a country's macroeconomic, structural, and social policies are consistent with the objectives of poverty reduction and social development. A new PRSP must be written every 3 years to continue receiving assistance from international financial institutions such as the World Bank. (67)

Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Protocol)

The Palermo Protocol supplements the United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime and covers the trafficking of children, also delineated as a worst form of child labor under ILO C. 182, Article 3(a). (56) See "Child Trafficking" above.

Ratification

Ratification is a serious undertaking whereby a state formally accepts the terms of an international agreement, thus becoming legally bound to apply it. Other ways of becoming bound to an international agreement include acceptance, approval, accession, signature, or through an exchange of notes.

To ratify an agreement, a country must formally deposit the instruments of ratification with the appropriate depositary. In the case of ILO Conventions, ratifications must be registered with the Director-General of the ILO. (68)

For certain international agreements that require ratification, signing an agreement or enacting an agreement into domestic law by congress, or a similar state organ, does not mean that the international agreement has been ratified. Signing an international agreement serves as a preliminary endorsement, albeit a formality, because signatories are not bound by the terms of the international agreement or in any way committed to proceed to the final step of ratification. However, a signatory is obliged to refrain from acts that would defeat the objective and purpose of the international agreement, unless it makes clear its intention not to become a party to the international agreement. Appropriate state entities may signal approval of an international agreement; however, that is only one of the requisite steps on the path toward official ratification. The final step requires that the instruments of ratification be submitted to the ILO's depositary. (69)

In the case of ILO Conventions, ILO procedures provide the option of ratifying or not ratifying a convention, but they do not include the option of signing a convention as a preliminary endorsement. Generally, an ILO convention comes into force in a ratifying country 12 months after the government has deposited the requisite instrument of ratification. This grace period provides ILO members time to enact or modify legislation to comply with the convention before it comes into force. (30; 34; 68)

Unpaid Household Services

For this report, the term “unpaid household services” by children refers to the domestic and personal services a child performs within the child's own household, under the following conditions: (a) for long hours; (b) in an unhealthy environment, including equipment or heavy loads; or (c) in dangerous locations. Research Framework and Organization of TDA Country Profiles

Research Methods

This section describes the research methods used for data collection, as well as the sources, analysis of information, and the limitations of these methods in this report.

Data Collection and Sources

Information was gathered for this report through desk research, U.S. embassy reporting, and limited fieldwork. Information also was received from some foreign governments. Desk research consisted of an extensive review of mostly online materials, which included both primary and secondary sources. The sources included academic and independent researchers, media outlets, NGOs, international organizations, foreign governments, and U.S. Government agencies. Information also was collected from U.S. Government-funded technical assistance and field research projects.

Examples of the sources used in this report are the most recent available editions of country laws relevant to child labor; national-level child labor surveys; NGO reports on the nature of child labor in various countries; and UN reports, including direct requests and observations by the ILO Committee of Experts. (92)

The U.S. Department of State and U.S. embassies and consulates abroad provided important information by gathering data from contacts, conducting site visits, and reviewing local media sources. A request for information from the public was published in the Federal Register, and a copy of the request was mailed to the Washington, DC-based foreign embassies of the countries included in this report. (116) Data also were gathered through site visits to certain countries covered in this report, and included the collection of additional documents and key informant interviews.

Analysis of Information

The existence of child labor, particularly in its worst forms, often involves violations of laws and regulations, including serious criminal violations in some egregious cases. Information on child labor may be intentionally suppressed. Victims of the worst forms of child labor are often unable to claim their rights or even communicate the abuse they are suffering because they are traumatized, unaware of their rights under the law, or politically underrepresented or marginalized. These factors make information on the worst forms of child labor difficult to obtain. Therefore, to compile a credible and comprehensive report, ILAB used the following criteria to assess information:

Nature of the information

Whether the information about child labor and government efforts to combat it gathered from research, public submissions, or other sources was relevant and probative, and covered the “worst forms of child labor” and “government efforts” as used in this report. Specific evidence of government efforts was preferred when it was available.

Date of the information

Whether the source information about child labor was no more than 5 years old. More current information was given priority, and to the extent possible, ILAB used sources published during the reporting period. Information from sources older than 5 years was generally not considered.

In the case of child labor statistics, however, certain factors contribute to less frequent generation of new data. Because government and other efforts to address exploitative child labor take time to have an impact on national-level rates of child labor, children's involvement in such activities does not change dramatically from year to year. Child labor surveys are carried out infrequently, in part, because the child labor picture does not change frequently, although the number of surveys have increased recently. To present an overall picture of children's work in as many countries as possible, ILAB used statistics that are, in some cases, more than 10 years old (from 2009) as of the writing of this report. For more information on the statistics used in this report, see Appendix 7.

Additionally, in cases in which previous editions of this report have asserted that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods, and in the absence of evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated, sources more than 5 years old may be used. This practice makes the report's information on such forms of child labor consistent with USDOL's List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor, as mandated by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005 (TVPRA). Statements that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods will be removed when there is evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated.

Source of the information

Whether the information, either from primary or secondary sources, was from a source in which methodology, prior publications, degree of familiarity and experience with international labor standards, or reputation for accuracy and objectivity warranted a determination that it was relevant and probative.

Extent of the corroboration

Whether the information about the use of child labor was corroborated by other sources.

Limitations

While data on the worst forms of child labor and information about government efforts to provide remediation are improving, data are still insufficient to provide a complete understanding of the problem. A lack of information may create the impression that a country has less serious problems with the worst forms of child labor than it actually has. At the same time, a dearth of information may create the impression that a government is doing less than it should when, in fact, efforts to combat child labor exist, but are simply unreported or unpublicized. Although countries with open and available information may sometimes appear to have greater problems relative to other countries, this may not be the case. In fact, countries that collect information on child labor are in a better position to eliminate the problem than countries in which such information is suppressed, because with better information, they can target their policies and programs toward identified problem areas to achieve maximum impact.

Due to an inability to travel to each country covered in the report, ILAB relies on U.S. embassies, internet research, and submissions received in response to the Federal Register notice to gather primary and secondary sources of information. For countries where internet access and technology are limited, there may be less information available online. Countries with more closed government processes and less civil society participation also may have less information readily available. When ILAB was unable to find information about report topics, including the content of important laws or enforcement efforts, this was noted in the report.

Most of ILAB's online research was conducted in English; however, we also gathered and read source materials written in Spanish, French, and, to a limited extent, Portuguese, Russian, and Arabic. Materials written in other languages were generally not reviewed.

Despite ILAB's best efforts to cover relevant topics as comprehensively as possible, this report cannot address every salient issue that may affect children's involvement in child labor. For example, there are many factors that affect whether a household sends a child to school, to work, or both. A lack of available information, however, limits the discussion of these issues for some countries. In these cases, we note that the profile’s information is incomplete. Furthermore, ILAB chose to limit its reporting of education to the issue of access, and generally does not cover the quality of education because research on the relationship between the quality of education and child labor is lacking.

Organization and Content of Country Profiles

ILAB organized country profiles to track the types of efforts outlined in the TDA Conference Committee report. In this report, the Conference Committee indicated that the President should consider certain criteria when determining whether a country has met its obligation under the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program to implement its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. (1) Each country profile contains an introductory paragraph that provides an assessment of government actions to advance efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, six sections that describe the problem and different aspects of government efforts to address it, and a set of suggested actions. The following section describes the content in the country profiles.

Content of Country Profiles

Each country profile begins with an overview of 2019 in a single paragraph, beginning with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2019. Following the statement of assessment, the summary includes meaningful efforts taken by a government to implement its commitment to eliminating child labor. The summary also notes where children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor or if no worst forms of child labor exist, where they are engaged in tasks for which there is evidence that such tasks fall into the categories suggested by ILO R. 190 for hazardous work – referred to as “dangerous tasks” in this report. Depending on the situation in the country, the summary also may discuss child labor that does not rise to the level of hazardous work. Finally, the paragraph highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

Section I: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor

The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of child labor in the country. This section begins with a review of available data on working children and school attendance, followed by a presentation of the most common sectors and activities in which children are engaged. The narrative also provides information about the nature and conditions of the work, specific populations that are particularly vulnerable to child labor, government complicity in the use of forced child labor, circumstances that make accessing education difficult, and events during the year that destabilized the country.

Section II: Legal Framework for Child Labor

The second section of each country profile provides information on whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor. This section describes a country’s legal framework with regard to child labor and assesses the adequacy of that legal framework by comparing it, in general, to the standards set forth in ILO C. 182 and ILO C. 138, and to other international instruments, including the Palermo Protocol and the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols. ILAB considered whether the laws criminally prohibited the categorical worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182, Articles 3(a)–(c), as suggested by ILO R. 190. In line with the ILO Committee of Experts, ILAB considered any law that could be used to prohibit child labor, including its worst forms. ILAB also considered whether the country had ratified key international instruments related to child labor.

It is important to note that ILAB analyzes a country's legal framework regarding compliance with international standards, regardless of whether a problem exists in a country. This is to ensure that legal frameworks also serve as preventive mechanisms. For example, even in the case of a country that does not have a problem with the use of children in illicit activities, if there are no laws to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, the report points out a gap when comparing laws on this issue against international standards.

The corresponding table indicates where the legal framework meets international standards and where it does not. For example, the table indicates whether the country's minimum age for work complies with the international standard.

ILAB assessed whether a country's laws prohibit forced labor, human trafficking, and debt bondage. For child trafficking specifically, ILAB reviewed the adequacy of existing legal protections related to international and domestic trafficking for both commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor against the Palermo Protocol's standard for child trafficking, including whether the legal protections prohibit the five elements of the human trafficking process – recruiting, harboring, transporting, transferring, and receiving persons.

In all cases in which countries maintain a military force, ILAB assessed whether the country prohibited the compulsory military recruitment of children and whether the minimum age for voluntary military recruitment is at least 16, with certain safeguards to ensure voluntariness. For all countries, ILAB assessed whether the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups is prohibited, even if non-state armed groups are not present in the country.

For the issue of commercial sexual exploitation of children, ILAB assessed whether a country's laws criminally prohibit the using, procuring, and offering of children for prostitution; the production of child pornography; and the use of children in pornographic performances. For illicit activities, ILAB assessed whether laws criminally prohibit the using, procuring, and offering of a child in the production and trafficking of drugs.

ILAB assessed whether a country has created a hazardous work list and whether the types of hazardous work prohibited are comprehensive, based on whether there is evidence that children engage in work where, according to ILO R. 190, the work may be hazardous. Because the standards on the minimum age for work in ILO C. 138 provide a foundation for protections against the worst forms of child labor, ILAB used the standards embodied in that convention to assess each country's minimum age for admission to work and the age up to which education is compulsory. (46) ILO C. 138 establishes that countries should set a minimum age of 15 for work, or age 14 for countries with less-developed economies where the country has specified an age of 14 upon ratification of the convention. For countries that permit children to engage in light work, the profile also indicates whether the country has set a minimum age of 13 for light work, or age 12 for less-developed economies, and whether legislation related to light work determines permitted activities, and the number of hours per week and the conditions under which light work may be conducted.

ILAB assessed whether the age for compulsory education aligns with the minimum age for work, in accordance with ILO C. 138, which states that the minimum age for work should not be less than the age up to which education is compulsory, and that it should be at least age 15, or age 14 for developing countries. However, the opposite situation – in which the minimum age for work is higher than the upper cut-off age for compulsory education – also should be avoided because when children are not required to be in school or permitted to work, they are susceptible to falling into the worst forms of child labor. This section points out when a country's age up to which education is compulsory is below or above the minimum age for employment and suggests that the government rectify this gap. It also notes whether a country has free public education through at least the basic level.

Section III: Enforcement of Laws on Child Labor

The third section of the country profiles addresses the second and third criteria included in the TDA Conference Committee report, concerning whether the country has “adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures,” and has “established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor.” (1) This section describes the role of government agencies in enforcing laws relevant to child labor, including its worst forms, and reports on labor law and criminal law enforcement efforts during the reporting period.

In this section, ILAB analyzes whether and to what degree the country defines enforcement agency roles and investigates and addresses complaints related to allegations of child labor. Because ILO C. 182 only discusses enforcement to a limited extent, other international standards and practices also are considered as general evaluation guidelines, including from ILO C. 81 and ILO C. 129 on Labor Inspection and Labor Inspection in Agriculture, respectively. To the extent possible, ILAB assesses whether the country has taken these actions:

- Established labor inspection systems, including a functioning labor inspectorate.
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations.
- Employed a sufficient number of inspectors, according to the ILO’s technical advice, to enforce the country’s child labor laws and regulations.
- Provided sufficient training for inspectors, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to child labor, and refresher courses.
- Developed and implemented an adequate labor inspection strategy that allows for different types of onsite inspections of worksites – such as routine, targeted, complaint-driven, and unannounced – and conducted inspections with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors.

- Provided sufficient authority to the labor inspectorate to penalize child labor violations and follow through with sanctions, where appropriate.
- Published information on specific inspection results and fines or sanctions imposed for violation of child labor laws and regulations, including the worst forms of child labor.
- Established a complaint mechanism for labor violations.
- Set up a reciprocal referral mechanism between labor authorities and social services.

Although ILAB researched and requested law enforcement information on the topics for this year’s report, the information was not available in all cases. For example, in many cases, ILAB did not have enough information to determine whether the number of inspectors was sufficient in the country. Only in certain situations, where a country’s government acknowledged that it did not have a sufficient number of labor inspectors or ILAB obtained information indicating that the number of labor inspectors was insufficient relative to the size of the country’s workforce, did ILAB issue findings of insufficiency. In the latter situation, and in determining whether a finding should be included, ILAB considered that the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach 1:10,000 in industrial market economies, 1:15,000 in industrializing economies, 1:20,000 in transition economies, and 1:40,000 in less developed countries. (45)

Additionally, ILO R. 190 states that countries should criminally prohibit the categorical worst forms of child labor as set forth in ILO C. 182, Articles 3(a)–(c). Therefore, the report also assesses whether criminal law enforcement in the country has taken these actions:

- Established criminal investigation systems.
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce the worst forms of child labor laws and regulations.

- Provided sufficient training for investigators, including initial training for new employees, training on new laws related to child labor, and refresher courses.
- Conducted a sufficient number of investigations related to the worst forms of child labor.
- Published information on specific investigation results and violations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.
- Imposed penalties for violations related to the worst forms of child labor.
- Established a reciprocal referral mechanism between criminal authorities and social services.

Section IV: Coordination of Government Efforts on Child Labor

The fourth section of the country profiles also addresses the third criterion included in the TDA Conference Committee report – whether the country has established “formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor.” (1) This section provides information on key institutions in the country charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms. Although the TDA Conference Committee report speaks only to whether such mechanisms are in place with regard to investigation and complaints of the worst forms of child labor, ILO C. 182, Article 5, states that “[e]ach Member shall, after consultation with employers’ and workers’ organizations, establish or designate appropriate mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the provisions giving effect to this Convention.” ILAB applied this concept of monitoring to all provisions of the Convention, not just those directly related to the enforcement of child labor laws. However, because the term monitor is often associated exclusively with enforcement activities, ILAB uses the term coordinate to describe this function.

Section V: Government Policies on Child Labor

The fifth section of the country profiles provides information on the fourth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report – whether the country has “a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.” (1) This section describes a country’s key policies and plans to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

ILAB used the framework provided in ILO R. 190, Article 15(f), which illustrates measures that countries might take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as “encouraging the development of policies by undertakings to promote the aims of the Convention.” (62) In ILO C. 182 and in comments from the ILO Committee of Experts, the terms programs and plans of action are often used interchangeably. Indeed, in some cases, it is difficult to distinguish among a policy, a plan, or a program. (30) For the TDA Conference Committee report, a policy on child labor is defined as a framework that lays out general principles that are intended to guide a government’s actions on child labor. Although policies may call for the passage of new laws and the establishment of new programs, the actual adoption of laws and program implementation are reported in the “Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor” or the “Social Programs to Address Child Labor” sections of the profiles.

Specifically, ILAB assessed whether governments have achieved the following activities:

- Established specific child labor policies, any related development policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor, or any related development policies that do not explicitly target child labor but that could have an impact on the problem. (ILAB determined that because so few governments distinguish between worst forms of child labor and child labor, any policy on child labor, whether targeted toward the worst forms of child labor or not, would be reported.)

- Ensured that these policies include specific action plans, assign responsibilities, establish goals, and set timetables.
- Implemented established policies and plans.

Section VI: Social Programs to Address Child Labor

The sixth section of each country profile provides information on the fifth criterion in the TDA Conference Committee report – whether social programs exist in the country “to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.” (i) This section of the country profiles reports on key programs focused on child labor and the worst forms of child labor because countries often do not distinguish between the two when creating child labor programs. This section of the profiles also reports on programs that focus on child labor specifically, and programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial impact on child labor. Only programs launched or implemented during the reporting period are included in this section.

ILAB generally considers the implementation of projects through international organizations to be government efforts because the projects can be carried out only with the consent of the government, and such efforts are sometimes considered part of a country’s national budget.

ILAB applied the standards embodied in Articles 6 and 7 of ILO C. 182 to assess country programs to combat child labor. ILO R. 190 also is considered to determine the types of efforts that governments might make, such as giving special attention to girls, providing training to employers and workers, and raising awareness. With this in mind, ILAB assesses whether governments have taken the following actions:

- Participated in any social programs to combat child labor, including programs aimed at directly preventing and withdrawing children from participation in child labor.

- Implemented social programs with sufficient resources to combat the scope and magnitude of the child labor problem at issue.
- Targeted at-risk populations.
- Implemented social programs successfully and sustainably.

Section VII: Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

The last section of the country profiles is a set of suggested actions. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table, followed by every year in which the action was included in the report and not addressed.

Framework for Country Assessments

Objective for Country Assessments

ILAB is using an assessment tool to clearly indicate and highlight the status of efforts by each country which benefits from U.S. trade preferences to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

Research Question Guiding Country Assessments

The research question that ILAB is asking in its assessment of an individual beneficiary country is “To what extent did the beneficiary country advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period?”

Scope of Country Assessment

As discussed, the TDA Conference Committee report outlines the following six criteria that the President is asked to consider in determining whether a country is implementing its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor:

- Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor;
- Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures;
- Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;
- Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor;
- Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor; and
- Whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

The country assessment tool is intended to inform the sixth criterion – whether the country is “making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.” In preparing the assessments, ILAB evaluated the first five criteria, grouping them into the same five areas addressed in the individual country profiles: laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. The assessment is based on an analysis of the status of each country’s efforts in these five areas considered as a whole, and compared to the country’s prior efforts. The assessments do not take into account the impact of government actions on the problem, or whether they have a documented effect on eliminating child labor. This type of analysis would require rigorous impact evaluations and assessments based on data from solid research designs, which is beyond the scope of this report. It is important to note that the assessment is not intended to reflect a determination of “whether a country has implemented its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.” That determination is reserved for the President.

Method for Determining a Country Assessment

Each country profile in this report identifies a set of suggested actions for governments to take to advance its efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The implementation – or lack of implementation – of these suggested actions establishes a baseline or point of reference from which to assess a country’s advancement. These actions, in combination with other efforts undertaken by a country, were considered when assessing the level of a country’s advancement during the current reporting period in comparison with the previous reporting period.

After identifying and assessing a country’s efforts, ILAB considered the significance of the efforts undertaken during the reporting period – actions that could have an impact on eliminating the worst forms of child labor, and the extent to which these efforts addressed the first five TDA criteria, outlined above, in a limited or meaningful manner during the reporting period. Additionally, ILAB reviewed whether the government established or failed to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law, policy, or practice that delayed advancement in eliminating child labor. Finally, ILAB also examined whether countries had a policy or demonstrated a practice of being complicit in forced child labor in more than isolated incidents at the national, regional, or local level.

To promote consistency and transparency, and to operationalize these first five TDA criteria, each country’s efforts were analyzed according to a uniform set of guidance questions related to the five general areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. Detailed information is given in “TDA Guidance Questions.”

Enforcement of Laws on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criteria:

- Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures
- Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor

In this section of the country profiles, ILAB analyzes whether, or to what degree, a country has defined enforcement agency roles, conducted routine and unannounced inspections, and investigated and addressed complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor. The analysis is based on the following guidance questions.

Guidance Questions

- Does the country have a labor inspectorate?
- Does the country have labor inspectors? Are its labor inspectors public servants as opposed to contractors?
- What was the amount of funding for the labor inspectorate? Was there an increase or decrease in the funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations, and were these resources adequate given the incidence of child labor in the country?
- Was there an increase or reduction in the number of labor inspectors to enforce child labor laws and regulations, and was the number of labor inspectors adequate given the size of the country's workforce?
- Did the country offer initial training to new labor inspectors and investigators, including specialized training on child labor; training on new laws related to child labor, including its worst forms; and refresher courses?
- Did the labor inspectorate fail to conduct labor inspections during the reporting period?*
- Does the labor inspectorate lack legal authorization to conduct unannounced inspections?*

- Did the government develop and implement a labor inspection strategy that allowed for different types of onsite inspections of worksites, such as routine, targeted, complaint-driven, or unannounced?
- Were inspections conducted with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors?
- Did the government provide the labor inspectorate with sufficient authority to sanction child labor violations?

- Did the country establish or fail to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental law enforcement practice that delayed its advancement in the elimination of child labor?*

* Note: A “yes” response likely means that the country will automatically receive an assessment of Minimal Advancement or No Advancement.

Coordination of Government Efforts on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor

In this section, ILAB analyzes whether, or to what degree, the country has institutions charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms. The analysis is based on the following guidance questions.

Guidance Questions

- Does the government have an agency or committee created to coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor? Did it create such an agency or committee during the reporting period?
- Does the agency or committee address all sectors of child labor that are prevalent in the country, or does it address only certain sectors?
- Did such an agency or committee meet regularly and take actions, or did it not meet regularly and take few or no actions?

Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor

Guidance Questions

- Did the government establish any new policies or plans that specifically address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor?
- Did the government incorporate the worst forms of child labor specifically as an issue to be addressed in poverty reduction, development, educational, or other social policies, such as poverty reduction strategy papers?
- Did the government establish poverty reduction, development, educational, or other social policies, such as poverty reduction strategy papers, that did not explicitly address the worst forms of child labor or any one of the worst forms of child labor, but that might have had an impact on it or them?
- If the country established any of the above policies or plans, do they designate responsibilities, establish goals, and set timelines?
- Did the government effectively implement existing policies and plans?
- Did the country establish or fail to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental policy that delayed its advancement in the elimination of child labor?*

 Note: A “yes” response likely means that the country will automatically receive an assessment of Minimal Advancement or No Advancement.*

Social Programs to Address Child Labor

TDA Conference Report Criterion:

- Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor

Guidance Questions

- Did the government fund or participate in any new or ongoing programs that aim to eliminate or prevent the worst forms of child labor?
- Did the government fund or participate in any social protection programs that could reasonably be expected to have an impact on child labor? Were any of the country’s programs shown, through research, to have had an impact on child labor?
- Did the government make efforts to reduce children’s vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor by addressing factors such as:
 - country- and region-specific practices that make children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, and
 - barriers to education, such as a lack of teachers; lack of schools or inadequate facilities; lack of infrastructure to access schools; lack of transportation; violence, including physical and sexual abuse; birth registration requirements; and the charging of school fees?
- Are the country’s programs sufficient to combat particular forms of child labor, considering the scope and magnitude of those problems?
- Do the programs provide services directly to children?
- Do the programs adequately target at-risk populations?
- Were the programs fully funded?
- Are the programs meeting their goals?
- Are the program efforts sustainable?
- Did existing government programs improve or worsen in quality or effectiveness compared with the previous year?
- Did the country establish or fail to remedy a regressive or significantly detrimental social program or other practice that delayed its advancement in the elimination of child labor?*

 Note: A “yes” response likely means that the country will automatically receive an assessment of Minimal Advancement or No Advancement.*

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2019, Afghanistan is receiving an assessment of no advancement. Despite initiatives to address child labor, Afghanistan is receiving an assessment of no advancement because government officials, particularly officers of the Afghan Local Police and Afghan National Police, were complicit in the use of commercial sexual exploitation of boys through the practice of bacha bazi, a practice that remains widespread throughout the country. The government failed to prosecute any government officials in bacha bazi cases in 2019, but convicted two civilians and indicted at least four others. During the reporting period, media reported allegations by human rights activists that at least 165 boys were sexually exploited at three public high schools in Logar Province, with the perpetrators video recording some of the acts for blackmail purposes. The activists' research found evidence of involvement of dozens of educators, including teachers and principals. At the end of 2019, government investigators reported that while they uncovered evidence of child sexual assault in Logar, they had found no link between the abuse and educators in the Logar public school system. Two human rights activists who exposed the Logar network, however, were detained by the National Directorate of Security, physically mistreated, and subsequently fled the country with their families after receiving death threats. Although the government failed to prosecute Afghan Local Police or Afghan National Police officers implicated in bacha bazi crimes, it took a number of steps to combat bacha bazi and other forms of child labor and child trafficking, including establishing a National Child Protection Commission. However, children in Afghanistan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and forced labor in the production of bricks and carpets, each sometimes the result of human trafficking. Afghanistan's labor inspectorate is not authorized to impose penalties for child labor violations, and the government lacks sufficient programs to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In addition, Afghan law does not sufficiently criminalize forced labor, debt bondage, or commercial sexual exploitation of girls.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Afghanistan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict and forced labor in the production of bricks and carpets, each sometimes the result of human trafficking. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Afghanistan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	7.5 (673,949)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	41.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		85.6

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Boys across the country are subject to commercial sexual exploitation through the practice of bacha bazi, which typically entails keeping a male or transgendered child for the purpose of sexual gratification. Although bacha bazi is illegal, it is defended by some as a cultural practice. The perpetrators include police commanders, military members, tribal leaders, warlords, members of organized crime groups, clergy, and other men, typically with some authority or financial influence, who conspire to make boys available for sex. (50,51) In some cases, these boys may also be forced to serve tea or dance at parties. (52,53) According to the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC), the practice exists in all provinces of the country. (4,54,55) Orphans, runaways, school dropouts, and other marginalized youth are particularly at risk. Some boys are often sold into the practice by their families, while others are abducted from the street, including by police officers. (44,45,55) Members of the Afghan National Police, the Afghan Local Police, the Afghan National Army, and the Afghan Border Police, especially checkpoint commanders, exploit boys for bacha bazi. (57) Some victims are boys who work for government officials as tea servers or errand boys, but are also subjected to rape or other forms of sexual assault. (4,36,44,45,47,50,54-56) NGOs reported that Afghan security forces and pro-government militias—some of whom may have received direct financial support from the government—recruited boys specifically for use in bacha bazi. (4)

Minors complained that some teachers and principals pressured them to perform commercial sex acts to pass exams; physical evidence to support such claims, including audio and video recordings, came to light during the reporting period. (4) According to media and NGO reports, many of these cases went unreported or were referred to traditional mediation, which often allowed perpetrators to re-offend. Cases were further under-reported because the stigma associated with these crimes prevented the vast majority of child victims from bringing cases forward to law enforcement or seeking care. Some child victims also reported authorities forced them to have sex in exchange for pursuing their cases, or raped them and sent them to detention centers when they tried to report their abusers. (57)

In November 2019, media outlets reported at least 165 cases of the sexual abuse of boys at 3 schools by teachers, school managers, and local authorities in Logar Province. (42,52,53,58) Numerous videos of these sexual assaults were posted on social media. (42) Some boys were banished by their families, while families of other boys fled the region. (42,52) Two human rights activists who had researched the Logar abuse and made some of their findings public were taken into custody by the National Directorate of Security and released only after making video statements under duress in which they stated that their investigation and reporting had been incomplete and incorrect. (52,53,59,60) The activists subsequently received death threats and fled Afghanistan. (61)

Afghan children are victims of human trafficking both domestically and internationally. Some Afghan nationals overseas have subjected Afghan boys to bacha bazi in, for example, Germany, Hungary, North Macedonia, and Serbia. (62) Furthermore, Afghan boys are used for forced labor in agriculture and construction abroad, and girls are used for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work in destination countries, primarily Iran and Pakistan. (4) In Afghanistan, children were subjected to human trafficking to settle their family's debt, sometimes as a result of their parents' drug addiction, by being forced to produce bricks and illicit drugs. (2,4,37) Many Afghan girls are subjected to forced marriage in exchange for money for their families. (63) In addition, traffickers in Iran exploit Afghan children in forced labor as beggars and street vendors and forced criminality, including drug trafficking and smuggling of fuel and tobacco. (4) There were widespread reports of child laborers being subjected to sexual violence within Afghanistan. (12,13,16,30) Girls from Iran, Pakistan, and China were subject of human trafficking to Afghanistan for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. (63)

Widespread violence and lack of economic opportunities lead some Afghan children to leave Afghanistan. (64-68) Some children went to Iran specifically to engage in child labor. (69,70) According to the UN, some Afghan refugee children in Iran engaged in child labor and did not attend school. (27) The Iranian government and the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps continued to coerce Afghan children as young as age 12 to fight in Iranian-led and -funded Shia militias deployed to Syria by threatening them with arrest and deportation to Afghanistan. (4) Boys, especially those traveling unaccompanied, were particularly vulnerable to human trafficking. (47,70,71) Some Afghan boys were subjected to commercial sexual exploitation in Greece after paying high fees to be smuggled into the country. (4,47,71)

Armed groups and Afghan police recruited children for engagement in combat and security operations, including 58 by the Taliban, 3 by the Afghan National Police, and 1 each by the Afghan Local Police and a pro-government militia. (38) Low rates of birth registration and the falsification of identity documents contribute to the problem by making it difficult to determine a recruit's age. (70,72) Observers reported that some officials accepted bribes to produce false identity documents that indicated the recipient boys were older than age 18. (47) Nevertheless, the Child Protection Units at Afghan National Police recruitment centers reportedly prevented the recruitment of 439 children in 2019. (73)

In 2019, approximately 505,000 undocumented Afghans returned or were deported to Afghanistan: 485,000 from Iran and just under 20,000 from Pakistan. (74) Many returnees and deportees were unaccompanied minors. (4) Some deportee children are subject to sexual and physical violence or forced labor while in deportation process camps, particularly in Iran. (37,75) Many unaccompanied minor returnees faced similar problems. (76,77) An indeterminate number of children also returned from Europe, including those whose asylum applications had been rejected. (78-80) Such children are vulnerable to recruitment by armed groups and traffickers. These children have difficulties enrolling in school because they lack the necessary identity documents. (4,15,36,79) In 2018, 66 percent of undocumented returnee children did not attend school. Many of them were particularly vulnerable to child labor, including debt bondage in brick factories. (27,48,81-84) Some individuals who facilitate repatriation take returnees to brick factories and keep them in debt bondage to repay their transportation costs. (50) International organizations noted that traffickers specifically targeted these returnees for forced labor upon return to Afghanistan. (4)

Afghanistan suffered both drought and flooding, causing the internal displacement of approximately 296,000 individuals in 2019. (85,86) An additional 436,000 individuals were newly internally displaced persons (IDPs) due to the armed conflict. (85) Many of these IDPs were food insecure and resorted to child labor or selling children as a way of settling debt. (36,86-89) Child labor is particularly prevalent among urban IDPs, and these children are vulnerable to recruitment by armed groups. (17,36)

In 2019, UNICEF estimated that 3.7 million school-age children were out of school in the country, 60 percent of whom are girls. (90) Barriers to education for children included displacement of populations due to conflict, the use of schools as military bases, attacks on schools, living long distances from schools, school-related fees, lack of security, and lack of identity documentation. (17,91-93) Girls faced additional barriers to education including parents unwilling to allow them to attend school, lack of hygiene facilities, shortage of female teachers, and sexual harassment on the way to and from school. (15,91,93) In addition, schools do not provide sufficient services to children with disabilities and some nomad, or kuchi, children did not attend school because they traveled to tend livestock. (27)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Afghanistan's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including debt bondage.

‡ Age calculated based on available information (102)

The Afghan Labour Law’s minimum age provision prohibits those under age 18, 15 for “light work,” from being “recruited as a worker.” However, the law defines “worker” as a person who is “recruited based on a definite contract,” meaning that the minimum age provision does not apply to those in informal employment Afghan law does not sufficiently criminalize forced labor or debt bondage.

Although the Penal Code explicitly prohibits and sets penalties for the use of male or transgender children for bacha bazi, Afghan law does not prohibit the use of girls for prostitution and pornographic performances. (27,96) Additionally, the legal framework does not adequately criminalize the use of children for the production of pornography. (96,98)

A Law on Protection of Child Rights was adopted and entered into force in 2019. The law reiterates some of the existing protections for children, such as the minimum age for hazardous work and protection of children from being exploited in begging. (103)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Child Protection Action Network (CPAN)	Operates as a coalition of government agencies, NGOs, and community and religious leaders. Receives complaints of child labor; investigates such cases, and refers them to NGO and government shelters that provide social services, and coordinate and provide case management. (36,104) Not all provinces have a CPAN chapter. The capacity of CPAN chapters is not uniform or based on need, and the type of intervention depends on members of a particular CPAN chapter and resources available. (36)
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA)	Responds to complaints of child labor, child trafficking, and child sexual exploitation; refers cases to the Attorney General’s Office (AGO) and NGO shelters; and operates a shelter for trafficking victims in Kabul. (36)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforces laws related to child trafficking, the use of children in illicit activities, and child sexual exploitation. (36)
National Directorate of Security	Identifies human trafficking victims and refers these cases to the Ministry of the Interior. (36)
Attorney General’s Office (AGO)	Investigates and prosecutes human trafficking, abduction, and sexual exploitation cases. (36)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the authority of MoLSA that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including penalty assessment authorization.

The Child Protection Action Network, of which MoLSA is a component, can respond to complaints of child labor, investigate cases, and issue warnings or refer criminal cases to the Attorney General's Office (AGO). However, a person wishing to file a complaint must specify the legal statutes for labor violations in writing, making it unlikely that citizens would be able to do so. (104,107)

In 2019, the government did not report the number of labor inspectors; however, as of December 2018, MoLSA had 27 inspector positions, 21 of which were filled. (5,36) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Afghanistan's workforce, which includes more than 7.9 million workers. (108) According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Afghanistan would employ about 200 labor inspectors. (105,109,110) Government officials, NGOs, and UNICEF acknowledge that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient. (105) Moreover, sources indicate that labor inspections take place only in the capital, Kabul. (5)

Business owners are not required to allow unannounced inspections. (105) Based on available information, MoLSA inspects only public organizations, such as government ministries, that are registered with MoLSA, but not private businesses or worksites within the informal sector. (27,36,104) Many forms of child labor, however, occur in the informal sector. (12) Government officials and other stakeholders stated that the government lacked resources, including training, for enforcement of child labor laws. (36)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including training for criminal investigators.

In response to allegations in November 2019 of widespread sexual exploitation of children at schools in Logar Province, the Attorney General’s Office (AGO) sent an investigative committee to Logar; the probe was ongoing at the end of 2019. By the end of the reporting period, two suspects had been referred to the court. (73) However, the government did not prosecute any government officials for bacha bazi crimes, despite the fact that police and other officials were heavily implicated in the practice. (4,36,47,51,55,75,113) Observers noted that perpetrators of bacha bazi often paid bribes to law enforcement, prosecutors, or judges who protected them from prosecution. (4) The AIHRC, Parliament, the Ministry of Education, and the Logar provincial government also conducted fact-finding missions in response to the allegations. (24) The AIHRC received nine videos of sexual abuse, although many more had already been shared with the media. (24,53,58) Shortly after, the AIHRC issued a summary report stating that the sexual abuse was not limited to schools, but was also occurring in work places of child laborers, particularly at brick kilns and in garment workshops. (113) AGO investigators did not publicly state any nexus between the sexual assaults on high school boys in Logar and Logar educators, despite reports of heavy involvement. However, the AIHRC in its summary report on Logar pointed to “some school officials and teachers” involved in the abuse. (24,61,73,113)

Moreover, victims of human trafficking were routinely prosecuted and convicted of crimes. (75,114) Male victims of child trafficking, especially those engaged in bacha bazi or armed conflict, were sometimes referred to juvenile detention or rehabilitation facilities on criminal charges, instead of to appropriate victim support services. (4,38,47,115,116) The government arrested, detained, and prosecuted for terrorism-related crimes some children younger than age 12 who had been forcibly recruited by non-state armed groups. NGOs reported that authorities housed some child trafficking victims in juvenile detention centers, sometimes for several years. (4) Such children are considered criminals even after being transferred to rehabilitation centers. (55) The UN reported that some of these children were subjected to torture and ill treatment. (116,117)

Although information was unavailable for 2019, government officials had previously stated that they lacked equipment and transportation to carry out investigations. (118) Based on available information, security agencies and the Ministry of Justice did not have a reciprocal referral mechanism to ensure that child victims of human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor receive social services. (36) However, during the reporting period, the Ministry of Interior conducted four training sessions with a major focus on human trafficking for 590 law enforcement officials, and an international NGO conducted trainings in which Ministry of Interior officials participated. (111)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efforts to address all forms of child labor.

Afghanistan

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission on Protection of Child Rights*	Monitors and protects children’s rights established under the Law on Protection of Child Rights and strengthens national coordination on child protection. Met for the first time in 2019. Participants include representatives from the AGO, the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC), the Ministry of Education, and other bodies. (73,119) Includes an inter-ministerial technical committee, chaired by the MOLSA Minister, to ensure that the Child Act is operational at the provincial and district levels. (73)
High Commission for Combating Crimes of Abduction and Human Trafficking	Addresses human trafficking in general, including child trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Justice; comprises nine ministries, such as MoLSA, and five other entities. (27,97) The Commission, designed to meet quarterly, met only once in 2019 and focused on bacha bazi . (37) The Commission stated that ministries did not provide detailed enforcement information, making it difficult for the Commission to issue reports. (120)
Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict	Coordinates efforts to eliminate the recruitment and use of child soldiers. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and monitored by the UN and NGOs. (27)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that may hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Labor Policy	Includes objectives to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, such as those involving hazardous activities; pass legislation prohibiting child labor; and effectively enforce child labor laws. (121) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
National Strategy for Children at Risk	Creates a framework to provide social services to at-risk children and their families, and guides donors in contributing toward a comprehensive child protection system. Focuses specifically on working children, victims of child trafficking, child soldiers, and other children affected by conflict. (124) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
Policy for Protection of Children in Armed Conflict	Commits to protect children from recruitment and sexual exploitation in the armed forces, and provides services to children rescued from engagement in armed conflict. Assigns the Ministry of Defense and the Afghan National Police with monitoring that children’s rights are safeguarded and coordinating with CPAN chapters and AIHRC. (125) In 2019, over 439 children were prevented from joining the Afghan National Police. (38)
National Child Labor Strategy and Action Plan†	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2025 and all child labor by 2030. Makes recommendations to improve social protections and oversight. (5) In September 2019, MoLSA partnered with the International Bureau for Children’s Rights and UNICEF to draft a National Child Protection Policy and strengthen the capacity of MoLSA’s Child Protection Secretariat. (5)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including adequacy to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Protection Units (CPUs) of the Afghan National Police†	Units located within Afghan National Police recruitment centers to ensure that children are not recruited to join armed conflict. CPUs did not oversee Afghan Local Police and the government did not have sufficient CPU reporting channels to identify children, prevent them from joining the security forces, and provide shelter, services, and family reintegration. (126,127) Despite insufficient reporting channels between CPUS and the government, CPUs prevented the recruitment of at least 439 children. (73)
Juvenile Rehabilitation Center†	Center in Kabul that provides educational, social and psychological support, and vocational training to children who were previously engaged in armed conflict. (128,129) The shelter was operational in 2019. (111)

† Program is funded by the Government of Afghanistan.

In 2019, the Ministry of Public Health conducted approximately 1,300 meetings, workshops, and awareness raising campaigns for about 55,000 local and provincial government officials. Similarly, the Ministry of Hajj and

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Religious Affairs distributed pamphlets on human trafficking to about 54,000 individuals during Friday sermons in areas not controlled by the Taliban. (111)

There is no evidence of programs designed specifically to prevent and eliminate child labor in all relevant sectors, such as agriculture or the production of bricks. Moreover, the government acknowledged the dearth of shelters and government resources for victims of human trafficking. At times, the government placed child trafficking victims in orphanages, and some orphanages subjected children to human trafficking. (4) Some boys who are victims of human trafficking were arrested, and some were sent to juvenile rehabilitation centers due to the lack of shelters. (50, 130)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2019, Albania made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Council for the Rights and Protection of the Child approved Decision of the Council of Ministers No. 704, which provides guidance to institutions responsible for identifying children working in violation of the law and referring cases to social protection services, and enacted the National Action Plan for the Protection of Children from Economic Exploitation, including those in street situations, 2019-2021. Furthermore, the General Prosecutor ordered the creation of the Development Center of Criminal Justice for Minors, which employs four part-time prosecutors and one judicial police officer to oversee cases related to the Justice Criminal Code for Minors. However, children in Albania engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and mining, including of chromium. Children also engage in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The law does not explicitly prohibit using, procuring, or offering children for illicit activities. In addition, the labor inspectorate needs to be strengthened so it can conduct inspections in all sectors in which child labor is known to occur.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Albania engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging and mining, including of chromium. Children also engage in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Albania.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.6 (23,665)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	5.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2018, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (5)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey (NCLS), 2010. (1)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor [‡]	Use in illicit activities, including burglary, drug trafficking, and harvesting and processing cannabis (2,3,7,15,18,21,22)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2,3,7,13,15,18,21,26)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2,3,7,15,18,21,23,24,26,27)

[†] Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

[‡] Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some Roma and Balkan Egyptian children participate in street begging or the collection of recyclables to contribute to family income. (4,28) Children are also trafficked domestically and abroad to some EU countries for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. (4) In addition, some children informally scavenge chromium around hazardous mines where debris from mine tunnels is found, and they sometimes carry these heavy rocks for miles. (4,11,12) Internal child trafficking and forced begging have continued in recent years, particularly during the tourist season. (29) Albania lacks recent, comprehensive data on child labor, including in the agriculture and construction sectors.

Although Albania allows children without a birth certificate to enroll in public schools, some children from Roma and Balkan Egyptian families and refugees may face obstacles in obtaining birth certificates, which may affect their access to social services and education. (4,30) Some Roma and Balkan Egyptian children also experienced discrimination in schools and were placed in separate classrooms and faced other hurdles to accessing education, such as a lack of access to reliable transportation. (2,4,30,31) Some migrant and refugee children from Syria, Algeria, and Libya faced difficulties accessing education due to language barriers. (4) Children with disabilities also continue to experience discrimination and other hurdles to accessing inclusive education. (4,32) Children not in school are more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Albania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

On March 13, 2019, the Decision of the Council of Ministers (DCM) No. 129 was passed, which sets forth the procedures to identify, assist, and refer children who have been economically exploited. (4,39) The National Council for the Rights and Protection of the Child also created the 2019-2021 National Action Plan for the Protection of Children from Economic Exploitation, including those in street situations, and approved DCM No. 704, which provides guidance to institutions designated as being responsible for protecting children's rights related to identifying children working in violation of the labor law and referring identified cases to social assistance services. (4)

The law in Albania does not explicitly prohibit using, procuring, or offering children under age 18 for illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Article 129 of the Criminal Code only prohibits inducing or encouraging children under age 14 to participate in criminality. The law also does not criminally prohibit the use of children for prostitution.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Finance, Economy, and Labor that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Finance, Economy, and Labor	Enforces laws related to child labor and hazardous work and monitors the quality of social services provided by the State Labor Inspectorate. Receives, documents, and responds to child labor complaints through the State Social Services Agency. (4) Child Protection Units (CPUs) are the responsible agencies at the local level. (4) The number of CPUs increased from 235 in 2018 to 237 in 2019. (2,4)
Ministry of Interior	Enforces all laws, including laws related to the worst forms of child labor through protection officers. (7,17) Coordinates each of the illicit human trafficking sections in the country's 12 Regional Police Directorates through the General Directorate of State Police. (2,4) Establishes the government's policy on combating human trafficking through the State Committee Against Trafficking in Persons, chaired by the Interior Minister. (40)
Office of the Prosecutor General	Investigates and prosecutes child trafficking cases through the Serious Crimes Prosecution Office. (4) In July 2019, the General Prosecutor ordered the creation of the Development Center of Criminal Justice for Minors, which employs four part-time prosecutors and one judicial police officer to engage with cases related to the Justice Criminal Code for Minors. The center has produced three documents on the rights of children in conflict with the law and child victims of crimes, in addition to a list of steps to be taken by prosecutors and judicial police when dealing with cases involving minors. (29)
Child Protection Units (CPUs)	Identify at-risk children, conduct an initial evaluation of each case at the municipal level, and refer children to appropriate social services. (41) Coordinate the assistance of an ad hoc technical group with social services, police, health, education, justice, and NGOs. (4) Every municipality or administrative unit with at least 3,000 children is required to have at least 1 CPU. (7)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Finance, Economy, and Labor that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including financial resource allocation.

‡ Data are from January 2019 to December 2019.

The State Inspectorate for Labor and Social Services (SLISS) extended its inspection plan to include inspections of 182 agricultural entities in 2019. (4,42) During the summer, inspections increased in tourist areas to account for the high number of children working in the hospitality industry. (4,17) The SLISS can inspect all registered private entities but cannot inspect private homes, private farms, or unregistered businesses. (2,4,17)

In 2019, all inspectors received training on implementing procedures for the identification, immediate assistance, and referral of economically exploited children, including children in street situations. (4,43) The SLISS noted that its 2019 budget did not cover an adequate amount of vehicles for inspectors to reach inspection sites. (4,16,43) According to the SLISS, the number of labor inspectors was insufficient, given that only six percent of workplaces were inspected in 2019. (4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating human resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

During the reporting period, police officers from the Illicit Trafficking Police, State Police, and Border Police received trainings on child protection and trafficking in persons. (4) In addition, due to recent changes in juvenile justice law, the State Police organized a 2-week session on crimes involving minors; 25 police officers attended. (4) The government also transferred trafficking in persons cases involving organized crime to district courts from the Serious Crimes Court as a result of justice reforms. (28) The government did not provide data on imposed penalties for violations related to the worst forms of child labor for inclusion in this report.

If a child is trafficked for labor exploitation, the agency identifying the child refers the child to the police and state social services and then to an anti-trafficking shelter. (4) The case may also be referred to local Child Protection Units, which can then connect the child to social services. (2,41,42) Sources reported that border police did not consistently identify human trafficking victims from Kosovo and failed to identify migrants or other potential victims. (13,15,44) In addition, gaps exist in the screening of minors, including of children traveling to and from neighboring countries. (13,15,44,45)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder adequate coordination of efforts to address child labor, including coordination among agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
State Agency for Rights and Protection of Children	Oversees implementation of the government's child rights protection policies, including monitoring the National Action Plan for the Identification and Protection of Children in Street Situations. (17,18) Manages cases of at-risk children and refers them to appropriate social services. (41) Sanctions those who fail to protect children from violence and exploitation. (41) Coordinates local and central structures on health, security, and education of children. (2) In April 2019, the agency organized a conference to introduce legal changes in the field of children's rights to child protection officers and social services directors from 61 municipalities. The conference also included representatives from NGOs, in addition to officials from the Ministry of Health and Social Protection, the Ministry of Justice, and the Ministry of the Interior.

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (ONAC)	Collaborates with regional counterparts to adopt standard protocols to guide anti-trafficking efforts. Oversees 12 regional anti-human trafficking committees that carry out local action plans in cooperation with civil society partners. (18) Leads data collection and report writing for the National Database for Human Trafficking Victims/Potential Victims. (18) Runs the Closed Case Task Force with the Serious Crimes Prosecution Office and Albanian State Police. (23) Collaborates with regional counterparts to adopt standard protocol in anti-trafficking efforts. (4) In 2019, ONAC identified 67 children as victims of trafficking or those at-risk. (4) During the reporting period, ONAC organized 8 trainings for its employees across its 12 regional directorates on child labor and forced labor concepts, complaint filing, and victim referral; approximately 600 employees attended these trainings. In October 2019, ONAC collaborated with its counterpart in North Macedonia to draft and adopt standard operating procedures to guide the identification, referral, and provision of assistance to victims of trafficking and those at risk, with a specific focus on children. ONAC is also drafting similar procedures with its Greek counterpart. (4)
Ad-Hoc Cross-Sectorial Technical Groups (CTGs)	Address child protection cases in municipalities with more than 30,000 children. CTGs include representatives from the police, social services, education, health, justice, and NGOs. (2) Council of Ministers Decision 353 defines the roles and responsibilities of CTGs regarding strengthening local-level coordination. (2,46) In 2019, participated in three training sessions for social workers from state social services and NGOs about the public and non-public entities that work in the field of children's rights. (29)
National Referral Mechanism (NRM)	Coordinates the identification, protection, referral, and rehabilitation of trafficking victims between government and civil society organizations. (47) Chaired by the Ministry of the Interior's ONAC vis-à-vis an agreement signed by 13 government agencies. (2,47,48) In 2019, the NRM held four meetings focusing on the implementation of standard operating procedures to identify and refer victims and potential victims of trafficking. (44)

Coordination among the SLISS and the Albanian State Police has traditionally been sporadic. (13,49)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Protection of Children from Economic Exploitation (2019–2021)†	Approved by the National Council for Child Protection in October 2019. (4) Guarantees the rights and protection of economically exploited children, including children in street situations. (2,4) Aims to prevent the use of children for profit and enhances services and enforcement of legislation. (2,4) Defines the responsibilities of institutions involved in child protection, including children working in mining, in street situations, and in other situations that violate the law. (4) During the reporting period, the State Agency for the Protection and the Rights of Children provided assistance to the Municipality of Bulqiza to draft and approve the local plan for the protection of children from economic exploitation in conjunction with the local police, the Mayor of Bulqiza, and the Ministries of Education and Labor. (4)
National Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Persons (2018–2020)	Ensures the identification of and referral for the protection of child victims and potential victims of human trafficking in accordance with standard operating procedures. (2,50) Increases the use of CPUs, police, and border control personnel to identify victims, including children involved in street work. Raises public awareness of all forms of human trafficking, including forced labor. (2,44,50) In 2019, the government implemented actions to promote the return and reintegration of juvenile and adult victims and potential victims of trafficking, while also reducing the risk of being re-victimized. (4)
The Albanian National Agenda for Children's Rights (2017–2020)	Aims to protect and promote children's rights by supporting physical and psychosocial development, and the social inclusion of children. (51) Objectives include improving children's access to services and enhancing legal and institutional mechanisms for child protection. (7,51) Goals include promoting, respecting, and protecting children's rights through governance; eliminating all forms of violence against children; and creating child-friendly systems and services in education, justice, health, and social protection. (7,23) In early 2019, a conference on child protection workers (CPWs) was held with the goal of strengthening coordination among CPW professionals. (28)
National Action Plan for the Social-Economic Reintegration of Women and Girl Victims of Trafficking (2018–2020)	Increases resources available to victims and attempts to reintegrate female trafficking victims by providing education and social services to combat future forced labor and human trafficking. (55) Part of the Strategy for Combating Trafficking in Persons Action Plan. (18) During the reporting period, ONAC organized 14 meetings to educate women and girls on the risks of trafficking and exploitation. In addition, the National Employment Service organized a roundtable on promoting employment services focusing on the integration of girls and women. (29)

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Roma and Balkan Egyptian Community Reintegration (2016–2020)	Aims to provide Roma and Balkan Egyptian children with full access to education, reduce discrimination, enhance social inclusion, and promote intercultural dialogue between different actors in the community. (43,52,57) In October 2019, the State Social Services Directorate organized six awareness-raising activities for the Roma and Balkan Egyptian communities throughout the country, including a session to educate 30 children about trafficking in persons. (29)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (2,44,58)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Program of Cooperation for Sustainable Development (2017–2021)	UN program that aims to increase access to education for vulnerable children and improve protections for child victims of human trafficking. (59) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the program during the reporting period.
Human Trafficking Shelters	The National Shelter Coalition† comprises one state-run and three NGO-run shelters for potential victims of trafficking. (3,4,29) During the reporting period, 43 children were referred to the shelters. (29) In April 2019, ONAC and the National Shelter Coalition established an advisory board for victims of trafficking and potential victims of trafficking. (4)
National Emergency Transition Center†	Government-run center that aims to provide vulnerable families with housing, health care, psychosocial and educational services, legal assistance, and employment placement aid. (2) During the reporting period, the National Emergency Transition Center and the State Social Service organized awareness events for its inhabitants in conjunction with the International Day Against Child Labor and the International Day for the Prevention of Child Abuse. (4)
Child Allowance Program (Ndihma Ekonomike)†	$46 million government-funded cash transfer program that provides an allowance for families receiving economic aid through the Law on Social Assistance and Services. (2) In 2019, the government continued to pay monthly benefits to several categories of eligible recipients, including families with school-aged children and victims of trafficking. (60)
Hotline for Potential Victims of Trafficking	Operated by the State Police Directorate's Command Center to assist potential victims of human trafficking. (29) In 2019, 11 calls were received. ONAC and NGO partners continued to promote the hotline throughout the reporting period. (29)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (44,61)

During the reporting period, police occasionally referred street children or unaccompanied minors to human trafficking shelters and contacted their parents. (28) Research indicates that there is a lack of shelters for street children who are not victims of human trafficking. Some state- and NGO-run services were available for children who were forced to beg. Research also found no evidence that programs were carried out to assist children scavenging chromium. (2,7,26,48,62) In addition, programs did not specifically target all types of human trafficking. A lack of financial and human resources and issues of decentralization of social funds from the central government to municipalities were also cited as gaps in the efficient implementation of social programs. (2,43,44,62)

In 2019, the Government of Albania maintained its status as a Pathfinder Country for Alliance 8.7 to expedite the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals related to eliminating child labor and human trafficking by 2025. (2,4,63) Activities include tracking child labor data, organizing workshops, and developing strategies to eliminate child labor. (2,4,63)

In 2019, Algeria made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government trained criminal law enforcement officers of the Directorate General for National Security and the National Gendarmerie, and provided specialized training to the Brigades for the Protection of Minors on issues of child labor. The National Authority for the Protection and Promotion of Children also trained judges on the protection of children during judicial proceedings and members of the Algerian media on the protection and promotion of children's rights. In addition, the government led child labor awareness-raising efforts on national television and online. However, children in Algeria engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in street vending and begging. The government has not sufficiently prohibited the use of children in illicit activities or determined by national law or regulation the types of work that are hazardous for children to perform. Furthermore, the government lacks a sufficient number of labor inspectors to ensure that child labor laws are enforced in all geographic areas.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Algeria engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in street vending and begging. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Algeria.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	6.7 (413,729)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	7.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		105.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2018, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (4)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4 (MICS 4), 2012–2013. (5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including harvesting olives (6-9)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (1,6,8,10)
Services	Street work, including vending, collecting plastics, and begging (1,2,6,9,11-14)
	Domestic work (1,10)
	Working in small workshops and businesses, including mechanics' shops (7,9,10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,6,13)
	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (8)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (10,11,13)
	Forced domestic work, including drawing water from wells, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (13)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Algeria

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Evidence suggests that children, primarily unaccompanied Sub-Saharan migrants, are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work. (1,9,15,16) Evidence also suggests children’s work is often part-time and informal in nature, with some migrant children working in small-scale family-run businesses, such as restaurants or small stores. Children also work in informal street markets in street vending and begging, exposing them to dangerous and hazardous conditions. (9,10,17-19) Research could not find a current and comprehensive study on the activities and scope of the child labor situation in Algeria.

The Algerian public education system is free and open to all children, regardless of ethnicity and nationality. Non-Algerian children must provide documentation of grade level or sit for testing to determine their level. (9,10,20) There are no laws or regulations that prevent access to school, although there are reports of isolated cases of migrant children without valid documentation being denied enrollment and reported to authorities. (9) Many children with disabilities do not have the opportunity to access mainstream education because of social stigma, the relatively low number of teachers with specialized training, the lack of a transportation system for children with disabilities, and the limited accessibility of school buildings. In addition, recent reporting has noted an estimated 300,000 children remain outside formal schooling and 500,000 high school-age children are at risk of dropping out due to pressures stemming from barriers to education. (9,21) Barriers to education, including those placed on migrant children and children with disabilities, result in absence from school and increased vulnerability to child labor. (9,16-18,20)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Algeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Algeria’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of increased penalties for, or categorization as a separate crime, of the involvement of children in either the production or trafficking of drugs.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 15 of the Labor Code; Article 7 of Executive Decree No. 96-98 on the List and Content of Special Books and Registers Mandatory for Employers (22,23)

Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 303 bis 4 of the Penal Code (24)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 303 bis 4 and 319 of the Penal Code (24)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 319, 333 bis 1, 343, and 344 of the Penal Code (24)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Article 195 bis of the Penal Code (24)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	17	Article 14 of Presidential Decree No. 08-134 on the National People's Army (25)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 3 of Law No. 14-06 on National Service (26)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 12 of Law No. 08-04 on National Education (27)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of Law No. 08-04 on National Education (27)

The Labor Code prohibits anyone under age 19 from working at night and anyone under age 18 from performing work that is harmful to their health, safety, or morals. (22) Algeria has not determined by national law or regulation the types of work that are hazardous for children and research did not determine whether the government commission tasked with proposing a list of hazardous professions continued to work on this issue in 2019. (19) Furthermore, research uncovered no additional information on efforts to revise the Labor Code during the reporting period. (1,2,9,22,28) Algerian law does not provide increased penalties for, or categorize as a separate crime, the involvement of children in either the production or trafficking of drugs. (24)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforces labor laws, including laws related to child labor, through its General Labor Inspectorate; issues citations noting violations of labor laws; and refers violations to the Ministry of Justice. (2,20) Supervises the application of laws and regulations related to labor relations, working conditions, and worker safety. (8) Shares child labor reports with the Ministry of National Solidarity, Family, and the Condition of Women to ensure follow up with social services. (8,11)
Ministry of National Solidarity, Family, and the Condition of Women	Provides social services to children and families. Also conducts investigations, as directed by the Ministry of Justice, into issues related to children and families. (19)
Ministry of the Interior and Local Assemblies	Enforces criminal laws related to child trafficking through the Directorate General for National Security (DGSN) in urban areas, which comprises 8 active brigades of 77 specialized police officers, focused on illegal immigration and human trafficking, and 50 Brigades for the Protection of Minors of 300 police officers, specializing in the protection of children. Maintains hotline to report child abuse and missing children, and may conduct investigations on child labor violations, as directed by the Ministry of Justice. (8,13,17-19,29)
Ministry of National Defense	Enforces criminal laws pertaining to child labor, including child trafficking, in rural and border regions through the National Gendarmerie. As directed by the Ministry of Justice, may conduct investigations on child labor violations. (18) Works with DGSN and the NGO Algerian Network for the Defense of Children's Rights to administer hotlines for the reporting of child abuse; also receives training on child labor. (11,18,29-31) Maintains a website (ppgn.mdn.dz) where individuals can file complaints. (18)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes child exploitation cases, including those related to non-compliance with labor laws, through its Office of Criminal Affairs and Amnesty Procedures, which is the lead enforcement agency for human trafficking issues. (30)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MTESS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the insufficient number of labor inspectors relative to the size of Algeria's workforce.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, the ILO conducted a workshop in partnership with the government for approximately 30 Algerian labor inspectors. The 3-day workshop focused on the rights of workers, including laws concerning child labor. (18) The government reported conducting 124,698 total labor inspections in 2019, both in the formal and informal sectors and inspecting sectors suspected of child labor including agriculture, construction, informal street markets, and restaurants. Inspectors can and will inspect unmarked work sites, such as houses or informal construction sites, often with a police escort. (18)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Algeria's workforce, which includes more than 11.8 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Algeria would employ about 788 inspectors, notably in all geographic areas of the country, both urban and rural. (9,33,34) Labor inspections in Algeria focus mainly on the formal economy; visits to the informal sector generally involve work to formalize an enterprise. (9,35) The government did not provide certain information on its labor law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report, including the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites, number of child labor violations found, number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed, and number of child labor penalties imposed that were collected. Although the exact number of child labor violations for which penalties were imposed is unknown, the government reported that the figure is fewer than 10. (18)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including the lack of published information on the number of violations found related to criminal law enforcement efforts related to child labor.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (9)	Yes (18)

[‡] Data are from January 1, 2019 to June 30, 2019.

In the first half of 2019, the government prosecuted 32 cases, 16 related to child labor broadly and 16 related to child begging specifically. Over the same period, the government reported 27 convictions, 8 related to child labor broadly and 19 related to child begging in particular. (3, 18) Thirty Directorate General for National Security (DGSN) officers received training on trafficking in persons issues, including those related to children, and another 100 DGSN chiefs received training from the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women related to sexual violence and family issues, including those related to children. (18, 19) Gendarme officers received training on criminal and human rights issues related to children; and the National Authority for the Protection and Promotion of Children (ONPPE) provided specialized training to the Brigades for the Protection of Minors. (18) The government has an ad hoc practice in place for law enforcement personnel to refer potential victims of human trafficking to the prosecutor and to social services, as needed. (3, 8, 10, 13, 19, 29) Although the government reported conducting 23 investigations, the government did not provide for inclusion in this report certain information on its criminal law enforcement efforts, including the number of violations found. (18, 19)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Authority for the Protection and Promotion of Children (ONPPE)	Protects and promotes children's rights and advocates for children in danger of economic exploitation. Acts as a liaison between the Ministry of Justice and members of the public alleging violations of children's rights, and oversees efforts of the National Commission for the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor. (1, 8, 9, 29, 36, 37) Runs a national hotline and website to field questions and complaints about the mistreatment of children, with an average of more than 2,000 calls daily; however, in 2019, only 1,332 calls were related to actual infringements of child rights. (9, 38) In 2019, ONPPE conducted training sessions for judges on the protection of children and the involvement of children in judicial proceedings; workshops for governmental ministries; and training for members of the Algerian media on the protection and promotion of the rights of children. (18)
National Committee for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Monitors implementation of the National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons. Comprises representatives from the President's Office; the Prime Minister's Office; 12 ministries, including MTESS; and other government entities. (8, 36, 39, 40) In 2019, the Committee worked to raise awareness on human trafficking and sponsored training sessions for law enforcement and judicial personnel. Committee members are seeking to pass a comprehensive anti-trafficking in persons law in early 2020 to strengthen existing laws, and continues to work on that task. (18, 19)

The MTESS continues to lead the National Commission for the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor, which coordinates government labor activities and includes the National Labor Union and relevant NGOs. However, the ONPPE has expanded its role as the main hub of all issues concerning child protection, including issues of child labor. (18, 19)

Algeria

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including no evidence of a policy regarding other worst forms of child labor beyond the government's policy related to trafficking in persons.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Aims to prevent and reduce human trafficking by raising awareness, strengthening legislation, prosecuting human trafficking crimes, improving the provision of protective services to victims, and increasing collaboration with national and international NGOs. (8,13) In 2019, the National Committee for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons organized a Day of Awareness for civil society figures on the role of civil society in combating child trafficking, while the National Gendarmerie trained all officers on criminal and human rights issues related to children. (18)

Although the Government of Algeria has adopted the National Action Plan for the Prevention of and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of a policy regarding the worst forms of child labor and no continued work on developing a national action plan or plans specific to begging.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Awareness Campaign†	Efforts made through ONPPE and other government agencies to raise awareness about child labor. (18,36) In 2019, the government organized awareness-raising events, including through ONPPE's website and the Chaîne 3 television channel, and trained at least 24 journalists on issues related to child labor. The Ministry of Solidarity, Family, and the Condition of Women also had a communication plan for each of the country's 48 wilayas (regions) on child-related messaging. (18,19)
Children Assistance Facilities‡	Facilities that provide support for children, namely orphans and children in dangerous situations who are taken into custody by the state. In 2019, these centers continued to operate. (18)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. (10,12,18,36)

Although Algeria has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children, forced begging, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Algeria (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws increase penalties for, or categorize as a separate crime, the involvement of children in all illicit activities, including using, procuring, and offering children for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2013 – 2019
	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2009 – 2019
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016 – 2019

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Publish information on the labor law enforcement of child labor laws, including the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites, violations found, child labor violations for which penalties were imposed, and penalties imposed that were collected.	2009 – 2019

	Publish information on the criminal enforcement of child labor laws, including the number of criminal violations found.	2019
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that includes all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation, forced begging, and street work.	2015 – 2019
Social Programs	Research and publish information on children involved in child labor, or at risk of being involved; specify these activities and publish information to inform policies.	2014 – 2019
	Take measures to remove barriers to accessing education, namely transportation and accessibility to schools, particularly for migrant children and children with disabilities.	2015 – 2019
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children, forced begging, and street work.	2016 – 2019
	Ensure that isolated cases of school administrators denying enrollment to migrant children are stopped in accordance with laws allowing for free public education for all children.	2018 – 2019

In 2019, Angola made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government approved the Law on Trafficking Victims Protection, which provides comprehensive protections for human trafficking victims, including specific measures for the protection of children. In addition, the government convicted 15 individuals of child trafficking crimes, and the Ministry of Social Action, Family, and the Promotion of Women conducted several national awareness-raising campaigns regarding the worst forms of child labor. The government also approved its first National Action Plan to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons, and began opening registry offices in maternity wards throughout all 18 provinces to facilitate birth registrations. However, children in Angola engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in construction. Although Angola made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas during the reporting period, prohibitions against the commercial sexual exploitation of children do not meet international standards because they do not prohibit the procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or the use, procuring, or offering of a child for pornographic performances. In addition, there are not enough labor inspectors to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce, and social programs do not target all sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Angola engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Children also perform dangerous tasks in construction. (1,5) The 2015–2016 Survey on Multiple Health Indicators found that 23 percent of children, ages 5 to 17, engage in child labor. The percentage of children engaged in child labor is higher in rural areas compared to urban areas; Cuanza Sul and Cuando Cubango provinces have the highest percentage of child laborers. (6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Angola.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	15.1 (1,246,354)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	69.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	13.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		46.2

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Undocumented Congolese migrant children enter Angola for work in diamond-mining districts, and some experience conditions of forced labor or commercial sexual exploitation in mining camps. (4) Girls as young as age 12 are trafficked from Kasai Occidental in the Democratic Republic of the Congo to Angola for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Angolan boys are taken to Namibia and forced to herd cattle or work as couriers to transport illicit goods. (4) Reports also indicate that some adults force children younger than age 12 to commit crimes because children cannot be criminally prosecuted. (16)

In 2019, the National Association of Street Vendors reported that nearly 50 percent of street vendors in the country are children under the age of 18. These children are vulnerable to exploitative conditions, including commercial sexual exploitation. (17)

Education is free up to the ninth grade; however, families often face difficulty in paying informal school fees, such as for textbooks or fees paid to education officials. (18) Additional barriers to education for children include lack of classrooms and teachers and poor infrastructure. (19-22) Although the government only permits children without a birth certificate to attend school up to the sixth grade, programs to improve the rate of birth registration were conducted in all 18 provinces during the reporting year. (23)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Angola has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation

Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 19 and 23 of the Money Laundering Law (26)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 19 and 22–23 of the Money Laundering Law; Articles 197–200 of the Penal Code (26,27)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	14	Articles 12, 27, and 31 of the Basic Law of the Education System (30)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 11 of the Basic Law of the Education System (30)

During the reporting period, the Government of Angola drafted a Trafficking Victims Protection law aimed at providing comprehensive protections for human trafficking victims.(16) The law includes specific measures for the protection of minor victims, including strengthening efforts to locate their families, ensuring access to education, providing victims with government legal representation, and facilitating social reintegration. The law was promulgated in January 2020. (16,31)

The Penal Code, approved in January 2019, criminalizes the use of children for the production of pornography; however, this legislation does not meet international standards because it does not prohibit the procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography, or the use, procuring, or offering of a child for pornographic performances. (27) Although the list of hazardous activities and occupations identifies 57 activities prohibited for children, the legislation does not include diamond mining, a sector in which there is evidence of work conducted underground. (25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS)	Enforces laws against child labor. Fines employers or sends cases to the Ministry of Interior, through the Criminal Investigations Services, for further investigation, and to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights for prosecution. (1) Employs labor inspectors in all 18 provinces to carry out inspections and joint operations with social services providers. (32)
National Children's Institute (INAC)	Receives complaints about cases of child exploitation, including child labor. Conducts inspections and responds to reports of child labor. (33)
Ministry of Interior's National Police	Enforces criminal laws, and conducts operations and investigations related to the worst forms of child labor. (1) Through its Criminal Investigation Services, collaborates with the Juvenile Court on child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and illicit recruitment investigations. (34)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MAPTSS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the allocation of financial and human resources.

The 11 child labor violations reported by the government during the reporting year are currently under investigation. (1) In addition, research found that the National Children's Institute (INAC) registered over 700 cases of hazardous child labor during the first 3 months in 2019. (36)

Although the number of labor inspectors increased by 15 during the reporting period, the reported number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Angola's workforce, which includes approximately 12.51 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Angola would employ about 313 labor inspectors. (1,37-39) Moreover, the MAPTSS indicated that the budget allocated for labor inspections was insufficient to conduct inspections in sectors in which child labor is known to occur. (1)

Inspectors from the MAPTSS work with INAC and the Ministry of Social Action, Family, and the Advancement of Women (MASFAMU) to ensure that child labor victims receive the appropriate social services. (1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including the sufficient training of inspectors.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (34)	Yes (1)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A (34)	N/A (1)

Number of Violations Found	5 (41)	Unknown
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	5 (41)	Unknown
Number of Convictions	9 (41)	Unknown
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to The Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (40)	Yes (16)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (34)	Yes (1)

The government did not provide disaggregated data on the number of violations or convictions found for the worst forms of child labor; however, research indicates that there were more than 70 cases of child trafficking registered during the first 6 months of 2019, with 15 secured convictions. (42) In addition, the government secured six trafficking in persons convictions in the Province of Cunene, including a sex trafficking case involving a 16-year-old female victim, for which the perpetrator received a 1-year sentence. The government also reported the prosecution of 26 individuals for human trafficking crimes, although it is unknown how many of these cases involved children. (16)

Angola's provinces have standard operating procedures that are used to inform INAC and MASFAMU officials whenever victims of the worst forms of child labor are identified. Both agencies use a network of 114 counseling and housing shelters to support victims and provide them with social services. (16) Child trafficking victims are also referred to the Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration shelters before a determination is made regarding their reintegration with their families or guardians. (1) During the reporting period, the government implemented IOM-recommended procedures on the proactive identification of human trafficking victims, using two separate manuals that were widely distributed and adapted specifically to law enforcement officials and civil society organizations. (16) Each manual includes procedures on the interviewing of potential victims and the screening of vulnerable groups, and how to assess risk, refer victims to social services, and care for victims. (16)

Although training for criminal investigators is an ongoing process for new and established employees, reports indicate that during the reporting period, training was insufficient, particularly training for investigators located outside the capital and in remote areas across the country. (1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efforts to address all forms of child labor.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates enforcement efforts on human trafficking, including child trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Led by the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights. (1) In 2019, completed a draft of the National Action Plan to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons. Conducted two training workshops in preparation for the Plan, and secured funding in the fiscal year's budget. (16)
National Council for Social Action	Promotes and defends children's rights through social consultation and monitoring of public policies. Led by the Ministry of Social Action, Family, and the Advancement of Women (MASFAMU). (43,44) Active in 2019, and met periodically to address objectives of the National Action Plan to Eradicate Child Labor. (13)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MASFAMU	Ensures coordination among various government agencies related to social welfare and victim protection. Oversees a national network of support centers established for the protection of children, offering health care, psychological care, legal and social assistance, meals, basic education, and family reunification for victims of crime, including victims of human trafficking. (1) In 2019, conducted awareness-raising campaigns to sensitize the public on the worst forms of child labor, including through the broadcast of television shows and national roadshows, specifically targeting rural populations. (1)
INAC	Coordinates child protective services. Works with MASFAMU to provide shelter and helps with family reintegration for children found in child labor situations. (1) In 2019, conducted numerous public awareness campaigns and distributed thousands of brochures in schools, children's shelters, and bus stations. (16)

Despite the existence of the Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons, the government faces challenges aggregating and synthesizing data on human trafficking cases. (40) In addition, research shows that there is no specific coordinating mechanism dedicated solely to addressing issues related to the worst forms of child labor that are outside the scope of human trafficking.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (2018–2022)	Aims to eliminate child labor by strengthening the rights of children, increasing access to education, and mapping areas and types of child labor found across the country to better inform relevant policies to combat child labor. (45) In 2019, MAPTSS and MASFAMU conducted workshops and trained provincial and regional labor inspectors on policy objectives. (13)
Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children	Aims to protect and defend the rights of child victims of sexual and economic exploitation, including by providing rehabilitation. (45,46) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Plan of Action and Intervention Against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children during the reporting period.
National Action Plan on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons†	Outlines Angola's strategy to address human trafficking, including domestic human trafficking. The 5-year plan commits to specific activities designed to improve the prevention, protection, and prosecution components involved in combating human trafficking. (47) Plan was published in February 2020. (47)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (21)

Although the National Action Plan to Eradicate Child Labor was implemented by the MAPTSS and the MASFAMU during the reporting period, reports indicate that lack of resources hindered the government's ability to pursue many of the Plan's objectives. (1)

VI. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Social Protection Programs‡	National network of child support centers implemented by the government in coordination with NGOs, offering meals, shelter, basic education, and family reunification services to victims of crime, including child trafficking victims. MASFAMU and the Organization of Angolan Women operate 52 children's shelters that assist victims of child trafficking. (1) In 2019, assisted 34 child trafficking victims, including 20 children in Zaire province, 8 children in Bié province, and 6 children in Luanda province. All 20 child victims in Zaire province were still receiving assistance at the end of the reporting period while authorities worked to reconnect them with their families. (16)

Birth Registration and Justice for Children†	Government-run program making birth registration free for all Angolan citizens. (48) In 2019, the government began opening registry offices in maternities throughout all 18 provinces to facilitate birth registration, and authorized midwives to produce temporary certificates. In addition, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights also announced a mobile campaign in specific pilot areas aimed at registering all Angolans by the end of 2022. (16,49)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2019)	UNICEF program, in coordination with the government, designed to plan and implement education and child protection-focused interventions. (50) Ran a child helpline, in collaboration with the Angolan government, in Luanda Province. (51) During the reporting period, collaborated with another NGO and INAC to set up a child protection hotline that will tie into the national child hotline. (1)
National Institutes of Job and Professional Training†	Government-funded centers that provide vocational training programs for youth so that they have the skills to enter the formal labor market. Active in 2019. (1)
Mobile Schools and Free Meals for Children†	Ministry of Education program that provides education in mobile schools to migrant children who work with their parents in cattle herding. Specifically targets children at the highest risk of involvement in child labor in southern Angola. (1) Supports some mobile schools with kitchens, facilitating the free school meals program. Active in 2019. (1)

† Program is funded by the Government of Angola.

Although Angola has implemented programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Furthermore, research did not identify programs that seek to reach children engaged in certain worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Angola (Table 11).

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists in Anguilla, in 2019 the government made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The law does not prohibit the involvement of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. In addition, the minimum ages for work and hazardous work do not meet international standards and Anguilla lacks a list of prohibited hazardous occupations and activities for children.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in Anguilla. (1-3) Table 1 provides one key indicator on children’s education in Anguilla. Data on other key indicators on children’s work are not available from the sources used in this report. (2,4)

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Primary Completion Rate (%)		119.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (4)
All other data were unavailable from International Labor Organization’s analysis, 2020. (2)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) are under the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but they are not constitutionally part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense. (5) Domestic UK law does not generally apply unless explicitly extended to BOTs. (5) Under Article 35(4) of the ILO Constitution, when the UK ratifies a Convention, the Territory must consider if it will accept the Convention. If the Convention is accepted, it is considered applicable to that territory. (5) The following Conventions have been extended to Anguilla. Anguilla has accepted one of them (Table 2). (5)

The Government of Anguilla has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 3). However, gaps exist in Anguilla’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

The minimum work age of 12 does not meet international standards. The minimum age of 14 for hazardous work also does not meet international standards as it only applies to industrial undertakings, transportation of passengers or goods by roads or rail, and work on ships. (6,7) However, there is a prohibition of night work for children under age 16 in manufacturing of raw sugar, and a prohibition of night work in other industrial undertakings for children under age 18. (6) In addition, Anguilla does not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. (8,12,13) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (7,10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the UK government has established relevant institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor in Anguilla (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor of the Ministry of Finance, Economic Development, Investments, and Tourism	Enforces child labor laws through the Labor Commissioner, pursuant to the Employment of Children (Restriction) Act. (7,14)
Department of Social Development of the Ministry of Social Development	Safeguards the well-being of children and investigates reports of child abuse. (15)
Royal Anguilla Police Force	Investigates child protection cases. (15,16)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor. However, the Government of Anguilla has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministry of Social Development	Implements child protection efforts and ensures that Anguilla complies with the Conventions on the Rights of the Child. (15)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor. However, the Government of Anguilla has established the Child Protection National Action Plan, Safeguarding and Child Protection Protocols and Procedures, and an Inter-Agency Child Protection Protocol. (17-19) All of these policies may contribute to the prevention of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor. However, the Government of Anguilla has established the Safeguarding Children in Anguilla Project and the Child Safeguarding in the Overseas Territories Regional Project, which may contribute to the prevention of child labor. (20)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor in Anguilla (Table 6).

Table 6. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

In 2019, Argentina made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the government issued two regulations to strengthen inspection procedures with respect to child labor and unauthorized adolescent work. Argentine courts continued to render indictments and convictions for child sexual exploitation and child trafficking cases, and the Special Prosecutor's Office for Human Trafficking and Exploitation provided training to prosecutors, defenders, judicial officials, and university students. The Superintendent of Labor Risks also collaborated with the International Labor Organization and youth advocacy groups to adopt a new National Action Plan to Improve the Safety and Health at Work of Adolescents and Youth. In addition, the former Secretariat of Labor, Employment, and Social Security, which now has the title of Ministry, partnered with the Tucuman Ministry of Production, civil society, and the private sector to develop an agricultural child labor monitoring system, which is being piloted in blueberry and yerba mate plantations in Tucuman and Misiones. However, children in Argentina engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in illicit activities, including the sale and distribution of drugs. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Moreover, the government does not publish complete information about its labor and criminal law enforcement efforts.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Argentina engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in illicit activities, such as the transport, sale, and distribution of drugs. (1-3) Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture.(3) In November 2018, the Secretariat of Labor published the final report of the first nationally representative survey of child labor in Argentina. (4,5) It concluded that there were 371,771 working children between the ages of 5 and 15. (5) However, raw data from the government's Survey of Child and Adolescent Activities (EANNA) have not been made publicly available for analysis.

Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Argentina. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	5.3 (371,771)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	98.9

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (6)

	Use in illicit activities, including transporting, selling and distributing drugs (2,8,35,36)
	Forced labor in domestic work (1,8)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Misiones—producer of 90 percent of Argentina’s and 60 percent of the world’s yerba mate—is one of the provinces most affected by child labor. (21) Children as young as age 5 help their parents harvest yerba mate, sometimes carrying heavy loads. (21) In Salta and Jujuy, children harvest tobacco. (19,37)

Although the extent of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that girls from Argentina’s northern provinces are victims of human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation. (1,3,38) Bolivian children and children of Bolivian immigrants in Argentina engage in child labor in agriculture, production of bricks, and domestic service, and in forced child labor in the production of garments. (1,3,8,28,32,34,39) Reports also indicate that Paraguayan children are victims of human trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation in Argentina. (1,33,40) Although the prevalence of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that sex traffickers exploit minors participating in domestic youth sports clubs. (41)

In Argentina, education is compulsory until age 18. However, reports indicate that many children, including those who are ages 16 and 17, drop out of school. (42,43) These children are not eligible for youth employment programs, including most apprenticeships, because the minimum age to qualify for those programs is age 18. (43,44) Because of this, children who drop out of school are likely to engage in jobs in the informal sector. (43) A government program titled “I will attend” (Assistire) that aims to prevent children from dropping out of high school added 150 schools in 2019. (3)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Argentina has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Argentina's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including a gap between the minimum age for work and the compulsory education age.

During the reporting period, the government issued two new regulations on procedures related to working children: Resolutions 425/2019 and 1725/2019. Resolution 425/2019 requires labor inspectors to issue citations to employers when a child younger than 16 is found working on the premises and Resolution 1725/2019 requires labor inspectors to fill out a special declaration when child workers of 16 and 17 years of age are working on the premises. (3) The regulations also mandate the National Directorate of Labor Inspection and Social Security to design and implement training for labor inspectors and other agents linked to labor inspection activities. (3) Although the former Secretariat of Labor worked with the ILO in 2018 to update Argentina's list of hazardous work, the Argentine government did not formally adopt or promulgate the proposed updates in 2019. (1,3) The minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, which may encourage children to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (49-52,62-64)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security	Created by the new Argentine government, which was sworn in on December 10, 2019, which restructured the cabinet creating a new Ministry of Labor, Employment and Social Security that inherited the responsibilities of the former Secretariat of Labor, Employment, and Social Security. Continues the enforcement efforts of the former Labor Secretariat in coordination with provincial-level labor authorities in each of Argentina's 23 provinces and the City of Buenos Aires. (3) Enforces child labor laws in part through its Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and Regulation of Adolescent Work (COODITIA) and collaborates with the National Registry of Rural Workers and Employers (RENATRE) in enforcing child labor laws in the agricultural sector. (4,64) In addition, maintains a national hotline through which labor violations can be reported and leads the Network of Businesses Against Child Labor (Red de Empresas contra el Trabajo Infantil), a network of companies promoting best practices in the private sector to combat child labor. (4,5,36,65,66) Labor inspectors are tasked with enforcing laws related to child labor as part of the Ministry of labor's broader enforcement strategy, the National Plan for the Regularization of Labor (Plan Nacional de Regularización del Trabajo [PNRT]). (3,43-46,56-58) A specific line of action in the PNRT is to detect and eradicate child labor and irregular adolescent work, so the standard operating procedure for inspections includes efforts to detect child labor violations. (3)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Manages Line 145, the anonymous national hotline that allows the public to report suspected human trafficking cases, and assists in responding to these calls with the Rescue Program Office (Oficina de Programa de Rescate). (63,64) From January through the end of August 2019, this hotline registered 1,340 complaints. (1) Through its Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims, provides emergency legal and other assistance to victims of labor and sex trafficking, including child victims. (64) Maintains regional offices that coordinate the provision of legal and social services to human trafficking victims in the provinces of Chaco, Chubut, La Pampa, La Rioja, Mendoza, Rio Negro, and Santa Fe. (40,65,67)
National Directorate of Criminal Intelligence, Human Trafficking Unit	Improves the ability of the Ministry of Security and federal police forces to collect information and investigate trafficking in persons. (63)
Federal and National Immigration Police	The Federal Police conduct human trafficking investigations through the Trafficking in Persons Division. (69) The National Immigration Police, directed by the National Immigration Directorate, oversee the rights of migrants and assist in investigating cases of transnational human trafficking. (3)
Federal Administration of Public Revenue	Ensures employer compliance with national laws, assists in workplace and labor-related inspections, and initiates prosecutions of labor violations through the Penal Section of its Social Security Directorate. (70)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including human resource allocation.

Between April and November 2019, the Ministry of Labor hosted several online and digital video conference labor inspector trainings focused on addressing child labor and adolescent work issues. The Ministry of Labor also hosted a classroom training on “law and operational aspects of inspections of child labor and adolescent work and signs of labor exploitation” for labor inspectors from Jujuy Province. (3)

However, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Argentina’s workforce, which includes approximately 17.7 million workers. According to the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Argentina would employ about 1,200 labor inspectors. (72) The government does not report on the number of provincial inspectors, so the totals reflect only the number of federal inspectors; NGOs continue to report that the number is insufficient. (3,4) Moreover, the government does not publish labor enforcement data on the total number of child labor violations identified or penalties imposed. (4)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor identified 13 child labor violations, 10 in the service or commerce sectors, 2 in agriculture, and 1 in the food service industry. These violations involved children working in the provinces of Santa Cruz, Santiago del Estero, and Chubut, as well as in the City of Buenos Aires. (3) The Ministry of Labor did not provide further information regarding referrals to social services in response to these child labor violations. (3) The Ministry of Labor requires inspectors to refer victims of child labor to the Provincial Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor for social services assistance. (3) The Ministry of Labor’s inspection protocol mandates that federal labor inspectors notify the relevant provincial child protection authorities after detecting a child labor violation. (3,4) Labor inspectors are also required to file a criminal complaint with the provincial courts of the relevant jurisdiction for any child labor violation detected. (3,4,8) The Ministry of Labor reported that its labor inspectors cooperated with law enforcement authorities in criminal matters resulting from the criminal complaints that inspectors filed after finding child labor violations. (3) National authorities were unable to provide information about the budget for labor inspections or investigations. (3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating human resources.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

During 2019, the Special Prosecutor’s Office for Human Trafficking and Exploitation (PROTEX) reported five convictions for sex trafficking of minors involving the cities of Santa Fe, Corrientes, Comodoro Rivadavia, Tucuman, and Jujuy. PROTEX was, however, unable to provide information on the penalties imposed as a result of these convictions. (3) Argentine courts secured indictments in four child labor trafficking cases involving rural activities and both domestic and commercial work. The victims, six boys and three girls, were Argentine. (3) Argentine courts handed down indictments in two sex trafficking cases involving 12 girls. (3) Although the government was unable to report the total number of child labor investigations, the database at the General Prosecutors Office indicated that Argentina had started 157 human trafficking investigations, 29 of which involved children or adolescents. Although the government was unable to provide the total number of child labor prosecutions initiated, PROTEX reported that federal courts started prosecutions against 87 individuals, 50 men and 37 women, for trafficking-related offenses involving minors. (3) In May 2019, PROTEX reported providing training for prosecutors, defenders, and judicial officials on human trafficking in the framework of an International Conference on Childhood and Human Rights in La Plata, Buenos Aires Province. Also in May, PROTEX provided training on “Human Trafficking and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants” for university students at the University of Buenos Aires. (3) In June 2019, PROTEX conducted a training titled “Human Trafficking in Social Media” at the Special School for Integral Training of Adolescents and Youth With Disabilities. In July 2019, the Trafficking in Persons Executive Committee hosted the workshop “Tools for the Detection of Trafficking in Persons Crimes, Exploitation, and Child Pornography” for inspectors, supervisors, and other relevant officials in the General Director of Schools in Mendoza Province. (3)

Argentine law enforcement authorities report a lack of funding and resources. (4) UNHCR identified the need for the government to build the capacity of its judiciary and police to investigate cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, including those involving children, and recommended that the government increase funding for shelters and assistance to girl victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. (73) The Argentine government did not report investigating the use of children for illegal activities, such as drug trafficking, despite reports that this practice occurs. Moreover, the government does not publish criminal enforcement data on the total number of child labor violations identified or penalties imposed. (4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI)	Housed in the Ministry (formerly Secretariat) of Labor, Employment, and Social Security, coordinates national efforts to monitor and eliminate child labor and implement the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor. (74-77) Led by the Secretariat of Promotion, Protection, and Technological Change and comprises 16 government agencies, representatives from UNICEF, ILO, industry associations, and labor unions. In 2019, organized a workshop on the Project for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Labor. Participants discussed child and adolescent work in the forestry, citrus, tobacco, and yerba mate sectors. (3) During the reporting period, collaborated with the Chubut Province Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor on the first Provincial Awareness Day for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor at the National University of Patagonia in 2019. More than 100 teachers, health workers, labor inspectors, social workers, legislators, and government officials participated. (3) In 2019, incorporated 5 officials representing 24 Provincial Commissions for the Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETI), one per region. (3,77-80) Held the annual national COPRETI conference in July and hosted officials from the 24 provincial COPRETI for training and exchanges regarding best practices, and increasing coordination activities between national and provincial authorities. (3) Consisting of representatives from government agencies, NGOs, labor unions, and religions institutions, COPRETI coordinate efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor at the provincial level, including through municipal level roundtables. In 2019, COPRETI held trainings, outreach activities, and regional and local meetings. (3,78-80)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Coordination of Child Labor Eradication and Adolescent Work Protection Policies (Ministry of Labor)*	Established in 2019 and housed in the Ministry (formerly Secretariat) of Labor, executes the policies established in the Third National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work. During 2019, hosted training sessions on child labor throughout the country, led information campaigns, encouraged regional meetings, and implemented virtual training sessions for public officials. (3)
COODITIA	Housed in the Ministry of Labor, implements audits to detect child labor and irregular adolescent labor, trains inspectors on auditing and monitoring child and adolescent work, promotes the creation of special inspection units, and provides technical assistance and advice to inspectors. (4) For the last two years, it has continued to conduct the above activities to fortify labor inspections to combat labor trafficking of children and adolescents.
Child and Adolescent Labor Monitoring Office	Conducts qualitative and quantitative research on child and adolescent labor to provide policy analysis and inform programming to eradicate child labor and regulate adolescent labor. (75,78,82) In 2019, collaborated with the UN Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and ILO to produce the “Child Labor Risk Identification Model,” which provided detailed information on geographic areas in Argentina with greater risk for child labor. (3)
Programa Andares (Coordinating Unit for Children and Adolescents in Danger of Commercial Sexual Exploitation)	Provides guidance to relevant institutions; runs workshops and research programs on commercial sexual exploitation; and assists children, adolescents, and their families. Part of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights. (66,83) In 2019, continued to support research and workshops to address child commercial sexual exploitation, and to provide assistance to victims and their families. (3)

Civil society groups report that coordination to provide services to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation is ineffective, obstructing full implementation of some programs and causing some programs’ objectives and target groups to overlap. (88)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of information on activities taken under each policy during the reporting period.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Third National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (2018–2022)	Aims to prevent and eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, and to regulate adolescent work. Promotes the dissemination of information on child labor, strengthens COPRETI and creates local roundtables on child labor, promotes families’ livelihoods, strengthens the labor inspectorate, fosters civil society engagement on child labor issues, provides for a more inclusive educational system, raises awareness of the safety and health implications of child labor, and promotes institutional and legislative strengthening for child labor issues. (8,89-92) During the reporting period, the National Action Plan to Improve the Safety and Health at Work of Adolescents and Youth was adopted, helping to implement goals 5 and 6 of this Third National Action Plan. (3)
National Action Plan to Improve the Safety and Health at Work of Adolescents and Youth (2020–2022)†	Adopted in 2019, aims to coordinate the following actions: (1) improve statistics and research, (2) promote compliance and inspections, (3) encourage the incorporation of occupational safety and health in education and vocational training, and (4) develop networks and awareness and promotion activities. (93,94) In addition to the Ministry of Labor, other partners to this program include the Super Intendency of Labor Risks, the Argentine Industrial Union, the General Confederation of Labor, and the National Youth Institute. (3)
Strategic Framework for Cooperation Between Argentina and the UN System for Development (2016–2020)	Establishes development priorities for Argentina as agreed upon by the government and the agencies comprising the UN System for Development in Argentina. Comprises five areas for cooperation, including the expansion of social protection support and the promotion of inclusive and sustainable economic growth, which prioritizes the prevention and elimination of child labor and forced labor, and the protection of adolescent workers. (95) The government did not provide information on activities taken under this policy in 2019 for inclusion in this report.
Inter-Agency Agreement for Prevention of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker	Collaborative agreement between the Ministry of Labor and the Ministry of Education to integrate child labor prevention and protection of adolescent workers in curricula and teacher training courses. (8,96) The government did not provide information on activities taken under this policy in 2019 for inclusion in this report.

Policy	Description
Biennial National Plan Against Human Trafficking and Exploitation, and for Protection and Assistance of Victims (TIP Action Plan 2018–2020)	Approved by the Federal Council to Fight Human Trafficking and to Protect and Assist Victims. (1,97) Focuses on prevention, prosecution, and protection of human trafficking victims and incorporates an institutional goal of fortifying inter-agency coordination, including by establishing a unified database on human trafficking victims. (1) The Federal Council coordinates the plan's implementation and includes NGO representation in its meetings. In November 2019, the government published a report on the progress of the plan, indicating that 59 percent of it has been implemented. (1) The report highlighted the creation of the direct victim assistance fund and the launch of the Registry System for Assistance to Victims of Trafficking in Argentina, which aims to consolidate information on victims assistance to improve services both in the provinces and nationally. The government did not allocate a special budget for the Trafficking in Persons Action Plan. (1)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (99,100)

During the reporting period, Argentina put forward a UN General Assembly Resolution to declare 2021 as the International Year for the Elimination of Child Labor, which was adopted unanimously. (3) In 2019, the Misiones Province Ministry of Labor and Employment and the Municipality of Obera signed an agreement with the Eliminating Child Labor in Tobacco-growing Foundation to collaborate in the fight against child labor. (3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including adequacy to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Universal Child Allowance Program (Asignación Universal)†	Government program, funded in part by the World Bank, that provides a cash transfer to unemployed parents and workers in the informal economy, contingent upon parents' fulfillment of health and education requirements for their children. (8,78) The government did not provide information on activities undertaken for this social program in 2019 for inclusion in this report.
RENATRE Awareness-Raising Campaigns†	RENATRE campaigns that raise awareness of child labor in agriculture and inform families and children of the right to education. (101,102) The government did not provide information on activities undertaken for this social program in 2019 for inclusion in this report.
Ministry (formerly Secretariat) of Labor, Employment, and Social Security–CONAETI Programs†	CONAETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor campaigns that make businesses and the general public aware of child labor in sourcing and supply chains. (24,87) In 2019, the Ministry of Labor, together with ILO, carried out an initiative to generate knowledge, public policies, and best practices to raise awareness about child labor in rural areas of Argentina in the framework of the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Labor (2018–2022) through the project “Offside: marking the court!” (103) In July 2019, the Santa Fe Provincial Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor coordinated with CONAETI and ILO to host its first “Offside!” project workshop to prevent and eradicate agricultural child labor, with the participation of government, business, and union representatives. (3) Good Harvest Day Care and Future Programs provide child care and recreational activities to children up to age 9. They are part of COPRETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor programs to reduce child labor in crop production, for which work is often performed by entire families. (4,8,104) The government did not provide information on activities undertaken for the Good Harvest Day Care and Future Programs in 2019 for inclusion in this report.
National Campaign Against Child Labor in Brickmaking†	Developed in 2017 by the Ministry of Labor and the Argentine Brick Workers Union. (105) Aims to develop policies that improve labor inspections in this sector and to better support brick workers so their children do not have to work. (105,106) The government did not provide information on activities undertaken for this social program in 2019 for inclusion in this report.

Program	Description
USDOL-funded Projects	Project to Promote Workplace-Based Training for Vulnerable Youth in Argentina (Noemi Project) (2016–2021), $3 million project implemented by Centro de Desarrollo y Autogestión (DyA); Promoting Apprenticeship as a Path for Youth Employment in Argentina, Costa Rica, and Kenya through Global Apprenticeships Network (GAN) National Networks (2016–2019), $2.9 million project; SafeYouth@Work Project: Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers (2014–2019), $11 million global project implemented by ILO; Multi-Stakeholder Strategy for Child Labor Elimination in Agriculture in Argentina (2019–2021), $2.5 million project implemented by DyA; “Offside Project”: Improving the Capacity of Labor and Agriculture Stakeholders to Address Child Labor in Agricultural Areas of Argentina Project, $2.5 million project implemented by ILO. Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAPI6), $140,000 global project implemented by ILO to improve the knowledge base on child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking. In 2019, implementation of the Risk Model began in Argentina to develop local child labor maps at the municipality level for each of the country’s 23 provinces. Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (4,8,11,24,28,67,110,111)

In 2019, the Ministry of Production and Labor partnered with the Tucuman Ministry of Production, civil society, and the private sector to develop an agricultural child labor monitoring system, which they are piloting in blueberry and yerba mate plantations in Tucuman and Misiones. (112) Research found no evidence of social programs that specifically target children engaged in street begging and performing, windshield washing, and guarding parked cars.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2019, Armenia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Article 33 of the Labor Code was amended to fully authorize the Health and Labor Inspection Body to enforce labor laws, including those related to child labor, beginning in July 2021. Article 33 will empower the Health and Labor Inspection Body to issue penalties for violations and conduct inspections in sectors for which inspection checklists have been approved. In addition, that agency conducted activities to raise awareness about child labor laws. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, Armenia is receiving an assessment of minimal advancement because it continued to implement a regression in law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. Armenia has lacked a functioning labor inspectorate since the 2014 repeal of Article 34 of the Labor Code, which previously established the government’s authority to implement labor legislation and collective agreements. Since that time, the government has lacked a mechanism to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws, including a mechanism with the authority to conduct unannounced inspections. The Health and Labor Inspection Body will not be empowered to perform these functions until its new mandate under Article 33 of the Labor Code enters into force in 2021. Children in Armenia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. The government’s delay in approving the National Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons impeded coordination efforts to combat human trafficking. In addition, no government programs exist to aid children engaged in child labor in agriculture.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Armenia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-5) Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. (1,2,6-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Armenia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	95.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	8.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		89.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2018 published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (13)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization’s analysis of statistics from National Child Labor Survey (SIMPOC), 2015. (14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Armenia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including planting and harvesting potatoes (1,6-11)
	Raising livestock, including cattle breeding, cattle herding, and sheepherding (1,6,8,9,16)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (8,9,11,17)
Services	Vehicle maintenance (1,9,11)
	Selling food (9)
	Street work, including vending, gathering scrap metal, selling flowers, and begging (1,6,8,11,17)
	Working in shops (8,9)
	Dancing in clubs (1,8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-5)
	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,5)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The Government of Armenia does not routinely collect or maintain official data on child labor. (18,19) However, reports indicate that significant numbers of children, including some below the age of 14, leave school to work in informal sectors in agriculture and construction, and increasing numbers of children are engaged in begging. (12,17)

Although Article 38 of the Constitution of Armenia and Article 6 of the Law of the Republic of Armenia on Education guarantee free universal education, children from ethnic minority and low-income families continue to have reduced access to education. (20-22) Children of families who travel for seasonal labor and work on farms in remote rural areas are also less likely to be enrolled in school and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor in agriculture. (10) Reports also indicate that in rural areas, families may keep girls out of school because of cultural expectations or due to concerns about severe gender imbalance in classrooms. (12,23)

In addition, the Law on Education requires all schools to be inclusive for children with disabilities by 2025, and the 2017–2021 National Strategy for Child Rights Protection includes priority actions to ensure equitable and inclusive education. (22,24,25) However, NGOs report that children with disabilities still face difficulty accessing mainstream education due to inaccessible school buildings and a lack of special teachers and other specialists, especially for students with mental disabilities. (25,26) Although the government has reduced institutionalization of children in recent years, nearly 2,400 children remain in government boarding schools, orphanages, and special education institutions. (27,28) These children are more likely to experience physical and psychological violence and are at a higher risk of becoming victims of human trafficking. (5,27) Children living in these institutions are reportedly also vulnerable to exploitation in child labor, including labor within the institutions. (29,30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Armenia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Armenia’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including a lack of definitions for forced labor and light work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 15 and 17 of the Labor Code; Article 57 of the Constitution; Article 41.6 of the Administrative Violations Code (20,31,32)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 257 of the Labor Code (31)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Decree on Approval of the List of Occupations and Work That Are Likely to be Heavy and Hazardous for Persons Under the Age of 18 Years, Pregnant Women, and Women Taking Care of a Child under the Age of 1 Year; Articles 140, 148–149, 153, 155, 209, 249, and 257 of the Labor Code (31,33)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 57 of the Constitution; Article 3 of the Labor Code; Articles 132 and 132.2 of the Criminal Code (20,31,34)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 132 and 132.2 of the Criminal Code (34)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 132.2, 166, and 261–263 of the Criminal Code (34)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 63, 165, and 166.1 of the Criminal Code (34)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	16‡	Law on Military Service and Status of the Military Servant; Article 11 of the Law on Conscription; Government Decree No. 525-N of April 26, 2012 (35-38)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 11 of the Law on Conscription (36)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No		Article 29 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Articles 165 and 224 of the Criminal Code (34,39)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	19	Article 18 of the Law on Education (22)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 38 of the Constitution; Article 6 of the Law on Education (20,22)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (37)

In 2019, the Administrative Violations Code was amended to significantly increase penalties for hiring children under age 16. (32,40)

The Labor Code allows for children ages 14 and 15 to work restricted hours with the permission of a parent or guardian, but does not list specific activities that constitute light work. (31) In addition, the Constitution, Criminal Code, and Labor Code prohibit forced labor, but enforcement of this prohibition may be hindered by the lack of a definition of “forced labor” in Armenian law. (20,31,34,41)

The laws criminalizing commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because the crime of involving a child in prostitution does not clearly criminalize the users (clients) of prostitution involving children. (34,66)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, the absence of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in Armenia may impede the enforcement of child labor laws.

Armenia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Health and Labor Inspection Body (HLIB)	Enforces limited range of labor laws for persons up to age 18, and for pregnant or breastfeeding women and workers with children under their care. In 2018, the Health Inspection Body was reorganized and renamed the Health and Labor Inspection Body (HLIB). (11,42)
Police	Enforce anti-human trafficking laws and conduct preliminary investigations of alleged trafficking in persons cases. Every regional police unit throughout the country has a designated officer whose portfolio includes human trafficking. (43) All cases suspected to be human trafficking are referred to the anti-trafficking unit within the Department to Fight against Crimes against Human Beings and Property of the National Police. (38,43)
General Department of Criminal Intelligence within the Police	Enforces laws against the worst forms of child labor and refers identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation. (43)
Department for the Investigation of Trafficking in Persons, Crimes against the Sexual Inviolability of Minors and Illegal Drug Trafficking Crimes within the Investigative Committee	Conducts in-depth investigations of all cases of human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children referred to the Investigative Committee by the police. (38,43-45)
Department on Defending the Rights of Minors and Combating Domestic Violence Within the Police	Identifies and conducts preliminary investigation of crimes in which children are victims or perpetrators. (44,45)
Police Hotline	Receives complaints related to human trafficking and migration issues. (5,43,46)

As part of a broader inspection reform agenda, Armenia’s labor inspectorate was abolished in 2013 and the responsibility for conducting labor inspections was transferred to the new State Health Inspectorate, created the same year. (47) In 2014, legislative changes repealed Article 34 of the Labor Code, which had previously established the government’s authority to implement labor legislation and collective agreements. (48) In 2015, subsequent changes to legislation regulating labor inspections left the State Health Inspectorate unable to conduct labor inspections. (41,49) In 2017, continued inspection reform led to the dissolution of the State Health Inspectorate and the creation of the Health Inspection Body, which was tasked with monitoring occupational safety and health standards for employees, along with monitoring a variety of public health standards. (50) In 2018, a law on the State Bodies of Governance Systems came into force changing the Health Inspection Body to the Health and Labor Inspection Body (HLIB). (51)

In 2019, Article 33 of the Labor Code was amended to empower HLIB to issue penalties for violations and conduct inspections in sectors for which inspection checklists have been approved. However, this amendment will not enter into force until July 2021. (52) In the meantime, the HLIB has the ability to launch administrative procedures in response to complaints, including child labor complaints, but these procedures do not involve inspections or site visits. Penalties can only be issued in limited instances, such as situations posing an immediate threat to life and safety. (43) HLIB is only empowered to conduct planned inspections and must inform employers of an upcoming inspection three business days in advance. (18,43,53) Armenian legislation limits the questions inspectors can ask to a legally pre-determined checklist of issues, and checklists including questions related to child labor have not yet been approved for all industries. (18,43) Because additional legislation and regulations need to be approved and enter into force for the HLIB to begin conducting labor inspections, including for child labor violations, HLIB was unable to enforce child labor laws in Armenia in 2019. (43,54,52)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, the absence of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in Armenia may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws (Table 6).

In 2019, HLIB had 23 labor inspectors, 15 of whom were civil servants and 8 of whom were contractors. (40,43) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Armenia’s workforce, which includes more than 1.5 million workers. According to the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transition economies, Armenia would employ about 75 labor inspectors. (55,56) In addition, officials have expressed concern that inspectors hired as contractors, rather than civil servants, may not receive sufficient training to adequately enforce child labor laws. (57) In December 2019, the governing council of HLIB approved a staff list that included 30 inspector positions. Furthermore, HLIB reported that it plans to increase the number of inspectors to 80 by July 2021 to implement the expanded inspection mandate that will come into force at that time. (43,52)

During the reporting period, HLIB conducted training seminars on child labor laws for representatives from supermarkets in Yerevan and Armavir, provided informational materials on child labor to communities in Ararat and Armavir provinces during harvest season, and carried out awareness-raising outreach on occupational health and safety (OSH) regulations related to hazardous child labor. (43) In August, the government approved a methodology for developing risk-based inspections, and government officials indicated that they are in the process of drafting and approving industry-specific inspection checklists pursuant to this methodology. These checklists will enable HLIB to conduct on-site inspections to detect labor violations, including those related to child labor. (40,43) Several draft checklists related to OSH, including one that covered prohibitions against hazardous child labor in mining, were published for public comment this year. (43,58) Although HLIB did not conduct any inspections during the reporting period, it identified two violations of minimum age laws through administrative procedures. (40) HLIB also launched a new website that enables complaint submissions via e-mail and established a new mechanism for responding to complaints that are received. (43,28)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Armenia took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including investigation planning.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

During the reporting period, the police investigated six criminal cases on suspicion of labor trafficking, one of which involved a minor. This case was dropped due to a determination that a crime had not been committed. (43) Two potential sex trafficking cases were investigated, one of which involved commercial sexual exploitation of a minor. This case was referred for prosecution, and further investigation is ongoing as part of the pre-trial process. (40,43) The government also reported one minor who was a victim of labor trafficking. (46)

The Ministry of Justice provided training on human trafficking and forced labor to 540 penitentiary staff, 54 judge candidates, 86 investigator candidates, and 96 prosecutor candidates. Three investigators from the Investigative Committee participated in an international training on human trafficking and sexual abuse of children. (40,46) The police provided training on human trafficking to 146 police officers and offered training to officers on child exploitation. (40,46)

Law enforcement officials may not receive sufficient specialized training on interviewing victims of child trafficking, which in some cases can prevent local investigators from collecting sufficient evidence to build a prosecutable case. (1,5) Although the Criminal Procedural Code includes provisions to protect witnesses and minimize victim re-traumatization, the government may not employ these measures in all trafficking cases, including those involving minors. (46)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efforts to address all forms of child labor.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking	Implements, coordinates, and monitors government efforts on trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister. (54,46) The Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking was largely inactive during the reporting period due to the government's delay in approving the National Action Plan (2019–2021), which would have otherwise determined the Ministerial Council's activities during the reporting period. (46)
Inter-Agency Working Group Against Trafficking in Persons	Advises, organizes, and implements decisions made by the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking. Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs. (43,54) The Inter-Agency Working Group Against Trafficking in Persons was largely inactive during the reporting period due to the government's delay in approving the National Action Plan (2019–2021), which would have otherwise determined the Working Group's activities during the reporting period. (46)

Although Armenia has the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking to coordinate efforts to address child trafficking, it does not have coordinating mechanisms to address other forms of child labor, including street work, the services sector, and agriculture. (17)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including mainstreaming child labor issues into relevant policies.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Child Rights Protection	Includes an Action Plan for 2017–2021 that calls for the development and introduction of oversight and monitoring mechanisms to prevent the involvement of children in the worst forms of child labor. (24) The government continued to implement this action plan during 2019. (40)
2019 Annual Program on Protection of Children's Rights	Aims to provide social protection for vulnerable children. (11,59)
Concept on Combating Violence Against Children	Defines government priorities for combating violence against children and outlines a list of related activities. Addresses labor exploitation of children, especially in rural communities, and commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially child trafficking. (45)

In 2019, the National Assembly approved an amendment to Armenia's 2014 Law on Identification and Assistance to Victims of Human Trafficking and Exploitation that enables the provision of one-time monetary assistance to child trafficking in persons victims through their legal guardians. (60)

Although the government drafted a new National Action Plan (NAP) Against Trafficking in Persons (2019-2021) in 2018, approval of this plan was delayed prior to and during the reporting period. As a result, this NAP was not approved and did not enter into force in 2019. (28) The period of the draft NAP was amended to 2020–2022 and was adopted in 2020. (46) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken during the reporting period to implement the Concept on Combating Violence Against Children or the Annual Program on Protection of Children's Rights.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Family Benefits Program†	Poverty-mitigation program for families with children. Families receive a monthly payment based on their financial situation, the number of children in the family, and the geographical location of their home. (61) In 2019, the government continued to provide payments under this program and increased the amounts some categories of families receive. (62)
UNICEF Country Program for 2016–2020	Seeks to improve child protection systems, including through expanding programs for children in extreme poverty, improving social integration of children with disabilities, and developing a victim-witness protection system. (63) This program continued to be active during the reporting period. (64)
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking‡	Government-funded shelters operated in partnership with NGOs that provide medical, psychological, social, and legal services to victims of human trafficking and access to education for children. (3) In 2019, the government also operated a second shelter in Yerevan. (46,60) However, at the end of 2019 this second shelter closed due to funding limitations, leaving one shelter operational. (28)

† Program is funded by the Government of Armenia.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (61)

Although the Government of Armenia has implemented programs to address child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in child labor in street work or in agriculture.

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Education, Science, Culture and Sports approved a program to reimburse students and teachers for travel costs to school to facilitate access to education in remote regions. (40)

Analyses of the Family Benefits Program indicated that a lack of information about the program may reduce participation rates among poor and extremely poor families. (17,65)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2019, Azerbaijan made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government implemented a number of measures to improve access to education for disabled students, including upgrading school infrastructure, raising awareness for parents on inclusive services, and training school directors and teachers in inclusive methods. In addition, the government conducted research on child labor in three cities and five districts. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, Azerbaijan is receiving an assessment of minimal advancement because it continued to implement a regression in law that delayed advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. In 2017, the government extended a moratorium on labor inspections, including worksite inspections, until 2021. While inspectors can respond to complaints, the lack of proactive or onsite inspection mechanisms may leave potential violations of child labor laws undetected in workplaces. Children in Azerbaijan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. Legal protections only apply to workers with written employment contracts, leaving self-employed children and children working outside of formal employment relationships vulnerable to exploitation. Furthermore, coordinating bodies, including the State Committee on Family, Women, and Children's Affairs, lack the capacity and clear legal authority to effectively carry out their mandates. In addition, government programs to address child labor in agriculture may be insufficient to address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Azerbaijan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. (I-10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Azerbaijan.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Child labor in Azerbaijan occurs in the agriculture sector; however, there are limited data available to indicate how many children are currently engaged in child labor in this or other sectors. (1,4,10) As was the case in 2018, in 2019, children under age 15 worked alongside their parents picking cotton to augment family incomes. However, the prevalence of child labor in cotton harvesting is unknown. (4,17-19)

Crop production in Azerbaijan is governed by a “priority” system that conditions agricultural subsidies, services, and access to public resources such as irrigation water on whether farmers produce one or more crops that the government has designated as high priority. Currently, priority crops include cotton, tobacco, sugar beets, hazelnuts, tomatoes, and other fruits and vegetables. (4) In some cases, regional and local government officials are held responsible for mobilizing sufficient labor to meet established production targets for one or more of these priority crops. (20-23,24,25) This system creates a risk that farmers and local officials may turn to exploitative labor practices, including child labor and forced labor, to ensure they are able to meet production targets for designated crops. (19,25)

Children in Azerbaijan are subjected to sexual exploitation domestically. (1,2,26) Street children, many of whom become homeless after they are released from government-run orphanages and correctional facilities, and children from marginalized communities are particularly vulnerable to human trafficking. (1,2,26,27) Children living in border towns and economically depressed rural communities are also especially vulnerable to human trafficking. (1,2,28)

Although Article 5 of the Education Law guarantees free universal education, undocumented children and children with disabilities face difficulty accessing education. Children without identification documents are ineligible to enroll in school, which affects 35 to 40 percent of children referred annually to shelters for minors. (4) The court proceedings required to secure identification documents can take up to 2 or more years, during which time children cannot attend school. Although government-run shelters are able to provide interim individual education services while undocumented children await identification papers, NGO-run shelters lack the capacity to provide such services. (4) Children with disabilities face barriers to education that include inaccessibility within the physical infrastructure of schools, lack of specialized training for teachers on inclusive education, and a general social stigma against individuals with disabilities and children from the Roma ethnic community. (1,29,30) In addition, children in rural areas have low rates of school attendance. (1) Children not attending school are vulnerable to child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Azerbaijan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Azerbaijan’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 42 of the Labor Code (31)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 250 of the Labor Code (31)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Articles 98, 250–252, and 254 of the Labor Code; Decree 58 of the Cabinet of Ministers in 2000; Article 9 of the Law on the Rights of the Child (31-33)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 35 of the Constitution; Article 144-2 of the Criminal Code (34,35)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		The Law on Trafficking in Persons; Articles 144-1 and 144-3 of the Criminal Code (35,36)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Article 171 of the Criminal Code (35)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 28 of the Law on the Rights of the Child; Article 170 of the Criminal Code (33,35)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	19	Article 36 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (37)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Articles 2–3, and 12 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (37)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 5 and 19 of the Education Law (38)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 5 of the Education Law; Article 22 of the Law on the Rights of the Child (33,38)

Azerbaijan’s Labor Code applies only to workers with written employment contracts. (31,39) In 2014, the government established both administrative and criminal penalties for employing people without an employment agreement, and it has also implemented administrative requirements that employers register all employment contracts in an electronic database. (31,35) Although these provisions strengthened protections for working children by attempting to ensure that all working children are employed under a contract, self-employed children and children working outside formal employment relationships, especially children performing work on the streets and child beggars, remain unprotected. (7,39,40)

The laws criminalizing commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because the crime of involving a child in prostitution established by Criminal Code Article 171 does not criminalize the users (clients) of prostitution involving children. Similarly, the criminalization of involvement of a child in “immoral actions” does not clearly criminalize the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances. (35)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, the absence of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in Azerbaijan may impede the enforcement of child labor laws.

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSPP)	Enforces labor laws related to the worst forms of child labor through the State Labor Inspection Service. (1,39)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MOIA)	Functions as the central executive agency responsible for public security and the prevention of criminal offenses, including child trafficking and begging. (1,39) Through the Anti-Trafficking Division, enforces human trafficking laws, investigates human trafficking violations, and enforces criminal laws related to the use of children in illicit activities. (1,3) Refers children who are victims of human trafficking to social services for assistance with school enrollment, participation in recreational activities, and procurement of proper documentation. (1)
National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons	Refers victims of human trafficking to the relevant authorities to ensure the protection of their rights. (41,42) Refers human trafficking cases to the Anti-Trafficking Division for prosecution. (1)

During the reporting period, sources reported a lack of coordination between law enforcement agencies. (1,2,4)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, the absence of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in Azerbaijan may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws (Table 6).

The government suspended all routine and unannounced labor inspections in 2016 as part of a broader anti-corruption drive. In 2017, this moratorium was extended until 2021 as part of an effort to stimulate small and medium business growth. (1,46-48) Although the State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS) is still able to receive and respond to complaints, this response cannot include onsite inspections. Instead, the SLIS investigates complaints by requesting information from the employer in question and, if necessary, relevant employees. (45,46,48) On the basis of the information received, inspectors identify violations and impose appropriate penalties. The SLIS can impose penalties directly against individuals but must refer cases to the courts to levy penalties against corporate entities. (46) The SLIS is also able to detect potential minimum age violations by monitoring an electronic database of labor contracts, but is not currently empowered to impose penalties related to violations detected in this manner. However, the government has drafted a law that, once enacted, will enable labor inspectors to impose penalties for violations identified based on electronic labor contracts. (46)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Azerbaijan's workforce, which includes more than 5 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 20,000 workers in transition economies, Azerbaijan would employ about 256 labor inspectors. (49,50) Government officials also assess the number of inspectors as insufficient to fully enforce child labor laws in Azerbaijan. (51)

In 2019, the SLIS received a total of 8,512 complaints, of which approximately 35 percent were referred from other government entities, such as the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MOIA) and the Azerbaijan Service and Assessment Network, which monitors electronic work agreements in the construction sector. (45,46) The SLIS identified 625 total violations of labor laws. The SLIS imposed penalties in 556 of these cases, totaling approximately $531,235 (903,100 manat). Courts imposed penalties in 69 cases, totaling approximately $700,588 (1,191,000 manat). (43,45) Labor inspectors identified seven child labor violations involving a total of nine children, all of whom were working below the minimum age for work. Two children were working in transportation, two in car repair, one in retail, and one in catering. (10,47) The SLIS assessed approximately $682 (1,160 manat) in fines for each of the violations detected in transportation, car repair, and retail. (10) The SLIS assessed a penalty of approximately $1,765 (3,000 manat) for the violation detected in catering, based on a determination that the child involved was working under hazardous conditions. (52,53)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including investigation planning.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, police identified one case of forced child begging and one case of child commercial sexual exploitation, both of which were referred for prosecution. (4,27) One case of forced child begging that MOIA identified in 2018 and referred for prosecution culminated in a conviction in December 2019. The perpetrator was sentenced to 7.5 years' imprisonment. (4) In addition, MOIA completed an initial investigation of a forced begging case that an NGO referred to law enforcement in 2018. This case is now pending before the Baku Court on Grave Crimes. (42) Although MOIA officials indicated that all five cases of child commercial sexual exploitation that law enforcement agencies identified in 2018 were referred for prosecution, the status of these cases is unknown. (4)

During the reporting period, officers from the Anti-Trafficking Division within MOIA attended 37 domestic and 14 international trainings on trafficking in persons. The Ministry of Justice organized trainings on trafficking that were attended by 29 judges, 9 lawyers, 7 prosecutors, and 8 MOIA officials. (27)

Parents forcing children to beg or engage in street work is typically treated as a family issue, rather than a criminal offense. As a result, these cases are often referred to the Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights for coordination of services, rather than to law enforcement agencies for criminal investigation and prosecution. (1,27,42) NGOs also report that police decline to investigate the majority of forced begging cases referred to them, and that children identified in child labor resume work almost immediately after being identified by law enforcement officials. (4,29,51) In addition, child labor law enforcement efforts are concentrated in Baku, with few investigations being undertaken outside the capital. (26)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights	Coordinates policies at the national level to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. (4) Located within the Cabinet of Ministers and acts as a national-level version of district-level Commissions on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights, which are located in individual district Executive Commissions. The national Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights met twice in 2019. (4)
National Coordinator and Interagency Commission to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings	Coordinates policies to counter trafficking in persons and oversees implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings. (4) Research was unable to determine whether this coordinating body was active during the reporting period.
State Committee on Family, Women, and Children's Affairs (SFWCA)	Coordinates child-related policies, including research on child labor. Works with local governments, particularly district-level Executive Commissions, to coordinate policies related to children and gather data on the situation of children and families in rural areas. (4) In 2019, conducted research on child labor in three cities and five districts to inform coordination of policy efforts. (4,15) Also provided trainings on child labor to police officers and local officials in four districts, as well as Baku city. (15,27)

Although Commissions on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights exist at both the national and local levels, research was unable to determine the relationship between these respective national and local coordinating bodies. Sources report that the efficacy of the State Committee on Family, Women, and Children's Affairs (SFWCA) as a coordinating body is limited. (4,51) The SFWCA's staff members have reported that they lack the legal authority to give instructions to other government organizations about child labor and child welfare matters, which limits the SFWCA's ability to harmonize policies across the different agencies. (51) Although the SFWCA is empowered to work with district-level Executive Committees to coordinate policy and research related to children, the body has limited capacity to do so. (4)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including covering all worst forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
State Program on Azerbaijani Youth (2017–2021)	Guides government policy on youth development, and includes a provision on increasing awareness of trafficking in persons risks among youth. (54) In 2019, as part of this policy the Ministry of Youth and Sport organized youth trainings on sustainable development goals and human rights. (55)
State Program on Improvement of Official Statistics in the Republic of Azerbaijan (2018–2025)	Aims to improve and further develop the national statistics system. Includes an action item on developing a methodology for studying child labor and conducting survey research on the prevalence of child labor in Azerbaijan. (56) In 2019, the SFWCA piloted a child labor survey methodology while conducting research on child labor in three cities and five districts. (15)
State Program for the Development of Inclusive Education for Children with Disabilities (2018–2024)	Aims to create inclusive education for children with disabilities. Currently piloting regional resource centers in nine regions to train teachers in inclusive methods. (4,39) In 2019, upgraded school infrastructure to accommodate disabled students, conducted awareness-raising to make parents aware of inclusive education services, and trained 305 school directors and 5,000 teachers on inclusive education methods. (4)

Although the government has adopted the State Program on Azerbaijani Youth that contains a mandate to raise awareness of human trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, including forced begging or hazardous child labor in agriculture. Furthermore, although the government drafted a new National Action Plan in 2018 to Combat Trafficking in Human Beings (2019–2023), this policy was pending approval by the Cabinet of Ministers during the reporting period and did not enter into force until 2020. (4,62) The draft National Action Plan (2019–2023) incorporated international recommendations and suggestions from

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT CONTINUED LAW THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Azerbaijani counter-trafficking NGOs, and specified implementing and coordinating bodies for individual action items. However, it lacked clear indicators of the source and amount of funding to implement the plan’s associated programs, which could result in a lack of funding necessary for full implementation. (4,57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including with funding.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2016–2020)	Aims to promote decent employment opportunities and improve social protection and labor administration mechanisms. Includes a focus on youth employment. (58) In 2019, labor inspectors and other staff from MLSPP participated in an ILO conference on best practices for labor inspection. (59)
Social Shelter and Rehabilitation Center for Minors†	MLSPP-run shelter for vulnerable children, including street children. Located in Baku. (4,39) In 2019, continued to operate and provided children with assistance accessing education and receiving identity documents. (4)
Victims Assistance Centers‡	Provides direct social services and social services referrals to victims of human trafficking, including children. Funded by MLSPP. (46) In 2019, continued to operate Victims Assistance Centers in Baku and Goychay, in addition to three regional offices in other areas of the country. Held training courses in schools and municipalities on human trafficking and conducted events at border crossings to raise awareness about trafficking in persons. (27,46) Assisted 85 victims in 2019, including one child who received psychological support. (43)
Targeted Social Assistance Program†	MLSPP-run program that provides cash transfers to families. (1) Although this program continued to provide benefits to families in 2019, limited reports suggest that informal administrative fees may prevent eligible families from accessing benefits. (19)
MOIA Identification Document Program†	Provides identification documents to undocumented minors who may be street children or victims of human trafficking. (51) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the program during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Azerbaijan.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (2,39)

In 2019, the Ministry of Agriculture incorporated information on preventing child labor in agriculture into trainings given to farmers. The Ministry of Agriculture also took steps to prevent child labor in the cotton harvest, including by promoting the use of mechanical harvesters and by issuing instructions to local authorities to prohibit labor exploitation in the harvest. (60) However, research was unable to determine whether the scope of these efforts was sufficient to address the extent of the problem.

In 2019, the Council on State Support to Non-Governmental Organizations allocated 57,000 manat (approximately $33,500) to NGO-run shelters for human trafficking victims and substantially increased funding for these NGOs for projects related to human trafficking prevention and victim assistance. (27,42) However, the level of government support for these NGO-run shelters is inconsistent. (2) Directors of these shelters note that the unpredictable nature of funding prevents long-term planning and capacity building of shelters. (2,54,61) Therefore, child victims have limited access to facilities that offer specialized care. (51) One NGO-run shelter that provides such services does not receive consistent government funding, and most of its staff worked on a voluntary basis due to the lack of government funding and an inability to receive foreign assistance caused by government restrictions. (2,54,61)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Azerbaijan (Table 11).

In 2019, Bangladesh made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government acceded to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons and, through its programs in 2019, removed over 1,000 working children from 558 factories, provided education for 1,254 street children, and rehabilitated 3,501 children. Since 2017, government programs have removed 90,000 children from hazardous labor conditions, and over 35,000 children from exploitative work. Within 15 ministries responsible for children in some way, the government of Bangladesh increased its spending on children by 17 percent between the 2017-2018 and 2018-2019 fiscal years. However, children in Bangladesh engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor in the production of dried fish and bricks. Children also perform dangerous tasks in garment and leather goods supply chains. Moreover, the Bangladesh Labor Act does not apply to the informal sector, where most child labor in Bangladesh occurs, and hazardous work prohibitions are not comprehensive. Additionally, labor inspectors are not authorized to assess penalties and, when courts do impose them, the fines are too low to deter child labor law violations.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bangladesh engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor in the production of dried fish and bricks. (1,2) Children also perform dangerous tasks in the production of garments and leather goods. (2-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bangladesh.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The prevalence of child labor in Bangladesh’s formal sector has decreased as Bangladesh’s economy has grown. The Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics estimates that there are 1.28 million children working in hazardous sectors. (111) The government of Bangladesh declared the formal garment sector and shrimp sector are free from child labor, but acknowledge additional resources are required to address child labor in all sectors. (111) However, many children in Bangladesh engage in dangerous work in informal manufacturing sectors and the dried fish industry. (2-5,13,39) According to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics, over 85% of the economy is informal. (43) In the dried fish industry, children work all day without protective gear and are exposed to the insecticide DDT, salt, and the sun. (13) In the shipbreaking sector, children are exposed to toxic materials such as asbestos and work in dangerous conditions without personal protective equipment, and often at night. (38) The few older children who still work in tanneries lack protective equipment and experience continuous exposure to heavy metals, formaldehyde, and other hazardous substances. (3,4) Children working in informal garment production work as many as 16 hours a day and often carry heavy loads, use hazardous machinery, and handle chemicals without protective equipment. (16,27)

Reports of violence against child workers in various sectors, including in domestic work, have also been documented. (2,21,42,54,55) In 2018, a survey by an international organization found more than 400,000 children in domestic work in Bangladesh. Across Bangladesh, street children are coerced into criminality or forced to beg, and begging ringmasters sometimes maim children to increase earnings. (43) Children are forced, especially in border areas, to produce and transport drugs, especially “yaba” tablets (methamphetamine). (56)

Nearly 400,000 Rohingya children are living in refugee camps in Bangladesh following the Burmese military’s ethnic cleansing operations in 2017. Children residing in the camps are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor. (14,46,57-59) Rohingya girls are trafficked from the refugee camps for commercial sexual exploitation in Bangladesh, India, and Nepal. In some cases, girls are promised jobs in domestic service but are instead forced into commercial sexual exploitation. (14,28) Foreigners create demand for child sex tourism, including exploitation of Rohingya girls near Cox’s Bazar. (56) Some girls are forced into domestic service, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and are abused by their employers. (46,52,53) Rohingya children recruited to work outside the refugee camps are reported to be underpaid or unpaid, unable to communicate with their families, and subjected to excessive working hours. (46,60) Rohingya boys typically work in construction, fishing, and shops. (14,53) Rohingya children are further sold into bonded labor in the fish drying industry by their parents, primarily in the city of Cox’s Bazar. Bonded laborers work to pay off their parents’ debt over a nine month fishing season. (14,15)

Children throughout Bangladesh are sexually exploited through the country’s legal and illegal brothels, and child commercial sexual exploitation remained widespread. False promises of work are used to lure poor women and children into sex trafficking and fabricate exorbitant debts the women, and girls as young as 10, must work to repay. (56) Children fleeing abusive child marriages are especially vulnerable to being sold to brothels for commercial sexual exploitation. Some children of sex workers are put to work in brothels and made to take steroids to appear older. (56)

Although the 2010 National Education Policy raised the age of compulsory education from fifth grade (age 10) to eighth grade (age 14), the new compulsory education scheme is not enforceable until the legal framework is amended to reflect the revised policy. (61) In order to accommodate the larger number of students receiving compulsory education, Bangladesh is building new schools to accommodate students. In the 2018-2019 fiscal year, Bangladesh upgraded 764 schools, constructed 77 new schools, built 10,039 classrooms, installed sanitation facilities in 2,920 schools, and installed tube wells in 750 schools. (43) While poverty was the most common reason children did not attend school, as 31% of families depend on child labor for needed additional income, inadequate access to education remains a concern. (43)

While Rohingya refugee children are not permitted to attend school in Bangladesh, including in private educational institutions, due to their lack of documentation, the government has permitted international organizations, such as UNICEF, UNESCO, and UNHCR, to provide some basic education services to primary school-aged Rohingya children, and hundreds of learning centers were created. (43,62,63) According to UNICEF, 90 percent of children aged 4 to 14 years in the refugee camps have access to learning centers and non-formal education. However, aid groups are barred from teaching the Bangla language, using Bangladesh’s educational curriculum, and providing accredited education to refugees. (43) In 2019, the government of Bangladesh agreed to allow international partners to implement the Myanmar Curriculum Pilot. The pilot, scheduled to start in 2020 with 10,000 children, would allow children to follow Burma’s educational curriculum with the goal of preparing for their return in the future. The pilot will teach children the Burmese language, which they are not allowed to learn in Burma/Myanmar. (43) Limited access to education makes refugee children more vulnerable to labor exploitation. (2,64)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Bangladesh has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

In 2019, the government acceded to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons. (65)

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bangladesh’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Minimum age protections in the Bangladesh Labor Act do not cover children working in the informal sector, where most child labor in Bangladesh occurs, which includes domestic work, street work, and work on small agricultural farms. (66,76,77) In addition, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover garment production and drying fish; both are areas of work in which there is evidence that children work in unsafe and unhealthy environments for long periods of time. (1,2,5,13,67)

Bangladesh prohibits, but does not criminalize, the use of children in pornographic performances and in the production of drugs. (69,71,78) Sources indicate that the minimum age for recruitment in the Army is 17 and requires parental consent in addition to birth documents verifying age. (113) Army recruitment and training take one year, ensuring that recruits reach the age of 18 before entering regular duty. (112) The minimum age for recruitment in the Air Force is 16. (114) However, there are no laws that set the minimum age of voluntary recruitment by the state armed forces. Additionally, although the Constitution prohibits the formation of non-state armed groups, the legal framework does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups. (74,79)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE)	Enforces labor laws, including those relating to child labor and hazardous work. (80) DIFE is within the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE). (81)
Bangladesh Police	Enforce Penal Code provisions protecting children from forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. (2) In the case of the Trafficking in Persons Monitoring Cell, investigates cases of human trafficking and enforces the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act's anti-trafficking provisions. (82)
Bangladesh Labor Court	Prosecutes labor law violations, including those related to child labor, and imposes fines or sanctions against employers. (83) In 2019, Bangladesh established three new labor courts. (43)
Child Protection Networks	Responds to violations against children, including child labor. Comprised of officials from various agencies with mandates to protect children, prosecute violations, monitor interventions, and develop referral mechanisms at the district and sub-district levels between law enforcement and social welfare services. (77) Reporting indicates that Child Protection Networks, intended to be a referral mechanism between law enforcement and social services, are not operating due to a lack of funds. (84)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Department of Inspections for Factories and Establishments that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including a shortage of inspectors.

The Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) only conducts labor inspections in the formal sector according to an inspection road map and plan. In addition to normal inspections, labor inspectors are authorized to conduct special visits for a number of reasons, including suspected child labor and night work. (85) In 2019, DIFE removed 1,021 working children from 558 factories. (85) However, it is reported that children are moved to night shifts to evade inspectors, indicating that the frequency of night inspections is insufficient. (38) DIFE also lacks the authorization to impose penalties and conduct unannounced inspections in Bangladesh's Export Processing Zones. (43) In addition, the current penalty of $63 for a child labor law violation and the low rate of penalties imposed is inadequate to act as a deterrent. (77)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Bangladesh's workforce, which includes more than 66 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector

Bangladesh

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Bangladesh would employ about 1,666 labor inspectors. (2,87-89) Reports indicate that DIFE is insufficiently funded and has not filled its 575 approved labor inspector positions. (90) Additionally, recruitment of inspectors suffers from a lack of incentives to join the department. (43)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Bangladesh Police that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient funding.

In 2019, the Bangladesh Army and Rapid Action Battalion were deployed to assist in identifying and investigating violations related to the possible trafficking of Rohingya refugees, a population with children vulnerable to child labor and commercial sexual exploitation. (14,91,92) However, sources indicate that some border guards, police, and military members are involved in facilitating the trafficking of children, including into prostitution. In registered brothels, some police accepted bribes to not check documentation that workers were older than 18 and to procure falsified documents for workers, some as young as ten years old. (56) In particular, in 2018 two border guards were accused of raping two girls after they refused to engage in commercial sex while a third border guard stood watch. (56,110) The guards' commanding officer dismissed the allegations as "rumors" and NGO personnel were prevented from visiting the girls in the hospital. (14) In January 2019, Rapid Action Battalion units arrested an Armed Police Battalion officer on charges of forcing two 12-year old girls into prostitution. (14,50) However, the government subsequently denied the case. (56)

Border guards, police, and coast guards received training during the reporting period. In addition, new police posts were established. (85) However, the Trafficking in Persons Monitoring Cell reportedly lacks the necessary funds and staff to adequately address cases of child trafficking. (93) Reporting also indicates that Child Protection Networks, intended to be a referral mechanism between law enforcement and social services, are not operating due to a lack of funds. (84) The government also did not provide information on the number of investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, convictions, or penalties imposed for violations related to the worst forms of child labor for inclusion in this report.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of coordination among agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Welfare Council	Coordinates efforts undertaken by the government to guide, coordinate, and monitor the implementation of the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labor. Chaired by MOLE, it is comprised of officials representing relevant government ministries, international organizations, child advocacy groups, and employer and worker organizations. (94) In 2019, organized meetings at the divisional, district, and sub-district levels. (85)
Counter-Trafficking National Coordination Committee, Ministry of Home Affairs (MOHA)	Coordinates the work of government agencies and international and local NGOs on international and domestic human trafficking, including child trafficking, through bimonthly meetings. (82) Oversees district counter-trafficking committees, which manage counter-trafficking committees for sub-districts and smaller administrative units. (82) In 2019, some of the 555 district and sub-district level counter-trafficking committees allocated funding for coordination and victim support while others did not function. (14)
Rescue, Recovery, Repatriation, and Integration Task Force, MOHA	Coordinates efforts by the governments of Bangladesh and India to rescue, recover, repatriate, and reintegrate victims of human trafficking, particularly women and children, between the two countries. Liaises with various ministries, government departments, NGOs, and international organizations that assist trafficked children. (14,60,95) In 2019, the task force repatriated over 100 Bangladeshi nationals. (96) However, the government lacks the capacity to track its citizens abroad, case management systems have not been developed, and the process to repatriate human trafficking victims is lengthy. (95,96)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including mainstreaming child labor issues into relevant policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labor (2012–2021)	Identifies strategies for developing institutional capacity, increasing access to education and health services, raising social awareness, strengthening law enforcement, and creating prevention and reintegration programs. (64) In 2019, the MOLE formed a National Child Labor Monitoring Core Committee. The Committee makes regular visits to sectors with a high risk for child labor and educates the employers on not using child labor. The committee held its first meeting on July 7, 2019 and visited tanneries in Savar on July 20 and November 20, 2019. (85) Also during the reporting period, MOLE broadcast an awareness raising program on 30 private television channels. The Ministry of Women and Children Affairs assisted 700 children through Child Development Centers and rehabilitated 972 street children. (43)
Seventh Five Year Plan (2016–2020)	Includes the elimination of the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child domestic workers and other vulnerable groups. Sets out actions to be taken by the government, including forming a policy for children working in the formal sector; providing assistance to street children to protect them from exploitation, coordinating with stakeholders for effective rehabilitation, increasing working children's access to formal and non-formal learning, and providing livelihood support to poor households with children. (97) During the reporting period, 1,250 street children were brought into schooling. (43)
Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy	Sets the minimum age for domestic work at 14 years; all children under 18 require parental permission to engage in domestic work. (98) However, the policy is not legally enforceable until the legal framework is amended to reflect the revised policy. (99) In 2019, the government formed a Central Monitoring Cell on Domestic Workers to monitor implementation of the policy and two awareness-raising workshops were conducted in Khulna and Barishal. (85)
National Plan of Action for Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking (2018–2022)	Establishes a plan to build government capacity to address trafficking in persons and provide economic and social safety nets for victims and vulnerable populations, particularly children. (100,101) In 2019, the government took steps to implement the plan including creating 2,866 new Bangladesh Police posts, organizing training courses for police, border guards, and coast guard officials; and establishing a 24/7 legal advice hotline. It rehabilitated or reintegrated 3,501 children, and referred 2,677 children to legal aid, and 4,204 children to government, private, and NGO services. (43,85)

The government has a National Education Policy that sets the compulsory age for free education through eighth grade (age 14). In 2019, the government supported education through constructing new classrooms, providing textbooks, training teachers, and providing stipends and meals to students in need. (85) However, the government has yet to include child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Education Policy. (61)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, issues exist in these social programs, including lack of adequate programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Elimination of Hazardous Child Labor, Phase IV (2018–2021)†	A $35 million Government of Bangladesh-funded, 3-year project implemented by the Ministry of Labor and Employment. Removed 90,000 children from hazardous labor in phases I-III by providing informal and technical education, stipends, and awareness raising for employers and families. (43,86,102) In 2019, although implementation of the program was delayed, selection of NGOs to support the program continued. (85)
Child Labor Improvements in Bangladesh (CLIMB) (2017–2021)	USDOL-funded project implemented by Winrock International that aims to build the capacity of civil society to more effectively detect and combat forced child labor and other labor abuses in the dried fish sector in Bangladesh. In 2019, the program included research on forced child labor in the dried fish industry in Cox's Bazar. (103) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
Accelerating Protection for Children (2017–2021)†	Project funded by the government and UNICEF and implemented by the Ministry of Women and Children Affairs to assist children engaged in exploitative work. (85) Since July 2017 through the reporting period, the project removed 35,454 child laborers from exploitative work, provided them with stipends, and reached 167,500 people with awareness raising activities on child marriage, child labor, and child torture. (85)
Enabling Environment for Child Rights†	Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs program, supported by UNICEF, which rehabilitates street children engaged in child labor and enrolls them in school. (104,105) Active in 2019. (106)
Child Help Line 1098†	Ministry of Social Work-implemented and UNICEF-supported 24-hour emergency hotline. Connects children vulnerable to violence, abuse, and exploitation with social protection services. (107) The hotline receives approximately 80,000 calls a year and was accessible from anywhere in the country. (43) Active in 2019. (106)

† Program is funded by the Government of Bangladesh.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (108,109)

During the reporting period, with technical and financial support from UNICEF, the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics conducted the Bangladesh Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS), which includes child labor statistics. The Government of Bangladesh is expected to release the data in 2020. (2) In addition, the Ministry of Labor and Employment is expected to conduct a national survey on child labor by 2021. (2)

Within 15 ministries responsible for children in some way, the government of Bangladesh increased its spending on children by 17 percent between the 2017-2018 and 2018-2019 fiscal years. Although the government has implemented 91 action programs to eliminate hazardous child labor, research found that the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem, including in tanneries, the informal garment sector, and the dried fish industry. (43)

In 2019, Belize made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government established a Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate to identify, coordinate, and report on child labor cases, and created a program to conduct targeted child labor inspections. During the reporting period, the National Child Labor Committee met regularly and began updating their 2009 National Child Labor Policy by adding additional protections for children. The government also continued to fund a cash assistance program to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children. However, children in Belize engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and construction. The country's minimum age for work is 12 and does not meet international standards. In addition, the country lacks prohibitions against the use of children in illicit activities and does not appear to have programs to address child labor in agriculture, except in the sugar industry.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Belize engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture and construction. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Belize.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Belize lacks a recent comprehensive child labor study, which makes it difficult to clearly determine the sectors and activities in which working children are engaged. Although there is a plan to conduct a more thorough study under the new Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate, the last known data available is from a 2010 study on child activity funded by the ILO. (2,3) However, reports suggest that children in rural areas work in the agriculture and fishing industries, and children in urban areas work in the construction and tourist industries. Children work on family-owned farms and accompany adults to employment sites to assist in planting and harvesting. (2)

Among Belize’s ethnic groups, Mennonites had the highest percentage of child labor with approximately 9.5 percent of Mennonite children engaged in child labor. (3,6,7,12) Non-Mennonite children are also engaged in child labor on Mennonite-owned land. (9) Children working on Mennonite land often use dangerous tools like machetes, tractors, and plows, and work long hours in the sun without proper hydration. (9,12) Limited reporting also indicates that boys working mainly in Mennonite communities may be involved in operating heavy machinery and flying small airplanes to spray crops. (2,3)

Children in Belize are also engaged in child labor in diving and fishing for fish, lobster, and conch. Many of these children cannot swim or may be involved in swimming at extreme depths, and have been injured working with dangerous tools such as anchors, fish traps, chipping hammers, and spears. (2,7)

Government officials indicate that Belize has a reputation as being a destination for child sexual exploitation, with reports of children being trafficked in areas frequented by tourists or seasonal workers, such as San Pedro, Punta Gorda, and Belize City. (2,3,14,15,17) Girls from impoverished communities and LGBTI children are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and labor trafficking in Belize. (15-18) In 2019, there were reports of girls in Punta Gorda being exploited by family members and made to engage in sexual relationships with foreign tourists, including U.S. nationals, who would reward the families financially. (2,3) Anecdotal reports also indicate that boys from Belize City and San Pedro were recruited to transport and sell drugs and firearms and commit murders as part of gang warfare. (2,3,7,12,16)

Primary and secondary education is tuition free in Belize up to age 14, but children’s access to education is sometimes hindered by the cost of school fees, textbooks, uniforms, and meals. (2,3,16,19,20) In 2019, approximately 60 percent of children benefited from a secondary school subsidy of $150 per year toward education expenses. (3) Still, some Spanish-speaking children face language barriers at schools that provide instruction only in English. (9) In addition, Belize lacks qualified teachers, basic supplies, and facilities to educate children. (2,3,7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Belize has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Belize's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work and hazardous work.

Throughout 2019, the Government of Belize deliberated on proposals to amend 22 sections of the labor legislation, in the context of child labor. The proposed amendments to existing legislation were one result of the Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II) project, which was launched in cooperation with USDOL in 2018. (3) In 2018, the project's Legislative Review Committee drafted a hazardous work and light work list and is proposing extending the compulsory education age to age 16, but legislative delays have impeded the government's efforts to enact and amend this or other legislation addressing child labor concerns. (2,3)

Belize

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Belizean law does not conform to international standards because it sets the minimum age for employment at age 12. (19) However, the minimum legal age for work in wholesale or retail trade, or business, is age 14. (21) Belizean law is also inconsistent with international standards on hazardous work. Children under age 14 are prohibited from working in industrial undertakings—including activities such as mining, manufacturing, and construction—but children over age 14 are explicitly permitted to work in those types of activities. (19) Although Belizean law indicates that children under age 18 are prohibited from being employed or engaged in any activity that may be detrimental to their health, education, or mental, physical, or moral development, the law does not specify which employment activities are detrimental to children. (19,20) A list of hazardous work prohibited for all children has not been adopted as law. (29-31) Furthermore, Belizean law is inconsistent with international standards on light work, because the types of light work permissible for children have not yet been identified. (19,31)

The Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act and the Criminal Code prohibit all forms of child sexual exploitation, with the former explicitly prohibiting child pornography. (23,24) However, consensual sex with children ages 16 or 17 is permitted, including in cases in which a person gives or promises remuneration, goods, food, or other benefits in exchange for the sexual act. This provision leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (23,29) Research could not determine whether laws prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. (32,33)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor, Local Government, and Rural Development and other relevant ministries that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Local Government, and Rural Development	Identifies cases and enforces laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor through its Labor Department. (8,13) In 2019, the Labor Department established a Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate enabling criminal authorities and social services to reciprocally refer children found in child labor. (3)
Belize Police Department (BPD)	Investigates cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking through Sexual Offense and Family Violence Units. (3)
Ministry of Education, Youth, Sports, and Culture	Investigates truancy offenses in schools and issues fines for these violations. (34)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecution	Prosecutes criminal offenses, including cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. (35)
Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate*	Identifies, coordinates, and reports on all child labor activities; collaborates with stakeholders to assist with the monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies that relate to child labor; and consults, educates, and raises awareness of child labor. Deals with all issues relating to child labor and enables criminal authorities and social services to reciprocally refer children found in child labor. (3) After the situation has been assessed, relevant agencies get involved, such as the Department of Human Services (DHS) and the BPD. In 2019, created targeted child labor inspection program with support from the CLEAR II program to conduct inspections focusing on identifying child labor, child labor education, training, tracking, and coordination with pertinent agencies. (3)
Ministry of Human Development and Social Transformation, Department of Human Services (DHS)	Receives referrals for child labor cases; trains immigration officials, labor inspectors, and the BPD in making referrals; and handles human trafficking cases. (36) Provides victims with welfare services, including medical and social services and counseling assistance. (8,37)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including insufficient inspections and penalties to deter child labor violations.

In 2019, the Labor Department coordinated with different government agencies to conduct child labor-specific inspections in San Pedro Town, as well as Orange Walk, Cayo, and Belize districts. In addition, all 25 inspectors received training under the CLEAR II Project, which ended in June 2019. It is unknown whether similar training can take place in 2020. (3)

The government does not publish information regarding labor inspectorate funding. However, government officials indicate that the level of funding is insufficient and that the inspectorate has a need for more vehicles, fuel, and inspectors. (2) Although the Labor Department is required to visit every business at least once a year, it usually falls short of this goal due to a lack of resources. (2,7) Labor inspectors are able to assess penalties, but the current fine for child labor infractions is only $13.50. Thus, inspections and penalties may be insufficient to deter child labor violations in Belize. (2,38) Training is provided to new inspectors; however, funding is insufficient to address the inspectorate's full need for refresher training on existing laws throughout the year. (2)

Child labor complaints can be submitted to the Labor Department, the Belize Police Department, or the Department of Human Services. Limited reporting from local NGOs and the private sector indicates that it is difficult to follow up on the status of complaints made. (2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including training for criminal investigators.

In 2019, Belize continued its trend of increasing emphasis on trafficking in persons. It focused its efforts in the areas of public outreach and public awareness, education and training, capacity building for police and investigative officers, and improving its responses on migrants who have been victims of human trafficking. (14) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Labor established a full time Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate. (3) The Human Trafficking Institute also continued to train prosecutors, judges, and justices to increase the capacity of the legal system to effectively prosecute human trafficking crimes. In 2019, the police initiated seven new sex trafficking cases, four of which involve minors. (14)

Despite these efforts, there have been only two human trafficking convictions in Belize since 2005, only one of which involved a minor, and although the country’s laws allow for the imprisonment of violators, human trafficking cases are often dismissed by lower courts. (1,40) Belize lacks official statistics on child sex tourism, and criminal investigators and police officers and labor inspectors lacked sufficient resources—such as vehicles, fuel, office supplies, and adequate training—to investigate violations of criminal law, including the worst forms of child labor. (1,12)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee (NCLC)	Coordinates efforts among ministries to combat child labor and implement the National Child Labor Policy. Led by the Ministry of Labor and 14 government and civil society members. (41,42) The Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate serves as the Secretary for NCLC. In 2019, the committee held at least 10 regular meetings related to child labor and began review of the 2009 National Child Labor Policy for amendments to incorporate child protections. (3) The NCLC distinguishes between children engaged in work that is beneficial to their development and those engaged in the worst forms of child labor. (39,43)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Council	Identifies and rescues human trafficking victims, trains law enforcement officials, and educates the public about the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Vice Minister of Human Development and Social Transformation; includes 12 other government agencies and civil society organizations. (44) In 2019, the Council provided human trafficking training to BPD’s Special Branch Basic Intelligence Unit. The training allowed 21 participants to develop and enhance their intelligence-gathering capacity to improve human trafficking investigation and case development. (14) During the reporting period, DHS also partnered with the Council to continue implementation of the Regional Strategy for the Comprehensive Care of Trafficking Victims and the Regional Protocol for the Repatriation of Trafficking Victims. (3)
National Committee for Families and Children	Promotes, monitors, and evaluates Belize’s compliance with its national and international commitments to children, including the UN CRC. (37) Implements the National Results Framework for Children and Adolescents 2017–2030, also referred to as the Children’s Agenda. (10,45,46) In 2019, began engagement and collaboration with the Child Labor Secretariat and Inspectorate on special assignments and projects. (3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy	Focuses on strengthening child labor laws, creating legislation to address existing gaps, and providing educational assistance to children who have been or who are currently engaged in child labor. (47,48) Aims to strengthen government institutions and services and to train labor officers. (42,48) During the reporting year, the NCLC began review of the 2009 National Child Labor Policy for amendments to incorporate child protections. (3)
CARE Model	Coordinates the protection, care, and monitoring of sexually exploited and trafficked children. Outlines the role of DHS and the BPD in receiving allegations of commercial sexual exploitation of children and referring children to services. (3) In 2019, the DHS and the BPD continued to collaborate to implement the CARE Model. (3)
National Results Framework for Children and Adolescents (Children's Agenda) 2017–2030	Sets out the government's agenda and priorities to protect the rights of children and adolescents, including in education, health, economic security and opportunity, and protection from discrimination, abuse, and exploitation, including child labor. (10,45,46) Raises awareness of the role of families in promoting early childhood education. (46) Research was unable to determine what activities took place to implement the National Results Framework for Children and Adolescents during the reporting year.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (18)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II)	$7 million, USDOL-funded project, implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders in seven countries to build local and national capacity of governments to address child labor. (2) The project formally ended in 2019, though not all of the recommendations or draft legislation arising from it have been fully implemented. In 2019, created an unnamed targeted child labor inspection program. (3) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
Building Opportunities for Our Social Transformation	Conditional cash transfer program established in 2011. Continues to be implemented in Belize City, in the areas with the highest reported incidents of child sexual exploitation. (3) Provides small cash assistance to poor households subject to specific conditions, such as minimum school attendance of 85 percent. In 2019, the government provided $1.75 million to about 13,000 Belizeans across the country. (3) The program seeks to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children by wealthy men who pay families for access to vulnerable children. (3)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (13,49)

Research found no evidence of government programs to combat commercial sexual exploitation of children or assist children working in agriculture, fisheries, or construction. During the reporting year, Belize continued to implement a public awareness campaign on child sex tourism, which includes public service announcements and billboards at the international airport and border crossings. (1)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Belize (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

In 2019, Benin made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Departments of Atlantique and Zou issued decrees prohibiting minors from going to bars and brothels in an attempt to eliminate the use of child labor in those establishments. In addition, Benin hired nearly 50 percent more labor inspectors than it had last year. However, children in Benin engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of cotton and crushed granite, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and street vending. There are many barriers to education access, especially for children with disabilities. In addition, the government did not publicly release information on some of its labor and criminal law enforcement efforts and limited resources for the adequate enforcement of child labor laws may impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Benin engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the production of cotton and crushed granite, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work and street vending. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Benin.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	20.9 (680,004)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	71.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	16.3

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Benin

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Trafficking of children occurs mostly within Benin but also to other countries, primarily Gabon, Nigeria, and the Republic of the Congo, and for purposes of domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and to work in vending, farming, and stone quarrying. Children living in the northern regions of Benin are the most vulnerable to trafficking. (1,3,15,17) Traditionally, under a practice known locally as vidomégon, children live with relatives or family friends and perform household services in exchange for educational opportunities. Up to 95 percent of these children are girls and many become victims of labor exploitation and sexual abuse. (1,3,15,18)

The Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education; nevertheless, some parents are expected to pay school fees because many schools lack sufficient funds. (19,20) Evidence suggests that incidences of physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, including corporal punishment, and rape of students by teachers, hamper education access. Corporal punishment was outlawed in Benin in 2015. (3,15,21) Children with disabilities also have limited access to the regular education system, and a lack of reliable transportation forces some children to walk long distances to school. (18,20,22,23) In rural areas, children are often unregistered due to a limited understanding of procedures for receiving a birth certificate and the associated costs. Since birth certificates are required to enroll in school, some unregistered children may be denied access to education. (3,20,24,25)

The government continued the Administrative Census for the Identification of the Population (RAVIP) which will help issue biometric identity cards with a unique identification number. In 2019, RAVIP retroactively registered the births of more than 1 million children over the age of 1 and aided in registering the births of 3,543 children who were younger than age 1. (3) Although the Government of Benin has implemented programs to protect children from human trafficking and participated in programs focused on child labor in quarrying and mining, research was unable to determine whether the government implements programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, or agriculture. (13)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Benin has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Benin's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including insufficient penalties.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 166 of the Labor Code; Article 210 of the Child Code (26,27)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of the Hazardous Occupations List (28)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Hazardous Occupations List (28)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 3 and 303 of the Labor Code; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Article 212 of the Child Code (26,27,29)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 3 and 303 of the Labor Code; Articles 2-4, 6, 18, and 22 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Articles 212 and 352–353 of the Child Code; Articles 499–501 and 504 of the Penal Code (26,27,29,30)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 3 of the Law on the Prevention and Repression of Violence Against Women; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors; Articles 212 and 378 of the Child Code; Article 504 of the Penal Code (27,29-31)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 212 of the Child Code; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors (27,29)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 6 of Law 2005-43 (32)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 6 of Law 2005-43; Title II, Article 32 of the Constitution (19,32)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Articles 2 and 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors (29)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 24 of Act N° 2003-17; Article 4 of the Law on the Prevention and Repression of Violence Against Women (31,33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of the Constitution; Article 114 of the Child Code (19,27)

In 2019, the Departments of Atlantique and Zou issued decrees prohibiting minors from going to bars and brothels in an attempt to eliminate the use of child labor in those establishments. (3) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (3,34) In addition, Article 22 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors prescribes insufficient penalties, especially in comparison to punishments for other serious crimes, such as rape. (17,29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS)	Enforces child labor laws and investigates labor code infractions, including those related to child labor. (13,35) Refers cases of child labor to Social Promotion Centers. (25)
Ministry of Social Affairs and Microfinance	Offers social assistance and social support services to vulnerable populations. Through its Office of Family, Childhood, and Adolescence, provides assistance to trafficking victims by means of 85 Social Promotion Centers across the country. (7,14,25) Through the Family and Child Monitoring Office, maintains a database on child trafficking. (14)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforces criminal laws related to the protection of minors, including the worst forms of child labor, through the Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM) under the Criminal Police Department. (17,36) Through OCPM, maintains a child trafficking database to track and process child trafficking cases. OCPM continues to expand local offices throughout the country and provide police with specific training for addressing abuses of children. (3) Through its Brigade des Moeurs (vice squad), addresses human trafficking for sexual exploitation. (3,36)

Benin

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

There is a Standard Operating Procedure that seeks to improve the quality of services provided by the Office for the Protection of Minors, harmonize police activities, and create a stronger working relationship between the police and other actors involved in child protection. Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken during the reporting period. (3,25)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MOLCS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including an insufficient number of labor inspectors.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Labor Inspectorate Funding	$236,363 (37)	$207,000 (3)

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Unknown (8)	Unknown (3)
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (8)	Yes (3)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8)	Yes (3)

In 2019, 746 labor inspections were conducted in Benin, a dramatic increase over the previous year, with the majority of them occurring in big city open air markets. UNICEF reported that 463 child laborers were referred to protection services. (3) However, labor inspections did not occur in the mining, agriculture, construction, or informal sectors, which are sectors that child labor is known to occur. (3) Also during the year, the government convicted two individuals for two child labor violations. Both received a 1-year suspended prison term and a fine of $345. (3) In addition to 35 full time labor inspectors, the government has trained an additional 25 administrators and controllers to conduct labor inspections. (25) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Benin's workforce, which includes more than 3.5 million workers. In order to meet the ILO's suggested ratio of 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Benin would need to employ about 92 inspectors. (39,40) Sources indicate that the labor inspectorate's continued lack of financial resources hampered their ability to conduct labor inspections. (3,13) The government did not provide information about the number of inspections conducted at work sites or whether unannounced inspections were conducted. (3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including training for criminal investigators.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Unknown (37)	Unknown (3)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (8)	Yes (3)
Refresher Courses Provided	No (8)	Yes (25,36)
Number of Investigations	188 (14)	2 (3)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (8)	Unknown (3)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	44 (38)	Unknown (3)
Number of Convictions	11 (41)	2 (3)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to The Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (8)	Unknown (3)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (8)	No (3)

Whereas in previous years, there was a mechanism for criminal law enforcement to refer cases of the worst forms of child labor for social services, this year that mechanism was not operational as the government was transitioning to a new referral mechanism. (3,25) The government did not provide information for inclusion in this report on its criminal law enforcement efforts regarding the number of violations found, prosecutions initiated, or the number of penalties imposed for the worst forms of child labor. (3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including a lack of clarity regarding institutional mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor “ Comité Directeur National de Lutte contre le Travail des Enfants ” (CDN)	Coordinates efforts to address child labor and falls under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service. Delegates from the ILO, UNICEF, trade unions, local NGOs, and governmental ministries sit in on the CDN. In August 2019, held a 3-day session attended by 40 officials from the government, NGOs, trade unions, and employers’ associations to assess the implementation of the National Action Plan to Fight Trafficking in Persons. (3)
Inter-Ministerial Task Force to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates government efforts to address trafficking in persons through five committees: prosecution, prevention and protection, statistics, intellectual, and policy. Led by the Ministry of Planning and Development and includes the membership of key ministries and NGOs. This task force met on an ad hoc basis in 2019. (36)

According to the government, existing mechanisms and procedures to protect and care for abused children are poorly coordinated and do not adequately respond to the needs of vulnerable children. In addition, the National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CNSCPE) has not met since 2017. (3,25)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementing and incorporating child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Sector Plan.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2019–2023)†	Aims to reduce the worst forms of child labor in Benin by 70 percent by the end of 2023. Targets six focus areas: strengthening the legislative and institutional framework related to child labor; information, awareness, and social mobilization; education and training; victim monitoring; protection and referral; inspection and repression; and institutional mechanisms; and monitoring and evaluation of the plan. (3)

Benin

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Policy	Description
Action Plan to Eradicate Child Exploitation in Markets	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the major marketplaces in Benin, including Dantokpa in Cotonou, Ouando in Porto-Novo, and Arzeke in Parakou. Strengthens child labor laws, raises awareness of child labor in markets, and creates social programs for children rescued from labor exploitation in the targeted markets. (3) In 2019, the government continued its inspection program in the main local open space markets in Dantokpa in Cotonou, Ouando in Porto-Novo, and Arzeke in Parakou. (3) Extended inspections to workshops, bars, restaurants, and other places where children were targeted. Inspections were coupled with educational sessions in which the government educated 1,272 craftsmen on the laws and policies to prevent child labor in Benin. (3)
Cooperative Agreement to Combat Cross-Border Trafficking†	Signed a tripartite cooperative agreement on December 23, 2019, between Benin, Burkina Faso, and Togo to protect migrant children and victims of trans-border human trafficking. Under the agreement, the three countries commit to cooperate and assist each other in the investigation of human trafficking offences. (3)
National Action Plan to Fight Trafficking in Persons (2019–2025)†	The government developed a National Policy with accompanying National Action Plan to Fight Trafficking in Persons. (41)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (21)

The Education Sector Plan (2018-2030) aims to improve access to education, including targeted interventions for orphaned children as well as children outside of the formal education system. However, the Education Sector Plan does not implement nor incorporate child labor elimination and prevention strategies. (6,45)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Government-Funded Shelters‡	Social Promotion Centers (CPSs) provide food, shelter, education, and vocational training to vulnerable children, including victims of labor exploitation, in 85 centers. During the reporting period, CPSs conducted 225 anti-trafficking education campaigns. (3) The Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM) also operates an interim care facility for human trafficking survivors before their placement in a long-term shelter. (3,7) In 2019, the OCPM reported it had provided temporary shelter and assistance to 1,387 children. (3)
Government-Funded Re-Training Centers‡	MOLCS, with the assistance of UNICEF, maintains a vocational school program to train survivors of child trafficking in a trade. (48) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the vocational school program during the reporting period.
Integrated National School Feeding Program (2017–2021)†	$87 million Government of Benin-funded program that is managed by the World Food Program and aims to reach 3,000 schools in Benin. (51) In his 2019 end-of-the-year speech, President Patrice Talon stated that the program benefited 800,000 children and equipped 51 percent of nursery and primary schools in Benin with canteens. (3)
McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program (2018–2022)	$19 million U.S. Department of Agriculture-funded project implemented by Catholic Relief Services in the Alibori and Borgou regions. Aims to improve literacy and attendance of school-aged children, improve the health and dietary practices of students, and increase government capacity and ownership of school meal programs. (52)

† Program is funded by the Government of Benin.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (13,53-55)

Although the Government of Benin has implemented programs to protect children from human trafficking and participated in programs focused on child labor in quarrying and mining, research was unable to determine whether the government implements programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, or agriculture.

In 2019, Bhutan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government charged one defendant with child trafficking for the purpose of forced labor and adopted the Standard Operating Procedure for Multi-Sectoral Response to Address Trafficking in Persons in Bhutan, which defines the roles and responsibilities of each government agency in preventing and responding to trafficking in persons. In addition, the government hired 11 additional labor inspectors. However, although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Bhutan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Bhutan's minimum age for work is inconsistent with international standards and education is not compulsory. In addition, the government has not adopted a national policy to address child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Bhutan engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bhutan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.8 (6,338)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	84.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	3.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2017, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (4)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010. (5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (2,6,7)
Industry	Construction,† activities unknown (8)
Services	Domestic work (2,6,7)
	Work in hospitality services (2,7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3)
	Forced labor in karaoke bars, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1)
	Use in illicit activities, including the smuggling of tobacco (9)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is a lack of current data on child labor in Bhutan. To date, no national survey on child labor has been conducted.

Bhutan

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Media outlets have reported instances of child labor within Bhutan’s restaurants and automobile workshop industries, some of which had indicators of forced labor. Traffickers have also exploited Indian child domestic workers in Bhutan. (10)

The government provides a minimum of 11 years of free education to all Bhutanese citizens and has committed to increasing free education by an additional 2 years. However, children living in remote villages, children of nomadic communities and migrant populations, and children with disabilities face significant difficulties in accessing public schools. (2,6,7,11,12) Additionally, Bhutan’s stateless children lack access to documentation necessary to attend school, making them more vulnerable to child labor and trafficking. (10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Bhutan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	N/A
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bhutan’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	13	Sections 170–171 of the Labor and Employment Act; Section 7 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (13,14)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 170–171 of the Labor and Employment Act (13)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Section 9(e) of the Labor and Employment Act; Section 9 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (13,14)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 6 and 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 154, 227, and 379 of the Penal Code; Section 221 of the Child Care and Protection Act (13,15,16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Section 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 221 and 224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 227, 379, and 380 of the Penal Code (13,15,16)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 9(b) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 222–224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 225 and 375–380 of the Penal Code (13,15,16)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 9(c) of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 216 and 220 of the Child Care and Protection Act (13,15)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Defense Service Rules and Regulations (17)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Section 9(a) of the Labor and Employment Act (13)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9.16 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of Bhutan (18)

* No conscription (17)

The minimum age for work is not compliant with international standards because the Labor and Employment Act allows children under age 14 to work. (13) In addition, Bhutan has no compulsory age for education, which may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor. (19)

Bhutan's criminal prohibitions against child trafficking do not adhere to international standards because Bhutan's laws require proof of use of force, fraud, or coercion to criminalize child trafficking. (13,15) However, the Bhutanese Parliament is in the process of amending trafficking legislation to make it consistent with international standards. (10)

Although the Government of Bhutan reports that the minimum age for voluntary recruitment into Bhutan's military is age 18, a public version of the Defense Service Rules and Regulations was not available. (17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Labor, Ministry of Labor and Human Resources (MOLHR)	Investigates child labor complaints and ensures that employers comply with child labor laws. Refers cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the police. (2,7)
Royal Bhutan Police	Investigates and enforces criminal laws relating to the worst forms of child labor. (2,7) Includes 3 Women and Child Protection Units and 10 Women and Child Protection Desks to enforce laws protecting women and children. (7,20) Refers abused and exploited children to child welfare officers and the National Commission for Women and Children. (2,16)
Child Welfare Officers	Protect and assist children in difficult circumstances, including children abused and exploited for illegal purposes. (2,7,16)
Child Justice Court	Adjudicates cases involving child labor. (2,16)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MOLHR that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including inadequate resources.

The government did not provide information on its labor inspectorate funding or whether refresher courses were provided to labor inspectors. (2)

During the reporting period, the government increased the number of labor inspectors from 24 to 35. According to a Bhutan government official, although all new labor inspectors received initial training, additional training is needed. (2) Also in 2019, a total of 2,711 labor inspections were conducted, a 20.2 percent increase from 2018. (2) The highest number of inspections were conducted in the service sector, followed by hotels and restaurants. A total of 150 improvement notices and 12 penalty memoranda were issued based on inspections; however, no child labor violations were reported as data was not disaggregated by child labor offenses. (2) Department of Labor officials acknowledged that limited financial and human resources place constraints on the number of inspections conducted and inspectors employed. (2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including a lack of data on training for criminal investigators.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019

In 2019, a woman who brought a child to Bhutan from India as a domestic worker was found guilty of illegal transportation of a child. The woman was fined and ordered to pay compensation to the child's family. (2) The Attorney General's Office has appealed the case to the High Court for reinstatement of human trafficking and child abuse charges. In a separate case, a man charged in August 2018 with employing a minor in a karaoke bar was convicted on January 6, 2020. (2,10,22)

Also during the reporting period, 82 law enforcement officers and 95 prosecutors attended training on implementing the Government of Bhutan's new Trafficking in Persons Standard Operating Procedure. (10)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including mandate implementation.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Task Force	Coordinates government efforts on child labor across multiple government agencies and ministries. Led by MOLHR and comprised of representatives from the government, international organizations, civil society, and the private sector. (23,24) Research was unable to determine whether the Child Labor Task Force undertook activities during the reporting period.
National Commission for Women and Children	Coordinates the implementation of laws and policies that promote and protect the rights of women and children. Comprises a chairperson at the cabinet level and high-level officials who represent relevant government agencies, NGOs, and the private sector. (25) In 2019, established the Dzongkhag Women and Children Committee, a district-level committee, which held a meeting and conducted an awareness program on issues faced by women and children with district leaders. (2)
Trafficking in Persons Special Task Force*	Coordinates anti-trafficking in persons efforts, including monitoring human trafficking trends in Bhutan and advising national policy on human trafficking. Headed by the Department of Law and Order, with participation from other relevant government agencies and civil society organizations. (2)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In 2019, the government adopted the Standard Operating Procedure for Multi-Sectoral Response to Address Trafficking in Persons in Bhutan, which defines the roles and responsibilities of each government agency in preventing and responding to trafficking in persons. The Standard Operating Procedure was developed by Bhutan's Department of Law and Order in coordination with UNODC, U.S. Department of State's Trafficking in Persons Office, and Bhutan's law enforcement and social services agencies. (2,10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the government has established policies to address child labor. Additionally, while the government may have had policies that indirectly impact child labor, research did not find child labor elimination and prevention strategies to have been integrated into these policies. (2)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to the prevention or elimination of child labor (Table 9). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including adequacy to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Shelters for Vulnerable Women and Children†	Includes Project Hope, a National Commission for Women and Children program that provides residential shelters for children at risk of labor exploitation. In 2019, the project was transferred to Respect, Educate, Nurture, and Empower Women (RENEW) as part of its shelter program. RENEW, a Thimphu-based NGO that receives government funding, provides shelter, counseling, and rehabilitation for women and children who have been victims of human trafficking. (2)
Promoting Rights-Based Multi-Sectoral Responses to Prevent Trafficking in Persons in Bhutan (2019–2022)*	$750,000 program funded by the U.S. Department of State's Trafficking in Persons Office and implemented by UNODC to improve Bhutanese police investigation skills regarding human trafficking cases, improve information sharing, and implement the government's new Standard Operating Procedure for Multi-Sectoral Response to Address Trafficking in Persons in Bhutan (TIP SOP). In 2019, UNODC and the Department of Labor held trainings for 16 journalists, 82 law enforcement officers, and 95 prosecutors on trafficking in persons and how to implement the TIP SOP, and a separate training for people going overseas to work to protect themselves from becoming victims of human trafficking. MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although the Government of Bhutan has implemented programs that target children at risk of labor exploitation, research found no evidence that these programs target children working in agriculture or domestic service, or children involved in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2019, Bolivia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Justice trained judges and prosecuting attorneys on conducting trials in cases of human trafficking. In addition, the government carried out anti-human trafficking awareness campaigns to educate students throughout the country, and the Ombudsman's Office published an evaluation of its efforts to prevent trafficking of children and adolescents, identifying key areas for improvement. However, children in Bolivia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in mining. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture, including in the production of sugarcane. Although Bolivian law requires that apprentices attend school, it does not set a minimum age for participation in apprenticeships. In addition, Article 1 of Supreme Decree No. 1875 sets the minimum age for compulsory military service at 17 years, which does not comply with international standards. During the reporting period, political crisis and the implementation of a transitional government may have affected efforts to eradicate the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bolivia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bolivia.

	Use in illicit activities, including robbery and producing or transporting drugs (8,17,18)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children produce and harvest sugarcane and Brazil nuts in the Departments of Beni, Pando, Santa Cruz, and Tarija. (1) Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Some indigenous Guaraní families live in debt bondage and work on ranches, including raising cattle, in the Chaco region of Bolivia. (17) In Tarija, the sugar cane and Brazil nut harvest seasons attract over 3,000 internal migrants—many of them children—who are vulnerable to forced labor and human trafficking. (18)

The cultural practice known as padrinazgo, which involves rural families sending their children to urban areas to live with individuals for better access to education, social services, and food, often leads to forced labor, including in domestic work and third-party businesses. Girls, on average age 14, were found to be engaged in commercial sexual exploitation in El Alto. (7) Civil society reported that the commercial sexual exploitation of Bolivian children thrives due to the strength of the legal sex industry in Bolivia, the persistence of poverty, cultural norms that contribute to the denigration of women and girls, and the demand for child sex tourism. (7,21) Bolivian children are also subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor both within the country and abroad. (17) The government does not have a system in place to track data on forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation of children, or engagement of children in illicit activities. (7)

Bolivian law requires children to attend school up to age 17. Attendance rates for secondary education remain low in rural areas. (7,23)

In 2019, Bolivia experienced deep political crisis following the October 20 presidential and legislative elections. (24) After several weeks of protests, on November 10, then-president Evo Morales resigned over allegations that he stole the elections and he subsequently fled the country. A transitional government, endorsed by Bolivia’s Constitutional Court, assumed power several days later. (24,25) This crisis may have affected efforts to eradicate the worst forms of child labor. Under the Morales administration, Venezuelan children were denied refugee status and were therefore denied access to education, increasing their vulnerability to labor exploitation. (7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Bolivia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Bolivia's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of military recruitment.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

*The minimum age for combat is 18 per Article 36 of the Law of National Military Service (34)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (30,38)

Although legislation was passed in 2018 to clarify the minimum age of work in Bolivia as 14 years, because the minimum age for work is still lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (27,29) The Child and Adolescent Code allows children ages 14 to 18 to work with authorization from the Offices of the Child Advocate on the conditions that the work is not precarious to the child's well-being and is not conducted for more than 8 hours a day and 40 hours a week. (29)

Bolivia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although Bolivian law requires that apprentices attend school, it does not set a minimum age for participation in apprenticeships. (26) Articles 108 and 249 of the Constitution require Bolivian males to perform compulsory military service in accordance with national law. (30) Article I of Supreme Decree No. 1875, passed in 2014, lowered the minimum age at which compulsory military service may begin from age 18, as previously established, to age 17, which does not comply with international standards. (36,37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/ Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforces child labor laws, in part through its Fundamental Rights Unit, which also addresses forced labor of indigenous peoples. (39) Refers cases to the Labor Courts for adjudication of penalties and unpaid wages. (8) Engages municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to ensure the protection of children's rights. (2,40) Assists in the implementation of the Child and Adolescent Code. (2,27)
Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate	Authorizes children from the age of 14 to engage in work and registers them in the government's Child and Adolescent Information System (SINNA), pursuant to the Child and Adolescent Code. Protects the rights and welfare of children, including by accompanying child labor inspectors and referring criminal child labor cases to prosecutors and for social services. (2,27)
Prosecutor's Office	Enforces criminal laws against forced labor, trafficking of children, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities at a departmental level in coordination with the Attorney General. (2,41)
Ministry of Justice and Transparency	Administers SINNA, in which municipal Offices of the Child Advocate register children ages 14 and up to work, as required by the Child and Adolescent Code. (27,29)
Attorney General's Office	Oversees all human trafficking investigations and prosecutions on a national level. (41) Through its National Coordinator's Office oversees regional prosecutors who, in conjunction with the Bolivian National Police, pursue cases of human trafficking. Maintains a database of human trafficking cases. (41)
Bolivian National Police	Maintain the Special Force in the Fight Against Crime (FELCC), which runs the Trafficking in Persons Division, made up of 15 investigative human trafficking units, as well as the Police Unit for Migratory Control and Assistance, which patrols national borders. (42-45)

Following the 2018 amendment of the Child and Adolescent Code, Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate are now responsible for registering working children ages 14 and older in the government's Child and Adolescent Information System. (2,29) Reports indicate that up to 15 percent of municipalities in Bolivia lack an Office of the Child Advocate; many more are reported to lack sufficient resources and the capacity to perform their mandate and raise awareness of children's rights and their parents' obligations under the Code. (18) This lack of institutional coverage may leave certain children particularly vulnerable to child labor. (8,42,46)

In La Paz and Santa Cruz, Child Advocate Offices reported additional barriers to implementation of the registration section of the Code. These barriers include lack of cooperation from parents to register their working children and prohibitive financial obstacles to obtain the proper paperwork required for registration. (18)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of MOL that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the lack of proper financial resource allocation.

In June 2019, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) held a press conference to reinforce that all Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate in all regions would be enforcing the new requirement that all working children ages 14 to 18 have the proper documentation, highlighting that the MOL would be coordinating inspections with the Ministry of Government and the Ministry of Justice. (47) The MOL also continued to use mobile inspection offices to augment the ability of inspectors to examine child labor issues. (7) Each mobile unit comprises two general labor inspectors and one child labor specialist who travel to mainly rural areas throughout the country to conduct unannounced inspections. (2) The mobile units also conducted workshops for students on their rights and protections as adolescent workers, including a workshop in June for 270 students. (48) However, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Bolivia's workforce, which includes approximately 5.7 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Bolivia would employ about 380 labor inspectors. (49) The MOL reported that its budget was insufficient to conduct labor inspections. (7) The MOL also reported that data was not collected on inspections as it had been in previous years due to the political unrest in 2019. The MOL also diverted resources in order to create a child labor survey (yet to be implemented) and to make the necessary legal changes to reflect the increase in working age from 12 to 14. (24)

The MOL, Prosecutor's Office, and the Ministry of Justice do not have a consolidated database or systematized records of the number of violations found related to child labor. (2,7) Labor inspectors lack necessary resources to enforce labor laws, especially in the Chaco region. (50)

The government reported that children removed from child labor are referred to the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate for services, but information on the number of children referred for services is not publicly available. (2,7) Rural offices of the Child Advocate in municipalities throughout the country lack proper funding, personnel, and materials. While municipalities are required to allot a certain percentage of their budget to the Child Advocate's office, this percentage has decreased over the last few years. (2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal law enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient training.

In January 2019, the Ministry of Justice held a training for 350 justice sector workers, including judges and prosecuting attorneys, regarding specialized techniques and trials of trafficking in persons. (21) The Bolivian National Police also carried out training on its Manual for Investigating Trafficking in Persons Crimes in eight cities facing high risks of human trafficking due to either size or proximity to an international border. These training sessions lasted 2 days, with the second day dedicated to operational activities that involved visiting high-risk areas like bars, discotheques, and brothels; 400 police officers from the Trafficking in Persons Division and the Special Crime-Fighting Force were trained. (21) Of the 393 cases of trafficking in persons identified in 2019, 250 were victims under age 18. (21)

Despite these efforts, children rescued from the worst forms of child labor are often not referred to social services providers because some cities lack shelters and other social services for children. (18,20,50,51) Shelters maintained by departmental governments are underfunded and child victims were often cast out of shelters on the basis of fixed timelines—after spending the maximum number of days allowed—rather than an assessment of need. (20) The government did not report the number of children referred to receive social services. While children can report workforce abuse to the Child Advocate’s Office, they rarely do. (18)

In addition, low rates of dedicated training on human trafficking hampered law enforcement efforts. The high rate of rotation among police, prosecutors, and judges—a standard practice to help combat corruption—leads to insufficient knowledge, lack of experience on human trafficking, and a judicial backlog for these types of cases. (50)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinates national enforcement efforts on child labor issues. Led by MOL, and includes the ministries of Justice, Education, and Planning, and several NGOs. (2)
Plurinational System for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents	Coordinates national efforts to manage and implement the Plurinational Plan for Children and Adolescents, the Coordinating Council for Children and Adolescents, and the Congress on Children’s Rights. Evaluates and advises on national plans, public policies, reports, and budget allocation relating to children’s and adolescents’ rights. (27) In coordination with the National Institute of Statistics, monitors and updates SINNA. Led by the Ministry of Justice. (27)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons	Coordinates anti-trafficking efforts and implements national laws and policies on human trafficking and smuggling. (2,32,52) Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprising eight ministries, the Public Advocate, and NGOs. (43) In 2019, as part of its role on the Council, the Ombudsman's Office launched an awareness-raising campaign to inform transport drivers on the importance of documentation control of children and adolescents to identify cases of trafficking in persons. (53) The Council met four times between March 2019 and February 2020. (21)
Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking and Smuggling	Coordinates efforts of the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons in Bolivia's nine departments. Comprising officials from the Special Force in the Fight Against Crime, MOL, the ministries of Migration and Education, the Human Rights Ombudsman's Office, and NGO representatives. (32,42,52)

In 2019, the MOL met with the Ibero-American General Secretariat in a cooperative meeting on best practices in labor issues, including the improvement of inspections, emphasizing the importance of working on the eradication of child labor, forced labor, and labor exploitation. (54) The ILO determined that the National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor has not fulfilled its role as the central coordinating body, and its activities, while ongoing, have not resulted in any significant coordination. (2,24) Reports also indicate that some of the MOL's departmental sub-commissions on child labor have not been active, due in part to a lack of resources. (19,42)

The Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling mandates that the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons include NGOs. However, reports indicate that NGOs have not participated fully in this Council despite efforts to be included. (43) Reports also indicate that some Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking and Smuggling have yet to develop department-level plans to combat human trafficking, as mandated by law. (8,32,52)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementing a new national action plan.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Bolivian General Plan for Economic and Social Development (2016–2020)	Sets goals for economic and social development including eliminating child labor. (54) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2015–2020)	Established eight lines of action drawn from the original five core areas of the Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons, including building capacity and coordination among criminal law enforcement agencies. (20,41) Although the plan was refined in 2016, an updated version awaits approval and publication. (7) In 2019, the Ombudsman's Office (Defensoria del Pueblo) published a detailed report on its governmental role in preventing the trafficking of children and adolescents, identifying key areas for improvement such as documentation control in transportation. (55) The Ombudsman's Office also held its first virtual course on human trafficking in September. (56)

In 2019, on International Day Against Child Labor, the Committee for the Eradication of Prohibited Work, the Social Services Department, and civil society held a round table to discuss issues related to child labor. (9) Bolivia's national policy for addressing child labor, the National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (2000–2010), expired in 2010. (57)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including funding and adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors and regions.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Juancito Pinto Subsidy Program†	Government program that provides a conditional cash transfer to all primary and some secondary school students to increase school attendance and reduce the dropout rate. In 2019, the program expanded to the region of Caracollo. (58)
Safe Terminal Program	A child sex tourism prevention campaign launched by the Bolivian government in 2018, which includes training, awareness activities, and informational workshops for officials of transport and accommodation companies in the city of La Paz. (20) In the department of Tarija, the campaign focuses on the development and implementation of codes of ethics and conduct to promote children's rights in private sector companies' corporate social responsibility programs. (20) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this program during the reporting period.
Human Rights of Children Working in Sugarcane, Brazil Nuts, and Mining‡	Human Rights Ombudsman's Office program that promotes the elimination of the worst forms of child labor, along with labor and social protections for working adolescents ages 14 to 17. Program implementation continued in 2019. (24)
Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute's Triple Seal Initiative	Ministry of Labor collaboration with the Bolivian Institute of Standardization and Quality, UNICEF, and ILO to develop a voluntary certification program that recognizes companies that comply with Bolivian law and ILO conventions on child labor, forced labor, and worker discrimination in the production of their goods. (42) The program remained active in 2019. (21)
Child Trafficking Awareness-Raising Campaigns†	Government program implemented with the Bolivian Network for the Fight Against Human Trafficking and Smuggling that conducts awareness-raising campaigns to educate the public about the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. (40) The Ministry of Education carried out training in 2019 on preventing trafficking in persons to 70 school directors and 100 parents of local schoolchildren in towns near international borders at which the risk of child trafficking is high. (21) On July 30th for World Day Against Human Trafficking, the Bolivian National Police organized an awareness-raising march and cultural program across 4 departments involving approximately 27,000 students called "My Life Has Value, My Body Does not Have a Price—United Against Trafficking in Persons." (21) In 2019, the Ombudsman's Office carried out an anti-trafficking in persons campaign for 4,428 elementary and secondary children, created and disseminated audiovisual spots for trafficking in persons prevention campaigns for youth, and organized awareness-raising marches with students in several cities. (21,53)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (2,19,59,60)

Although Bolivia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation. (19) Although the Juancito Pinto subsidy program continues to expand and has been effective in rural areas, reports indicate that the $29 per year subsidy is insufficient to meaningfully cover costs, such as transportation, associated with attending school in larger cities. For example, reports indicate that costs associated with attending school in La Paz's sister city, El Alto, may reach $410 per year. (19)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Bolivia (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits children under the age of 14 from participating in apprenticeships.	2010 – 2019
	Ensure that the law establishes 18 as the minimum age for compulsory recruitment by the state military and criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 into non-state armed groups.	2015 – 2019
	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2019
Enforcement	Authorize the labor inspectorate to assess penalties for child labor, including its worst forms.	2015 – 2019
	Publish information on child labor law enforcement, including whether inspectors received refresher training, the number of inspections conducted at worksites, the number of child labor violations as a result of inspections, and the number of penalties imposed and collected.	2009 – 2019
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws on child labor to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2013 – 2019

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Provide sufficient funding to increase the Ministry of Labor's capacity to ensure the adequate enforcement of child labor laws.	2013 – 2019
	Ensure that there are systematized records or a consolidated database on the number of violations found related to child labor.	2019
	Establish and maintain in every municipality an Office of the Child Advocate with sufficient resources to ensure that legal protections are extended to all children who are permitted to work, that parents are assisted in registering their children for work, and that coordination of the provision of services to children who are removed from child labor, including its worst forms, occurs in each region.	2014 – 2019
	Ensure that Offices of the Child Advocate publicly report on the number of children authorized to work and the number of children rescued from child labor and referred for social services.	2015 – 2019
	Publish information on training for criminal investigators, including whether they receive training on the worst forms of child labor and refresher training; the number of criminal child labor investigations, violations found, prosecutions initiated, convictions, and whether penalties were imposed for violations of the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2019
	Ensure that victims of the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking are not cast out of shelters due to fixed timelines.	2018 – 2019
	Provide sufficient training, including training on human trafficking, to criminal law enforcement agencies to ensure adequate enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2015 – 2019
Coordination	Ensure that the National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor fulfills its central coordinating role and develops concrete mechanisms to improve coordination among participating agencies and organizations.	2009 – 2019
	Ensure that all Ministry of Labor departmental sub-commissions designed to combat child labor convene and receive sufficient resources to carry out their functions.	2014 – 2019
	Ensure that NGOs participate in the Plurinational Council to Combat the Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons, as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.	2014 – 2019
	Ensure that all Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking are fully operational as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.	2014 – 2019
Government Policies	Establish and implement a new National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor.	2010 – 2019
	Ensure that all policies that address child labor are active and take actions each reporting period, including the Bolivian General Plan for Economic and Social Development.	2019
	Approve and publish an updated version of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons.	2019
Social Programs	Expand national programs, especially those targeting children in rural areas to increase secondary school attendance.	2010 – 2019
	Increase the Juancito Pinto subsidy to ensure that schoolchildren are able to cover the costs associated with attending school.	2014 – 2019
	Expand social programs to address the worst forms of child labor at sites in which hazardous child labor exists, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work and street work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2019
	Ensure that all social programs that address the worst forms of child labor are active and publish information on activities each reporting period.	2019

In 2019, Bosnia and Herzegovina made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Council of Ministers adopted the 2020–2023 National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons and improved victim access to social services by merging resources for domestic and foreign victims of human trafficking into one fund. The government also launched a project with the Council of Europe to prevent and combat human trafficking. However, children in Bosnia and Herzegovina engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The Anti-Trafficking Strike Force lacks coordination between prosecutors, police, and other relevant government stakeholders, and border police officers and social workers failed to properly identify unaccompanied migrant and refugee children as potential victims of human trafficking due to a lack of proper protocols. Furthermore, laws on the minimum age for work do not meet international standards because they do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside of formal employment relationships.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in street work. (1,2) Table I provides key indicators on children’s work and education in BiH. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table I. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	8.9 (44,017)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	83.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	10.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (3)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization’s analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006. (4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street work, including vending and washing car windows (5-7)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced begging and forced domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,5,10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,5,10)
	Use in illicit activities, including for pickpocketing (5,7,10)
	Use in the production of pornography (2,7,10,11)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Street begging is the most common form of child labor in BiH. (1,5,10) Organized groups sometimes traffic children to lucrative locations, both domestically and internationally, in regional and European Union countries, where they are forced to beg. (1,2,12,13)

Bosnia and Herzegovina

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Children in the largest minority group in BiH, the Roma, are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor due to their difficulty in accessing education. The costs of school supplies and uniforms may be prohibitively expensive for some families. (5,7,14) Roma students also face discrimination from teachers, peers, and school administrators, which has resulted in a disproportionate number of Roma children being enrolled in schools for children with intellectual disabilities. (15) In addition, some Roma children lack birth registration documents, which are required to attend school in BiH. (5,10) Sources indicated that the government has not allocated enough financial resources for adequate implementation of inclusive education initiatives, particularly for students with disabilities. (1,2,5,10,16,17)

Schools in Republika Srpska (RS) deny the right for some Bosniak children to receive instruction in the Bosnian language, therefore these children sometimes travel long distances to the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) to receive education in their language. (16-19) In addition, discrimination persists under the “Two Schools Under One Roof” practice between Bosniaks and Croats in FBiH. This practice creates obstacles for students who wish to attend schools other than those which match their ethnic identity and also enables ethnic discrimination in schools, which can lead to absenteeism. (18,20,21)

Children with disabilities generally face barriers to access education, which may make them vulnerable to child labor. Although the number of school programs for children with disabilities is increasing, parents of such children often receive little support from the government, and many schools are unable to provide accommodations for the children’s disabilities. (16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

BiH has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

BiH is a democratic republic with a bicameral parliament. Governmental responsibilities lie with the state, the two entities of BiH (the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and Republika Srpska (RS)), and the self-governing Brčko District (BD). (16) The Government of BiH has established laws and regulations related to child labor, at the state, entity, and district levels (Table 4). However, gaps exist in BiH’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work and the prohibition of military recruitment by non-state armed groups.

‡ Age calculated based on available information (31)

The labor laws of FBiH, RS, and BD do not conform to international standards that require all children to be protected by the minimum age to work because the labor laws do not apply to children who are self-employed or working outside of formal employment relationships. Additionally, neither of the two entities nor the Brčko District includes begging in their lists of hazardous occupations prohibited for children. (13-15) The Criminal Code in BiH fails to prohibit using children for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. Although the Criminal Code in FBiH criminalizes human trafficking for forced labor, it fails to specifically outlaw forced labor, debt bondage, and slavery separately from trafficking in persons. (5,27) The Criminal Codes in FBiH and in BD do not criminally prohibit the use of children for prostitution. While the Criminal Code in RS prohibits using children who are victims of human trafficking for prostitution, for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances, there is a gap in the law for children who are not trafficking victims. Additionally, laws related to illicit activities in BiH are not sufficient because using, procuring, and offering children for the production and trafficking of drugs is not criminally prohibited.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministries of Labor for FBiH, RS, and BD that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in BiH took actions to combat child labor.

The government did not provide information on its labor law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report, though officials in each entity reported that labor inspectors had sufficient resources to carry out inspections in 2019. However, no labor inspectors receive training on detecting hazardous child labor in agriculture, including handling agricultural chemicals. (5,35,36) Although complaint mechanisms exist in all entities, including a mechanism for receiving online complaints, research found that BiH does not have an official system for referring children identified during labor inspections to social service providers unless they are victims or potential victims of human trafficking. (5)

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in BiH took actions to combat child labor (Table 7).

As in previous years, forced begging cases are pursued by entity-level police and state-level prosecutors. (2,10) Children who are detained for begging are generally referred to social service providers, which are often run by NGOs with funding from the Ministry of Security or the Ministry for Human Rights and Refugees. (2,10,11) However, law enforcement officials sometimes penalize child victims of forced begging by issuing fines against the children. (2,38)

During the reporting period, the OSCE facilitated multiple trainings on indicators of trafficking in persons, with an emphasis on irregular migrants, including unaccompanied minors, for the Border Police and regional police forces. (2) However, research indicates that law enforcement officials and social workers would benefit from additional training on identifying children used for forced labor and begging, as these cases are often classified as child negligence or Roma custom instead. (2,10) Law enforcement personnel and prosecutors sometimes impose sentences under the legal minimum, decrease the severity of the sentences, or dismiss the charges against the perpetrators altogether. (2,5,10) In addition, enforcement officials are often unwilling to pursue investigations and prosecutions against parents involved in the trafficking of their children, particularly for forced labor, and the shelters subsequently return the children to the parents who trafficked them. (2,5)

The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including incorporation of all relevant agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (State Coordinator) within MOS	Coordinates human trafficking victim protection efforts among relevant ministries at the entity level and among prosecutors at the state, entity, and local levels, as well as with NGOs. (5,10,36,39) Oversees the human trafficking database, which includes data from NGOs, SIPA, SBP, and police agencies and prosecutors' offices at all levels. (10,36) Publishes data from this database in its annual report on human trafficking. (39) Oversees shelter management and monitors NGO compliance with the agreed-upon provisions on victims' assistance. (36) In 2019, the State Coordinator assisted 36 minors identified as potential victims of trafficking. (2)
Strike Force for Combating Trafficking in Persons and Organized Illegal Migration (Anti-Trafficking Strike Force)	Coordinates human trafficking investigations across government agencies. (36,39) Convenes monthly, with additional meetings scheduled as needed. (10,12,40) Chaired by the Chief State Prosecutor, includes BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD ministries and agencies. (2,5,39) In 2019, the Chief State Prosecutor reached out to more agencies in an effort to involve them in decision-making, including the BiH Border Police, and agreed to allot funding to be used to pay members a nominal participation fee. (2)
Inter-Ministerial Working Group	Monitors implementation of the National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons and the National Referral Mechanism. (5,36,39) Comprises appointed representatives from the state and entity governments, including labor inspectors and elected representatives from NGOs. (5,8) During the reporting period, the Council of Ministers adopted the updated 2020-2023 National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons and instructed both entity-level and cantonal governments to prepare and adopt action plans by June 2020. (2)
Regional Monitoring Teams	Facilitate anti-human trafficking coordination among state, entity, and cantonal-level institutions, as well as between NGOs and intergovernmental organizations. (39,41) Include labor inspectors. (38) In 2019, in an effort to decentralize operations and allow for more adept decision-making, agreed to expand from 4 teams to 18 teams. In addition, MOS organized trainings on protecting victims of trafficking for members of the regional monitoring teams, with an emphasis on the protection of unaccompanied minors and other vulnerable groups. (2,10)

Although the Strike Force is meant to coordinate anti-trafficking efforts across agencies, representatives from the Ministries of Labor are not included. (2,5) The BiH Prosecutor's Office assigned a new prosecutor to the Strike Force following the suspension of its former representatives; however, the FBiH Ministry of Interior failed to appoint its second member to the Strike Force. (37) In addition, the Strike Force lacked funding for a third consecutive year due to political disagreements and low levels of support across all levels of government. (2,10,36) The Strike Force also failed to consistently document its cases. (2,36)

The Council for Children did not meet during the reporting period due to a lack of funding for work and honoraria to members of the body. (37)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including mainstreaming issues regarding the worst forms of child labor into relevant policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Counter Trafficking (2016–2019)	Ensures a permanent, comprehensive, and sustainable response to trafficking in human beings through a strengthened system of prevention, prosecution of perpetrators, and protection and assistance to victims of trafficking. Called for additional harmonization of existing criminal legislation, following the recommendations of the Council of Europe and European Union. (5,7,37) During the reporting period, the National Coordinator organized meetings throughout 2019 with representatives from all levels of government, ensuring that the Strategy including its funding mechanism was drafted and approved by consensus by all levels of BiH government. (37)
Guidelines for Work of Regional Monitoring Teams	Enhances the cooperation of monitoring team members and the National Referral Mechanism. (10,44) Includes a section on mixed migration flows, in which unaccompanied migrant children and victims of human trafficking are addressed. (10) During the reporting period, the governments established six monitoring teams in Republika Srpska, one team in Brčko District, and three teams for Tuzla, Sarajevo, and Central Bosnia Canton; seven remaining teams in the Federation were in the initial establishment phase. (37)
Protocol on Cooperation and Treatment in Cases of Unlawful Behavior at the Detriment of Children in Canton Sarajevo	Prevents begging, exploitation of children, and abuse of children in Canton Sarajevo. (45,46) Sets rules on state cooperation on victim protection and mandates the provision of physical, psychological, health, and social protection for children. (46) During the reporting period, the signatories of the Protocol collaborated on its implementation which resulted in the identification of two potential victims of trafficking. Additionally, the body established a Steering Board to more successfully work on implementation of the Protocol. (37)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (47)

Although the Government of BiH has adopted the National Action Plan to Counter Trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy on other forms of child labor, including forced labor or illicit activities. (2,5,7) In addition, Roma organizations and government agencies have expressed intentions to develop an action plan to combat child begging; however, the plan has not been completed. (36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including a lack of adequate funding.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Registration Project	UNHCR-funded project, implemented by NGO Vaša Prava , which promotes the registration of Roma people to increase their access to social benefits and schools. (39) Has helped 1,740 individuals register for citizenship since 2009 and continues to provide legal assistance to foreign trafficking victims. (2,12,48) Active in 2019. (2)
Daily Centers‡	Center for Social Welfare-supported and NGO-operated drop-in centers in seven locations across the country for vulnerable children, especially street children. (5,10,12) Provides direct assistance for children, including educational activities, counseling, food, and hygiene. (49) Sarajevo's Center for Social Welfare's Mobile Team also engages in daily outreach to children on the streets and to families in vulnerable communities. In 2019, the Daily Centers provided social services to the 160 potential victims of child trafficking identified by the State Prosecutor, 14 of whom had previously received assistance from the centers. (2)
Assistance for Trafficking Victims‡	Government program that allocates small grants to local NGOs for the provision of shelter and social services to victims of human trafficking, including counseling, educational assistance and job training for domestic victims, and visa and legal services for foreign victims of human trafficking. (50) In 2019, MOS and the Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees allocated $39,942 for shelters. (2)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2019)	UNICEF-funded program that aimed to reduce child poverty, enhance child protection and inclusive education, and create inclusive early education for Roma children, as well as to identify gaps in access to education for Roma children and children with disabilities. (51) Research was unable to determine whether the program was active during the reporting period.

Program	Description
Prevention and Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings in Bosnia and Herzegovina*	Joint project by the European Union and the Council of Europe. Debuted in October 2019 and offers $790,720 in funding over the course of 3 years to assist Bosnia and Herzegovina in its efforts to better identify victims of human trafficking and heighten public awareness of ongoing issues in the trafficking of persons. Plans to achieve goals through 12 trainings for labor inspectors, police officers, healthcare providers, and education professionals. (2)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of BiH.

Because labor inspectors do not have a mandate to inspect informal work, staff from Daily Centers are often the first to identify children engaged in hazardous street work. Sarajevo’s Mobile Team staff continues to lack sufficient resources for their work, especially reliable transportation. (35,36,49) Although most Daily Centers collaborate with local Centers for Social Welfare, Daily Centers are not institutionalized and, therefore, lack consistent financial and technical support. (35,36,53) This may limit the ability of Daily Centers to identify and assist children working on the streets; additionally, government support for outreach to street children in areas outside Sarajevo varies significantly. Although the government provides some social services for low-income families through the Center for Social Welfare, many families do not receive enough assistance to reduce their reliance on child labor, especially begging. (35,36,49)

In previous years, many domestic victims of trafficking in persons have been left without assistance because unused funds allocated for human trafficking victims are returned to the state treasury. (2,10) However, the Ministry of Security and the Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees have indicated that this issue will likely resolve once funding for domestic and foreign victims is combined into one pool. During the reporting period, the government agreed that funding dedicated to assisting both domestic and foreign victims should be merged into one fund for disbursement by the National Coordinator’s Office to ensure that the targeted populations would have access to a larger pool of resources. (2)

In 2019, Botswana made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. During the year, the government conducted trainings related to countering trafficking in persons and exploitation of children. However, children in Botswana engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, cattle herding, and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Key gaps remain in the country's legal framework, including the lack of a minimum age for compulsory education and insufficient prohibitions for hazardous work. In addition, social programs do not always reach intended child labor victims, especially those engaged in cattle herding and domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Botswana engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, cattle herding, and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Botswana. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (6)
Data were unavailable from International Labor Organization's analysis, 2020. (7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Herding cattle (1,3,5,8)
Services	Street work, including vending (8) Domestic work (3,5,8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in herding cattle and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3,5) Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,9-12)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

There is little published information regarding the sectors and types of activities in which children are working. Children in Botswana are victims of commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and debt bondage. (5,11) Reports indicate that some children residing in the Dukwi Refugee Camp are engaged in commercial sexual exploitation as they await decisions regarding their refugee status. (8) Some parents in poor rural communities send their children to work as domestic servants in cities, or at farms or cattle posts, increasing their vulnerability to forced labor. (5,11) In addition, children of San ethnic minority groups are subjected to forced labor conditions on private farms and cattle posts. (1,5,11)

Botswana

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Botswana law provides for free basic education; however, the costs of books, uniforms, and other materials are prohibitive for poorer families. (13) School enrollment requires an identity document, such as a birth certificate or national identity card. The government allows all children to enroll in primary education, even without these documents; however, migrant children and children born outside of health care facilities, or whose parents did not register them at birth, may not be able to enroll in secondary schools or register for national exams. (14) Schools also often lack adequate resources for students with disabilities. (8) Moreover, pervasive physical and sexual abuse within schools, including by teachers, contribute to children leaving education early and becoming vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (8,15)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Botswana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 2 and 107 of the Employment Act (16)

Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Section 26 of the Children's Act (17)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 18 of the Children's Act (17,21)

* No conscription (20)

Although the Employment Act allows children to conduct light work activities at age 14, the government has yet to determine the types of light work activities permitted for children. (13) In addition, the Employment Act prohibits night work and hazardous underground work for children, but it does not prohibit other types of hazardous work, including work with dangerous machinery, equipment, and tools. (16,22) Although the government compiled a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations, the list has yet to be approved. (23)

Despite the provision of free basic education, there is not a compulsory education age, which may increase children's vulnerability to child labor. (22,24)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Employment, Labour Productivity and Skills Development (MELSD) and the Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Labour Productivity and Skills Development (MELSD)	Enforces child labor laws and conducts inspections under the Employment Act. (2,16) Facilitates coordination with local leaders and law enforcement officers. Posts labor inspectors to District Council offices to carry out their duties. (2)
District and Municipal Council Child Welfare Divisions	Enforce child labor laws at the local levels. (2)
Botswana Police Service (BPS)	Investigates cases of the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking. (2)
Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS)	Monitors suspected human trafficking cases and leads the Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee. (2)
Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development	Identifies vulnerable children, including those in the worst forms of child labor, and reports cases to the police through its Department of Social Protection. (25) Responds to child labor cases on referral from MELSD or the police. (8) Works with the judiciary to place vulnerable children in safe environments. (25)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MELSD that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the lack of authority to assess penalties.

† Data are from April 1, 2018 to January 31, 2019.

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Botswana’s workforce, which includes approximately 1,177,000 workers. (8) According to the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Botswana would employ about 78 labor inspectors. Labor inspectors are not authorized to inspect domestic households and landowners often deny them access to families working on large farms, which hinders the inspectors’ ability to identify underage workers. (2,8) The labor inspectorate, moreover, has not conducted labor inspections in the Ghanzi District, where there are a significant number of farms and cattle posts, since 2014. (8)

The government did not provide information on the funding of its labor inspectorate, the number of labor inspectors, trainings, or the number of labor inspections conducted, including inspections conducted at worksites, for inclusion in this report. (8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MDJS that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including investigation planning.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019

The MELSD and the Botswana Police Service operate toll-free hotlines to report offenses, including child exploitation, but research could not find information about the number of calls related to the worst forms of child labor. (8,12)

The MDJS implemented a tool kit related to trafficking in persons, which was used for training more than 1,000 individuals on countering child exploitation. (8) In addition, the U.S. International Law Enforcement Academy provided training on human trafficking and child exploitation to nine Botswana police and immigration officers. (27)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Advisory Committee on Child Labor	Oversees child labor issues and reports to the government three to four times a year. Includes representatives from government agencies, various NGOs, worker federations, and employer organizations. (2) Led by MELSD, with participation from the Ministry of Local Government, Ministry of Finance, and the Office of the President. (14) Research was unable to determine actions taken by the committee during the reporting period. (8)
Child Labor Committees	Identify child laborers at the village level. Include social workers; school teachers; members of the Village Development Committees, which are local government structures; labor inspectors; and community leaders, including chiefs and priests. (2) Research was unable to determine actions taken by the committees during the reporting period. (8)
Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee	Provides an inter-ministerial reporting and referral mechanism for children subjected to human trafficking. (14) Led by MDJS, with representation from MELSD, BPS, the Directorate of Public Prosecutions, and ministries responsible for gender affairs, social protection, immigration, and transportation. (2,27) In 2019, the Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee oversaw the implementation of the Anti-Human Trafficking National Action Plan, including aligning the plan with other national programs and policies. (14)

The MDJS reported the need for technical support, training, and increased coordination among agencies to address human trafficking. It indicated that referral and rehabilitation services for victims of human trafficking are also needed. (2,12,28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including mainstreaming child labor issues into relevant policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Outlines the government's plan to address child labor through legislation and policy, and includes awareness-raising programs and training on child labor for relevant stakeholders and implementers. (2) Research could not determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor during the reporting period. (8)
Anti-Human Trafficking National Action Plan (2017–2020)	Outlines the government's plan to implement the Anti-Human Trafficking Act of 2015. Establishes goals to strengthen national coordination mechanisms to combat and prevent human trafficking, through public awareness and cooperation among government departments and civil society. (29) During the reporting period, the Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee worked to align the Anti-Human Trafficking National Action Plan with other national policies. (14)

Child labor elimination and prevention strategies are not included in some national policies, including the Education and Training Sector Strategic Plan and the Botswana National Youth Policy. (30,31)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Botswana

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Government-Funded Programs to Combat Child Labor†	Government-funded programs that aim to prevent child labor and increase protections for vulnerable children. Includes NGO-run shelters, with financial support from the government, that cater to human trafficking victims, including children; the National School Feeding Program, which provides meals to children (grades one through seven) in all public primary schools in the country; the Remote Area Dweller Program, which provides a second meal to school children living in remote areas and children from marginalized communities; the Orphan Care Program, which provides orphans with meals and subsidizes the cost of school fees and transportation costs; and the Needy Children and Needy Students program, managed by the Ministry of Local Government and Rural Development, which provides families with free meals, toiletries, and school uniforms. (2,32) Research was unable to determine whether government-funded programs were implemented during the reporting period. (8)

† Program is funded by the Government of Botswana.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (33)

Although Botswana has programs that target child labor, the design and implementation of these programs are insufficient to fully address the scope of the problem, especially in commercial sexual exploitation, cattle herding, and domestic work.

There are no official government-run shelters to assist child victims of human trafficking; the government authorized and partially funds NGO-run shelters, but it does not provide its own services. (2,12)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2019, Brazil made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government published two updated versions of the national “Dirty List” containing information on employers that the Ministry of Economy has found to be using slave labor, including that of children. The Labor Prosecution Service and the Federal Police also signed a 3-year technical cooperation agreement to combat child labor and forced labor, with the aim of increasing both agencies’ technical capacity, while also providing access to each other’s databases for more efficient information exchange. In addition, national, state, and local governments conducted a wide range of awareness-raising campaigns throughout the year, including a national meeting on combating child labor during which participants collaborated on a coordinating agenda to better promote education and combat child labor. Moreover, the Labor Prosecutor’s Office and the Labor Inspection Unit at the Ministry of Economy promoted the Fourth National Apprenticeship Week, a program that has significantly contributed in reducing child labor in the country, and the Ministry of Social Development in Pernambuco State assisted 8,932 victims of child labor. However, children in Brazil engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture, including in the production of coffee. Although Brazil made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas during the reporting period, prohibitions against child trafficking require the use of threats, violence, coercion, fraud, or abuse to be established for the crime of child trafficking and, therefore, do not meet international labor standards. In addition, there are likely not enough labor inspectors to provide sufficient coverage of the workforce, and local governments lack the capacity to fully implement and monitor the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor, the family stipend program Bolsa Família, and other social protection programs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Brazil engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Children also engage in child labor in agriculture, including in the production of coffee. (4,5) The 2016 National Household Survey, published in November 2017, estimated that 998,000 children ages 5 to 17 engaged in child labor—190,000 children ages 5 to 13, and 808,000 adolescents ages 14 to 17. (6,7) The North and Northeast regions had the highest number of child laborers, with almost half working in agriculture. (6) Table I provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Brazil. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

The overall scope and magnitude of commercial sexual exploitation of children is unknown; however, in 2018, the Federal Highway Police, in collaboration with Childhood Brazil, published a report identifying 2,487 areas along highways in the country where children are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation. According to this report, the states with the highest number of vulnerable areas for commercial sexual exploitation of children are Ceará, Goiás, Pará, Minas Gerais, and Paraná. (1) In addition, the Northeast region was found to have the highest number of vulnerable areas for commercial sexual exploitation of children in the country, followed by the South. (1) Child sex tourism is particularly common in tourist and coastal areas, and girls from other South American countries are also exploited for commercial sex in Brazil. (41)

The ILO and the Labor Prosecution Service (MPT) of Brazil published a report indicating that at least 8,000 children and adolescents in the country were found to be working in the production of cocoa. The study was conducted between July 2017 through June 2018, and aims to expose companies and hold them accountable for their child labor and forced labor violations. (42,43)

Research found that some schools, particularly those in rural areas, are overcrowded, have poor infrastructure, and lack basic resources and teachers. (28,30,44) Although birth registration documents are required for school enrollment under Brazilian law, school registration cannot be denied to children lacking proper documentation. State and municipal governments implement this law and assist vulnerable families with acquiring birth registration documents; however, occasionally there may be delays in processing school registration while children are being registered for birth certificates. (13,45) In 2016, the Senate approved draft legislation that would alter the national Education Law to remove the requirement of birth certificates for school registration. Subsequently, the draft legislation was also approved by the Education Committee in 2018, and by the Constitution, Justice and Citizenship Committee in 2019. The legislation is currently awaiting a final vote in Brazil’s Chamber of Deputies. (13,46,47)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Brazil has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 403 of the Labor Code (48)

Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	17	Article 127 of the Military Service Regulation (54)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 5 of the Military Service Law (55)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Article 4 of the National Education Law (56)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 4 of the National Education Law (56)

In January and October 2019, the government published two new versions of the national “Dirty List,” comprising, respectively, 202 and 190 employers found to be using slave labor by the Ministry of Economy’s Secretariat of Labor Inspection. (57-59)

Prohibitions against child trafficking require the use of threats, violence, coercion, fraud, or abuse to be established for the crime of child trafficking and, therefore, do not meet international labor standards. (51) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (48,56)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Economy that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Economy	Oversees the Special Secretariat of Social Security and Labor, which is responsible for the enforcement of labor laws, including those related to child labor and forced labor. Its Labor Inspection Unit is responsible for conducting announced inspections at sites in which forced labor is suspected, including forced child labor. (13)
Labor Prosecution Service	Prosecutes child labor and forced labor violations by working with prosecutors from its National Committee to Combat Child and Adolescent Labor, an in-house body that coordinates efforts to combat child labor. Collects fines for forced labor violations and allocates funds for initiatives that address child labor and forced labor. (13,60)
Military, Civil, and Federal Police	The Military Police operate at the local level and refer cases to the Civil Police for investigation. The Federal Police work on interstate or international cases and maintain a database to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation. (13) The Federal Highway Police help identify areas where children are at high risk of commercial sexual exploitation. (13,61)
Ministry of Justice and Public Security	Leads efforts to combat human trafficking, and oversees the operations of Advanced Posts (Postos Avançados) and state-run Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento). Provides guidance to federal, state, and local government officials on referrals for victims of human trafficking, including to Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers, Specialized Social Assistance Reference Centers, and NGOs. (13) Nine Postos Avançados operate throughout the country to identify human traffickers and potential victims in high-transit areas, including airports and bus stations. (13)
Special Courts for Childhood and Youth	Oversees legislative issues related to the eradication of child labor, and guarantees the fair and adequate entry of adolescents into the labor force, in compliance with the 1990 Child and Adolescent Statute. Provides protection and care to victims through court psychologists. (13,62)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Economy that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including human resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2018	2019

In 2019, reports indicate that labor inspectors removed 1,040 victims of child labor, and 20 child victims of forced labor. In addition, labor inspectors and the Military Police also rescued eight workers, including two adolescents, subjected to forced labor on a cattle-raising farm in Paraná state. (13) Upon finding children in hazardous working conditions, Ministry of Economy officials immediately remove the children and return them to their families or refer them to social services providers. (65)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Brazil's workforce, which includes approximately 104.2 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Brazil would employ about 6,947 labor inspectors. (66-68)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including holding violators of child labor laws accountable in accordance with the law.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In March and September 2019, the Ministry of Justice launched the fourth and fifth phases of Operation Light in Childhood. State Civil Police investigated the storage, distribution, and production of child pornography and crimes of sexual abuse and exploitation of children via the Internet. (13) During the fourth phase of the operation, 141 suspects were arrested in 133 cities nationwide. Most of these arrests took place in the state of São Paulo, with 61 suspects detained. (13,69) The fifth phase of the operation, which resulted in 39 arrests, was the first phase to include cooperation with regional partners, including Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala. United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement also participated in the operation through several of its domestic offices, and conducted a training session for 30 police officers from the group of regional partners. (13,70)

While the government did not provide comprehensive data on the total number of criminal child labor investigations during the reporting period, the Federal Prosecution Service in the state of Pernambuco found 114 workers, including 13 minors, in forced labor conditions at three cassava flour-production factories. The Federal Police rescued an Ecuadorian girl age 16 from a sewing workshop in São Paulo in which she was found to be working long hours under degrading conditions. (13) In addition, though the number of convictions was not reported for 2019, a perpetrator was convicted for the production and distribution of child pornography, the storage of pornographic material involving children or adolescents, and the practice of sexual exploitation of children or adolescents, and received a sentence of 58 years and 8 months in prison. Despite this one stringent penalty, however, reports indicate that more commonly the judicial system does not sufficiently hold perpetrators accountable for child labor law violations, including forced child labor, which may lead to a sense of impunity among violators. (15,41)

In September 2019, MPT and the Federal Police signed a 3-year cooperation agreement aimed at strengthening efforts to combat slave labor and child labor. The agreement includes technical training and information exchange between each institutions' database. (71) The Judiciary, the Labor Prosecution Service, the Federal Police, and the state police have established databases to track cases of human trafficking for sexual exploitation, however, there is weak coordination of these data collection efforts across the country. (45,72)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Sectoral Commission to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents	Monitors implementation of the National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents. Led by the Ministry of Justice's Special Secretariat for Human Rights (SDH). (73,74) Research was unable to determine whether any activities were undertaken by the Commission during the reporting period.
National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Led by the National Secretariat for Justice within the Ministry of Justice and Public Security. Coordinates activities to address human trafficking and advises the Ministry on public policies related to human trafficking. (41,75) Composed of seven voting members distributed among government and civil society. (41) In 2019, raised awareness on combating child labor through a national campaign. (13)
Inter-Agency Committee to Implement Strategies to Ensure the Protection of Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Coordinates the implementation of policies to protect children's and adolescents' rights, including the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Led by SDH. (76) In 2019, the state of São Paulo's program to eradicate child labor removed 558 children and adolescents from child labor situations throughout the state. (13)
Labor Justice Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Working Adolescents	Coordinates efforts to eliminate child labor and ensure that adolescents have decent work opportunities. (77) Includes 11 representatives from the Superior Labor Court and regional labor courts. (78) In 2019, launched an awareness-raising campaign aimed at addressing the psychological, physical, and social issues faced by victims of child labor. (13)
Anti-Trafficking Coordination Centers (Núcleos de Enfrentamento)	Coordinate activities carried out by local, state, and federal agencies to combat human trafficking. Established in 17 states and the Federal District. (13) During the reporting period, the Anti-Trafficking Coordination Center of São Paulo registered 35 cases of human trafficking, including 3 cases of child trafficking for labor and commercial sexual exploitation involving 6 victims. (41)

In 2019, the government issued a Presidential Decree, based on resource concerns, eliminating the National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor. (13,79) Previously, the responsibility of implementing the National Plan to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor and Protect Adolescent Workers was under the National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor. Since the elimination of the Committee, however, the monitoring and implementation of the plan is led by several entities: the ministries of Education; Citizenship; Women, Family, and Human Rights; Justice and Public Security; Economy; the MPT; and employee associations, the ILO, and the National Forum for the Prevention of Child Labor. (13,80)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including funding and implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents III (2019–2022)	Aims to eradicate child labor by 2025 by increasing access to quality education and pathways for adolescents of minimum working age to enroll in apprenticeship programs. (59,81) In 2019, conducted the Fourth National Apprenticeship Week, including lectures, exhibitions, and public hearings to raise awareness on the benefits of apprenticeships. (13)
National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents (2013–2020)	Identifies strategies to prevent the sexual exploitation of children, protect children's rights, and assist child victims. (74) In 2019, conducted several awareness-raising activities on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (13)
National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking III (2018–2022)	Outlines the government's strategy to address human trafficking. Includes 58 objectives covering six themes: policy and information management, training, accountability, victim assistance and prevention, and public awareness-raising. (41,82) In 2019, conducted several awareness-raising campaigns. (13)

Policy	Description
Federal Pact for the Eradication of Forced Labor	Aims to establish a database on forced labor to share research and data, create state-level commissions to combat forced labor, and strengthen inter-agency coordination. Led by SDH, and currently signed by 23 of the 27 states. (65,83,84) In 2019, Paraná and the Federal District announced their intention to establish their own state-level commissions. (41)
National Education Plan (2014–2024)	Aims to expand access to education and improve the quality of education. Plans to allocate 10 percent of Brazil's gross domestic product to public education by 2024. (85) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Education Plan during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (86,87)

Research found that greater resources are needed to ensure adequate implementation of the National Education Plan. (88,89)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to assist child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Program to Eradicate Child Labor (Programa de Erradicação do Trabalho Infantil [PETI])†	Ministry of Citizenship (MOC) social assistance program that combats child labor through awareness-raising activities, victim identification and protection, and conditional cash transfers. (90,91) To receive program benefits, family participants must ensure that children are not working and maintain at least 85 percent school attendance. (92) In 2019, assisted 8,932 children and adolescents found in child labor situations. (13)
Family Stipend (Bolsa Família)†	MOC program that provides families living in poverty and extreme poverty with cash transfers. (93,94) During the reporting period, 14 million families participating in Bolsa Família received messages addressing the dangers of child labor. (13,95)
Specialized Social Assistance Reference Centers†	MOC program that provides vulnerable populations, including victims of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation, with psychological, social, and legal services. (96) The results of a national census indicate that 143 centers have been opened since 2017, a number of which were opened during the reporting period. (97-99)
South-South Cooperation Projects†	Government of Brazil-funded projects implemented by ILO to combat child labor and promote South-South cooperation. (100) In 2019, the government, along with 24 representative countries, met in Lima to exchange good practices and strengthen the regional voice and collective action against child labor. (45)
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded, $2 million project implemented by Verité in Brazil, Colombia, and Mexico to develop tools for businesses to establish systems to prevent, detect, and combat child and forced labor in coffee supply chains. (101) For additional information, please see our website.

† Program is funded by the Government of Brazil.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (102-107)

During the reporting period, in light of the influx of Venezuelan refugees in the country, the state of Amazonas initiated a project to map incidents of child labor in the indigenous and non-indigenous Venezuelan population. The purpose of the project was to connect those lacking proper documentation to the appropriate social assistance services. (13) Numerous awareness-raising campaigns were conducted throughout the reporting year by national, state, and local governments, including a national meeting on combating child labor attended by students, civil society, international institutions, the justice system, State Labor Prevention and Eradication Forums, and regional educational committees. (13) During the event, a coordination plan was created through the collaboration of the participants to promote education and to strengthen efforts to combat child labor, including by increasing communication strategies with society and influencing political will. (108) Moreover, in June 2019, the Bahia State Secretariat of Justice, Human Rights, and Social Development, along with the Bahian NGO Mãe da Terra (Mother Earth Institute), developed a project, named “Childhood and Labor: New Intervention Alternatives,” to prevent child labor throughout the state. The project, which concluded in September, provided training to municipal guard officials, military police officers, community health workers, and others on the topics of diversity, childhood development, and public security. (13,109)

Because the National Program to Eradicate Child Labor is decentralized, municipal governments are responsible for implementation and monitoring, and must report back to state and federal governments. Challenges include responding to the needs of program participants, complex local contexts and geographic areas, excessive program requirements, and high staff turnover. (45) In 2019, many municipalities and states suffered from delays in funding for Bolsa Família due to budget issues. (45) In addition, many states reported a lack of resources to adequately assist victims of human trafficking, and research found a lack of specialized shelters for child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (28,35)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Brazil (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists in the British Virgin Islands, in 2019 the government made no advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The British Virgin Islands does not have a list of hazardous work prohibited for children and does not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in the British Virgin Islands. (1-3) Table I provides one key indicator on children's education in the British Virgin Islands. Data on other key indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table I. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2017, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (4) All other data were unavailable from International Labor Organization's analysis, 2020. (5)

The cost of uniforms, books, and lunches prevents some children from attending school. In addition, violence in schools can deter children from attending. (2,4) Children not in school may be vulnerable to engage in child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

British Overseas Territories (BOTs) recognize the jurisdiction and sovereignty of the United Kingdom (UK), but are not constitutionally part of the UK. They are self-governing, except in the areas of foreign affairs and defense. (1) Domestic UK law does not generally apply unless explicitly extended to the British Virgin Islands. (1) Under Article 35(4) of the ILO Constitution, when the UK ratifies a Convention, the Territory must consider if it will accept the Convention. (1) If the Convention is accepted, it is considered applicable to that territory. (1) The following Convention has been extended to the British Virgin Islands. The British Virgin Islands has accepted one of them (Table 2).

Table 2. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government of the British Virgin Islands has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 3). However, gaps exist in the British Virgin Islands' legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including prohibition of using children in illicit activities.

* No conscription (11)

† No standing military (11)

In the British Virgin Islands, the Labor Code specifies that hazardous work is to be defined by the Minister of Labor, but the Minister of Labor has not defined hazardous work for children. (1,3,12) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (6,9,10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor. However, in the British Virgin Islands, the UK government has established an institutional mechanism for the enforcement of labor laws (Table 4).

Table 4. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforces labor laws and collects data and statistics on violations of the Labor Code. (6)

In the British Virgin Islands, the Ministry of Labor proactively plans and conducts labor inspections. There is one labor inspector who assesses penalties for labor law violations. (3,13) The labor inspector may assess penalties for labor law violations during the initial inspection and is permitted to conduct unannounced inspections. The existence of only one labor inspector is a barrier to uncovering additional violations; however, the British Virgin Islands makes the most use of its single labor inspector by conducting annual inspections on newly established businesses and work sites or those reported by employees or other stakeholders for possible violations. (3) Most inspections occurred on the islands of Tortola and Virgin Gorda. A total of 231 inspections were conducted during the reporting period. (3) While none were specific to child labor, inspectors reported no derogatory observations on child labor. (13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor. However, the Government of the British Virgin Islands has established child protection programs promoting children's rights, which may contribute to the prevention of child labor. (14,15)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the continued prevention of child labor in the British Virgin Islands (Table 5).

Table 5. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Determine the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.	2012 – 2019
	Ensure that the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs, is criminally prohibited.	2015 – 2019
	Ensure that the law criminally prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.	2016 – 2019
	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2019
Social Programs	Collect and publish data on the extent and nature of child labor to inform policies and programs.	2019
	Ensure that all children can attend school by eliminating prohibitive school costs and violence in schools.	2018 – 2019

In 2019, Burkina Faso made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government adopted a National Strategy to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor and a National Strategy for Children Protection. However, children in Burkina Faso engage in the worst forms of child labor, including farming and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in cotton harvesting. The Labor Code does not identify the activities in which children may engage in light work. The government also did not release information on its criminal and labor enforcement efforts and lacked resources for the enforcement of child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burkina Faso engage in the worst forms of child labor, including farming and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burkina Faso.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	42.1 (2,116,752)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	41.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	21.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		65.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2018, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (5)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Enquête Démographique et de Santé et à Indicateurs Multiples, 2010. (6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting, weeding, and harvesting crops, including cotton (1,3,4,7,8) Raising and herding† livestock, including cattle and goats (1,9,10)
Industry	Artisanal mining† of gold, including digging† and crushing† rock, installing dynamite,† working underground,† carrying water and other heavy loads,† and using cyanide† and mercury† (4,7,8,10-18) Quarrying† and transporting heavy loads† while working to extract granite (19,20) Working in carpentry† and construction (9,10)
Services	Domestic work (2,4,9,10,21) Street work, including vending† (2,9,10,19,22)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking ‡(2,4,23) Farming, including production of cotton and livestock raising, domestic work, begging, gold mining, and quarrying, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,4,24) Forced begging in unregistered, thus illegal, Koranic schools (4)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burkina Faso is a destination, transit point, and source for child trafficking to and from other West African countries. Child trafficking also occurs within Burkina Faso. (2,4,25-27) Child labor in artisanal gold mining is particularly acute and often exposes children to dangerous chemicals such as cyanide and mercury used in the gold extraction process. (1,2,7,28-30) Burkina Faso is the third-largest producer of cotton in Africa, with a reported 250,000 children involved extensively in the production of cotton, primarily on small family farms. (31) Children involved in the production of cotton are exposed to many health risks, including exposure to pesticides, injury from the use of sharp tools, animal bites, and respiratory issues due to the inhalation of cotton dust. (3) In addition, terrorist attacks and mass displacement of people in the north and east of the country resulted in an estimated 765,000 internally displaced persons by February 2020, including a large number of vulnerable children. (4,31,32) In the reporting period, nongovernmental groups recruited children to armed conflict and the government does not have a system in place to handover these children and reintegrate them into society. (33)

Although the Law Orienting the Education System mandates free education until age 16, the costs of uniforms, school-related fees, teacher shortages, and school infrastructure shortfalls in rural areas hinder children's access to education. (34,35) According to Minister of Education Ouaro as of January 30, 2020, there were 2,369 closed schools, affecting 325,245 students and 10,048 teachers with 623 damaged schools. (33) During the reporting period, the government worked with the UNHCR to deploy mobile courts to remote villages to issue birth certificates and national identity documents to qualified citizens. (32) About a quarter of children under age 5 in Burkina Faso lack a birth certificate. Birth certificates are required to attend school, so many of these children remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor. (32,36) To address the problem, the government periodically organized registration drives and issued belated birth certificates. (33)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Burkina Faso has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 152 of the Labor Code; Order Deviating the Age of Admission to Employment (37,38)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 149–150 of the Labor Code; Article 1 of the Hazardous Work List (37,39)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3–6 of the Hazardous Work List; Article 77 of the Mining Code (37-40)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 5 and 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3–5 of the Law Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography; Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking of Persons and Similar Practices (37,41,42)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 1–5 and 14–15 of the Law on Combating Trafficking of Persons and Similar Practices (37,42)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3–4, 7–10, and 20 of the Law Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (37,41)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code (37)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	20	Article 2 of the Decree Organizing Operations Related to Convoking the Contingent (43)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Articles 153 and 424 of the Labor Code (37)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Law Orienting the Education System (35)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 6 of the Law Orienting the Education System (35)

* No conscription (44)

The light work provisions in the Labor Code are not sufficiently specific to prevent children from involvement in child labor, because activities in which light work may be permitted are not identified in legislation. (37,38)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS)	Enforces labor laws, including child labor laws and laws on the worst forms of child labor, and establishes a government policy to combat child labor. (45)
Ministry of Women, National Solidarity, and Family (MFSNF)	Removes children from exploitative child labor, provides reintegration services through its mobile unit for intervention, and works with local village surveillance committees on awareness-raising efforts through participation in joint routine inspections with MFPTSS, the lead agency on child labor law enforcement. (46) Operates a free hotline to report child abuse. Maintains civil registry offices in maternity wards to register newborn babies. (47) Uses its National Council for Childhood to oversee all policies for the survival, protection, development, and participation of children in broader policy initiatives. (48)
Ministry of Territorial Administration, Decentralization, and Interior Security (MATDSI)	Oversees criminal cases involving children and women, which are referred to the Ministry of Justice for prosecution, through its Morals Brigade in the MATDSI National Police Force. (49,50) Assists MFPTSS through joint routine inspections related to child labor in the course of actions against traffickers. (46)
Ministry of Justice	Appoints one or more judges who specialize in child protection issues to each high court to oversee juvenile court cases. Collaborates with MFSNF social workers in charge of child protection to conduct investigations on behalf of vulnerable children, including victims of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, exploitative child labor, and begging. (51)
Parliamentary Network for the Promotion of Child Rights	Trains government officials on children's rights, including child labor laws and other issues affecting children. (52)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat child labor (Table 6).

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Labor Inspectorate Funding	$126,000 (29)	Unknown

Unannounced Inspections Conducted	Yes (29)	Unknown
Complaint Mechanism Exists	Yes (29)	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (29)	Yes (4)

Research indicates the labor inspectorate lacks adequate resources to enforce labor laws throughout the country, including the human and financial resources needed to carry out a sufficient number of preliminary labor inspections and follow-up inspections to ensure remediation of notices as part of labor law compliance. (27,29)

Labor inspectors collaborate on an ad hoc basis with the Ministry of Women, National Solidarity, and Family (MFSNF) to provide social services to child labor victims. (34,54) It is unknown how many cases of child labor are identified as a result of complaints made to the MFSNF hotline. (44,53) Furthermore, the MFPTSS publishes an annual report listing 12 types of labor infractions; however, none relate to child labor. (22)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including inconsistent application of victim identification and referral procedures by authorities and frontline responders.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (29)	Unknown
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A (29)	N/A

Number of Convictions	Unknown (29)	Unknown
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (27)	Unknown
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (29)	Unknown

Although the government has standard victim identification and referral procedures, authorities and frontline responders do not apply them uniformly. (27,29,55) In 2019, the Ministry of Security trained 250 police officers and gendarmes on the prevention of violence against children, in particular on child trafficking, the sale of children, child prostitution, and child pornography. (4) The government does not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Committee for the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CNC-PAN/PFTE)	Supervises, evaluates, and oversees implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Chaired by the MFPTSS Directorate to Combat Child Labor and Its Worst Forms. Includes representatives from various civil society organizations, 24 government ministries, and 6 observers from donor countries and international NGOs. (10,22) Research was unable to determine whether CNC-PAN/PFTE was active during the reporting period.
MFPTSS Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Coordinates and leads interagency efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms; collects information on child labor; and conducts awareness-raising activities. Serves as the Secretariat for CNC-PAN/PFTE. (56) Research was unable to determine whether the Directorate was active during the reporting period.
National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices (CNVS)	Coordinates actions at the national level to combat the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking. Oversees Committees for Vigilance and Surveillance in each of the regions. (25) MFSNF serves as president and MATDSI is vice president. Includes representatives from MFPTSS, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Women and Gender, and NGOs. (25) Research was unable to determine whether the National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance was active during the reporting period.
Child Protection Networks	Assist CNVS with coordinating and facilitating the collection of statistical data on human trafficking, specifically the trafficking of women and children. Established by MFSNF, the Networks comprise social workers, magistrates, judges, police officers, health workers, and NGOs in 23 of the country's 45 provinces. (57) Research was unable to determine whether the Child Protection Networks were active during the reporting period.
Cooperative Agreements with other Countries*	Aim to combat cross-border trafficking in children. The government signed a cooperative agreement with Côte d'Ivoire in July 2019, and with Benin and Togo in December 2019. (4)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Poor coordination among ministries and a lack of resources, such as computers and electricity, continued to hamper the government's ability to coordinate efforts to fully address child trafficking. (29,30)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2019–2023)†	Aims to combat the worst forms of child labor in Burkina Faso. (4)
National Strategy for Children Protection in Burkina Faso (2020–2024)†	Aims to strengthen the institutional, community, and family environment in order to ensure effective protection for children. (58)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2019, the government adopted the National Strategy to End the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2019–2023) but research was unable to find a publicly available version of the policy. (4) In addition, the National Program of Economic and Social Development included aspects that address child labor elimination and prevention strategies, such as an objective to halve the number of street children by 2020 through the enforcement of existing law. (29,59)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Program for the Fight Against Child Labor on Artisanal Gold Mining Sites and Quarries (2015–2019)†	MFSNF program that aimed to prevent and withdraw children from working in artisanal gold mines as part of the government's efforts to eliminate child labor in mining by 2025. (25,47,54,60,61) Sought to strengthen child protection systems, improve coordination among stakeholders, and implement existing legislation. Builds on the previous project (2009–2013) that aimed to eliminate child labor in mines and quarries. (54) Approximately $42.9 million (40 percent of the program costs) was provided by the government. (47) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Program for the Fight Against Child Labor on Artisanal Gold Mining Sites and Quarries during the reporting period.
USDOL-Funded Programs	Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II), a capacity-building project implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders. (33) Active in six countries to build local and national capacity of the governments to address child labor. In April 2019, CLEAR II held its final training. (62–64) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
MFSNF Projects to Combat Human Trafficking†	Programs aim to combat human trafficking through the operation of transit centers that provide food, medical assistance, and counseling to child trafficking victims and children vulnerable to trafficking. (25,26,55) Transit centers aim to reintegrate victims into their communities and facilitate repatriation of foreign victims when possible. (49) The National Parenting Program assists parents in managing and educating their children to combat child trafficking. (25,57) Nationwide media campaigns to combat human trafficking provide advocacy, raise awareness, and build capacity for key actors involved in child protection issues, including child trafficking. (25,57) Watchdog and monitoring committees ensure that all cases of alleged trafficking of children are reported to the justice system by social workers. (65) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement these programs during the reporting period.
Campaign to Remove Street Children	Project funded by NGO MinWomen, with coordination by the Ministry of Women, Family, and Humanitarian Action, that began in August 2018 and includes outreach missions in the streets to identify and refer vulnerable children, including forced begging victims, to one of the four youth shelters established in the Somgande, Basjuy, Nongremassom, and Cissin districts of Ouagadougou. (27,29) In September 2019, conducted the second annual operation to remove children begging on the streets and provide them with psycho-social support, food, and medical assistance. As a result, 1,578 children were given support and 646 were permanently removed from the street. (4)
World Bank-Funded Projects	Includes a $51 million Education Access and Quality Improvement Project to support the government in increasing access to preschool education in the two poorest regions and secondary education in the five poorest regions, and improve teaching and education; and a $50 million Social Safety Net Project to provide income support to poor households and lay the foundation for a basic safety net system in Burkina Faso. (66,67) During the reporting period, the Social Safety Net Project was restructured to add additional funds and extend the closing date until 2020. (68) During the reporting period, the World Bank Education Access and Quality Improvement Project had reach 121,575 persons, above their targeted goal. The program was originally scheduled to close in 2019, but was extended to July 31, 2020. (69)

† Program is funded by the Government of Burkina Faso.

Although Burkina Faso has social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in the production of cotton and in gold mining, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. (2) However, the government converted some abandoned buildings into schools to allow displaced students to finish out the school year. (71)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Burkina Faso (Table 11).

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2019, Burma is receiving an assessment of no advancement. During the reporting period, the government enacted the Child Rights Law and established the National Committee for the Rights of the Child to institute the policies, guidelines, and measures needed to implement the law. It also ratified the United Nation’s Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict and, in April 2019, released the results of the Labor Force Survey. Furthermore, the recruitment of children into the national armed forces for use in armed conflict declined markedly in 2019, due to positive steps taken by the government to work towards fully eliminating the recruitment of children into the national military. In June 2020, the United Nations delisted the national military for the violation of use and recruitment of child soldiers from Annex 1 of the annual Secretary General’s Report on Children and Armed Conflict. Despite these commendable efforts, however, Burma is receiving an assessment of no advancement because the national armed forces continued to force civilians, including at least 197 children, to work as porters, cleaners, cooks, and agricultural laborers in the conflict areas of Kachin, Rakhine, and Shan states during the reporting period, and made no known efforts to hold criminally accountable those military personnel involved in these practices. Children in Burma engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced recruitment and use in armed conflict by non-state armed groups and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The vulnerability of Rohingya children to the worst forms of child labor also increased as many were denied access to education through government restrictions on their movement. Penalties for recruitment and use of children by the military or for the military’s use of civilian populations for forced labor are not sufficient for the seriousness of the crime, and the government did not publish information on criminal law enforcement efforts to investigate, prosecute, and convict cases involving the worst forms of child labor. Although the government provided anecdotal information on criminal law enforcement efforts to investigate, prosecute, and convict cases involving child labor through Facebook and the national media in 2019, it did not regularly publish comprehensive statistics on its efforts to address such crimes.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burma engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in armed conflict and commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Table I provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Burma.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2019, the UN Country Task Force for Monitoring and Reporting (CTFMR) on Grave Violations Against Children identified eight cases of recruitment and use of children under the age of 18 into the Burmese national military for combat roles. (31,34) In previous years, the national military used force and coercion to recruit children, and research indicates that these practices continued during the reporting period; however, the national military has cooperated with the UN efforts to eliminate this process, centralize recruiting, and initiate a “benefit of the doubt” policy in the recruitment process. (32,34,35) Civilian brokers with military connections sometimes facilitate the entry into the military of underage recruits, in some instances bypassing standard age verification procedures. (3,13,34,36) In prior years, children were reported as having been used on the front lines as combatants. (3,34) The national military’s “self-reliance” policy, which requires military forces to provide their own food and labor from local communities, has led to some units using civilians, including children, to porter goods, cook, and clean barracks in conflict areas. (3,34) During the reporting period, research indicated that children continued to work in these types of support roles, including 197 children found to be working for low-level national military officials in Rakhine and Kachin States. (3,32,34)

The national military agreed to apply the principle of the “benefit of the doubt,” which states that when the age of a recruit cannot be definitively verified, the person is discharged. Research indicated that the national military adhered to this principle and during the reporting period it released 59 individuals whose ages could not be definitively verified. (31,34) As of April 2020, the national military had released 1,000 children, in accordance with the 2012 Joint Action Plan with the UN - which aims to end all government recruitment and use of children in its national military - including 54 children from April 1, 2019-March 31, 2020. (13,34,37,38,) The national military announced that it had taken disciplinary action against 18 military personnel, including 10 military officers and 8 non-commissioned military personnel, for recruitment of child soldiers from April 1, 2019-March 31, 2020 under Section 65 of the Defense Services Act and Defense Services Rules of 1960. Since the CTFMR was signed in 2012, the military has prosecuted and convicted 65 commissioned and non-commissioned officers for the recruitment of children into the national military. (31,34)

The Border Guard Police continued to use children to perform unspecified labor during the reporting period. (3) Children were also recruited and used in armed conflict by non-state armed groups, including the Kachin Independence Army, the Karen National Liberation Army, the Shan State Progress Party/Shan State Army, the Ta’ang National Liberation Army, and the United Wa State Army. (31,36)

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In a positive development, the UN Secretary General's Report on Children and Armed Conflict noted that due to "continued significant decrease in [the] recruitment of children into the military, ongoing prosecutions, and an agreement to continue to trace and release cases identified in previous years," the United Nations recommended that the Burmese national military be delisted for the violation of use and recruitment of child soldiers. (31,34)

Although there were no reports of child labor in the garment sector during the reporting period, the Confederation of Trade Unions of Myanmar reported that children use falsified documentation to obtain labor cards, which are needed to get work. NGOs reported that Burmese girls are trafficked to Burma's border with China for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. (2) There are also reports from the Myanmar Industry, Craft, and Services Union of children involved in commercial sexual exploitation along the borders of Kachin and Shan States. (2) Children living in refugee and internally displaced persons (IDP) camps are at increased vulnerability to sex and labor trafficking. (2,13)

The recruitment of young women, including girls, under false pretenses of getting a high-paying job in China only to be sold into forced marriages with indicators of sex and labor exploitation, is a common human trafficking trend in the country. (13,34) Traffickers often pose as recruiters and provide the necessary travel documents, sometimes including false birth certificates. (13) Furthermore, NGOs noted that children, in particular boys, in Shan, Karen, and Kachin States, and along the Thai-Myanmar border are used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking. (2)

Since August 2017, an estimated 728,000 people, primarily from the Rohingya minority, have fled from Burma to Bangladesh following acts of violence and ethnic cleansing perpetuated by the military in northern Rakhine State. (3,39-41) While the displacement of Rohingya people abated in 2018, conditions in Rakhine State were not conducive to the safe and voluntary return of refugees from Bangladesh in 2019. (3,40) As a result, an estimated 350,000 Rohingya children live in refugee camps in Bangladesh, at sites in which they are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (13,40,42) Rohingya girls are trafficked from refugee camps for commercial sexual exploitation in Bangladesh, India, and Nepal. (3,43) In some cases, girls are promised jobs in domestic service, but are instead forced into commercial sexual exploitation. (43,44) There are also reports that some girls are forced into domestic service, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and are abused by their employers. (44-47) Rohingya children recruited to work outside of the refugee camps, such as in shops, fishing, and transportation, are reported to be underpaid or unpaid, unable to communicate with their families, and subjected to excessive working hours. (45)

Rohingya children internally displaced by the ethnic violence in northern Rakhine State are at increased risk to the worst forms of child labor due to a lack of access to education. Approximately 129,000 people, including children, were forced to reside in IDP camps in central Rakhine State. (40,48) Government restrictions on the movement of Rohingya in these IDP camps limit children's access to basic services, including education. (32,36,40) Furthermore, schools in Rohingya villages in Maungdaw, Rathedaung, and Buthidaung townships where the 2017 ethnic cleansing occurred have not re-opened. (48,49) Meanwhile, the government expects dozens of schools for ethnic Rakhine children in these townships to remain closed for the 2020-2021 school year due to continued fighting between the national military and an ethnic-Rakhine insurgent group. This conflict has displaced nearly 70,000 people, mostly ethnic Rakhine, into IDP camps in 2019 and 2020. (48)

Rohingya children throughout Rakhine State face severe restrictions on attending school due to discriminatory government policies and practices adopted following the 2012 riots and violent clashes between ethnic Rakhine and Rohingya communities. (50) Local officials and school authorities typically ban Rohingya children from attending government schools with ethnic Rakhine children. (50,51) The government also imposed severe movement restrictions on Rohingya, making it difficult for children to access schools outside of their IDP camps, villages, or townships. (40,48,52) These restrictions particularly affect Rohingya children ages 10 to 17 because they must travel to attend middle school and high school. (51-53) Many Rohingya children also lack the documentation that is required to attend middle schools and high schools in Rakhine State because the government denies them citizenship or officials refuse to register their household residency. (2,32,54,55) Since 2018, the government has forced over 13,000 Rohingya to accept National Verification Cards in Rakhine State, including over 500 children. However, naturalized citizens are not afforded full rights like those granted to full citizens, including the ability to run for high office or form political parties. (3,32,36,48,56) In November 2019, the government finalized a new national strategy on the closure of IDP camps and the resettlement of IDPs. (13)

Rohingya children’s access to primary schools in their villages is limited due to a lack of schools, particularly in IDP camps, movement restrictions, and teacher absenteeism in Muslim villages due to security concerns. (48,57,58) Burmese law only guarantees education for Burmese citizens, and citizenship rates in Rohingya communities are extremely low. (48) In addition to Rakhine State, children throughout Burma face barriers to education, such as long distances to schools and expenses that include uniforms, books, transportation, and “extra fees” charged by teachers and schools. (1,15,25,44,59)

Refugee children and children from ethnic communities who speak different languages often face barriers in schools because the curriculum is taught in Burmese. (2,36,44) To address this specific issue, the Ministry of Education is working on an equivalency program that will allow students to sit for exams. Furthermore, there is no law that requires the school curriculum to be taught in Burmese. (2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Burma has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

On June 8, 2020, the government ratified ILO C.138, becoming the 173rd ILO member state to ratify. (60,113) The government also ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict. (2,13,31,61-63) As the protocol extends to non-state armed groups, the government filed declarations under Article 3(2) and Article (4) of the protocol to allow for implementation that reflects domestic realities on the ground, namely that the government does not take responsibility for non-state armed groups’ adherence to the new protocol. (61,62)

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burma’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including criminally prohibiting child trafficking consistent with international standards and comprehensively identifying the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.

* No conscription (75)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (67,76)

During the reporting period, the government enacted the Child Rights Law, which prohibits the recruitment of children under the age of 18 into non-state armed groups and mandates the creation of a hazardous work list to replace the existing sector-specific lists; however, its implementing regulations for the law and the new hazardous work list have yet to be promulgated. It is expected that they will be published at the same time. (2,13,55,66) In addition, the government began drafting a law in 2019 on domestic workers that will address child labor issues in that sector, including the allowable age to enter into employment as a domestic worker. (2,13,44,77)

During the reporting period, with support from IOM, the Ministry of Home Affairs and the Myanmar Police Force drafted a new anti-trafficking in persons law that is currently awaiting approval. (13) The law, if approved, removes the requirement to demonstrate force, fraud, or coercion in order to constitute a child trafficking offense, and will allow for assets and proceeds found during trafficking in persons cases to be seized. (13,78)

The 2019 Child Rights Law established age 14 as the minimum age for work with some sector-specific laws identifying activities that are prohibited for children under age 18. (65,66,68) Furthermore, the 2019 Child Rights Law raised the minimum age for hazardous work from age 16 up to age 18, putting it in compliance with international standards. (66)

Burma

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Under the 2019 Child Rights Law, Burma now meets international standards in the prohibition of commercial sexual exploitation of children. (66) However, the legal framework does not sufficiently prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, as there are no criminal penalties associated with the use, procuring, and offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. (12,66,72)

Children in Burma are required to attend school only up to age 10. This standard leaves children ages 10 through 13 vulnerable to child labor since they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work. (67,76)

The Occupational Safety and Health Bill was signed into law in 2019, but has yet to be implemented because the regulation bylaws are still being drafted. The bill expands the legal jurisdiction of the labor inspectorate to include additional industries, such as agriculture and construction. (77,79-81)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief, and Resettlement that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Immigration, and Population (MOLIP), Factories and General Labor Laws Inspection Department (FGLLID)	Inspects factories, shops, and establishments for child labor law violations. (64,65)
Myanmar Police Force (MPF), Anti-Trafficking in Persons Division (ATIPD)	Investigates trafficking in persons crimes and engages in human trafficking prevention efforts through its 32 regional Anti-Trafficking Task Forces. (13,83) Oversees three specialized Child Protection Units in Rangoon, Mandalay, and Naypyidaw. (83) Staffed by 465 personnel, including 408 staff and 57 commissioned officers. Operates a 24/7 hotline dedicated to reporting human trafficking cases. (13) Increased the number of offices from 22 in 2018 to 60 in 2019. (2,77) Created nine new child protection squads overseen by the Child Protection Units in Yangon, Mandalay, and Naypyidaw with special remit to address the worst forms of child labor, including handling investigations. (13,77,84) Also in 2019, conducted survivor roundtables to collect feedback from victims. (13) Provided 80 trafficking in persons trainings that reached 11,388 officers. (13)
Ministry of Defense, Committee for the Prevention of Military Recruitment of Underage Children	Sanctions perpetrators that recruit or use children in the armed forces. (85)
Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief, and Resettlement – Department of Social Welfare, Department of Rehabilitation, and Department of Disaster	The Department of Social Welfare provides social services for children rescued from human trafficking and forced labor. (2,13,77,83) Responsible for implementing the child protection policy. (48,86) Offices in 100 townships. (3,13) Covers cases of juvenile justice, child soldiers, and children in armed conflict. Receives cases from the MPF. (2) During the reporting period, launched a working group to begin drafting the implementing regulations for the Child Rights Law and to draft a child protection policy, with UNICEF assisting on both tasks. (2) During the reporting period, increased the number of case managers to 188, up from 27 in 2015. (2,13) The Department of Rehabilitation was created in late 2018. (2) Responsible for running state-managed facilities and temporary shelters. (48,87) Covers cases of child trafficking and cases of long-term rehabilitation. (2) Provides rehabilitation services to children discharged from the military and victims of child trafficking. (2,13,77) Actively collaborates with the Ministry of Defense to verify documentation when child labor complaints are received. Expected to expand their work to non-state armed groups in 2020. (2) During the reporting period, provided rehabilitation and reintegration services for 16 cases from Thailand and 55 cases from China, all related to child trafficking. (3,84) In addition, provided rehabilitation and reintegration services in five cases of children being trafficked internally during the reporting period. (2,84) Increased the number of staff from 72 in 2018 to 202 by January 2020. Between April and December 2019, provided reintegration support to 38 former child soldiers. (13) The Department of Disaster provides emergency assistance for the victims of natural disasters for ensuring immediate relief. Conducts preventive measures to reduce the loss of lives and properties due to disasters, such as providing assistance to internally displaced persons – including children - due to armed conflict and social conflict. (34,48)

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

During the reporting period, the Central Body for the Suppression of Trafficking in Persons (CBTIP) conducted anti-trafficking awareness-raising activities that reached over 2 million people, including 34,289 students. (22,34)

In 2019, the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief, and Resettlement, in coordination with UNICEF and Save the Children, formed a taskforce to update the country's case management systems. The taskforce established terms of reference and began drafting standard operating procedures for case management with the goal of improving and standardizing the quality of social services provided by the government. (2) The draft is expected to be completed in early 2020. (2)

To combat administrative corruption within ministries, the Anti-Corruption Commission formed Corruption Prevention Units (CPU) in 14 ministries, including the Ministry of Labor, Immigration, and Population (MOLIP) and the Ministry of Home Affairs (MOHA), to enable recipients of government services to report corruption-related complaints, including complaints related to the worst forms of child labor. (84) In addition, the Anti-Corruption Commission launched a CPU toolkit mechanism for use on mobile phone messages to recipients of government services to check the effectiveness, timeliness, and efficiency of services provided. (13)

During the reporting period, the ATIPD remained hampered by resource constraints and limited training, resulting in areas of the country continuing to lack sufficient coverage. (2,13)

In addition, the Department of Social Welfare continued to lack a sufficient number of case managers to cover the entire country. Despite an increase in the number of case managers hired during the reporting period, case managers still had to cover two or more townships, in some instances, causing delays in case management services. (2,13,34) Furthermore, the Department of Rehabilitation lacks sufficient human resources to provide reintegration support. (13)

Furthermore, the Factories and General Labor Laws Inspection Department (FGLLID) is only mandated to inspect for child labor in manufacturing establishments and factories as laid out in the Factories Law (1951) and the Shops and Establishment Law (2016). This leaves certain sectors, including agriculture, mining, and fishing – where child labor is reported to occur – outside of the purview of the FGLLID. (2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Burma took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of MOLIP that may hinder adequate child labor law enforcement, including the lack of publicly available enforcement information and an inadequate number of labor inspectors.

During the reporting period, the Factories and General Labor Laws Inspection Department (FGLLID) conducted 1,635 awareness-raising seminars on labor laws, including child labor prohibitions, for 49,786 workers. In addition, government officials from MOHA, General Administration Department, MOLIP, Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock, and Irrigations, and the Anti-Trafficking Police unit received training on coercion and forced overtime, as they relate to issues of child labor. (2,34)

Despite having the authority to conduct unannounced inspections, labor unions noted that, in practice, factory owners are often given advanced notice that an inspection will occur. In addition, research indicated that there is a greater focus on the quantity of inspections rather than the quality, with complaints that labor inspectors talk to factory owners and supervisors rather than workers. (2)

NGOs noted that funding for the labor inspectorate is insufficient to cover transportation and equipment for labor inspectors, which discourages inspections of remote establishments. (2) An NGO also noted that when a complaint is filed by a worker, inspections often are not conducted in a timely manner. (2) Research indicated that the FGLLID does not consistently enforce labor laws when a violation is found, as there were instances during the reporting period for which fines were not imposed after a company official complained about receiving a violation. (2,12) Due to capacity and resource constraints, the FGLLID also has limited data on its own labor market, including the number of factories and basic resources such as furniture for labor inspector offices. (2,89)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Burma's workforce, which includes approximately 22 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Burma would employ about 558 inspectors. (75,90,91)

The government did not provide information on its labor law enforcement efforts, including labor inspectorate funding, initial training for labor inspectors, training on new laws related to child labor, the number of labor inspections conducted at worksites, and the number of targeted routine inspections.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burma took actions to combat the worst forms of child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the Burmese military's practices that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including the lack of publicly available data on enforcement efforts.

In December 2019, 70 prosecutors from the Union Attorney General’s Office received specialized training from the U.S. Department of Justice on how to prosecute trafficking in persons cases, including child trafficking. Those trained will serve as “Trafficking in Persons Coordinators” in each of the country’s prosecutorial districts, and act as the primary point of contact on all trafficking in persons cases, including coordinating with civil society, victims, and criminal law enforcement officials on the prosecution of cases. (13,84)

During the reporting period, the government dishonorably discharged a commissioned military officer who is currently in jail awaiting trial in a civilian court for facilitating the human trafficking of a young girl to China to marry a Chinese man. (13) From April 1, 2019 through December 2019, courts reached a verdict in 66 cases involving 163 alleged human trafficking perpetrators, including 89 individuals who were convicted and sentenced to more than 10 years in prison. (34) This included the conviction and life imprisonment of seven people for trafficking seven girls in a Chinese bride trafficking scheme. (13,34)

In 2019, the UN Special Envoy to Myanmar noted that, due to the efforts of the government to utilize enhanced screening protocols of recruits, cases specifically involving recruitment and use of children in the military were reduced to single digits. (2,13) While the government continued training its personnel on age verification at recruitment centers, insufficient identity document access and security issues continued to present challenges to the full prevention of the recruitment of children. (3,34,36,83) While the national military has taken action against national military officials for these crimes, the penalties imposed on members of the military for recruiting and using child soldiers are not commensurate with the seriousness of these crimes. (3,34,35) In past years, most of these cases reportedly culminated in reprimands, demotions, relocations, fines, or decreases in pensions, penalties significantly less than those prescribed by criminal law, which mandates prison sentences. (2,3,93)

The government did not provide information on whether training on new laws related to the worst forms of child labor or refresher courses were provided during the reporting period. (2,34)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including coordination among agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Rights of the Child*	Institutes policies, guidelines, and measures needed to implement the Child Rights Law of 2019. (66) Chaired by the Minister of Social Welfare, Relief, and Resettlement. Creates and oversees Local Committees for the Rights of the Child, which are mandated to submit progress reports on functions and duties concerning the implementation of the Child Rights Law. (66)
UN Country Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting (CTFMR) on Grave Violations Against Children & the Committee for the Prevention of Grave Violations Against Children in Armed Conflicts*	UN Country Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting (CTFMR) on Grave Violations Against Children coordinates with the government to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children in Burma’s armed forces. (94) Operates a hotline for reporting cases of child soldiering. (13) Co-chaired by the UN and UNICEF, members include Save the Children, World Vision, and relevant UN agencies, such as the ILO. Mandated by UN Security Council Resolution 1612 in response to children in Burma being subjected to grave violations, including the recruitment and use of children as soldiers. (2,94) During the reporting period, released results from its report covering incidents for calendar year 2018. (2) In addition, permitted by the government to directly engage with ethnic armed groups to pursue the signing of joint action plans on the use and recruitment of child soldiers. (13) Committee for the Prevention of Grave Violations Against Children in Armed Conflicts formed in January 2019 and addresses the designation of the Burmese military within the annual UN Report on Children and Armed Conflict Annex related to the killing, maiming, and sexual assault of children in armed conflicts. (13,77) Members include 13 Ministries. Regularly meets with the CTFMR to discuss additional measures to prevent grave violations against children in armed conflicts. (13,77)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Coordination: National Committee on Child Labor Eradication & Technical Working Group on Child Labor	National Committee on Child Labor Eradication oversees the implementation of the Myanmar Child Labour Eradication Project, which was approved by the committee in December 2018. (1,25,97) Chaired by the Vice President and consists of 37 members including representatives from 13 government ministries, the chief ministers of 10 states, the mayors of Rangoon and Mandalay, unions, and employer and civil society organizations. (2,97) Officially launched on February 5, 2018. (2,98) During its first 5 years, will focus on the worst forms of child labor. (2) During the reporting period, began work on implementing the first phase of the National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor, with the goal of gathering data from five target areas, reducing child labor, and implementing child labor laws. (2,99) Met twice during the reporting period. (2) Technical Working Group on Child Labor coordinates the implementation of ILO Convention 182, including drafting the list of hazardous work prohibited for children, developing a national plan of action against child labor, and establishing a mechanism for identifying, monitoring, and referring child labor cases. Chaired by MOLIP, consists of stakeholders from eight government ministries, employers, and civil society organizations. (12,95,96) During the reporting period, began developing a hazardous work list of activities prohibited to children. (34)
Central Body for the Suppression of Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates efforts to address trafficking in persons. Chaired by the Minister of Home Affairs (MOHA) and includes six government agencies and several NGOs. (13,85) Creates, implements, and maintains an annual work plan to make progress toward goals established in the 5-year National Plan of Action to Counter Trafficking in Persons (NPA). (13) Includes three working groups: (1) Prevention of Trafficking in Persons and Protection of Trafficked Victims, headed by the Deputy Minister of MOHA; (2) Legal Framework and Prosecuting Measures, headed by the Deputy Attorney General; and (3) Repatriation and Rehabilitation of Trafficked Victims, headed by the Deputy Minister of the Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Rehabilitation. (13) During the reporting period, held a meeting to discuss challenges and efforts to work toward implementation of recommendations contained in the U.S. Department of State's 2019 Trafficking in Persons Report. Also drafted the 2019 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law that is pending Cabinet approval before submission to Parliament. (13) Hosted the Seventh Myanmar Anti-Trafficking in Persons Day that featured print, radio, and television programming with anti-trafficking messaging. (13)
Township Committees of the Rights of the Child	Coordinate local child welfare and protection activities. Led by the Township Administrator and consists of government agencies, including the Department of Social Welfare, police, and NGOs. (1,67)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the government formed a Committee on Underage Recruitment and a Committee for the Prevention of Sexual Violation - which is overseen by the CTFMR - with the goal of establishing more robust age assessment procedures, issuing national military directives prohibiting child recruitment, and establishing standards for national military personnel conduct. (2,34) Additionally, in July 2019, the government hosted the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Senior Officials Meeting on Transnational Crime, Working Group on Trafficking in Persons to work toward better coordination between regional governments to address human trafficking. (13)

Research indicates that the government continues to be hampered by limited inter-ministerial coordination across all government ministries. (13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the adoption of policies that address all relevant worst forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description

Seeks to ensure the release of children under age 18 from the armed forces and facilitate their reintegration into families and communities through the CTFMR. (94) Policy was implemented during the reporting period. (34)

Policy	Description
Myanmar Sustainable Development Plan (2018–2030)	Sets out a strategy to expand the social safety net and social protection services, including the introduction of measures to keep children enrolled in schools and out of child labor. (100) Action Plan Item 4.3.6 specifically addresses eliminating child labor through education. (2,100) Policy was implemented during the reporting period. (34)
Myanmar Decent Work Country Programme (2018–2021)	Seeks to strengthen protections against child labor and forced labor by building on existing ILO programs in Burma and continuing engagement between the ILO and the government. (101) Policy was implemented during the reporting period. (34)
National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking (NPA) (2017–2021)	Aims to effectively eliminate internal and cross-border trafficking in persons and to anticipate and forestall new forms of trafficking. (13,102) Third iteration of the NPA. Implemented by the Central Body for Suppression of Trafficking in Persons. (13) Employs three strategies, including: (1) prevent and suppress trafficking in persons; (2) protect all victims, in particular women and children; and (3) prevent forced labor of children, including in the recruitment of children into the armed forces, and prevent the sexual exploitation of children. (13,102) Policy was implemented during the reporting period. (34)

In November 2019, the government adopted the ASEAN Declaration on the Rights of Children in the Context of Migration. (2) This Declaration calls on member states to increase action to address and prevent child labor and forced labor as they relate to migration. The Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Resettlement in Burma and the Ministry of Social Development and Human Security in Thailand signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) to begin work on a cross-border protection framework to strengthen the protection of children in migration that will complement the Declaration. (2,34) This MOU will establish functioning cross-border child protection mechanisms and frameworks, including case management standard operating procedures. (34)

Although the government has adopted a policy to end the national military's recruitment and use of child soldiers and hazardous child labor, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, including armed conflict by non-state armed groups, forced child labor, or commercial sexual exploitation of children. (34)

During the reporting period, the government began drafting and negotiating MOUs with the Governments of India and Vietnam to address the issue of child trafficking. (2,13,77) The government also negotiated a child protection mechanism with the Governments of Thailand and China, which seeks to assist children affected by the risks of migration, including human trafficking and forced labor. (2,13,77)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address all worst forms of child labor.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Forced Labor Complaint Mechanism	Joint government-ILO program that gives citizens a mechanism to lodge complaints of forced labor and seek remedies from the government. (103) In February 2020, a new permanent mechanism was approved and implemented by the government. Includes the ability to report cases of child labor and child soldier recruitment. (34) During the reporting period, 115 cases of child soldiers were received through the complaint mechanism; most of the complaints reported were from people who are no longer children. (104)
Hotlines	UNICEF and World Vision-operated hotlines for reporting suspected cases of child recruitment or use by Burma's military. (105) In 2019, 67 calls were received by World Vision hotline. (2)
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded projects that aim to increase awareness and knowledge of child labor; improve the legal and institutional environment to contribute to the elimination of child labor; improve availability and use of occupational safe and health data, and increase youth knowledge and awareness of the hazards and risks of child labor and improve availability. Includes: the Myanmar Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour (My-PEC) Project, a $7.75 million global project implemented by the ILO; SafeYouth@Work Project: Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers, a global project implemented by the ILO; and Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAPI6) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a global project implemented by the ILO. NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

The MOLIP published the Labor Force Survey in April 2019, with data collected in 2017 in all seven states and regions, as well as the union territory, and found that 5 percent (623,000) of the total child population (12,410,000) were found to be working in child labor, and 608,000 were found to be in hazardous work conditions. (2,110) A second survey collected data from 2019 and is expected to be published in early 2020. (77) Data from this second survey was primarily collected from the Yangon, Bago, and Ayeyarwady Regions, and in Mon and Karen States. (2) The survey was done to help develop and establish a database that accurately reflects the current size and composition of the labor force in Burma, and includes information on child labor. (111)

The Forced Labor Complaints Mechanism lapsed in December 2018, but the ILO continued to receive and forward child labor complaints to the government. (2,13,41,77,89) In August 2019, the government approved a proposal to create a new government-operated complaints mechanism, and established an interim complaints mechanism while it worked with stakeholders to establish the new mechanism. The permanent mechanism was implemented in February 2020 and is able to receive complaints. (2,13,34,36,41,112) The National Tripartite Dialogue comprising members of the government, employers’ associations, and labor unions, continued to work toward labor reforms by acting as the main stakeholder consultative body regarding the establishment of a formal complaints mechanism and the creation of the hazardous work list. (2,77)

Overall, the government lacks sufficient social programs to adequately address the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (34)

In 2019, Burundi made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government worked on revisions to its Labor Code to align with international standards on child labor and launched a partnership with the International Organization for Migration to improve coordination between government ministries, the National Police, and civil society organizations to address human trafficking. It also published labor inspection funding data for the first time, conducted inspections in all provinces, and continued to fund the Centers for Family Development, which provide reintegration services for victims. However, children in Burundi engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in gold mining. Burundi lacks a compulsory education age that is equal to the minimum age for work and the government failed to provide comprehensive criminal law enforcement data related to the worst forms of child labor. Other challenges remain, including a lack of resources to conduct labor inspections and criminal investigations; a lack of well-trained educators and infrastructure in the education sector; and insufficient social programs to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burundi engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in gold mining. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burundi. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	33.2 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	69.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	30.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		63.0

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Burundi is one of the poorest countries in the world, with more than 90 percent of its citizens engaged in subsistence agriculture, and approximately 80 percent of the workforce employed in the informal economy. (1,16,17) Poverty often results in Burundian children leaving school for paid work. (18) During the 2017–2018 school year alone, the cycle for which the most recent data is available, 171,652 children dropped out of school, with many believed to have entered domestic work. (19)

Burundi is a source country for children subjected to forced labor and sex trafficking. There were no documented cases of sex tourism in Burundi during the reporting period. (20) Burundian children are trafficked within the country, often from rural areas, for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. (3,4,15,16,20) Reports indicate that an increasing number of children from the Batwa ethnic group are being transported from rural areas into Bujumbura with promises of work and subsequently are exploited. (3) Women who offer room and board to children sometimes force the children into commercial sexual exploitation to pay expenses. (4,20) Burundian girls are also trafficked internationally for commercial sexual exploitation in Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, the Democratic Republic of Congo, and countries in the Middle East. (4,9,20,21,22) Evidence also suggests that children are trafficked to Tanzania for work in agriculture and for domestic work. (1,4,9,17,21)

Although the government abolished school fees in 2012, families are often asked to pay for supplies, secondary school fees, and school building maintenance costs, which have prevented many children from accessing free public schooling. (3) A dearth of well-trained educators and poor infrastructure has also limited educational opportunity. For example, the lack of gender-separated bathrooms can contribute to lower attendance rates among girls. (3) Children with disabilities and mobility issues face discrimination in schools and a lack of appropriate materials and infrastructure, limiting access to education. (23) Moreover, because birth certificates are required to attend school, many unregistered children, in particular children of the Batwa ethnic group, remain out of school and vulnerable to child labor. (1,3,8,16,21)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Burundi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Burundi’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of a compulsory education age equal to the minimum age for work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 3 of the Labor Code; Article 3 of the Ministerial Ordinance to Regulate Child Labor (24,25)

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 519 of the Penal Code; Articles 4 and 10 of the Trafficking in Persons Law (26,27)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 6(c) of the National Defense Troops Law (28)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No		Articles 198.2aa and 198.5g of the Penal Code (27)
Compulsory Education Age	No	12	Legislation title unknown (8)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of the Law on Basic and Secondary Education (29)

* No conscription (28)

The Labor Code prohibits work by children under age 16 in public and private enterprises; however, the law's minimum age protections do not apply to children outside of formal employment relationships. (24,30-31) During the reporting period, the government continued to revise the Labor Code in order to integrate international standards on the minimum age for work and the worst forms of child labor. The revision has been in process for over a year and a draft of the revisions has not yet been released. (3) After a National Labor Council draft of the code revisions was sent to the ILO for recommendations, the project was submitted to the Council of Ministers, where it currently awaits analysis. (32)

The prohibitions against hazardous work are not comprehensive, as they fail to cover agriculture, an area of work in which there is evidence of children working with dangerous machinery, equipment, and tools. (9,25) Although Burundi has a list of activities in which light work may be permitted, the minimum age of 12 for light work is not in compliance with international standards. (31,33) Burundi's laws related to forced labor are not sufficient because they do not criminally prohibit forced labor except when it results from human trafficking. (26)

Education in Burundi is not compulsory through the minimum age for work, and research did not uncover a public version of the law establishing compulsory education. (8,34) The Penal Code does not prohibit the use of children in the production and trafficking of narcotics. (27) Although the Constitution prohibits the use of children in armed conflict, the Penal Code criminalizes only the use of children under age 15 in armed conflict, leaving children between the ages of 15 and 18 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (27,35) However, Burundian law does prohibit the recruitment of children under age 18 by the state armed forces, and available evidence indicates that the government continued to comply with this provision. (1,16,17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment	Administers and enforces all labor laws, including those on child labor, through the Inspector General of Work and Social Security. (36)
Ministry of Public Security	Conducts criminal investigations on the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. (2) Through the Burundi National Police's Unit for the Protection of Minors and Morals, protects children from commercial sexual exploitation, illicit activity, and military recruitment. (1,3,9,17)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes cases of the worst forms of child labor through its General Prosecutor's Office. (1,3,9,12)
Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender	Coordinates, monitors, and oversees children's advocacy and family services programs conducted by public and private organizations. Develops policies and national laws on the promotion and protection of children and families. (37,38) Refers cases to police officers and judicial officials for enforcement through its 89 Child Protection Committees at local levels; victims are referred to local NGOs for social services. (3,37,38)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Burundi took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including an insufficient number of labor inspectors.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Although Burundi increased its number of labor inspectors in 2019, 14 of Burundi's 18 provinces lack local inspectors. (3) Furthermore, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Burundi's workforce, which includes approximately 5 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Burundi would employ about 125 inspectors. (39,40) In 2019, Burundi's labor inspectorate increased the number of inspections conducted and carried out inspections in all 18 provinces. However, these inspections were conducted exclusively in the formal sector, in which child labor is relatively rare, and excluded the agricultural sector. (3,31)

The depreciation of Burundi's currency in 2019 resulted in a decrease in funding for the labor inspectorate, and government officials acknowledged the budget in 2019 was not sufficient. (3) Research found that financial constraints hamper the Inspector General of Work and Social Security's enforcement of child labor laws because annual funding does not cover fuel costs, per diem, or office supplies, nor does the labor inspectorate own any vehicles. (8,9,41,42)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Burundi took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including the lack of published information on the criminal enforcement of child labor law.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Burundian authorities identified 314 victims of transnational trafficking in persons in 2019, but found no cases of domestic trafficking in persons. Government data did not identify how many of these cases involved children. (20) The government did not provide complete information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (3) Meanwhile, UNICEF reported identifying 205 cases of child labor, some of which may have included human trafficking, and 123 cases of child victims of human trafficking. (20)

In 2019, Burundi established a new unit within the Ministry of Justice focused on the protection of witnesses involved in cases of abuse or exploitation. (20)

Despite its efforts, the government lacked resources to fully implement criminal law enforcement strategies. For example, while the Burundi National Police Unit for the Protection of Minors and Morals was responsible for the investigation of trafficking in persons, sex trafficking, and child and forced labor issues, it lacked capacity and often did not receive referrals from other police units. (20) Agencies lacked resources necessary to respond to victims' needs and had to rely primarily on services from civil society and international organizations. (20)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including non-operational coordination mechanisms.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Burundi Counter-Trafficking (2019–2022)*	Launched in 2019 in partnership with IOM and the Kingdom of the Netherlands, this 3-year, $3 million coordinating project aims to reinforce government anti-human trafficking efforts by improving coordination between government ministries, the Burundi National Police, and civil society organizations. Also aims to strengthen the national referral system for protection of and improve reintegration services for human trafficking victims. (20,44)
Ad Hoc Committee for Consultation and Monitoring on the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons	Oversees national anti-trafficking in persons efforts, including implementation of the National Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Persons. (15,17,38,45,46) Includes officials from the Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender, and the ministries of Justice, Public Security, Foreign Affairs, and Interior. (2) In October, the committee requested and received training from IOM on good practices related to coordination, referral, identification, assistance, and prosecution of trafficking in persons cases. In December, the committee also conducted a best practices information exchange with its Tunisian counterparts to inform prevention activities. (20)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Burundi

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Despite Burundi's efforts to address trafficking in persons, Burundi lacks an active coordinating mechanism to address other forms of child labor, as research suggests the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor is non-operational. While the Ad Hoc Committee was active during the reporting period, it did not receive any dedicated funds from the government for the fiscal year and thus was reliant upon funding sources from international organizations. (20)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including inactive and expired policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Combating Trafficking in Persons (2019–2020)	Aims to significantly reduce human trafficking in Burundi by 2020 through the adoption of political, social, economic, and institutional measures. Identifies women and children as being the most vulnerable to human trafficking, noting sectors of high prevalence and human trafficker profiles. (38,47) The Ad Hoc Committee for Consultation and Monitoring on the Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons developed an Integrated Work Plan Against Trafficking in Persons 2019–2020 in 2019 in alignment with the objectives of the National Action Plan to implement anti-trafficking measures. (20,44)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (48,49)

The government did not take steps to renew the expired National Revised Action Plan for the Fight Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor during the reporting period. (1,3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Centers for Family Development†	Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender-operated centers that address human rights issues, including child exploitation, and reintegrate victims in their home communities. Coordinate with Child Protection Committees to refer victims to local NGOs for care, when necessary. (37,50) The centers continued to carry out services in various parts of the country in 2019, including the construction of a community center in Mubumbi. (51,52)
“Back to School” Campaign†	UNICEF and the Ministry of Education “Back to School” campaign to promote equitable access and retention in school for 2.6 million basic education students, half of them girls. (53) In 2019, UNICEF conducted an impact evaluation assessing the “Back to School” program to date and providing recommendations for future implementation. The evaluation found the program played an important role in addressing access to education in areas in which poverty was a significant barrier. (54)

† Program is funded by the Government of Burundi.

Research found no evidence that the government has carried out programs to assist children working in agriculture or victims of commercial sexual exploitation or trafficking in persons. Further, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Burundi (Table 11).

In 2019, Cabo Verde made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government increased the number of labor inspectors by 50 percent, and implemented a Child Protection Information and Case Management System, which aims to identify and track victims of the worst forms of child labor, including child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents, in collaboration with the United Nations Children's Fund, drafted a Child Protection Policy. However, children in Cabo Verde engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in construction. Law enforcement officials lack the necessary resources to follow up on investigations, and communication among enforcement agencies is still limited. In addition, social programs to assist children involved in agriculture and domestic work are not sufficient to address the scope of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cabo Verde engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-7) Children also perform dangerous tasks in construction. (4,8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cabo Verde.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	3.2 (2,392)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	90.1
Combining Work and School (%)	10 to 14	1.7

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking (11,15)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The commercial sexual exploitation of both boys and girls, including in the tourism industry, occurs in Cabo Verde. (1-3,5) Research indicates that the islands of Sal and Boa Vista register the highest incidences of commercial sexual exploitation of children. (2) Evidence also indicates that children are victims of commercial sexual exploitation on the islands of São Vicente, Fogo, and Maio. (4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Cabo Verde has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government's laws and regulations are in line with relevant international standards (Table 4).

‡ Age calculated based on available information (24)

During the reporting period, the government began drafting a law aimed at addressing the increase in violations of commercial sexual exploitation of children in the country, including increasing the age of consent and ensuring that these violations are given priority within the legal justice system. (2)

The Civil Code includes a list of light work activities that children age 14 are allowed to perform; however, the law does not prescribe the number of hours per week permissible for light work, nor does it specify the conditions under which light work may be performed. (17,18,25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Inspector General for Labor (IGT) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspector General for Labor (IGT)	Monitors and enforces child labor laws, working closely with the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA). (26)
Judicial Police and National Police	Judicial Police conduct criminal investigations; National Police make arrests related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking. (3)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the IGT that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including financial resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, the government increased the number of labor inspectors by 50 percent. (3) Reports indicate that inspectors lack necessary resources to perform inspections in sectors in which child labor is known to occur, including the informal sector. In addition, the IGT's presence is limited to only three of the nine inhabited islands, which hinders inspectors' abilities to enforce child labor laws. (3)

Although the government did not report any child labor violations, the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA) recorded 33 cases of child labor violations during the reporting period. When IGT inspectors find a case of child labor, they inform ICCA for referral to social services providers. (3)

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating human resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (11)	Yes (29)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (11)	N/A

In 2018, Judicial Police investigated a labor trafficking case involving two Chinese minors, ages 16 and 17, on the island of Sal. (11,30) During the reporting period, three suspects were officially charged with several counts of human trafficking crimes during the reporting period, and the case is scheduled for trial in 2020. (29) In addition, in November 2019, a suspect was detained in connection to a case of commercial sexual exploitation involving a 14 year old girl. The victim was prevented from attending school, and forced to travel between islands to be exploited in commercial sex. (3) The case is still pending. (3)

Reports also indicate that the Judicial Police and the National Police lack the necessary financial and human resources to follow up on investigations, including cases of child labor. The Judicial Police are present on only three of the islands, hindering their ability to address all child labor investigations. (3,11) Furthermore, the government did not maintain comprehensive anti-trafficking law enforcement and victim protection data among its criminal enforcement agencies. (4) Although law enforcement agencies work well together, limited coordination between agencies, who sometimes struggle to share case information and updates, may hinder enforcement efforts. (11) In addition, reports indicate that the judicial system takes inordinately long to process cases, which can contribute to a lack of protection for child victims of the worst forms of child labor. (2,3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication in Cabo Verde	Coordinates the execution of the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and provides a functional mechanism for reciprocal referrals between law enforcement and social services. Led by ICCA, with the support of the Ministry of Youth, Labor and Development of Human Resources. (31) In 2019, the Committee led a significant national media campaign aimed at addressing the sexual exploitation of children. (28)
Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA)	Coordinates and monitors the implementation of all national programs and activities to prevent and combat child labor. (32) In 2019, drafted a Child Protection Policy in cooperation with UNICEF. (3) As of January 2020, the Policy is under review with the Ministry of Education, Family and Social Inclusion, after which it will be presented to the Council of Ministers for approval. ICCA also trained 30 journalists on how to cover children's rights issues in the media, and trained 40 social workers and psychologists on how to prevent and respond to cases of violence against children, including cases of commercial sexual exploitation. (3)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Children and Adolescent Committee to Prevent and Combat Sexual Abuse and Exploitation	Contributes to the prevention and elimination of child sexual exploitation by coordinating the activities of member organizations and public and private services. (33) Supervises, monitors, and evaluates the National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents. (11) Led by ICCA. (34) In 2019, presented the final evaluation of the project, "Strengthening capacities to better prevent and combat the exploitation and sexual abuse of children in Cabo Verde." A Plan of Action for the Coordination of National Networks was also created to address the project's results and the child sexual exploitation problem in the country. (5)
Observatory for Monitoring and Rapid Identification of Situations of Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates and monitors all efforts to combat human trafficking. Comprises law enforcement, NGOs, civil society, and various government agencies. (11,35) Led by the Ministry of Justice and Labor. (11) Active in 2019. (29)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor	Prioritizes the eradication of child labor. Outlines specific objectives, including data collection, institutional capacity building, and enhancement of measures to prevent, protect, and remove children from involvement in child labor. (31) Implemented in 2019. (3)
National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents (2017–2019)	Aimed to prevent and combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The plan incorporated five principal themes: participation of children and adolescents; prevention of situations of vulnerability; mobilizing material and social resources; treatment for both victims and perpetrators; and accountability. (11,36) In 2019, ICCA and the Ministry of Education, Family and Social Inclusion implemented the Child Protection Information and Case Management System aimed at identifying and tracking victims of the worst forms of child labor, including victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (3)
Code of Ethics Against the Sexual Exploitation of Children	Guides and governs agencies involved in the tourism sector to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. (37) Active in 2019. (3)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2018–2021)	Prioritizes five strategic areas: prevention, awareness, protection, investigation, and coordination. (38) Establishes the Observatory for Monitoring and Rapid Identification of Situations of Trafficking in Persons. (11,35) In 2019, the government ran an anti-trafficking campaign, including billboards, radio and television announcements. (3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating and preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of efforts to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Labor Awareness Campaigns†	Government program implemented by ICCA and the National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication that conducts national awareness-raising campaigns on the worst forms of child labor. (39) In October 2019, conducted an event to raise awareness of child sexual abuse, including child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, in coordination with the City of Praia. (3)
Help for At-Risk Children†	ICCA-implemented program that provides education, health services, and professional training to vulnerable children and their families. Operates eight day centers on Boa Vista, Fogo, Sal, Santiago, Santo Antão, and São Vicente islands for street children vulnerable to sexual and labor exploitation. (39) Active in 2019. (3)
Child Emergency Centers and Social Protection and Reintegration Centers†	ICCA-implemented program that operates emergency centers for child victims of abuse and sexual exploitation on Santiago, Santo Antão, and São Vicente islands. (31,39) The government also operates five social protection and reintegration centers that provide support and educational integration services to children who have experienced long-term trauma. (4,40) Active in 2019. (3)
Government Efforts to Increase Access to Education	Donor-funded programs implemented by the government that ensure access to education for disadvantaged children by paying for school fees, materials, and meals. (41) Active in 2019. (3)

† Program is funded by the Government of Cabo Verde.

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2019, the government continued working on the development of a social registry to identify families most in need of targeted social programs, and used the data acquired from the registry to provide aid to 40,000 families. The government also allocated funds in its 2020 budget to provide free tuition through the 12th grade for poor children. (3)

Although some awareness-raising activities were conducted during the reporting period, research indicates that awareness-raising efforts on human trafficking, including child sex tourism, remained insufficient on some islands. (4) Research also found that programs to assist children involved in agriculture and domestic work are not sufficient to address the scope of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Cabo Verde (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Prescribe by law the number of hours per week and conditions under which light work may be undertaken.	2015 – 2019
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors and criminal investigators receive sufficient financial and human resources to enforce child labor laws on all islands, including in the informal sector, and that all inhabited islands benefit from the presence of the Inspector General for Labor and the Judicial Police.	2014 – 2019
	Make labor and criminal enforcement data publicly available, including information on the number of violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and imposed penalties related to the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2019
	Develop a system to compile and share comprehensive anti-trafficking law enforcement and victim identification data among agencies.	2018 – 2019
	Ensure that the judiciary has sufficient resources and personnel to allow cases to be prosecuted in a timely manner.	2019
Government Policies	Conduct awareness-raising activities on human trafficking, including child sex tourism, on all nine inhabited islands.	2018 – 2019
Social Programs	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and domestic work.	2010 – 2019

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

In 2019, Cambodia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government, in conjunction with the ILO, conducted its first nationwide survey of child labor since 2012, with data scheduled for release in 2020. In addition, the government signed an agreement expanding funding to allow the International Labor Organization’s Better Factories Cambodia program to extend its monitoring mandate to additional sectors, including to formal subcontracting factories where child labor is found. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, Cambodia is receiving an assessment of minimal advancement because the government failed to take active measures to investigate, prosecute, convict, and sentence public officials who participate in or facilitate the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children and debt-based forced labor in brick kilns. In addition, during the reporting period, judges were allegedly reported to have accepted bribes in return for dismissal of charges, acquittal, and reduced sentencing for individuals committing such crimes, especially for those with alleged ties to the government; this made children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Children in Cambodia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in brickmaking and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Insufficient resources may hamper the labor inspectorate’s capacity to enforce child labor laws, especially in rural areas where the majority of child laborers work. In addition, continuing challenges in accessing basic education and the absence of a compulsory education requirement increase children’s vulnerability to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cambodia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced labor in brickmaking and in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Table I provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Cambodia.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Cambodian brick factories, some children engage in forced labor, sometimes in dangerous conditions, to offset family debt to employers. (3,10-12,27,34,35) The rapid growth in the construction industry, particularly in Phnom Penh, has increased the demand for bricks and fueled child labor and debt bondage. (3,11,34,36) Failed harvests from droughts have compounded farmers’ debts, which they sell to brick kiln owners, thus placing their families into hereditary debt bondage until the debts are repaid. (3,11,12,34-37)

In 2019, the government announced an ambitious plan to eliminate child labor in the brick industry by the end of the year, and conducted a census of all 486 operational kilns in the country to document the prevalence of child labor in the brickmaking sector. Although the government will not publish results from the census until late 2020, the government inspectors announced that no child labor or debt bondage was found at these kilns and, therefore, inspectors did not issue any fines. (11,27,38,39) However, in 2019 independent researchers documented at least 638 cases of child labor at brick kilns, in addition to situations of debt bondage at 464 operational kilns. (11,27,38,39,40) Following completion of the government census, officials required brick kiln owners to sign contracts with 1,259 brick kiln family workers, agreeing not to loan them any money. (11,38)

Also during the reporting period, the government and the ILO conducted the first nation-wide survey of child labor since 2012. They plan to release results in 2020. (11,14,41)

Children are subject to human trafficking domestically, from rural to urban areas, and internationally, to countries such as Thailand and Vietnam, for commercial sexual exploitation. (3,9,25,27,30) During the reporting period, there were reported cases of teenage girls dropping out of school in Sihanoukville to work in casinos where there is a high risk of exploitation, including commercial sexual exploitation. (27)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

Online sexual exploitation of children (OSEC) is reportedly increasing in Cambodia, facilitated by an increase in cheap, high-speed Internet access. (10,11,30,42) To help address the emergence of OSEC within Cambodia, a local NGO set up an online platform and a hotline for people to report issues of OSEC. (43)

Research has found that children who are placed in residential care facilities or orphanages in Cambodia are at a higher risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor, including child sexual exploitation, and are exposed to conditions that can negatively affect their developmental and health outcomes. (11,30) Of the 265 residential care institutions housing 7,634 children, many private institutions reportedly exploit children as “sham” orphans to lure donations from foreigners. (11,30)

Although the Education Law establishes free basic education, school-related fees, such as for building maintenance, are prohibitive for some families. (11,22,44,45) Other barriers to education include denied enrollment for children without birth certificates, limited transportation to schools in remote areas, lack of drinking water and toilet facilities in some schools, language barriers, and an insufficient number of teachers. These barriers particularly affect ethnic minority children, children with disabilities, and children from rural and disadvantaged communities. (8,11,46-50) Research also found that children living in provinces bordering Thailand are at a higher risk of dropping out of school to find work following the migration of their parents to Thailand for work. (51)

In 2019, the Ministry of Education, Youth and Sports created a Special Education Department to help institutional systems address the needs of vulnerable children, including those with disabilities, to keep them in school. (52)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Cambodia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cambodia’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work and prohibiting the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 177 of the Labor Law (53)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 173 and 177 of the Labor Law; Regulation on the Prohibition of Hazardous Child Labor; Articles 339–340 of the Penal Code (53–55)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 15–16 of the Labor Law; Articles 10, 12, 15–17, and 19 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation; Article 80 of Law on Juvenile Justice (53,56,57)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 10, 12, 15–17, and 19 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation (56)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 15, 28, 33–37, and 41 of the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation; Articles 284, 289, and 346 of the Penal Code (55,56)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 345 of the Penal Code; Articles 3 and 47 of the Law on Control of Drugs (55,58)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 42 of the Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (59)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (59)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 31 of the Education Law (45)

Although the Labor Code prohibits work by children under age 15, the law does not apply to children outside of formal employment relationships and, therefore, does not conform to international standards that require all children be protected under the law that sets a minimum age for work. (54) The Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training’s (MOLVT) regulation on household work extends minimum age protections for domestic workers to age 18 and provides clear definitions of household work. However, the regulation does not specify legal protections for household workers employed by their relatives. (10,50,53,60-63)

Cambodian laws also do not sufficiently prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children, because the use or offering of a child for pornographic performances is not criminally prohibited. In addition, the laws do not prohibit the recruitment of children under age 18 into non-state armed groups. (22,55)

Education is free, but not compulsory, through grade nine. (45,63) The lack of compulsory schooling makes children under age 15 particularly vulnerable to child labor because they are not required to be in school but are not yet legally permitted to work. (45,53,63)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of MOLVT that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

(10) Enforces child-related provisions of the Labor Law, and trains Commune Committees for Women and Children that oversee local child labor monitoring systems. (40) Includes 24 MOLVT inter-departmental inspection teams. (64) Tasked with removing children from child labor, including at brick kilns. (11) Employs 1 child labor inspector in each of Cambodia’s 25 provinces. (10,48,65) During the reporting period, conducted 2 training sessions for 418 labor inspectors in 21 provinces on how to inspect for child labor in brick kilns. (11) Visited all active brick kilns in 2019. (41,66)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of the Interior – Cambodian National Police Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Department (AHTJP)	Commanded by the Ministry of the Interior and reports to the AHTJP Department Director. (22,30,66) enforces laws against human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, in collaboration with municipal and provincial anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection offices. (22,30) Fields complaints about human trafficking, which can be filed through the anti-human trafficking hotline. (32) Oversees the Information and Technology Office which searches for evidence of trafficking in persons and sexual exploitation of children on the Internet, printed media, and other sources. (40,64) In 2019, rescued 196 underage victims of human trafficking and referred them to MOSAVY for processing and rehabilitative services, prior to sending them back to their families. (64) Also during the reporting period, collaborated with multiple NGOs to provide 4 trainings, including on investigation of child violation offenses and online child protection and sexual exploitation to 221 AHTJP officers. Six AHTJP officers attended three trainings on investigation and suppression of online child violations in Vietnam, Malaysia, and Thailand. (64)
Ministry of the Interior – Cambodian National Police Anti-Cybercrime Department	Located within the Criminal Investigation Department. (30,66) During the reporting period, assisted with drafting a new Law on Cybercrime. (30,66,67)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY)	Refers victims of child labor to NGOs for services. Operates the Poipet Transit Center to identify children at risk of being trafficked or children who have been trafficked. (3,27) In November 2019, MOSAVY adopted the Prakas on the Guidelines of Basic Competencies for Social Workforce, in collaboration with UNICEF and USAID, to strengthen social work practices and child protection systems in Cambodia. (11,64) The Prakas ensure all social services providers, including governmental institutions, NGOs, and the private sector, comply with the guidelines. (64) Also during the reporting period, processed 1,662 victims of child trafficking via the Poipet Transit Center, referring 396 children to NGOs to access rehabilitation services before sending them back to their families. The remaining 1,266 children were sent directly back to their families. (64) Hosted 5 workshops on identification of victims of human trafficking, management of trafficking in person victim data, and capacity building to 481 MOSAVY district officials, chiefs of villages, commune councilors, and police and health officials. (64)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of MOLVT that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including financial resource allocation.

The National Committee on Countering Child Labor (NCCL) relies on other bureaus within MOLVT to alert them to possible child labor issues in their specific sectors before the NCCL inspects. (11) Due to the

Cambodia

segregated nature of MOLVT, bureaus with chief inspection responsibility within a sector with a known child labor issue are not equipped with the proper technical training and expertise to identify child labor, and bureau staff and typically ask very few questions. (10,11) In an effort to improve labor inspectors' performance, MOLVT said it now requires that all labor inspectors take and pass a newly created online examination that aims to assess and improve overall technical skills and legal knowledge, in order to continue working as labor inspectors. (11,66)

The government only proactively inspects the brick kiln industry and the export garment sector for child labor, but during the reporting period MOLVT also focused on conducting labor inspections in the construction and entertainment industries. (11,66) However, when child labor inspections occur, they are concentrated in the city of Phnom Penh and in the provincial, formal-sector factories producing goods, such as textiles and garments for export, rather than in rural areas where the majority of child laborers work. (6,10,11,23,50,66)

Following up on the government's plan to eliminate child labor by the end of 2019, MOLVT issued to all provincial labor departments in Cambodia instructions aimed at preventing children from entering brick kilns, and publicized that brick kiln owners who use child labor or forced child labor could face fines, brick kiln closure, and possible criminal prosecution. (11,37,68,69) MOLVT stated that it will begin fining non-compliant brick kilns in 2020. (70)

With the goal of improving inspection efficiency, the NCCL began conducting joint labor inspections with inspectors from other labor bureaus in the garment sector, in parallel with the inspections conducted by the ILO's Better Factories Cambodia (BFC). (11) To further align with BFC, the export garment sector instituted a zero-tolerance policy for child labor in 2019. (11) Children discovered in garment factories are immediately removed and placed in vocational training or other studies, and upon reaching the legal working age, are guaranteed employment. (11,71) Children discovered working in other sectors are removed and referred to the Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY) for assessment. (10,11,72,73)

The government, the ILO, and NGOs all agree that the labor inspectorate is insufficiently funded, resulting in insufficient training of labor inspectors and an insufficient number of labor inspections. This affects the ability of the labor inspectorate to conduct inspections outside of Phnom Penh and in rural communities because labor inspectors require more funding to cover transportation costs. (10,11) Lack of funding also prevents the labor inspectorate from conducting inspections in hospitality and nightlife establishments after business hours, because the inspectorate is not able to pay inspectors for overtime. (10) In addition, the labor inspectorate does not have the ability to inspect child labor abuses in domestic work, which is overseen by the Sub-National Committee of Women and Children. (10,11) While unannounced inspections are permitted, they rarely happen and anecdotal evidence suggests that when they do happen, most occur on cassava farms. (10,11,48)

The MOLVT has established regulations for children on hazardous work in several sectors, including in agriculture, brickmaking, fishing, tobacco, and cassava production. However, malfeasance within the MOLVT and law enforcement limits the capacity of local authorities to adequately enforce these regulations, resulting in sanctions for child labor violations being rarely imposed in accordance with the law. (8,10-12,50,70,74,75) Overall, NGOs have indicated that the government lacks the capacity to deal with child labor and are overwhelmed at the scale of the issue, particularly in the construction industry. (11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Cambodian National Police that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including failing to take active measures to investigate public officials who participate in or facilitate the worst forms of child labor.

During the reporting period, research found that criminal law enforcement officials, writ large, failed to take significant actions on credible reports against government officials complicit in the worst forms of child labor, including at entertainment establishments where the commercial sexual exploitation of children is known to occur, and at brick kilns whose owners may subject families and children to debt-based forced labor in brick kilns. (12,27,50,73)

Research has found cases of government officials profiting directly from the commercial sexual exploitation of children and indirectly by being permissive of it, especially when undertaken in establishments by those with ties to the government. (12,71,76) Furthermore, research found that owners of entertainment establishments at which child sexual exploitation is known to occur sometimes used their connections to law enforcement officials to avoid investigation, prosecution, and fines. (12,27,50,71,76) Research also found instances where raids into these establishments were thwarted by “tip-offs” from working-level police in advance of the raids. (12,27)

In particular, police officers have reported that they sometimes avoid investigating child labor complaints at brick kilns, and instead assist in the capture and jailing of runaway brick kiln workers to avoid potential retaliation by politically connected owners who use their connections to avoid potential investigations and fines. (34,50,71,77) Despite these trends and calls from Prime Minister Hun Sen to investigate and prosecute government officials complicit in promoting the worst forms of child labor, this does not appear to be occurring. (27,50,73)

The government does not authorize anti-trafficking police units to conduct undercover investigations, which significantly constrains the ability of law enforcement to pursue human traffickers, including those involved in child sexual exploitation. (11,12,27,42,50) In addition, many law enforcement officials, particularly those located in rural areas, are unaware of how to properly conduct anti-trafficking work, as most did not receive training on basic law enforcement techniques. (12,27) Furthermore, law enforcement officials investigating suspected trafficking cases are expected to personally cover all expenses, including transportation costs, and are rarely reimbursed in full or on time. This has led to officials reportedly pursuing cases for which costs will be covered on their behalf. (11,27,71)

Unlike in prior years, the government did not report investigating or prosecuting labor recruiters for illegal practices that may have contributed to or involved human trafficking, which continued to perpetuate widespread labor exploitation. (12)

In Cambodia, judges have discretion to determine whether perpetrators of crimes related to child labor will be imprisoned or fined and the amount of the fine. The penalties imposed are not uniformly administered and do not adhere to the parameters prescribed by law. (3,50,78) In some cases, prosecutors and judges have been known to accept bribes in return for dismissal of charges, acquittal, and reduced sentencing, especially for those with alleged ties to the government. (12,50,71) According to an NGO, use of “judicial supervision,” where defendants are released on their own recognizance in advance of trial, has resulted in as many as 30 percent of human trafficking suspects not returning to participate in their criminal trials; severely limiting the ability of law enforcement officials to hold criminals accountable and putting the population at risk. (12,27) In addition, the government has yet to fully implement the “Child Friendly Court” program that will make it easier for child victims to provide testimony by using video-conferencing technology instead of confronting defendants in-person, which can result in re-traumatization. (27)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

The government’s ability to properly save and store data related to the worst forms of child labor was found to be inadequate, due to outdated data collection storage platforms and a lack of resources. (27)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including the efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Child Labor – Cambodian National Council for Children	Coordinates child labor issues at the national level including, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of all child right policies and programs. (8,30) Ensures that projects and programs follow the National Plan of Action on Child Labor. (8) Includes concerned ministries, businesses, trade unions, and NGOs. Oversees Provincial Committees on the Protection of Child Rights and Provincial Committees on Child Labor. (8,79) Coordinates all government ministries, institutions, international NGOs, development partners, and the community in promoting and protecting children’s rights. (21) Research was unable to determine whether this coordinating body was active during the reporting period.
Commune Committees for Women and Children	Advisory entities that raise awareness of child labor regulations, promote school attendance, collaborate with provincial labor departments to monitor for child labor violations, and refer children at risk of or engaged in child labor to social protection services at the local level. Led by the Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training’s (MOLVT) Child Labor Department. (22,30,80) During the reporting period, began organizing and training officials to oversee local child laborers, especially those living or employed at brick kilns. (64)
National Committee for Counter Trafficking (NCCT)	Coordinates government, NGOs, civil society, and private sector efforts to address human trafficking and sexual exploitation. (27,30,81,82) Focuses on children’s affairs, international cooperation, justice, law enforcement, migration, prevention, protection, recovery, reintegration, and repatriation. (81) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and the Ministry of Interior, with 4 vice chair ministries and 14 participating ministries. Oversees Provincial Committees for Counter Trafficking in each province. (27) During the reporting period, approved and promulgated a new 5-year national action plan outlining detailed inter-agency steps to combat trafficking in persons and protect victims. (12,29,71) Led production and launch of a victim identification manual and screening tool app in use at the Poipet Transit Center. (27) Also in 2019, delivered 113 trainings to 3,712 law enforcement officers on anti-trafficking laws, investigative techniques, and evidence collection. (64)
Coordinated Mekong Ministerial Initiative against Trafficking (COMMIT)	High-level policy dialogue comprising of the six nations of the Greater Mekong Sub-Region. (27,83) Meets regularly to discuss regional anti-trafficking agenda and share information. (27) Coordinates through Cambodian COMMIT Task Force, chaired by senior officials from the Ministries of Justice and Women’s Affairs. (27) Maintains annual COMMIT Work Plan with anti-trafficking programming and policies. (83) UN Action for Cooperation against Trafficking in Persons acts as COMMIT Secretariat and convenes meetings. (83) Research was unable to determine whether this coordinating body was active during the reporting period.

The Commune Committees for Women and Children are underfunded and have insufficient technical capacity to provide social protection services to children involved in or at risk of child labor. (80)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including integrating child labor elimination and protection strategies into relevant policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plans of Action on Combating the Worst Forms of Child Labor	The National Plan of Action on Worst Forms of Child Labor (2016–2025) aims to build the capacity of law enforcement officers, strengthen the enforcement of relevant laws, raise public awareness of child labor issues, and enhance child labor monitoring systems at the community level. (22) Research was unable to determine actions taken to implement this policy during the reporting period. The National Plan of Action on the Reduction of Child Labor and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2016–2025) is overseen by MOSAVY. Creates a roadmap to the complete eradication of the worst forms of child labor by 2025 in various sectors, including service, agriculture, mining, and energy. (21,63,84) Conducts awareness-raising activities, legal action, and collaborations with civil society actors. (21) Research was unable to determine actions taken to implement this policy during the reporting period. The National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation (2019–2023) aims to prevent and eliminate all forms of human trafficking, including by strengthening criminal law enforcement to protect children from exploitation in entertainment venues, integrating anti-human trafficking and child safety issues into the public school curriculum, and promoting the inclusion of vulnerable children in both formal and informal education. (81) Coordinated by the NCCT, with input from Ministries of Justice; Women’s Affairs; Foreign Affairs; Labor; and Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation. (10) Policy was implemented during the reporting period. (64)
Action Plan to Prevent and Respond to Violence Against Children (2017–2021)	Led by the Ministry of Women’s Affairs (MOWA). (64) Developed in response to the Cambodia Violence Against Children Survey (CVACS) conducted in 2013. (66) Aims to prevent and respond to violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor. (85) Acknowledges online sexual exploitation of children (OSEC) as an issue and references the need for OSEC-related interventions in policy and governance. Acknowledges the need to properly “assess the scale and specific nature” of OSEC in Cambodia to inform developments. (11) During the reporting period, the MOWA and the MOSAVY co-chaired the Inter-ministerial Steering Committee on Violence Against Women and Violence Against Children. (64)
National Policies on the Elimination of Child Labor in the Fisheries and Agricultural Sectors	The Action Plan for Gender Equality Promotion and Child Labor Elimination in the Fisheries Sector (2016–2020) is overseen by the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries under the Fisheries Administration of Cambodia (FiA). Aligned with the Strategic Framework for Fisheries (2010–2019). (63) Seeks to prevent and withdraw children from child labor and hazardous work in the fisheries sector. (86) The National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor in Fisheries is overseen by the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, and Fisheries under FiA. Aligned with the Strategic Framework for Fisheries (2010–2019). (63,84) The Policy on Childhood Development and Protection in the Agricultural Sector (2016–2020) establishes a strategic framework to protect children working in the agricultural sector. Seeks to prevent and reduce child labor, especially in hazardous work, and improve agricultural vocational training for youth ages 15 through 17. (7) Research was unable to determine actions taken to implement these policies during the reporting period.
National Child Protection Policies	The National Social Protection Strategy (2017–2021) aims to expand access to healthcare, nutrition, and educational services and to promote the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. (87,88) The Capacity Development Plan for Family Support, Foster Care, and Adoption (2018–2023) is overseen by MOSAVY. Improves services for children without parental care, vulnerable to child labor, and ensures that children can still live in a family setting. (10) Maintains a comprehensive database of all children living in residential and foster care. Funded by USAID through UNICEF. (10) Research was unable to determine actions taken to implement these policies during the reporting period. The Education Strategic Plan (2019–2023) seeks to ensure equitable access to education and improve the education system’s response to human trafficking and child labor. (89) Policy was implemented during the reporting period. (64)
Strategic and Operational Plan for the Implementation of Juvenile Justice Law (2018–2020)	Overseen by MOSAVY, funded by UNICEF. Seeks to build a sustainable juvenile justice system, and to provide effective protection and support to incarcerated juveniles who are vulnerable to child labor. (10) Research was unable to determine actions taken to implement this policy during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (81,89,90-93)

In September 2019, Cambodia became the 26th Pathfinding country to join the Global Partnership to End Violence Against Children, which aims to have a world where “every child grows up safe and secure.” (11,94) The Government of Cambodia created an action plan, which includes the goal of ending all forms of violence against children, while reinforcing the government’s dedication to implementing the inter-ministerial Action Plan to Prevent and Respond to Violence Against Children. (11)

Cambodia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT REGRESSION IN PRACTICE THAT DELAYED ADVANCEMENT

The government has not specifically included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Employment Policy. (95)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Better Factories Cambodia†	USDOL, the Government of Cambodia, Garment Manufacturers in Cambodia, and ILO-funded program to monitor garment factories' compliance with national and international labor standards, including those related to child labor. (8,64,96) Additional information is available on the program's website. During the reporting period, removed two child laborers from export-oriented garment factories. (11,64) In November 2019, MOLVT, Ministry of Commerce, and the ILO signed a Memorandum of Understanding to expand government funding to extend the monitoring mandate to the travel goods and bag sector and to formal subcontracting factories. (11)
Cambodia Countering Trafficking in Persons (CTIP) (2015–2020)	$10 million, USAID-funded, 5-year (included 1-year cost extension) program implemented by Winrock International to strengthen the capacity of government and community stakeholders to prevent human trafficking, protect at-risk populations, and increase the number of successful prosecutions of perpetrators. (64,97,98) During the reporting period, distributed 24,396 public awareness materials including, leaflets, videos, posters, and information cards on safe migration and human trafficking. Assisted approximately 43 victims of human trafficking, and 1,241 people vulnerable to human trafficking. (11,64) Provided CTIP trainings to 466 participants, and 97 soft skill trainings, including safe migration, to 698 people ages 15-39 years and identified as being vulnerable to human trafficking. (11,40,66) Additionally, advocated for 31 communes to allocate and use funds for trafficking in persons prevention activities. (64)
United Nations World Food Program (UN WFP) Country Program† (2020–2024)	Multi-government and private sector-funded program implemented in collaboration with the Government of Cambodia that includes a school feeding program for children in need. (99) During the reporting period, supported the Ministry of Education, Youth and Sport with a school feeding program in 1,167 primary schools in 8 provinces and provided 268,322 students with meals and food stuffs. Furthermore, 8,414 of the total 268,322 students received funds for food in addition to breakfast. (11,64) Announced that, with additional funding from the government, program will provide 2,000 tons of rice to 56,785 children in 205 primary schools in 6 provinces in 2020. (11,64)
Family Care First (FCF) REACT (2015–2020)	Led by MOSAVY. Funded by the European Union, USAID, the GHR Foundation, Save the Children Hong Kong, and UNICEF. (41,64) Aims to support more than 7,000 Cambodian children to live in safe, nurturing, family-based care. (41,64) Secretariat and Advisory Board collaborate with ministries, institutions, and relevant NGOs to review, amend, and develop policies, legal standards, concept notes, and strategic plans to support the common goal of ensuring safe, nurturing family-based care for Cambodian children. (11) During the reporting period, MOSAVY expanded non-monetary support. Launched Family Care First Secretariat as program's leadership body to strategically engage MOSAVY, enable the leadership of Family Care First, and promote the sustainability of the work. (11)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (100)

The government does not currently have a system in place to monitor and promote the reintegration of victims of forced labor and human trafficking, leaving victims vulnerable and at higher risk of recidivism, and leaving the government heavily reliant on NGOs to fill this need. (71) Therefore, during the reporting period, the government signed Memorandums of Understanding with four NGOs to be able to provide these services to victims. (27)

Many poor households in rural communities lack access to a social protection safety net, which increases the vulnerability of children to child labor as a means to supplement family income. (3,101) Although Cambodia has implemented programs that target child labor, the scope and resources provided to these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. (10,11)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Cambodia (Table 11).

	Establish a system to accurately capture and monitor the reintegration of victims of the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.	2019
	Expand social protection safety nets in rural areas to ensure that poor children and their families have access to services that may mitigate the risk of involvement in child labor.	2016 – 2019
	Provide sufficient resources to all social programs so that they can fully address the extent of child labor in Cambodia.	2019

In 2019, Cameroon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government supported a new 6 year project to address child labor in the production of cocoa and continued to support programs that provide services to vulnerable street children. In addition, unlike in previous years, the government published information on labor inspectorate funding. However, children in Cameroon engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in cocoa production. The government has not acceded to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. In addition, it has not prohibited the use of children in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs. Furthermore, the law does not criminally prohibit the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cameroon engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in cocoa production. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Cameroon.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	43.7 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	80.0

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Cameroon is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking from neighboring countries in Central and West Africa. (3,7,19) Due to increased awareness among parents of the risks associated with entrusting children to intermediaries who often promise to take children to urban centers to pursue education or an improved living arrangement, some perpetrators of human trafficking have resorted to kidnapping children. (3) The ongoing crisis in the Anglophone regions has contributed to a dramatic increase in underage prostitution and the number of teenage pregnancies, especially in areas with significant numbers of IDPs. (10) In Cameroon, Boko Haram uses boys as child soldiers, and girls as forced suicide bombers and sex slaves. (9)

A crisis in the Anglophone Northwest and Southwest Regions that began in 2016 as mass protests by lawyers and teachers has since evolved into an armed separatist conflict. The crisis has resulted in more than 2,000 persons killed, more than 44,000 refugees, and more than 500,000 IDPs. Armed separatist groups have called for and violently enforced boycotts of schools in the Northwest and Southwest Regions leading to long-term disruptions of education for children. (8,26) In the Far North Region, terrorist activity by Boko Haram and ISIS-West Africa have also disrupted children’s schooling. The disruption of children’s access to education places children at high risk of becoming victims of exploitation and child labor. (27,28) In 2019, in the Far North region, Boko Haram, which our report identifies as a non-state armed group, recruited and used 71 children in their operations. Of these 71 children, 49 were abducted. (24) Boko Haram also continues to forcibly recruit Cameroonian children as porters, cooks, and scouts. Boko Haram also used girls as forced suicide bombers and sex slaves and boys as child soldiers. (10,24)

Some community neighborhood watch groups, known as Vigilance Committees, may also have used and recruited children as young as age 12 in operations against Boko Haram, although there is no evidence of the government providing material support to these specific groups. Research also indicated government security forces recruited and used a minor to gather intelligence in the country’s Anglophone regions during the reporting period. (10) During the year, Anglophone separatist attacks on the education sector in the Southwest and Northwest Regions continued to disrupt the normal operation of schools and, in October 2019, more than 90 percent of primary and secondary-aged students were out of school in the Northwest, with only 10 percent of teachers reporting to work. In November, school attendance rose to 38.5 percent as schools in urban areas began to reopen. (29,30) Children in refugee or IDP camps are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and may have a particularly difficult time accessing education due to a lack of school infrastructure, teachers, and resources to pay for school-related expenses. (11,31)

Although Decree N° 2001/041 on the Organization of Public Schools guarantees free education in Cameroon, costs associated with education may be prohibitive to some families, who are required to pay for uniforms, books, and other school-related fees. (25,31,32) In addition, a lack of schools and teachers in rural areas, the absence of potable water and sanitation facilities, and long distances to schools hinder access to education. (11,25,33,34)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Cameroon has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography

In December 2019, the parliament passed a law authorizing the President of the Republic to ratify the UNCRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution, and Child Pornography, which Cameroon signed on October 5, 2001. (10)

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Cameroon's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of using children in illicit activities and the establishment of a compulsory education age that is consistent with the minimum age for work.

Cameroon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Children in Cameroon are only required to attend six years of primary school, which typically concludes at age 12. This standard makes most children ages 13 through 14 vulnerable to child labor as they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work. In addition, there is no free basic education for children in Cameroon as established by law, increasing the risk of children's involvement in child labor. (40,41) Human trafficking provisions remain discordant with international standards, as they require threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking, and individuals ages 16 to 18 are not considered children. (37,38) In addition, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children under age 18 are not comprehensive, as work at dangerous heights is not prohibited. (16,36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINTSS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINTSS)	Leads efforts to enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor; promotes decent working conditions, and leads the National Committee to Combat Child Labor (CNLCCTE) and the labor inspectorate. (12,47)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Prosecutes cases referred by the General Delegate for National Security (DGSN) or the Ministry of Defense's National Gendarmerie (SED), and contributes to investigations as appropriate. (48)
Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS)	Leads efforts to combat human trafficking. Provides social services through its National Referral System. (11,12,49,50) Through its Minors Brigade, supports local police in their investigations of child trafficking and the use of children in hazardous work. Uses other programs to help identify, reintegrate, and educate street children. (50,51)
General Delegate for National Security (DGSN)	Enforces laws against the worst forms of child labor and investigates violations in urban areas. (48) Through its Special Vice Squad, investigates cases of human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other forms of abuse against women and children. (16,48) Refers cases to MOJ or Ministry of Defense for investigation by SED. (52)
Ministry of Defense's National Gendarmerie (SED)	Investigates cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation in both urban and rural areas before referring cases to MOJ for prosecution. (52) Operates two toll-free numbers, 1501 and 113, for the reporting of human rights abuses, including trafficking in persons. (50)

Although it does not play a direct role in enforcement, Cameroon's National Commission on Human Rights and Freedoms advises government ministries on the enforcement of laws related to child labor and advocates for sanctions as appropriate. (11,51) Local representatives from the Ministry of Territorial Administration may settle child labor disputes or refer the case to the Ministry of Defense's National Gendarmerie, the General Delegate for National Security (DGSN), or the Ministry of Justice for further investigation and prosecution. (52) Article 109 of the Labor Code empowers inspectors to take direct legal action before the court against people infringing on the provisions of the labor law. (10)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of MINTSS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including financial resource allocation.

Although the government increased its number of labor inspectors from 2018, it is still insufficient for the size of Cameroon's workforce, which includes more than 9 million workers. (10,38,45,48,53) According to the ILO's technical advice of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Cameroon would employ about 660 labor inspectors; currently they employ 300 labor inspectors. (45,47,48,53-55) Furthermore, inspectors are tasked with conciliation duties that may detract from time devoted to their primary duties; and labor inspections are not permitted to be conducted in the informal sector, which is where the majority of child labor occurs. (10,35,56,57-59) In general, the labor inspectorate lacked resources during the reporting period, and field inspectors in particular lacked transportation. However, the 2019 budget included funding to purchase vehicles for some divisions with heavy workloads; 7 out of 10 inspection brigade teams commandeered a vehicle, as did 5 of the 58 divisional inspection teams, with 5 additional vehicles ordered in 2019. (10,11)

Although the government has not created a formal mechanism for filing and responding to complaints about child labor, victims and/or their relatives can report directly to any of the institutions involved in child labor law enforcement, including the Ministry of Social Affairs, (MINAS), MINLSS, State Defense Secretariat (SED), or Ministry of Justice (MOJ). (8) The Ministry of Social Affairs, the International Criminal Police Organization, and DGSN all maintain hotlines for reporting the worst forms of child labor. Calls are routed to the National Referral System for assistance to victims. (14,16,25,31,60,61) However, the system has not been well publicized since it was established in 2013, leaving the public unaware of its existence, and some calls may go unanswered. (31,60) Research was unable to determine how many cases of child labor were identified because of complaints made to these hotlines.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including collaboration between ministries.

The government does not publicly release information on its labor and criminal law enforcement efforts. Criminal law enforcement agencies do not receive adequate funding or training to investigate the worst forms of child labor, and high staff turnover is a challenge. (3,8,11) Despite credible reports that children were involved in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, there is no evidence that the government investigated any of the cases. (10) As a result, NGOs play a critical role in bringing child trafficking cases to the government's attention and providing services to victims. (3,8,52) No data was available for the reporting period on numbers of violations, prosecutions initiation, convictions, nor penalties in Cameroon. (8)

Border police continued efforts to ensure that children do not cross borders without being accompanied by a parent. Adults accompanying children must show proof of their relationship with the child by presenting the child's identification documents. (9,62) The government continues to acknowledge that a lack of awareness of child trafficking issues may prevent citizens from reporting offenses to enforcement agencies and that children may be afraid to speak against perpetrators in court. (3) Although the government generally considers children to be victims rather than offenders, reports indicate that the government has held children as young as age 5 in detention facilities for prolonged periods due to suspicion of being affiliated with Boko Haram, or to prevent them from being recruited into Boko Haram. (51,63-69)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including the lack of resources to carry out mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat Child Labor (CNLCTE)	Coordinates government efforts to combat child labor and proposes measures to harmonize Cameroon's legal framework to international standards. Implements the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC) which expired during the reporting period. (45,70,71) Led by MINTSS, includes representatives from 10 other ministries and government bodies. (47,70)
Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC) on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates government efforts to combat human trafficking. Chaired by the Secretary General of the Office of the Prime Minister; includes members of eight ministries, law enforcement personnel, civil society organizations, and NGOs. (3,31) Oversees Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons in Northwest, Southwest, and Littoral Provinces. (3,72) On March 12, 2020, IMC hosted a meeting attended by multiple agencies, eight local NGOs, and four international organizations (UNICEF, ILO, IOM, and INTERPOL). A representative of MINAS highlighted some activities conducted since April 2019: supporting 6 trafficking in persons victims during the first half of 2019; conducting 2,864 informational sessions reaching approximately 397,447 people nationwide; starting a feasibility study for the construction of a shelter for human trafficking victims in Mfou, Center Region; identifying 443 street children and providing social and economic re-integration support to 354 of them; providing care to 305 unaccompanied children; and reuniting 24 other unaccompanied children with their families. (50)

A lack of resources and socio-political unrest in the Anglophone regions hampered government efforts to effectively coordinate to combat the worst forms of child labor. (21)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
MOJ's National Action Plan for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in Cameroon (2015–2019)	Strived to combat exploitative child labor by disseminating standard operating procedures for the National Referral System, raising awareness about how to identify and report cases of child trafficking, increasing punishments for offenders, and building the capacity of labor inspectors. (48,73,74) Aimed to improve access to education for vulnerable groups by increasing the number of teachers and classrooms, establishing a legal framework to regulate parent teacher associations, and increasing the rate of educational attainment for girls. (74) Research was unable to determine whether actions were taken by the committee during the reporting period.
Decent Work Country Program (2014–2020)	Incorporates child labor concerns into the national strategy for work. (6) In 2018, the government extended the program by 2 years. (8) Research was unable to determine whether actions were taken by the committee during the reporting period.

The government did not formulate any new relevant policies during the reporting period but reported that it had taken into account policies carried out by the Ministry of Decentralization and Local Development in the National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labor (PANETEC), even though it had expired. (8, 10,51) The Trafficking in Persons Action Plan (2014–2019) did not receive dedicated funding; however, member ministries of the Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC) used their ministry funds to carry out activities in support of the Action Plan. (52) The government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (2010–2020) or the IMC's National Gender Policy Document (2011–2020). (75-77)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Fight the Phenomenon of Street Children (Project 559)†	In conjunction with the National Employment Fund, this MINAS-funded program provides street children with health care, education, and psychosocial care and supports the reintegration of street children by providing vocational training opportunities. (11,32,46) MINAS provided holistic care to 1,026 refugee children in the East and Far North Regions, with support from development partners and Civil Society Organizations; provided psychosocial care to 10,405 IDP children as of July 31, 2019; secured school placements for 539 IDP children in the Center, Littoral and West Regions; helped issue and distribute 2267 birth certificates; and recovered 56 Bakas children (including 31 boys and 25 girls) from trafficking suspects and returned the children to their families in the East Region. (10)
Support Project in Quality Management for Cocoa and Coffee Production/Forever Chocolate (2019–2025)*†	Promotes labor standards in cocoa industry, including the fight against child labor in conjunction with environmental protection. Identifies children in cocoa farming and those who are at risk of joining cocoa farms, and facilitates their return to school. (10) Implemented by NGO association Enfant Jeunesse Avenir , in partnership with Cameroon Cacao Industrial Corporation, Cameroon's biggest cocoa processor. Government ministries, including the Ministry of Health, MINAS, the Ministry of Women Empowerment and the Family, MINTSS, and the Ministry of Basic Education, are key stakeholders in the program. (10) The project is implemented in cocoa production basins using the Farmer Field School Extension Approach and is aimed at training cocoa farmers to produce cocoa free of child labor using environmentally friendly techniques. (10) The government also established a National Cocoa Academy led by the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Development. The training institute is also deployed in production basins with a view to popularizing good agricultural practices, including the prohibition of child labor on plantations. (10)
UNICEF Projects	Includes UNICEF Country Program (2018–2020), which prioritizes strengthening the child protection system to prevent violence and exploitation, especially sexual violence against girls. Provides financial and technical support to the government for the implementation of an inclusive birth registration project, with a particular focus on indigenous communities. (8) Services for Displaced or Refugee Children† is another UNICEF-funded program providing educational services to children affected by conflict, including: (8,10) CAREED2, which offers accelerated education curriculums for children in refugee camps in the Far North; ETAPES, which establishes temporary schools and protection centers in Adamawa and East regions; and the Child Protection and Education Project, which works with Catholic Relief Services in the East to enroll and retain refugee children in schools. (78) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this program during the reporting period.

Program	Description
United States Government Programs (non-DOL)	$27 million U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA)-funded McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program, which improves literacy and nutrition in 265 primary schools. In 2019, USDA and the Government of Cameroon expanded the scope of the program which now benefits 148,986 children in the Adamawa, East, North, and Northwest regions. (8,10) Targeted schools have seen an increase of about 14 percent in school enrollment, including children previously in child marriage, farming, animal rearing, and mining. (8,10) USAID/Office of Transition (OTI) Initiatives also had a program to stabilize border communities impacted by crisis, and to counter the spread of violent extremism. USAID/OTI continued to work in the Far North Region, with a focus on promoting social reintegration of former Boko Haram fighters and an estimated budget of $29.3 million in 2019. (10)
Cameroon Institute of Childhood (ICE) Rehabilitation Project (2017–2020)†	$2.9 million project financed by MINAS and its partners to rehabilitate a center in Betamba, which serves children in conflict with the law and provides vocational training to area youth. (11) In 2019, the government continued to rehabilitate the center by installing a second dormitory along with masonry and mechanic workshops. (10)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Cameroon.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (3,17)

Although the government has implemented programs to assist victims of child trafficking and children engaged in street work and domestic work, the scope of these programs is insufficient and does not fully address the extent of the problem in other sectors such as agriculture, mining, quarrying, and commercial sexual exploitation. (1,8,80) Government-run centers can temporarily house victims, but space is limited. (31,81,82)

In 2019, the Central African Republic made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Under a 2019 peace agreement, the government and non-state armed groups committed to ending and preventing grave violations against children, including the recruitment of child soldiers. Several parties signed Action Plans to implement these commitments, and 1,150 children were demobilized during the reporting period. The National Assembly also adopted an expansive new child protection code, and the government established the National Inter-Ministerial Committee to Combat Human Trafficking. However, children in the Central African Republic engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict by non-state armed groups and in diamond mining, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Additionally, the Central African Republic does not meet the international standard for minimum age protections since it does not include children working in the informal sector. Moreover, an estimated 1.3 million children lacked access to education because of ongoing instability, and limited resources hampered the government's implementation of policies and programs to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Central African Republic (CAR) engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in diamond mining and armed conflict by non-state armed groups. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture and domestic work. (1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in CAR.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	31.0 (373,742)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	63.1

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (6,7,10,18-23)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In February 2019, the government and 14 armed groups signed the Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic. (24,25) The peace agreement calls for the immediate cessation of recruitment of child soldiers by all parties to the conflict. (25) However, implementation has been challenged by the government’s limited control of territory outside the capital, Bangui. Non-state armed groups contest about 80 percent of the territory. (7,26) Many of these groups—including Anti-Balaka associated militias; ex-Seleka factions Front Populaire pour la Renaissance de la Centrafrique, Mouvement des Libérateurs Centrafricains pour la Justice, Mouvement Patriotique pour la Centrafrique, and Unité pour la Paix en Centrafrique; and unaffiliated elements—continued to recruit children as combatants, informants, cooks, and sex slaves. (10) During the reporting period, 1,150 child soldiers were demobilized from armed groups, and UNICEF documented more than 500 grave violations against children, including recruitment and use. (7,10,27) However, due to lack of funding and persistent insecurity, as many as 25 percent of children released since 2014 have not received reintegration support. (28,29)

Armed groups and criminal elements, including in some pastoralist groups, subjected children to forced domestic servitude and commercial sexual exploitation. (6,7) Children in rural areas were forced to work in artisanal diamond and gold mines, often for long hours and without protective equipment. (7) Children exposed to silver nitrate in gold mines often sustained injuries as a result. In some instances, relatives willfully exploited family members to generate additional income to support their households. (6,7) Girls may be trafficked into forced domestic servitude, especially in rural areas where government presence is limited or non-existent. In maisons de joie (“houses of joy”), girls as young as age 13 are subject to commercial sexual exploitation. (7) Maisons de joie are typically private residences at which alcohol and food are served to middle and upper-class customers. (7) As of September 2019, approximately 600,136 people were displaced within CAR, half of whom were children. (28,30) An estimated 2.9 million people, half of them children, require assistance and protection, while 2.1 million people were food insecure. (24,27) Displacement and chronic food insecurity are aggravating risk factors for forced labor and sex trafficking. (6)

Between 2017 and 2019, CAR saw a 21 percent increase in verified attacks on schools. (30) Fewer than three in five children in CAR complete their primary education, and only 6 percent graduate from secondary school. An estimated 1.3 million children lacked access to education because of ongoing instability. (27,31) The Ministry of Education has attempted to improve access to education by providing free school admission to children from IDP camps, waiving school exam fees for children affected by conflict, and expanding programs to provide birth registration, which may be required for school enrollment. (10,18,32-34) However, children continue to experience difficulties accessing education due to school fees, an absence of teachers, security concerns, destruction or looting of school materials and buildings by armed groups, and the unavailability of schools, especially in rural areas or IDP camps. (10,20,27,35-42) The continued occupation of school buildings by non-state armed groups presents additional challenges. (10,43) The state’s limited reach outside the capital precluded efforts to distribute educational resources in rural areas. (10,43,44) In 2019, some public school teachers were reportedly paid to work in rural areas, but due to persistent insecurity, they opted to remain in Bangui. Consequently, most rural schools remained closed. (10) During the reporting period, some civil society organizations reported that ethnic minority Muslims in the east were denied access to education. (5,10)

CAR’s birth registration rate, stymied by endemic poverty and administrative collapse, remains one of the lowest in Africa. (45) However, CAR’s new Child Protection Code enshrines the right to free, universal birth registration for all children. (46) Despite the new provision, the Family Code and a Presidential Decree mandate that schools will only accept children with documented proof of identity, such as a birth record/certificate. Based on this legal requirement, undocumented children were denied access to education and other social services. (10) Nevertheless in July 2019, the government, in collaboration with NGOs, delivered birth certificates to children who did not have civil status documentation. A total of 120 undocumented children received alternative judgments in the sub-prefecture of Berberati. (10)

The government did not collect or publish data on child work, child labor, or the worst forms of child labor in 2019. (10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

CAR has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in CAR's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Free Public Education	Yes		Ordinance N° 84/031; Article 9 of the Constitution; Articles 52 and 57 of the Child Protection Code (46,52-54)

* No conscription (52,55)

The Child Protection Code (CPC) was adopted by the National Assembly on February 27, 2020. (46,56) The legislation guarantees children ages 5–18 the right to free education, with public primary education compulsory and free. However, research was unable to locate original copies of laws establishing the compulsory education age at 15. (46,54)

Although the Labor Code prohibits work by children under age 14, the law does not apply to children outside of formal employment relationships. This fails to meet international standards, which require the protection of all children under minimum age for work laws. (47,61) Despite a 2016 study on hazardous work, CAR has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. (10,47,60,62) The minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, which may encourage children to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. Lastly, while CAR has ratified the declaration to the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict, it is unclear if law has been domesticated or published. (51)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Public Service, Modernization of Administration, Labor, Employment and Social Protection (MOL) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Modernization of Administration, Labor, Employment and Social Protection	Through its General Directorate of Labor and Social Welfare and seven regional labor directorates, monitors and enforces laws related to child labor. (12)
Ministry of the Promotion of Women, Family, and Protection of Children	Responsible for the enforcement of criminal laws against forced child labor. (5,34)
Internal Security Forces Police and Gendarmes	Enforce all laws, including those related to the worst forms of child labor. (61)
Ministry of Justice	Protects the rights of the child through its Rapid Response for Child Protection team and combats the worst forms of child labor through its courts and tribunals. (34,63)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Promotion of Gender, and Humanitarian Action (MSA)	Oversees child soldier issues and leads the government's anti-trafficking policy efforts through the National Council on Child Protection. Refers victims of child trafficking to NGOs and maintains an orphanage for children at risk of child trafficking. (63)
Special Criminal Court	Investigates serious human rights abuses committed since 2003, including the use of children in armed conflict. Hybrid court comprising international and national judges and prosecutors. (64,65)
Mixed Unit for Rapid Intervention and Repression of Sexual Violence (UMIRR)	Unit falls under the joint authority of the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Public Security and is part of a state organization supporting investigations into conflict-related sexual violence. UMIRR refers cases to a Special Criminal Court, a hybrid court embedded in the national justice system to address human rights violations. (36)

There is approximately 1 police officer for every 1,300 Central Africans. Government authority is largely absent outside the capital, and security forces outside Bangui may lack the resources and knowledge to enforce the law, including a lack of access to copies of relevant laws. (66)

The Special Criminal Court held its inaugural session in late 2018, and the Special Prosecutor announced a prosecutorial strategy in 2019. (10,59) The 2020 Child Protection Code establishes a National Council for the Promotion and Protection of Children, which will report directly to the Prime Minister, and a Children's Parliament. A Juvenile Court, also established under the law, will field all cases involving the health, safety, morals, and education of children. (46)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in CAR took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MOL that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including adequate financial resource allocation.

During the reporting period, the country's 7 regional labor directorates conducted 58 investigations. Inspectors issued 36 citations for labor violations, but no cases of child labor were reported. (7,10) However, research indicates that child labor is prevalent in all sectors of the economy. (7,10) Government efforts to combat child labor were hindered by a lack of labor inspectorate capacity and inadequate financial and material resources, including transportation, office facilities and supplies, and computers. (34,62,67-69) Also, the passage of Decree No. 12.177 in 2012 effectively removed regional labor directorates from the general directorate's chain of command. Thus, regional directorates are no longer required to submit periodic reports on inspection activities, as required under ILO C. 81. (67,70) In addition, civil unrest prevented labor inspectors outside Bangui from visiting artisanal mining sites. (7) Labor inspections remain limited to the formal sector and do not target the informal sector, in which child labor is most prevalent. (5,10)

In 2019, the government hired 17 additional labor inspectors, bringing the total number of labor inspectors and controllers employed to 70. Although newly hired labor inspectors received initial training, there was no record of child labor-specific training during the reporting period. (10,35) However, 5 inspectors and controllers received additional labor training at the African Work Administration Regional Center in Cameroon, and UNDP funded local training for 30 inspectors. (10) The Ministry of Labor also submitted a formal request to the ILO to provide training to labor inspectors. This training is scheduled to take place in 2020. (7) A complaint mechanism for filing and responding to reports of child labor exists, but there was no evidence that it was operational during the reporting period. (10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in CAR took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including insufficient human resources.

The 2020 CPC created specialized children’s police units to monitor industrial or mining areas for hazardous conditions. The units, under the expanded jurisdiction of the juvenile court system, will also be responsible for identifying criminal offenses against children. (10,46,56-60) The CPC also broadens social protections and creates new enforcement mechanisms for victims of sexual exploitation, forced labor, or human trafficking, and includes provisions for at-risk groups such as demobilized child soldiers, children of religious and ethnic minorities, and non-residents. (7,10,46) Under the new law, children associated with armed groups are entitled to state social protection services and immunity from prosecution. (10,46)

Nevertheless, judicial authorities lack the staff and resources to conduct investigations outside Bangui. (6,41,66,71) Cases were widely resolved outside of formal legal proceedings due to a lack of public trust, access, or knowledge about the justice system. (41,72-74)

Furthermore, juvenile criminal offenders may be imprisoned with adults, despite a 2016 decree that prohibits this practice, because no separate juvenile cells or juvenile prisons exist. (20,32) In 2019, in an isolated event, two child soldiers were arrested and detained in the prison of Bangui for several days following the fighting in Birao, located in northern CAR. (10,75) The UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR Child Protection Unit successfully advocated for their release. The two child soldiers were admitted to a host family for reintegration. (10)

The MOL is supposed to work with other ministries and UNICEF to provide assistance to victims of child labor, including its worst forms. Due to a lack of resources, the government relies primarily on the UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR, NGOs, and UNICEF to provide social services to victims. (5,20,76,77) In 2019, UNICEF reported cases of forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and child soldiering, with some children also forced to engage in illicit activities. (10,78) The Mixed Unit for Rapid Intervention and Repression of Sexual Violence (UMIRR) operated a 24-hour hotline to report cases of child trafficking but did not provide statistics on the number of calls received in 2019. (6) UMIRR officers identified two children who were victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Officials initiated an investigation into the alleged recruiter, but the case had not been referred for prosecution at the end of the reporting period. (79) Although the government has referral mechanisms that enable enforcement authorities and social services to refer children found in child labor situations, due to limited resources, the majority of cases were handled by NGOs. (10)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efforts to address all forms of child labor.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Children Soldier Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Mechanisms	The government worked with the UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR (MINUSCA), UNICEF, and other partner agencies to demobilize and reintegrate children into community life. (7,10,25,34,69) During the reporting period, UNICEF assisted 2,875 children who were child soldiers or victims of sexual violence, including psychosocial assistance, shelters, and community reintegration. (10) Between January and October 31, 2019, UNICEF and partners provided reintegration services to 965 children, including 219 girls, who were released from armed groups. This represented around 32 percent of the target. (42,75) During the same period, 105,962 children affected by conflict (including 43,182 girls) accessed protection and integrated psychosocial services through UNICEF-supported projects. Support included individual counselling and follow-up, structured play and recreational activities, and, when needed, referral to basic social services. (75,80) In addition, the UN Country Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting engaged with Action Plan signatories to end grave violations against children, and monitored their implementation. (43) A 2019 Country Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting meeting with a leader of Unité pour la Paix en Centrafrique (UPC) led to the appointment of a child protection coordinator at UPC headquarters. The leader indicated that he would designate other focal points in localities under UPC control. (43) In the fourth quarter of 2019, MINUSCA provided child protection training to 793 peacekeepers (military, police, and civilian personnel). (43)
National Inter-Ministerial Committee to Combat Human Trafficking*	Coordinates drafting and implementation of CAR's inaugural national trafficking in persons strategy and the National Action Plan to combat trafficking. In September 2019, President Faustin-Archange Touadéra appointed Gisele Pana, Minister for the Promotion of Women, Family and the Protection of Children, to be the government focal point for the new committee. (7) In addition to the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of the Interior, local and international NGOs, along with international organizations, serve on the committee. The committee met five times during the reporting period, and formally validated a 2020-2021 national action plan to combat human trafficking in March 2020. The president signed the action plan into law in March 2020, and the government allocated in-kind resources to implement plan components beginning in 2020. (7,79)
UMIRR	Combats sexual violence against women and children. This mixed unit includes representatives from MSA, the Ministry of Justice, and law enforcement (gendarmierie, police, and civilians) and is tasked with fighting violence against women and children. (7,34) During the reporting period, the government partnered with MINUSCA and IOM to provide training to police, gendarmierie, UMIRR, and community leaders on recognizing signs of human trafficking. IOM also provided training on developing and implementing standard operating procedures for government officials and law enforcement. (7) The 2020 Trafficking In Person National Action Plan extends UMIRR's authority to include human trafficking, and UMIRR has already investigated and referred cases to the High Court of Bangui. (7)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

While the government has established mechanisms to address some of the worst forms of child labor—including human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and children in armed conflict—these efforts do not extend to other sectors, such as mining, where child labor is prevalent. (20)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including coverage of all forms of child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in the Central African Republic†	Peace agreement signed by 14 armed groups and the Transitional Government in February 2019. Includes provisions to end the recruitment and use of children by armed groups, and to facilitate the separation of children from their ranks. (25,76,81) Armed groups listed by the UN for grave violations against children have signed Action Plans to implement these commitments. (82-84) The Action Plans cover the four areas for which the groups are listed, including recruitment and use, killing and maiming, rape and other forms of sexual violence, and attacks on schools and hospitals. (82-84) The Mouvement Patriotique pour la Centrafrique has appointed four commanders to serve as child protection focal points in areas under its control. (76,82) In August 2019, as part of its efforts toward implementing its Action Plan, the Mouvement Patriotique pour la Centrafrique signed a Command Order prohibiting its forces from committing grave violations against children. UPC and the Front Populaire pour la Renaissance de la Centrafrique also signed orders to prevent the grave violations for which the groups are listed. (85)

Policy	Description
Child Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Policy	Based on the 2015 Bangui Forum, this policy aims to facilitate initiatives to disarm, demobilize, and reintegrate child soldiers, in cooperation with UN agencies, other ministries, and armed groups. (12,32,55,74,86) Through its National Strategy for Community-Based Reintegration of Children Formerly Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups, provides temporary care to children separated from armed groups and establishes Community Child Protection Networks throughout the country. (33,75,86-88) During the reporting period, UNICEF and partners helped the government demobilize and reintegrate 1,150 child soldiers who were liberated from armed groups. (7)
National Strategy to Fight Gender-Based Violence in CAR (2018–2021)†	Aims to achieve “zero tolerance” for gender-based violence, including commercial sexual exploitation. (75) Written by the Ministry for the Promotion of Women, Family, and Protection of Children, in partnership with the UN Population Fund, UNHCR, UNICEF and UN Women. (59) The government dedicated some funding toward public information campaigns and several prosecutions related to gender-based violence in 2019. (75) By October 2019, the government had prosecuted 26 cases in criminal court and 375 cases in civil court; 75 cases remained under investigation. In cooperation with the EU, the government has opened a temporary shelter called “House of Hope” for female victims of gender-based violence. (75)
National Recovery and Peacebuilding Plan (2017–2021)	Aims to re-establish peace and security, and support reconciliation by disarming and reintegrating children associated with armed groups, promoting legal reform, seeking justice for victims, and improving access to education. (18,55,75) By the end of 2019, built 290 schools in Bangui and provinces with the support of international partners. Moreover, 2,000 teachers were trained in French pedagogy and assigned to schools in Bangui and other prefectures as part of the redeployment of the administration. (75) These efforts resulted in a 51 percent increase in school enrollment, with a significant improvement registered among girls in 2019. (75)

‡ The government has other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (75)

In 2019, several major parties to the conflict committed to a UN Action Plan to end and prevent grave violations against children. (82-84) In addition, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor, and a draft of a national policy addressing the elimination of child labor has yet to be adopted. (60,63) Furthermore, the government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the National Strategy for the Education Sector (2008–2020). (89)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Awareness-Raising Programs†	Programs that aim to raise awareness of child labor and international conventions. (12,32,33) In May 2019, during a ceremony attended by the Prime Minister, the government announced a national 3-year campaign to end and prevent recruitment and use of children by armed groups. The campaign will be implemented by state and multilateral child protection stakeholders, and with the support of War Child. (90)
Shelters for Unaccompanied Children†	MSA and UNICEF-supported centers that provide immediate care, food, and psychosocial support to vulnerable children and former child soldiers. (2) Between January and August 2019, 76,100 children affected by conflict were able to continue schooling through the establishment of temporary learning spaces. (42) NGOs, in coordination, with UNICEF and the MSA, removed children from forced labor and provided social services for rehabilitation, schooling or vocational training, and placement in stable homes. (10,78)
Education Programs	Programs to restore educational infrastructure include: a $23.4 million, EU-funded Education Program to rehabilitate and equip more than 300 schools in 4 prefectures and the capital; a Bangui Ministry of Mines and Ministry of National Education and Scientific Research program to construct schools in mining zones; and the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs’ Education Clusters, led by UNICEF and in collaboration with the Ministry of Education, to provide access to education in conflict-affected areas. (32-34,40,91-94) In 2019, the government supported the UNICEF-funded programs “Temporary Spaces for Learning and Child Protection (STEPS)” and “Child Friendly Spaces.” Together, these programs reached approximately 100,000 children with psychosocial support, including access to child-friendly spaces, and provided 120,000 children with formal or non-formal education. (42,75)

Program	Description
Birth Registration Campaign†	In support of the 2014 decree mandating free birth registration to children born during the 2012–2014 conflict, re-opens civil registration centers in areas affected by conflict and provides registration to children. (32) In July 2019, the government collaborated with NGOs to deliver birth certificates to children who were without civil status documentation. To this end, “ Avocats Sans Frontières ,” in partnership with “Expertise France,” conducted a survey in the prefecture of Mambéré Kadéï (Berberati). A total of 120 children without birth certificates have received alternative judgments in the sub-prefecture of Berberati. (10,75)

† Program is partially funded by the Government of CAR.

Although the government participates in a program that assists former child soldiers, coordination with non-government actors is weak, and the scope of this program is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. (5,34,74,87,95) The absence of resources and government authority throughout much of the country significantly hindered the government’s ability to combat child labor, and research found no evidence that the government has programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor. (34)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in CAR (Table 11).

In 2019, Chad made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Justice adopted a national road map to implement a 2018 trafficking in persons law, and the Ministry of National Education unveiled a 2 year education program to support up to 230,000 vulnerable children. Chad's Child Protection Brigade also added a hub office in Lai and trained 100 focal points responsible for coordinating investigations with regional offices. However, children in Chad engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Additionally, the government does not collect data on law enforcement efforts and has no active policies to address child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chad engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in cattle herding and domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chad. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	48.8 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	49.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	28.4

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2014–2015. (5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In the Lake Chad region, human trafficking networks exploit children in catching, smoking, and selling fish, and traffickers in rural areas sell children in markets for use in cattle or camel herding. (1,3) Human traffickers exploit children into forced labor as beggars in urban areas, agricultural laborers on farms, gold miners in the north of the country, laborers in charcoal production, and as domestic workers. (1) Child herders, some of whom are victims of forced labor, follow traditional routes for grazing cattle and may cross ill-defined international borders into Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Sudan, Niger, and Nigeria. (1,3,10) Domestically, boys sent to Koranic schools, or mouhadjirin, may be forced to beg and surrender the money they receive to their teachers. (1-3,6) In isolated incidents, boys are subjected to forced labor by military or local government officials. (1,11) Girls travelling to larger towns in search of work may be subjected to commercial sexual exploitation or domestic servitude. Additionally, Nigerian terrorist group Boko Haram and its rival offshoot, Islamic State-West Africa Province, forcibly abducted minors to serve as child soldiers, suicide bombers, child brides, and forced laborers. (11,12)

Chad hosts 480,000 refugees and asylum seekers, the largest per-capita population in Africa, more than half of whom are children. Refugee children from the Central African Republic are particularly vulnerable to exploitation. (13-15) The Boko Haram insurgency has internally displaced 174,000 people living in the Lake Chad borderlands. The resurgence of armed conflict in 2019 has newly displaced 42,000 persons internally and triggered an influx of 5,000 Nigerian refugees. (16,17) Children in Chad's refugee and IDP communities are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking due to their economic instability and lack of access to support systems. (1,11,16,17)

The Constitution and the Law Orienting the Education System mandate free and compulsory education in Chad. (18,19) Moreover, Chad was first in the region to integrate its network of refugee schools into the national education system; these schools are fully accredited and receive state funding. (20) However, the country lacks a sufficient number of schools, classrooms, and teachers, requiring students to travel long distances. (3,21,22) Some schools do not offer all grade levels, and others require payment of cost-prohibitive fees. (3,6,21) In 2019, intermittent strikes by civil servants to protest cuts in benefits resulted in lost school days. (3) Attacks by non-state armed forces shuttered a total of 49 schools during the 2018–2019 academic year, affecting 12,046 students (including 5,416 girls) and 118 teachers. (10) In addition, birth certificates may be required for enrollment in school, although this rule is not consistently enforced, especially in rural areas. (3) Only 12 percent of children nationwide are registered at birth, with some areas experiencing birth registration rates as low as 5 percent. (6,23)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Chad has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Chad's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the use of children in illicit activities.

‡ Age calculated based on available information (18)

Several laws are still awaiting approval by the National Assembly, including the Child Protection Code, the Family Code, and amendments to the Labor Code, which contain additional provisions criminalizing child trafficking and extending protection to children working in the informal sector. (2,3,7,32,57)

The draft child protection law prohibits use of children for illicit activities. No laws are currently in force prohibiting children from being used, offered, or procured for illicit activities (32).

As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (7,18,24)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Public Service, Employment, and Social Dialogue that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Employment, and Social Dialogue (MOPS)	Implements child labor laws. (3) Oversees the labor inspectorate and maintains a specific point of contact to assist in coordinating child protection and human trafficking issues. (3)
Ministry of Justice, Human Rights, and Guardian of the Seal (MOJ)	Drafts and enforces laws and coordinates efforts to protect human rights. Through its Directorate for Protection and Legal Monitoring of Children, enforces child labor laws. (3)
National Police's Child Protection Brigade (CPB)	Enforces and investigates allegations of child exploitation, including human trafficking and the worst forms of child labor, and acts as the coordinating institution for government responses. (1,6) Evacuates children to its headquarters in N'Djamena, from where they may be moved to Ministry of Women, Childhood Protection and National Solidarity (MWCPNS) facilities in Koundoul. (3) The CPB or other local authorities notify the Ministry of Justice's Child Protection Directorate, UNICEF, and local NGOs when there is a case of child trafficking or abuse. (11) Allegations may be submitted directly by the public or by the MOPS, MWCPNS, or MOJ. The government's regional child protection technical committees also identify and refer child trafficking victims to the CPB. (11) CPB central offices are located in Chad's largest cities (N'Djamena, Moundou, Sarh, Mongo, Mao, and Abéché). (3,11) During the reporting period, CPB added a hub office in Lai (Mayo Kebbi Province) for a total of seven nationwide hubs: N'Djamena, Moundou, Sarh, Mongo, Mao, and Abéché, and Lai. (3)
Ministry of Women, Childhood Protection and National Solidarity (MWCPNS)	Protects children's rights, provides temporary shelter to victims, and assists with reintegration when appropriate. Through its Child Protection Directorate, leads government efforts on child protection, including from child labor, and liaises with the Child Protection Directorate at MOJ. (6,33)

In 2019, 30 CPB investigators received training on interview procedures with minors. (3) Separately, the CPB trained 100 "focal points" spread throughout all 23 provinces during the reporting period. These focal points are not trained investigators, but they are responsible for coordinating investigations with hub offices and referring allegations to investigators. (3) The CPB also operationalized a UNICEF-funded headquarters in N'Djamena during the reporting period. The headquarters will host representatives from partner ministries, further enhancing CPB's enforcement capacity. (3) However, research indicates that the CPB is not well-known by the public, thus limiting its impact. (3,34)

Labor Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether labor law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to combat child labor. (3)

In addition to 30 full-time inspectors, the Ministry of Public Service, Employment, and Social Dialogue employs 50 labor controllers who act in an advisory role (but are unable to conduct inspections themselves). (3) Although a hiring freeze has prevented any new labor inspectors from joining the labor inspectorate, 18 trainees from the National Administration School (École Nationale d'Administration) are scheduled to graduate in 2020. (3) However, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Chad's workforce, which includes approximately 5.6 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Chad would employ about 140 labor inspectors. (2,35,36) In addition, the government did not provide information on its labor law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report.

Ongoing austerity measures hampered inspectors' ability to conduct inspections. (1,6) Budget cuts enacted during the reporting period further constrained the ability of inspectors to conduct their activities. (3) Labor inspectors lack sufficient resources, including transportation, to conduct investigations outside the city in which they are based. (3,6,21) Research indicates that the informal sector, in which many children work, is also largely unmonitored. (2,21) In cases involving children working as herders, local officials or NGO lawyers have negotiated settlements with employers for damages or fulfillment of contract terms on behalf of victims' families. (11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to combat child labor.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	No (33)	Unknown (3)

Investigations uncovered cases of commercial sexual exploitation and child soldiering during the reporting period. However, the total number of cases is unknown because the government does not maintain a centralized criminal records database. All criminal records are handwritten, and hard copies are stored at courts and regional tribunals. (1,3) Therefore, the government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report. (3) Judiciary and enforcement agencies have not been fully trained on the 2018 President's Ordinance on Trafficking in Persons; therefore, some perpetrators of human trafficking were released. (33,37,38) Furthermore, child victims may be detained with their traffickers due to a lack of available service providers. (38)

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Civil society organizations typically assist with providing temporary shelter, legal assistance, and family reintegration services; they also track prosecutions and convictions. (1,3) A lack of infrastructure, erratic and insufficient funding allocations, and under-enforcement of existing penalties also pose barriers to enforcement. (3,21,33) Intermittent strikes during the reporting period also affected the judicial system's ability to function. (1,3,39)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including funding and efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers	Coordinates government efforts to eliminate the use of children in armed conflict and address the worst forms of child labor. Located in each of the eight military regions and includes representatives from the government, army, gendarmerie, and civil society organizations. Conducts awareness-raising activities and training in the military. (3) A child soldiers task force, comprising UNICEF, the Ministry of Defense, MOJ, and MWCPNS, periodically screens recruitment pools for minimum age requirement violations. There is no indication that the government recruits or uses child soldiers. (11) Research was unable to determine whether the committee was active during the reporting period.
Working Group on the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinates government efforts on child trafficking, provides training, conducts awareness-raising activities, and strengthens the network of government organizations that address human trafficking. Chaired by MWCPNS's Child Protection Directorate and includes representatives from four other ministries, including MOPS. (34) Did not meet during the reporting period. (3)
MWCPNS's Regional Child Protection Committees	Coordinate regional government efforts to address the worst forms of child labor and refer victims as appropriate. (1,11,33) Members include judiciary, police, labor inspectors, educators, civil society, and social services providers. (33) Victims may file civil suits to seek damages from traffickers. In cases involving children trafficked as herders, local officials or NGO lawyers negotiated settlements with employers for damages or fulfillment of contract terms on behalf of victims' families. (11) In 2019, educated children on their rights and raised awareness of children's rights among adults as part of the "Day of the African Child" celebration with the African Union. (3) However, a lack of funding and personnel limited further activities. (11)

On June 16, the Ministry of Women, Childhood Protection and National Solidarity and the African Union celebrated the "Day of the African Child" by educating children on their rights and raising awareness of children's legal rights among adults. (3)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Road Map to Implement the President's Ordinance on Trafficking in Persons†	Adopted in 2019, with the ultimate goal of implementing a National Action Plan and coordinated interagency enforcement of the 2018 President's Ordinance on Trafficking in Persons. (1,3) Includes provisions for training members of the courts, local authorities, traditional and religious leaders, members of civil society, and members of enforcement agencies. (11) The 2018 law also designates the National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking to design the national trafficking action plan. (33,37) The committee was not established during the reporting period. (11,33)
Five-Year Plan for Development (2016–2020)	Developed by the Ministry of Economy and Development Planning. Aims to conduct a survey on child labor every 3 years, increase the rate of birth registrations, increase educational opportunities, and strengthen the human and financial capacity of the MOPS's directorate charged with combating the worst forms of child labor. (38,40) Research was unable to determine if the components of the policy pertaining to child labor were active during the reporting period.

Policy	Description
Interim Education Plan (2018–2020)	Includes measure to adopt bilingual education (French and Arabic) in basic education and integrate Chad's refugee camp schools into the national school system. Education Cannot Wait, a UNICEF-funded program, was partially developed under the auspices of the Interim Education Plan. (41) In 2020, the government announced a 1 year extension of the plan. (42)
Vision 2030	Developed by the Ministry of Economy and Development Planning. Aims to increase educational opportunities, establish social protection policies, and implement a national employment policy with a youth focus. (43) Research was unable to determine whether the policy was active during the reporting period.

† The policy was adopted during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (6,44,45)

Although the government adopted a roadmap to address trafficking in persons, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including funding and adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
World Bank-Funded Projects	Projects aim to improve safety nets and provide access to basic services. Include: Safety Nets Project (2016–2020), a $10 million project that provides conditional cash transfers and cash-to-work programs; Refugees and Host Communities Support (2018–2023), a $60 million project to improve access to health and education services for refugees and host communities by rehabilitating and constructing primary schools; the Education Sector Reform Project Phase 2 (2013–2020), a $65 million project to improve education conditions in primary and secondary schools; and the Sahel Women Empowerment and Demographic Dividend–AF Phase 2 (2014–2023), a $170 million project to provide girls, adolescents, and women access to quality education. By the end of 2019, the Sahel Women Empowerment program had reached 13,000 vulnerable children with school kits, housing, payment of school fees, and academic support. Secondary school attendance increased by 26 percent in 3 regions (Lac, Kanem, and Salamat), the dropout rate was cut in half, and 397 safe spaces in schools were created. (46) By the end of the reporting period, the Education Sector Reform project had built and equipped 500 classrooms, and procured and distributed close to 3 million textbooks. In addition, 20,000 pupils (60 percent of them girls) learned to read and write, and nearly 13,000 community teachers were trained. (46–52)
UNICEF Programs*	In 2019, UNICEF constructed or rehabilitated 51 temporary learning spaces in Lake province, facilitating access to education for 10,200 children. (16) UNICEF also trained 328 parents' association members on income-generating activities to support schools in conflict-affected areas. During the reporting period, UNICEF and partners also reunited 28 unaccompanied children, 9 of whom were formerly associated with armed groups, with their families. (16) In December 2019, UNICEF's Education Cannot Wait (2020–2022)* program announced a 2 year, $16 million grant to support education for 230,000 at-risk children. The program was developed under the Ministry of National Education's Transitional Education Plan, Program to Strengthen Literacy, Humanitarian Response Plan and Education Cluster Strategy. (41) Interventions include early childhood education initiatives, and out-of-school adolescent children (ages 9 to 14) will benefit from non-formal education and literacy programs. (41)
Reception Centers†	Run by MWCPNS with the assistance of UNICEF and local NGOs; centers located throughout the country provide temporary assistance to victims of child trafficking, including food, education, medical and psychological care, and reintegration services. (1,3) The National Solidarity Fund, maintained by the Prime Minister's Office, funds temporary shelter or reunification assistance for victims. (53) Child Protection Directorates at various ministries and the CPB work together to provide support and reintegration services to victims of exploitation. (3) Shelters continued to provide victim services during the reporting period. (3)
UNDAF (2017–2021)	Aims to provide access to quality education for children who are school age, refugees, and vulnerable, and to improve social protection and promote good governance. (54) Research was unable to determine whether the program was implemented during the reporting period.
WFP Strategic Plan (2019–2023)	$1.3 billion program funded by WFP to improve food security and educational outcomes. Aims to provide technical assistance to the Ministry of Education, distribute school lunches to crisis-affected areas, and disperse cash to girls who are attending school. (55)

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Chad.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (33)

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The government's funding of social programs continued to be limited due to austerity measures during the reporting period, and social services are limited to urban areas. (3) Although Chad has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem, particularly the use of child labor in herding cattle, forced child labor in domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation. (56)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Chad (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws specifically prohibit children from being used, offered, or procured for illicit activities.	2011 – 2019
	Ratify pending laws criminalizing child trafficking and extending protection to children working in the informal sector.	2019
	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2019
Enforcement	Ensure that the roles of enforcement agencies are well-known and understood by the public; that law enforcement agencies receive sufficient resources, including training; to carry out their mandate; and that children are not detained with alleged perpetrators due to a lack of available service providers.	2016 – 2019
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties, and by providing inspectors with sufficient resources, including training, to conduct inspections in both the formal and informal sectors.	2014 – 2019
	Collect, store, and publish data on law enforcement efforts, including information about labor inspectorate funding, the number and type of inspections conducted, whether violations were found, penalties imposed and fees collected, and the number of criminal investigations conducted, prosecutions initiated, and convictions obtained.	2014 – 2019
	Significantly increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO technical advice.	2012 – 2019
	Ensure that criminal law enforcement agencies are sufficiently funded, law enforcement officers are trained, and existing penalties are enforced according to the law.	2015 – 2019
	Ensure that children are not subjected to the worst forms of child labor by military or local government officials.	2019
Coordination	Ensure that coordinating committees receive adequate resources to meet and carry out their mandates to coordinate efforts and respond to child labor issues.	2014 – 2019
Government Policies	Adopt a policy to combat all relevant worst forms of child labor in Chad and ensure that existing policies are implemented.	2009 – 2019
Social Programs	Ensure access to education for all children by eliminating school-related fees; ensure that schools are safe spaces; and increase the number of schools, grade levels, classrooms, and teachers available throughout the country, including for children in refugee camps.	2014 – 2019
	Ensure that all children are issued birth certificates, which may be required for school enrollment.	2014 – 2019
	Ensure that existing programs receive adequate funding to support victims of child labor throughout the country, and that programs are implemented as intended.	2016 – 2019
	Establish or expand programs to provide services to children engaged in the worst forms of child labor, such as the use of forced child labor in herding cattle, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2019

In 2019, Chile made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Prosecutor’s Office signed a cooperative agreement with the Ombudsman’s Office for the Rights of Children to improve coordination in providing services to children in need, and the Undersecretary of Labor created the Child Labor Eradication Department to ensure Chile’s compliance with international treaties that protect the rights of children and adolescents. In addition, the government passed legislation to regulate the participation of children and adolescents in criminal testimony, including cases of human trafficking, to avoid re-traumatizing victims. It also developed an updated Anti-Trafficking National Action Plan for the 2019–2022 period and continued to fund a number of social programs to address child labor. However, children in Chile engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Although the government made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas during the reporting period, existing prohibitions related to forced labor do not meet international standards because forced labor is criminally prohibited only when it results from human trafficking. In addition, prohibitions related to the use of children for illicit activities do not meet international standards. Moreover, there is a lack of publicly available enforcement data, including the labor inspectorate funding and number of labor inspectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chile engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. (1-3) The results of the 2012 National Survey of Activities of Children and Adolescents (Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes) indicate that 70.6 percent of working children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in work classified as dangerous. (2) Table I provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Chile.

Table I. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	3.8 (94,025)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	99.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	4.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		94.8

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

	Commercial sexual exploitation, including in the production of pornography, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3,6,9,11,12,16,17)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In Chile, children are subjected to human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work. (3,8,9,11) Children, some of whom may be trafficking victims, are also used to steal, or to produce, sell, and transport drugs near the borders of Peru and Bolivia. (3,9,11) In 2019, the National Minors’ Service (SENAME) served 1,477 children and adolescents who were victims of commercial sexual exploitation and child pornography. Among those children, approximately 91 percent were girls and nine percent were boys. (6) According to SENAME’s Worst Forms of Child Labor Registry, during the reporting period 369 children were involved in the production and trafficking of drugs. (6) Child labor also continued to be a problem in the informal economy and agriculture, particularly in rural areas. (10)

In Chile, education is compulsory through secondary school; however, some educational barriers do exist, including the lack of transportation to schools in rural areas, specifically for migrant children. (6) Indigenous children and adolescents from Otavalo, Ecuador, are especially vulnerable to human trafficking for labor exploitation in Chile. (13,18) Children are also involved in street work, especially in Santiago, including selling handicrafts, clothes, or other goods. (11) In Coquimbo, children sell products in street markets and work as jugglers. (8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Chile has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Chile's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of forced labor.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 13 of the Labor Code (19)

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 367 and 411 of the Penal Code; Law No. 20.594; Law No. 20.526 (23,25,26)

Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 26 of Law No. 20.357 (28)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18‡	Articles 4, 25, and 27 of the General Education Law No. 20.370 (29)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 4 of the General Education Law No. 20.370 (29)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (29)

In 2019, the Ministry of Labor introduced a draft bill which will update the current legal framework for hiring adolescents under certain conditions and increase fines associated with child labor. (30,6,31) The law was still under review by the Senate as of May 2020. (32) In addition, new legislation was passed and is being implemented that will allow children or adolescent victims in criminal testimony, including cases of trafficking in persons, to testify by video with questioning conducted by a qualified expert intermediary. (33)

However, Chilean laws related to forced labor are not sufficient because they do not criminally prohibit forced labor except when it results from human trafficking. (23,24,30) Prohibitions related to the use of children for illicit activities do not meet international standards because they only criminalize supplying children with drugs or inducing children to use drugs. (34,35) In addition, as Chile's minimum age for work is lower than the age for compulsory education, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (19,29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the National Labor Directorate that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MINTRAB)	Designs and implements national strategies on child labor and generates public awareness of child labor and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (16) Enforces child labor laws, coordinating with the National Labor Directorate and its specialized support unit, the Child Labor Program Office (PCTI). (3, 13) PCTI was elevated to a department-level entity in 2019, allowing it to more adequately combat child labor by developing short- and long-term department goals and activities. (30) PCTI coordinates both the Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor, which conducts technical studies on child and adolescent labor issues and evaluates current policies to eliminate child labor, and the National Advisory Committee on Child Labor. (6,36-38)
National Investigations Police (PDI)	Investigates and prevents the worst forms of child labor by conducting community outreach activities, including trainings and information sessions. (39) Operates under the Ministry of the Interior. (13) Within PDI, the Human Trafficking Brigade investigates the trafficking of children, modern slavery, and organized crime. (33,39) The Sexual Assault Victim Care Center provides support to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (39) The local secretary of labor in Aysén region and the National Institute of Human Rights provided training on the eradication of child labor to PDI members in August 2019. (40)
National Uniformed Police (Carabineros)	Investigates, prevents, and detects crimes, including child labor violations, by conducting community policing and specialized investigations. Under the Directorate for Family Protection, provides specialized orientation on policies and operating plans for detection and prevention of domestic violence and child abuse, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (17) Operates under the Ministry of the Interior. (13) Receives referrals on the worst forms of child labor from the National Labor Directorate. (6)
National Prosecutor's Office (Fiscalía Nacional)	Investigates and prosecutes crimes, including those involving commercial sexual exploitation and the trafficking of children. Trains and coordinates with interagency partners, including PDI, Carabineros , and regional and local prosecutor's offices. (6,41,42) In 2019, signed a cooperative agreement with the Ombudsman's Office for the Rights of Children to improve coordination, specifically on the expedition of legal matters to more efficiently provide services for children in need. (43) At the regional level, the Prosecutor's Office of Magallanes met with first response health workers in July to train and educate workers on the best way to respond to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation without secondary victimization. (44)
National Minors' Service (SENAME)	Coordinates the provision of services to vulnerable children in collaboration with Offices of the Protection of Rights. Operates under the Ministry of Justice. (6,46) In coordination with MINTRAB and ILO, oversees the worst forms of child labor registry (Sistema de Registro Único e Intervención de la Peores Formas de Trabajo Infantil), which tracks incidents of the worst forms of child labor and provides information on programs designed to assist child workers. (47) The Offices of the Protection of Rights (Oficinas de Protección de Derechos) refer cases of children whose rights have been violated to appropriate social services and monitor cases of the worst forms of child labor. These offices are located in municipalities throughout the country and are part of the larger social protection network overseen by SENAME. (45)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the National Labor Directorate that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including financial and human resource allocation.

The number of vehicles available to labor inspectors is insufficient, especially in areas where distances between regional offices and employers can be great. (12) The number of labor inspectors is also likely insufficient for the size of Chile's workforce, which includes nearly nine million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Chile would employ about 592 inspectors. (51) The government did not provide information on the labor inspectorate's funding in 2019 for inclusion in this report.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including penalties for promoting or facilitating the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

† The National Prosecutor's database does not differentiate between investigations and prosecutions.

During the reporting period, 50 prosecutors, specialized attorney advisers, and witness and victim protection professionals from the National Prosecutor's Office were trained on the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. (6,33) The National Prosecutor's Office also held a full-day training on human trafficking and migrant smuggling for 40 forensic investigators of the Center for Victims of Sex Crimes, which is part of the National Uniformed Police (Carabineros). (33) When an inspection uncovers a case of the worst forms of child labor, the National Labor Directorate immediately notifies the Carabineros, who will open a criminal investigation in coordination with the National Prosecutor's Office. (3)

In 2019, the National Prosecutor's Office prosecuted 19 defendants, 8 of whom were convicted, for the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. (33) Two Ecuadorian adults were convicted of labor trafficking an Ecuadorian adolescent indigenous girl. Both individuals received sentences of 3 years of jail time, although they served their time on probation. (6,33) Two Bolivian women were convicted of sex trafficking two Bolivian adolescent girls and after receiving a sentence of 4 years of prison time, the sentences were substituted by deportation. (6,33) Two individuals were also convicted of facilitation of the prostitution of minors and received a sentence of 61 days, which was suspended. (33)

Judges frequently suspend or commute sentences of individuals convicted of commercial sexual exploitation of children. (6,9) Additionally, the penalties for promoting or facilitating the commercial sexual exploitation of children, ranging from 3 to 5 years imprisonment, are not commensurate with those for other serious crimes, such as rape. (9) Moreover, there is a lack of adequate shelters for child victims of trafficking in persons. (33)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor	Oversees implementation of the National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025) with the Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor. (17) Led by MINTRAB and includes representatives from the Ministries of Agriculture, Education, and Justice; the National Statistics Institute; the National Tourism Service; SENAME; PDI; and the Carabineros . (53) The Regional Advisory Committees for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Workers are led by the Regional Secretary of Labor and replicate at the regional level the functioning of the National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor. (13) Both the national level and regional level committees held meetings regularly throughout 2019 to coordinate efforts, and new regional committees were established in Nuble and Tocopilla. (6,54–56)
Child Labor Eradication Department*	Ensures Chile's compliance with international treaties that protect the rights of children and adolescents from abuses in the labor market. Implements the 2015–2025 National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers. (6,57) Created in 2019 by the Undersecretary of Labor. (6,57)
Undersecretary for Childhood	Coordinates the development and implementation of public policies and programs to protect children, namely the Subsystem of Integral Protection of Children Chile Crece Contigo program. Located under the Ministry of Social Development. (3,58,59) Tasked with enacting the proposed National Policy on Children and developing coordination mechanisms for inter-agency work. (3,58,59) The Undersecretary continued to serve children throughout the country in 2019 through the Chile Crece Contigo program. (60)
Ombudsman's Office for the Rights of Children (Defensoría de los Derechos de la Niñez)	Promotes compliance with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other international conventions ratified by Chile related to children's rights. (3,61,62) During the reporting period, worked with the Inter-agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons in a dissemination campaign to share statistics on children trafficked throughout Chile. (39)
Inter-agency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons (MITP)	Coordinates the government's anti-human trafficking efforts and is divided into three sub-committees: awareness and prevention, control and prosecution, and protection and support for victims. (33) Led by the Ministry of the Interior with support from law enforcement agencies, the Ministry of Foreign Relations, the Ministry of Justice, the National Prosecutor's Office, SENAME, and others. (6,63) Regional task forces throughout the country have also been created. (6,33) In 2019, the Ministry of Labor actively participated in the task force, drafting a new National Action Plan (2019–2022) against trafficking in persons and incorporating dissemination campaigns on the eradication of child labor into the plan. (6,11) The Task Force also added 17 new member organizations during the reporting period, including the Chilean Supreme Court studies' division. (33)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025)	Establishes a strategy to eradicate child labor by: (1) combining efforts across national and regional agencies and private and public entities, and (2) requiring regions to establish a strategy to address child labor issues in the area. (53) MINTRAB oversees the implementation of regional strategies, including the design and implementation of regional operating plans. (17) In 2019, MINTRAB worked with the Ministry of Education under this plan to conduct an awareness-raising campaign throughout the country to prevent child labor. (30) Activities included commemorating World Day Against Child Labor in several regions, workshops on protecting adolescent workers and preventing child labor and sexual exploitation of children, and providing children with educational materials discouraging child labor and encouraging school attendance. (64) MINTRAB also worked with the Network of Businesses United for Childhood and ILO to create a self-diagnostic tool to help businesses assess their knowledge of their role in protecting children and implement measures in their businesses to promote children's rights. (65,66)
National Plan of Action for Children and Adolescents (2018–2025)	Created by the Undersecretary for Childhood, the Action Plan works to consolidate, monitor, and improve all public initiatives that protect the rights of children and adolescents. (6,30,67) Among the Plan's many objectives is the increased coordination of and strengthening of the National Strategy for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers (2015–2025), including expanding programs that help families at risk of child labor find employment so that their children will be less likely to work. (30,61,67) MINTRAB participates and provides information and guidance regarding child labor. (68) In June 2019, representatives from the Undersecretary for Childhood, UN Development Program, and UNICEF held an initial meeting to propose goals for the plan and its implementation. (69)

Policy	Description
Third Action Plan against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (2017–2019)	Creates cooperation mechanisms for private and public institutions to collaborate on preventing and detecting commercial sexual exploitation of children and providing social services and rights restitution to victims. (70,71) In 2019, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights drafted and presented legislation regarding the participation of children victims in criminal testimony and created a campaign for its public promotion, #QueNoSeRepita (That it Doesn't Happen Again). (33,72)
Anti-Trafficking National Action Plan (2019–2022)	Seeks to prevent and combat human trafficking, with a focus on women and children. Encompasses four strategic areas: (1) prevention and awareness raising, (2) prosecution, (3) victims' assistance and protection, and (4) inter-institutional cooperation and coordination. (73) MITP developed the Action Plan in 2019, which was approved at the working level but is awaiting approval at the ministerial level. However, all member agencies worked under the new plan's guidelines in 2019. (33,52,74) The new National Action plan expands efforts to address trafficking by focusing on partnerships with public policy offices, re-integration of victims into society, post-catastrophe situations, and support for victims whose traffickers were prosecuted under laws not specific to human trafficking. (33,52)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (75,76-79)

In 2019, the Government of Chile became the first country in Latin America designated as a “Pathfinder Country” under the Alliance 8.7 program, which calls for the eradication of child labor by 2025, and forced labor, modern slavery, and human trafficking by 2030. (6,33,80)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, which cover the main sectors where child labor has been identified in the country (Table 10).

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Walking Together for the Eradication of Child Labor (2017–2019)†	Aimed to strengthen the employability of family members and guardians of children and adolescents who are at risk for child labor. Included job training and assistance with job search. (81) Led by MINTRAB in collaboration with the Catholic Church and implemented in Maipú, Quilicura, Quinta Normal, and in the metropolitan region of Santiago. (81) The program and its implementers in the Catholic Church were recognized in 2019 for their work in helping more than 5,000 cases of families at risk of or in situations of child labor in different communities of Metropolitan Santiago since 2007. (82)
Regional Action Group for the Americas‡	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism sector in Latin America. Administered in Chile by the National Tourism Service. (16) In 2019 for Day Against Child Slavery, the group launched a social media campaign mobilizing the tourism sector to act in the prevention of the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (83)
USDOL-Funded Projects*	Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP 16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a project that improves knowledge of these issues through research and data-driven techniques, strengthens policies and improves government capacity, and strengthens partnerships to accelerate progress. In 2019, under the MAP 16 project, the Ministry of Social Development, MINTRAB, ILO, and UNICEF worked to develop a revised questionnaire for a new Survey of Activities on Children and Adolescents. (84) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
SENAME Programs for Children at Risk of or Engaged in the Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Approximately 132 programs serving disadvantaged youth and children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. Includes programs implemented by municipal governments and local branches of the Office for the Rights of Children. (36,85) Held various events during the reporting period including activities on International Day Against Child Labor. (86) SENAME also administers 18 programs to serve child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. (85) In 2019, SENAME held a series of activities across the country to bring awareness to the exploitation of children on International Day Against the Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents and also assisted businesses in the tourism sector to prevent exploitation in hotels. (87,88)
Employability of Families of Working Children and Adolescents†	Created by the Undersecretary of Labor and fully implemented in 2018, the program seeks to help find work for family members of children and adolescents who are working or at risk of working and provide support and information on the negative effects of child labor. (3,89,90) In 2019, the government began designing a work plan for this program which will be rolled out in 2020. (6)

*Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Chile.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (91-93)

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists on Christmas Island, in 2019 the government made a moderate advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Australia enacted the Modern Slavery Act, which applies to Christmas Island, and took steps to begin consultations on a revised National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and Slavery. Although Christmas Island made meaningful efforts in all relevant areas during the reporting period, laws related to child trafficking do not meet international standards because the recruitment, harboring, transfer, and receipt of children for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation are not prohibited. In addition, as the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists on Christmas Island. (1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Christmas Island is included as part of the territory of the Australian Commonwealth, which provides for its defense. (1-3) All legislation of the Federal Parliament applies, unless specifically excluded. (4) Because Australia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, the following conventions apply to Christmas Island (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Christmas Island is subject to the laws and regulations related to child labor of the Commonwealth of Australia and the state of Western Australia (Table 2). However, gaps exist in its legal framework to adequately protect children from child labor, including the prohibition of child trafficking.

Table 2. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Section 190 of the Western Australia Children and Community Services Act (5)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 10.4 of the Western Australia Mines Safety and Inspection Regulations (6)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Section 10.4 of the Western Australia Mines Safety and Inspection Regulations (6)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 270.6–270.7 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act of Australia; Sections 270.6–270.7 and 271.9 of the Crimes Legislation Amendment Act (7,8)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Sections 271.1A, 271.4, and 271.7 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act of Australia (7)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 16 of the Western Australia Prostitution Act; Section 192 of the Western Australia Children and Community Services Act (5,9)

Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Sections 309–310 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act of Australia (7)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Canberra Act 2600 (10)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*		Canberra Act 2600 (10)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Sections 268.68 and 268.88 of the Commonwealth Criminal Code Act of Australia (7)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17.5	Section 6 of the Western Australia School Education Act (11)
Free Public Education	Yes		Section 98 of the Western Australia School Education Act (11)

* No conscription (10)

On Christmas Island, the Government of Western Australia’s Children and Community Services Act sets the minimum age for light work in delivery-types of employment at age 10 if the child is accompanied by a parent or an authorized adult. This is not in compliance with international standards, which set the minimum age for light work at age 13. (5,12) As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. Laws related to child trafficking are not sufficient because the recruitment, harboring, transfer, and receipt (domestically) of children for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation are not clearly prohibited. (7)

In 2019, the Government of Australia passed the Modern Slavery Act of 2018, which requires that (a) any entity with revenue in excess of $685,000 ($100m AUD), and (b) is an Australian entity or an entity engaging in business in Australia at any time during a yearly reporting period; or (c) is an entity that has volunteered to comply with the Modern Slavery Act of 2018, must report via a modern slavery statement the entity’s modern slavery risks, including the worst forms of child labor, within the entity’s operations and supply chains; and actions taken by the entity to address aforementioned risks. (1,13,14)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government of Australia has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Australian Federal Police, the Department of Immigration, and the Department of Regional Development	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. (15) Oversee the Child Protection Operations Team, which coordinates and investigates online and multi-jurisdictional online child sexual exploitation issues, including child pornography; and the Human Trafficking Teams, which investigate human trafficking for the purposes of transnational sexual and labor exploitation. (16,17)
Australian Department of Child Protection of the Department of Communities	Issues orders to stop a child from working if there is a risk of harm. (18) Authorized to inspect for compliance all workplaces in which children are employed and to issue penalties. (19-21)

Western Australian WorkSafe Inspectors provide services on Christmas Island, where they have the right to enter, at any time, any workplace including aircraft, ships, and vehicles in which employees work or are likely to be in the course of their work. Inspectors have unrestricted access to workplaces, except those for which there is a statutory restriction, to determine whether employers are in compliance with the Occupational Safety and Health Act. (1,22)

Labor Law Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor.

Criminal Law Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for criminal law enforcement actions to address child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor. However, the Government of Australia has established mechanisms to coordinate government efforts on child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Departmental Committee on Human Trafficking	Deals with child labor issues, including its worst forms, from a human trafficking perspective. Comprises 11 government agencies, including the Australian Federal Police, Department of Employment, and Department of Foreign Affairs, and is chaired by the Department of Home Affairs. (1,16) This Committee was active in 2019 and met to discuss issues when they arose. The Committee also actively implemented the Modern Slavery Act of 2018. (1,23-25)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for government policies to address child labor. However, the Government of Australia has established policies related to child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and Slavery 2015–2019	Outlined cooperation and participation by government and non-government entities to combat human trafficking and slavery, including commercial sexual exploitation of children. (26,27) This policy was in effect in 2019. (1,24)

In 2019, the Government of Australia took steps to begin consultations on a revised National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and Slavery. (24,25,28)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor on Christmas Island (Table 6).

Table 6. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Raise the minimum age for all light work to age 13 to comply with international standards.	2015 – 2019
	Raise the minimum age for work to the age up to which education is compulsory.	2018 – 2019

In 2019, Colombia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor launched a virtual training campus for labor inspectors, including a Fundamental Rights at Work course with modules on child labor, and trained local officials on its Comprehensive Child Labor Information System. In an effort to address the education and health of the increased Venezuelan refugee population, the government passed Law 1997 that granted birthright citizenship to children born in Colombia to Venezuelan parents during the period January 1, 2015 - September 16, 2021. The Ministry of the Interior also collaborated with civil society organizations to evaluate the government's anti-trafficking in persons strategy. In addition, the government expanded the Eyes Everywhere anti-commercial sexual exploitation campaign. However, children in Colombia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. In addition, the government does not employ a sufficient number of labor inspectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Colombia engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) The government publishes annual statistics on children's work from its National Household Survey. (3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Colombia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children occurs more often in private homes rented online than in commercial establishments. (10) Some child victims of commercial sexual exploitation are allegedly recruited in schools by other students, and, in some cases, prostitution ring members conduct surveillance around schools in search of girls. (10,36) Indigenous women and children, as well as Venezuelan refugees, are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.(36,39) Young girls suffer commercial sexual exploitation along the highway between Medellín and Bogotá.(10,34) In mining areas, trafficking of children for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation is widespread. (6,10,26,41) Reports also indicate that criminal gangs and dissident groups recruit Colombian and Venezuelan children as young as age 12 to produce and traffic drugs and commit homicides and extortion. (38,42,43)

Reports indicate that the forced recruitment and use of minors in Colombia by illegal armed groups, including Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia (FARC) dissidents and the National Liberation Army, as well as non-ideological criminal organizations such as the Gulf Clan, continued in 2019. (10,26,39,44,45) Children are recruited to perform intelligence and logistical activities, store and transport weapons, and are exploited in commercial sex. (6,7,26,39,46)

In Colombia, impassible roads, long distances between children’s homes and schools in rural areas, a lack of teachers, and continued violence and insecurity in parts of the country hinder access to education. (6,10,47) Indigenous and Afro-Colombian children in particular face difficulties in accessing education. (7,48) In several communities, classes were interrupted, sometimes for weeks at a time, because of illegal armed group activity in those areas. (47,48) Venezuelan children in Colombia who lack identity documents are provided temporary identification numbers, enabling them to access all aspects of education. (10,45,48) School resources in border towns were strained by the increased arrival of Venezuelan refugee students, a population that nearly doubled between 2018 and 2019. (49) Nationally, the government reported that as of October 2019, there were 206,138 Venezuelan children matriculated in Colombia’s education system. This represents a more than five-fold increase in matriculation compared to the 34,030 Venezuelan students enrolled at the end of 2018. (10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Colombia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government's laws and regulations are in line with relevant international standards (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Colombia's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the difference in the minimum age for work and the compulsory education age.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 35 of the Code on Childhood and Adolescence (38)

Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 17 of the Constitution; Articles 188A–188C of the Penal Code (40,41)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 213–219B of the Penal Code (41)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 162, 188D, and 384 of the Penal Code (41)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 81 of Law 1861 (42)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 4 of Law 1861 (42)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 162 of the Penal Code; Article 20 of Law 1098; Article 14 of Law 418 (38,41,43)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Decree 4807 of 2011 (44)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of Decree 4807, Article 28 of the Child and Adolescent Code (38,44)

In September 2019, the government passed Law 1997 that granted birthright citizenship to children born in Colombia to Venezuelan parents, including those with irregular migration status, during the period January 1, 2015 - September 16, 2021. (10,57) This legislation was the result of a concerted effort by the Human Rights Ombudsman, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the National Civil Registry (Registraduría), and other agencies to facilitate access to education and healthcare for this vulnerable population. (10) Although Congress drafted a bill in 2018 that would revise the Penal Code to establish more comprehensive criminal provisions to protect children and adolescents from cyber commercial sexual exploitation, the bill was not approved during the reporting period. (58)

Challenges remain concerning the difference in the minimum age for work and the compulsory education age. As the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (50)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Inspection, Monitoring, Control, and Territorial Management Department	Receives complaints of labor law violations and conducts labor inspections, including inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescent workers and compliance with other child labor provisions. Oversees the Internal Working Group on Child Labor Eradication. (4,45) Operates the Comprehensive Child Labor Information System (SIRTI), a child labor monitoring system that identifies children engaged in or at risk of child labor. (4)
Active Search Team for Trafficking in Persons, Sexual Exploitation of Children, Girls, and Adolescents and Related Crimes (Bogotá)	Uses a proactive investigation model to identify the crimes of trafficking in persons and the sexual exploitation of children, girls, and adolescents in areas of Bogotá where they occur instead of waiting for victims to seek attention at the national level. Created in 2018 by the Bogotá Mayor's office. (21,46)
National Police	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking and house the Child Protection Police unit. (4) Judicial police and the Technical Investigation Corps support the Attorney General's Office throughout the investigation process. (4)
Attorney General's Office	Investigates and prosecutes cases of child recruitment for armed conflict, commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and human trafficking, with support from the Office's Technical Investigation Unit, which also advises the Attorney General in the design of policies and strategies related to the role of judicial police investigators. (1,4,38) Oversees the Articulation Group for Combating Trafficking in Persons, which includes four prosecutors who focus on investigating and prosecuting cross-border human trafficking and other related crimes. (47)
National Training Service (SENA)	Collects fines imposed by MOL for labor law violations. (48)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, MOL held a series of eight workshops dedicated to training inspectors on updates to the inspectorate's electronic case management system. In total, 242 inspectors across the country received the training. (63) The MOL also launched a "Fundamental Rights at Work" training under its new virtual training campus in June for labor inspectors that included several modules on child labor: effective elimination of child labor, legal definitions of child labor, national policy guidelines related to child labor and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the Comprehensive Child Labor Information System (SIRTI). (10)

In 2019, MOL reported that it conducted 4,622 preventive inspections and 3,079 reactive inspections. (10) It also conducted 824 inspections to verify the appropriate conditions of work, including occupational safety and health issues for minors of the legal minimum age who were authorized to work. (10) In 2019, MOL imposed 12 sanctions for child labor violations. Eight of these sanctions have been upheld following appeal, and four are under appeal. MOL did not report on whether the eight sanctions have been collected by the National Training Service (SENA), which is charged with collecting fines. (10)

However, reports indicate that resource allocation for labor law enforcement in rural areas, such as Amazonas and Vichada, was insufficient. (7,66) In some cases, inspectors carried out inspections in a small geographic area due to a lack of transportation resources to reach areas accessible only by boats or small planes.(1) In addition, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Colombia's workforce, which includes more than 25 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Colombia should employ about 1,645 inspectors. (7,66)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including training for new employees and funding.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019

In 2019, the government assisted 14 minors who were victims of human trafficking, one of whom was a victim of labor exploitation. (10,39) However, the government did not provide information on the total number of child victims who benefited from shelter or other forms of government-provided assistance. In August 2019, Colombia and Argentina held a new bilateral law enforcement meeting to coordinate actions and policies relating to trafficking in persons crimes. (39) In October 2019, the government participated in a Colombia-Ecuador bi-national workshop on trafficking in persons focused on prevention and victim care challenges of transnational human trafficking. (39) The Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being also trained 194 technical team members and administrative authorities on childcare services for trafficking victims in the high-risk areas of Santander, Amazonas, Córdoba, and Antioquia. (39) Although the government took action on crimes related to the commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking of children and collected data on these crimes, the Attorney General's Office reported that its case management system tracks criminal proceedings through conviction only and does not include sentencing. (10,66,67) In addition, although the Attorney General's Office publishes some information on emblematic criminal cases regarding trafficking in persons, including those involving children, it does not publish comprehensive, annual statistics on convictions and sentencing for cases involving the worst forms of child labor. (68)

Colombia

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

The government did not provide clear information on whether funding provided to criminal law enforcement agencies was sufficient. (6) In addition, civil society noted a lack of specific budget allocations by government institutions for addressing trafficking in persons. (26)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including the inconsistent coordination in human trafficking victim identification.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-agency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (CIETI)	Coordinates efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by MOL, includes 13 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations. (2) Oversees 32 department-level CIETIs throughout the country, each comprising municipal-level committees. (52) Held several sessions during the reporting period, including one in October to identify geographic “hot spots” with children active in child labor, including its worst forms. (53,54)
National Inter-agency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Coordinates and implements efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by MOL and comprises 15 government agencies. (2) The government did not provide information on activities taken under this coordinating body in 2019 for inclusion in this report.
Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF)	Operates Mobile Teams for Comprehensive Protection Child Labor (EMPIs) to coordinate government actions to protect children’s rights, including protection from child labor. Supports demobilized child soldiers by strengthening family networks and increasing access to health services, food, education, and shelter. (4,12) Serves as Administrator of the Fund Against Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents. (55) Processes child labor complaints, operates hotlines to report child labor cases, and provides social services to children engaged in or at risk of child labor. (1,4) ICBF also has a National System of Family Well-Being, which promotes inter-agency coordination to protect children’s rights including rights related to child labor, and designs, implements, monitors, and evaluates policies related to childhood and adolescence. (2,56) In 2019, the number of EMPIs under ICBF was reduced to 44 teams throughout the whole country, down from 58 reported in 2018. (57) The EMPIs increased the number of awareness-raising campaigns to prevent child labor in the Putumayo and Cartagena regions, where they provided services to migrant Venezuelan and Ecuadorian populations. (58,59)
Inter-agency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Leads and coordinates efforts among government agencies to combat human trafficking. Created by Law 985, chaired by the Ministry of the Interior (MOI), and comprises 16 government entities and 6 permanent invitees, including private sector and international organizations. (25) During the reporting period, the committee conducted 20 anti-trafficking in person trainings. MOI met in both September and December with more than 35 civil society organizations to evaluate weaknesses and goals of the government’s national anti-trafficking strategy and establish indicators to measure performance under a forthcoming strategy, slated to run through 2022. (4,60,61,62) MOI also continued to lead the hotline that reports and tracks cases of human trafficking, and facilitated access to social services for victims. (36)
Inter-sectorial Commission for the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Children by Illegal Armed Groups (CIPRUNNA)	Coordinates efforts to prevent child recruitment by illegal armed groups, including for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. Created by Law 552 and led by the High Commissioner for Post-Conflict, Human Rights, and Security, comprises 23 entities, including the Attorney General’s Office and MOL as permanent members. (4,64-66) In 2019, the committee convened its member agencies for two technical-level meetings and one high-level meeting to formulate and approve updates to the Public Policy Guidelines for the Prevention of Recruitment, Use, and Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups or Organized Criminal Groups through Decree 1784. (4,66) In November, authorities approved Decree 2081 to strengthen existing legislation and create the inter-sectorial presidential advisory council focus on mitigating the forced recruitment of children by illegal armed groups. (62,67,68)

‡ The government has other coordinating mechanisms that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (81-83,85,86)

Research indicates there is inconsistent coordination in the areas of human trafficking victim identification and assistance, which may hinder anti-trafficking efforts. (26)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy Guidelines to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor and Protect the Adolescent Worker (2017–2027)	Aims to address child labor in the agriculture sector, develop child labor prevention strategies, improve the quality and coverage of child protection services, protect adolescent workers from hazardous work, create strategies to address child labor in domestic work, and establish evaluation and monitoring mechanisms to assess progress. (71) The policy also contains a Roadmap for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in Mining and a cooperative agreement between the Ministry of Mining and Energy and ICBF to prevent child labor in mining. (72,73,74) Under the cooperative agreement, ICBF trained 1,003 officials in agencies in the National System of Family Welfare on the National Policy Guidelines to Prevent and Eradicate Child Labor and Protect the Adolescent Worker. (4) In 2019, ICBF also worked in partnership with MOL under these guidelines to build the capacity of local committees to prevent child labor (CIETIs) at the department and municipal levels, which resulted in the development of local action plans to combat child labor. (4) In addition, MOL held 75 technical workshops and trainings, which included capacity building related to the 2018 revision of the hazardous occupations prohibited to children. These workshops and trainings were attended by 1,320 CIETI and other officials, as well as civil society representatives, from 537 municipalities in 29 departments. (4) Under the Progressive Plan for the Social Protection and Defense of Rights for Rural Workers, the government conducted various outreach activities during the reporting period, including socializing the National Policy Guidelines to Eradicate and Prevent Child Labor and Protect the Adolescent Worker across 17 municipalities with workshops and radio and social media outreach. (4)
National Policy on Childhood and Adolescence (2018–2030)	Articulates multiple sub-policies on the worst forms of child labor, protection of adolescents, prevention and eradication of commercial sexual exploitation of children, and prevention of the recruitment and use of children by non-state armed groups. (1,75) Focuses on the comprehensive welfare and development of children and adolescents, recognizing them as rights-bearing subjects and integral to national development. (1,75) In 2019, under this policy, ICBF began implementing the Strategy for the Prevention of Specific Risks, which involved undertaking actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children for illicit activities and commercial sexual exploitation. (4)
National Strategy for the Prevention and Eradication of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (2018–2028)	National policy that guides Colombian government actions at the national, departmental, and municipal levels for the prevention of commercial sexual exploitation, victim assistance with a differential approach, and the strengthening of sentencing for abusers. (76) In 2019, the Ministry of Commerce and Tourism worked under this policy in collaboration with MOL, ICBF, National Colombia Police (CNP), and Colombian Migration to continue the “Eyes Everywhere” (“ Ojos en Todas Partes ”) campaign, including public messaging against child sex tourism in hotels and restaurants. (36) MOL and ICBF also directed public awareness campaigns in the Bogotá-Medellín corridor through the initiative “Let’s Stop This” (“ Ponle Freno ”). Government leaders conducted a number of engagements along this route with the hospitality and transport sectors as well as civil society organizations to raise awareness of child commercial sexual exploitation. (4,77)
National Strategy for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Aims to prevent human trafficking by raising awareness of the crime’s red flags, providing immediate assistance to victims, promoting inter-institutional collaboration, strengthening and developing international cooperation mechanisms, and creating a data-gathering mechanism. (78) Established by Decree No. 1036 in 2016 and led by the Inter-agency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons. (79) The Inter-agency Committee approved the continued use of the 2016–2018 strategy while the next National Strategy (2018–2022) is in the development phase. (46) Throughout 2019, NGOs were an integral part of the process to design the next strategy. (36)
National Policy for the Prevention of Recruitment, Use, and Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups or Organized Criminal Groups (2018–2028)†	Directs actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children by illegal non-state armed groups. Aims to address violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor, and improve inter-agency coordination. (80) The government also has a Roadmap for the Restoration of Rights, Assistance, and Reparation for Children and Adolescent Victims of the Armed Conflict that establishes protocols to assist child victims of armed conflict and is implemented through inter-institutional mechanisms in various departments. (3,81) In 2019, CIPRUNNA formulated and approved updates to this policy and formally changed its name. In May and October, member agencies trained 208 government officials across 17 municipalities on these updates. (4)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (6,98-100)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, civil society organizations agree that these programs remain insufficient to fully address child labor.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Campaigns Against Child Labor†	ICBF-led campaigns to increase coordination among ICBF, Child Protection Police, MOL, and municipal authorities on child labor issues, and to promote education about the risks of hazardous work. (83) In 2019, the government began a campaign, “Working for the Children*,” to end child labor in shopping markets. (84) In November, program leaders began public awareness efforts in banana, grain, and fishing markets in the city of Barranquilla, where 180 children joined the program and were returned to school, and their parents were educated on child labor laws. (84) The ICBF produced extensive online resources to educate children on child labor, inform youth on their rights, and the general public on how to report child labor. (85) ICBF also continued the use of Mobile Teams for Comprehensive Protection Child Labor (EMPLs), which, between January and October 2019, conducted 1,389 day-long awareness-raising programs to prevent child labor in 176 municipalities across the country and identified 2,466 children engaged in child labor. (4,86) ICBF worked with families and local authorities to remove these children from child labor. (4) EMPLs also implemented the “One Hour Against Child Labor” program in 152 educational institutions nationwide to train teachers and students on child labor issues. (4)
Projects Addressing Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children‡	As part of the National Strategy for the Prevention of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, the Colombian government maintains an “Eyes Everywhere” (“Ojos en Todas Partes”) public awareness campaign, which aims to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism sector. Led by the Ministry of Commerce, Industry, and Tourism, and implemented in coordination with ICBF and the National Tourism Fund. (1,21,25,87) In 2019, the government expanded the “Eyes Everywhere” campaign to local municipalities in the Medellín-Bogotá corridor, raising awareness at the community level. (77)
Projects Addressing Trafficking in Persons‡	Eye on Trafficking aims to increase awareness of human trafficking among high school students, and School Environments in Coexistence and Peace focuses on identifying potential trafficking victims. (2) The Ministry of Foreign Affairs’ campaign, “Do Not Ignore Trafficking” (#AnteLaTrataNoSeHaga), is directed at border populations with limited access to digital platforms. (88) In May and October 2019, approximately 480 consulate officials were trained under this campaign. (36) As part of the “This is a Story” (#EsoEsCuento) campaign in 2019, the Attorney General’s office trained 360 Colombian migration officials, 100 airport officials, 140 police officers, and various other officials on trafficking in persons, including warning signs, sexual violence against minors and women, and how to address potential cases when found during the course of work. (36)
Model for Identification of Child Labor Risks	Pilot project led by ILO’s Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor. Aims to design a system that classifies territories according to their probability of risk for child labor and identifies the principal factors associated with this risk based on existing databases in participating countries. (89) Nearly every country in Latin America participates in the initiative. (90) In October 2019, ILO held a meeting in Lima on the regional initiative’s focal points, in which officials from the Colombian MOL spoke about the Child Labor Risk Identification Model as part of the country’s national plan for development. The government implemented the model throughout the reporting period. (91)
Development for Social Prosperity Programs‡	More Families in Action (Más Familias en Acción) uses a conditional cash transfer program to combat poverty and build human capital; United Network (Red Unidos) coordinates actions to reduce inequality and end extreme poverty; Healthy Generations (Generaciones con Bienestar) operates a children’s rights program offering cultural and recreational activities for children ages 6 to 17 identified as vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor; and Youth in Action (Jóvenes en Acción) provides technical job training and conditional cash transfers to vulnerable urban youth ages 16 to 24. (92-99) In 2019, under the Healthy Generations program, the government implemented a specialized line of programming to prevent child labor, identifying 90 municipalities for child labor prevention efforts, with participation of 25,363 children and adolescents. (4)
USDOL-Funded Projects	We Are a Treasure (Somos Tesoro), a $11.25 million, 7-year project to combat child labor and promote safe work in the mining sector, implemented by PACT, Inc., in partnership with the Alliance for Responsible Mining, Mi Sangre Foundation, and the Fund for Environmental Action and Childhood; Preventing and Reducing Child Labor and Forced Labor in Palm Oil Supply Chains (Palma Futuro), a $6 million project implemented by Partners of the Americas that works to improve the implementation of social compliance systems that promote acceptable conditions of work and the prevention and reduction of child and forced labor in palm oil supply chains; Colombia Avanza , a $2 million Partners of the Americas project that focuses on building the capacity of civil society to more adequately combat child labor and other abuses in Colombia’s coffee sector; Cooperation on Fair, Free and Equitable Employment (COFFEE), a $2 million project implemented by Verite to help businesses establish systems to prevent, detect, and eliminate child labor and other forms of exploitation from their supply chains; Building the Capacity of Civil Society to Combat Child Labor and Improve Working Conditions in Colombia (Pilares), a $2 million project implemented by PACT that strengthens the capacity of civil society organizations to detect and address child labor and working conditions in gold mining; Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a $2.4 million project implemented by the ILO that improves knowledge on these issues through data-driven techniques, strengthens polices and improves government capacity, and strengthens partnerships to accelerate progress. Continues to work with the Ministry of Labor on the Electronic Case Management System, virtual training campus for labor inspectors, and supporting strategic compliance planning, and strengthening fine collection; Equal Access to Quality Jobs for Women and Girls in Agriculture (EQUAL), a $5 million project in support of the Women’s Global and Prosperity Initiative implemented by PACT. The project is aimed at reducing the risk of child labor, forced labor, and other violations of labor rights by empowering vulnerable women and girls working in the production of unrefined brown sugar (panela) and the cut flowers sector and promoting better understanding of labor rights; and Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers, a $11 million global project implemented by the ILO with Colombia as one of eight countries that works to promote the safety and health of young workers. Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Colombia.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (6,9,117-120,123,124)

In 2019, the National Police implemented “Open Your Eyes” (“Abre Tus Ojos”), a public awareness and child protection program to combat child labor and promote attendance in the educational system for children who may be involved in street work. (10) The Colombian Network Against Child Labor (Red Colombia Contra el Trabajo Infantil) also continued its work throughout the reporting period, including by collaborating with MOL on activities dedicated to the protection of legal adolescent work. (10) Despite these efforts, research indicates that existing social programs are insufficient to address the scope of the worst forms of child labor problem in Colombia. (10)

In 2019, Comoros made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

The National Assembly passed legislation authorizing the president to ratify the Palermo Protocol, which the president did in January 2020. Comoros also created the National Commission for Solidarity, Social Protection, and the Promotion of Gender to improve cooperation with state and non-state actors involved in child protection. In addition, services for child victims of violence were expanded with the opening of a new center under the Services d'Ecoute (Listening and Counseling Services) program. However, children in Comoros engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in agriculture. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. Furthermore, labor and criminal investigators lack the resources and funds necessary to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor, and Comoros lacks national action plans to combat child labor and trafficking in persons. Social programs to combat child labor are also insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Comoros engage in the worst forms of child labor, including forced labor in agriculture. Children also perform dangerous tasks in domestic work. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Comoros.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	23.0 (42,145)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	81.5

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Comoros

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

National figures detailing the prevalence of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor in Comoros are not available; however, anecdotal reports suggest that children are involved in domestic servitude and also work in the agricultural and fishing sectors. (8) Children from poor or rural families are at higher risk of being placed into forced labor. (14) Some parents who are unable to care for their children send them to wealthier families, who are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to the children in exchange for housework. In practice, many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse. (2,3,8,14,15) In Comoros, it is a traditional practice to send children to Quranic teachers to receive an education. Some Quranic teachers, however, may force their students to work rather than attend school, or earn funds to pay a school fee; girls usually perform domestic work, and boys perform agricultural labor. (3,4,12,14,15) In nearby Mayotte, which is administered by France, reports indicate that there are more than 3,000 unaccompanied children from Comoros, some of whom are exploited in the worst forms of child labor or may be vulnerable to trafficking. (12,14,16)

Children performing agricultural tasks work with sharp tools, carry heavy loads of products, and may have to climb tall heights to harvest fruit. In construction, children work without basic safety or protective equipment. (8) There were reports during the reporting period that drug traffickers used teenagers to transport drugs on boats to Mayotte. (8)

The law establishes compulsory education between ages 6 and 12, and children under the age of 14 cannot be prevented from attending school. However, no law establishes free basic education. (17) Additionally, schools lack sufficient capacity and thus prevent some children, particularly poor and disadvantaged children, from enrolling. (17) Although approximately equal numbers of boys and girls attended public primary schools, fewer girls completed primary education. (17,18) Furthermore, poor school infrastructure, limited availability of teachers, and physical and sexual violence in schools may impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor. (8,10,18)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

During the reporting period, the National Assembly passed Law No. 19-04/AU, which authorized the president to ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons. On January 25, 2020, the President of Comoros issued Decree No. 20-024-PR, which allowed Comoros to begin the ratification process with the UN. (8,14) Comoros officially acceded to the Protocol in June of 2020. (52) Comoros has thus ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 129 of the Labor Code (19)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 131(d) of the Labor Code; Article 7 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (19,20)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		List of Dangerous Occupations; Article 131(d) of the Labor Code; Article 7 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (19-21)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2.1 and 131 of the Labor Code; Article 13 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (19,20)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Article 131 of the Labor Code; Articles 13 and 14 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (19,20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 131 of the Labor Code; Articles 8–11 and 13 of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking; Articles 322–323 of the Penal Code (19,20,22)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 131(c) of the Labor Code; Article 6(c) of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (19,20)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 41 of Law No. 97-06/AF (23)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 6(a) of the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (20)
Compulsory Education Age	No	12	Article 2 of the Outline Act on the Education System (24)
Free Public Education	No		Article 1 of the Outline Act on the Education System; Preamble of the Constitution (24,25)

* No conscription (26)

The government has drafted a Penal Code and a Code of Criminal Procedures that increase the penalties for human trafficking crimes; however, this legislative proposal was not enacted during the reporting period. (8,26-30)

The Labor Code allows children under age 15 to perform light work in domestic work or agriculture if it does not interfere with education or physical or moral development. (24) The Labor Code, however, does not set 13 as the minimum age for light work, specify the conditions under which light work may be conducted, or limit the number of hours for light work, as defined by international standards on child labor. (31) In addition, the Labor Code applies only to workers who perform work under a formal employment agreement, which does not conform to international standards which require that all children be protected under the law establishing a minimum age for work. (2,31)

Comoros's Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking defines child trafficking as requiring the use of force, fraud, or coercion. (20) While the Labor Code does not make this requirement, it also does not exclude the means of force, fraud, or coercion for child trafficking victims. Thus, Comoros's child trafficking laws do not meet international standards. (19,20,32)

Children in Comoros are required to attend school only up to age 12. (17,24,32) This standard makes children ages 13 through 15 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor because they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforces child labor laws, investigates allegations of child labor, and refers cases of the worst forms of child labor for criminal investigation. (3,4,18)
Police Morals and Minors Brigade	Investigates allegations of child abuse, including child trafficking, and refers cases for prosecution. (3,34,35) Operates nationwide, covering the islands of Grande Comore, Anjouan, and Mohéli. Collaborates with Services d'Ecoute (Listening and Counseling Services). (7,36)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes criminal cases, including those related to child trafficking. (3,26)
National Commission for Human Rights and Freedoms	Receives complaints about the worst forms of child labor, investigates violations, and refers cases to the Ministry of Justice for prosecution. (11,37)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Comoros took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including financial and human resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Comoros's workforce, which includes approximately 278,500 workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Comoros would employ about 7 inspectors. (13,38-40) Reports indicate that there is a lack of training, equipment, transportation, and funding available to conduct child labor inspections and legal proceedings. (3,28,34,36,40,41) Inspectors have indicated that although there is a budget for fixed costs such as salaries, there is no operating budget for the inspectorate, and inspectors have to rely on their own funds for costs such as transportation. (8) The number of inspections was insufficient, and none of the inspections carried out during the reporting period was due to complaints related to child labor. (8)

Although the inspectorate is permitted to conduct unannounced inspections, in practice, inspectors usually only respond when the Ministry of Labor receives complaints. The inspectorate is required to submit a yearly report detailing its work, including statistics on inspections, offenses identified, and penalties imposed; however, no report of this type was identified during the reporting period. (8) Finally, although a reciprocal referral mechanism was established under the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Comoros 2010–2015, it does not appear that this mechanism is currently active or used. (8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Comoros took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Morals and Minors Brigade that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating financial and human resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	No (36)	No (8)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A (36)	N/A (8)
Refresher Courses Provided	No (36)	No (8)
Number of Investigations	Unknown (36)	Unknown (8)
Number of Violations Found	Unknown (36)	Unknown (8)
Number of Prosecutions Initiated	Unknown (36)	Unknown (8)
Number of Convictions	Unknown (36)	Unknown (8)
Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to The Worst Forms of Child Labor	Unknown (36)	Unknown (8)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (7,36)	Yes (8)

Reports indicate that a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding inhibit criminal law enforcement efforts on the worst forms of child labor. (2,4,35) Due to limited financial and human resources, police are, in some cases, unable to open an investigation unless the victim can contribute a portion of the expenses associated with the investigation, including fuel and telephone fees. Thus, investigations are sometimes reactive and may depend on the victim's wealth and knowledge of the criminal justice system, making cases related to violations of the worst forms of child labor unlikely to be investigated. (2,29)

The government did not provide information on its criminal law enforcement efforts for inclusion in this report.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinates government efforts on child labor. Chaired by MOL. (3,10,31) Research could not determine whether the National Committee Against Child Labor was active or received funding during the reporting period.
National Commission for Solidarity, Social Protection, and the Promotion of Gender*	Coordinates new government efforts to strengthen partnerships with state and non-state actors engaged in child protection issues. Established February 2019. (8)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Comoros's inter-agency task force targeting trafficking in persons was no longer operational during the reporting period, and the country lacked a comprehensive anti-trafficking action plan. (12)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy for the Protection of Children (2016–2021)	Aims to improve child protection in Comoros; includes components to combat the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Health, Solidarity, Social Cohesion, and Gender Promotion. (3,4,10,34) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Policy for the Protection of Children during the reporting period.
Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (2015–2021)	Aims to reduce poverty, promote sustainable development, and increase access to social services. Integrates strategies that target child labor. (42,43) Although implementation continued during the reporting period, with Comoros adopting new health and renewable energy sector projects in line with the policy framework, research could not identify actions taken that were relevant to addressing child labor. (44,45)

Although child labor is integrated into some government policies, Comoros has not adopted a new National Action Plan to address child labor and has not developed any new policies or programs to target or combat child labor since 2016. (8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including funding and adequacy of efforts to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2015–2019)	Program that aimed to guarantee labor rights and extend social protection programs for vulnerable populations, including by improving the operational environment for the elimination of child labor and its worst forms. (9) Overseen by MOL and supported by ILO. (46) Research was unable to identify activities undertaken during the reporting period.
Services d'Ecoute (Listening and Counseling Services)†	Government program that provides protective services, secures new housing, and offers immediate assistance to vulnerable and abused children. Comprises four government-operated units on the islands of Anjouan, Grande Comore, and Mohéli. (2,27,36,47,48) Investigates allegations of violence against children, including the worst forms of child labor, and refers perpetrators to criminal authorities for prosecution. (8,29,36) The government opened a new center in 2019 in Foubouni on Grande Comore, and the service provided victim care to 134 minors, including some possible trafficking victims. (8,14)
UNICEF Country Program (2015–2021)	$20,885 UNICEF-funded program that supports the government's efforts to strengthen children's rights to survival, development, education, protection, and social inclusion. (29,42) Funded a training in 2019 for 20 police and gendarmes and 3 children's judges to create a pool of certified trainers, as well as supported the development of internal procedures related to child protection. (8)

† Program is funded by the Government of Comoros.

Independent evaluation of the Services d'Ecoute found that it responded to the needs of child victims of violence and improved the professionalism of those responding to child victims. However, personnel in the Services d'Ecoute still lack relevant training in social service provision and in international standards on child protection, which has resulted in incomplete case work and a lack of follow up with, or evaluations of, child victims. (48, 49)

Although the government has programs that target child labor, their scope is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture and domestic work. (26,28,34,35) Comoros also lacks a specific program to assist children exploited by religious instructors.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Comoros (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

NO ADVANCEMENT - EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the Democratic Republic of the Congo made no advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government drafted a new anti-trafficking in persons law, established a national anti-trafficking coordinating body, and finalized a five-year national strategy to combat human trafficking. A military court also sentenced a former colonel to life imprisonment for the unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers. Moreover, the government implemented a new universal primary education decree, expanding funding for public schools and significantly reducing the number of children vulnerable to labor exploitation. However, despite new initiatives to address child labor, the Democratic Republic of the Congo is receiving an assessment of no advancement because of the national army's complicity in the worst forms of child labor. During the year, an Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of Congo (FARDC) regiment supplied weapons and munitions to and allowed the free movement of a proxy non-state armed group known for recruiting children, enabling the armed group to expand its control over mineral-rich sites in the east. In addition, a FARDC regiment in Tshikapa forcibly abducted young girls into sexual slavery. The FARDC also illegally detained children for their alleged association with armed groups and failed to hold some of its units accountable for perpetrating the worst forms of child labor. Moreover, regiment commanders and their superiors actively interfered with investigations into forced child recruitment and the sexual exploitation of children allegedly perpetrated by their forces. Children engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced mining of gold, tin ore (cassiterite), tantalum ore (coltan), and tungsten ore (wolframite), and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups. Other gaps remain, including a lack of trained enforcement personnel, limited financial resources, and poor coordination of government efforts to combat child labor. Research also indicates that labor inspectors failed to conduct any worksite inspections for the fourth year in a row. Labor inspections are a key tool for identifying child labor violations, and their absence makes children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced mining of gold, tin ore (cassiterite), tantalum ore (coltan), and tungsten ore (wolframite), and are used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forcible recruitment or abduction by non-state armed groups. (1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the DRC.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2019, the UN verified 601 cases of child recruitment by non-state armed groups, down from 631 confirmed cases the previous year. The figure represents an all-time low in the DRC, where the government and international partners secured commitments from 27 armed groups to ending the recruitment and use of children and other grave violations. (28,29) As a result, 3,107 children, an all-time high, were separated from armed groups during the reporting period. (28,30) The Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of Congo (FARDC) also made important military gains against the Forces démocratiques de libération du Rwanda-Forces combattantes abacunguzi (FDLR) and the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), and successfully prosecuted a leader of Raia Mutomboki during the reporting period. (29) However, some of the 150 non-state armed groups operating in the DRC continued to abduct, recruit or use children in armed conflict during the reporting period. (3,28,31) Perpetrators included Nyatura (167), Mai-Mai Mazembe (103), ADF (55), Nduma défense du Congo-Rénové (49), Kamuina Nsapu (37), FDLR (22), Raia Mutomboki (18), Conseil national pour la renaissance et la démocratie, and unidentified armed groups (17 each), Alliance des Patriotes Pour un Congo Libre et Souverain (APCLS) (13), and additional armed groups (103). (28,32,33) Non-state armed groups in Ituri reportedly seized young children from their homes, forcing them to transport heavy loads or perform domestic work. (15) UNICEF and other international organizations have estimated that between 40 and 70 percent of non-state armed groups in central DRC include children, some as young as five. (26,34)

In July, the International Criminal Court also convicted Bosco Ntaganda, former leader of the Forces Patriotiques pour la Libération du Congo (FPLC), on 18 counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity. (35) The sentencing judgement for Ntaganda included 3 counts of conscripting children under age 15 into armed conflict, and 2 counts of sexually enslaving FPLC female recruits under age 15. (36)

Children in the DRC’s eastern and southern provinces engage in the worst forms of child labor in mining. In eastern Congo’s conflict-affected regions, children extract and transport tin (cassiterite), tantalum (coltan), tungsten (wolframite), and gold. Thousands of children also work in cobalt and copper mines in the DRC’s

NO ADVANCEMENT - EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

southern Copperbelt region. (3,5,37,38) Prevalence is highest in the country's artisanal and small-scale mining (ASM) sector, which tends to operate with minimal oversight. Child labor has been detected at one in four ASM sites in the DRC, with informal or illegal ASM operations leaving children uniquely exposed to hazardous working conditions and, in some instances, forced labor. (37,39,40) As many as 35,000 of the DRC's 255,000 artisanal cobalt miners are children. (41) Despite strong evidence of children engaged in armed conflict, commercial sexual exploitation, and forced labor in mining, the prevalence and nature of child labor in other sectors remains unclear because a comprehensive, stand-alone child labor survey has never been conducted in the DRC. (12)

UNICEF estimates that only 14 percent of children under age 5 have birth certificates. (42) Low rates of birth registration leave many children vulnerable to child labor because it makes age verification difficult during FARDC recruitment campaigns and hinders efforts to identify and separate children associated with armed groups. (4,43) Moreover, tens of thousands of civilians have been displaced in eastern Congo's Ituri Province because of the conflict, making thousands of children vulnerable to sex trafficking, forced labor, or commercial sexual exploitation. (29)

While Congolese law provides for free, compulsory education, only slightly more than half of the DRC's 51,574 public schools were financed by the state. At public schools that did not receive government funding, parents were asked to pay school fees to support teacher salaries, which at times were cost prohibitive. (44,45) However, in 2019, President Tshisekedi implemented a free primary education initiative to expand funding for public schools. The initiative resulted in millions of previously out-of-school children being able to enroll, reducing the number of children vulnerable to exploitation. (15,29,46) An additional two million children in the northeast, the epicenter of the 2018–2020 Ebola outbreak, returned to school in September 2019 following a precipitous decline in transmission. (47) Nevertheless, significant obstacles remain. Schools are overcrowded, understaffed, structurally damaged by conflicts, require students to travel long distances, or used as shelter for internally displaced persons. (1,2,24,26,43,48) Non-state armed groups attacked 31 schools between January and September 2019, and 7 attacks were attributed to the FARDC. (28,32) Additionally, frequent teacher strikes occurred as a result of irregular payment of teacher salaries. (14,49)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The DRC has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the DRC's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including its compulsory education age.

In 2019, the Agency for Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (APLTP) drafted and passed to the National Assembly an aggressive national anti-trafficking law. The law is scheduled for adoption in the 2020 legislative session. (29) The APLTP also designed the DRC's first ever national anti-trafficking strategy. The five-year strategy is focused on prevention, victim identification and care, and law enforcement cooperation and coordination. (29) The APLTP referred child victims of human trafficking to three different shelters in the country, providing holistic care to 650 child TIP victims in 2019. The government also finalized a bilateral accord with the Republic of Congo to prevent cross-border child trafficking. (63)

The DRC also expanded oversight of and control over its artisanal mining sector, including copper and cobalt, where child labor is prevalent. (29,64) A 2019 decree created Entreprise Générale du Cobalt, a new subsidiary of state-owned mining company Gécamines, and vested it with exclusive authority to buy and sell artisanally mined "strategic minerals." This new body aims to ensure price stability and fairness by removing unregulated middlemen from the supply chain, thereby decreasing the potential for child labor. A separate body will oversee the strategic mineral supply chain to ensure children and other vulnerable populations are not working in mining sites. (29, 56, 65)

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

However, children in the DRC are required to attend school only up to age 12. This standard means children ages 12 through 15 are vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work. (51,57,60)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the MOL that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Labor, and Social Welfare (MOL)	Investigates cases related to child labor, including its worst forms. (66) Refers cases of child labor to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ) for prosecution. (14)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ)	Enforces criminal laws related to child labor. (11,14) Oversees 5 juvenile courts in Kinshasa and 19 UNICEF-funded child protection courts throughout the country. (15) Assists the International Criminal Court in conducting investigations and prosecuting individuals charged with using children in armed conflict. (14,31,43)
Ministry of the Interior	Investigates allegations of human trafficking rings, refers child labor cases to the MOJ for prosecution, and coordinates support and reintegration services with the Ministry of Social Affairs, Solidarity, and Humanitarian Action. (14,31) In the case of the Police Unit for Child Protection and Combating Sexual Violence, combats conflict-related sexual and gender-based violence against women and children, protects children and women who are victims of physical abuse, and ensures the demobilization of children. (14,15,67)
Office of the President's Personal Representative on Sexual Violence and Child Recruitment	Supports and coordinates the efforts of government officials and international bodies to combat sexual violence and the use of children in armed conflict. (66,68) Compiles data on prosecutions in military and civil courts involving sexual violence against girls and maintains a hotline for reporting cases. (31)
Ministry of Defense (MOD)	Investigates and prosecutes in military courts military officials suspected of recruiting and using child soldiers, and leads the implementation of the Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers. Through its Department of Child Protection, coordinates actions with UNICEF. (14) Through its Children Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups Unit, coordinates demobilization, disarmament, and reintegration activities. (31,69)
Ministry of Gender and Family (MOGF)	Oversees and investigates cases related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (14)

The Ministry of Social Affairs, Solidarity, and Humanitarian Affairs (MINASA) monitors humanitarian programs and coordinates with key actors to promote social services to vulnerable groups, including street children, human trafficking victims, and child soldiers. (16)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, the absence of worksite inspections conducted at the national level in the DRC may have impeded the enforcement of child labor laws (Table 6).

The Labor Inspectorate was not operational during the reporting period and labor inspectors did not receive training or conduct inspections. It is also unknown whether the government allocated funds to the Labor Inspectorate, despite an overall sharp increase in social spending. (14,15,29,32,70,71) Moreover, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of the DRC's workforce, which includes over 31 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, the DRC would employ about 784 labor inspectors. (70,71) That said, 80 percent of the DRC labor force is engaged in the informal sector, and agriculture—the largest rural employer—is primarily of a subsistence nature, creating the need for a nuanced approach to advancing labor inspections. (63,72)

The government made some efforts to combat child labor in mining. During the reporting period, 25 government mine inspectors and mine controllers, along with local monitoring committees, were trained on mine inspection and validation in all territories of North and South Kivu. Topics included child labor detection, hazards assessment, and additional compliance measures. (15,29)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in the DRC took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including the allocation of financial resources.

During the reporting period, elements of the FARDC were complicit in child abduction, supporting an armed group that recruited and used child soldiers, illegal detention of children allegedly associated with armed groups, ransacking schools, and extortion and physical abuse of child laborers at mining sites. The government, however, made some efforts to begin addressing these violations, as well as those perpetrated by non-state armed groups. (29) In February 2019, for instance, military prosecutors issued a warrant for the arrest of Katolongele Kambale Jadot, an armed group intelligence officer accused of engaging in child recruitment and other crimes between 2011 and 2013. As of the time of this writing, he remains at large. (29) In June, a North Kivu military court sentenced former FARDC Colonel Dominique Birihanze to life imprisonment for the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict. (29,75) And in November, the Bukavu Garrison Court in South Kivu condemned Frederic Masudi Alimasi and two other members of Raia Mutomboki—a militia accused of systematic child soldier recruitment by the UN in 2018—to 15 years' to life imprisonment for sexual enslavement and other crimes against humanity. (76) During the proceedings, the government was also found liable for failing to take

NO ADVANCEMENT - EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

all necessary measures to prevent the crimes, and ordered to pay reparations to over 300 victims. (29) That same month, the Ministry of Defense instructed FARDC prosecutors to open an investigation into the actions of the FARDC's 2105th Regiment for the alleged abduction and rape of at least 17 children in Tshikapa, Kasai Province. (29) Despite the regiment commander's alleged interference with the investigation, in November FARDC prosecutors detained 10 soldiers from the 2105th on charges of rape and abduction of minors. Two of the soldiers were in detention at the end of the reporting period, while eight more remained under investigation; measures to address the global COVID-19 pandemic reportedly delayed court proceedings in this case during the first half of 2020. (29,63,77) In addition, the government's joint investigation with the UN continued in 2019 against several individuals charged with child recruitment, leading to the arrest of at least four armed group commanders who are awaiting trial in prison. (29,78,79)

Despite these positive steps, impunity for abuses perpetrated by FARDC officials or regiments remained a significant concern, as the government did not consistently hold perpetrators accountable, and some officials were complicit in helping suspects avoid prosecution. (29) In 2018, the FARDC was linked to two cases of use of children in supporting roles, included concubinage and forced labor. The commander responsible for these offenses was redeployed to a different regiment in 2019 and not otherwise been held accountable. (3) Additionally, military prosecutors investigating Colonel Ramazani Lubinga, former commander of the 601st Regiment, issued a warrant for his arrest for allegedly recruiting child soldiers during the M23 rebellion; however, Colonel Ramazani's military superiors refused to comply. (29)

In North Kivu, FARDC elements collaborated with Nduma Défense du Congo-Rénové (NDC-R), a proxy armed group that continued to recruit children into its ranks. (78,79) According to the UN, Congolese forces, including senior FARDC command, allowed the group to move freely throughout the province, and tolerated NDC-R's use of FARDC uniforms. Colonel Yves Kijenge, FARDC commander of the 3411th Regiment, also supplied the group with weapons and ammunition. (29,78) This arrangement has allowed the group to collect revenue through illegal taxation schemes and control of lucrative gold mining sites. (29,63,78,79) In June 2019, military prosecutors in North Kivu issued a warrant for the arrest of U.S.-sanctioned Congolese "General" Shimiray Mwissa Guidon for child recruitment, mass rape, and other crimes committed between 2014 and 2019 as leader of the NDC-R. (29,79) Prosecutors further alleged that high-ranking FARDC commanders protected Guidon during this period. However, while the warrant was never executed, in July 2020 Guidon was deposed by his second-in-command, Gilbert Chuo Bwira. (80,81)

Members of the national police and government-backed armed groups carried out extrajudicial killings of civilians, including children, for their perceived affiliation with or support for non-state armed groups. (32,66,82-84) The government also detained 111 children for their alleged association with armed groups for periods between 3 to 60 days, despite a 2012 directive requiring that all children detained for their association with armed groups be immediately transferred to the UN. (28-30,32,66) Local detention cells suffer from overcrowding, lack of food and health services, and poor sanitation. (29)

In addition, the FARDC deployed a battalion to dismantle illegal ASM sites in the southeast, where working conditions are hazardous and child labor is prevalent. In 2019, soldiers cleared at least 12,000 miners from industrial cobalt and copper concessions, reportedly torching dozens of homes and ransacking a school in the process. (37,85,86) The FARDC, mining police, and private security forces, including those guarding large-scale mining concessions, reportedly subjected child laborers on ASM sites to extortion and physical abuse. (38) There is no evidence the government took action to address these abuses.

In January 2020, police in Lubumbashi arrested three men accused of running a child trafficking ring. Twenty-two child victims were freed during the arrest. (29) During the reporting period, the DRC's Juvenile Justice Courts, special courts designed to make the criminal justice system more accessible to child complainants as well as to provide additional protections to child defendants, heard cases involving 46,250 children. These included prosecutions of child trafficking and child commercial sexual exploitation. (29)

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

NO ADVANCEMENT - EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Nevertheless, some implementing decrees for the Child Protection Code have not been adopted. Without these decrees, multiple provisions, including the provision on light work, cannot be enforced. Penalties for criminal violations related to the worst forms of child labor—including the use of children in armed conflict—are 1 to 3 years of imprisonment with fines of up to $123 (200,000 CDF), which are insufficient to serve as deterrents. (3,15,22,50,51,53,87,88)

Ultimately, however, poor coordination in conducting investigations, collecting data, and providing services to victims continues to hinder the government’s ability to adequately combat the worst forms of child labor. (3,31) Research indicates that both the military and civilian justice systems lack the capacity and resources to investigate and prosecute child labor violations. (4,22,66)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including lack of coordination among agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NCCL)	Oversees the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor and monitors its implementation. (84,89) Led by the MOL and includes representatives from 12 other ministries, local NGOs, and civil society. (14,84,89) In 2019, convened an inter-ministerial meeting at which the implementation plan for the USDOL Combatting Child Labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo’s Cobalt Industry project was formally adopted. (15,90)
Child Soldier Monitoring, Verification, Demobilization, Reintegration Mechanisms	Includes the Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (UEPN-DDR), which coordinates verification and release of children associated with armed groups. Working with the MOGF, the UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO), UNICEF, and NGOs, UEPN-DDR refers demobilized child soldiers to social services providers for family reunification and reinsertion. (14,31,69) The commission is led by MOD’s Children Associated with Armed Forces and Armed Groups unit. (31,69) Additionally, the Country Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting (CTFMR), which is co-chaired by the UN, documents all grave violations committed against children. With cooperation from MOD, CTFMR also engaged directly with armed group commanders, securing the voluntary release of 920 children in 2019. As of February 2020, 27 armed group commanders had committed to release children recruited into their ranks. (29) Between July and September 2019, CTFMR trained 429 officers from the police and from the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC) on child protection, age verification, and preventing child recruitment and other grave violations. (28)
Joint Technical Working Group	Coordinates the implementation of the UN Child Soldiers Action Plan and activities at the provincial level in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Orientale provinces. Led by the MOGF and includes representatives from four other ministries and the UN. (3,5,91) In 2019, held two meetings to discuss preparations for the 7th report on the FARDC Action Plan and FARDC recruitment training. Additionally, organized training on child soldier screening, monitoring, verification, and demobilization processes, and participated in advocacy events. (3,28,31,32)
Inter-ministerial Commission Responsible for Addressing the Issue of Child Labor in Mines and on Mine Sites in DRC	Coordinates efforts to eradicate child labor in the DRC’s mining sector and serves as an advisor to other ministries combating child labor in mining. In 2019, announced a partnership with the USDOL to combat child labor in the mining sector. (15,37)
Agency for Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (APLTP)*	Advocates on behalf of victims, and investigates, prosecutes, and sentences traffickers, including government officials complicit in human trafficking. (29) Embedded in the Office of the Presidency and replaces a previous trafficking in persons working group. Includes government officials from the Congolese National Police and FARDC, local NGOs, and international organizations who formulate, coordinate, monitor, and evaluate government efforts to combat human trafficking. (29) Shelters managed by APLTP provided holistic care to an estimated 650 trafficking victims in 2019, many of whom were children. APLTP and Ministry of Interior officials also worked to standardize data collection and reporting, and used standard templates to report victim identification, investigations, prosecutions, and convictions. (29) Officials from the APLTP, members of the judiciary, Congolese National Police, Ministry of Mines, and Ministry of Social Affairs officials participated in four anti-trafficking trainings during the reporting period. (29)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

NO ADVANCEMENT - EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

The creation of the APLTP in April 2019 addressed a long-standing need to increase coordination among various anti-human trafficking actors within the government. (29) Nevertheless, overlapping objectives and duplication of efforts, combined with a lack of resources and trained personnel, may have impeded the government's ability to coordinate actions to combat the worst forms of child labor. (24,31) In addition, the Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission is meant to take the lead on child soldier issues; however, research indicates that in practice, the Country Task Forces on Monitoring and Reporting often takes the lead. (31)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including whether relevant policies were active.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012–2020)	Developed by the NCCL in consultation with UNICEF to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the DRC by the end of 2020. (10,92) Promotes the enforcement of laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor; universal primary education; monitoring and evaluation efforts; and improved coordination of stakeholders. Also seeks to raise awareness of the worst forms of child labor, empower communities to stop child labor practices, and provide prevention and reintegration services. (10,92) No activities were implemented in 2019 due to a lack of funding. (14)
Child Soldiers Action Plans	Includes UEPN-DDR's National Disarmament, Demobilization, Repatriation, Reintegration, and Resettlement (DDR III) plan, which aims to provide rehabilitation and reintegration services to demobilized combatants, including children. (3,95-97) DDR III is implemented with UN and international support, and within the 2013 Framework Agreement for Peace, Security, and Cooperation for the DRC and the Great Lakes Region. (96,98,99) Requires children separated from armed groups to be immediately transferred to UNICEF. (31) In 2019, UNICEF, through its partners, provided social services to 3,107 children formerly associated with armed groups. (29,32) The Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers (Child Soldiers Action Plan), meanwhile, is a UN-backed plan that aims to prevent and end the use of children in armed forces, provide support and reintegration services, pursue accountability for perpetrators, and create a partnership framework for the UN and the government. (93,94) Includes standard operating procedures for age verification to help FARDC avoid underage recruitment. (2,3,5) During the reporting period, provided training on child protection issues to members of FARDC and police officers. (29,32) Additionally, the FARDC continued to screen new recruits, identifying and removing 141 children from its ranks in 2019. (28) MONUSCO and the government also worked with leaders of non-state armed groups to sign action plans to end the recruitment of children and establish an implementing mechanism. As of February 2020, 27 additional non-state armed groups have pledged to sign similar action plans. (7,30,31)
Action Plans to Address Child Labor in Mining	The National Sectoral Strategy to Combat Child Labor in Artisanal Mines and Artisanal Mining Sites (2017–2025), developed by the Ministry of Mines, seeks to eradicate child labor in artisanal mining by 2025. The strategy aims to strengthen relevant laws, improve data collection on the prevalence of child labor in the mining sector, promote responsible sourcing regulations, improve child protection measures, and build stakeholder capacity to address these issues. (100) In November 2019, the Ministry of Mines organized a workshop to operationalize the strategy. (29) More broadly, the Inter-Ministerial Commission's Triennial Action Plan (2017–2020) aspires to eradicate child labor in mining by 2020, particularly in the tin, tantalum, tungsten, cobalt, and copper sectors by monitoring existing policies and strengthening measures to remove children from mining sites. (101) The government is also cooperating with the Public Private Alliance for Responsible Minerals Trade to end child labor in the cobalt sector. (29)
APLTP's National Action Plan (2020–2024)†	Addresses all forms of trafficking in persons, including foreign born and domestic victims, and child soldiers. (29) Aims to prevent human trafficking through national awareness-raising programs and training government officials to recognize and refer trafficking cases to the appropriate authorities. Includes community radio messaging in multiple languages, the direction of public awareness campaign films, and the creation of a free trafficking-in-persons resource library to be hosted on the websites of the offices of the Presidency and the Ministry of Justice. (29) The National Strategy and accompanying 2020–2024 anti-trafficking National Action Plan, both finalized during the year, are the first such guidance documents in DRC's history. (29)
National Action Plan Against Sexual Violence in Conflict	Supports UN Resolution 1325 on women, peace, and security, which aims to prevent the recruitment of children, particularly girls, into armed groups; to provide social services upon their release; and to ensure perpetrators are prosecuted. (103,104) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this policy during the reporting period.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (21,22,105,106)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Mines organized a workshop to operationalize its National Strategy to Combat Child Labor in the Mining Sector. The strategy supports provisions in the 2018 mining law outlawing

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

NO ADVANCEMENT - EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

work in mines by children under age 18. (15,29) Additionally, the government allocated $10.8 million (19 billion Congolese Francs) to the Ministry of Social Affairs to reduce child labor in the mining sector. (15) However, while the DRC has developed a number of action plans to combat child labor, only some received dedicated funding. (20,23,31,37)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all relevant sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Programs to Support Vulnerable Children†	Government and donor-supported projects that aim to improve child protection. Includes a $4 million Government of Japan-funded program that aims to provide education, vocational training, reintegration kits, and school feeding programs to 13,000 children and construct a training center for youth in North Kivu Province; a $97 million Government of Canada-funded program that aims to assist 95,000 at-risk youth living near mining sites; and a Ministry of Social Affairs, Solidarity, and Humanitarian Affairs and NGO program to reintegrate children removed from the street into communities and reunify children formerly associated with armed groups with their families. (3,14,31,107) The government-run Center for the Transit and Orientation of Young Children in North Kivu Province provides psychological counseling and basic education and job skills training to ex-child soldiers. During the reporting period, the center supervised and helped reintegrate 400 children who had left armed groups. (29)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Includes Measurement, Awareness-Raising, and Policy Engagement (MAP 16) Project on Child Labor and Forced Labor, a $20 million project implemented by the ILO to conduct research and develop new survey methodologies, improve awareness, strengthen policies and government capacity, and promote partnerships to combat child labor and forced labor. Along with IOM and the Walk Free Foundation, the MAP 16 project conducted research on forced labor, including forced child labor, in conflict zones in the DRC in 2018. The research is due to be published in 2020. (108) Also includes Combatting Child Labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo's Cobalt Industry (2018–2021), a $2.5 million project implemented by the ILO in Kolwezi, Lualaba Province aimed at reducing child labor and improving working conditions in the mining sector. (90,109) During the reporting period, the National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor formally adopted the project's implementation plan. (15,90) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
World Bank-Funded Projects	Projects in support of re-establishing peace and stability. Includes Reinsertion and Reintegration Project (2015–2019), a $21 million project that aims to assist with social reintegration for the child combatants identified as part of DDR III; Human Development Systems Strengthening (2014–2020), a $46.8 million project that aims to increase birth registration and improve school infrastructure; and Education Quality Improvement Project (EQUIP) (2017–2021), a $100 million project that aims to improve the quality of primary school education. (99,110–112) By October 2019, the Human Development Systems Strengthening project had provided 4,939 children with birth registration certificates. As of May 2019, the Reinsertion and Reintegration Project had demobilized 4,700 combatants since it began implementation in 2016. (113–115)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (116,117)

During the reporting period, the Ministry of Defense worked closely with the UN to identify and remove child recruits from FARDC. (29) However, the scope of child disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration programs remains insufficient. The reintegration process is slow, funding is inadequate, and collaboration between partners is weak. (3,22,43,118,119) Children separated from armed groups remain vulnerable to re-recruitment and stigmatization. Girls, who make up an estimated 30 to 40 percent of children associated with armed groups, often survive prolonged sexual and physical abuse in captivity and face social exclusion upon their return. Because this cycle of rejection increases their risk of re-recruitment, girls should be specifically targeted in the DDR process (5,43,118–121) Research also indicates that the government needs to strengthen its efforts to assist street children and implement programs specifically designed to assist children engaged in forced labor in agriculture, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation. (4,22,23,43)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in the DRC (Table 11).

In 2019, the Republic of the Congo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government approved comprehensive legislation making all forms of trafficking in persons illegal and worked with neighboring countries to implement bilateral anti-trafficking measures. The labor inspectorate also added 241 labor inspectors to its payroll. However, children in the Republic of the Congo are involved in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The government has yet to accede to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons, and existing programs are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor in all relevant sectors. In addition, information on children's work is extremely limited because there has never been a national child labor survey or similar research conducted in the Republic of the Congo.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Republic of the Congo (ROC) are involved in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in forced domestic work, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the ROC.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	25.4 (Unavailable)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In some rural areas, the majority ethnic Bantu population force non-majority, indigenous children to perform agricultural work for low wages under the threat of physical abuse. Within the ROC, internal child trafficking networks relocate children from rural areas to urban centers for forced labor in domestic work and market vending. (4,5) In urban environments, children from West Africa work in forced domestic servitude for West African families in the major cities of Pointe-Noire and Brazzaville. (5) The majority of foreign children subject to forced domestic work or commercial sexual exploitation in the ROC originate from the Democratic Republic of the Congo, and from other West African nations, including Benin. (2,4,14,15) A 2015 report funded by UNODC found that most victims of commercial sexual exploitation as a result of child trafficking were between the ages of 9 and 11. (14) However, information on children's work is limited because there has never been a national child labor survey or similar research conducted in the ROC. (3)

The Constitution stipulates that education is free until age 16; in practice, however, some parents are required to pay for books, uniforms, and school fees, which may limit access to education for some children. (3,16,17) Over-enrollment, the absence of sanitation facilities, a lack of teachers, and sexual abuse in schools also pose barriers to education for some children, particularly in refugee or IDP camps and non-urban areas. (3,4,16,18,19) Indigenous children throughout the country may experience discrimination, linguistic barriers, prohibitive school fees, and long distances to travel to schools. (4,17,20,21)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The ROC has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the ROC's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the lack of a minimum age for voluntary recruitment into state armed forces.

In June 2019, President Nguesso enacted comprehensive anti-trafficking legislation. (5,26,30) The new law prohibits all forms of domestic and international trafficking, and stipulates higher penalties for child trafficking. (26) The legislation includes prevention, identification, protection, and assistance services to trafficking victims. (26,31) It also establishes a national anti-trafficking commission and outlines bilateral and regional cooperation mechanisms. (5,26,32) The law's entry into force brings the ROC's child trafficking laws into compliance with international standards. (26,33)

National laws do not set a minimum age for voluntary recruitment into the armed forces. (21,23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL)	Enforces child labor laws. (17) Conducts initial inspections before referring cases to the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ) for prosecution. (3)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Enforces criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor. Dedicates two judges—one judge in Brazzaville and one in Pointe-Noire—to child protection cases. (3)
Ministry of the Interior's National Police	Enforces criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor and conducts initial investigations in cases of forced labor, human trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. (3)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA)	Promotes the rights of vulnerable groups and contributes to anti-trafficking efforts by providing social welfare assistance to victims. (3,17) May conduct initial inspections before referring cases to MOJ for prosecution. (3) Through its Director General of Social Affairs, oversees government strategy to combat human trafficking. (14) Through its Task Force, leads efforts to combat human trafficking in Pointe-Noire, designates foster families to receive victims, and assists in repatriating or reintegrating victims. (3)

The Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ) and the National Police lead child labor law enforcement efforts, and the MOL and the Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA) conduct initial investigations and provide support to victims after they are rescued. (4) Although there is a line item in the MSA's budget for activities to combat human trafficking, funds are disbursed irregularly or not at all. (14)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in the ROC took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MOL that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the limited scope of inspections.

The labor inspectorate added 241 labor inspectors to its payroll in 2019. (5) This figure brings the government into accord with the ILO's technical advice, which recommends 1 inspector for 15,000 workers, or 137 labor inspectors. (35,36) However, training opportunities for labor inspectors are very limited due to a lack of resources, particularly for lower-level staff. (14) Although the government lacks a formal process for referring children found in situations of child labor to appropriate social services providers, individual labor inspectors may leverage personal connections with inter-ministerial counterparts to refer children found during inspections to social services. (4,5) The government did not provide comprehensive information about labor law enforcement operations, such as number of inspections, violations found, and penalties applied, for inclusion in this report.

During the reporting period, labor inspections were not conducted in some parts of the country, especially in rural areas. (3,4,37) In addition, inspectors do not have access to government vehicles and rely on the employers whose businesses are being inspected to provide transportation. (37)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in the ROC took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating human resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

During the reporting period, police arrested and extradited Alexis Ndouna, a prominent Gabonese fugitive who was accused of raping a child and of child sex trafficking. (30,38) Authorities also removed eight children, one male and seven females, from exploitation and child labor. The MSA placed the children under state care and provided protective services pending repatriation. (5) Authorities arrested six presumed traffickers who remain in detention pending prosecution. Four of these cases involved children trafficked into the country from Benin. (5,30) The MOJ prosecuted one case of child trafficking in 2019. (5)

The government provides funding for prosecution, investigation, and convictions of suspected traffickers in the context of broader judicial and law enforcement programs. (5) In 2019, the government allocated $8,000 to the MSA specifically for trafficking victim protection and assistance. The government provided services such as foster families and children's centers, as well as specialized care for children such as education, social support, food, and clothing. (2,30) In general, the MOJ and the MSA experienced difficulties in prosecuting offenders due to a weak judicial system, poor record keeping, a large backlog of cases in the high court, courts that convene infrequently and irregularly, and criminal law enforcement officials' and judges' unequal knowledge of anti-trafficking legislation and the Child Protection Code. (2,14)

The MSA, MOL, MOJ, and the National Police work together to enforce criminal laws against child trafficking; however, their efforts are limited to Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire. In addition, the National Police sometimes require payments from NGOs and other stakeholders to assist in operations to rescue victims of child trafficking. (3,14) Furthermore, existing penalties for the worst forms of child labor may not be severe enough to serve as deterrents because they are not commensurate with penalties for other serious crimes. (10,23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including the lack of adequate resources.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire (MSA Task Force)	Coordinates all efforts to combat trafficking of West African children in Pointe-Noire with UNICEF's support. Chaired by the Ministry of Social Affairs with representatives from other government agencies and civil society organizations. (2,3,5) Prevents and prosecutes cases of human trafficking and provides support to victims through placement with foster families. (39) During the reporting period, the committee provided funding for foster homes for child trafficking victims. (2)
National Commission to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons*	Coordinates government efforts on trafficking in persons and forced labor at the national level as a federal-level, inter-ministerial committee. (5) Article 34 of the 2019 Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons provides a dedicated line item for funding. (40) Met at least twice during the year in Brazzaville and in Pointe-Noire to discuss child labor issues and steps the government is taking to address violations of Congolese law. (5)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The government took steps to improve its coordinating mechanisms by reinvigorating the federal-level, anti-trafficking in persons commission. However, the government has not provided the MSA Task Force with a specific operating budget since 2014, limiting the task force's activities due to lack of funds. In addition, a local NGO has indicated that it refers cases to the Beninese consulate rather than the MSA Task Force because the majority of victims are Beninese and the MSA Task Force is unable to provide the NGO with financial support for its work. (2,14) Furthermore, there is no coordinating body to oversee efforts to combat child labor at the national level. (3,39)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the lack of a national child labor action plan.

Congo, Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2014–2017)	Aims to develop systems for monitoring and evaluation, strengthen the legal framework, and provide social services to victims of human trafficking. (41) Includes public awareness campaigns, training for law enforcement officials, and improvement of enforcement activities related to child trafficking. (3) Research indicates that the government continued to use this plan in 2019, along with advice from international partners, without formally extending or updating it. (5) During the reporting period, the plan achieved the goal of establishing a national commission to combat trafficking in persons. (5,40)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (14,15)

During the reporting period, the government took steps to implement a bilateral agreement with the Democratic Republic of the Congo that prevents minors from entering the ROC without the accompaniment of their parents. In addition, the government engaged with the Government of Benin to implement the September 2011 Cooperation Agreement between the two countries to combat human trafficking. (4,42) Despite severe financial restrictions, the government is currently writing the necessary application texts and regulations to implement its new anti-trafficking law. (5) The government has not included child labor elimination and prevention strategies in the Education Sector Policy (2015–2025), and research found no evidence of a general policy on child labor. (43)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Safety Net Program (LISUNGI) and Additional Financing (2014–2019)	World Bank-funded project that grants improved access to health and education services to poor families in Brazzaville, Cuvette, and Pointe-Noire. (44) Includes a cash transfer program for 127 households conditioned upon regular health visits and that all children maintain an 80 percent school attendance rate each month. (4,44) In February 2019, the World Bank authorized $22 million in additional financing to expand the LISUNGI program. (5)
McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program (2017–2022)	$30 million United States Department of Agriculture-funded, 5 year project implemented by WFP in Bouenza, Cuvette, Lekoumou, Likouala, Plateaux, Pool, and Sangha. Aims to improve literacy of school-aged children, increase healthy dietary practices, build capacity of government institutions, improve policy and regulatory framework, and increase government support and engagement of local organizations and community groups. (45) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the program.
Observe, Reflect, Act Schools	Ministry of Education program supported by UNICEF, the EU, and WFP to improve access to education for indigenous children through a 2- or 3-year preparatory program. (20,46,47) Identifies children who should be added to the civil register, provides school supplies to students, and raises awareness among indigenous families about the importance of education. (46,48) The schools continued to operate during the reporting period, but sources indicate that they are funded entirely by international organizations and have in practice become the only form of free education in the country. (49,50)

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (16)

In 2019, six ministerial decrees were adopted to implement the 2011 Indigenous People’s Act, which aims to facilitate access to education and social services for indigenous persons. The decrees mandate improved access to birth certificates, education, and increased legal protections. (5,51)

Existing government programs are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor in all relevant sectors, such as domestic work or commercial sexual exploitation. (3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in the ROC (Table 11).

Although research found no evidence that child labor exists in the Cook Islands, in 2019, the government made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, the Cook Islands increased its labor inspectorate budget. However, the government has not established adequate legal protections to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The law does not criminally prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, the production of pornography, or pornographic performances, or the use of children for illicit activities, including for the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in the Cook Islands.

The Government of the Cook Islands continues to plan its first Labor Force Survey—originally scheduled to occur in 2019—for 2020. The survey will be conducted by the Statistics Office of the Ministry of Finance and Economic Management and the Ministry of Internal Affairs’ Labor and Consumer Services section, with the ILO providing additional technical and financial support. (1-3)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The Cook Islands is self-governing in free association with New Zealand, and it follows a combination of its own laws and some of the laws of New Zealand and the United Kingdom that were enacted prior to self-government in 1965. (1,4) Since 1988, no treaty signed, ratified, accepted, approved, or acceded to by New Zealand extends to the Cook Islands, unless New Zealand acted expressly on behalf of the Cook Islands. (1) The Cook Islands has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 2). However, gaps exist in the Cook Islands’ legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of using children in illicit activities.

Table 2. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 30 of the Employment Relations Act (1)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 73(2) of the Employment Relations Act (1)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 73 of the Employment Relations Act; Articles 52–53 of the Industrial and Labor Ordinance (1,2)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 3 of the Prohibition of Forced or Compulsory Labor Ordinance; Article 109I of the Crimes Amendment Act (3,4)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 109I of the Crimes Amendment Act (4)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No

Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*†
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 23.1 of the Education Act (6)

The Employment Relations Act prohibits children younger than age 13 from being employed. (5) The Act also prohibits a school-aged person, defined as ages 13 to 16, from working during normal school hours, working for more than 10 hours a week outside of school hours, or doing work that is not considered light work. (5) However, the legal framework does not determine the activities in which light work is permitted. (5) The Cook Islands does not criminalize the use of children in illicit activities, particularly the production and trafficking of drugs. (8) Although there are no armed forces in the Cook Islands, the law does not criminally prohibit non-state armed groups from recruiting children under age 18. New Zealand is responsible for the defense of the territory at the Cook Islands’ request. (9,11) Education is free and compulsory for all child citizens and permanent residents of the Cook Islands at the primary—starting at age 3—and secondary levels. (2,10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government of the Cook Islands has established relevant institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Internal Affairs	Enforces labor laws through the Labor Division and provides child services. Lead agency for implementing the UN CRC. (7)
Cook Islands Police Service	Enforces child labor laws. (7)

Labor law enforcement on the Cook Islands lies with the Ministry of Internal Affairs’ Labor Division’s four labor inspectors. The Labor Division is responsible for monitoring labor protections and occupational safety and health. (1) The Cook Islands increased its labor inspectorate budget from $152,886 in 2018 to $163,232 in 2019. (2) Research was unable to determine how the increased funding was allocated.

Labor Law Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for labor law enforcement actions to address child labor.

Criminal Law Enforcement

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for criminal law enforcement actions to address child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor. However, the Government of the Cook Islands has established policies related to child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Cook Islands National Youth Policy (2015–2020)	Identifies priority areas for youth, including education and work opportunities, health, and youth risk and resilience. (8) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Youth Policy during the reporting period. (9)
National Policy Framework for Children (2017–2021)	Provides a framework to protect the rights of children with outcomes focused on their health, education, safety, economic opportunities, and international connectivity. Aims to protect the rights of children by strengthening data collection on children to improve the government's understanding of child abuse and children's experience in the legal system; and to improve collaboration between the government, parents, and the community. (10) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Policy Framework for Children during the reporting period.
United Nations Pacific Strategy (2018–2022)	A multinational strategic framework program consisting of 14 South Pacific nations to address, develop, and implement strategic economic development priorities in the South Pacific, including eliminating child labor and the worst forms of child labor. (11) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the United Nations Pacific Strategy during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for social programs to address child labor.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Table 5. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

In 2019, Costa Rica made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government published data from the 2018 National Household Survey, which includes information on the prevalence of child labor in Costa Rica. In collaboration with the International Labor Organization, the Ministry of Labor began implementing the Risk Module for Identifying Child Labor, which assists government officials in targeting communities at greater risk of employing child labor. In addition, prosecutors obtained sentences for three individuals on charges pertaining to the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the government passed new laws on trafficking in persons, including one that increased the statute of limitations for victims. The government also adopted a new 4-year National Plan for Development that includes strategies for addressing child labor. However, children in Costa Rica engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. Furthermore, existing social programs are not accessible to workers in all sectors and the labor inspectorate lacks the authority to assess penalties for labor violations.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Costa Rica engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also engage in child labor in agriculture. (I-10) Table I provides key indicators on children's work and education in Costa Rica.

In 2019, Costa Rica published the results of its 2018 National Household Survey (ENHAO), which includes partial data on child labor. The survey found that 13,328 children between the ages of 12 and 17 were working in Costa Rica. (10,27) The Ministry of Labor’s Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA) noted that working children in Costa Rica are employed in agriculture, domestic service, and street vending. Children in Costa Rica, including migrant children, are also subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in tourist destinations, border areas, and in the northern and Pacific coastal zones. (5-7,10,26) Costa Rica is also a destination country for child sex tourism, particularly with tourists from Europe and the United States. (22) Migrant children, typically from Nicaragua, are subjected to forced labor in agriculture, domestic servitude, and commercial sexual exploitation. (22,23,26)

Although preschool and general basic education are free and compulsory, children in rural areas, girls, LGBTI youth, and children from indigenous and Afro-descendant communities face challenges, such as discrimination and gender stereotypes, in accessing and completing their education. (1,5,28-30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Costa Rica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Costa Rica’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of non-state military recruitment of children.

In 2019, the National Assembly passed two laws related to trafficking in persons. (23) Law No. 9726 revised the definition of trafficking in persons published in the 2018 amendment to Article 5 of the Trafficking in Persons Law by removing the requirement of demonstrating movement of a victim and clarifying that means such as force, fraud, or coercion are not necessary to establish child trafficking. (36,41) Law No. 9685 extended the statute of limitations for victims to 25 years, which begins to run once the victim is age 18, for crimes involving sexual abuse, including child commercial sexual exploitation. (23,42)

During the reporting period, the government collaborated with the NGO Paniamor Foundation to amend the country's comprehensive list of hazardous occupations, with a final bill expected to be sent to the National Assembly in early 2020. The revisions would restrict the participation of minors in public presentations and some fishing activities. (10) The government also passed the Dual Law on Education and Forma Training No. 9728 in September of 2019. The law establishes the legal criteria and scope for adolescents over age 15 and under age 18 to participate in employment-related education and job placement alternatives. (43,44) Costa Rica's minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, making children between 15 and 17 vulnerable to child labor exploitation.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established relevant institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority and operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Monitors and enforces provisions in the Labor Code related to child labor, including conducting inspections and verification at worksites to ensure children are not engaged in hazardous labor or engaging in work that compromises a child's education. (31) Through the Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA), responds to and attempts to prevent child labor through policy development and public awareness campaigns. (45) Protects adolescent labor rights by conducting school and workplace visits, providing referrals to government services, and writing socio-labor studies and technical reports to inform policies and programs. (19,31)
Attorney General's Office	Enforces criminal laws protecting children, including laws prohibiting forced child labor, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the use of children in illicit activities. Coordinates with the Judicial Investigative Police, Immigration Police, Uniformed Police, and municipal police forces, and administers the following investigative and prosecutorial units: Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons, Organized Crime Unit, Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues, and Juvenile Justice Unit. (10,17,46)
Judicial Investigative Police	Investigates child labor violations, including child trafficking, child commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. (23)
National Child Welfare Agency (PANI)	Leads the coordination of government and civil society efforts in child and adolescent protection. (47) Ensures that child labor victims receive social services, including temporary shelter, legal advice, counseling, and reintegration into the educational system. (31)

During the reporting period, the Institutional Technical Committee (CTI) of the National Child Welfare Agency (PANI) initiated revisions to the Protocol for Attention to Minor Victims of Trafficking based on a new management model adopted by PANI. The CTI also developed information-sharing capabilities using social media and mail services and planned training for at-risk minors through its mobile unit and early intervention center programs. (10)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the authority and operations of the MTSS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the ability to assess penalties.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

While the labor inspectorate identified 23 child labor violations during the reporting period, OATIA also identified 369 minors working, including 56 children under age 15. Meanwhile, PANI reported receiving 75 reports of minors engaged in child labor exploitation. (10) In 2019, three cases of child labor were forwarded to OATIA so that social services could be provided. (10)

The Labor Inspection Office has indicated that its 2019 budget was sufficient to meet its needs. (10) However, enforcement of child labor laws, particularly in rural areas, is reportedly challenging due to insufficient funds for travel, facilities, and per diem costs incurred during inspections. (1,17) In addition, the Labor Inspection Office indicated that the number of labor inspectors was insufficient to cover the target population. (10) The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Costa Rica’s workforce, which includes more than 2 million workers. According to the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, Costa Rica would employ about 148 inspectors. (48,49)

The labor inspectorate is authorized to give warnings to employers and conduct re-inspections. However, the authority to assess labor-related penalties rests with Labor Courts in the Judicial Branch. (10) Government monitoring and enforcement of child labor laws is also limited in the informal sector, in which most child labor occurs, especially hazardous adolescent work. (2,13,25,50,51) Informal work is more common in agriculture than in other sectors in Costa Rica. (2)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including training for criminal investigators.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, the National Coalition against Migrant Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT) identified two child victims of forced domestic labor and commercial sexual exploitation, one girl age 15 from Costa Rica and one girl age 15 from Nicaragua. (10) CONATT’s Immediate Response Team certified that four minor girls were victims of trafficking in persons, including the two victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and referred them to social services. (23) Meanwhile, PANI reported identifying 73 victims of commercial sexual exploitation during the reporting period. (10)

In addition, investigators arrested two people on charges of sexual trafficking, remunerated sexual acts with minors, and dissemination of images containing sexual abuse of minors. Authorities identified six victims, five of whom were minors. (23) In March 2019, one of the traffickers was convicted and sentenced to 39 years in prison. (23) In a second case, three individuals were arrested on charges of commercial sexual exploitation of a minor. Two of the perpetrators were sentenced to 300 years and 19 years of prison respectively, and the third one was acquitted. (23) In 2019, authorities within the Attorney General’s Office investigated 30 cases of remunerated sexual acts with minors, 2 cases of remunerated sexual relations with minors, and 1 case of attempted remunerated sexual relations with minors. (10) However, the Government of Costa Rica did not provide disaggregated data identifying the totality of criminal investigations and penalties issued in relation to the worst forms of child labor for inclusion in this report.

Costa Rica

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons offered extensive training on trafficking in persons and related crimes, including those involving organized criminal organizations, to more than 50,000 individuals representing government agencies and the public. CONATT reached almost the same number of individuals through training it provided in 2019, significantly increasing the reach of its training compared to 2018. (23)

Reports indicate that the judiciary, prosecutors, and the police require additional staff, training, and resources to identify victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, refer victims to appropriate social services, and investigate, prosecute, and convict perpetrators. (6,23,26,52) Costa Rica also lacks a database to track human trafficking cases, making it difficult to target enforcement and prevention efforts. (26)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including sufficient resources to ensure coordination among relevant agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
MTSS Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA)	Coordinates government policies and programs to combat child labor. (2,4) Oversees the Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors. (53) In 2019, OATIA worked with ILO to finalize the first phase of the Risk Module for Identifying Child Labor, which will enable authorities to proactively target child labor by identifying communities at risk. (10)
National Committee for the Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Work	Develops and promotes policy and program initiatives focused on eliminating child labor and regulating adolescent work. Overseen by OATIA and includes a technical secretariat that comprises representatives from various sectors. (4,54) As part of the committee's work, in 2019 OATIA developed child labor and hazardous adolescent work eradication projects focusing on indigenous populations primarily in the Limon province, and projects in artisanal fishing in the Central Pacific region and the islands in the Gulf of Nicoya. (10)
National Coalition against Migrant Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT)	Leads government efforts to combat human trafficking and coordinates with OATIA and the National Commission Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES). (6,17) In 2019, produced a documentary called Sobrevivir (Surviving), which includes testimonies of victims of trafficking as a tool to train public employees and civil society. Also created a training process focusing on labor exploitation for approximately 600 public employees and continued its training and awareness-raising programs during the reporting period. (10) In addition, CONATT worked on achieving final approval and publication of its Public Policy on Trafficking and Smuggling and the policy's implementation plan, and finalized a draft bill against the smuggling of migrants to combat labor exploitation. (10)
National Commission Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES)	Prevents the commercial sexual exploitation of children and provides assistance and protection to victims. (17) Led by the National Council of Childhood and Adolescence; coordinates with OATIA and CONATT to address the worst forms of child labor. (17,55) Underwent a restructuring process in 2019, which included the Institutional Technical Committee drafting new regulations for the commission. (10)

Reports indicate that coordination is lacking between institutions responsible for investigating the worst forms of child labor and those providing social services to victims. (4,6) OATIA has reported that its office needs additional staff to better assist children engaged in child labor and their families. In addition, OATIA has noted that its office shares one vehicle with two other MTSS units, which limits its ability to provide oversight of child labor programs. (46)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap against Child Labor and the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2010–2020)	Aims to eradicate all forms of child labor in Costa Rica by 2020 by strengthening anti-poverty, health, and educational programs and policies, and by raising awareness of child labor. (56-58) During the reporting period, MTSS implemented the first phase of the Child Labor Vulnerability Model, including publishing national- and provincial-level vulnerability statistics on its website. (10,59)
Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors	Outlines provision of services for child laborers through collaboration between MTSS, PANI, the Ministry of Public Education, and the Joint Institute of Social Assistance (IMAS), and their regional and local agencies and the private sector. (2,4,60) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the protocol during the reporting period.
National Plan for Development (2019–2022)†	Outlines the government's objectives, priorities, and goals in the use of resources and in the implementation of policies, plans, and projects over a 4-year period. The plan incorporates labor rights, child welfare and development, and poverty reduction, and integrates child labor as an indicator for establishing decent work and reducing employment insecurity. (10,62)

†Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the accessibility of programs to all relevant groups.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Bridge to Development†	Aims to reduce poverty and eliminate vulnerability, including child labor, by providing social services to families in poor communities. (4,25,58,63) Relaunched in 2019 under the new administration, the program was expanded to cover more than 75 districts. (64)
Face of Justice Shelter†	NGO-run shelter for child victims of human trafficking that provides PANI-funded monthly subsidies to victims and care from full-time staff, including a trauma psychologist and health practitioner. (24,26) During the reporting period, assisted 30 victims of child commercial sexual exploitation and initiated a campaign to purchase the shelter in which it houses clients. (67) In 2019, PANI provided additional funding of $176,000 to support services for sexually exploited children and to increase Face of Justice's service quotas. (68)
Houses of Joy (Casas de la Alegría)†	Public-private alliance that provides culturally sensitive daycare and meals to Ngäbe Buglé , indigenous children whose parents work on coffee farms in Coto Brus. Aims to promote social inclusion and developmental opportunities for indigenous children and provide an alternative to child labor during the coffee harvest. (3,14,17,25,69-71) IMAS funds meals, caregiver salaries, and training; farm owners provide the land and classrooms, with financial contributions from UNICEF for building and teaching materials. (1,14,17,25,55,60,70) Assisted 737 children during the reporting period in Coto Brus and in new centers established in Tarrazu and Grecia. (10)
Let's Get Ahead Program (Avancemos)†	IMAS program that provides monthly conditional cash transfers to low-income families to keep children in school and out of exploitative work. (2,30,72) In 2019, 199,896 high school students received cash transfers and the government invested $95,000,000 in the program during the reporting period. (10)
USDOL-Funded Projects to Support Youth Apprenticeship	USDOL-funded, $3 million Youth Pathways to Leadership, Learning, and Livelihoods in Costa Rica (2016–2020) and $2.9 million Promoting Apprenticeship as a Path for Youth Employment in Argentina, Costa Rica, and Kenya through Global Apprenticeship Network (GAN) National Networks (2016–2019). (73,74) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of Costa Rica.

‡The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (75,76)

Research indicates that Ngäbe Buglé, indigenous children in Costa Rica who migrate with their families to work seasonally on coffee farms, face additional challenges in accessing social services due to long distances to service providers, language barriers, and complications in obtaining required documents from government institutions. (3,14,15)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Costa Rica (Table 11).

In 2019, Côte d'Ivoire made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government initiated 143 prosecutions related to the worst forms of child labor, and the Ministry of Justice issued a circular instructing law enforcement officials and the judiciary to fine, arrest, or prosecute perpetrators of child labor. In addition, the government officially adopted the National Action Plan for the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor, which was developed in 2018. However, children in Côte d'Ivoire engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. A lack of financial resources and personnel may have hindered labor law enforcement efforts. In addition, labor inspectors are not authorized to assess penalties.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Côte d'Ivoire engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in the harvesting of cocoa and coffee, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) According to a Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey conducted in 2016, 21.5 percent of children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in hazardous work. (3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Côte d'Ivoire. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	25.6 (Unavailable)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	70.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	21.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		71.6

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children from Côte d'Ivoire are subjected to human trafficking for forced labor in domestic work within the country and in Northern Africa. Children are also brought from neighboring West African countries to Côte d'Ivoire for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, including in begging, cocoa production, and artisanal mining. (2,6,9,18)

School is mandatory for children ages 6 to 16 in Côte d'Ivoire. Although the Law on Education provides for free education, students are often required to pay for textbooks, school fees, or uniforms, which may be prohibitive to some families. (2,22-24) Identity documents are required for students to take entrance exams for secondary school, posing a barrier to continued education beyond primary level. (2,25) A shortage of teachers, poor school infrastructure, lack of transportation systems in rural areas, inadequate sanitation facilities, and violence have negatively impacted children's ability to attend school. (2) Research also suggests that some students are physically and sexually abused at school, which may deter some students from attending school. (2,24,26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Côte d'Ivoire has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

The civil code is being revised to include more specific designations of the minimum age at which certain types of work can be performed. (2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Employment and Social Protection that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Social Protection (MEPS)	MEPS develops, proposes, and enforces all labor laws, including those related to child labor. (2,26) The Anti-Trafficking Unit, a Sub-Directorate, and the Ministry of Women, Family, and Children to provide support to victims of child trafficking and other forms of child labor. (2,18) MEPS implements the child labor monitoring system, Système d'Observation et de Suivi du Travail des Enfants en Côte d'Ivoire (SOSTECI), which enables communities to collect and analyze statistical data on the worst forms of child labor. (2,11,13) The General Labor Directorate in Abidjan coordinates the regional offices and their efforts to combat child labor. (20,39) On September 11, 2019, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights issued Circular Note No. 006/MJDH instructing law enforcement and judges to fine, arrest, or prosecute all persons who do not respect national legislation regarding prohibitions against child labor, as well as parents who do not send their children to school as required by law. (2)
Ministry of Interior and Security	Through its Anti-Trafficking Unit, leads efforts to enforce criminal laws against child trafficking. Through its Mondaine Brigades , combats commercial sexual exploitation, including the exploitation of children. (2) Through its Unit for Combating Transnational Organized Crime, supports UNODC's West Africa Coast Initiative, which aims to improve cross-border cooperation to combat crimes, including human trafficking. Ministry of Women, Family, and Children	Leads the government's efforts to combat human trafficking and implements a National Policy on Child Protection. (2,41) Maintains the 116 Allo hotline for child labor issues, and responds to complaints. (2,42) Provides support to child labor victims in coordination with MEPS. (2,43)

Ministry of Security and Civil Protection's Fight against Transnational Crimes	Combats drug trafficking, trafficking in persons, and trafficking of diamonds and protected species. Maintains a sub-unit for child trafficking and juvenile delinquency focused on cocoa-producing areas. (2)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Employment and Social Protection that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the authority to assess penalties for violations.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

‡ Data are from January 1, 2019 to September 30, 2019. (2)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Côte d'Ivoire's workforce, which includes approximately 8,747,000 workers. (47) According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Côte d'Ivoire would employ about 584 labor inspectors. (47,48) Labor inspectors are also tasked with dispute conciliation, which may detract from their primary duties of inspection. (28,49) The labor inspectorate suffers from a lack of resources, including insufficient staff, office facilities, and transportation. (26,49) As a result, the inspectors primarily focus on the formal sector, leaving the informal sector largely unregulated. (45,49)

During the reporting period, there was a decline in allocated budget as well as labor inspectors. According to Ministry of Labor, the decrease in labor inspectors is due to natural attrition. (46)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (15)	Yes (2)

In August of the reporting period, the Office of the First Lady donated cars and office supplies to the police. Research indicates that despite an increase in the number of violations identified and prosecutions initiated, the Anti-Trafficking Unit lacks the resources and personnel to adequately enforce criminal child labor laws throughout the country. (9,50,51) The government did not provide any additional details regarding the conviction of individual defendants nor the imposition of penalties. (2) There were some high profile arrests in 2019. (46)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including coordination on data collection among ministries and between different regions.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CNS)	Supervises, monitors, and evaluates all government activities related to child labor and child trafficking, including making policy recommendations and harmonizing laws with international conventions. (2,50,51) Chaired by the First Lady of Côte d'Ivoire and comprises 16 international and domestic partners. (2,18,50,52)
Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor	Designs, coordinates, and implements all government actions to combat the worst forms of child labor, and monitors relevant programs implemented by partner organizations. (42,50,52,53) Chaired by MEPS, includes representatives from 12 other ministries. (18,50,52,53) Research shows this committee was active during the reporting period.
National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking (CNLTP)	Formed in support of the 2016 Anti-Trafficking Law and chaired by the Prime Minister, aims to fight human trafficking throughout Côte d'Ivoire. Oversees the implementation of the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking, coordinates government efforts, and monitors implementation of all projects related to human trafficking. (54) Includes representation at the local level through dedicated units charged with implementing the National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking. (54,55) The Ministry of Women, Family, and Children serves as the executive secretariat and the committee comprises 13 ministries. (20) Became fully operation in February 2019. (56) Research shows this committee was active during the reporting period. (46)
Office of the First Lady	The Ivorian First Lady's office remains the key driver of the government's anti-trafficking efforts. (56) Engages with international partners on child labor issues in the cocoa trade and puts pressure on industry sourcing cocoa from Côte d'Ivoire to increase traceability. (56,57)

Coordination on data collection among ministries and between different regions remains a challenge. (20)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including funding and mainstreaming child labor issues into relevant policies.

Côte d'Ivoire

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (2019–2021)	Coordinated by CNS and the Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor, aims to significantly reduce the number of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor by building on best practices and improving on lessons learned from the implementation of previous national action plans. Priorities include increasing efforts to mobilize resources at the national level, reinforcing regional cooperation and public-private partnerships, incorporating worst forms of child labor considerations into national and sector-specific programming, and reinforcing the monitoring and evaluation of the national strategy for the fight against human trafficking and the worst forms of child labor. (58) Officially adopted in June 2019 and received approval for a budget of $132 million, although the full amount was not disbursed during the reporting period. (2)
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Joint declaration by the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, and the United States, as well as the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry. (42,59,60) Provides key stakeholders with resources and facilitates coordination of efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas. Aims to ensure that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Framework align with Côte d'Ivoire's national action plans to promote coherence and sustainability. (42,59,60) USDOL-funded projects and some industry-funded projects carried out activities that support the spirit of this policy during the reporting period. (61)
Policies Involving SOSTECI	Aim to strengthen and expand SOSTECI. Include partnership agreement between the International Cocoa Initiative and CNS in support of the National Action Plan for the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor. (2) The Decent Work Country Program (2017–2020), in collaboration with ILO, aims to improve working conditions, strengthen SOSTECI, and combat the worst forms of child labor. (62,63) The National Development Plan (2016–2020) allocates almost $6.1 million over 5 years to conduct diagnostic studies on child labor and child trafficking, construct three child protection centers, and develop a national action plan to combat human trafficking, particularly of girls. (64) SOSTECI was expanded during the reporting period. (2)
National Action Plan and Strategy Against Human Trafficking (2016–2020)†	With the support of UNODC and coordinated by CNLTP, $14.8 million project that aims to prevent human trafficking, expand social services for victims by improving physical infrastructure, provide training for law enforcement personnel and other stakeholders, promote coordination, and collect data on human trafficking. (65,66) This national action plan does not take fully into account all aspects of human trafficking in Côte d'Ivoire, and the coordination to implement the program continued to be weak during the reporting period. (25,67) During the reporting period, the CNLTP implemented workshops supported by UNODC. (25,46)
Labor Inspection Strategy (2019–2021)†	Developed during the reporting period through the Ministry of Employment and Social Protection with assistance from ILO. Aims to enable the government to ensure the application of legal provisions for the improvement of working conditions and the removal of children from work through the inspection of worksites, counseling, and monitoring. (15,45)
Compulsory Education Policy	In support of the Law on Education, aims to achieve 100 percent enrollment in primary school by 2020 and 100 percent enrollment in junior high by 2025. (22,74) Allocates $1.34 billion to modernize the education system, including by building new classrooms, providing free textbooks to low-income families, and providing additional pedagogical training to teachers. (22) By the end of 2019, enrollment of primary school students in rural cocoa farming areas increased to 90 percent, up from 59 percent in 2008, which has been partially attributed to implementation of this law. (2)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (23,24)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL projects in cocoa-growing areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana aim to eliminate child labor through research, improved monitoring and enforcement, and implementation and expansion of SOSTECI. These projects include: Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) (2013–2019), $7.95 million project implemented in at least 10 countries by ILO; Building a Generation of Safe and Healthy Workers: SafeYouth@Work (2014–2019), $11,443,156 global project implemented by ILO with Côte d'Ivoire as one of eight countries; Assessing Progress in Reducing Child Labor in Cocoa-Growing Areas of Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana (2015–2019), $3 million project implemented by the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago; and Eliminating Child Labor in Cocoa (2015–2019), $4.5 million project implemented by the International Cocoa Initiative. (75,76) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
Industry-Funded Projects	Aim to increase sustainability in the cocoa sector, improve farmer livelihoods and access to education, and combat the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas. Some projects support the World Cocoa Foundation's CocoaAction (2014–2020) strategy and the spirit of the 2010 Declaration. (42) Projects were active during the reporting period. (2)
Programs to Promote Education†	Programs aim to raise school attendance rates in rural areas, particularly among girls, by providing school meals, facilitating birth registration, and constructing community schools (écoles de proximité). Includes: the $42.5 million Integrated Program for Sustainable School Feeding, WFP-funded program; the Ministry of National Education School Feeding Program; and the McGovern-Dole School Feeding Program, $35.6 million joint initiative between WFP and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, in coordination with the Ministry of National Education that benefits 129,000 school children. (77,78) The McGovern-Dole School Feeding Program was active during the reporting period. (46)
World Bank-Funded Projects	Programs aim to improve access to education and provide poverty relief. Include: Second Fiscal Management, Education, Energy and Cocoa Reforms Development Policy Operation (2017–2020), $125 million project to increase the number of primary school teachers; and Productive Social Safety Net (2015–2020), $50 million cash transfer project to poor households in the Central, Northern, and Western regions of Côte d'Ivoire. (79,80) The Productive Social Safety Net project disbursed 73 percent of its funding as of November 2019. (81) The Second Fiscal Management, Education, Energy, and Cocoa Reforms Development Policy Operation has not reported updates since 2017.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (84-86)

Despite an increase in activities, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem in Côte d'Ivoire. (2) The government primarily relies on NGOs to provide social services to victims of child labor and child trafficking. The Government of Côte d'Ivoire lacks funding and resources for social services. (87) In June 2019, the World Bank project, Productive Social Safety Net, was approved for $100 million in additional funding. (81)

In 2019, Djibouti made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor quadrupled the size of its labor inspectorate, and Djibouti's Police Chief created a new Brigade for Minors. The government also enrolled 5,003 refugee children in education centers in Djibouti City and rural areas in collaboration with UNICEF. However, children in Djibouti engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in street work. Minimum age provisions only apply to children with a formal employment contract, which does not comply with international standards. Law enforcement efforts are inadequate to prevent and combat child labor, in part because labor inspectors lack the authority to assess penalties. In addition, the government did not make adequate efforts to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor due to lack of financial and human resource allocation and reporting mechanisms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Djibouti engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1,2) Children also perform dangerous tasks in street work. (1,2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Djibouti.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	12.3 (23,693)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	67.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	10.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		66.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2018, published by the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (3)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2018. (4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/ Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Caring for livestock, including goats and cattle (5)
Services	Domestic work† (2)
	Street work, such as shining shoes, washing and guarding cars, cleaning storefronts, sorting merchandise, collecting garbage, begging, and selling items (2,6,7)
	Working in restaurants, small shops, and family businesses (2)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2,6-8)
	Forced domestic work and begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2,6-8)
	Use in illicit activities, including the selling of marijuana (5)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Reports suggest that children, including undocumented migrant girls, are vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation in Djibouti City and the Ethiopia-Djibouti trucking corridor. (1,6,9,10) Djibouti is also host to the largest number of foreign military installations in the world, including thousands of military personnel and security contractors. This foreign military presence heightens the risks of commercial sexual exploitation of girls. (11) There are also mixed-migration flows from Ethiopia, Yemen, the East Africa region, and the Arabian Peninsula. In 2019, Djibouti hosted more than 30,000 refugees and asylum seekers, as well as more than 100,000 migrants, many of whom were transiting through the country. (12,13) Nearly half of all refugees and asylum seekers are children. (12,14) Undocumented children were allowed to attend school but could not sit for exams. Djibouti requires national birth certificates or UNHCR refugee documentation to graduate, which may serve as a disincentive for undocumented children to attend school, and, as a result, they remain vulnerable to exploitation. (2) Children in rural areas, where access to documentation is limited, also face obstacles to attaining birth certificates. Because Djibouti requires national birth certificates or UNHCR refugee documentation to graduate, undocumented children remain vulnerable to exploitation. (2) Children in rural areas, where access to documentation is limited, also face obstacles attaining birth certificates. (2)

Although primary and middle schools are tuition-free, other school-related expenses may prevent children from attending school. (15-17) Enrollment rates are lower for girls and for all children living in rural or impoverished areas, making these children more vulnerable to child labor. (17,18) Despite the Passage of a National Refugee Law in 2017 which guarantees education as a fundamental right to refugees and asylum-seekers lawfully residing in Djibouti, over 40 percent of refugees aged 6 to 16 were not enrolled in school. (12,14,19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Djibouti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	16	Article 5 of the Labor Code (20)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 108 and 110 of the Labor Code (20)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	Yes		Article 110 of the Labor Code (20)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 290 of the Labor Code; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes (20,21)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on the Fight Against the Trafficking of Persons and the Illegal Smuggling of Migrants; Article 23 of the Law Regarding Terrorism and Other Serious Crimes (21,22)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 394, 396, and 462–463 of the Penal Code; Articles 1 and 8 of the Law on the Fight Against the Trafficking of Persons and the Illegal Smuggling of Migrants (22,23)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 355–356 and 461 of the Penal Code (23)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 1 of the National Army Amendment Decree (24)
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A*
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Articles 149–151 and 461 of the Penal Code (23)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles 4 and 14 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (25)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (25)

* No conscription (26)

The Labor Code's minimum age provision applies only to children who perform work under a formal employment agreement, which does not conform to international standards requiring the protection of all children under the law establishing a minimum age for work. (23,27,28) Djibouti's hazardous work provision is also incomplete. Although the Labor Code prohibits the employment of children between the ages of 16 and 18 in domestic work, hotels, and bars, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not include street work, an area in which there is evidence of work in an unhealthy environment. (23,28-30) Furthermore, laws do not specifically criminalize the offering or procuring of a child for pornographic performances, or the use of a child for prostitution. (22,23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor (MOL) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforces all labor laws, including child labor laws and regulations. (7) Through its General Inspectorate of Labor and Social Laws, regulates youth employment. (2,27)
Djibouti National Police, including the Brigade for Minors*	Enforce criminal laws and investigate crimes related to child labor. (7) In 2019, with the assistance of UNICEF, Djibouti's Police Chief created a new unit called the Brigade for Minors to handle crime committed by children. (2)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecutes child labor cases referred by MOL. (7)
National Commission on Human Rights	Receives complaints and investigates cases of human rights violations, including child labor. (7,31) Assists victims in obtaining legal aid to prosecute violators. (31)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

In May, 21 police officers received child protection training, including 11 officers who will serve as focal points of the juvenile brigade. The training included modules on the international and national children's rights framework, and the role of case management systems in child protection. (33)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MOL that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including human resource allocation.

The government made efforts to publicize its laws on child labor. To this end, the MOL published notices in local newspapers reminding businesses that child labor is strictly forbidden in Djibouti. (2) In addition to releasing data on labor inspections conducted throughout the year, the MOL quadrupled the size of its labor inspectorate and plans to further hire 20 controllers by the end of 2024. (2) Djibouti is now in compliance with the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching one inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies. (35-37) However, Djibouti does not employ inspectors or controllers dedicated exclusively to child labor law enforcement. (2) Moreover, labor inspections are not routinely scheduled. They are carried out in reaction to repeated or serious complaints, and only in the formal sector. (2) Inspectors do not target sectors or geographical areas where children are at risk of child labor, including its worst forms. (2) This inhibits the elimination of child labor in the informal sector, in which the majority of child labor occurs. The labor inspectorate is also not able to assess penalties. (2) Finally, although a mechanism for filing and responding to labor complaints exists, reports reflect a lack of efficiency and transparency. (2)

The government does not publish data on child labor violations. Funding for the General Inspectorate of Labor and Social Laws reportedly increased in 2019, but the government did not provide the budget for this report. (7,34)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on whether criminal law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to combat child labor.

During the reporting period, the government dedicated additional resources to the protection of vulnerable populations, and the police made periodic arrests on suspicions of either sex or labor trafficking of minors. Police presence also increased along key child trafficking corridors, particularly along the Siesta beach road in Djibouti City. (32) However, due to procedural errors made in the investigation phase, a number of cases were ultimately not prosecutable. (32)

NGOs communicate trafficking indicators to the police, and the police rely upon these referrals to pass cases onto the prosecutor's office. (5,28,32) In 2019, the NGO Caritas International entered into separate memorandums of understanding with the Ministry of Women and Family and the National Commission of Human Rights. (32) During the reporting period, the two organizations referred cases involving victims of exploitation to Caritas' overnight shelter. The victims, who were minor girls, told center officials that they were subjects of sexual abuse in Yemen. (32) The referral mechanism exists for victims of child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, or abandonment, but not for children found in other types of child labor. (2) The government does not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts. (2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efforts to address all forms of child labor outside the scope of human trafficking.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Anti-Trafficking Working Group	Coordinates efforts to combat human trafficking through the development of a collaboration and outreach strategy focusing on the operationalization of the National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (2015–2022). The inter-agency working group is led by the Ministry of Justice, and includes representatives from MOL and the Ministry of the Interior. (1,38) In 2019, undertook large awareness-raising campaigns in Djibouti's rural areas, including along major trafficking routes. (2) The Anti-Trafficking Working Group met regularly during the reporting period, leading to enhanced coordination among government agencies, NGOs, and the UN. This, in turn, occasioned an increase in investigations and prosecutions of potential human trafficking cases. (1,2)
National Council for Children	Coordinates, implements, and monitors child protection policies and programs. Guides and defines government policy on child protection, including efforts to implement the Convention on the Rights of the Child. (39) Led by the Prime Minister and includes eight other agencies, representatives from NGOs, the private sector, and elected officials. (40) Advocates for newborn refugees and migrants to receive birth certificates, education under governmental programs for refugees and asylum seekers, and family reunification for unaccompanied migrant minors. (5) Research was unable to determine whether the council was active in 2019. (2)
Ministry of Women and Family	Coordinates child protection efforts. (2) Through its National Policy for Children in Djibouti, focuses on the survival, development, protection, and participation of children. (2,32) In 2019, began holding monthly meetings attended by representatives from the Ministry of Justice, the Police, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Health, the National Women's Union, the infant nursery Daryel, and the National Agency for the Disabled to coordinate efforts on at-risk children and victims of violence against children. (2)

Although the government has established an Anti-Trafficking Working Group, research did not find evidence that the government coordinates efforts to address other forms of child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including implementation.

Djibouti

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (2015–2022)	Aims to strengthen the legislative framework to combat human trafficking, protect and assist human trafficking victims, and establish a national referral mechanism between law enforcement officials and social services providers. (41) The Anti-Trafficking Working Group, which coordinates the action plan's implementation, met monthly in 2019; however, the plan is not yet fully operational. (1,2)
Government of Djibouti Policies†	Includes the National Policy for Children in Djibouti (2018–2022), which set out fundamental rights for children, including access to basic social services, and mobilizes national resources toward these ends. (42) The National Strategic Action Plan for Children in Djibouti, which was renewed in 2017, provides political and strategic guidelines for implementing the country's child protection policy. (43) The National Education Plan (2017–2020) aims to expand preschool education opportunities for children in underserved regions, while reforming secondary, technical, and vocational education nationwide. The plan targets a 100 percent primary enrollment rate, with a 90 percent enrollment rate for children ages 11–14. (42,44) Under Djibouti's Education Master Plan (2010–2019), gross primary enrollment rates increased from 66 percent in 2011 to 75 percent in 2019. (42,44) The National Social Protection Strategy (2018–2022) seeks to broaden social protections for vulnerable children and youth. (42)
UNDAF (2018–2022)	Focuses primarily on programs that build capacity for victim recognition and protection, and assists the government in the development of its "Vision 2035" plan, which is aligned with the UN 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. The government has launched or expanded several new policies and programs under this framework, including a revised Social Protection Strategy. (34,42)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2019, and for the fourth consecutive year, the National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons was not fully operational, although the working group has improved coordination during this reporting period. (1,2) Research was unable to determine whether the government strengthened the legislative framework.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
IOM Voluntary Return Program	Supported NGOs, including SOS Children Village and Caritas Djibouti, in hosting migrant street children in 2019. IOM funded the construction of facilities that host and provide services to vulnerable children, including victims of human trafficking referred by state and non-state services, many of whom previously slept on the street or at Siesta Beach. (32) Caritas' overnight shelter opened in June 2019, and has since hosted 137 children. (32)
Ministry of Women and the Family Programs	Includes the Social Assistance Program (2016–present), which provides children and their families in vulnerable communities with education and in-kind support. Between 2016 and 2019, 3,086 families benefited from food aid, and 500 school kits were distributed. (42) Similarly, the Support Project for Girls and Women in Precarious Situations (2017–present) is a multi-sectoral program aimed at reducing girls' economic and social vulnerability through education and training. (42) The Country Strategic Option Program (2019–2024) is a rural poverty-reduction program established under Djibouti's revised Social Protection Strategy. In 2019, the Country Strategic Option Program initiated a pilot program to establish school vegetable gardens in rural areas, reaching 50 schools in 5 regions during the reporting period. (42,45) Djibouti's Support Program for Children with Academic Difficulties, established in 2017, aims to provide academic support for children from low-income families. In 2019, nearly 300 learning-disabled students benefited from specialized tutoring. (42)
National Family Solidarity Program†	Government-funded program implemented by the State Secretariat for National Solidarity that establishes cash transfers to support Djiboutian households in extreme poverty. (46) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the National Family Solidarity Program during the reporting period.
UNICEF-Funded Projects	In collaboration with the Government of Djibouti through the National Office for Assistance to Refugees and Affected Populations, the Humanitarian Action for Children Project, and the UNICEF Country Program, promote access to quality education for children, especially from rural and poor urban areas; increase birth registration; and provide support for orphans and vulnerable children. (7,47,48) In 2019, UNICEF enrolled 5,003 refugee children in Read-Write-Count (Lire-Ecrire-Compter) and other education centers in Djibouti City and rural areas. (12) UNICEF also supported 440 migrant street children, providing them with literacy and vocational training and other social services, and funded the training of the newly created Brigade for Minors within the Police Department. (2,12)

Program	Description
World Bank-Funded Programs	Enhancing Income Opportunities in Djibouti (2015–2019) provided 3,000 youth and women with basic life skills training, coaching in business plan development, and access to finance. The Integrated Cash Transfer and Human Capital Project (2019–2022) seeks to expand the social safety net system and provide basic services in targeted poor communities. (2,49-51) The Expanding Opportunities for Learning Project (2019–2024),* a $28 million project, supports Djibouti's efforts to expand access to quality education for 35,000 at-risk or underserved children, including girls, refugees, and disabled students. (14,52) The World Bank is coordinating efforts to expand education opportunities with UNICEF, the Global Partnership for Education, and other funding and implementing partners. (52) In October 2019, the Government of Djibouti and the International Development Association agreed to co-finance a $22.4 million program to expand access to and improve retention in primary and lower secondary education for disadvantaged and vulnerable population groups. The project also plans to build the capacity of teachers and administrators in underserved areas. (53)
WFP-Transitional Interim Country Strategic Plan (2018–2019)	Provided social protection, human capital development, and resilience programming. (54,55) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the Strategic Plan during the reporting period.

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Djibouti.

‡ The government had other programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (26,56,57)

The Government of Djibouti, in line with the 2017 Djibouti Declaration on Refugee Education, is working to implement its commitment to integrate child refugees into its national education system. (14,19,58,59) Nevertheless, research found no evidence of programs to assist children involved in domestic work, street work, and commercial sexual exploitation. (28) There are no official government-run shelters to assist child victims. The government has authorized NGOs to host migrant street children and orphans overnight, but it does not provide support or services to assist in these efforts. (5,8)

In 2019, Dominica made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. In 2018, Dominica launched a Climate Resilience Agency and enacted the Climate Resilience Act, which facilitated in 2019 the rebuilding and reopening of all schools that had been damaged by the 2017 hurricane. Although research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Dominica, no recent study of child labor has been done to confirm this. Dominica’s legal framework does not protect children from exploitative work outside of the school year, and the government has not determined the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The country also lacks prohibitions against the use of children in pornography, or pornographic performances, and the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that child labor exists in Dominica. (1,2)

No current survey data on the child labor situation in Dominica is available. (1)

Since Hurricane Maria devastated the island in September 2017, some children have experienced long interruptions to their education due to destruction from the hurricane and the lack of government funds to rebuild schools. Many children left Dominica to attend school in other Eastern Caribbean states. (3-5) In 2018, Dominica launched a Climate Resilience Agency and enacted the Climate Resilience Act, which facilitated in 2019 the government’s rebuilding and reopening of all schools that had been damaged by the 2017 hurricane. (6-9)

Children from the Kalinago community face barriers to secondary education that could make them more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Because there is no secondary school in the Kalinago territory, students encounter transportation and social integration challenges as they travel outside of the territory to attend school. (1, 10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Dominica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Dominica

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 2). However, gaps exist in Dominica’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for hazardous work.

Table 2. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 2 and 46 of the Education Act 1997 (11)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	No		Article 4 of the Constitution; Sections 2, 8, 10, and 13 of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act (12,13)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No		Sections 2, 8, 10, and 13 of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act (13)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Sections 2, 8, 10, and 13 of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act; Article 18 of the Sexual Offenses Act (13,14)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	N/A†
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	N/A†
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 2 of the Education Act 1997 (11)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 15 of the Education Act 1997 (11)

† No standing military (15)

Article 46 of the Education Act prohibits the employment of children ages 5 to 16 during the school year but allows students ages 14 and older to work during school vacations or in school-sponsored employment training programs without defining the conditions, specific activities, or number of hours permissible for light work. (11)

Section 7(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act prohibits children under age 18 from working at night, unless they are working with family members. The law does not otherwise prohibit the employment of children in work that is likely to jeopardize their health, safety, or morals. (16,17) Dominica does not have national laws or regulations that define the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The government also has not established a minimum age for hazardous work. (18) Dominica’s laws related to forced labor are not sufficient because they do not criminally prohibit forced labor except when it results from human trafficking. In addition, laws related to child trafficking are not sufficient because they are limited to international trafficking. (13) The government has not enacted laws or regulations explicitly prohibiting the use of children in pornography, pornographic performances, or illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs. (17) In addition, the government has not enacted laws or regulations prohibiting the recruitment of children under age 18 by non-state armed groups.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

Even with no evidence of a problem, the government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor that may contribute to preventing or eliminating child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Labor Division, Ministry of Justice, Immigration and National Security	Conducts inspections and enforces laws related to child labor. Authorized to conduct unannounced inspections at any location with employees and to take legal action against employers violating child labor laws. (19,20) Reports to police and social services those cases in which children are found in exploitative labor situations. (19,20)
Ministry of Health and Social Services	Conducts inspections and enforces laws related to child labor. Reports to police those cases in which children are found in exploitative labor situations. (20) Provides social services, including education, housing, counseling, and financial aid, to children in child labor cases. (19,20)
Police Force	Enforces criminal laws, including those related to child labor. (1)
Ministry of Youth Development and Empowerment, Youth at Risk	Responsible for social welfare for vulnerable groups such as abused and neglected children. Implements the “Chances” emergency shelter program for children and young adults, and the Basic Needs Trust Fund, which seeks to improve access to basic public services, enhance employability, and reduce social vulnerability in poor communities. (1)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for enforcement actions to address child labor.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

Even with no evidence of a problem, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to preventing or eliminating child labor (Table 4).

Table 4. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Basic Needs Trust Fund	Caribbean Development Bank (CDB)-implemented program supervised by the Ministry for Ecclesiastical Affairs, Family, and Gender Affairs that aims to reduce poverty through livelihood services, improved infrastructure, capacity-building projects, and technical services. (22)
Education Trust Fund† and School Textbook Provision Scheme†	The Education Trust Fund is a government-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Education and Human Resource Development (MOE) that provides financial assistance for textbooks, transportation, and registration and exam fees to students in secondary school who would otherwise be unable to complete their education. (23,24) During the reporting year, MOE announced that it would continue to provide financial aid through the education trust fund. (25) The School Textbook Provision Scheme is implemented by MOE and subsidizes the cost of textbooks for primary and secondary school students. (26) During the reporting period, MOE announced that it would continue to provide assistance through the Textbooks Provision Scheme and increase the value of textbook awards to secondary school students and bursars. (25)
School Feeding Program†	Government-funded program implemented by MOE that provides lunch to primary school students in targeted areas. (27) Research did not identify any implementing activities undertaken during the reporting period.
Climate Resilience Agency of Dominica (CREAD) and Climate Resilience Act	Launched in 2018, in partnership with the Clinton Foundation, CREAD funds, designs, procures, implements, and coordinates climate resilience projects, which include rebuilding and repairing major roads and infrastructure, approximately 20 schools and 27 health facilities damaged by Hurricane Maria in 2017, and providing support for 8,500 farmers across the island. (6-8)
Chances†	Government-funded program implemented by the Ministry of Youth Development and Empowerment, Youth at Risk, Gender Affairs, Seniors Security and Dominicans with Disabilities that supports an emergency residential shelter to provide short-term services to abused and neglected children. The shelter can accept victims of the worst forms of child labor. (1,20,28,29) Research did not identify any implementing activities undertaken during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Dominica.

Dominica

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In May 2018, the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and UNICEF published a National Child Protection Action Plan to guide implementation of recommendations for Dominica's child justice framework. Dominica has neither completed the recommendations nor adopted the action plan. (I)

Although the government continued to fund social programs in 2019 that could address child labor, research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement the programs during the reporting period. (I)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor in Dominica (Table 5).

In 2019, the Dominican Republic made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor significantly increased the number of labor inspectors from 148 inspectors in 2018 to 205 inspectors in 2019. The Progressing with Solidarity program also supported over 300,000 households with school-aged children and the government expanded the Extended School Day program which covered over 75 percent of the nation's schoolchildren as of December 2019. However, children in the Dominican Republic engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. Other gaps remain, including limited human and financial resources for the enforcement of child labor laws, especially with regards to preventing children from engaging in harmful work in the agricultural sector and commercial sexual exploitation. Labor inspectors also lack the authority to assess penalties for violations related to child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Dominican Republic engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-5) Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. (6-8) Table I provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Dominican Republic.

	Use in illicit activities, including drug trafficking, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (4,27)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the Dominican Republic are victims of commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in coastal, tourist locations. The porous border between Haiti and the Dominican Republic has allowed some Haitian children to be trafficked into the Dominican Republic, where they have been engaged in commercial sexual exploitation and forced to work in agriculture, domestic work, street vending, or begging. (1,2,13,22,27,29) Some children, including Haitian children and Dominican-born children of Haitian descent, work in agricultural production, often alongside their parents, and live in communities that frequently lack basic services, including schools. (11-13,21,30-32)

Many Dominican-born persons of Haitian descent, including children, continue to remain in undocumented status because of the 2013 Constitutional Tribunal Judgement. This judgment retroactively revised the Dominican Republic’s citizenship transmission laws, providing that children born to non-citizens in the Dominican Republic after 1929 are not citizens of the Dominican Republic. Many of those of Haitian descent affected by the Judgment were not able to obtain legal residency documents under Law 169-14 or the National Regularization Plan. (21) Up to December 2019, the last date for which information is available, approximately 26,000 of an estimated 135,000 Dominican-born individuals, most of which were of Haitian descent, affected by the 2013 Constitutional Tribunal judgement had citizenship reinstated. (21,33) The government also issued identity documentation, but not yet citizenship, to approximately 8,700 people who could prove they were born in the Dominican Republic prior to 2013 but had never registered their birth. (21,32,34-39) Some Dominican-born children of Haitian descent have been deported. (40) Children of undocumented migrant parents, many of Haitian descent, are particularly vulnerable to labor exploitation because they may lack birth or residency documents. This increases the likelihood that undocumented children may be denied access to education or may be engaged in child labor, including its worst forms, as labor inspectors may not be able to verify their ages. (1,4,5,26,27,30,41-42) In addition, Haitian children who remain in the Dominican Republic after their parents have been repatriated to Haiti due to their undocumented status are more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. (30,43)

National law guarantees free public education, requires that all children attend school until age 18, and prohibits the exclusion of children from the educational system based on a lack of identity documents. (44-47) Parents are also instructed to obtain birth registration documents for their children and the Ministry of Education provides free legal services to help parents obtain identity documents. In addition, national policy allows undocumented children to enroll in school. (48) The Ministry of Education’s Office of Community Participation is the point of contact to handle school denial cases for children without identity documents and has reissued a directive to public schools noting all children must be allowed to attend school, regardless of their documentation. Parents may also appeal to the district government or the Ministry of Education’s regional office if their child is denied educational access. (19,34,35,48,49) In addition, during the reporting period, the Ministry of Education conducted public awareness-raising campaigns about school registration and the right to education for all children. Research did not identify cases of children without identity documents being denied access to education during the reporting period. (19,34,35,48,49) However, the Ministry of Education’s current Operations Manual of Public Education Centers incorrectly requires school administrators to request children to present identity documents to enroll in school. (50) Moreover, the Ministry of Education requires that students have a birth certificate on file to issue a high school diploma. As a result, children without identity documents are unable to prove that they have completed high school. (51,52)

Teacher shortages and a lack of school infrastructure create barriers to accessing education in the Dominican Republic. In addition, a high percentage of students drop out at the primary and secondary levels. (2,21,53-55) These issues particularly affect children living in rural areas and in communities predominantly of Haitian descent. Sources also indicate that some children of Haitian descent face discrimination by teachers and peers, travel long distances to schools, and are unable to afford school fees and supplies. (2,21,53-55)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

The Dominican Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in the Dominican Republic's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of military recruitment by non-state armed groups.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

* No conscription (61)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (44,58)

Laws related to forced labor are not sufficient because they do not criminally prohibit forced labor except when it results from human trafficking. (46,57,58) In addition, the prohibition against child trafficking is insufficient because it requires threats, the use of force, or coercion to be established for the crime of child trafficking. (57) While the Code for the Protection of Boys, Girls and Adolescents criminally prohibits accepting, offering, or transferring children without requiring threats, the use of force, or coercion as an element, it does not criminally prohibit the recruitment or harboring of children. (46) The law does not sufficiently prohibit commercial sexual exploitation, as the procurement of children for commercial sexual exploitation is not criminally prohibited. (46,47,57,59).

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Labor (MT, as per its initials in Spanish) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MT)	Leads efforts to eliminate child labor; conducts labor inspections, and oversees the Child Labor Directorate. Refers children found in exploitative conditions to social services, mainly the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI). (21,22,62,63)
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Prosecutes crimes involving children, including criminal violations related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children and other worst forms of child labor. Oversees the Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking, which receives notifications of alleged violations related to the worst forms of child labor through a hotline. (5,13,27,64,65)
National Police's Trafficking in Persons Unit and the Directorate of Migration	Enforces criminal laws, including those prohibiting the worst forms of child labor, and coordinates with the AG in the prosecution of perpetrators. Under the Ministry of the Interior. (13,16,27,65) From 2018 to 2019, organized 10 workshops in 5 provinces and 3 municipalities. (66) In 2019, with support from external funding, the Ministry of Interior and the National Police signed an agreement with an NGO to promote awareness and prevent human trafficking at the community and provincial levels, including producing materials in Spanish and Creole to be used in Haina and San Cristóbal municipalities. (5)
Specialized Corps for Tourist Safety (CESTUR)	Prevents child sex abuse and commercial sexual exploitation in tourist areas, rescues child victims, and arrests and brings to justice child sex offenders. Overseen by the Ministry of Defense. (13)
Local Vigilance Committees	Prevent child labor at the local level by alerting law enforcement of activities linked to child labor, directing victims of child labor to social services, and working closely with the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN) to raise awareness of child labor. (18,67) In 2019, an additional 9 Local Vigilance Committees were created in high risk municipalities, for a total of 49 Local Vigilance Committees nationwide. (68-70)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI)	Develops and implements policies and programs to eradicate all forms of violence against children, including child labor, and improve the employability of young people. Coordinates with the MT to protect children against labor exploitation and enforce labor laws. (21,64)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, limitations on the MT's authority, including the authority to assess penalties, may hinder adequate labor law enforcement.

‡ Data are from January 1, 2019 to November 30, 2019. (4)

In 2019, for the first time during the sugarcane harvest season, labor inspectors were present and available to respond to questions at worker orientation sessions at all of the major employers in the industry. During the reporting period, the MT employed 205 full-time labor inspectors, which is a significant increase from 2018. (4) Even so, that number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of the Dominican Republic's workforce, which includes over 4.7 million workers. According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, the Dominican Republic would employ about 315 labor inspectors. (73-75)

Labor inspectors are authorized to reinspect worksites to ensure violations are remedied. However, re-inspections occur less frequently and are more difficult and less consistent in remote rural areas. (56,76) In addition, evidence suggests that some inspection reports do not set a timeframe for the remediation of the violations identified. (77) The MT is not authorized to assess penalties. (19,56,72)

The 2008 General Inspection Protocol and the 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture instruct inspectors to assess child labor violations by reviewing workers' identity documents and employers' records, making observations, and conducting interviews. (76) Yet, the MT indicated improvements could be made with respect to how inspectors conduct interviews, ask follow-up questions, and use inspection data to strengthen the inspection system, in order to ascertain the ages of workers and guarantee that children under the age of 18 are not participating in dangerous unhealthy work. Moreover, reports indicate in some cases, Spanish-speaking inspectors working without translation assistance have been responsible for interviewing Creole-speaking workers with limited or no Spanish-language abilities, which may have hindered those inspections. (16)

From January through November 2019, the MT conducted 76,405 labor inspections, including 5,893 targeted child labor inspections in high-risk sectors, including agriculture, construction, and mining. The MT reported finding 30 child labor violations. (4) The MT also reported that 345 children and adolescents were identified through labor inspections in rural and urban areas and were removed from child labor and received social services. (5) Research indicates that inspections are not always conducted in a timely manner after requests are made. In addition, evidence suggests that inspection reports often contain errors and contradictions that undermine the credibility of these reports. (25,77,78) Reports also indicate that substandard labor inspections, incomplete labor inspection reports, and a lack of prosecutorial resources have hindered the ability of the Office of the Attorney General (AG) to pursue prosecutions on criminal matters involving child labor issues. (78)

A formal referral mechanism allows the MT to refer child labor victims found during labor inspections to the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI) for social services. (18-20)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, such as the lack of publicly available enforcement information, coordination among agencies, as well as human and financial resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, the Government of the Dominican Republic collaborated with the International Justice Mission to investigate three sex trafficking cases involving minor victims. In addition, with financial support from the European Union, the National Institute of Migration commissioned four research projects on trafficking in persons. (5) The government also reported that it opened five investigations for commercial sexual exploitation of minors, and convicted three German citizens of commercial sexual exploitation of minors. (5) Despite this information, the total number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor is unknown. (5,19)

Reports indicate the capacity of enforcement agencies to identify, investigate, and prosecute criminal cases related to human trafficking is limited due to a lack of human and financial resources. (5,16,27,49) In addition, reports indicate coordination between the MT and the AG has been limited mainly due to a lack of an appropriate case tracking system. Reports also indicate that some cases referred to the AG by the MT are not subsequently investigated and prosecuted by the AG. (5,8,78,81) The government also reported two incidents in which investigators, assigned to the office of the Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking, were accused of complicity or abuse of a victim in human trafficking crimes. Investigations were still ongoing during the reporting period. (5)

During the reporting period, the Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM), UNICEF, CONANI, the AG, and the Dominican airport agency AERODOM, continued their campaign against sexual exploitation and abuse of minors at several airports in the country. Despite these efforts, reports indicate that CONANI does not have the resources, facilities, and institutional capacity to meet the demand for services nationwide. (1,2,5,7,79,82)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including insufficient funding for key coordinating bodies to carry out their mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN)	Develops policies, approves programs, and coordinates, monitors, and evaluates efforts to combat child labor in the Dominican Republic. Overseen by the MT and comprising ministerial representatives, labor unions, private sector representatives, and NGOs. (21,22,63,83) Oversees system for referring children found during inspections to appropriate social services. (4) In 2019, participated in a World Day Against Child Labor with several other countries in Latin America and the Caribbean. (84)
Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM)	Coordinates efforts to combat human trafficking and is responsible for developing and implementing national plans. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprises 14 government agencies, including the MT and law enforcement agencies. (27,72,86) In 2019, coordinated and led the consultation process with government agencies, NGOs, and international organizations for the modification of Law 137-03 that sanctions trafficking in persons. (5) Also collaborated with the AG, UNICEF, and the Dominican airport agency (AERODOM) to conduct an awareness-raising campaign in airports to educate the public about the penalties for crimes involving the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (87)
Social Policies Coordination Cabinet	Coordinates all social policies and conditional cash transfer programs, such as the Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI) program. Led by the Vice President. (16) In 2019, collaborated with Abdul Latif Jameel Poverty Action Lab to track and study PROSOLI's program participants. (88)

Evidence suggests that the Local and Municipal Committees of the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN) face limitations in their coordination efforts due to a lack of financial resources to adequately carry out their mandates. (19)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including insufficient funding for implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Plan to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (PEN) (2006–2020)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies and municipal representatives in eradicating the worst forms of child labor. Prioritizes prevention, protection, assistance, and the progressive eradication of the worst forms of child labor. (16,62,94) During the reporting period, the ILO supported MT to continue implementation of PEN. (4)
Roadmap Toward the Elimination of Child Labor in the Dominican Republic (2016–2020)	Aims to eliminate child labor by 2020 and sets targets and indicators for poverty reduction, health, education, institutional coordination, awareness raising, and information sharing. (2,20,63,95) During the reporting period, MT worked with other government ministries and the ILO to implement the roadmap. (4)
National Action Plan against Human Trafficking and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants (2017–2020)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies in preventing and combating trafficking in persons and assisting trafficking victims. In 2019, CITIM began implementation of the plan. (5,19,86,87)
Education Pact (2014–2030)	Includes strategies to combat child labor and seeks to improve the quality of, and access to, primary and secondary education by increasing attendance and graduation rates and enrolling more students in the Extended School Day Program. (96,97) Implemented by the Ministry of Education and supported by the World Bank. In 2019, the plan was active and reportedly met or exceeded its targets for the year. (98)
National Development Strategy 2030	Aims to reduce poverty and inequality and includes programs that aim to combat child labor, provide universal education to all children, and expand access to secondary school, including for students without identity documents. Implemented by the Ministry of Economy. (20,53,99) During the reporting period, the government continued to dedicate 4 percent of GDP to education as indicated by the National Development Strategy. (4,19,100)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor.

Insufficient allocation of resources has slowed efforts to fully implement key policies related to child labor, including conducting planned activities in a timely manner. (1,101)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of efforts to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
USDOL-Funded Projects	USDOL-funded projects that aim to eliminate child labor include Project to Reduce Child Labor and Improve Working Conditions in Agriculture in the Dominican Republic (FORMITRA) (2017–2021), a $5 million project implemented by the ILO to support the efforts of the Government of the Dominican Republic to address child labor and strengthen labor law enforcement in agriculture; and From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labor (2015–2019), a global project implemented by the ILO to support global and national efforts to combat forced labor of adults and children under the 2014 ILO Protocol and supporting Recommendation to C. 29 on Forced Labor. In the Dominican Republic, aims to build the capacity of the MT to enforce laws and regulations related to forced labor and improve data management systems. (102-104) In 2019, FORMITRA began development of an Electronic System for Labor Inspection Case Management. (105) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI)†	Government program that provides conditional cash transfers to low-income families to increase children's school attendance and reduce child labor. (2,54,106,107) In 2019, PROSOLI's School Attendance and School Subsidy Incentives in 2019 supported 116,296 households with school-age children, while its School Progress through Study Incentives supported 191,273 households with school-age children. (108) Although previous reports indicated PROSOLI required program participants to present identity documentation to access program benefits, PROSOLI provides legal assistance to participants to obtain identity documentation. (19)
Extended School Day Program (Jornada Escolar Extendida)†	Ministry of Education program to extend school hours to a full day (8 a.m. to 4 p.m.) to improve educational achievement and reduce child labor. (1,109) As of December 2019, the program covered over 75 percent of the nation's schoolchildren and is aiming to provide coverage nationwide by the end of 2020. (4,8,19,81)
Line 700 Hotline†	Office of the First Lady's free hotline to enable citizens to report cases of the worst forms of child labor. Active in 2019. (113,114)
UNICEF Country Program (2018–2022)	$15.4 million UNICEF-funded program that supports the government's efforts to improve education, health, social inclusion, and protection for children in the Dominican Republic. Includes projects to increase birth registration rates and build the capacity of relevant government agencies to protect children, especially those without identity documents, from violence, sexual exploitation, and trafficking in persons. (2,54,115)

† Program is funded by the Government of the Dominican Republic.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (14,115-117)

In 2019, in an effort to improve the national education system, the government allocated 4 percent of the national GDP in its budget for primary and secondary education for the seventh consecutive year. (1,2,4,8,20) Although the Dominican Republic has programs that target the worst forms of child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly to address commercial sexual exploitation of children and harmful work in the agricultural sector. (1,2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

In 2019, Ecuador made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. To improve coordination between ministries, the Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion implemented an inter-agency agreement on joint inspections and the government put into effect the Inter-Institutional Action Protocol for the Comprehensive Care and Protection of Victims of Trafficking in Persons. The Ministry of Labor also upgraded its Unified System of Registration of Child Labor to make it easier to report cases and the government adopted the National Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons. In addition, the government published the results of a study that included information on child labor and launched the Palma Futuro project to combat child labor and forced labor in the palm oil sector. However, children in Ecuador engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in mining. The labor inspectorate continues to lack sufficient resources and children continue to face barriers to education, especially in rural areas.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ecuador engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in agriculture. (1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ecuador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	4.9 (168,530)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	97.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	5.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		104.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2018, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (4)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's Analysis of Statistics from Encuesta Nacional de Empleo, Desempleo y Subempleo (ENEMDU), 2016. (5)

Although the National Council for Inter-generational Equity (CNII) worked closely with the Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES) to complete a partial study on child labor that was published in early 2019, the government has not conducted a comprehensive nationwide child labor survey since 2012. Both government and civil society agree that a lack of updated statistics hampers efforts in eradicating child labor. (3,6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of bananas, palm oil, and flowers, including the use of chemical products† and machetes† (3,7-9)
	Fishing† (3,7,8)
	Hazardous work in the carving† and threading† of abacá fiber (3,10)
Industry	Gold mining† and small-scale mining† (2,3)
	Production of bricks† (3,11,12)
	Construction,† including loading construction materials, mixing materials to make concrete, and brickwork (3,8,11,13)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Civil society and government sources reported incidences of Peruvian adolescents being recruited under false promises of employment into forced labor in illegal mines in Ecuador. (2,21,22) Migrant and refugee children from Colombia and Venezuela are particularly vulnerable to street work, including forced begging. They are also vulnerable to exploitative labor practices in some parts of the fishing sector in the coastal region and artisanal mining in southern Ecuador and in the northern province of Imbabura. (2,3, 16, 19) Indigenous children between the ages of 6 and 10 from the highlands are trafficked for forced begging in Guayaquil, Quito, and Rumiñahui, initially under the false promises of employment. (3,9,15) Migrant and indigenous children are also vulnerable to labor trafficking in domestic servitude. (2,3,19)

Migrant and refugee children from other Latin American countries, girls from poor families, and indigenous and Afro-Ecuadorian girls are used in commercial sexual exploitation. (3) Commercial sexual exploitation in Ecuador also occurs near illegal mining sites. (3,13,15) Venezuelan, Colombian, and Peruvian girls are trafficked for commercial sexual exploitation in Ecuador. (3,16) Networks for commercial sexual exploitation also recruit children from schools, and increasingly through social media platforms that encourage children to recruit their friends and classmates. (19,22) On Ecuador’s northern border, children are forcibly recruited to engage in drug trafficking and robbery. (3)

Despite education being free in Ecuador, children face barriers to accessing education, including having to pay for uniforms and textbooks, lack of space and teachers, teen pregnancy, and lack of transportation for children who must attend schools far from their homes. (2,3,12) The lack of schools in rural areas specifically affects indigenous and refugee children, who must travel long distances to attend school. (2) Many indigenous children abandon school early, both in rural and urban areas. (8,25) International humanitarian organizations and local government officials reported that, in practice, schools sometimes denied children of refugees and migrants access to education. (3) According to government data as of March 31, there were 363,018 Venezuelans residing in Ecuador, with more than 45,000 Venezuelan refugee and migrant children registered for school during the 2019-2020 school year. Reports indicate that less than half of all school-aged Venezuelan children in Ecuador are attending school. (2,26)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Monitors child labor, conducts labor inspections at worksites, enforces child labor laws in the formal sector, administers sanctions and collects fines from companies found using child labor, and provides technical assistance to local governments on child labor. (3) Using the Unified System of Registration of Child Labor (SURT), collects information on child laborers and refers children to appropriate government services. (3)
Ministry of Social and Economic Inclusion (MIES), Office of Special Protection to Vulnerable Population	Conducts routine inspections in the informal sector for child labor and provides remediation services to child laborers and their families. (2,3) Through its Office of Special Protection, maintains a national anti-child labor program involving coordination with civil society organizations and local governments. (3) In 2019, MIES continued to provide services to children found in child labor and collaborated at the municipal level with civil society to provide activities for children to prevent child labor. (3,33) MIES also launched a program for homeless people and opened two shelters in Quito. (23)

Organization/Agency	Role
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Enforces criminal laws against child labor, hazardous child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking. (2,34,35) The AGO's Specialized Victim Witness Protection Program provides immediate support and shelter to victims and witnesses willing to press charges and testify against their abusers and coordinates referrals for further assistance with other government agencies. (2)
Ministry of Government	Oversees and evaluates all police actions, including the National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN). (2,21) DINAPEN investigates all crimes against children, including abuse, sexual exploitation, sex tourism, smuggling, kidnapping, exploitative child labor, and forced labor. (2,36) DINAPEN's National Investigative Unit against Trafficking in Persons and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants also investigates child trafficking cases, assists victims, and arrests traffickers. (37)
Office of the Prosecutor	Tries cases related to the worst forms of child labor. (3)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MOL that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including human resource allocation.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, the MOL upgraded its Unified System of Registration of Child Labor (SURT) to make it easier for government agencies and local authorities to use. (3) However, the government does not publish information from the SURTI system. (2,22) In response to concerns by the Ombudsman's office in November 2018 about health risks for families living on banana plantations exposed to chemicals and pesticides, the MOL increased inspections in banana producing provinces to monitor the safety of affected families. (3) However, research indicates that inspectors' coverage of the agricultural sector is insufficient, even though most children work in this sector. (2) During the reporting period, MIES assisted approximately 10,870 children vulnerable to child labor and removed 13 children from child labor as a result of inspections. MIES also implemented an inter-agency agreement to facilitate coordination between agencies on joint inspections. (3)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Ecuador's workforce, which includes over 8 million workers. According to the ILO's recommendation of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Ecuador would employ about 534 labor inspectors. (3,39,40) MOL also reported that the labor inspectorate lacked the necessary resources to fulfill its mandate, such as transportation and equipment. (3) Furthermore, inspectors do not have sufficient knowledge of child labor laws and lack training on identifying victims of trafficking in persons. (3,19,22) According to the MOL, Ecuador's labor inspectors focus primarily on formal sector employment, but also conducted random and referred inspections in 2019 in the informal sector where large numbers of children work. (3,26) Although Ecuadorian laws and regulations governing child labor are comprehensive, those regarding hazardous work are not enforced equally in rural areas and family-run businesses. (2,41)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including a lack of training for criminal investigators on the worst forms of child labor.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019

In 2019, the government reported nine individuals were convicted for human trafficking, including one convicted of sexual exploitation and child pornography. (37) Between January and November, 25 children and adolescents received support from the Attorney General Office's (AGO) Specialized Victim Witness Protection Program. Seven of these cases related to the use and trafficking of illegal substances, six for trafficking in persons, six for forced prostitution or sexual exploitation, four for migrant smuggling, one for forced begging, and one for commercial child pornography. (3) During the reporting period, the National Investigative Unit against Trafficking in Persons and Illicit Smuggling of Migrants' operational staff increased from 32 to 49 police officers. The Ministry of Government reported that in February 2019, 30 police officers received training on improving anti-trafficking protection for children and adolescents. (37)

Although investigators in four provinces received training on child exploitation and human trafficking during the reporting period, the AGO noted that training was insufficient compared to the number of employees at each of the local and provincial offices. (3) Civil society reports that the National Investigative Unit and the National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN) lack resources to adequately investigate trafficking in persons cases. (37) The government did not provide information on the exact number of violations found and convictions made for the worst forms of child labor in 2019 for inclusion in this report. (26)

A reciprocal referral mechanism exists between law enforcement and social services for victims of trafficking; however, civil society reports that the mechanism is at times ad hoc. (3) Shelters serve only girls who have been victims of sex trafficking. There are no specialized shelters for boys or girls who have been victims of labor trafficking unrelated to sex. (19,20,42) Although the MIES will generally assign child victims to shelters depending on space availability, the National Investigative Unit and MIES officials cite a lack of shelters in many provinces as a primary constraint in victim assistance. (2,3,19,36,43)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including for the provision of social services for victims of the worst forms of child labor.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Institutional Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Coordinates government efforts to combat child labor. Includes participation from MOL, DINAPEN, AGO, and MIES. (2,21) Regional inter-agency sub-committees on children and adolescence represent local governments on the committee. (3) The committee did not convene in 2019. During the reporting period, authorization for the committee's continuation was awaiting approval from the government. (3)
Inter-Institutional Coordinating Committee for the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons and Illicit Traffic in Migrants	Coordinates government efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking. Established as part of the National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and Other Forms of Exploitation. (35) Met periodically during the reporting period to coordinate government anti-trafficking efforts, including those related to children, and began implementing an updated National Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons. (3) The committee also held a 2-day conference in May to share best practices with their Colombian counterparts and establish an action plan to address human trafficking on their shared border. (37)
Technical Secretariat for the Lifetime Plan	Convenes government ministries to discuss issues, including child labor. (44) During the reporting period, the Secretariat continued to send out technical brigades to remote areas in all provinces to assist vulnerable populations, providing them with medical check-ups, and referring cases to MIES when cases of child labor were identified. (3)
National Council for Inter-generational Equity (CNII)	Coordinates inter-agency efforts to protect vulnerable populations, including children. Local autonomous governments also participate in coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor and implement the guidelines provided by CNII and are responsible for ensuring the correct application of norms related to child labor. (44) In June 2019, the Council and MIES released a partial study on child labor that was completed in October 2018, and government agencies responded to child labor trends found in the study. (3) CNII officials also met with provincial and city officials to lobby in favor of bills and policies relevant to the protection of children. (3) In 2019, local governments continued to monitor and coordinate efforts on child labor conditions through technical working groups. (3)
Inter-Agency Sub-Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (Mesa Interinstitucional de Erradicación del Trabajo Infantil)	Coordinates regional efforts to address child labor. (45) Participants include MIES; regional councils of Childhood and Adolescence; ministries of Education, Labor, and Interior; DINAPEN; and AGO. (43,45) In September 2019, the inter-agency roundtable held a session in Cuenca with participation from MOL, Ministry of Public Health, MIES, and DINAPEN to address identified cases of child labor and determine actions for intervention. (46)

In 2019, the AGO hosted a bi-national workshop with the Government of Colombia to unite efforts in addressing trafficking in persons, highlighting the importance of coordination on operations at the shared border. (47) In November 2019, the Ecuadorian government put into effect the Inter-Institutional Action Protocol for the Comprehensive Care and Protection of Victims of Trafficking in Persons, which was drafted in 2018. The protocol enhances government efforts by providing a set process for inter-agency coordination of services for victims of trafficking and was used to provide protection and assistance to victims throughout the reporting period. (37,48,49)

Coordination between ministries providing social services has improved in recent years, but the government continues having difficulties ensuring that some children rescued from working in the informal sector receive adequate social assistance. (26,50)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the approval of the national action plan on child labor.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) (2015–2017)	Establishes a strategy to eradicate child labor in Ecuador by 2021 and prevent hazardous child labor in agriculture, manufacturing, construction, and mining. Led by MOL, the plan operates under the National Plan for Good Living. (2,8,51) During the reporting period, the government continued to operate inspections under this national plan while awaiting executive approval of a new 3-year national plan to eradicate child labor, which is reportedly needed to improve inter-agency coordination. (3) On World Day against Child Labor on June 12, 2019, over 400 people, including mayors and national authorities, met to re-commit themselves to coordinated actions under the plan, including providing services for children involved in dangerous work and strengthening work on child labor at the local municipality level. (52) The government also held training and awareness workshops on child labor for parents, and events at which children received educational kits to encourage their continued school attendance and organized a forum in Guayaquil on protected adolescent work and applicable laws in which 230 students participated. (53,54) Although implemented by MOL as a pilot initiative, PETI operates without a permanent budget guaranteeing a dedicated agency in charge of efforts to combat child labor. (3)
National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons 2019–2030†	Aims to prevent, investigate, and impose legal sanctions against human trafficking with a focus on human rights, mobility, and gender, as the majority of victims in Ecuador are women. Launched in December of 2019, with U.S.-funded support by the IOM, it is the government's first multi-sectoral plan on trafficking that establishes goals for every public sector institution to address human trafficking. (55-57)
Lifetime Plan (Plan Toda Una Vida) (2017–2021)	Aims to support vulnerable populations from birth to advanced age through a series of social welfare programs. Aims to reduce child labor of children ages 5 to 14 to 2.7 percent by 2021. (22,58) Led by the Technical Secretariat for the Lifetime Plan. (59) Remained the government's signature social program in 2019 to assist vulnerable populations, including children. (3)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In August 2019, Ecuador hosted the Fifth Sub-Regional Meeting on the Prevention, Protection, and Restitution of Rights in Response to the Sexual Exploitation of Girls, Boys, and Adolescents to exchange best practices with representatives from across South America and establish an inter-institutional plan of action to fight this crime. (37)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of efforts to address all worst forms of child labor.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Business Network for a Child Labor Free Ecuador	UN initiative that seeks to gain commitment from participating industries to promote the prevention and elimination of child labor in their supply chains, trains businesses on child labor prevention, and creates employment opportunities for the parents of children engaged in child labor. (61) In 2019, co-organized an event with the Ministry of Labor in Guayaquil to commemorate June 12th's Day Against Child Labor. (62) In September 2019, the network collaborated with the local Ministry of Labor in the region of Azuay to launch the program "Actions that Educate" (Acciones que Educan) which creates seven free computer centers in the region for school children's use in an effort to discourage child labor. (63) During the reporting period, the network signed a commitment letter affirming plans to continue operations between 2019–2021. (64)
National Program to Combat Child Begging†	Seeks to raise awareness about child begging; aims to facilitate social services for children begging in the streets. (2) The government did not provide information on activities undertaken to implement this program in 2019 for inclusion in this report.
Palma Futuro (2019–2022)*	$6 million regional project implemented by Partners of the Americas to improve the implementation of social compliance systems that prevent and reduce child labor and forced labor in palm oil supply chains. (65) Additional information is available on the USDOL website.
Youth Impulse (Impulso Joven)†	Seeks to increase job training and higher education opportunities for at-risk youth, support youth entrepreneurship through preferential loans, and connect employers with at-risk youth. (2) The government did not provide information on activities undertaken to implement this plan in 2019 for inclusion in this report.

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Ecuador.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (2,50,66-68)

Ecuador

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2019, MIES continued to support the prevention of child labor among Afro-Ecuadorians through 17 educational centers located in urban Guayaquil in coordination with the Rafaela Maria Foundation. (69) In April 2019, Ecuador collaborated with the Regional Action Group of the Americas to launch an online informational campaign to raise awareness on child sex tourism in commemoration of the Day against Child Slavery. (37)

Although civil society stakeholders commended the government's social programs, they reiterated that these programs only make limited interventions in sectors in which child labor is most prevalent, specifically the informal and agricultural sectors. (2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Ecuador (Table 11).

In 2019, Egypt made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government formed and held the inaugural meeting of the National Steering Committee for the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Families, which will coordinate the implementation of the plan. The National Council for Childhood and Motherhood also continued to strengthen Child Protection Committees that had been inactive. Additionally, the Ministry of Social Solidarity exceeded its yearly goal in providing supplemental income to families to support children's school attendance, reaching 5 million children by April 2019. However, children in Egypt engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in quarrying limestone. Additionally, the government did not publish data on the enforcement of child labor laws and programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Egypt engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking, and in quarrying limestone. (1-3) Table I provides key indicators on children's work and education in Egypt.

Table I. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10 to 14	2.9 (246,179)
Attending School (%)	10 to 14	93.8

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Forced begging, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3,6)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Some girls are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation under the pretext of temporary marriage to wealthy foreign men, mostly from Persian Gulf countries. (6,27) In past years, Egyptian children were trafficked to Italy, where they were used for bonded child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and illicit activities. (10,28-33) Egyptian children continued to fall victim to labor exploitation in agriculture and food services, and some were sexually exploited. (6,34)

Many children drop out of school because of school-related costs, such as transportation, clothing, and food. (9,11,13) Girls face additional barriers to education, including long distances to school, harassment and violence at school and on the way to school, lack of sanitation facilities, and cultural barriers. (13,35) In addition, Syrian refugees in Egypt face difficulties in accessing education. (36) In 2019, the UN and partners enrolled 44,784 Syrian refugees in school, provided 483 teachers with professional development training, and distributed textbooks and school materials to 1,527 Syrian children. (37)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Egypt has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Egypt’s legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the prohibition of some forms of hazardous work such as brickmaking.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 64 of the Child Law (38)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation

Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Military and National Service (45)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	Yes		Article 7-bis(b) of the Child Law (38)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15‡	Article 59(1) of the Child Law; Articles 80 and 238 of the Constitution (38,40)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 54 of the Child Law (38)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (29,46)

The law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities for children, including in quarrying, tanning, welding, spraying pesticides, and carrying heavy loads. (39) However, the types of hazardous work prohibited for children do not cover brick production, an area of work in which there is evidence of exposure to hazardous temperatures. (14,15,17)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Manpower that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Manpower	Enforces child labor laws and regulations, including receiving and investigating child labor complaints. Inspectors conduct routine labor inspections and report violations to the Ministry of the Interior, which then refers the case for prosecution. (6)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforces laws and regulations prohibiting human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. (6)
Ministry of Justice, Prosecutor General's Office	Prosecutes violation of laws related to the worst forms of child labor and human trafficking. (6)
Ministry of Local Development	Provides administrative and logistical support for the enforcement of child labor laws. Administers the Child Protection Committees. (6)
Administrative Control Authority	Investigates government corruption and human trafficking, and reports violations to the Ministry of the Interior, which refers the case for prosecution. (47)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Manpower that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the authority to assess penalties.

In 2019, the Ministry of Manpower continued its cooperation with the ILO, the World Food Program, and NGOs. It conducted three workshops that trained 118 labor inspectors on relevant child labor laws and the Ministry of Social Solidarity's child protection policies and reporting mechanism. (6) However, sources report that the number of inspectors receiving training on child labor policies was insufficient to deal with the scope of the problem. (6)

The number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Egypt's workforce, which includes over 29.95 million workers. (48) According to the ILO's technical advice of 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Egypt would employ about 1,997 inspectors. (49,50) The government does not publish information about the funding of the labor inspectorate, initial training for new inspectors, the number of inspections, the number of violations, or penalties for violations. (6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including a lack of disaggregation of human trafficking enforcement data on children.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019

The government did not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts. (6) In 2019, 40 individuals, including an employee of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 3 to 16 years for human trafficking offenses including the commercial sexual exploitation of girls. (53) During the reporting period, the government conducted training sessions on human trafficking for social workers that focused on women and children. (54) In addition, a series of training sessions on countering human trafficking was held for prosecutors. (52)

In 2019, the Prosecutor General's Office established a Child Protection Office to review cases and rulings relating to children to protect them from exploitation and violence. (55)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including coordination among government agencies.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM)	Coordinates enforcement of laws related to child labor, including its worst forms. Provides technical support and training about child labor for the Ministry of Manpower's inspectors. (5) Identifies and monitors at-risk children. Manages two 24-hour hotlines and receives reports of child labor and child trafficking. (13) In 2019, NCCM took part in the inaugural meeting of the National Steering Committee for the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Families. (6) In January 2019, NCCM in coordination with other government entities and NGOs released its Children on the Move standard operating procedures for handling trafficking cases involving children. In addition, NCCM with UNICEF trained its hotline staff and upgraded the hotline's software to track the age, region, and types of crimes reported. (55)
National Steering Committee for the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labour and Supporting Families*	Coordinates efforts to implement the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Families. Membership includes the Ministries of Manpower, Social Solidarity, Education, Agriculture, the Interior, Planning, Finance, Investment and International Cooperation, Trade, Justice, Health, Local Development, and Awqaf, in addition to NCCM, the National Council of Women, the Central Agency for Population and Statistics, the National Media Agency, and Al Azhar University. (6) In July 2019, the committee held its inaugural meeting. (6)
National Coordination Committee on Preventing Illegal Migration and Combating Trafficking in Persons (NCCPIM & TIP)	Coordinates efforts to combat human trafficking. Led by an ambassador appointed by the Prime Minister, comprises 18 government entities, including the Ministries of the Interior and Manpower. (13) Despite efforts, insufficient cooperation by some entities prevents effective collaboration of government agencies and NGOs. (51) In 2019, NCCPIM & TIP along with other ministries and coordinating bodies conducted TIP-awareness campaigns for NGOs, diplomats, and Egyptian Red Crescent volunteers. (55)
Child Protection Committees	Coordinates child protection efforts at the local level in partnership with community organizations. Led by the Ministry of Social Solidarity and chaired by local governors in each governorate, with subcommittees at each police station. (13) During the reporting period, NCCM continued to strengthen Child Protection Committees that had been inactive in previous years. (51)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies that are consistent with relevant international standards on child labor (Table 9).

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Family (2018–2025)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2025 and identify roles of government agencies responsible for assisting child laborers. (13) Developed in 2017 and formally adopted in 2018, the strategic objectives of the National Action Plan include expansion of the child labor knowledge base; capacity-building of agencies providing support; social protection, with links to existing programs; enhanced education, including vocational education for children; and advocacy and awareness-raising. (17) In 2019, the Ministries of Manpower, Social Solidarity, Agriculture, and NCCM collaborated with the ILO to determine gaps in ministerial coordination and the regime to criminalize child labor. (6)
Third National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking (2016–2021)	Aims to maintain referral mechanisms, train law enforcement officials, and combat trafficking of street children. (13) During the reporting period, several government agencies provided human trafficking training to officials. (52,54)

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Childhood and Motherhood (2018–2030)	The child labor chapter aims to promote dialogue on child labor legislation, including updating the hazardous work list; building the capacity of relevant government agencies, such as the Ministry of Manpower and NCCM; developing programs to address child labor; and expanding education and vocational training opportunities. (11) During the reporting period, NCCM took part in the National Steering Committee for the National Action Plan Against the Worst Forms of Child Labor and Supporting Family. (6)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Expanding Access to Education and Protection for At-Risk Children in Egypt (2016–2021)	$32 million, EU-funded project implemented by UNICEF in cooperation with the Ministry of Education and NCCM to expand access to education for 36,000 children, including 6,000 children with disabilities, and to support 15 Child Protection Committees in 15 governorates. (57) Active in 2019. (58)
Solidarity and Dignity Program (Takafol and Karama)†	Funded by the Ministry of Social Solidarity, promotes school attendance and health monitoring for children by providing income supplements to poor families. (11) In 2019, UNICEF assisted the Ministry of Social Solidarity in expanding and improving the program to meet the government's single-year goal. By April 2019, provided benefits to 5 million children in 2.6 million families. (6)
Children without Shelter†	Ministry of Social Solidarity-operated shelters for victims of human trafficking, child victims of trafficking and forced labor, and other vulnerable individuals. The Dar as-Salam shelter, operated by NCCM and an NGO, Face, provides social services, including psychological counseling and health services. (61) Mobile units in 10 governorates work to reintegrate children with their families or place them in foster care. (62) Active in 2019. (63)

† Program is funded by the Government of Egypt.

Although Egypt has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly for commercial sexual exploitation and quarrying limestone.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Egypt (Table 11).

Table 11. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law establishes 16 as the minimum age for voluntary recruitment by the state military with safeguards for voluntariness.	2019
	Ensure that the types of work that children perform in Egypt that expose them to hazardous temperatures, such as brick production, are prohibited for children under age 18.	2017 – 2019
Enforcement	Publish information on labor inspection, including funding, the number of labor inspectors, initial training for inspectors, number of labor inspections conducted, violations found, and penalties imposed and collected.	2011 – 2019
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties.	2017 – 2019
	Increase the number of labor inspectors to meet the ILO's technical advice.	2018 – 2019
	Increase the number of inspectors receiving training on child labor policies.	2019
	Publish information on initial and refresher training for criminal investigators and the disaggregated number of investigations, violations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties for criminal violations of child labor laws.	2011 – 2019
Coordination	Ensure the National Coordinating Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor is able to carry out its intended mandate, and ensure effective collaboration between government agencies and other stakeholders.	2017 – 2019

	Expand programs to address the full scope of the child labor problem, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation and in quarrying limestone.	2010 – 2019

In 2019, El Salvador made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government published results from its Annual Multipurpose Household Survey, which identifies child labor prevalence in the country. The Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare also significantly increased fines assessed for labor violations and criminal law enforcement agencies investigated 45 cases of child commercial sexual exploitation. In addition, the National Council for Children established an emergency hotline to receive reports of child abuse, including child labor. However, children in El Salvador engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and in illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in the harvesting of coffee. Law enforcement agencies continued to lack sufficient resources to enforce child labor laws throughout the country. Gaps also remained related to the implementation of key policies to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in El Salvador engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation and in illicit activities, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Children also perform dangerous tasks in the harvesting of coffee. (1-6) In 2019, the Director General of Statistics and Census published results from the 2018 El Salvador Annual Multipurpose Household Survey (EHPM in Spanish), which found that around 101,000 children between the ages of 5 and 17 are working in El Salvador, a 21.69 percent decrease since 2017. (5,7) The survey also found that over 60 percent of child laborers live in rural communities and around 40 percent do not attend school. (5,7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in El Salvador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	5.9 (68,431)

	Forced begging, domestic work, agricultural labor, construction, work in textiles, and street work (2,5,6)

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in El Salvador often lack economic and educational opportunities and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. They are also recruited by gangs for illicit activities such as delivering threats, collecting extortion money, conducting surveillance activities, trafficking drugs, and committing homicides. (1,4–6,18,19) Gangs also often force young girls into domestic servitude, including providing childcare, and into sexual exploitation. Reports indicate that those who resist forced gang labor have been assaulted or killed. (5,6) El Salvador’s Trafficking in Person’s Special Prosecutor and local NGOs have indicated that adolescent girls with limited education are among the most at risk of being trafficked. (4,19) LGBTI adolescents are also at risk of being forced into commercial sexual exploitation by gangs. (5)

Children often emigrate to escape violence, extortion, and forced recruitment by gangs, in addition to seeking economic opportunities and family reunification. Once en route, they become vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. (2,4,6,20)

Multiple reports, including by third-party monitoring groups, indicate that the use of child labor in sugarcane harvesting has decreased since 2010. (1,21,22) However, despite ongoing government efforts to address child labor in this sector, recent data demonstrating the impact of specific government programs have not been published. (1)

At schools, children are recruited, extorted, and harassed by gangs, which may cause them to stop attending school. Children who do not attend school are more vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms. (1,2,20–23) Poverty, particularly in rural areas, also presents a barrier to education in El Salvador because children leave school to contribute to family incomes. Although the Comprehensive Law of Protection of Childhood and Adolescence indicates that lack of identity documents will not prevent school enrollment, NGOs and international organizations have indicated that the requirement for children to have birth certificates to enroll in school may explain under-enrollment rates, as the cost for these documents may be prohibitive for very poor families. (5) Limited reporting also indicates that children from indigenous communities disproportionately lack access to education. (1,5)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

El Salvador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in El Salvador's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work compared to the compulsory age for basic education.

‡ Age calculated based on available information (25,32)

On November 5, 2019, the Legislative Assembly Committee of Labor voted to increase significantly fines for labor violations, to a minimum of $57.14 and a maximum of $304. Despite this effort, the maximum fine in the Labor Code remained at $60 during the reporting period. (1,5) The revisions are still pending final approval in the full legislature. (33) In addition, as the minimum age for work is lower than the compulsory education age, children may be encouraged to leave school before the completion of compulsory education. (34–36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of their child labor laws.

Ministry of Justice and Public Security	Enforces criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor through the AG and the National Civil Police (PNC), both of which maintain special trafficking in persons units to investigate and prosecute human trafficking, including child trafficking. (5,10,12,27,38) The PNC maintains a hotline that receives complaints about human trafficking for sexual and labor exploitation. (6)
Salvadoran Institute for Childhood and Adolescent Development	Receives referrals from law enforcement agencies on cases of criminal exploitation of children, including for forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation. Provides child victims with services, including shelter, medical attention, psychological help, and legal advice. (39)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the MTPS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including financial resource allocation.

In 2019, the labor inspectorate conducted 8,241 child labor-specific inspections and identified 12 minors working through child labor-specific inspections. (5,41) Two of these children were found without the appropriate work authorization, but penalties were not imposed because the cases were resolved upon re-inspection. (5) In 2019, the MTPS imposed approximately $566,829 worth of labor violation fines, a significant increase compared to 2018, though none was for child labor violations. Furthermore, information was still not available to determine how much of those fines was collected. (5)

During the reporting period, inspectors received training on a range of topics, including human rights, jurisdiction law, administrative procedural law, labor rights and law, trafficking in persons, and sanctioning. However, none of the courses was child labor-specific and it is unclear if the courses offered included child labor themes. (5)

The MTPS has indicated that its budget is insufficient to address workers' rights and expressed concern that the Ministry's proposed 2019 budget did not include funds to specifically combat child labor. (1,5) Furthermore, the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of El Salvador's workforce, which includes more than

2.7 million workers. According to the ILO’s technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in industrializing economies, El Salvador would employ about 180 labor inspectors. (42) In addition, inspectors focus primarily on the formal sector in urban areas due to resource constraints, despite the size of El Salvador’s informal sector. (5,40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Criminal law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating financial resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

In 2019, El Salvador’s Specialized Anti-Trafficking in Persons Unit opened 45 cases of female commercial sexual exploitation involving girls between the ages of 10 and 17. It also initiated the prosecution of two defendants charged with trafficking and forced labor for pineapple sales in a case that includes minors. (5) The police and the Office of the Attorney General (AG) also carried out “Operation Turquoise” in October of 2019 in San Salvador, Sonsonate, and Chalatenango Departments. Because of this effort, nine individuals were arrested from various bars and charged with trafficking in persons for the sexual exploitation of minors. (19) However, the government did not provide for this report the total number of investigations conducted, violations found, or prosecutions initiated during the reporting period related to the worst forms of child labor.

El Salvador increased its number of prosecutors of anti-trafficking in persons from 5 in 2018 to 16 in 2019, including 2 prosecutors located in the remote regions of San Miguel and Ahuachapán, which have the highest rate of trafficking complaints. Even with this increase, the AG has indicated that the Ministry of Justice and Public Security is underfunded and unable to support a sufficient number of investigators to collect and analyze evidence to process case backlogs. (1,19,40) In addition, reports indicate that increased coordination between the National Civil Police (PNC) and the AG is needed to improve the investigation and prosecution of criminal child labor violations. (44) Salvadoran police chiefs and prosecutors indicated that difficulties in collecting, sharing, and gaining actionable insights from investigative information remain a challenge, especially because investigative bodies lack the capabilities to share information electronically. (4,6)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including funding allocation. .

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor	Determines and implements government efforts to combat child labor. Chaired by MTPS, includes 12 government agencies, along with representatives from labor unions, business associations, and NGOs. (11,12,45) Maintains a web-based monitoring system that allows government agencies to share and analyze information to coordinate the implementation of the Roadmap. (12,46,47) In 2019, the committee worked with civil society organizations to draft and submit a request to the Legislative Assembly to reform Article 38 of the Comprehensive Law of Protection of Childhood and Adolescence (LEPINA in Spanish) to eliminate physical punishment of children. (5)
National Council Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinates government efforts to combat human trafficking and implement the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons. (12,36) Led by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and composed of 11 government agencies. (12,27,48) Research was unable to identify specific activities undertaken during the reporting period.
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA)	Develops policies to protect the rights of children, including those regarding child labor, and implements LEPINA and the National Policy for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents in El Salvador (PNPNA). (12,25,49,50) Responds to cases involving the violation of children's rights by providing victim assistance. (51) In 2019, CONNA partnered with UNICEF and local NGOs to establish a free emergency hotline, "1-2-3 Habla Conmigo," designed specifically to report violations of children's rights, which may include child labor. (52)
Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Implement CONNA's policies, including PNPNA, at the departmental and municipal levels, and receive complaints of child rights violations. (12,25,53–55) Research was unable to identify specific activities undertaken during the reporting period.

The budget for the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA) is reported to have operated at a deficit from 2018 and into 2019 despite an increase of $100,000 allocated due to a rise in the number of cases the council has received. (51)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including the implementation of relevant national policies.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Policy for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents in El Salvador (PNPNA) (2013–2023)	Sets government policies aimed at guaranteeing children's rights and protecting children from violence and harm, including the worst forms of child labor. Other objectives include reducing poverty and improving health services and access to quality education for children, including children with disabilities. (11,50) Research was unable to identify specific activities undertaken during the reporting period.
National Action Plan for the PNPNA (2014–2019)	Set a framework for implementing the PNPNA from 2014 to 2019. Aimed to address PNPNA objectives, including the prevention of violence, the promotion of access to quality education, and the elimination of child labor by focusing on children's and adolescents' rights, gender equality, and social inclusion. (11,57,58) Research was unable to identify specific activities undertaken during the reporting period.
National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons	Defines a comprehensive plan to combat human trafficking of adults and children for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Aims to improve prevention efforts, victim assistance, prosecution, inter-agency coordination, training, and anti-corruption efforts. (59,60) Research was unable to identify specific activities undertaken during the reporting period.
Educated El Salvador Plan	Outlines six priorities for improving El Salvador's national education system, including increasing security in schools and improving access to education for vulnerable groups, including children engaged in child labor. (12,61) In 2019, the government merged the plan with Plan Cuscatlá , which focuses on addressing the specific educational needs of different regions. (5,62)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (1,4,38,63–73)

The government has not incorporated child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Youth Policy (2010–2024). (74)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Human Trafficking Public Awareness Campaigns†	Government public awareness campaigns implemented by CONNA and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to raise awareness about the dangers of human trafficking. Includes the “Protection Starts at Home” awareness program and the “Call 1 2 3” Hotline, which promote respect toward the physical, psychological, and sexual integrity of children and adolescents. (12,43,44,75) The “Call 1 2 3” Hotline was officially launched in 2019, and it offers children and adults the ability to consult specialists in emergency situations. The “Protection Starts at Home” campaign conducted public awareness campaigns during the reporting period about child sexual abuse. (5,76)
Sustainable Families Programs†	Set of government programs focused on improving health, education, productivity, and security, and eliminating poverty through inclusive and sustainable economic growth and access to public services. Includes Health and Education Bonus Programs that assist families with cash transfers conditioned on children’s school attendance and health checkups. (59,80,81) During the reporting period, in cooperation with the EU, the program held focus groups in five municipalities as part of a gender study aimed at identifying how gender-related issues are being addressed by the strategy. (82)
School Prevention and Security Plan†	Programs implemented by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security and the PNC in schools with high levels of violence. Includes activities such as provision of psychological help, online classes, skills workshops for youth, and increased police patrols. (83–86) The government increased the number of the program’s training centers from 1,104 in 2018 to 1,123 in 2019. (85,86)
USDOL-Funded Projects	Projects which aim to reduce the incidence of child labor, including: Youth Pathways-Central America (2015–2019), $16.5 million project implemented by Catholic Relief Services in El Salvador and Honduras; and Reducing Incidence of Child Labor and Harmful Conditions of Work in Economic Strengthening Initiatives (RICHES) (2017–2021), $1.5 million project implemented by the Grameen Foundation in El Salvador and the Philippines. (75,87-89) For additional information, please see the USDOL website.

† Program is funded by the Government of El Salvador.

‡ The government had other social programs that may have included the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor. (1,4,10,84,91–94)

Despite efforts to combat human trafficking, services for adolescent male human trafficking victims are limited, which may leave them vulnerable to being trafficked again. (6) Although the government implements several programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor by assisting poor families and school children, research found no evidence that the government has programs that assist child laborers who may not be living with their families and not attending school, such as children engaged in domestic work.

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

In 2019, Eritrea is receiving an assessment of no advancement. Despite initiatives to address child labor, Eritrea is receiving an assessment of no advancement because it had a policy of being complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than isolated incidents. Government officials continued to force students in grade 12, some of whom are under the age of 18, to participate in military training elements of the government's compulsory national service program. Otherwise, the government made efforts by acceding to ILO Convention 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor and, for the first time, providing data on sectors targeted for inspection and the number of labor inspectors on its payroll. Children in Eritrea engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced military training associated with national service and forced agricultural labor. The government also has not issued a list identifying hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children. In addition, the government does not have a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Eritrea engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced military training associated with national service and forced agricultural labor. Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Eritrea. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Eritrea

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

The Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995 establishes compulsory military training and service, known as National Service, for all citizens ages 18 to 40. (15,61) To graduate from high school and meet the compulsory training component of national service, students are required to complete their final year of schooling (grade 12) at the Warsai Yekalo Secondary School located at the Sawa military complex. Each year 11,000 to 15,000 students enter grade 12 at Sawa, and while many of these students have reached age 18, some are reportedly as young as age 16. (12,15-17,19,20) Research suggests that at least half of the year spent at Sawa is devoted to mandatory military training, which includes military discipline and procedures, weapons training, a survival exercise, and a 2- to 4-week war simulation. Some conscripts were forced to perform agricultural labor on government-owned farms. (17,19,21, 61) In addition, conscientious objectors, including young Jehovah’s Witnesses, are not given an alternative to military service and are prevented from receiving a high school diploma. This leaves them vulnerable to becoming involved in illegal activity, including the worst forms child labor. (22)

Indefinite national service assignments, inability to earn higher wages in the private sector without completion of national service assignments, and notoriously harsh conditions at Sawa have led to an exodus of unaccompanied minors from the country. Many resort to enlisting international smuggling or human trafficking networks to abscond. (3,14,17-19,23-25) Adolescent children, some as young as age 14, who attempted to leave Eritrea were sometimes detained or forced to undergo military training, despite being younger than the minimum age of 18 for compulsory military recruitment. (3,12,17,19,26) It is unclear if age verification procedures are consistently applied prior to new Sawa graduates being sent to active military service. (27) In addition, the military periodically conducts roundups, known as giffas, to perform identity checks. There have been reports that giffas have resulted in the imprisonment of children alleged to be attempting to evade compulsory national service and recruitment into the military. (13,17,28)

Children, particularly in some rural areas, face difficulty accessing education due to a shortage of schools and the inability to afford uniforms, supplies, and transportation. (8,17,21,29-31) To address the shortfall, the government deployed teachers to less populated regions to educate rural and nomadic children. (8,9) Teachers may also flee the country to avoid open-ended conscription into Eritrea’s national service system. The resulting staff shortages and high absenteeism rates compound these challenges to education. (17) The government did not collect or publish data on child work, child labor, or the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. (8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Eritrea has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

On June 3, 2019, the Government of Eritrea ratified the Worst Forms of Child Labor Convention, 1999 (No. 182). Eritrea has now ratified all eight ILO fundamental Conventions. (32)

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

The government has established laws and regulations related to child labor (Table 4). However, gaps exist in Eritrea's legal framework to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labor, including the minimum age for work.

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	14	Article 3, 68 of the Labor Proclamation (33)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No		Articles 3, 35, and 69 of the Labor Proclamation (33)
Identification of Hazardous Occupations or Activities Prohibited for Children	No		Article 69 of the Labor Proclamation (33)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 108(c), 297, and 316 of the Penal Code (34)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 297, 315–318 of the Penal Code (34)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	No		Articles 305–306 and 313–318 of the Penal Code (34)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No		Articles 390–392 of the Penal Code (34)
Minimum Age for Voluntary State Military Recruitment	No
Prohibition of Compulsory Recruitment of Children by (State) Military	Yes		Articles 7–8 of the Proclamation on National Service (15)
Prohibition of Military Recruitment by Non-state Armed Groups	No		Articles 109(e) and 111(b) of the Penal Code (34)
Compulsory Education Age	No	14‡
Free Public Education	No		Article 21 of the Constitution (35)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (36-38)

The law's minimum age protections do not apply to children working outside formal employment relationships, such as those who are self-employed. This does not conform to international standards, which require minimum working age protections for all children. (33,39) Article 69 of the Labor Proclamation authorizes the Minister of Labor to issue a list of activities prohibited to children under age 18; however, the government has not determined by national law or regulation the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. (33,40)

Laws related to the use of children in illicit activities are not sufficient because offering and procuring a child for the production of drugs is not criminally prohibited. (34) In addition, laws regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children are insufficient because the use of a child for prostitution is not criminally prohibited. (34) Although the government announced in 2015 that it was considering drafting a new criminal code that contains prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, it is unclear whether it was drafted or put into effect. (21,42,43) Furthermore, voluntary military service of children under 18 is not authorized in Eritrea because the Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995, which requires compulsory national service from all citizens ages 18 to 40, defines national service in such a way that it is limited to people in that age group. (15)

While Eritrea does not appear to have any laws guaranteeing free basic education or setting the compulsory education age, several of the government's policies call for the provision of free and compulsory basic education to all children below the age of 14, including the Education Sector Development Plan, the National Education Policy, and the Comprehensive National Child Policy. (44-46) In rural areas, fewer students attend school due to the distance between villages and schools and inadequate transportation. The government has articulated that expanding schooling in rural areas, aimed at ensuring universal access and participation, is one of its top two national development priorities. (8,45,47)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the operations of enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare	Enforces labor laws and investigates labor abuses, including child labor. (20,42) According to the government, child labor inspectors operate in every administrative zone. (48)
Citizen Militia	Performs night patrols and refers cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children or other exploitative practices to the Eritrean police. (8)
Eritrean Police	Enforces laws and investigates referred cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. (8)
National Security Administration	Works with the Eritrean police to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. (49)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Eritrea took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Ministry of Labor and Human Welfare that may hinder adequate enforcement, including the lack of financial resources, complaint mechanisms, and referral mechanisms.

In 2019, for the first time, the government released information on the size of its labor inspectorate and data on sectors targeted for inspections. (8) However, research indicates that the number of labor inspectors is likely insufficient for the size of Eritrea’s workforce, which includes approximately 2.7 million workers. (51) According to the ILO’s technical advice ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 40,000 workers in less developed economies, Eritrea would employ about 68 labor inspectors. (51-53)

The Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare’s labor inspection division conducted 1,166 unannounced inspections in 2019. Industries targeted for inspection included the hospitality, retail, and wholesale sectors (820 visits); manufacturing (233); social and personal services (54); communications and transportation (31); agriculture (9); electricity, gas and water (9); mining (4); construction (3); and financial services (3). (8,47) Inspectors cited 40 percent of inspected establishments for labor violations, while 31 percent were given official warnings to improve.

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Only 4 percent were reported to legal authorities for failing to comply with the minimum occupational safety and health standards, while the remaining 25 percent passed inspection. (54,47) Labor inspectors, in collaboration with the local administrations and police, are empowered to identify and bring offenders of child labor to justice. (8) However, the government did not report any child labor violations during the reporting period. (47)

In 2019, all labor inspectors went through two rounds of refresher trainings on labor laws and the principles of labor inspection. In addition, two inspectors attended specialized training at an ILO training center in Turin, which included training on child labor and its worst forms. (8,47) Although research was unable to determine whether reciprocal referral mechanisms exist between labor authorities and social services, the government maintains that penalties for labor violations are assessed in coordination with labor inspectors, administrators, and the police. (9) The government did not provide information on its labor inspectorate funding for inclusion in this report. Nevertheless, research suggests that inadequate resources, including transportation to remote areas, hinder inspectors' access to sites in which child labor is likely to occur. (8)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Eritrea took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the criminal enforcement agencies that may hinder adequate criminal enforcement, including lack of criminal law enforcement data.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Under the Proclamation on National Service (No. 82/199), all Eritreans over the age of 18 must undergo six months of compulsory military training at the National Military Training Center. Despite evidence that children younger than age 18 are forced to participate in military training, research did not identify measures taken by the government in 2019 to ensure children were not subjected to compulsory military training. (8,17,33) The government does not publicly release information on its criminal law enforcement efforts. (8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor.

Eritrea's 43 Child Wellbeing Committees, which operate at the local level, include representatives from the political, health, educational, legal, and civil society sectors. (8) While the committees were active in 2019, research found that their mandates are focused on reducing female genital mutilation and child marriage, and do not extend to efforts to address child labor. (8,9)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 8). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

NO ADVANCEMENT – EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT IN FORCED CHILD LABOR

Table 8. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Comprehensive National Child Policy	Addresses underlying causes of child labor through studies and assessments on the nature and conditions of child labor; designs advocacy and public awareness campaigns to sensitize on the worst forms of child labor; and empowers communities and the public sector to monitor and prevent child labor from occurring. (44,47) The policy calls for the provision of free and compulsory basic education to all children irrespective of gender, sex, ethnicity, religion, or disability. (50) Research was unable to determine if the policy was implemented during the reporting period.
Education Sector Development Plan (2018–2021)	Establishes 8 years of free and compulsory education for all children. (45,55) Includes a strategy to ensure equitable access to education for all children, including in nomadic communities, through the provision of mobile classrooms. (45,47) In 2019, the government assigned teachers to travel with nomadic groups. (8)

‡ The government had other policies that may have addressed child labor issues or had an impact on child labor. (46)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that may contribute to eliminating or preventing child labor (Table 9). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of efforts to address the problem in all sectors.

Table 9. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Complementary Elementary Education†	Government program created under the Education Sector Development Plan that addresses the educational needs of out-of-school children ages 9 to 14 in remote and rural areas. Condenses 5 years of elementary education into a 3-year program to allow students to either mainstream into formal education at the secondary level or access vocational education. (4,21,45) In 2019, established 54 temporary classroom structures and provided 2,200 out-of-school children with access to education. (56)
UNICEF Country Program (2017–2021)	$19.5 million ($31 million requested) UNICEF-funded program nested under the UN-Eritrea Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework (2017–2021); in collaboration with the government, expands access to quality basic education for all children, and protects children from violence, exploitation, and abuse. (57-59) In 2019, UNICEF developed a mine safety education program, and supported the Ministry of Education’s efforts to train 27 school health teachers using the Emergency and Safety Manual. UNICEF also provided 330 vulnerable households with cash stipends during the reporting period. (56)
Better Migration Management*	EU-led program which encompasses 11 countries in North, Central, and East Africa, and aims to address the international labor market, including trafficking of children. The Eritrean government joined the program on May 28, 2019. (8,60)

* Policy was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Eritrea.

Research found no evidence of programs that target children working in agriculture, domestic work, and street work, or that address all worst forms of child labor in the country.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor in Eritrea (Table 10).

In 2019, Eswatini made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The government launched a program with IOM to Strengthen the Coordination Mechanism to Respond to Trafficking in Persons and Ensure Justice and Protection for all Victims of Trafficking in Eswatini. The government also approved and formally launched a new Trafficking in Persons National Strategic Framework and Action Plan. In addition, the government sentenced one individual to 15 years in prison for subjecting a 16 year old to forced labor and arrested a senior government official for the sex trafficking of a minor. However, children in Eswatini engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and herding livestock. Significant gaps in the legal framework remain, including a lack of legislation regulating the labor conditions under Kuhlehla and other customary practices, and a de facto compulsory education age that does not meet international standards. In addition, minimum age protections do not extend to children engaged in domestic work and agriculture, which does not conform to international standards that require all children to be protected by the minimum age to work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Eswatini engage in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work and herding livestock, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Eswatini.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5 to 14	11.7 (35,368)
Attending School (%)	5 to 14	92.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7 to 14	13.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2017, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2020. (5)

Source for all other data: International Labor Organization's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4 (MICS 4), 2010. (6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including growing corn and harvesting sugarcane (2)
	Raising and herding livestock, including cattle, buffalo, goats, swine, horses, donkeys, and sheep (2,4,7)
Services	Domestic work (2,8-10)
	Street work, including working as vendors, bus attendants, taxi conductors, porters, and car washers (1-3,8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in livestock herding, domestic work, farming, and market vending, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,3,11,12)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1,3,10,12,13)
	Use in illicit activities, including growing, manufacturing, and selling drugs such as marijuana (4,10)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

According to results from the 2014 Survey on Child Labor in Herding in Rural Areas in Eswatini published by the Government of Eswatini and the ILO, an estimated 72,332 child laborers under the age of 15 raise bovines and 20,680 raise sheep and goats, primarily in the rural areas of Hhohho, Manzini, Shiselweni, and Lumbobo. (7) Children perform physically arduous tasks while herding in the grasslands and mountainous regions, and risk occupational injury and disease from exposure to dangerous tools, insecticides, and herbicides. Children's injuries sustained during livestock herding include open wounds, fractures, dislocations and sprains, fever, extreme fatigue, and snake bites. (7)

The government provides free primary education from grade one through grade seven, and subsidizes secondary education for the approximately 70 percent of Eswatini's children who are orphaned or vulnerable. At the lower secondary and upper secondary levels, however, the cost of school fees was a barrier for students whose families lacked sufficient funds to sustain their enrollment. (14)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR CHILD LABOR

Eswatini has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

Table 4. Laws and Regulations on Child Labor

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	No	15	Article 234 of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act; Section 97 of the Employment Act (15,16)

Standard	Meets International Standards	Age	Legislation
Compulsory Education Age	No	12/13‡	Section 10 of the Free Primary Education Act (22)
Free Public Education	No		Section 3 of the Free Primary Education Act (22)

* No conscription (21)

‡ Age calculated based on available information (23)

Both the Children's Protection and Welfare Act and Section 97 of the Employment Act apply minimum age protections to children working in industrial undertakings, but neither covers children working in domestic and agricultural work. (15,16) Children working in the agricultural sector often work long hours, carry heavy loads, work in remote areas, and risk exposure to harmful pesticides. (7) There is also no identification of hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children based on the current legislation. (9,15,16)

Although Section 10 of the Free Primary Education Act requires parents to send their children to school for the completion of primary education, this educational attainment is typically at ages 12 or 13. As a result, children who complete primary education at ages 12 to 14 are vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to be in school but also cannot legally work because they are under age 15, the minimum age for work. (9,22,23) In addition, the Free Primary Education Act provides for free schooling for 7 years, although basic education is a total of 9 years and includes lower secondary education. The failure to provide complete free basic education may increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. (22,24)

Previous reports indicated that local chiefs required residents, including children, to participate in non-communal tasks such as seasonal weeding. This work was performed through the customary practice of Kuhlehla. (25) In 2019, there were no reports that local chiefs forced residents or children to work, and research indicates that the practice is rare or non-existent, and not innate to the customary practice of Kuhlehla (a practice in which people render services to the local chief or king). Still, the ILO has requested that the government issue legislation to regulate the nature and conditions of Kuhlehla, and ensure that the law explicitly states the voluntary nature of participation in such work. (25)

In 2019, a draft amendment to the Employment Act No. 5/1980 received initial feedback from Eswatini's Labor Advisory Board (LAB), and is awaiting a final review from the ILO and a second review by the LAB before being sent to the Cabinet and Parliament for approval. The draft bill would extend minimum age protections to children working in agriculture and domestic service, allow labor inspectors to enter private homes and farms to carry out inspections, and criminalize the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups. (14)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor (Table 5). However, gaps exist within the authority of the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS) that may hinder adequate enforcement of child labor laws.

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MLSS)	Enforces child labor laws and promotes relations between labor, government, and business through tripartite dialogue. (14)
Royal Eswatini Police Services (REPS)	Investigate cases involving the worst forms of child labor. Inform victims of sexual offenses, including commercial sexual exploitation, of available counseling and other support services, including Post Exposure Prophylactics. (26,20,27)
Department of Social Welfare	Offers rehabilitative services to victims of child labor, including orphans, and refers suspected cases of child labor to REPS or MLSS. (14)
Director of Public Prosecutions	Prosecutes cases involving the worst forms of child labor, and refers child victims to social and legal support services. (12,20) Responsible for implementing victim identification guidelines and referral mechanisms for victims of human trafficking and those at risk. (23)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2019, labor law enforcement agencies in Eswatini took actions to combat child labor (Table 6). However, gaps exist within the authority of MLSS that may hinder adequate labor law enforcement, including the authority to assess penalties.

Table 6. Labor Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Labor Law Enforcement	2018	2019

Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Labor Authorities and Social Services	Yes (27)	Yes (14)

Research indicates that labor inspectors lacked sufficient resources, such as vehicles, to conduct inspections. (2,10,23,27) In addition, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Eswatini's workforce, which includes approximately 427,900 workers. (30) According to the ILO's technical advice of a ratio approaching 1 inspector for every 15,000 workers in developing economies, Eswatini would employ about 29 labor inspectors, and would require the hiring of 14 additional inspectors to meet this threshold. (31,32)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2019, criminal law enforcement agencies in Eswatini took actions to combat child labor (Table 7). However, gaps exist within the operations of the Royal Eswatini Police Services (REPS) that may hinder adequate criminal law enforcement, including allocating financial resources.

Table 7. Criminal Law Enforcement Efforts Related to Child Labor

Overview of Criminal Law Enforcement	2018	2019
Initial Training for New Criminal Investigators	Yes (27)	Yes (14)
Training on New Laws Related to the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Yes (27)	Yes (14)

Imposed Penalties for Violations Related to The Worst Forms of Child Labor	No (34)	No (29)
Reciprocal Referral Mechanism Exists Between Criminal Authorities and Social Services	Yes (27)	Yes (14)

In 2019, security forces arrested one senior government official in the Deputy Prime Minister's Office on charges of trafficking in persons, rape, and kidnapping of a minor. He is currently awaiting trial. (35) In addition, another individual was prosecuted for forced child labor and sentenced to 15 years in prison. (35) Research indicates the Royal Eswatini Police Services (REPS) lacked sufficient resources to fulfill its full mandate in terms of carrying out investigations. (14)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor (Table 8). However, gaps exist that hinder the effective coordination of efforts to address child labor, including efficacy in accomplishing mandates.

Table 8. Key Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Children's Services Department	Evaluates and reviews existing national legal instruments governing the treatment of children to ensure compliance with international child treatment standards, provisions, and practices. Also monitors and evaluates national policies, plans, and programs, and ensures that stakeholders collaborate and contribute toward a national child development agenda. (27) Research was unable to determine whether the Children's Services Department was active during the reporting period.
Task Force for the Prevention of People Trafficking and People Smuggling	Coordinates the implementation of the People Trafficking and People Smuggling (Prohibition) Act of 2009 with the support from the Trafficking in Persons Secretariat. Formulates policies and programs to prevent and suppress human trafficking and people smuggling, including programs to provide assistance to victims and increase the public's awareness of the causes and consequences of human trafficking and smuggling, and exchanges information on cases of human trafficking among relevant stakeholders, including the police, immigration officers, social workers, and prosecutors. (18) In 2019, the government approved and formally launched a new National Strategic Framework and Action Plan to Combat People Trafficking. (33)

Although the government has coordinating mechanisms that address human trafficking, the government does not have a coordinating mechanism to address all relevant child labor issues, including child labor in agriculture and domestic work. In addition, resource constraints, poor communication, and a lack of coordination between staff working on the Task Force for the prevention of People Trafficking and People Smuggling has resulted in confusion about the mandates of these bodies, how to accomplish their missions, and the overall effectiveness of the task force. (10,14)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON CHILD LABOR

The government has established policies related to child labor (Table 9). However, policy gaps exist that hinder efforts to address child labor, including a lack of implementation.

Table 9. Key Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Framework and Action Plan to Combat People Trafficking (2019–2023)†	Assigns responsibilities to relevant government agencies on trafficking in persons and provides services to victims. (36) Aims to improve protection for victims, prosecution for offenders, and on continued prevention efforts. (36)
National Children's Policy (2009–Present)	Represents the policy framework of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act and aims to promote the rights of children, protect children from all types of abuse and exploitation, including child labor, and improve the quality of education. (37) Research was unable to determine whether actions were taken to implement this policy in 2019.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The government worked with ILO to draft a new Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labor for 2019–2025. The Action Plan has been reviewed and approved by the LAB and the Social Dialogue Committee, and will be presented to the Cabinet for adoption in 2020. (14)

Although the Government of Eswatini has adopted a policy related to human trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy on other relevant worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and the use of children in illicit activities. (14) Child labor elimination and prevention strategies are not included in the Eswatini Education and Training Sector Policy. (38)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2019, the government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of preventing child labor (Table 10). However, gaps exist in these social programs, including the adequacy of programs to address the full scope of the child labor problem.

Table 10. Key Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Strengthen the Coordination Mechanism to Respond to Trafficking in Persons and Ensure Justice and Protection for All Victims of Trafficking in Eswatini*	IOM-funded, 2 year project that aims to improve protection of trafficking victims by developing regulations and guidelines, including for shelters for human trafficking victims, and training staff from relevant Task Force ministries. (14)
Technical Assistance for Development of a Social Protection System in Swaziland (2016–2019)	$46.8 million EU-funded, 3 year capacity building project that supported the development of a social protection system through strengthening government coordination, regulatory, and oversight functions. A component of the project directly addressed the needs of children, which included education support services to vulnerable populations. (38) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this program during the reporting period.
Free Primary Education Program†	Provides funding to ensure free primary education to approximately 24,000 children starting from age 6 for a period of 7 years or up to grade seven. (2,23,27,40) Research was unable to determine whether activities were undertaken to implement this program during the reporting period.

* Program was launched during the reporting period.

† Program is funded by the Government of Eswatini.

During the year, the offices of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister worked with the Trafficking in Persons Secretariat, and the Catholic Church to explore the establishment of a trafficking shelter in order to improve the quality of care available to victims. (33) Although the government is developing shelter policies and creating training programs for shelter staff, currently a minimum quality of standard care is not provided to all human trafficking victims. (10,12,23) Although the government collaborated with NGOs to provide child trafficking victims with necessities such as food, clothing, toiletries, counseling, and medical care, programs are not sufficient to address the problem consistently. (41,33,39)
