The facility is a single structure building built in 1997. There are eight separate general population housing units, of which six are dedicated to ICE detainees; five for males and one for females. General population housing units are either a dormitory setting ranging from 50-56 beds or a cell block consisting of twelve two-bed cells. There is one male special management unit consisting of eight two-bed cells; it is used for all populations. Female detainees are sheltered in place inside their assigned housing unit. There were three ICE detainees in segregation status during the inspection. All housing units are governed by an indirect supervision model of management. The health care unit does not contain an infirmary unit.

The exterior perimeter of the compound is a combination of the exterior walls of the building and segments of chain-link fencing, which are supplemented with razor ribbon. The facility's perimeter road is patrolled by an unarmed officer in a vehicle when detainees are using the outdoor recreation yard, and/or at least once each shift. The entire perimeter, all housing units and movement corridors are monitored by central control officers controlling a 58-surveillance camera network. All exterior doors of the building are alarmed and under camera surveillance; their access is governed by central control personnel.

Each housing unit is designed with a dayroom area consisting of four televisions; fixed table/stool seating units, on which detainees eat their meals, play board and/or card games or simply converse; a bank of mounted telephones; a microwave; and two mounted video-visit stations.

The facility offers indoor and outdoor recreation. General population ICE detainees receive at least four hours of outdoor recreation daily; SMU detainees in administrative segregation status receive at least two hours of outdoor recreation daily plus one hour of extra out-of-cell time daily; SMU detainees in disciplinary segregation status receive at least one hour of outdoor recreation daily. All outdoor recreation is offered as weather permits. There is one indoor gymnasium; it is available to all detainees on a weekly schedule.

Many of the interviews were aided by use of a language line interpreter. The detainees voiced no concerns regarding life/safety issues. Detainees were satisfied with the interaction from facility staff and the treatment they receive from the officers. There were no issues regarding conditions of confinement, access to or responsiveness from on-site ICE/ERO personnel, medical services, quality of food, cleanliness or access to programs or activities.
